Thus, it would be much better to have someone on his side take care of things than to have someone like Hugh or Samuel.

“Alright, just let me know in advance,” Jasper said.

John smiled when he heard Jasper's answer and said cheerfully, "Alright, I'll let him know he can come over for a visit."

...

While Jasper and John were chatting in the office, in the villa.

Sally and Charlie were happily leading a team of relatives out of their villa.

"Ah, Charlie, Jasper really has outdone himself. This is such a huge villa and in such a beautiful area! I wouldn't even dare dream to have this."

A woman turned to speak to Charlie, her envy evident on her face.

The people beside her all nodded in agreement and turned to gaze reluctantly at the villa they had just left.

Most of them had been born on farms. At most, they only managed to start a small business in Faith County. They were all your average families and had never been in such a luxurious neighborhood before. Thus, it was only natural they seemed like country mice on their first visit to a town.

Charlie felt extremely proud and was already inwardly rejoicing. However, he put on a calm expression as he said, "It's not much. It's just that our boy knows what he's doing. He's a big spender though, and I can't get him to stop no matter how I try."

"I wonder how Jasper is doing now? He must have still been in elementary school the last time I saw him, right? The years have just flown by. I remember saying he was a smart kid who would definitely make it big in the future. And look! I'm right, aren't I?"

"Exactly. I used to think Jasper was different from other children as well. He didn't talk much, but he was smart and always knew what to do."

“You don’t say, I remember when he was younger...”

Charlie and Sally exchanged helpless looks with each other as they listened to their relatives talk about how special, smart, and gifted their son was when he was younger.

Toadying to the rich and bullying the poor was man’s instinct.

Back then, their son had never been popular among the relatives. They had all said he was clueless and did not have it in him to make it big in the future.

However, they all seemed to have forgotten that now and were praising Jasper.

A young man standing on the edge of the crowd pursed his lips. Contempt was written all across his face.

‘What a bunch of ignorant hags they are! What’s so special about Jasper? My brother has already signed an agreement with a CEO and he’ll be opening multiple hotpot restaurants in the entire province next year! My brother will also be a CEO then! Let’s see if Jasper will still be smiling when the time comes!’

Terence’s disdain for Jasper increased as he thought that to himself.

Life at the Top Chapter 560

“You silly boy, what are you thinking about? I’ve already called out to you multiple times!”

Startled by that voice, Terence hurriedly turned to his dad and asked, “Dad, what’s wrong?”

Jasper's uncle glared at Terence as he said, "When will you grow up? Let's not talk about your cousin, Jasper. But even your brother has his own business now. Can't you learn from them?"

Terence said impatiently, "What do you know? I'm friends with... Never mind, you wouldn't know even if I told you. What did you need me for?"

Jasper's uncle said, "Did you bring the mountain ginseng as I asked you to?"

Terence hoisted the large box in his arms as he said, "Yes, I did."

Then, the expression on Terence's face darkened as he said reluctantly, "Dad, are you really going to give this heirloom to Jasper Laine's family? Is this necessary? This is our family's heirloom and can't be bought on the market no matter how much money you have. It's 200-year-old mountain ginseng—"

Jasper's uncle interrupted Terence and said, "Don't call him by his full name. Your cousin is older than you are, so what right do you have to call him by his full name?"

"You're a child who knows nothing. Just give it to Jasper once he arrives at the hotel."

Terence whined, "Can we give him something else? I want to give this mountain ginseng to an important figure I know."

"What kind of important figures could you know?!"

"I don't care even if you know God himself. You have no say when it comes to this mountain ginseng. Do as I say, or you'll face my wrath when we get back home!"

As he watched his father turn away from him and sidle over to Charlie, Terence hugged the box tightly. He lowered his head to mask the dark look in his eyes.

As everyone walked out of the villa and walked to the gate, they saw six shining BMWs parked by the road. Each car had its driver standing respectfully beside it.

The leader jogged over to Charlie and Sally once he spotted them, saying respectfully, "Sir, Ma'am, the cars have been prepared. Everyone only needs to get in now."

"Woah, a BMW! The mayor's son in the next town loaned one when he got married. It was such a rare sight then, and we weren't even allowed to touch it. Now, we get to sit in one."

A relative gasped in surprise beside Sally.

Everyone's eyes shone as they looked at the row of BMWs. Back then, it was already a considerable feat to own a car. Needless to say, they had never seen a scene as grand in front of their eyes before. There were six identical BMWs parked in front of them!

"Ah, what a wonderful son you have. I'm so jealous." Jasper's uncle sighed to Charlie.

Charlie smiled as he said, "Darrel is doing well too. You'll have the same opportunities in the future."

Always intent on maintaining his dignity, Charlie was extremely pleased with Jasper's arrangements. The smile did not leave Charlie's face as he gazed at the expressions on his relatives' faces.

There were a lot of people present, but six BMWs were just enough for everyone to fit in.

Terence got into the last BMW while clutching the box. He shook as he sat in the soft seat.

On what grounds?!

Back then, Jasper had not been as good as him in academics and did not have a silver tongue like him either. He had been the receiver of everyone's praises while no one even bothered to ask about Jasper.

Thus, even though Jasper was older than he was, Terence had never once respected Jasper.

Life at the Top Chapter 561

He believed that he would definitely make a fortune one day. He had been so full of himself that he only felt disdain when he heard that Jasper had made it big.

From his perspective, success as described by a bunch of poor rural relatives could not be anything special.

However, he was overcome with overwhelming jealousy after seeing the luxurious villa and the row of BMWs parked in front of it. It was luxury beyond his wildest dreams.

“Can’t he share some of his money with us since he’s that rich? We’re his relatives! All he does is flaunt his wealth! How can someone like that succeed in life? Even if he’s rich, it’s just temporary. He’ll lose big in the future!” Terence Laine murmured through gritted teeth.

.....

When Jasper arrived at Shangri-La Hotel, his relatives had already been there for more than 20 minutes.

Everyone sat in their respective seats while they engaged in noisy chatter.

Each and every one of them were trying their best to maintain their composure in front of each other. They tried their best not to turn their heads to look around, making it seem as if they often attended such high-end occasions.

However, the truth was that none of them had ever had a meal in a five-star hotel.

They did not even know how to use a napkin properly. Some of them stuffed it into their collars or put it under their dinner plates, whereas others used it as a towel to wipe their hands before balling it up and throwing it aside.

The three tables in the room had already been served with cold dish platters and drinks. The children stared at the exquisite dishes eagerly. However, the adults slapped their hands away when they reached out to grab the food.

Although the adults also yearned to try these exquisite cold dishes that they had never even seen before, nobody dared to touch their utensils before Jasper's arrival.

Even as a mere junior, he had the ability to make all the elders in his family wait for him before they started eating. This was the charm that money brought.

Jasper walked in through the entrance. Noticing the situation in the room, he laughed out loud. "Excuse me for being late, everyone. Why haven't you guys started eating?" He asked.

Jasper's uncle stood up and greeted him with a smile on his face. "We have just arrived as well. You're here, Jasp. Come here, sit down at once," he said.

Jasper looked at the main table. The seat to the left of Carson Laine, his father, was empty. The seat obviously belonged to him.

Jasper chuckled and said, "I'm a junior, so I should sit by the side. If I sit somewhere as prestigious as the main table, I might get criticized."

His relatives burst out into laughter as well. Terence Laine, who was seated at the end of the third table, fixed a jealous gaze upon Jasper. He sneered at him repetitively in his heart.

"Alright, everyone is waiting for you. Hurry up, all the seats are the same," Carson Laine ushered Jasper over to his side and forced him to sit down beside him.

After instructing the waiters to begin serving the dishes, Jasper chatted briefly with the elders seated at his table. He then stood up and raised his glass. "Everyone, today marks the end of the year for us. Let's leave the past behind and welcome new beginnings," he announced cheerily in front of his relatives.

"My alcohol tolerance is quite average, so I won't make an individual toast to each and every one of you. Therefore, I'll make a toast to all of you right now. Here's to new beginnings and peace in the new year."

Everyone showed a good response to Jasper's words. They stood up, and those who could drink alcohol drank from their glasses whereas those who could not drink sipped at their beverages instead. Nevertheless, everyone present emptied the content of their glasses.

Jasper put down his empty glass and was just about to return to his seat when Terence stood up at the end of the third table. He brought a large box over and told Jasper, "This is the wild ginseng that you requested from our family, Jasper Laine. I brought it for you today."

The tone of Terence's voice was stiff and rigid. He spoke to Jasper without an ounce of courtesy. It was as if Jasper had forced his family to hand over the wild ginseng.

Seated at the same table as Jasper, Jasper's uncle's expression changed immediately. He was about to reprimand Terence when Terence let out a cold sneer and began speaking.

"Now that you're wealthy, we don't even dare to say a single word when you take things from poor relatives like us. However, you already have so much money. Why don't you lend me some money? Five figures ought to do it. We are all relatives. You wouldn't have any objections, right?"

Life at the Top Chapter 562

After Terence finished speaking, the atmosphere in the room changed drastically.

Everyone's attention peaked as they stared at Jasper with widened eyes, waiting for his response.

Jasper responded with a smile. Instead of accepting the box, he looked at Terence and said, "I've spent most of my time out of town after graduating. I haven't come back in a long time. May I know who you are?"

Terence scoffed. "You're a prominent figure and a big boss now. Of course, you wouldn't pay attention to poor relatives like us. It's completely normal for you to forget," he said.

"I'm Terence Laine. I can be considered your cousin since Darrel Laine is my brother."

Jasper nodded in realization. "I remember that he has a younger brother. He called me not too long ago to tell me that he was rushing back by train. He said that he'd arrive a little later," he said.

Terence sulked and said, "Everyone knows that my brother will be running a large business very soon. He has attained an agreement with bosses from other localities and he'll be opening dozens of hotpot restaurants in the province next year. Of course, you'd care more about him.

"After all, you'll pale in comparison to him after his hotpot restaurant chain begins operating."

Terence's contemptuous words piqued Jasper's interest.

It seemed like Terence Laine still had no idea that he had provided his brother with the funds to start up his hotpot restaurant chain.

“Never mind, it’d be meaningless to talk about such things. In any case, keep this in mind. Don’t think that you can look down on your poor relatives just because you have some money. You’re so wealthy, but when have you ever provided us with any benefits?”

“I’m in a tight spot right now. Can you bear to lend me a few ten thousand dollars? Don’t worry about it, after my brother opens his hotpot restaurant chain, he’ll become a big boss too. He wouldn’t trouble you by refusing to pay back a measly sum of money like that,” Terence said haughtily.

“Terence Laine!”

Jasper’s uncle roared out in anger. There was an awkward and shameful expression on his face. “What nonsense are you going on about, you b*stard!? Apologize to your cousin at once!” He reprimanded Terence.

His uncle then turned around to face Jasper. He let out a dry laugh. “Jasp, I’ve spoilt him ever since he was young. Please don’t stoop down to his level. I’ll teach him a lesson after this,” he told Jasper.

Jasper waved his hand and looked at Terence with a cheerful grin. “How much money would you like?” he asked.

Terence rolled his eyes. Despite the anger blazing in his father’s gaze, Terence replied stubbornly, “At least 50000 dollars!”

Jasper nodded and grabbed a checkbook from his coat. He proceeded to fill in a check worth 50000 dollars. “Take this check. You can withdraw 50000 dollars from any bank at any time,” he told Terence.

“I’m not lending you this money, so you don’t have to return it to me. I’m buying this wild ginseng from you with this sum of money. That way, you wouldn’t be feel like I took advantage of you. How’s that?” He asked.

Terence sneered and said, “It’s no wonder that you’re so good at making money. You have such immaculate planning. However, don’t even think of using your devious schemes on your relatives. This wild ginseng is over 200 years old—it’s a real treasure. I’ve enquired about it outside, and I heard that it’s so rare that it can’t even be bought with money. If you want to buy it, you’ll need to pay me at least 100000 dollars.”

Jasper filled in another 50000 dollar check without saying a word. He handed both the checks to Terence and told him, “Here’s 100000 dollars you asked for.”

Terence noticed that Jasper was being extremely at ease right now. He did not even think twice before giving him 100000 dollars.

100000 dollars was a monumental sum of money for every average family out there.

At that moment, Terence grew disgruntled after realizing how rich Jasper was. Greed instantly clouded his thoughts as he raised his head indignantly and said, “That’s not enough! Give me 200000 dollars at least!”

Jasper chuckled lightly and put aside both the checks. “First, you wanted 50000 dollars, then you wanted 100000 dollars. I’ve given you everything that you asked for. However, you’re now demanding for me to give you 200000 dollars. Do you take me for a fool who doesn’t understand numbers? Since you’re not selling the goods, so be it. Take it back,” he said in an even tone.

Life at the Top Chapter 563

Terence's expression changed. Just as he was about to say something, his father slapped him hard right across the face.

A loud smack resounded throughout the room.

Terence was beyond stunned by the clear, loud smack. The twenty or so relatives in the room had looks of utter shock on their faces as well.

Disciplining one's child was a shameful act, and it was supposed to be done in the privacy of one's home. Furthermore, Terence Laine was already in his twenties. He was not at the age where he should be hit by his parents.

However, not only did his father hit him, but he had also done so in front of so many relatives. He did not show Terence even an ounce of respect. This showed just how fired up he was.

His father lunged over and grabbed the box from Terence. He was so infuriated that his voice was trembling. "What a rebellious son you are. I've raised you for nothing!" He shouted out.

He then turned around and handed the box over to Jasper. "Jasp, Terence is only acting like that because I haven't raised him well. Please don't hold a grudge against him. How could we sell this to you? How could we ask you for money in return for this gift?" He said apologetically.

Jasper did not want the ginseng at all. However, from his uncle's desperate gaze, he knew that this incident would not pass easily if he did not accept it. Therefore, he placed the box to the side. At the same time, he took out the two checks as well.

“Uncle, I intended to purchase this from you since the very start. Wild ginseng that is more than 200 years of age is indeed precious. Keep this 100000 dollars.”

Just as his uncle was about to say something, Jasper chuckled out loud. “Uncle, if you don’t accept this money, I won’t take this wild ginseng from you. Although we’re relatives, a sale is still a sale. It’s easy to get 100000 dollars, but getting 200-year-old wild ginseng is something that comes down to pure luck. I’m the one that has scored a bargain.”

Nobody could point out any flaws in Jasper’s reasonable argument.

Everyone agreed with Jasper inwardly. Although Jasper was wealthy, he did not look down on his relatives. His behaviors and actions were also extremely mature and well thought out. Thus, it was easy to get along with him.

The only person who thought otherwise was Terence Laine.

Terence clutched at his face. It stung to the touch. Although his face hurt from the slap, he was angrier due to the overwhelming shame that he had experienced.

“Father! He’s just using his money to placate us. Why should we fawn over him like this? Besides, he’s your junior. He has to address you as his uncle! Don’t bow down so pathetically in front of him. I wonder who’ll be bowing to whom after my brother returns and starts operating his business?!”

Terence yelled out while he glared at Jasper angrily.

After listening to what he said, Terence’s father was so enraged that he almost passed out.

“You b*stard, you’re really aa b*stard!” His father yelled at him while smacking his own leg. “Don’t you know that your cousin is the one funding your brother’s business?” He roared.

“You’re completely incapable. All you do is look down on others. You think others are looking down on you if they treat you with even the slightest disrespect. Why don’t you take a look at yourself instead? Do you have anything that’s worthy of other people’s admiration?”

“Jasp has already helped out our family a lot. Look at the things that you’ve done and said. Is this something that a decent human being would do? Why do I even have a son like you?”

Terence was stupefied after registering what his father had just said.

He only heard one thing clearly.

The greatest source of his pride, the business that his brother was about to start, was funded by Jasper Laine?

After experiencing the overwhelming shock and daze, not only did Terence not repent for his actions, but jealousy and rage instantly swelled up in his heart.

“In that case, Jasper Laine should have given me the money! I’m cut out to run a business! I can earn a fortune as well. Why did you offer it to my brother instead of me? Give me 200000 dollars, Jasper Laine. If you give me 200000 dollars, I’ll do better than anyone else!”

Life at the Top Chapter 564

Jasper stared at Terence in shock.

To be honest, he did not achieve much in his past life. He did not meet up much with his relatives either and had never interacted much with Darrel and Terence Laine. Therefore, he had no idea what their personalities were like.

In his current life, Jasper would like to think that he had met quite a number of people; He had also dealt with all sorts of people.

However, he had never expected Terence Laine to go beyond his expectations of what it meant to be shameless.

The last time that Jasper had felt this way was when he was dealing with Penelope Hunt and her family.

Even when compared to them, Terence Laine was still the gold-standard.

“Why should I give you my money if I’m wealthy? Furthermore, it’s 200000 dollars that you’re asking for. Don’t you know that the average salary for a job out there is only a few hundred dollars? It’s considered a huge benefit if you have a salary of a thousand dollars,” Jasper told him.

Terence sneered coldly and waved his hand. “Stop spewing such nonsense. Aren’t you filthy rich? We’re all relatives. Shouldn’t you help us out if you’re rich? Do you want to see us suffer due to poverty? You’ve helped my brother as well. In that case, it isn’t too much to ask you to give me 200000 dollars, right?” He questioned.

“I funded your brother simply because I thought that his business would be profitable. Besides, I did not lend your brother the money. It was an investment. In other words, I’d invest this sum of money all the same even if he was a mere stranger instead of Darrel Laine,” Jasper said calmly.

“I’m doing this because it’s business, not because he’s my relative.

“I can support you if you have the capabilities, business idea, and are willing to put in the effort. However, look at you. You’re incapable and you don’t have any plans. You’re only asking me for money. Do you think that my wallet is an ATM? Do you think that you can take my money whenever you want?”

“Everyone here is our relative. They all know my family’s situation. We were the poorest among everyone in the past. All of you were more well off in comparison to my family.

“Why didn’t you help out my family back then, Terence Laine?”

Jasper’s words rendered Terence speechless. There was no way for him to argue against that.

Jasper turned away from Terence, whose expression was tainted with anger. He looked around the room and gazed at each of his relatives’ faces intently. He then continued speaking in a loud, clear voice.

“Half of the people here are my elders, whereas one-third of them are around the same age as I am. The remaining third of them are my nephews and nieces. We all share the same origin. We’re all from the same family.

“I’m embarrassed to say that I’ve managed to achieve some recognition and success for our family. However, I’ll say a few words without shame today.

“Be it relatives or friends, my words to you are the same. I’ll offer my support to anyone with the capabilities, ideas, and is willing to put in great amounts of effort. However, anyone who thinks that I’m an easy target or believes that I’m obligated to give out money to everyone now that I’m wealthy should just save their efforts.

“That’s all I want to say. Don’t mind me. You guys can start eating and drinking. Anyways, I’ll take care of everything here. If the hospitality is inadequate, it’ll be my fault. You guys can scold me all you want. However, if you’re deliberately here to cause trouble, I won’t welcome or serve you.”

Back at the main table, Sally Lard tapped Charlie Laine. “Won’t it reflect badly on Jasp if he says something like this?” She asked him worriedly.

Charlie had an even and controlled expression on his face. "It won't reflect badly on him. He's simply stating facts. I don't think that Jasp said anything wrong. He has my support," he said.

After that, Charlie fixed a gratified gaze upon Jasper. "I'm old now. Our son has really grown up," he remarked.

The other relatives looked at each other in silence.

Jasper's uncle glared at Terence and growled impatiently, "Why are you still standing there? Scram!"

Terence's face flushed red in anger as he cast a vicious glare at Jasper. He then turned around and walked away.

Life at the Top Chapter 565

Of course, Terence did not have the audacity to stay there and eat with them. He left the room with a slam of the door.

Terence's father took in a deep breath and waved his hand. "Don't bother him. There's no need to pay him any mind. This kid is beyond salvation," he said.

