

This Time, I Will Get My Divorce, Mr Chapter 465

Toby wasn't too surprised at Tom's answer because when he asked the question, he already had the answer in his heart. After a few seconds, he narrowed his eyes and said, "In that case, then continue to have people keep an eye on Connor. Once he shows any irregular movement, immediately report to me."

Whether this person was his father's murderer, he still wanted someone to keep an eye on him. It was better to be safe than sorry.

"Certainly, President Fuller." Tom nodded and answered, then thought of something else and added, "Also, there is one more thing."

Join Telegram Group For Fast update and Novel Query

"What is it?"

"It's the Stryder Family in Norfolk and the Southfield Family in Seafield. They seem to be in conflict recently."

"What's the reason?" Toby asked.

Tom adjusted his glasses. "Melody Stryder caught Peter Southfield cheating, and in a fit of anger, she pushed him down the stairs, breaking his leg. Now the Southfield Family is completely against the Stryder Family because of this matter, and Peter is also making a fuss about a divorce."

"Did they get a divorce?" Toby raised his eyebrows.

Tom shook his head. "No, because Melody is not willing to divorce Peter. He did ask for a divorce before but had not succeeded, so this matter is projected to be a difficult one."

Learning about the situation, Toby sneered, "Melody and Tina were friends before, right?"

"Yes, they seemed to get along. Melody even went against Miss Reed for Tina. Remember that time when several banks jointly chased after Miss Reed about the loans? Melody was the one manipulating all this behind the scenes. Luckily you helped Miss Reed; otherwise, she and Paradigm Co. would be finished," Tom said in a deep voice.

Powered by Hooligan Media

Toby's eyes flashed. "In that case, help Peter."

Everyone knew how much Melody loved Peter. In order to marry him, she had even played dirty, so for Melody, Peter was her life. Once the divorce was successful, she would probably go crazy. Previously, he was hypnotized, so he did not do anything to Melody except help Sonia find a way to defuse Melody's plan. If not for Tom mentioning Melody, he would have forgotten that there was such a person. Now that he remembered, he would let Melody pay the price for what she did to Sonia. For Melody, the most painful price was for Peter to divorce her.

"Certainly, President Fuller. I'll make arrangements," Tom said.

Toby waved his hand, indicating that he could leave first. Thus, Tom didn't say anything and turned around to excuse himself.

After he left, the ward was once again quiet. Toby took out his phone, flipped to Sonia's phone number, and was ready to call her. But when his finger hovered over the call button, he halted. Since it was already late at night, he didn't know if she was asleep. If she was, would he disturb her?

While Toby was hesitating, the door of the ward suddenly rattled, as if something had fallen on the floor. Toby was startled for a moment, and at that point, his thumb accidentally tapped the call button.

Somewhat speechless, Toby looked at his phone screen. It seems that God wants me to contact her.

Soon, the call came through, and Sonia's confused voice came from the other end of the phone. "Who is it?"

When Toby heard the sleepiness in her voice, he knew she was really asleep, so he lightly opened his thin lips and said, "It's me. Sorry to disturb you."

"Hmm?" At the other end of the phone, Sonia was lying on her side on the bed with her eyes closed and one hand putting the phone to her ear. Clearly, she had no intention of waking up at all. So, she also didn't even hear who was on the other end of the phone and what was said.

Toby thought his voice was too soft and repeated, "It's me. I'm sorry to disturb you so late. I—"

Before he finished his words, he suddenly heard the sound of slow and regular breathing coming from the phone. He instantly realized that the woman on the other end of the phone had fallen asleep. Taken aback, he then could not help but laugh lightly.

It's really amazing how quickly she can fall asleep again.

Of course, it was possible that she was too sleepy, which was why she didn't recognize his voice. If she did, she would usually wake up as soon as she heard him and then question why he was looking for her at this late hour.

He did not plan on waking her but took the phone off his ear and turned on the speakerphone. Putting it on the pillow, it was still emitting the sound of Sonia's breathing.

To Toby, the steady sound of her breathing was like she was there beside him. For the entire night, he was accompanied by stable breathing; only when dawn broke and his phone battery died did the sound disappear. When the call cut off, Toby closed his eyes and fell asleep with content.

At 8.00 AM, Sonia was awakened by a knock on the door. She frowned, then opened her eyes and looked in the direction of the knocking sound. Outside the door, Charles knocked on the door while shouting, "Baby, are you up?"

Sonia rubbed her brow, and after yawning, she woke up a little before replying, "Not yet, but I'll get up soon."

"Then hurry up. I just went to the village head's house to buy breakfast; you hurry to wash up and come out to eat." Charles removed his hand from the door.

Sonia nodded and replied, "Okay, I'll be there in a minute."

"Then I'll go to the dining room and wait for you." After saying that, Charles turned around and walked away.

Hearing his footsteps go away until they disappeared, Sonia stretched and sat up from the bed. Just as she sat up, she felt something wrong with her leg, as if it was pressed by something. Sonia suspiciously lifted the quilt and saw her phone lying on her leg, causing her to be taken aback.

How strange! Why is my phone in the quilt? Before she went to sleep, she had clearly put it on the headboard of the bed!

Full of doubt, Sonia took the phone out and pressed on it, but it was unresponsive. Is it broken?

Frowning, she remembered she had bought the phone only a few days ago, so it could not be broken.

Perhaps I accidentally shut it off when I fell asleep.

Thinking of this, Sonia pressed the button and prepared to restart the phone. However, after pressing for a while, the phone remained unresponsive. Sonia's eyes widened at that. "No way!"

Is it really broken? But how is this possible? This is a new phone!

Sonia was a little reluctant to accept this fact, so she hurriedly lifted the quilt and got out of bed, looking for a charger to charge the phone. If the phone didn't respond even when it was connected to the power source, then it was really broken.

Soon, Sonia found her own charger, came to the socket, and charged the phone. Just two seconds after charging, the phone lit up, and then the screen showed a red battery symbol. A red battery symbol meant the phone was at its lowest power level. So, it was clear why the phone couldn't turn on just now—it had no power.

However, Sonia was still a little confused. How could her phone be dead? Before she went to bed last night, it was fully charged, so where did the power go?

It can't be that I played with my phone in my dreams, and it ran out of battery, right? Wait, in my dreams?

Sonia's body stiffened as she realized something. She did have a dream last night that she answered a phone call. Could it be that it was not a dream but a real one? When she thought of this, Sonia hurriedly opened the call log. When she saw the first entry of the log, she was so shocked that her eyes almost fell out.