Honey Sarratt dabbed at her tears in a corner of the room. She was terribly upset.

Charlie Laine and Sally Lard comforted Jasper's uncle and aunt respectively. Meanwhile, Jasper got up and went around the room to make toasts with everyone. Nobody seemed to pay any heed to Terence Laine, who had left in a storm of fury.

Although Terence Laine had caused an unpleasant dispute during the Christmas dinner, nobody showed any signs of unhappiness on their faces. Everyone quickly pushed the incident to the back of their minds.

Soon, the atmosphere at the tables became lively once again.

Although not everyone was happy throughout the course of the dinner, at least it ended on a good note.

After everyone finished their meals, Jasper arranged for them to stay in the Shangri-La Hotel. He booked a room for each family where they could stay up to three days and two nights. The decision to stay there was completely up to them.

In the afternoon, Darrel Laine, who had traveled back from another town in a rush, looked for Jasper hurriedly. He had obviously heard of Terence's incident from the day before.

"I'm so sorry, cousin. Sigh, I never expected that my brother would do something that immature!"

Darrel was evidently much more mature than Terence. He apologized to Jasper with a guilty expression on his face.

Jasper was sipping on a cup of hot tea to cure his hangover. He had drunk a little too much the previous night. He laughed upon hearing what Darrel said. "It's alright, I just assumed that I was fooling around with a child. You don't have to mention it... Anyway, how did the discussion go?" He asked.

A look of excitement appeared on Darrel's face. "Everything's almost done. The boss of Hello Hotpot said that he'll come over to visit you personally after Christmas. Regarding the ownership, he'd like to have 30% of the total shares. You will get 60% of it, and I'll have 10%. Is that alright with you?" He proposed.

Jasper laughed. "That's perfectly fine. I'll be getting the sum of money that is to be invested into your business within the next two days," he said.

Jasper then paused momentarily. He felt like thanking Samuel Ray for his extensive wealth.

“In that case, I’ll meet him next year. We will formally sign a three-party contract when the boss of Hello Hotpot comes over. After that, you can set up the company framework. I’ll make sure to credit the funds into the company account in due time.”

Darrel nodded gratefully. He then took out two familiar checks from his coat and handed them to Jasper courteously.

“What are you doing?”

Jasper asked. He laughed in amusement after taking a glance at the two checks that he had filled up himself.

“Don’t disregard me anymore, Cousin. We can’t accept this money from you no matter what. Please take it back!” Darrel said. He was adamant.

“You’re already our family’s saving grace. It would be inhumane if I accepted this money from you. Furthermore, my parents share the same sentiment.”

Jasper chuckled. He did not reject his request, but he did not accept the checks either. “After you set up the company, you’ll need to use a lot of money. You can treat this money as an additional line of sponsorship from me,” he said.

Darrel was stunned after registering what he had said. He wanted to say something else, but he immediately swallowed all his words after noticing the calm gaze that Jasper had directed at him. Thus, he nodded heavily and stopped being persistent.

At the same time, Terence Laine, who had left the restaurant in a fit of rage the night before, had gone to Nauritus City on his own. He had not contacted anyone after leaving that night.

He was there to meet someone. That person was a huge source of support that he had just come to know recently. Now, he planned to take revenge for the humiliation that Jasper had put him through.

Life at the Top Chapter 566

Within a high-end residential area in the province, Nauritus City.

Zayden Hanks now lived in a double-storey terrace house.

That was right. Zayden Hanks had returned from Harbor City.

Zayden Hanks had undergone a major transformation since the confrontation between the Hanks and Jasper Laine in the province, after being sent to Harbor City by his father.

He was much more thinner than before, and kept his hair long and tied into a ponytail at the back of his head.

The feminine clothes that he was clad in did not look out of place on an ordinary man like him. On the contrary, he emanated an indescribable sense of cold slyness.

Zayden's father, Sylva Hanks, was sitting in the room as well.

Sylva seemed to have aged by more than a decade within half a year's time. His slightly hunched figure was perched atop the sofa as he stared at his son, who was standing by the side of the window and looking down at the view of the Southface River.

"Zayden, why did you come back..."

Before Sylva finished talking, Zayden turned around and smiled at his father. "Father, I know what you're going to ask me. That's right, I've come back to avenge you and myself," he said.

Sylva's fingers, which had a cigarette in between them, trembled. A flurry of ashes fell onto the ground as he spoke in a bitter voice, "Things are different from how they were in the past. Too many things have happened in the past six months."

"Dawson Schuler acquired the country's largest supermarket chain and set up a real estate company with Jasper Laine. In addition to the supermarket industry, that newly set up real estate company has also risen to become the largest name among the real estate enterprises in the Southeast Province."

"You've seen the development site in Southface River, right? Those tall skyscrapers are proof of their capability."

"Their current strength cannot be compared to how they were in the past. We've lost to them back then, so what will change now?"

Zayden stared into the distance with dark eyes. He sneered at the sight of the development site in Southface River, which was now the talk of the town. "What a lively area. They haven't stopped the construction even though it's going to be Christmas real soon. It seems like they're extremely confident," he remarked.

"Once this project is completed, it'll be the largest signature project in the Southeast Province. Not only do the municipal and provincial governments greatly prioritize this project, even the officials from higher order associations are looking at the type of development that this project will bring to the Southeast Province in the future."

"I've heard from some old friends that once the project at the South Bank yields results, it's likely that it'll become a benchmark project for the construction of new urban areas in other cities within the country. By then, it's significance will greatly increase."

Sylva laughed bitterly as he spoke. "Given their current position, what right do we have to go against Jasper Laine and Dawson Schuler?" He questioned.

Zayden sniffed in distaste. "Father, don't trample upon your own prestige by amplifying their status," he said in a frigid tone.

"Jasper Laine mostly relies on the support of the Laws from Harbor City. Before gaining their support, he was nothing. Back then, he was simply a nobody in the Southeast Province."

As Zayden spoke, he shifted his gaze away from Southface River and turned to face his own father. "This time, I returned with the support of a prominent figure as well. I must go against Jasper Laine!" He yelled out in frenzy.

He recalled the humiliation that he had received back in the Southeast Province, which had caused him to run all the way to Harbor City. After that, Jasper Laine had continued to trample over him. While Jasper basked in glory after presiding over Harbor City's economic rescue plan, he could only tremble while hiding in the corner.

All of this distorted Zayden's psyche.

The more he hated and feared Jasper Laine, the more his facial features twisted in rage.

Eventually, his face twisted in infuriation to the point where his bloodshot eyes glinted red as if he were a wild beast.

"Father, don't worry. Jasper Laine has rose to success way too quickly. As a result, he has blocked the paths of many people out there. He has made too many enemies.

"Now, it's almost a given that many people out there want him dead. These people definitely outnumber those who support him!"

Life at the Top Chapter 567

“This time, I’m here on behalf of those people. With their support, Jasper Laine will nothing compared to me.”

Sylva’s eyes twitched as he looked at his own son. He seemed like a stranger to him.

Sylva sent Zayden to Harbor City because he wanted him to live peacefully for the rest of his life after moving to a new place.

However, Sylva did not know what Zayden had been through in Harbor City. He had no idea why he had returned this time without anyone knowing and with so much anger pent up within him.

“Even with that being the case, the Hanks are all living cautiously. Furthermore, I’ve offended Dawson Schuler, who has now risen to immense power. I no longer have the right to speak on behalf of our family, so I cannot help you,” Sylva said with a sigh.

Zayden snickered loudly. “Father, do you still not believe what I just said? The Hanks are nothing great. They have so little influence that it’s next to nothing,” he said.

“Besides, we couldn’t compete against Jasper Laine back when you still were in your prior position and were capable of using the family resources. How could we go hope to against him now?”

“However, this time, I have the Laines’ support.”

Zayden smirked coldly. He decided to reveal the truth to his father in order to win his confidence.

“The Laines? Which family are you talking about?” Sylva asked. He was slightly stunned.

Just as Zayden was about to say something, a knock on the door interrupted him.

“I’ll explain things to you slowly later on. One of my pawns is here right now,” Zayden said. He proceeded to open the door.

The person who entered the room was none other than Terence Laine.

“Mr. Hanks!” Terence Laine greeted Zayden courteously from outside the door.

Zayden nodded and broke out into a cackle. “Have you met Jasper Laine?” He asked.

“I’ve met him. Hmph, what a haughty and bossy person. He disregards everyone other than himself!” Terence exclaimed at once.

“However, he’s no competition to you, Mr. Hanks. He’s just a tiny ant on the ground. Meanwhile, someone like you is destined to soar up into the skies like a phoenix and become a prominent figure in the industry, Mr. Hanks,” Terence Laine remarked in a flattering voice.

Zayden chuckled without denying what he said. After letting Terence into the room, he told Sylva, “Father, this is Terence Laine. He’s Jasper Laine’s distant relative. If I’m not mistaken, he’s his cousin.”

Terence took a step forward immediately. He bowed down to greet Sylva. “Nice to meet you, Uncle Hanks. I’m Terence Laine, and I’m Jasper Laine’s cousin,” he said with a look of fondness and flattery on his face.

“Please sit,” Sylva said in an even tone.

Terence did not dare to sit down. Instead, he turned around to look at Zayden.

“Why are you looking at me? My father asked you to sit down,” Zayden said. He feigned a sullen tone, even though he was extremely satisfied with Terence’s behavior.

Terence nodded and bent down to sit right at the edge of the sofa.

“Since you’ve met Jasper Laine, I’ll tell you what to do next. Your most important task is to find a way to join one of Jasper Laine’s companies. It can be the investment company or the real estate company. Join the company first, as it’ll be extremely useful to us,” Zayden said.

An awkward expression appeared on Terence’s face when he understood Zayden’s request. “You should’ve told me about that in advance, Mr. Hanks. I got into quite an awful squabble with Jasper Laine today...” he said bitterly.

“I have a 200-year-old piece of wild ginseng back at home, which I originally intended to give to you. However, Jasper Laine, that b*stard, asked my father to give it to him. Being the coward that he is, my father gave it to him immediately.”

“I even got into an argument with Jasper Laine over this incident.”

Life at the Top Chapter 568

Terence continued blabbering on about the incident. However, he did not notice the darkening expression on Zayden’s face.

“You piece of garbage!”

Zayden roared out in rage, cutting off Terence’s speech.

He pointed his finger at Terence, almost poking him on the tip of his nose. “What did I tell you before this? I told you to leave a memorable impression in front of Jasper Laine. Is that how you intend to do it?” He yelled in rage.

“F*ck, this is just perfect. You’ve left a memorable impression on him indeed, but you won’t be of any use to me anymore!”

Zayden grew angrier the more he spoke. He raised a hand and slapped Terence across his ashen face.

A loud smack resounded through the room.

Terence’s head whipped to the side from the force of the slap. Instantly, he clutched his face and got up from the sofa in fear. “Mr. Hanks, I’m sorry. I messed things up because I didn’t know about your plans,” he said in a hurry.

“Sorry? It’s useless to apologize to me!”

Zayden scolded him in infuriation.

“Who do you think you are? Why would I ask you to approach Jasper Laine? I asked you to do so so that you would be able to formally join Jasper Laine’s company in the future and collude with me in private!

“Who allowed you to offend him? How dare a f*cking disgrace like you offend him? How dare you?”

Zayden was engulfed in fury. Terence was so frightened that he did not dare to utter a single word.

Right then, he could tell that he had caused trouble with his self-righteous actions.

“Don’t be angry, Mr. Hanks. Why don’t I try to mend my relationship with Jasper Laine?” He asked, a despondent expression splayed across his face.

Zayden sneered. “Someone like Jasper Laine can end you by just lifting his finger. How dare you conspire against him? Are you seeking your own death?” He asked.

Terence rolled his eyes and suddenly said, “Mr. Hanks, don’t panic just yet. There are still other methods to go about this.”

Zayden laughed stonily. “In that case, tell me. What other methods are there? I’ll forgive you if you manage to compensate for your actions,” he said.

Terence immediately replied, “Although I offended Jasper Laine, he really admires my elder brother, Darrel Laine. Previously, I told you that my brother is in talks to work together with a boss from outside the province. He intends to open a hotpot restaurant chain in the province.”

Zayden scoffed and asked, “Aren’t you embarrassed to talk about some small, lowly business like that?”

Terence laughed drily and said, “This may not seem like much in the eyes of a prominent figure like you, Mr. Hanks. However, I received news about something today. My brother’s business is being funded by Jasper Laine’s investments.

“Therefore, Jasper Laine still admires my brother a lot.

“Maybe we can target my brother instead. We can achieve your goals through him, Mr. Hanks.”

Terence’s words brought a shine to Zayden’s gaze. His anger subsided a little as well.

“Really? Are you sure that you didn’t mishear? Did Jasper Laine really invest in the business?” Zayden asked three consecutive questions.

Terence responded in a hurry. “No matter how courageous I am, I would never dare to trick you, Mr. Hanks. It’s a hundred percent true,” he said.

Zayden walked back and forth for a while. Suddenly, he raised his head and looked toward Sylva, who had not said a single word thus far. “Father, what do you think?” He asked.

Zayden knew that his father still outclassed him when it came to strategizing. At a time like this, he had no choice but to ask Sylva for help.

Sylva pondered upon it for a moment before speaking slowly, “Are you planning to first plant a mole beside Jasper Laine, and have that mole cooperate with you in your future plans?”

Life at the Top Chapter 569

Zayden nodded. He glanced at Terence and said, “Initially, I intended for him to act as our informant, but it looks like that won’t work anymore.”

Sylva chuckled. “If that’s your intention, I wouldn’t say that the plan is totally ruined. If you manage to take control of these two brothers, you can do things in the open and behind their backs. It may be unexpectedly effective,” he said.

Zayden’s gaze lit upon registering what he said.

Sylva did not say much due to Terence’s presence in the room. However, Zayden instantly made a 180-degree change as an idea popped up in his head due to Sylva’s advice.

After organizing his thoughts, Zayden looked at Terence and snickered. “How certain are you that you’ll be able to convince your brother?” He asked.

Terence peered at Zayden hesitantly after pondering upon it for a while. He could not bring himself to say anything.

“Why are you hesitating? Say it at once!” Zayden said impatiently.

“Mr. Hanks, I know that you’re a prominent figure with extensive capabilities. However, I don’t know if that will be enough to win over my brother. Besides, my brother has just received an investment from Jasper Laine. He’s currently preparing to start up his business, so I’m afraid it might difficult to convince him without a practical excuse,” Terence explained.

Zayden sneered and said, “You haven’t done anything for me yet, but you’re already requesting benefits?”

Terence shivered as he caught sight of Zayden’s cold gaze. “Give me two days, Mr. Hanks. Christmas is coming soon. I’ll think of a way to convince him,” he said immediately.

Zayden hummed nonchalantly and said, “You can promise him that I’ll give him double of whatever Jasper Laine is offering him. After we succeed, the two of you will enjoy plenty of benefits.”

Terence suppressed the excitement in his heart. “Thank you, Mr. Hanks!” He exclaimed courteously.

“Scram.”

...

Jasper did not know anything about Zayden’s return to the province. He was clueless about the fact that Zayden was currently coming up with a scheme to defeat him as well.

At that moment, he was having a discussion about work with Jack Tanner, who had just returned from Swallow Capital, at the investment company.

“Sena’s condition has generally stabled. Besides, it’s now the Christmas holidays, so most of the employees have returned to their hometowns for the new year. There are only a few employees on duty right now,” Jack said.

Jasper nodded and smiled at Jack. “You’ve worked hard during this period of time,” he told him.

“It’s just work. Furthermore, it’s not like I’m working for nothing. I’m being paid to do so. It’s my responsibility,” Jack replied.

Jasper massaged his temples and said, “I’ll still need you to be in charge of the work in Sena in the future. However, the investment company can’t be left vacant either. Do you have any close associates that would be able to share the workload with you here?” He asked

Jasper had long been dissatisfied with the performance of the investment company.

As the main boss of the company, it was impossible for Jasper to allocate all of his effort and time to the investment company. He needed time to handle other ventures as well. Therefore, setting up a senior management team within the investment company was a pressing issue that they had to attend to immediately.

Jack pondered upon it for a while. “I can inquire with some old friends. However, I’ll only be able to tell you the results next year. On the other hand, I’d suggest you seek out a professional headhunter company,” he said.

Jasper agreed with Jack. “Alright, I’ll hand this task over to you then. In short, it must be done as soon as possible,” he said.

After Jack agreed with his arrangements, he continued hesitantly, “Mr. Laine, I’m actually here today to ask you about your opinion on something as well.”

Jasper laughed and said, “Why are you still being hesitant in front of me? Ask me directly if you’re curious about anything.”

Jack asked, “Mr. Laine, have you ever considered letting Sena go through with its public listing?”

Life at the Top Chapter 570

A public listing!

It was the ultimate goal of any company out there.

Many benefits came from a public listing.

The most evident and important benefit was the ability to quickly obtain a huge amount of funds from the stock market.

With the support of countless shareholders and investors, the company would not have to worry about funding issues during its development.

However, a public listing came with its own set of problems as well. In theory, listed companies all faced the risk of being taken over by someone else.

Jasper had attacked companies through the financial market and brought forth their downfall by obtaining a majority stake in them.

Therefore, he had always been cautious about pursuing a public listing himself.

“Jack, we’ve talked about this before. The companies directly affiliated to JW will not be considered for public listings due to our company principles,” Jasper said in an even tone.

“I can understand your choice not to list the investment and real estate company. After all, you’re not lacking any finances in those. However, isn’t it a pity for companies like Sena and Terizone to not be listed?” Jack asked.

Jasper chuckled and said, “I have other plans for Terizone. As for Sena, I am currently the sole proprietor. I can withhold some of the shares and go for a public listing. As long as the shares are diverted to small stakeholders, a listing won’t affect my majority stake. Therefore, I can consider listing the company.

“However, it’s still not the right time to do so.”

Jack was stunned by Jasper’s words.

Nevertheless, Jasper had his own considerations as well.

“Currently, all listed Internet companies are facing the same problem. They’re all relying on their user capacity, empty promises and marketing techniques to attract investors. However, in reality, the inability of Internet companies to gain profits has not yet been fundamentally solved.

“Furthermore, Sena’s main operation is its portal business. Although its capacity has greatly increased after absorbing the users from Terizone, it’s still taking on losses despite being the ranked the top platform within the country.

“In my opinion, the portal website is not profitable. If Sena wants to be listed, it must be supported by a strong and sustainable profit margin. Otherwise, it won’t be able to withstand any external pressure even after it’s listed. Minor disturbances will easily result in heavy losses.”

Jack frowned and said, “You’re right, but everyone in the industry is facing the same problem...”

Jasper laughed and interrupted him. “Although everyone is facing the same problem, that doesn’t mean that we have to lower ourselves to their level. I have identified Sena’s profit point,” he said.

Jack raised his head in surprise. “Mr. Laine, you’ve found a way for Sena to make a profit?” He was shocked.

Jasper smiled faintly.

Of course, he had an idea!

Not only did this method make an Internet company profitable in his past life, but it was also responsible for creating the country’s richest man.

He was referring to the online game “United Legends”, that had been released by Senator Agency back in the year 2001.

The game industry was a vast blue ocean that no one has explored thus far. This was a space that would grow from nothing to a trillion-scale market in just ten years. To Jasper, it was a prosperous cornucopia.

Not only could it win over a large number of users, but the amount of profits it would generated was terrifying as well.

What was the value of digital goods?

A few lines of code, a few graphic materials, and a single server could create unlimited digital goods that could sell for tens of thousands, or even hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Only a fool would choose not to dive into this field.

Furthermore, in his past life, Jasper had experienced the rise of online games from a barren industry to its flourishing peak in just twenty years’ time. Jasper knew very well about the techniques that he could exploit to earn money from these players.

Life at the Top Chapter 571

In addition to that, “United Legends” was an online game that achieved unparalleled success within the country. Many innovative businessmen were transformed into millionaires through this game, which centered on players facing one another on the battlefield.

It was a game that was unique even within the global market.

“After the year-end holidays, I’ll make arrangements for you to head over to Coreana. You will find our profit point there. I’ll discuss the specific details with you then.”

Jasper chuckled as he decided to maintain the suspense.

He trusted Jack, but this was a matter that involved might lead to untold profits. Thus, Jasper was not willing to tell anyone about it in advance. Furthermore, there was no point in doing so either.

At that moment, nobody in the entire world would be as confident as Jasper was regarding the domestic gaming industry.

Although Jack was not clear about the entire situation, he knew that Jasper never bragged about anything without proper proof to back up his claims.

Jasper had proved countless times that he would fulfill every promise he made, regardless of how unbelievable they seemed at the time.

Therefore, Jack was extremely excited about this as well.

After quitting his job at Weresoftware, he was now working at Sena. Although Sena was one of the country's top Internet companies, it could not compare to Weresoftware at all.

Therefore, many people did not understand Jack's choice.

Although Jack was not vocal about it, he was under a considerable amount of pressure as well. He had been waiting for an opportunity to rise to success so that he could use empirical evidence to prove to everyone that he was not famous just because of Weresoftware. He wanted to show that he was extremely talented and capable as well.

Now that the opportunity to do so had finally arisen, he was beyond excited.

“Alright. I’ll leave first. I’m returning to my hometown with my family later for the year-end holidays. We’ll see each other next year then, Mr. Laine,” Jack said with a smile spread across his face as he got up.

Jasper took out a check, which he had prepared a long time ago, from his coat and handed it to Jack. “This is your year-end bonus,” he said with a smile.

Jack was stunned. “Hasn’t the end-of-year bonus been issued some time ago? What’s this, Mr. Laine?” He asked.

Jasper laughed. “You’ve followed me through all my endeavors this year. You’ve helped out at the investment company, Terizone, and now you’re helping out at Sena. Without you, I wouldn’t be able to handle so many issues. Take this as an extra bonus just for you,” he said.

Jack accepted the check and glanced at the figures scribbled on it, which would have come as a shock to any ordinary person out there. “In that case, I won’t reject it. Thank you, Mr. Laine,” he said in a sincere tone.

It was a ruler’s obligation to bestow a title upon those who valued their status, and present benefits to those who valued such gains. One’s subordinates would only work to the best of their abilities if they obtained tangible benefits.

Jasper had never been stingy with regards to this.

If he gave Jack one buck today, Jack would help him generate a profit of ten bucks tomorrow. Therefore, it was clear the correct move was when dealing with a man of Jack's abilities.

After sending Jack off, Jasper left the company as well. Since it was the holiday period, the office was completely empty except for the two foreign security guards that did not plan to return to their hometowns for the holidays.

Jasper walked along the river after leaving the company. There, he spent time thinking about how to deal with the various problems that had arisen in the investment and real estate companies. He needed to decide on the plan for Sena to enter the gaming industry by the beginning of the next year too.

At that moment, a loud cacophony erupted in front of him as he walked along the path.

An unkempt woman ran toward Jasper in a state of panic with a few hotdogs clutched in her hands. A middle-aged man with a white apron tied across his waist was chasing after her. He looked like the boss of a hotdog stall.

"Stop right there! This f*cker is back to steal my hotdogs again. I'll catch you today no matter what!" The middle-aged man yelled as he chased after the woman.

"Move away!"

The woman running ahead hurriedly shouted at Jasper, who was blocking her way. The moment he raised his head to look at her, both of them were stunned.

Jasper had never expected to cross paths with Penelope Hunt in a situation like this.

Life at the Top Chapter 572

Although both of them had changed a lot, Jasper and Penelope could still recognize each other at first glance.

Penelope froze on the spot. She returned to her senses after a few seconds, then lowered her head and prepared to run away.

Right then, the boss of the hotdog stall managed to catch up with her.

He grabbed ahold of the collar of Penelope's shirt and scolded her angrily. "F*ck, it's been three days. You've stolen the hotdogs from my stall for three consecutive days. Even if you want to steal, don't just steal from my stall alone. Do you really think that I'm that easily bullied?"

"I'll teach you a lesson today so you won't dare to ever steal from me again!"

After saying this, the boss, who had a tall and burly physique, raised his hand to hit Penelope across the face.

"Wait a minute," Jasper voiced out, causing the man to stop in his tracks.

The boss turned around to look at Jasper suspiciously. He toned down the ferocious expression on his face after noticing Jasper's immaculate dressing and outstanding aura. He frowned and asked, "What's wrong? I'm teaching a thief a lesson here. What does it have to do with you?"

Jasper pulled out a hundred-dollar bill from his pocket and said, "Since you said that she stole from you, I'll pay on her behalf. Don't hold a grudge against her anymore. It's almost Christmas, and you're out here trying to run a business. Don't bring bad luck upon yourself."

"Heh! It's a deal!"

The boss accepted the cash from Jasper happily. "I really bumped into a good person today. However, this is too much. I don't have enough change on me," he said.

"There's no need to give me any change," Jasper said. He glanced at Penelope, who was leaning away from him as she stood by the side. She had her head lowered and did not dare to look at him. "Take it as your compensation," he told the boss calmly.

"That's even better!"

The boss put the hundred-dollar bill into his pocket and cast a glare at Penelope. "You were lucky this time. If you ever steal from my stall again, I'll beat you to death," he warned her.

"That's enough. You've taken the money, and I've given you some extra as well. You can go now," Jasper said with a frown.

The boss grinned widely at him, then turned around and walked away happily.

"Why have you become like this?" Jasper asked Penelope, who was trembling with her head lowered, after the boss of the hotdog stall left.

Penelope continued to let her head hang low. It was as if by doing so, she was hoping that Jasper would not be able to recognize her. "I don't know you. You've got the wrong person," she said nervously.

Penelope then attempted to run away.

“Stop right there!” Jasper yelled.

Penelope stiffened, standing glued to the spot.

“Where’s your brother? What about your mother? Do they know that you’re living like this right now?” Jasper asked.

Penelope knew that she would not be able to evade this. Thus, she raised her head to look at Jasper, a despondent smile spread across her dirt-smudged face. “My mother has Alzheimer’s. She’s now bed-ridden as she can’t move anymore. My brother committed a crime two months ago and has been arrested,” she said.

A slight furrow formed on Jasper’s brows. In his past life, Calvin Hunt, Penelope’s brother, did not go to jail.

It seemed like after his reincarnation, the fates of many of those who were closely related to him in his past life have changed.

“Don’t you have a job? Your family has savings, right? How did you end up like this?” Jasper asked.

Although he had once hated Penelope Hunt and her family, and despised the way she would support her brother no matter the circumstances, those were all in the past now.

At the very least, Jasper did not any embarrassment at the hands of the Hunts during this lifetime.

Facing his wife from his past life as well as the woman that had been by his side for a few years of his current life, the woefulness in Jasper’s heart gradually overpowered the hatred he held for her.

After all, the two of them were on different levels right now. Their circumstances were different as well. Jasper had long since lost the rage and hatred he had for Penelope Hunt.

“It’s all because of Richton White!” Penelope blurted out, a vicious gaze in her eyes.

“After Hugh Lewis went down, there was nobody else that I could depend on. I got together with Richton White after that. I thought that he truly loved me, but he ran away after swindling me of all of my family’s assets and properties!

“Because of this incident, my mother was so angered that she eventually got Alzheimer’s. My brother fell to rock bottom as well. He joined a bunch of gangsters and messed around all day long. The gangsters beat someone up and ended up severely injuring someone. They ran away, but he had to take all the blame. I lost my job as well.”

She stared at Jasper. At that moment, her ex-boyfriend did not seem as mundane and unremarkable as he had been back in the day.

Life at the Top Chapter 573

The aura surrounding Jasper at that moment was already beyond what Penelope could fathom. However, she could tell that Jasper’s outfit was an expensive one. The man’s every move and even the simplest glance was filled with the prestige and aura of somebody of high-society.

In comparison, Penelope felt like a speck of dust in the mud while Jasper was a prince that towered over her.

There was nothing to compare between the two.

No one could possibly imagine that they had been a couple talking about wedding plans just a year ago.

Penelope shuddered slightly, but she did not know if she was shaking with resentment or regret.

Jasper lamented at the sight of Penelope, now as despondent as a beggar on the streets.

There were definitely no more romantic feelings between them.

Yet, the hatred he harbored for her seemed to have faded as well.

Jasper had once imagined that he would feel very proud as he stood before Penelope after he had finally made a name before himself. He wondered how it would feel to mock Penelope for looking down at him in the beginning, only to end up losing such a gem of a man.

However, even as all this was finally happening, Jasper did not feel even the slightest urge to mock her anymore.

He merely marveled at how fast the world could change.

“Take it.”

A wad of cash appeared before Penelope.

It came to total of around one to two thousand bucks.

“That’s all I have on me now. Go get nice clothes for you and your mom, and use the rest for Christmas presents. Regardless, things will get better next year.”

Jasper paused for a bit then continued, “John Jackson, the Vice President of the ICBS City Branch, is a friend of mine. He got promoted from Faith County, so he should still have a few contacts here and there. I could contact him when I get back to ask if he could assign you some temporary work at ICBS.”

“But you’ve got to work hard for it as well. Study hard and pass the test. The ICBS has an internal test before hiring any employees, but John will help prepare a path for you if you pass the test. That should give you a steady job.”

Seeing Penelope standing blankly in front of him, Jasper replied, “Then find someone nice and live a happy life.”

Jasper placed the money in Penelope’s hands and turned to leave.

Penelope stared at the banknotes in her hand, then looked up, only to see Jasper’s figure walking away.

It was a crowded street, with people bustling around her, ready to celebrate the joy of Christmas. Penelope watched as Jasper’s figure vanished before she suddenly mustered the courage she did not even know she had to run after him.

“Wait!”

Jasper turned around and frowned upon seeing Penelope panting hard from the run.

‘What more does this woman want? She can’t be so deluded to think that we’d get back together, right?’

Jasper did not say anything, instead waiting patiently for her to speak first.

“I’m not here for anything else. I just wanted to tell you, that when I was stea... I mean, buying things this morning, I heard two young men, who I think are brothers, talk about something. I think one of them was called Terence or something.

“The Terence guy was trying to prove something to the other, and claimed that some bigshot was going to come after you, and as such, he was asking the other man to join in as well.

“I don’t know exactly what they said, but I heard them say your name so I jotted it down... but then again, they might also just be talking about another ‘Jasper’ so...”

Penelope then bowed deeply to Jasper, then turned to run.

Jasper furrowed his brows slightly as he watched Penelope’s figure disappear into the crowd. Instantly, he fell deep in thought.

Penelope turned at the corner of the street and stopped to catch her breath, when she suddenly bent down to wail.

Whether she was crying out of regret or something else was probably something only Penelope would know.

Even so, Jasper and Penelope were both very well aware of the current situation.

That the two of them were complete strangers now. The last contact they would ever have had come to an end with this helping hand Jasper had extended her.

Life at the Top Chapter 574

Jasper’s and Penelope’s meeting was pure coincidence.

As far as Jasper was concerned, helping Penelope was at most, a final farewell to his previous life and his past.

After all, Jasper was not a heartless person.

While the two had not shared a very happy past, Penelope was, if anything, still the woman who had been by Jasper's side the longest.

Now that they each had their own lives to live, the least Jasper could do was bid that era of his life farewell.

Yet, Jasper had never expected Penelope to bring him such an important message.

'Called Terence or something?'

'Who else but Terence Laine, then?'

Naturally, the people Jasper first thought of when he heard Penelope's words would be the two brothers, Terence and Darrel Laine.

Taking a trip down memory lane, Jasper recalled Terence had never shown himself again after leaving the meal in a huff yesterday. Meanwhile, Darrel had been staying in Tefa City the entire time.

Upon returning home, Jasper called Julian over.

"Go poke around Shangri-La Hotel to see if Terence's come back or not. If he did, I need to know when he got back and who he's been in touch with since his return."

After receiving Jasper's instructions, Julian nodded and immediately went to investigate.

"Hold on."

Jasper called Julian back.

“Keep a low profile. Don’t let anyone find out about your investigation,” Jasper reminded.

Julian smiled and turned to leave.

A little more than an hour later, Julian returned as night had just fallen.

“I’ve found what you wanted to know, Jasper. Terence returned around midnight yesterday. There’s a record of him at the hotel since he used his ID card to check into a room.

“Terence didn’t leave his room up until this morning, but when he did, it was with his brother Darrel. The two of them bought something then returned to the hotel. After this, the two brothers, along with their parents, took a car ride back to Faith County.”

Jasper furrowed his brows slightly and asked, “Where did Terence go yesterday? Who did he meet?”

Julian shook his head. “All I found out was that he had bought a ticket to the provincial capital after he left the dinner yesterday, then he took the last train back. But who he had met during this interval, I do not know.”

Jasper replied expressionlessly, “Alright, got it.”

After Julian left, Jasper sat alone in his study immersed in his thoughts.

Jasper’s instincts told him that Terence had gone to the provincial capital for a specific reason.

It might be to meet this so-called bigshot.

However, after he mulled it over, Jasper found that he could not think of any bigshots left who would want to take him out.

Finally, Jasper decided to call Dawson.

“Uncle Schuler,” Jasper greeted.

Dawson smiled. “What is it, Jasper? Did something happen?”

Jasper chuckled. “Nothing happened. I just wanted to check in you to see you were doing lately.

“Oh, and has there been any activity in the provincial capital lately?”

Dawson was stunned for a moment before he replied, “I didn’t hear of anything. Everything’s been quite calm recently.”

Jasper’s furrowed brows relaxed and he smiled. “That’s great then.”

Dawson could acutely sense that something was up, so he asked solemnly, “Did you receive news about something going on?”

Jasper replied, “Someone probably has their eyes on me, but I’m not absolutely sure of this yet. I’ll have to keep my eyes peeled for a little longer before I can confirm the matter.”

Life at the Top Chapter 575

Dawson replied, “Alright then. Remember to call me if you need any help.”

Jasper nodded. “I will.”

Putting the phone down, Jasper’s expression darkened slightly.

A false positive was better than a false negative. Jasper never had the habit of getting comfortable, so he would always be somewhat cautious and keep his guards up.

The news from Penelope coupled with the results of his investigation from multiple places had solidified such a case.

‘Terence himself has ulterior motives as well as someone mysterious backing him up.

‘In order to do this, Terence even tried to pull Darrel into his plans.

‘But the fact that Terence has to persuade Darrel means that the latter either has no idea of what’s happening or hasn’t completely joined their side.

‘So who’s this mysterious mastermind behind it all?’

“It’s time for dinner, Jasper.”

His mother’s voice sounded from downstairs, breaking Jasper’s train of thought.

Exhaling softly, Jasper hummed in acknowledgment and walked out of his study. He decided that he would observe for a little longer before he came up with a plan.

At least now he had a target to keep an eye on and that was Terence Laine.

If the other party wanted to deal with him, then it would only be a matter of time before they made a move.

...

At the same time in a normal district in Faith County.

Darrel's brows were knitted tightly as he looked at Terrence's nervous expression with a deep gaze. He spoke with a heavy tone, "Have you gone crazy, Terrence? Or did someone drug you with something? How could you be so blind?"

Terrence harrumphed and replied, "You're the one being stubborn here, Darrel. What's so good about Jasper anyway? Why are you so willing to follow his lead?"

Darrel replied sternly, "Enough nonsense. I'd still be unemployed if not for him! I still need his support for my business next year, so what makes you think I'd do anything that would harm him?"

Terrence scoffed. "That's just him being charitable to you. Don't you want to make your own money?"

"Mr. Hanks already said that he's willing to give you double of what Jasper's giving you. You just need to nod your head and agree! You'll get even more benefits after all of this is over, so why are you still hesitating?"

Darrel replied in annoyance, "That's just an empty promise. Plus, do you know how this will sound like to our relatives if news gets out? Do you want to lose all respect?"

Terrence spat on the ground and replied, "Don't give me bullsh*t talk about our relatives, Darrel. Don't you see? All these relatives do is look down on people, they don't care what happens to you at all. All they care about is whether you're broke or rich. If you're the latter, then they'll praise you every day and everything you do is deemed as right.

"Just think about it. These relatives have always said that the two of us would turn out to be outstanding people in society. Our familial conditions are better than Jasper's no matter how you look at it. Before this, no one even looked at Jasper with respect.

“But what about now? Every single one of them is talking about how much of a genius Jasper is and how much more outstanding he is. I’m tired of all of this, but this is reality. This is the truth!

“The harshest part of this all is that even if you manage to open your hotpot restaurants, Darrel, all you get is just 10% of the shares. Jasper doesn’t even have to f*cking do anything and he’s getting the longer end of the stick! Why? All everyone has said up until now is how good Jasper is, but will anyone even remember how much effort you’ve put into this?”

Terence’s words had Darrel’s expression changing.

While the words were harsh, Darrel had to admit that his brother spoke the truth.

“We just have to show the rest of them that we’re the truly outstanding people in this family, Darrel. Jasper is just someone who got rich because he was lucky. He has no right to step all over us.

“Plus, we’re brothers. Why would I set you up?”

With Terence’s persuasion, he saw that Darrel was about to agree.

Darrel stood up in frustration and spoke, “Enough. My mind’s a mess now, so we’ll talk about this again in a few days.”

Terence’s gaze turned sinister as he watched Darrel leave.

He would be screwed if he did not manage to persuade Darrel. Zayden would not forgive him if that was the case.

That was why Terence had already decided he would do everything to persuade Darrel, no matter the price.

Life at the Top Chapter 576

Regardless of the sinister schemes being plotted, time continued to pass with each day.

It was New Year's Eve now, and the new year would soon arrive.

Jasper did not go anywhere that day, opting to stay home with his parents instead.

However, that did not mean he had nothing to do. He was making calls to Old Master Law and the like to relay New Year's Eve greetings.

Etiquettes should not be forgotten.

As for Gale Hurlbutt, Jasper had also called to greet him.

He had accepted Gale's conditions two days ago.

This meant that he would assume the role of vice president of the Haddock Chamber of Commerce Waterhoof branch after New Year's when work officially started again.

The news was still kept under wraps and there was only a handful who knew of it. Yet that did not stop Jasper and Gale's relationship from growing closer.

The most important thing was...

He had to deal with the long phone calls with Anna and Wendy.

While the two women were far apart, they seemed to have a very tacit understanding not to call Jasper first.

Jasper was elated by the fact, so he spent more than an hour calling Wendy before he dialed Anna's number.

Having called the people he had to, Jasper then received calls from Hudson, Jack, and a bunch of other people.

Everyone traded pleasantries, wishing for each other's good health and prosperity in the new year.

These were all necessary conversations. One would not gain anything if they spoke too much, but not speaking enough would easily offend others.

After entertaining the people he had to, Jasper looked up to realize that it was past 12 a.m. now.

This marked the beginning of 2001.

Jasper walked over to the window and was surprised to find that it had begun to snow tonight.

Snow was rare in the southeast and it had been a few years since it snowed in Tefa City.

The only one beside Jasper now was the burly Julian.

"Julian, do you know any responsible female martial artists you could recommend?" Jasper asked.

Julian gave it some thought before replying, "I do have a martial artist friend who has just become a martial arts instructor. Do you want to invite her over, Jasper?"

Jasper smiled. "I can't help but worry when there isn't anyone with Wendy to protect her."

Jasper nodded. "Alright, I'll contact her tomorrow."

Now that New Year's Eve was over, it was January again and Jasper would only be getting busier as time passed.

There were plenty of people coming over to greet him, including John who brought Kai over.

Kai brought over a gilded crucifix. Seeing its design and weight, it had to cost at least 100,000 Somer Dollars.

Despite knowing that Kai was giving the gift as thanks and to fawn over Jasper, Jasper did not decline it when he saw how his religious mom, Sally, was so happy that her mouth stayed agape.

After dealing with the large group of people, Jasper and his parents arrived in Nauritus City at the provincial capital on the fourth of January.

It was the day Jasper's and Wendy's parents would meet.

Jasper parked the Bentley just before Dawson's house. Dawson took the initiative to approach them.

He opened the car doors and reached out a hand to Charlie who was alighting the vehicle. "I've been anticipating for ages the day you'd come over, Charlie."

Charlie smiled, still slightly nervous, and shook Dawson's hand with both his hands. "Hello, Mr. Schuler. It's nice to meet you too."

Life at the Top Chapter 577

As if sensing Charlie's nerves, Dawson smiled. "You don't have to be too polite. While this is the first time we're meeting, we're going to be a family very soon. You're older than me, so I'll just treat you as my brother and call you Charlie. You can do the same as well."

Seeing how easy-going such a wealthy man like Dawson was, Charlie immediately took a liking to the man and chuckled. "Then I'll just call you Dawson, since I'm older than you."

"There we go. This must be my sister-in-law, then?" Dawson turned to smile at Sally and greeted her.

Seeing how their parents were speaking cheerfully with one another, both Jasper and Wendy exhaled a sigh of relief.

"You look beautiful today," Jasper told Wendy with a chuckle.

Wendy was donned in a pink faux-fur coat today with a scarf around her fair neck. Her choice of clothing had only made Wendy look more bright and playful.

Wendy chuckled. "You look very handsome today as well."

The two families entered the villa with smiles on their faces, and Charlie gave Jasper a look to prompt the other to bring out a large box. Jasper then handed it to Dawson. "Uncle Schuler, my parents didn't know what gift to get since it's their first time coming over. Please enjoy this small offering of ours."

Dawson was stunned. "It's enough that you're here, what's with all this gift-giving?"

“These are rare goods, Dad. Some 200-year-old wild ginseng,” Wendy told him as she stood beside him.

Dawson’s expression changed. “200 years old? What a treasure.”

He opened the box in front of everyone, and within the red gift box was a stalk of wild ginseng that would unfurl to a length of more than one meter long. It looked like it was pregnant.

“This is too much,” Dawson turned to Charlie.

Charlie smiled. “Its value isn’t important. You were the one who told me not to be too polite.”

Dawson did not protest and accepted the gift with a smile.

Lunch went by joyfully.

Both Dawson and Charlie had drunk some alcohol, so the two went to their own rooms to rest after lunch.

Jasper was just planning to bring his girlfriend out on a date when he received a phone call from Sean.

Thinking that it was just a call for greetings, Jasper accepted it only to hear Sean’s frantic tone echo through the speakers once the call connected.

“Something has happened, Mr. Laine! The site... Something has happened on the site!”

Jasper’s eyebrows arched as he replied with a heavy tone, “What are you so panicked about? Tell me what happened slowly.”

Hearing that, Wendy’s expression turned serious as well.

Sean gulped a few times over the phone as he forced himself to calm down. When he spoke again, it was with an exceptionally grim tone, "I've just received news that a fire broke out at the site half an hour ago. Firefighters are still trying to extinguish the flames but they've already pulled out five to six people from the site. All of them are severely injured and official personnel is carrying out emergency rescue on them..."

Jasper was furious at what he heard and roared, "What the hell were the people in charge of the site doing? How many times have I told them that it's New Year's and while I understand everyone is trying to meet deadlines, we have to be careful! How could a fire break out at such a stage? And with five to six workers severely injured?!"

Sean replied sorrowfully, "We've been especially careful all this time but it was really weird how the fire started. It started from the workers' living quarters during lunch break when most of the workers were sleeping. It started too abruptly for anyone to make it out in time."

"Where are you now?" Jasper pushed down his anger and asked.

"On my way to the construction site," Sean replied frantically.

"Get there as fast as you can and focus on placating the workers. You have to control this situation and don't let news of it leak yet. I'll be there shortly."

Jasper then hung up the phone.

"The site caught on fire, Jasp?" Wendy asked worriedly.

Jasper nodded and replied grimly, "We still don't know what happened exactly, but there are already five to six of them severely injured. There might be more people inside but we haven't found them yet. I've got to go over. Wait for my news here."

"Should I wake my dad?" Wendy asked.

Jasper shook his head. “He drank quite a bit during lunch, so let him rest. I’ll deal with this.”

Jasper then informed Julian and sped toward the construction site.

Life at the Top Chapter 578

Flames and smoke engulfed the construction site on the South Bank of the Southface river, attracting the attention of countless people.

Long before he had even arrived, Jasper could already see how the fire brightened up half the sky as smoke burst into the air. The smell of burning materials permeated the air kilometers away from the scene.

“It’s not a small fire this time, Jasper. From what the looks of it, I’d say it’s pretty severe,” Julian spoke grimly to Jasper.

Jasper took a deep breath and replied calmly, “It’s alright. It’s not a loss if it can be fixed with money.”

The large Bentley arrived outside the construction site and was held back by the caution tape the firefighters had put up.

Jasper did not explain himself to the firefighters as he got out of the car and walked toward the site.

Jasper and Julian were currently around 700 to 800 meters away from the site, but despite the distance, Jasper could still feel the burning heat from the scene. That spoke levels about how severe this fire was and that it was rapidly spreading.

“Mister... Mr. Laine!”

Having arrived before them, Sean ran over with a pant. Sean’s meticulous suit was now in an embarrassing state with traces of soot all over. The man was drenched in sweat, and it was a sorry sight.

“How’s the situation?” Jasper walked toward the site with Sean following beside him.

While panting, Sean replied, “The fire hasn’t been put out yet, but the firefighters told me that from what they can see, the fire started in two different places. The workers’ rest and living quarters, and the warehouse for all the building materials.

“Both fires started almost at the same time, so that explains why the fire is so unrelenting. The firefighters suspect arson, but there’s no concrete evidence.”

Jasper replied grimly, “All of that can wait. The most important thing now is to contain the fire and minimize injuries and deaths.”

Sean took a deep breath and wiped the sweat from his forehead. “I agree, that’s what I thought too—”

A firefighter who was seemingly the captain ran over to Jasper and interrupted Sean with a question, “Who are you?”

Jasper did not mind the other’s abrupt attitude and replied, “I’m the person in charge of JW Real Estates.”

The firefighter scoffed and pointed at the construction site that was still in flames. “What kind of safety measures are you using here? It’s really difficult to contain a fire like this. You’re going to have to take legal responsibility if people lose their lives or get injured by this!”

Sean’s expression changed, and he was about to chide the captain when Jasper waved at Sean to stop him.

“I understand how you feel, captain, but trust me when I say I’m more nervous about this than you. You have to believe me when I say that there’s nothing wrong with the safety measures in the construction site. We can talk about whether I should be held accountable or not later, but I only have one request right now.”

Jasper’s gaze turned solemn as he stared at the captain and continued, “Do anything you can to minimize the harm done to my workers!”

The captain was stunned when he heard Jasper. He had dealt with countless industrial fires and almost every boss was most worried about their property and materials. This was the first time he had heard such a request.

“Aren’t you worried about property loss?” the captain asked.

Jasper replied calmly, “I can continue investing if it’s just monetary loss and I can just buy more facilities if they break. But there’s nothing I can do to atone if human lives are lost here.”

The captain immediately found respect for Jasper at his words and gave Jasper an intense look before he spoke, “Don’t worry. It’s our job, so we’ll do everything we can to save the workers inside.”

Jasper took a deep breath and replied, “I only request that the firefighters take care of themselves as well, then.”

Life at the Top Chapter 579

Jasper then turned to Sean. “Mr. Tucker, on behalf of JW Real Estates, please donate one million Somer Dollars in cash and three firetrucks to the fire department that’s putting the fire out after all of this is over.”

Sean shouted reflexively, "Understood, Mr. Laine!"

The captain gave Jasper an intent look. "I've seen my fair share of rich men, but you're the most unique out of all of them. I'm certain now that this fire has nothing to do with you."

The captain then quickly ran back to instruct his team in putting the fire out.

Jasper and Sean stood by the entrance of the site and stared grimly as the red flames devoured the place.

From time to time, there would be severely injured workers carried out by firefighters. Each time he saw this scene, Jasper's expression grew darker.

"Mr. Tucker," Jasper called out.

"Yes, Mr. Laine?" Sean moved toward him.

"Immediately notify the office that every employee above the managerial level and those in charge of the site's safety measures are to have all their remaining holidays canceled. They should return to the office right away.

"The company has only one job now and that is to team up to take care of the workers harmed in this fire.

"Every injured worker is to be compensated by the insurance company they signed their contracts with and if their insurance can't cover them, then the company will top up the amount.

"I'm not short on money, let alone money that I should be paying," Jasper replied heavily.

Sean's heart lurched as he replied instinctively, "Mr. Laine, the compensation from their insurance companies is enough. We've bought them enough employment injury insurance, and it's going to cost the company tens of millions if we pay the rest for them."

Jasper turned to Sean coldly. "Tens of millions is nothing to me, but to these workers? That money is enough to pay for their entire lives!"

Sean did not even dare to look into Jasper's frosty eyes. Shuddering, he quickly replied, "I understand, Mr. Laine. I'll get to it right away."

...

At the same time, Zayden was several kilometers away in a high-rise where he watched the fire brighten the sky over the South Bank of the Southface River while chortling.

"Not bad. Not bad at all. You've done well this time." Zayden laughed loudly as he turned and clapped Terence on the shoulder.

Terence laughed drily and nodded, replying with a bow, "I'm happy that you're satisfied with my performance, Mr. Hanks."

While Zayden was laughing, his gaze could not be more sinister and cold as he stared at Terence. "You did well with lighting the fire, but you didn't leave any evidence behind, did you?"

Terence shuddered and quickly looked down as he replied, "Don't worry, Mr. Hanks. I had observed them for a few days before I acted. I didn't leave behind any evidence at all."

Zayden nodded. "Very good. Well done."

Zayden then turned to look at the construction site that was bursting in flames. "What a beautiful sight. If only the fire was even bigger. How terrible do you think Jasper's expression is right now?"

“When I think of that, I just can’t wait to see what Jasper looks like. He must be heartbroken. He must be furious, wouldn’t you say? Hahaha!”

Terence shivered in terror amidst Zayden’s chortles but still laughed along with him. “Who does Jasper think he is? Who is he to compete with you, Mr. Hanks? This is just a small lesson, the true suffering comes later.”

Life at the Top Chapter 580

This fire became earth-shattering news that wracked through all of the Southeast Province. It had also taken 47 million out of Jasper’s pockets.

“Mr. Laine, Mr. Schuler, the fire has burned 40 million Somer Dollars worth of our building materials and facilities in total. There’s also an invisible loss of seven million for rebuilding and adding new facilities as well as compensations for the workers’ injuries.

“Moreover, while no lives are lost, there are 16 severely injured workers. Among them, five are permanently crippled and three were severely burnt as well. These people will have to live the rest of their lives in a hospital bed.

“After the relevant compensations and deducting the insurance, we still have to pay six million excluding the cost for the other mildly injured workers. Including them, it will amount to around 11 million Somer Dollars.”

It was in the middle of the night when Jasper and Dawson listened grimly to Sean’s report in JW Real Estates’ office.

Jasper initially did not intend to worry Dawson, but with how huge the issue was, it was only right that Dawson knew what was happening. Otherwise, any more mistakes would only result in greater losses.

“Do you mean our financial loss has amounted to around 60 million?” Jasper concluded calmly.

Sean replied in embarrassment, “These are all direct losses. We still haven’t considered the indirect losses. We won’t be able to start work for at least another week, so the halt in progress and the loss of past progress will amount to around another 30 million.”

Bang!

Dawson lit a cigarette and slammed the lighter heavily against the office desk.

Sean shuddered, not daring to look up at Dawson’s sinister expression.

Jasper turned to look at Sean. “You’ve worked hard today. You still have work tomorrow, so go home first and rest.”

As if he was shown the biggest mercy, Sean frantically bade them farewell and left the office.

With Sean gone, there were only Jasper and Dawson in the office.

“There’s something wrong about this fire, Jasper,” Dawson exhaled a breath of smoke and spoke.

Jasper leaned against the sofa and rubbed his temple, muttering, “Yeah, there really is something wrong. It’s too coincidental that I can’t explain it with the word ‘accident’.”

“A 100 million Somer Dollar loss. Haha, good job to whoever was behind this. One fire and we’ve lost 100 million just like that.”

Fiery anger burned in Dawson's gaze as he spoke, "I've never made such a big loss since I started working. What a sinister scheme. This is a capable opponent we're dealing with... Do you have an idea who this might be, Jasper?"

Jasper shook his head. "There's no evidence at all. Whoever was behind this is very meticulous. Not to mention with a fire this big, any evidence would've been burnt away as well."

"Alright then. Do everything you can to sniff out the person behind this, and I'll deal with the public and the follow-up," Dawson suggested.

Jasper nodded. "That's probably for the best."

As the night was dark, both Jasper and Dawson did not stay in the office for much longer. They quickly returned to their respective homes to rest.

Moments after Jasper woke up the following day, he saw Julian looking for him.

"Someone's looking for you, Jasper," Julian informed him.

Jasper frowned. "I'll be very busy for the time being. If it isn't anyone special, decline them."

"It's Darrel."

"Darrel?"

Jasper's head lifted as he replied calmly, "Have him meet me in the backyard then."

In the backyard, a haggard-looking Darrel arrived before Jasper under Julian's lead.

"Jasper."

Darrel greeted him with a raspy voice.

Jasper pointed at the seat before him and smiled. "It's just been a few days since we last met. How did the New Year's wear you out till your cheeks are hollow?"

Life at the Top Chapter 581

Darrel did not sit, opting to stand and speak to Jasper instead. “Jasper, did the Southface River construction site catch fire?”

There was no way such a grave incident could be covered up.

While it was still New Year’s holiday, it was not an excuse for the media not to report such a large incident.

The news of the fire at the Southface River construction site was being heavily discussed in the entire Southeast Province.

It had become the first large incident in the year 2001.

“Indeed. There was no way we could’ve foreseen such an accident,” Jasper replied calmly.

Darrel’s expression was conflicted as he spoke softly, “Jasper, this fire... You lost quite a lot because of it, haven’t you?”

“Not too much, just 100 million.” Jasper’s tone was casual as if he was talking about 100 bucks instead.

“Why? You sound very concerned about this incident.”

Jasper’s words made Darrel shudder. The latter looked up at Jasper with a deep gaze, and his knees suddenly bent forward as he kneeled on the ground. With a sob, he apologized, “I’m sorry, Jasper! Please forgive me!”

Narrowing his eyes, Jasper did not move. He did not even help the other up as he stared at Darrel kneeling before him. Jasper merely spoke calmly, "What did you do that requires my forgiveness?"

As though he had made the biggest decision, Darrel clenched his jaw and replied, "I was the one who set the fire!"

Jasper did not reply and merely stared at Darrel.

Under Jasper's gaze, Darrel felt as if the oxygen around him was getting sucked and he was no longer able to breathe freely.

After some time, when Darrel's forehead was filled with beads of sweat and he felt like he was about to suffocate, Jasper finally broke the silence.

"Do you know what your biggest weakness is, Darrel?"

Darrel looked up at Jasper in confusion.

Jasper smiled and continued to speak, "You can't lie.

"That's why I had already decided since the beginning that you weren't going to make it as a businessman. I even decided that if you made a big loss, I'd still cover for you and pay off your debts.

"But I never expected to be the first person you're lying to since our partnership.

"It's a shame that I don't plan to play along with this lie for you."

Darrel shivered and looked at Jasper in disbelief. "Jasper, what..."

Jasper picked up the coffee cup and took a sip as he spoke calmly, "Terence was the one who set the fire, wasn't he?"

Darrel was stricken and pale.

“And the reason why you’re willing to take the blame for him is so that I won’t look into him, correct? You could have just kept quiet and pretended not to know anything at all. After all, he’s done a very clean job and it’d be very difficult for me to hold him accountable.”

Then, Jasper smiled. “Of course, that’s before you decided to come and be his scapegoat. Now I know he’s the one who did it.”

Darrel shook his head instinctively. “No, I was the one behind it all. This has nothing to do with him at all—”

“Darrel Laine!”

Jasper shouted suddenly and slammed the coffee cup against the stone table heavily. Coffee splashed everywhere, wetting the area.

“As far as I’m concerned, spoiled brats aren’t lost causes. With enough setbacks, it’ll only be a matter of time before people like him realize that not everyone in this world is his parents and no one is obligated to help him.

“Those who are truly evil are people who still decide to let him be despite knowing that he has made a grave mistake on the pretext of protecting him. Now these people can f*ck right off!”

Life at the Top Chapter 582

Jasper’s bellow made Darrel pale in shock.

He was frozen in place, and he did not dare to look up at Jasper at all.

Jasper merely sighed when he saw Darrel's reaction. "I know that the only reason Terence is brave enough to do something like this is that he has someone supporting him.

"In fact, he desperately wishes that you join him in dealing with me, correct?"

Darrel looked up in fear and replied, "How did you know that?"

Jasper replied calmly, "The only way no one can find out about something is if you don't do anything.

"The only reason why I haven't dealt with Terence yet is that he's just a pawn the opponent is exploiting. My target is the mastermind behind this."

Jasper then looked at Darrel intently. "The fact that you've come to me today means that you don't dare to join them, so I'm hoping that you'll tell me who this other person is."

Darrel shook his head with a bitter smile. "It's not that I don't want to tell you, but I have no idea who that other person is either.

"I've never entertained the idea of working with them to harm you, so I didn't pay Terence any attention no matter how he persuaded me. But I know how his temper is and I'm scared that he'll get himself in trouble.

"I heard him on the phone last night with whom I think is the person supporting him. I heard Terence say that he was the one who set the fire.

"I spent the night thinking, and I don't dare to hide it from you. That's why I planned to look for you and take the blame for him. I just never thought... Sigh."

Jasper tapped his fingers on the table slowly as he heard Darrel speak. After that, Jasper looked up at Julian, "Jul!"

“Yes!” Julian immediately replied.

“Bring Terence to me.”

Darrel’s expression changed immediately when he heard Jasper. He said, “Jasper...”

“Don’t be too aggressive. If he’s home, try not to frighten my uncle and aunt.”

As if knowing what Darrel was worried about, Jasper instructed Julian in detail.

Julian made a sound of acknowledgment and left, leaving Darrel to sit despondently on the ground with a bitter smile. “This is the end of our brotherhood, then.”

Jasper tossed Darrel a cigarette and replied, “You have to believe that you’re doing this for his own good.”

Darrel took the cigarette with a bitter chuckle. “Let’s hope he understands, then.”

40 minutes later, the study’s doors opened to reveal Julian who was single-handedly dragging Terence into the room. The man had a cloth stuffed in his mouth.

“I’ve brought him over, Jasper. He was downstairs and about to leave when I got there, so I just brought him over. No one else knows.”

Terence was lying face-down on the floor, struggling as Julian spoke. Muffled cries could be heard through the cloth.

His eyes widened the moment he looked up and saw Jasper and Darrel sitting together, as though he had seen something unthinkable.

“Alright, you can pull the thing out of his mouth now,” Jasper said.

Julian bent over to pull the cloth away.

Now that he could speak, Terence roared, “Why did you kidnap me here, Jasper?! Let me tell you, just because you’re rich doesn’t mean you can do whatever you want! You’re not going to get anything out of this if you dare to do anything to me!”

Terence’s fierce facade hid the guilt and fear he was feeling underneath. His eyes flitted rapidly between Jasper and Darrel as if he was mulling over an important question.

Life at the Top Chapter 583

“Let’s ignore whether I’ll get anything out of this or not. Do you know that arson leading to huge property loss and injuries is a severe crime? Do you know that you’ll get at least ten years in prison?”

Terence’s expression changed drastically at Jasper’s words, and he replied guiltily, “I don’t know what you’re talking about! You’re telling me you brought me here so I could listen to you talk about the law?”

“The fire you set made me lose 100 million Somer Dollars. More than a dozen workers are severely injured and there are still a few workers in the emergency room as we speak. Do you think by denying you know anything regarding this matter will get you exempted from legal consequences?” Jasper looked at Terence and asked.

Terence’s heart thumped frantically, and his expression turned fierce as he spoke, “I don’t know what kind of nonsense you’re talking about here! What the f*ck does your construction site catching fire have to do with me? Don’t think that being rich gives you the right to slander me however you want!”

“Sigh...”

Darrel sighed and looked at Terence disappointedly. “Stop struggling, Terence. Jasper already knows everything. Be more sincere and I’ll ask him to let you go. I won’t be able to help you even if I want to if you’re going to continue being so stubborn.”

Terence was enraged. “Darrel Laine! How dare you help an outsider instead of your own brother? What are you saying here?!”

Darrel replied hopelessly, “I overheard your call last night. I know that you were the one who lit that fire. Did you think you left no leads behind? Jasper has had his eyes on you a long time ago, so will you stop being so stubborn for once?”

Terence was stricken by the words, and he looked at Jasper in disbelief. Deep fear tinted his eyes.

“I... I don’t know what you’re talking about!”

Even until the end, Terence remained unwilling to speak.

He was well aware that should he admit to setting the fire, there would be terrifying consequences coming for him.

He wanted to join forces with Zayden, but that did not mean he was willing to go to prison for it.

“I can choose not to hold you accountable, but you have to tell me who’s the one ordering you around,” Jasper said.

Terence had a painfully conflicted expression on his face, but he still did not reply.

Jasper furrowed his brows. The problem would be much more difficult to solve if Terence decided to remain quiet.

Since the plan was not to alert the opponent, it would be inappropriate to turn Terence in to the police.

Doing so would only force the mastermind Jasper was looking for to hide even deeper away.

“Let me talk to him alone, Jasper,” Darrel suddenly spoke.

Jasper made a noncommittal sound and stood to exit the room with Julian in tow.

When they were outside, Julian turned to Jasper. “I know a few tricks that could cause immense pain, Jasper. People like Terence have a pretty weak will.”

Jasper laughed. “Let’s wait a little longer first. Best case scenario, Darrel manages to persuade him to talk. If that doesn’t work, then we’ll resort to your methods.”

Jasper did not have the intention to eavesdrop on the brothers’ conversation, but loud shouts and scoldings came continuously from the study.

It continued for another 20 minutes or so before the door to the study opened again.

Darrel, who looked exhausted, walked out and turned to Jasper. “He’s willing to talk now.”

Upon returning to the study, Jasper saw that Terence now seemed soulless as he stared at him with profound resentment.

“I don’t know what you drugged my brother with that he’s so loyal to you, Jasper, but don’t you forget that I will never respect you!”

Jasper replied calmly, “I don’t need your respect. I need a name.”

“Zayden Hanks!”

Life at the Top Chapter 584

‘Zayden Hanks!’

Hearing the name, the calm Jasper was shocked as well.

In all honesty, he had almost forgotten about Zayden.

While Zayden had caused Jasper some problems back in Harbor City, Jasper had also dealt with him and Zayden dropped off the grid afterward.

Jasper then had to face quite a few other issues and did not have the mind to think about Zayden anymore.

He had never expected this bothersome man to appear again.

Jasper could acutely sense that Zayden’s appearance this time was not as simple as it seemed.

“He was the one who sought me out first. Seeing that he was rich and powerful, I decided that I’d get acquainted with him. He ordered me to do things mainly so he could deal with you.

“Seeing that our goals were the same and I’d also be benefitted by this, I agreed.”

Terence spoke coldly and stared at Jasper. “Yes, I set that fire. I’ve already told you everything you want to know. You said you won’t hold me accountable!”

“And I’ll stand by my word.”

Jasper smiled and turned to Terence. “But I do hope that you’ll do one more thing for me.”

Terence scoffed. “You wish. There’s no way I’ll help you do anything.”

“Alright, then.” Jasper nodded and turned to Julian. “Contact the city’s government and tell them that we’ve found the arsonist. Have them come over and take him to jail.”

Terence’s expression changed as he roared, “Jasper! You f*cking b*stard, you said you won’t hold me accountable!”

Jasper replied calmly, “That real estate company is both mine and my father-in-law’s. I can opt not to hold you accountable for my loss, but you’ve got to repay him for his, don’t you?”

Terence’s face paled in anger as he ground his teeth and shouted at Darrel, “Do you see what I mean?! I told you that Jasper is sinister and sly! He’s sending me to prison now and this is all your fault!”

Darrel looked uncomfortable, and he turned to Jasper only to swallow down the words he wanted to say.

Jasper’s expression was calm when he spoke, “You have two choices here. Work with me, or you can rot in jail.”

Terence clenched his jaw, and his gaze was fiery when he growled. “Fine. What do you want me to do?”

“Help me find out who the other people he has been in contact with are.”

Terence was stunned and scoffed at Jasper's words. "Who else can he be in contact with? Except for his dad, no one else knows he's back at all. There's no way he has any other contacts."

"You think he has the galls to come at me by himself? Why do you think he's trying to deal with me in the dark? He has lost to me too many times," Jasper replied calmly.

Terence's brows twitched as he looked at Jasper disdainfully. "Sure, whatever you say."

"You don't have to worry about anything else. All you need to do is look into what I've asked you, and I can promise no one will ever hold you accountable for setting this fire," Jasper replied calmly.

Terence sneered. "You'd better keep your word this time."

Soon after, Terence left. For some unknown reason, Darrel stayed back instead of leaving with his brother.

Standing by the study's window, Jasper drank his coffee as he watched Terence leave the villa. Suddenly, he turned to Darrel who stood behind him and asked with a smile, "What do you think your brother is going to do first?"

Darrel was stunned for a moment before he replied, "Isn't he going to find out who else that Zayden person is in contact with? That's what you asked him to do, right?"

Jasper replied calmly, "If only it was that simple. I'm willing to bet that the first thing this brother of yours will do is look for Zayden and tell him everything that has happened."

Darrel's expression changed. "That's impossible... How... How would he dare to? Plus, he already promised me..."

Jasper replied calmly, "If I'm being honest, I'd say your brother is more of a businessman than you are when it comes down to both your personalities. You're too soft and easily driven by your emotions. They're not good traits for businessmen.

"But your brother is different. He knows how to lie and he's selfish. He also knows how to target others."

Jasper turned to look at Darrel who was gaping in shock and spoke, "The chances of people like you ending up as a large businessman is one out of 10,000. Either that, or you'll die trying. For people like your brother, it's a 5,000 out of 10,000 chance that he ends up as a small businessman, but there's also no chance that he'll ever make it big.

"It was quite a fierce fight you two had just now, so don't you find it weird that he was suddenly persuaded?" Jasper asked.

Darrel still wanted to argue, saying, "That's because he understands where I'm coming from."

"That's not it. People like him harbor a hatred for me that's so deep it might as well be engraved in his heart. How could he just suddenly understand where you're coming from?"

"No, he's already come up with a plan. He'd pretend to be against it first and then agree to it after some persuasion. That way, he'd get to be exempted from being charged with arson while at the same time, it would extinguish all the remaining suspicion we have for him.

"But he's also well aware that he's not strong enough to topple me himself. His only option is to get help from Zayden. Why else would he suddenly give in with just a few words from you?"

Darrel's lips quivered. He had to admit that the Terence Jasper described was precisely the brother he knew—ruthless and crafty.

Yet the most terrifying of all was not Terence but the man before his eyes who had managed to see through the two brothers so clearly. Jasper was petrifying.

“Then why did you let him leave anyway?” Darrel asked.

“Since we already know that Zayden is the one behind it all, then nothing else really matters anymore. Plus, don’t you think sending Terence back with a fake request will give us the perfect diversion?”

“Zayden and Terence used to deal in the dark while we were out in the open. But now, the tables have turned with them out in the open and us in the dark.

“Plus, they’d never expect me accounting for Terence telling Zayden everything, and that has just nailed our victory.”

...

After leaving the villa, Terence quickly took a taxi toward the provincial capital.

After a two-hour drive, Terence arrived at the house Zayden was currently residing in.

“Didn’t I tell you not to look for me unless something happened?”

Zayden was displeased at the fact that Terence came to his house without sending a single text first.

Terence smiled bitterly. “Something big has happened, Mr. Hanks, and I thought I should tell you in person.”

Zayden frowned. “What happened?”

Terence gulped and replied carefully, “Jasper... knows that I set the fire. He also told me to keep an eye on you to find out if you’re in contact with anyone else.”

Zayden stood up at his words. His eyes widened as he glared at Terence like he wanted to rip the man apart.

Life at the Top Chapter 585

“Mister... Mr. Hanks, why are you looking at me like that...”

Startled by Zayden’s gaze, Terence asked with a tremble.

Zayden clenched his jaw and glared at Terence. “Why am I looking at you like that? Let me ask you instead, how did Jasper know that you were the one who set the fire, huh? Also, he told you to find out who else I’m in contact with? Did you tell him I was here?”

Terence’s mind buzzed, and he was dazed.

Countless excuses had flashed through his mind on the way here before he decided that he would just be frank instead. After all, he would be screwed if Zayden found anything out.

However, it had not occurred to him that he had a fatal loophole in this script of his.

Jasper did not know that Zayden had returned at all, so the fact that Jasper would tell Terence to find out who else Zayden was in contact with meant that Terence had already confessed about Zayden being the person he was taking orders from.

“I didn’t have another choice, Mr. Hanks!”

Upset, Terence told Zayden about everything that had happened without hiding a thing.

“Jasper told me to help him, Mr. Hanks, but how would I dare?!”

“But I couldn’t just reject him either. I don’t mind going to prison, but I can’t end up delaying your plans just because of my own problems.

“That’s why I pretended to agree first and then came to report what happened. I’m on your side, really!”

Terence spoke with a wail, truly afraid that Zayden would suspect him.

Staring at Terence sinisterly, Zayden waited until the man was done speaking before he landed a harsh and sudden slap across Terence’s face.

“Motherf*cker! If I’d known that your brother was such a person, I’d have killed him long ago. What the f*ck is wrong with you anyway? Don’t you know better than to keep an eye on your brother? How’d you let him eavesdrop on such important information?!”

Terence cupped his cheek, and his gaze was filled with fear and resentment when he spoke, “I never expected that he would help an outsider. I can’t believe he ran to Jasper to tattle on me!”

“Forget it. He already knows and there’s nothing we can do about this anyway. I’m no longer the same person I used to be. So what if Jasper knows, hmm? What can he do about it?” Zayden scoffed.

“Thank goodness he still expects you to help him and find things out for him. We’ll just feed him a fake piece of information to confuse him later. I’d like to see what he looks like when he gets betrayed!”

Zayden could not help but chortle at the thought. Sinister schemes had already rushed into his mind and he could not wait to screw Jasper over with them.

“Exactly, Mr. Hanks. With your formidable status, who is Jasper anyway? Even your smallest move will have him immediately crawl over to kiss your feet!” Terence agreed.

“Has anyone told you that your ability to apple-polish is absolutely horrible?” Zayden spoke as he glanced at Terence coldly.

Terence had fawned over Zayden so much that he might as well write sonnets about the man’s greatness. He immediately blushed out of embarrassment and did not say another word.

“Don’t think that I don’t know what your plans are. You’re just on my side because you don’t have another option. You’re afraid that Jasper will still hold you accountable for the things you’ve done.

“Not that I care anyway. As long as you can prove to me that you’re useful, then I’ll still protect you. The rewards I promised will be given as well.”

Zayden smirked darkly before continuing, “But... should you dare lie to me and play me like a fool, then you’d better prepare yourself when I come to kill you. Understood?”

“Understood! Crystal clear!” Terence frantically nodded to show his loyalty.

“Here, take the money.” Zayden pulled out a wad of around 10,000 Somer Dollars from a drawer.

Life at the Top Chapter 586

“I’ll have someone prepare the things for you at the Orchid Bar downstairs. Go find a few women to fool around with tonight. Without my explicit orders, you’re not to return for the time being,” Zayden spoke calmly.

Terence’s eyes shone as he received the money. Holding it in his hands, he immediately beamed and left after saying words of gratitude.

Zayden scoffed as he watched Terence leave and chided, “Useless piece of trash. Go, spend that f*cking money. The more you spend, the faster you’ll die!”

As he thought about that, Zayden then dialed a number to Harbor City.

“It’s me, Mr. Langdon. Zayden Hanks.”

Zayden spoke on the phone courteously.

The person on the other end harrumphed after a long pause and replied calmly, “Didn’t I tell you not to contact me unless necessary?”

Zayden felt his heart lurch as he replied, “There’s been an accident and I think I might have been exposed.”

Zayden then proceeded to relay everything that had happened today.

As he spoke, it never crossed his mind that his careful and polite demeanor now was no different from how Terence was with him moments ago.

After Zayden was done, the man on the other end raged. “You useless piece of trash! Just how useless are you that you can’t even do something so simple? It’s only been a few days and you’re already exposed?”

Zayden replied frightfully, “It’s mainly because I’ve found myself a useless pawn.”

“And whose fault is that? Do you think you’d still find such useless pawns if you were any better yourself?”

“I just don’t get it. You’re both from the Mainland and even from the same province, yet Jasper can move so unrestrainedly and cause such a big ruckus. He started with nothing and he’s only getting stronger by the day. What about you? I gave you such a simple job and you still can’t do that properly? You might as well just f*cking kill yourself.”

Zayden did not dare to argue with the enraged words of the other. All he could do was wait carefully and quickly quell those angry flames.

“Fine, I got it. Get to it as fast as possible. I didn’t give you the money or support for no reason, understood?”

Zayden quickly replied, “I understand, Mr. Langdon.”

“Good.”

Only with the phone hung up did Zayden dare to curse, “F*cking hell! A bunch of Harbor City freaks, why are you acting so pretentious, huh?!”

Then, Zayden grabbed his jacket and left the house.

Half an hour later, Zayden was standing at the entrance of a hotel. Seeing a middle-aged man walk over from afar, Zayden approached with a smile and greeted, “Please come in, Uncle Sirius. I’ve been waiting for this dinner for a long time.”

Sirius clapped Zayden's shoulder with a wide smile and spoke, "I only knew you returned when your dad told me. Still, you're my nephew, aren't you? Why didn't you tell me you were coming back? I'd have someone fetch you if I knew."

Zayden ushered Sirius to the private room with a smile and said, "I experienced quite a few things when I was in Harbor City. It was only then that I found out how insignificant the fame I had before was. The more capable a person, the more they should keep a lower profile."

Sirius replied meaningfully, "I heard that you made great progress over in Harbor City and you've gotten acquainted with the wealthy families there. Looks like the rumors were right."

Zayden sat beside Sirius and smiled faintly. "A big shot did indeed take a liking to me. That's also why I'm back this time, because the big shot wants me to do something for them."

"Let's not talk about me anymore, Uncle Sirius. What do you think about what I had my dad discuss with you? There's been a change of plans now, so you might want to decide quickly if you want in on it before it's too late."

Life at the Top Chapter 587

Sirius glanced at Zayden and replied calmly, "Why are you two so rushed? This is something big, after all."

Zayden shrugged. "I'm not particularly impatient, but the people at Harbor City are tired of waiting. It's just Jasper Laine, so he's not worth so much of their time and thoughts."

“Getting rid of Jasper means the fall of Schuler Group as well, Uncle Sirius. By then, the entire Schuler Group will belong to the Hanks family. What else are you worried about? Just look at how great the rewards will be.”

Sirius lit a cigarette and took a few small drags before he replied, “I’m not worried, it’s just that Dawson’s power has really spread throughout the Southeast Province right now. It won’t do us any good to offend him.”

Zayden replied calmly, “I knew that you’d be worried about something like this, so I came up with a fool-proof plan.”

Sirius arched a brow at Zayden, waiting for him to continue.

While they sounded close and called each other ‘Uncle’ and ‘Nephew’, Sirius was well aware of how ingenuine his nephew was.

Not to mention that the power of the family only resided with him now because Zayden had lost to Jasper once. That was how Sirius managed to take the title of head of the family from Sylva.

While the two of them were family, neither minded backstabbing the other if need be.

“The Monty family has already wholeheartedly agreed to help when we decide to attack,” Zayden whispered.

The cigarette in Sirius’ hand shifted as he gasped. “The Monty family?! Really?!”

The Monty family was the lowest profile family in the Southeast Province despite having the deepest roots in the province.

If the Hanks family was undoubtedly considered a large family in the Southeast Province, then the Monty family would surely be the number one family in the province.

It was just that members of the Monty family were extremely low profile. It was rare for them to take any action, so other families in the Southeast Province tended to forget about them.

However, it was an unspoken fact known by all that the Monty family's benefits in the Southeast Province were not to be touched—or one would end up dead before they knew it.

Zayden chuckled, unsurprised by Sirius' reaction.

Zayden was more shocked than Sirius when he first found out about it.

“The support Harbor City is giving me is more than just money.”

Zayden decided to show his hand slightly and said, “I might as well go straight to the point. Before I got back from Harbor City, I met Conrad at the big shot's home.”

Sirius knitted his brows tightly and spoke solemnly, “Conrad Monty, the head of the Monty family. He's only 32 this year but I've seen him before on some special occasions. He's indeed an outstanding character. They say that the Southeast Province hasn't seen someone as outstanding as him in the past 50 years.”

Zayden smiled with squinted eyes and spoke, “You shouldn't have any more concerns, right, Uncle Sirius?”

Sirius' eyes flitted as he replied, “I need to see Conrad.”

Zayden frowned slightly in impatience. “You know what his personality is like. He doesn't just meet anyone.”

Sirius sighed. “The Hanks family can't suffer another loss again. I've got to be more careful.”

Zayden was just about to speak when the doors to the private room suddenly opened. Entering the room was an elegant man in a white tunic, looking exquisite with his gold-rimmed glasses.

“I’ll just come in directly since you want to meet me.”

The person who entered the room was Conrad Monty.

At the sight of Conrad, Sirius stood reflexively to greet him. Glancing at Zayden from the corners of his eyes, he was shocked to find Zayden more surprised than he was.

Life at the Top Chapter 588

“Mr. Monty, why are you...”

Zayden was cut off by Conrad’s dismissive wave. With a warm smile, Conrad spoke, “There’s not much that can go on without my knowledge in the Southeast Province.”

Zayden felt his body grow cold.

He knew that the Monty family had a strong influence in the Southeast Province, but he had not expected such unimaginable power.

‘Doesn’t that mean Conrad knows about everything that I’ve been doing since I got here?’

At that thought, Zayden’s expression turned sour.

It seemed like the people in Harbor City did not trust him, after all. Conrad must be the true person they were working with.

“Please sit, Mr. Monty.”

Sirius ushered Conrad to take a seat at the head of the table before he spoke cautiously, “Are you in agreement to get rid of Jasper, Mr. Monty?”

Conrad fiddled with the ring in his hands and replied calmly, “I have quite the understanding of Jasper, but I’m not interested in dealing with him at all. Do as you wish, I’m merely here to provide the support required.”

Smiling, Conrad continued, “But I do wish that you succeed on the first try and not create complications, or it would be difficult for me to explain it to the people in Harbor City.”

Sirius’ expression shifted. He was already 90% in agreement with the plan. He asked, “Excuse me for pressing unnecessarily, Mr. Monty, but does your family intend to further develop in Harbor City?”

Conrad looked up at Sirius and asked calmly, “Why ask if you already know that it’s unnecessary?”

“My apologies, Mr. Monty. I shouldn’t have asked.”

Sirius quickly apologized, goosebumps rising on his arms after being subjected to Conrad’s mere gaze.

Conrad stood up and looked at Zayden. “I’ve already done what was needed of me. Whatever is left is up to you. Like I said, speed things up on your end. There’s only so much patience I and the people in Harbor City have.”

Conrad then walked toward the door before suddenly turning to Zayden, praising, “Oh, your plan wasn’t bad at all. Jasper has taken up many real estate projects within the province. While confidence is commendable in youths, problems will surely arise if they have too much on their plates.

“There’s no way a real estate company can continue operating when accidents occur in all of its projects at the same time, right?”

Then, with a smile, Conrad opened the door and left.

Conrad had only been in the room for less than five minutes and only spoken a few words, yet he had completely controlled the situation.

Zayden pursed his lips and looked at Sirius. He spoke in a calm voice, “You heard him too, right, Uncle Sirius? What more are you hesitating for?”

Sirius laughed aloud. “My nephew’s enemy is of course my enemy as well. I had already decided to help you since the beginning. Having the Monty family’s support now is only a bonus.”

Scoffing internally, Zayden felt the urge to slap Sirius across the face. Still, he kept the thought inside him.

In comparison to how cowardly and selfish Sirius was, Zayden was more pissed at Conrad.

“We’re all Harbor City’s dogs, so who are you to pretend like you’re much better than I am? You make it sound like you’re the one in control here too. What a piece of trash, I’ll f*cking kill you one day!”

...

Nauritus City, Orchid Bar. Terence joyfully had his arms around a woman when he was suddenly pulled up to his feet by his collar.

He felt the world spin around him for a moment, and when he was about to roar, he saw Jasper smiling at him while sitting on the couch. Terence froze and spoke distressingly, "What more do you still want from me, Jasper? I'll tell you when I have news."

Life at the Top Chapter 589

Jasper waved his hand and Julian immediately turned off the deafening music in the private room. Then, he ushered the girls who were drinking with Terence out the room as well.

The rowdy private room instantly quietened.

"This is how Zayden makes you work for him?" Jasper asked with a wide smile.

Terence's expression darkened as he asked grimly, "What do you want from me?"

"Bring me to see Zayden," Jasper stated calmly.

Terence was stunned for a moment before he scoffed. "Are you crazy? You want me to bring you to see Zayden now?"

Jasper clasped his hands together and placed them under his chin, saying to Terence, "I'm informing you, not discussing this with you. Do you understand the situation you're in?"

Terence huffed. "Didn't you tell me to find out who else he's in contact with? I've only been back for a few hours and you want to see him already? How am I supposed to help you do anything then?"

All Terence wanted to do now was find an excuse to escape and then immediately tell Zayden the news.

“I’m pretty sure you’ve already said all you have to and Zayden has already done all he needs to in these past few hours. It’s the perfect time for me to meet the man himself.”

After he finished speaking, Jasper no longer had the patience to waste more of his time on Terence. He gave Julian a look.

Julian walked over to Terence expressionlessly and spoke, “Would you like me to move you, or are you going to move yourself?”

Terence was terrified by the mere sight of Julian. A painful lesson had taught him that this man could kill him as though he was an ant.

“I’ll bring you two there!” Terence clenched his jaw.

Jasper stood in satisfaction, speaking as he walked, “Don’t think about trying anything. There’s a limit to my patience.”

Terence sighed at the words. Despondent, he completely gave up on the idea of leading them the wrong way.

After exiting the bar, Terence complied obediently and brought Jasper upstairs to the door of the apartment on the highest floor where Zayden lived.

“He lives here,” Terence claimed as they arrived at the doorstep.

Julian walked toward the door and looked inside through the peephole for a while. Then, he turned to Jasper and shook his head. “There are no signs of people inside, Jasper.”

Terence's expression changed as he spoke, "I'm not lying to you at all. This is where I go whenever I'm looking for him."

Jasper then turned to Julian. "Is there any way to enter?"

Julian smiled and replied, "Easy."

He walked toward the window at the end of the corridor. Grabbing the upper edge of the window with one hand, he crawled in an agile manner and climbed along the pipelines.

"What the f*ck, this is the 16th floor!" Terence was startled.

Less than a minute later, Julian opened the apartment door from inside.

"I've checked the apartment, Jasper. It's empty," Julian replied.

Jasper entered the house with his hands behind his back and replied, "This old friend of ours must've gone to meet his friends. Let's wait for him inside."

Terence averted his gaze and turned to leave, only to have Julian stand right before his path, blocking him.

"Jasper did not say you could leave," Julian stated calmly.

Terence replied wretchedly, "I'm your master's cousin. You'd better treat me with respect, you're nothing more than Jasper's slav—"

"Slap him, Jul."

Jasper's voice sounded from the house.

Without hesitation, Julian raised his arm and sent a slap across Terence's face.

Despite already controlling his strength, the slap still had Terence feeling dizzy while blood seeped out from the corner of his lips.

Life at the Top Chapter 590

“Watch your mouth. As far as I’m concerned, Julian is close enough to be my brother while we are no closer than strangers.” Jasper turned to Terence who had a hand on his cheek and was currently being dragged into the room by Julian.

Terence clenched his jaw but did not speak anymore.

He knew that regardless of what happened today, he was screwed.

...

Ignoring their intentions and whether they were only doing this for their own benefits, Zayden and Sirius seemed to have come to an agreement.

That put Zayden in a great mood.

He had the Monty family’s support and the green light from his uncle.

The series of attacks he had diligently prepared for Jasper could begin tomorrow.

The uncle-nephew pair, who each had their own agendas, was in a great mood. They ended up drinking a substantial amount of alcohol.

Zayden was tipsy and intoxicated by the time they parted ways.

He was swaying as he opened the door to his apartment. Zayden kicked his shoes off and yawned as entered the house. Clouded by alcohol, he wondered if he should find a woman to spend the night with.

However, Zayden was stricken the moment he entered the house. He stared in disbelief at the sight of Jasper sitting lazily on the sofa.

Zayden felt his mind run haywire at the sight of Jasper.

He had never expected to see Jasper in his house!

He was stunned, surprised, and also a little terrified.

After combing through the complicated emotions in his mind, Zayden asked hoarsely, "What the f*ck?! Are you a human or a ghost?!"

After receiving such a shock, any sense of intoxication Zayden felt had now disappeared. However, his brain had yet to completely catch up to things.

Jasper smiled in satisfaction at Zayden's reaction like a child who had just played a prank. There was no hostility in his smile when he replied, "A human, of course. Are you surprised?"

"I suppose I understand why you're shocked, considering the person you can't wait to get rid of for good has appeared in your supposedly secluded and safe house. I guess it feels like seeing a snake in your bed right when you lift the covers, huh?"

After quickly regulating his emotions, Zayden then speedily swept his gaze over the house.

There was an expressionless man he did not recognize standing behind Jasper.

Terence was here too!

Terence was currently hiding in the corner of the room frightfully, not daring to look at Zayden.

Seeing Terence, Zayden understood what was going on and chuckled furiously. "You're the one who brought Jasper here, weren't you, you f*cking b*stard?"

Terence did not dare to look up, let alone meet Zayden's gaze. He did not dare to speak at all.

While arrogant and stupid, Terence still had the rationale of a normal human being. He was aware that he had no right to speak here.

He would be met with the same consequences regardless of whether he admitted it or not.

Taking a deep breath, Zayden did not wait for Terence's reply as Terence expected. Zayden turned to Jasper. Suddenly smiling, he replied, "It's New Year's, isn't it? I came back to spend Christmas and New Year's with my family. Is anything wrong with that?"

"Of course not." Jasper nodded.

"But if you came here to get help from some distant relative to get rid of me and persuade my own relatives to set my construction site aflame, then there's definitely something wrong with that."

Jasper spoke slowly as he turned to Zayden.

Zayden scoffed. "I don't even know what you're talking about. You're blaming me because your own construction site caught fire? Isn't that too arrogant of you, Jasper?"

"Say, if I turn Terence in to the police as an upstanding citizen, what do you think are the chances of him giving up your name?" Jasper suddenly asked.

Zayden's smile froze, and his eyes were filled with shame as well as anger.

Life at the Top Chapter 591

“Don’t act so proud, Jasper. Do you think you can step all over me?”

Enraged, Zayden gave up on maintaining pleasantries and sneered at Jasper.

“We’ve clashed many times already, so I think I know you well. You would’ve just dealt with me already if that’s what you had in mind, but instead, you secretly came to look for me in my house. Haha, cut the crap. You’re afraid, aren’t you? You’re afraid of the person supporting me!”

Zayden stared at Jasper and chortled.

“Hmm, not bad. Looks like you’ve learned something after being taught a few harsh lessons,” Jasper turned to Zayden and said.

“Indeed, obstacles are the best way to make a person mature. Look at you now, you’re way more mature than you used to be.”

Zayden’s expression turned more wretched by the minute, and he spoke to Jasper resentfully, “Stop mocking me, Jasper! Do you even know what kind of life I’ve been living in Harbor City for the past half a year? Even dogs have better lives than me!

“Those Harbor City freaks don’t respect me at all. They hit me whenever they’re in a bad mood. I’ve been living a life that’s more lowly than pests!

“But I took all of that in stride because I will never forget that you were the one who made me become like this. I’ve sworn to myself so many times that I’ll make you pay for all the suffering you made me go through. I’ll return it to you a hundredfold!

“And this is only the beginning of my revenge!”

“So that’s why you’re so willing to be Kennedy’s loyal dog? So that you can help him target me?”

Jasper questioned right after Zayden finished speaking.

Without further thought, Zayden replied easily, “Exactly. I’d rather do... Jasper, are you tricking me into talking?!”

Realizing that he had been played, Zayden was enraged and roared.

Instead of being overpowered, Zayden’s self-esteem and desire for revenge were even more easily provoked by Jasper outsmarting him.

Seeing Jasper’s elated expression on his face, Zayden had never once felt so much hatred for someone before.

He felt the urge to grab Jasper and skin him alive.

“I don’t actually need to trick you at all. Harbor City has been fed up with me for a long time and there’s only one Langdon who wants to see me dead. You merely confirmed my suspicions, that’s all.”

Jasper replied calmly.

Still panting in anger, Zayden mustered all his strength to control his rage as he glared at Jasper with a wretched smile. “So what if you know, huh? Like you can do anything anyway! The power that I have on my side is hardly anything you can defend against!

“I’d like to see how much longer you can keep this proud facade up.”

Jasper got up from the sofa and leaned against the window where the moon outside could be seen. Looking out at the bright lights in the night view outside, he spoke, "Nauritus City has been developing even faster this year. You can see how much busier it is now, right?"

Zayden did not know what tricks Jasper had up his sleeve, so he merely scoffed but did not reply.

Despite not willing to admit it, Zayden was subconsciously afraid. He was terrified that Jasper would somehow manage to trick him to talk again.

"You must've gone to meet up with your accomplices tonight to discuss how you plan to get rid of me, right? After all, Terence has already brought you information that I want you to know.

"Knowing that you've been exposed, you knew that I'd retaliate very soon. That's why you couldn't wait anymore, and you didn't want to leave it up to chance as there's the risk that I'd manage to attack you before you can attack me. So, you decided to prepare and lay out your traps as soon as possible."

Jasper turned to look at Zayden. "Could you tell me who your other helpers are, then?"

Zayden scoffed. "Are you crazy? You want me to tell you? How about you beg me, then? I might just tell you who I asked for help and what exactly my plans entail!"

Life at the Top Chapter 592

Jasper crossed his arms and chuckled. "See? So you did find help, after all. It seems like Kennedy doesn't really trust you, considering how openly he asks you to get rid of me while he secretly asks someone else for help.

“Call it help or whatever else, but none of them truly trust your ability, do they?”

“ ... ”

Zayden glared at Jasper. This time, he did not even dare to refute him.

Jasper was just too terrifying, much more terrifying than the people he had met in Harbor City too.

With just a few words here and there, Jasper had managed to guess most of the truth from the small details and loopholes in his words.

“I didn’t say anything at all. As to whether I have accomplices or not, well you can think whatever you want. Are you done? If you are, then get the f*ck out of my house. You’re not welcome here!”

Right after that, Zayden’s phone rang.

Zayden glanced at the number displayed and suddenly laughed. “You want to know who my accomplices are, right, Jasper? Then I’ll call him over right now.”

Zayden then accepted the call.

“I’ve already prepared everyone we need, Zayden. I’m just waiting for confirmation from your side now. We can make our move tomorrow.” Sirius’ voice sounded from the other end of the line.

Zayden smiled and replied, “I’ve changed my mind, Uncle Sirius. We’re still going to make a move, but don’t you think it’d feel much better to see our enemy stand there and unable to do anything as everything unfolds at the same time?”

Sirius frowned. “What do you mean?”

“You know where I’m staying right now, right? Come over as fast as you can. I’ll be waiting for you.”

Zayden then hung up the phone. Turning around, he stared at Jasper resentfully and wretchedly.

“Just wait, Jasper. You’re going to realize very soon that all your pride and arrogance are just a facade. You’ll lose everything you have.

“I’d really like to see what you look like when you’re hopeless and terrified.”

Zayden stared at Jasper and guffawed. “Now that I think about it, I’m so excited I can’t even wait anymore. Oh, I just hope that day will come soon.

“Remember everything I’m telling you now, Jasper. Everything you have, be it your money, your status, or your women, I will take everything from you and you won’t be able to do anything but watch! This is what you get for offending too many people you never should have!”

Jasper looked down from where he stood by the window. On the first floor of the building that was pitch-black hid a few cars with red and blue lights. There were also the shadows of a few people who were standing alert.

“Your Uncle Sirius? That’s your accomplice?” Jasper asked calmly.

Zayden smiled. “Exactly, but so what if you know now? It’s too late anyway! You only have your own arrogance to blame!”

At the same time, the atmosphere was heavy in a car downstairs.

Jasper’s Aunt Honey and her husband were both there. Wiping her tears with a tissue, Honey sobbed. “Oh Lord, how could Terence be so blind?!”

Darrel sighed. "It's just as Jasper said, there's no saving him anymore. Jasper told me before that Terence would sell him out but I didn't want to believe him. Now that I'm seeing it for myself, it looks like Jasper was right."

Jasper's uncle sighed deeply. "So you're telling me we have to send Terence to prison ourselves?"

"Dad!" Darrel shouted, pointing at the officers outside the car. "You see it too, don't you? It's already a fact that they're going to catch him. There's no way Terence can run anymore. But he's not the culprit, he's just the accomplice at most. We're saving him here. If we let him continue to act rashly, who knows what big trouble he's going to get himself into next time?!"

Life at the Top Chapter 593

"But Terence is your brother!"

Honey spoke as tears streamed down her face. "And... And Jasper too. Why does he have to send Terence to prison? Sure, Terence has made a mistake, but he's still his cousin. A little punishment would've been enough. You said he won't hold Terence accountable, so why is this happening now?"

Darrel sighed deeply and spoke, "I didn't want to believe Jasper when he told me that Terence would definitely betray him, so I made a promise to Jasper. If Terence betrayed him, it means that there's no saving him anymore and this is our only option left.

"If he didn't betray Jasper, then Jasper would let him go.

“Terence may only be an accomplice, but he could point Jasper to the culprit who’s behind everything. This means a lot to Jasper because those people plotting against him are actually plotting for his death!

“This is already the most benevolent option Jasper can make.”

With his eyebrows knitted tightly, Darrel’s father hit his thigh and clenched his jaw tight. “He’ll have to deal with the consequences of his own mistake. This is the most we can do for him. Enough already, we can only hope that Jasper will remember how we’re cooperating with him this time and help Darrel with his business.”

...

Under Jasper’s instructions, Sirius managed to drive his car into the underground car park of the apartment block without any difficulties.

Quickly after, Sirius hastily arrived at Zayden’s apartment with two bodyguards in tow.

“Zayden, what...”

Sirius’ eyes widened as his expression became filled with disbelief when he saw Jasper standing in front of Zayden.

Zayden was grinning. “Jasper had been waiting for me in my house long ago, Uncle Sirius.”

Sirius furrowed his brows, feeling slightly unsettled as he asked grimly, “What’s happening here?”

“Nothing much.”

Zayden scoffed and replied in a wretched tone, “Jasper just can’t wait to die!”

Sirius furrowed his brows slightly.

To be frank, Sirius would very much rather sit at home with victory in his grasp than to be exposed to his opponent before the plan even started.

Zayden's move caused a huge wave of unease to surge in his heart, and he had an ominous feeling.

"What do you want, Zayden?" Sirius asked.

Zayden guffawed. "What do I want? I want Jasper to watch as we destroy everything that belongs to him!

"Uncle Sirius, since we've already prepared everything and are going to make our move tomorrow, I don't see why we can't tell him about it tonight. But we won't tell him the specifics of what we're going to do and he'll just have to guess!

"You love playing guessing games, don't you, Jasper? Then take your time and guess. Guess how exactly we're going to screw you over!

"But all you have is one night. So what if you manage to guess it? You won't have time to prepare for a counterattack anyway. What a great feeling, wouldn't you say? Hahaha."

As he laughed, Zayden began to feel that something was wrong.

Jasper was now looking at him like he was stupid, and Julian's gaze on him was downright pitiful as well.

"Why are you looking at me like that?! Stop pretending that you're going to be fine. You're frantic, aren't you? Aren't you angry?" Zayden barked out resentfully.

Jasper sighed and spoke, "Looks like there's no more information we can squeeze out of him.

“Have them come up, Jul.”

Life at the Top Chapter 594

“Yes, Jasper!” Julian replied courteously and pulled out his phone to dial a number. “Captain Vaughn, you can bring your team up now.”

With that, Julian hung up the phone.

Faced with this scene, both of Zayden’s and Sirius’ expressions changed.

Especially Sirius, whose unease had reached new heights.

“What’s happening? What weird trick do you have up your sleeve this time?”

As franticness and unease overwhelmed him, Zayden glared at Jasper and growled.

“Standing at different angles gives you a different scenery. Would you be interested in coming over here to see what my view looks like?” Jasper asked.

Zayden clenched his jaw and scoffed. “I do indeed want to see just what kind of bullsh*t you’re spouting this time. Don’t try to play me, there’s no way I’d—”

Zayden then arrived beside Jasper mid-speech and looked down the building from the window.

At the same time, police sirens broke through the silence of the night and the hidden police cars all lit their flashing lights. They had all driven out of the area they had been hiding behind and arrived below the building.

Through the red and blue flashing lights, Zayden saw a large group of uniformed officers form an orderly line before entering the building.

Zayden swallowed the rest of his words at the sight in front of him.

“What’s the meaning of this, Jasper?!” Zayden looked at Jasper in terror and roared.

“The fire at the Southface River construction site is a case of great importance to both the city and provincial government right now. The officials are doing everything they can to solve the crime, and it’s only right for a victim like me to inform them when I’ve found the arsonist. After all, I have no right to punish them myself.”

Jasper’s calm words pierced into Zayden’s heart.

“Bullsh*t!” Zayden suddenly chortled. “I don’t know anything about a fire. Stop trying to blame me, he’s the one who set the fire!”

Zayden pointed at Terence whose face was drained of all colors. He scoffed, saying, “This is all his fault. What does it have to do with me?”

Terence was utterly lost. Staring at Jasper with scorn, he yelled, “You promised that you wouldn’t hold me accountable, Jasper! How could you lie to me?!”

“Tell them the truth, Terence, and you’ll just be an accomplice. You’ll receive a light sentence and be released in just a few years. Then you’ll get to start all over again.

“But if you decide to take the blame for Zayden, then you’ll be charged as the culprit of the entire incident. That’ll give you 15 years at least, or even an indefinite sentence.”

Jasper looked at Terence who had gone pale and spoke, “Whether you want a heavy or a light sentence is up to you now.”

At that moment, Zayden had gone truly frantic. He knew that his future was in Terence's hands.

He had never expected that Terence, the man he ordered around like a dog, would one day be in control of his future at such an important time.

At this moment, Zayden was ready to give it his all.

"You'd better think hard on this, Terence. What has Jasper ever given you this entire time? All he has been doing is using you and lying to you. Even as an accomplice, you'll still be facing at least ten years in prison. I have people backing me up and these people will do whatever it takes to clear my name!

"By then, you'll still be the one screwed over!

"As long as you say what you're supposed to, then I promise you I'll give you one million Somer Dollars for every year in prison they charge you with!

"I mean what I say! You have to know that Jasper is the reason why this is happening to you! You wouldn't have to suffer such a terrible fate if not for Jasper! You're afraid now, aren't you? That means you've already fallen into his trap!"

Life at the Top Chapter 595

Jasper remained silent as he watched Zayden furiously persuade Terence.

Jasper's relationship with Terence was horrible and there was no point in trying to persuade him.

Not when Jasper had already found the person who would do it for him.

The moment Zayden finished speaking, the door was slammed open and a large group of uniformed officers entered the house.

Leading them was a middle-aged man with an angular jaw and stern features.

“Control the scene!”

Under Captain Vaughn’s orders, Zayden, Terence, and Sirius were each surrounded by four to five officers.

Zayden immediately started to struggle vigorously. “What are you doing?! I’m an upstanding citizen, what right do you have to arrest me?”

Captain Vaughn frowned and replied, “We’ll be the ones to decide whether you’re an upstanding citizen or not. All you need to do now is cooperate with us.”

Zayden scoffed. “You need to bring evidence out and tell me your reasoning first if you want me to cooperate. Where’s your evidence, huh? What are your reasons, hmm?”

Captain Vaughn looked at Jasper.

Jasper furrowed his brows lightly and spoke, “Please bring Terence Laine’s parents in, Captain Vaughn.”

Captain Vaughn nodded and turned to give an order. Then, Darrel and his parents entered the apartment.

Honey began to cry the moment her gaze fell on Terence. Collapsing over her son, she hit and scolded him, “How could you disappoint me like this? Is it because I spoiled you too much? How could you get yourself into so much trouble? What am I supposed to do now?”

Terence had lived the past few hours with heightened anxiety. While the sight of his parents had shocked him, his eyes were now reddened in shame and fear.

Darrel walked over to Jasper and whispered, "Mom and Dad have already agreed to persuade Terence."

Nodding, Jasper clapped Darrel's shoulder but did not say any more.

"Captain Vaughn, could you give Terence and his parents some privacy to talk?" Jasper asked.

Captain Vaughn thought about it and replied, "No problem, but my men must stand at the door following protocol."

Jasper smiled. "Of course."

Watching Terence and his parents enter his room, Zayden felt his fear skyrocket to the extreme.

"What are you trying to do this time, Jasper?!" Zayden glared daggers at Jasper, overwhelmed by the utter fear and unease that threatened to drown him.

"Captain Vaughn."

Ignoring Zayden who was currently agitated, Jasper turned to tell Captain Vaughn, "This here is the true mastermind behind the fire. Please do be careful."

Captain Vaughn smiled and waved his hand, silently ordering the officers surrounding Zayden to grab both his hands and cuff them.

Zayden barked, "What are you doing? Do you even know who I am?! How dare you handcuff me?"

Realizing that the current situation was already beyond his control, Sirius mustered the courage to step up and speak, "You're going against the rules now, Jasper."

"The rules?" Jasper turned to Sirius with an intrigued gaze. "You're the head of the Hanks family, right? I'm curious as to what Zayden promised you. How'd you involve yourself in this as well?"

Life at the Top Chapter 596

“But none of that is important now. As for these rules you speak of, I’d like to know whose rules you’re following here? Are they yours? Or are they his?”

Jasper pointed at Sirius and then at Zayden as he spoke.

He then redirected his finger to point at his own nose. “I only follow my own rules. Meaning whoever dares to try and screw me over will have to be prepared to be screwed over by me.”

Sirius’ expression was dark when he spoke, “Stop it, Jasper. Don’t you think you’re going too far? You wouldn’t dare throw Zayden in prison.”

“Bullsh*t. Why wouldn’t I dare?” Jasper asked.

“Since he dared to get someone to light my construction site on fire, making me lose 100 million and severely injuring my workers, what’s stopping me from sending him to where he belongs?”

The space between Sirius’ eyebrows began to twitch as he scoffed. “Business conflicts should be dealt with through business means. Aren’t you afraid that doing so will prompt the people supporting Zayden to attack you?”

Jasper asked with a bright smile, “Is it possible that you, the head of the Hanks family, think that I’m on good terms with the person supporting Zayden? Or perhaps you think we’re on terms well enough to meet each other for a polite meal?”

Sirius was stunned, and his expression darkened. Staring at Jasper, he warned, “You’re too arrogant, Jasper. It isn’t your place to make the Southeast Province your territory yet.”

“I don’t care nor am I interested in making the Southeast Province my territory. But I’ll make myself clear, no one will be able to stop me from putting Zayden behind bars,” Jasper stated firmly.

Sirius was furious and roared, “What an insolent child! You’ve got no respect for anyone at all! The Southeast Province is huge, do you really think you can stand atop us all?”

At that, the room door opened to reveal Terence. The man walked out with a despondent look on his face.

His appearance had attracted the attention of Zayden, Sirius, and everyone else.

Captain Vaughn walked over and spoke solemnly, “Terence Laine, you’re suspected to have played a major role in the serious incident of the fire that spread in the construction site at Southface River a few days ago. Please come to the station with us and cooperate with our investigation. Is there anything you would like to add?”

Terence turned to look at his parents and Jasper before his gaze finally fell on Zayden.

“Don’t you dare say what you’re not supposed to, Terence,” Zayden warned with his jaw clenched tight.

Terence’s lips quivered before he turned to Captain Vaughn. “I admit to setting the site on fire.”

Zayden looked elated upon hearing that and was about to guffaw.

However, he heard Terence continue speaking before he could laugh out loud. “But Zayden Hanks was the one who forced me to do everything. If you must arrest me, I only ask that you arrest him as well.”

Zayden's smile froze on his face before it could fully grace his features. He was stricken by what he just heard.

"What are you talking about, Terence?!"

Zayden completely exploded. Amidst the anger and fear was a dense layer of indignance, and it caused Zayden to rage like he had gone mad. Zayden roared, "Don't f*cking drag me into this just because you want to f*cking die! I'll f*cking kill you, I swear to God!"

Then, as if hit with an epiphany, Zayden immediately turned his head to Jasper and glared daggers at the man. He growled, yelling, "It's you, isn't it? You did all this, Jasper! Are you happy now, huh?! I'm going to kill you!"

With that, Zayden pounced on Jasper.

However, his movements only garnered angry shouts from the few officers who were holding him down, and they pressed Zayden against the floor.

Lying face-down, Zayden looked up and glared at Jasper enviously. He struggled maddeningly and spat out the words, "I'm going to f*cking kill you, Jasper!"

"Why? It's not fair! I put in so much effort, and I think about getting rid of you so much that I start dreaming about it! So why do you get to win every single time?!"

Life at the Top Chapter 597

"Because your methods are wrong."

Jasper looked at Zayden calmly, and his tone was indifferent.

“Our resentment is an issue between you and me only. Come at me if you want to make a fuss, but the people heavily injured in the hospital are innocent.

“The fact that you dragged innocent people into this because of your hatred for me is the reason why you’re going to lose everything.”

Zayden glared at Jasper and seethed, yelling, “Bullsh*t! Those people are nothing but trash! I don’t even give a f*ck about them at all, they’re nothing to me!”

Jasper replied calmly, “I know that you won’t understand. But that’s alright, you’ll have ten or maybe even 20 years in prison to slowly think about it.”

He smiled as he continued, “I don’t mind giving you time, but what about the people in Harbor City? I wonder if they’d be able to forgive you for causing them such a huge loss? Who knows if they have the patience to wait for your release? Maybe they’ll teach you a lesson while you’re still in there.”

Zayden’s complexion immediately paled.

He knew that those Harbor City freaks were hardly negotiable people.

He had come back to the Southeast Province with a huge amount of financial support and all sorts of help from Harbor City.

However, instead of getting rid of Jasper, Zayden was landing himself in jail instead.

There was no way the people in Harbor City would forgive him.

Kennedy had warned him before he came to the province that his head would be on the chopping block if he were to fail.

Zayden knew that in Kennedy's eyes, he was no more valuable than a pest and it would be too easy for Kennedy to get rid of him.

Terrified, Zayden turned to Jasper and suddenly spoke, "Forgive me, Jasper. How about this, like Terence, I'll join you and help you deal with Kennedy? Just save me."

Jasper smiled brightly. "That sounds like a great deal.

"It's a shame that I'm not interested. You and Terence are too fundamentally different. Terence is just blinded by benefits, while you want nothing more than to get rid of me. It'd be unwise for me to have someone like you by my side. What if you backstab me one day?"

Zayden shook his head frantically and replied in fear, "I won't. You're too capable, and I lose every time I try to fight you. I don't have a death wish, so why would I continue to attack you when I know I'll lose? I'll be your most loyal subordinate!"

"Enough."

Sirius interrupted Zayden and approached Jasper. "I'll give you one last chance, Jasper. Stop this and have them take Terence only. Then we can end all of this here. I'm sure Zayden will compensate for every Somer Dollar you've lost."

Zayden frantically agreed. "That's right! 100 million, right? I'll pay you 200 million for compensation!"

"Looks like Kennedy gave you quite the sum." A broad smile graced Jasper's features as he turned to Captain Vaughn. "I've said what I wanted, Captain Vaughn. There's nothing more I can say to people who ignore the law. My apologies for holding you back from performing your legal duties."

Captain Vaughn nodded and scoffed at Zayden and Sirius. "Negotiating in front of me, really? Do I look like a joke to you?"

With that, Captain Vaughn waved his hand and spoke, "Take Zayden Hanks away!"

Two officers pulled Zayden off the ground and dragged him away.

All while Zayden continued to struggle and shout, "No, Jasper, please! Please forgive me, just this once! Help me, Uncle Sirius!"

Sirius took a deep breath and stared at Jasper coldly. "You will regret this, Jasper."

Life at the Top Chapter 598

"I heard the Hanks family has been doing business in the electronics industry. It seems that business is great and you're earning quite a lot?" Jasper asked calmly.

Sirius' expression darkened. "What are you implying here?"

"Nothing much. It's just that the biggest electronics trade in the south is mostly in the hands of the Haddock Chamber of Commerce Waterhoof City branch, no? I'm sure that you're working with someone from there, aren't you, Mr. Hanks?" Jasper asked with a wide grin.

Sirius scoffed and spoke, "Are you telling me you're going to steal my business now? I'm not looking down on you, Jasper, but aren't you overestimating yourself here? This is a business cooperation that makes a couple of billions every year. Who are you to steal it from me?"

“I can generously tell you that yes, my boss is the largest electronics company in Waterhoof City and they’re indeed from the Haddock Chamber of Commerce. But so what? Do you think they’ll agree to work with you instead?”

Jasper smiled. “My apologies, I must’ve forgotten to tell you. I’ll be going to Waterhoof City in a few days when the New Year’s holiday is officially over. I have a new identity now, the vice president of Haddock Chamber of Commerce’s Waterhoof City branch. I’m sure you’re well aware of what this position entails, right, Mr. Hanks?”

Sirius’ expression changed drastically. He looked very uncomfortable as he stared at Jasper. “Bullsh*t. You’ve never been a member of the Haddock Chamber of Commerce, so what makes you think you could be the vice president of its Waterhoof City branch, huh?”

“I’d say the fact that Gale himself asked me to take on the role is reason enough.” Jasper shrugged as if he was dissatisfied by the fact.

“I didn’t really want to take the role considering how I already had a lot on my plate, but it’s hard to refuse someone when they’re so sincere about it. He’s an old man, and it wouldn’t be right of me to continuously disrespect him by rejecting his proposal, would it?”

Sirius’ eyes shone with disbelief as he gasped. “You were the one who overthrew Ian?”

“Oh! I’m surprised to see that you’re so knowledgeable, Mr. Hanks,” Jasper commented.

“Don’t act so proud!”

Sirius now regretted ever being blinded by the prospect of gaining benefits and agreeing to join Zayden in this scheme. At this moment, he had no other choice but to bow down to Jasper.

“The chamber is no more than a loose business organization. What makes you think a vice president like you will be able to convince someone to drop a partnership that makes them a couple of billion Somer Dollars each year? You’re too naive!”

Jasper looked at Sirius intently and spoke, “What if it was for a trade that guaranteed ten billion Somer Dollars per year?”

Then, without looking at Sirius’ aghast expression, Jasper and Julian walked toward the door.

“Jasper!” Sirius called out.

Jasper’s figure halted just by the door but he did not turn around.

“Are you really going to go so far? How about we talk about this?” Sirius sounded aggrieved.

“Even if you agree, will Sylva?” Jasper asked.

“I’m the head of the family here,” Sirius frowned and uttered distastefully.

“But from what I’ve seen, Sylva was much smarter than you and Zayden put together. After everything that’s happened, have you ever seen him put himself in the spotlight?” Jasper asked calmly.

Sirius seemed to have been enlightened and was stunned by the revelation.

“As long as Sylva is still here, I have no other choice but to completely crush the Hanks family.”

By the time Jasper’s words reached Sirius, the man himself had already left.

“You leave me no choice, Jasper!”

Sirius roared embarrassingly in the empty house.

Life at the Top Chapter 599

By the time he arrived downstairs, Captain Vaughn's team had already left with Terence and Zayden with them.

Darrel and his parents were still waiting grimly for Jasper.

Jasper walked over and turned to Honey and her husband. "Uncle, Aunty, would you prefer we go back to my place and talk there?"

Jasper's uncle waved him off despondently. "It's alright. We just have a few things to say and then we'll go home."

Jasper replied seriously, "Please do, then. I'm listening."

Jasper's uncle looked at him and said, "In all honesty, we can't nor do we intend to blame you for what happened today.

"However, it wasn't a nice feeling to send our own son off to prison either.

"Darrel is all we have left now."

At that, Jasper's uncle looked sorrowful as he continued, "No matter what, Darrel is still your cousin. He and Terence are different. Darrel's an honest boy and he's not the kind who would hurt you.

"All this child wants is to do business, but it's not something us parents can help him with. As his cousin and the most outstanding child in the Laine family, I ask that you help him wherever you can."

Jasper quickly replied, "I'll do that even if you hadn't asked me, Uncle. The business plan he's come up with will begin very soon, and your family will get to relax and enjoy life by then."

Jasper's uncle smiled warmly and nodded. "That's nice, then. Very nice. We'll get going now, don't let us delay you from your work."

"Don't worry, Uncle. About Terence, I've already decided that I'll find the best lawyer I can for him. I'll do everything I can to reduce his jail time. It'll also be good if you urge him to cooperate when you visit him later on."

"Mainly so that he would be frank, considering how it's best if he doesn't hold any information he knows back from the authorities to help with the investigation. Another reason being that good behavior tends to decrease jail time."

"That way, he'll most likely be able to get out in three to five years and it still won't be too late for him."

A genuine smile finally graced his uncle's features and he spoke, "That's for the best. You're a capable boy, Jasper, and you know a lot of people. Farmers like us don't even know where to look for a lawyer. I'll have to trouble you with this, then."

Jasper looked up at Darrel. "Send your parents back first. Contact me if you need anything afterward."

Darrel nodded and helped his parents back. The two looked like they had suddenly aged a few years.

"Darrel wouldn't have a problem with you because of this, right, Jasper?" Julian approached Jasper and asked.

"He won't." Jasper smiled. "He knows better than anyone that I'm the last person he should have a problem with."

“Alright, enough about this. Let’s go back first. We’ve spent the whole day out, I’m exhausted.”

Jasper massaged his tense shoulders and got into the car lazily.

Julian rushed to the driver’s seat. He spoke as he started the car and drove off, “I have updates about the matter you asked me last time, Jasper. So that martial artist friend of mine, I told her the situation and she’s interested. She says she wants to meet you to talk about this.”

Jasper was immediately awake at the sound of it. “Great. You decide on the meeting date, then. But do have it as soon as possible since I’m going to be very busy for the next few days. The sooner we settle this, the more I can rest assured to leave Wendy at home.”

“Nice. I’ll have her come over tomorrow, then,” Julian spoke.

Just then, Jasper’s phone rang. It was a call from Wendy.

“Jul and I were just talking about getting you a bodyguard when you called,” Jasper stated joyfully.

However, Wendy did not talk to Jasper as she normally would. Instead, she asked, “When are you coming back, Jasp?”

Realizing that there was something off about Wendy’s tone, the smile hanging off the corner of Jasper’s lips vanished. “I’m on the way back, around 20 minutes before I arrive. What’s wrong?”

Life at the Top Chapter 600

“A guest just arrived and he’s talking to my dad in the study. I brought coffee in just now and Dad hinted at me to ask you to come back soon,” Wendy explained.

“Alright. I’ll be back as soon as I can. Do you know who it is?” Jasper asked.

Wendy replied, “I don’t. He looks pretty young, I’d say he’s in his 30s? He’s wearing a tunic and seems a little weird, but Dad is being really polite to him.”

Jasper gave it some thought and realized that he did not know such a person either. All he could do was promise to be back soon.

Hanging up the phone, Jasper turned to Julian. “Step on it, Jul.”

“Got it, Jasper.”

15 minutes later, the car came to a stop before Dawson’s villa. Jasper alighted the car and saw Wendy waiting for him at the door.

Jasper glanced at the unfamiliar car parked in the spot next to his.

A Maybach 57.

‘This was a luxury car with a value of ten million!’

Not many people might know about it, but an improved 62S would be released in a year. It was a car that would cost ten million as well. The 62S would continue to be an unmatched legendary car even in the year 2020 before Jasper reincarnated.

The 62S could be described as the most favored car by extremely wealthy people in the country.

Yet these wealthy people were most likely still suffering through hardships now. For this was the year 2001, long before the time Jasper reincarnated.

The Mayback 57 was not as eye-catching as the 62S when the latter would be released next year.

Still, countrymen who could afford the 57 now were surely the elders of the wealthy generation of entrepreneurs who drove the 62S in the future.

This was not Dawson's car, so it had to be that mysterious guest's.

"They're still in the study. It's almost been an hour," Wendy whispered as she walked to the study with Jasper.

Jasper nodded. Standing outside the study, he knocked on the door.

Soon later, Dawson's voice was heard from inside the room. "It must be Jasper, come in."

Jasper pushed open the door to see Dawson sitting on a side chair. A man in his early 30s and wearing a tunic sat on the main seat. The unfamiliar man looked young, yet he was filled with the calm aura of an experienced man.

Generally speaking, seating arrangements were an important aspect of etiquette in formidable families—especially when it came to sitting in the study.

Jasper did not count since he and Dawson were considered family. Not to mention how Jasper had fallen asleep on Dawson's imported, 100,000 Somer Dollars chair countless times before.

However, they had a guest today and Dawson had chosen to sit on a side chair. This was not just any man.

“Let me introduce you, Jasper. This is Conrad Monty, the head of the Monty family. They’re the strongest family in the Southeast Province with the deepest roots. They’re very low profile despite the amount of money they earn. The only aluminum mine in the Southeast Province is the Monty family’s business.”

Dawson used this chance to introduce him to give Jasper a wide overview of Conrad’s identity and capabilities.

Jasper arched a brow at the introduction.

Excluding coal, the country also had other unique minerals to mine. However, those were not to be touched by just anyone.

The aluminum mine in the Southeast Province was the first in the province and the sixth in the entire country. ‘To think that it belongs to the Monty family... That means there’s more than meets the eye to this Monty family that I’ve never heard of.’

Life at the Top Chapter 601

Reading Jasper's reaction, Dawson knew that the former had understood his message.

Turning around, Dawson was about to introduce him to Conrad when he saw the man smile and wave his hand dismissively. "There's no need to introduce us, Mr. Schuler. I've heard of Mr. Laine before."

Jasper turned to Conrad and asked, "I'm honored to know that you've heard of me, Mr. Monty."

Conrad replied calmly, "The host of Harbor City's billion-dollar stocks rescue plan and the celebration banquet for the approval to host the Olympics in Swallow Capital. Just because ordinary people do not know of it does not mean I do not as well."

"There's not much I can't find out should I want to. And I just so happen to be intrigued by you as well."

Jasper asked Conrad, "Could I ask what about me that has intrigued you, then, Mr. Monty?"

Conrad laughed aloud. "I heard that you sent Zayden to jail?"

Jasper's expression was calm, but he did find himself shocked.

It had been no more than two hours since he showed his hand to Zayden and returned, yet Conrad seemed to already know what had happened.

"There's no need to be shocked. I have my ways to know what I want to know," Conrad explained calmly as if seeing through Jasper's thoughts.

“Mr. Monty, you sure are knowledgeable,” Jasper stated calmly.

Conrad smiled. “I’ve wasted quite some time here already, and since you’re here now, let’s not beat around the bush anymore.

“It’s completely over for Zayden now, Jasper. But many wish to keep the incident silent, so I’ve come to bargain.

“Let’s minimize the damage here. Pull Zayden out of this incident and I can promise you he’ll never bother you again. As for your loss, I’ll compensate five times the amount.”

Conrad then looked at Jasper confidently.

It was a great deal, and he believed that Jasper had no reason to decline him.

“Five times my loss, what a large amount,” Jasper said.

“Now I’m even more curious. Does Zayden have something on you people? Why are all of you so desperate to pull him out of jail?”

At that point, Jasper could confirm that Sirius was not the accomplice Harbor City had found for Zayden.

The true accomplice was Conrad.

It made sense, considering how Sirius did not have the status nor the intellect to directly contact the people in Harbor City.

Conrad, however, matched the characteristics Jasper thought the accomplice should have.

The actual person Kennedy wanted to support might just be Conrad instead of Zayden.

The fact that Conrad had shown up tonight answered the last question in Jasper's mind.

Hearing Jasper, Conrad smiled. "Something on us? As if that's possible. Zayden has never been anything more than the most useless pawn on the board. What could he possibly have on us?"

"Let's be frank, Jasper. Your true opponent is me."

At that, Conrad stared at Jasper deeply and chuckled. "You're the pawn the Law family has been nurturing in the Mainland, while I'm that of the Langdon family. Zayden is nothing more than a piece of trash. That's what he was in the beginning, and that's what he will always be."

"This is the first time I've seen someone so proud of the fact that they're someone else's pawn," Jasper commented with a shrug.

"Haha, and yet that is the truth, is it not?"

Conrad pointed at Jasper and then at himself.

"We're all climbing upwards, all of us. But the only difference between us and everyone else is that while they're still climbing at the starting point, we've already reached a specific height."

Life at the Top Chapter 602

"Ordinary people like Zayden are nothing more than pawns to us.

"While we are pawns to people who've climbed higher than us."

Conrad's smile was light, but his words ran shivers down people's spines.

"As long as you're useful, it proves that there's meaning to living in this world. If you can't even be a pawn, then how will you ever be the player?"

"Jasper, oh, Jasper. It looks like you have not understood this situation as clearly as I thought. But that's alright, you're still young. The Law family will teach you in due time what you must understand as a pawn."

Jasper raised his hand to cut Conrad off and spoke exasperatedly, "Hold on, Mr. Monty. I think you've misunderstood."

"I'm not a pawn. Although, I am not against mutualistic partnerships with someone else to reap benefits."

"Secondly, the Law family and I are partners. We're an alliance."

"I do not know nor do I care about what your relationship with the Langdon family is, but who am I to judge if you like being someone's pawn? I'll have to decline the offer though because I'm not interested."

"And as for your claim that you're my opponent? Pardon my bluntness, but you're thinking too deep into this. I've never had the intention to fight you at all."

Jasper's words had Conrad's smile slowly vanishing off his face.

Now that Jasper had finished speaking, Conrad finally concluded calmly. "So it seems that you're unwilling to bargain, then, Jasper?"

"About what?"

Jasper asked in confusion. "Oh, I get it... You mean about Zayden?"

"Simple."

“In your dreams!”

Conrad’s indifferent gaze fell on Dawson as he spoke calmly, “Look at your future son-in-law, Mr. Schuler. He seems to lack a bit of respect. Perhaps he does not know what the Monty family is capable of in the Southeast Province. I believe you have the responsibility to teach him well.”

Dawson coughed drily and replied, “The youth these days seem to have a lot of ideas, Mr. Monty. I’m an old man who’s close to retiring. I don’t have the energy to do that anymore, so I might as well let them fight for themselves.”

Then, Dawson grinned and spoke straightforwardly, “Plus, this child didn’t get this far because he had someone’s support. Jasper has fought hard and fiercely to get to where he is today. I’d go so far as to say that he has no less experience than I do when it comes to business wars.”

While Dawson’s words sounded soft, they came with a sharp impact.

They pierced through Conrad and infuriated the man.

“Very well, then.”

Conrad got up and stared coldly at Jasper and Dawson. Then, he scoffed. “I suppose negotiation is out of the question now. It’s war, then.

“Very well. This will be the end of our conversation today.

“Do not forget that the Monty family has stood strong in the Southeast Province for decades. Our roots run much deeper than yours could ever. I am Conrad Monty, and there has yet to be anything I cannot do in Southeast Province!”

With that, Conrad scoffed and walked toward the doors of the study.

“Please hold on, Mr. Monty,” Jasper suddenly spoke.

Conrad turned and spoke to Jasper calmly, “Now you wish to bargain?”

Jasper brought the coffee cup to his lips and took a sip before replying to Conrad with a mirthful smile, “I’m happy that both you and the Langdon family are satisfied and happy with your loyalty to them, but please refrain from showing off how proud you are to be someone’s dog in front of me.

“Because the last person who did that? He met his end a long time ago.”

Life at the Top Chapter 603

Jasper’s last sentence was a very widely used threat before he reincarnated.

That was because of how classic the threat was.

However, in the year 2001, no one said such a thing.

It explained why Dawson almost laughed aloud when he heard Jasper say it.

Even Conrad’s gaze darkened instantly although he had always prided himself for his composure and ability to stay unfazed regardless of the situation.

Despite being enraged, Conrad did not act on the ire he felt and smiled instead.

“Are you trying to provoke me on purpose?”

Conrad stared at Jasper and spoke calmly.

Jasper shook his head and replied sincerely, “You’ve misunderstood. I am merely stating the truth.

“I’m not like other people. Anger will not cause me to lose my rationality. If anything, anger only clears my mind.”

Conrad narrowed his eyes at Jasper coldly and fiercely, but the corner of his lips quirked.

“Because I’m well aware that useless nobodies are unworthy of my anger. Only the truly capable and skilled have the ability to irk me, so whatever you’re playing at? I’m sorry but it’s not going to work.”

With that, Conrad faced Jasper and tapped on his temple before turning to leave.

“Show yourself out, please.”

Jasper had just finished speaking when Conrad closed the door behind him with a bang.

The relaxed and casual expression Jasper wore fell away, leaving his heavily furrowed brows to be seen.

“Jasper, this person has already made a name for himself ten years ago. There are countless families of different sizes here in the Southeast Province, but he’s the only one who managed to supersede the head of the family at the age of 25.

“Sure, there’s not much competition within the Monty family for the right to inherit since his grandfather, his dad, and he are the only sons. But the fact that Conrad had his father Steven’s approval is enough testament to his capabilities. Plus, all of the Monty family’s property and businesses are very well organized. There’s nothing to pick on at all.”

Dawson walked over and clapped Jasper’s shoulder. “There have been rumors before about how Conrad’s genius existence is good karma that has been accumulated over the past 50 years. There’s hope for Conrad to lead the Monty family into being the Southeast Province’s first inter-province family.

“There’s nothing wrong with feeling stressed when you’re facing such a person.”

However, Jasper shook his head and looked up to ask Dawson, “Uncle Schuler, there’s something I’ve been thinking about this entire time. What did Conrad want from coming over tonight?”

Dawson was stunned and replied reflexively, “Didn’t he come for Zayden’s release?”

Jasper smiled and replied, “That’s what he said, but didn’t you realize? There was no sigh of disappointment at all when I declined.

“Or perhaps he’s just really good at hiding what he thinks. But still, despite Zayden being an evidently lost cause, Conrad was still willing to expose himself for him. And to request something we could not possibly agree to.

“I had no idea that Kennedy and the others were using Conrad to deal with me before this.”

Dawson fell into thought at Jasper’s words, and his expression turned into an interesting one.

“Unless, this was a diversion?”

Jasper let out a small huff and spoke, “We don’t have enough leads right now, so I can’t predict what his true motive is here.”

“Uncle Schuler, how much do you know about this Conrad or this Monty family? Tell me a little bit more about them. I have no idea who they are at all.”

Hearing Jasper’s words, Dawson smiled. “It makes sense that you wouldn’t know considering how low profile the Monty family is. Not even ordinary people who’ve lived their entire lives in the Southeast Province may know of them either, let alone come in contact with them.

“The founder of the family is Conrad’s grandfather, Austin Monty, but he lived a short life. The current head of the family is Conrad. His father Steven is still alive, he’s just retired. Back then...”

Life at the Top Chapter 604

More than an hour later, Jasper exited Dawson’s study with a solemn look on his face.

“How’d it go?” Wendy approached and asked attentively.

She did not have a clue what had happened just now since she was not in the study.

The storm above Jasper’s head vanished as he smiled at Wendy. “Nothing much, it was just some pretentious b*stard who decided to come to our door and show off.”

“What are you talking about, stop being so crude. Come on, this is serious,” Wendy spoke, displeased.

Jasper wrapped an arm around Wendy and walked toward the kitchen. “Is there anything left to eat? I’m famished. I didn’t get to eat a proper meal today.”

Seeing that Jasper did not want to speak much about this, Wendy scrunched up her nose unhappily but did not press him for details. When it came to such things, she knew her limits.

“I could feed you?”

Jasper's eyes shone and he stared at Wendy's alluring figure before gulping. "So direct? Well, aren't you forward today?"

Wendy blinked, having yet to catch up with a joke that would only begin to trend more than a decade later.

Still, Wendy was a smart lady and she realized where Jasper was looking. With a little more thought, it dawned on her what the man meant.

Embarrassed and furious, Wendy grabbed the pan and began to run after Jasper to hit him with it. "Do you want to die? Would it kill you to stop joking around all the time?!"

...

The following day, Jasper was informed of a horrible piece of news right after he woke up.

Zayden Hanks was dead.

In the heavily guarded detention center, he had knocked his head against a wall and killed himself.

"Jasper, our intel states that Zayden was very determined to die. Not only did he knock his head against the wall, but he also bit his own tongue before that in case the knocking did not kill him.

"No one in the detention center expected him to commit suicide.

"There was blood all over the floor when they found him this morning. There was a huge hole in his head and his brain was splattered across half the wall. He's unrecognizable."

Wendy was eating breakfast with Jasper when she heard the news. The sunny-side up egg was still in her mouth when she paused and put the egg back on the plate.

Jasper, who was drinking his soy milk, glanced at Julian distastefully. "Do you have to say it in such detail?"

Jasper scratched his head and replied innocently, "I was afraid that it'd affect your deductions if I missed out on any details, Jasper."

"I'm not a detective. Solving murders is their job, not mine."

Jasper sighed and asked, "Did someone visit Zayden last night?"

Julian nodded. "Yeah. Sylva Hanks visited him at ten last night and two other unknown foreigners visited at two this morning. The two foreigners are missing now and the officials are trying to track them down."

Jasper scoffed. "What loyal guards there are in the detention center! I'd understand if it was Zayden's dad visiting him, but strangers visiting at two a.m.? What the hell were they doing?"

Julian smiled bitterly, saying, "Those two foreigners are very suspicious. And because of this, half of the guards from yesterday's night shift have been fired."

"A bunch of useless guards!"

Jasper slammed his chopsticks on the table heavily. "Zayden is terrified of death, to the point of begging me for mercy just to live. Why would he kill himself with such a tragic method? Someone must've threatened him with something more important than his own life."

Just then, a servant from outside entered the doors. "Mr. Laine, there's someone called Sylva Hanks outside who wants to talk to you."

Life at the Top Chapter 605

Jasper met Sylva in the villa's reception room.

Jasper had met the man once before.

From what he remembered, Sylva was a middle-aged man with a gentlemanly and elegant aura around him.

However, now when Jasper set his eyes on Sylva again, he wondered if he had mistaken this man for someone else.

Jasper sighed slightly when he saw the slouch in Sylva's posture and the messy white mess of hair atop his head.

"My condolences, Mr. Hanks."

Jasper knew that Sylva had already gotten news of Zayden's death.

Sylva grinned with a tearful smile and pulled a cigarette out. He patted his pockets but could not seem to find a lighter.

Jasper pressed down on his lighter with a click and reached out to light Sylva's cigarette.

"Thanks."

After taking a long drag, Sylva coughed twice. Jasper then broke the silence.

"Is there a reason why you're here, Mr. Hanks?"

Jasper and Sylva would still be enemies instead of friends if Zayden was still alive. Now that Zayden had passed away, Sylva's arrival meant that the man had moved on from their past.

"The death of a person is no different from the extinguishing of a flame." Sylva sighed deeply and slouched further.

"I've already decided. I still have more than a million Somer Dollars saved up and it should be enough for me to live the rest of my life in peace. I've spent my entire life fighting for fame and power, only to lose it all to my son.

"Now, my business is gone and I've lost my son as well."

Sylva looked up at Jasper and smiled sorrowfully. "What a pitiful end, wouldn't you say?"

Jasper remained silent.

Sylva rubbed his face and exhaled, sobering up. "I really shouldn't be telling you all of this, but I can't find anyone else to vent to. I'm sorry."

"It's alright," Jasper said in consolation.

"I came here with another goal, to inform you of something.

"I went to see Zayden yesterday and the boy was absolutely frantic. Perhaps he knew that someone was going to hurt him, so he told me everything.

"Now that he has passed away, there's no need for me to keep the secret anymore.

"My brother Sirius has already joined forces with Conrad. The two of them will work together to attack all properties under your and Dawson's name. It'll be an attack from all sides, and their main target will be all the projects your real estate company has in the Southeast Province.”

Sylva looked at Jasper intently and spoke, “There’s no need to doubt nor feel shocked about it. This is very much within the abilities of him and Conrad combined.

“This is what you must watch out for.

“In addition to that, Zayden also told me last night that there was a traitor among Harbor City’s four richest families during the share market crisis. This traitor is the Langdon family!

“Wallace Langdon had teamed up with the sly b*stards from Wall Street. They were trying to screw over Harbor City’s economy to earn money but you managed to stop them. They didn’t give up, though. They’ve decided to team up and attack the other richest families as well.

“Zayden doesn’t know who that other party is. All he knows is that Kennedy has been in charge of this as of now and he’s been plotting for a very long time.”

Jasper frowned, and his expression turned solemn at Sylva’s words.

Sylva relaxed greatly after he was done speaking and he stood. Smiling, he spoke, “Alright. I’ve said all I had to and it’s time I leave now.”

Jasper looked up. “Still, I’m grateful for the news you brought me. I have a question, though.

“I’d like to think I know what kind of person Zayden is, so what forced him to kill himself in the detention center?”

Sylva smiled at the question and replied, “My son has finally won against you.”

Jasper looked at Sylva confusedly.

Life at the Top Chapter 606

There were signs of tears in Sylva's eyes. "He told me last night that they might as well just kill him if they wanted to force him to do anything. The only reason he would kill himself is if they threatened him with me.

"Conrad is a ruthless man, and I would not put it below him to threaten Zayden with my life. That's probably why Zayden made such a decision.

"When he told me that last night, he had said something else too. He told me that you would be confused, and if he guessed it right, then it meant he had won."

Although he was dazed, Jasper sighed softly and got up to say again, "My condolences."

Sylva waved his hand dismissively and murmured, "I'll be going now. Whatever that happens after this, well that will have nothing to do with me at all."

After speaking, the elderly man slowly walked away. Jasper felt a surge of indescribable fury bubble within him as he watched the other man leave despondently.

'Conrad, Kennedy, and Sirius are getting out of hand.

'There's no saying what these three would do for the sake of their own profits.

'Sure, Zayden was bad, but he had already gotten his punishment. Yet they still hired killers to deal with him.

'Was this necessary?

'Not at all.

'Because Zayden's death did not affect the situation at all.

'But they did it anyway.

'Was this a demonstration?'

Jasper suddenly saw the image of Conrad scoffing at him in his mind. He was in his tunic and wearing gold-rimmed glasses, highlighting his gentlemanly appearance.

After calling Julian, Jasper decided that he would look for Dawson at Schuler Group right away.

Seeing how Conrad and Kennedy were about to make a move, Jasper and Dawson had to make preparations to counter them as well.

Upon meeting the man, Jasper told Dawson everything that was about to happen. Dawson was furious.

"What a large attack! We've got 20 to 30 projects here in the entire province. Do they think that they can just attack us like this without getting bitten back in the *ss?" Dawson scoffed.

"Then I'll have to trouble you with this, Uncle Schuler," Jasper said.

"No problem. This is right up my alley." Dawson nodded and asked, "But what are you planning to do?"

"It's only right that I return the favor." Jasper chuckled, playing around with the trinkets on Dawson's office table. Calmly, he spoke, "If they want to fight, then let's start a full-out war."

Jasper had two things to do next.

The first was to inform the Law family.

Zachary was more enraged than he was and immediately bought Henry a ticket for the next flight over to the Southeast Province to help Jasper. Zachary promised as well that he would not give Kennedy the chance to attack the Mainland for the time being.

With the Langdon family dealt with, Jasper then called Gale.

It took more intellect to talk to Gale, as the two were technically plotting against each other in some sense. However, that did stop mutually beneficial trades between the two.

“The Waterhoof City branch will fully support you. I will pass the order to ensure that they do,” Gale replied with a beam.

“But I want the Monty family’s aluminum mine.”

Jasper replied calmly, “Old Master Hurlbutt, you’re not a young man anymore. What are you going to do with so much money anyway?”

Gale laughed aloud. “I am old and indeed do not have much use for money anymore. But the people under me are motivated by benefits, after all.

“Of course, I could give it to you should you wish. I could give you a large sum of funds as well. All I wish is 15% of JW Capital’s shares.”

Jasper replied without hesitation, “JW Capital is the parent company of all my other subsidiaries. There’s no way I can agree to that. You can have the mine.”

“I will help you this once, sly child. Go wild.”

Life at the Top Chapter 607

Jasper had just ended the call with Gale when Henry called him.

“Is that stupid f*cker Mitch’s family bothering you?” Henry started the call with an aggressive question.

Jasper smiled. “You don’t say. But we’re retaliating soon.”

Henry snickered. “I’ve been so bored at Harbor City throughout New Year’s that I thought I was becoming a couch potato. I’m on my way to a clubhouse right now. I’ll be on my way to you once I’m done with work here.”

“Clubhouse?” Jasper asked.

“Something Mitch invested in, hahaha. I heard that it’s quite a fun place, so I thought I’d come over and have some fun with him.” Henry laughed deviously.

“Don’t go too far,” Jasper spoke exasperatedly.

Despite this being a phone call, Jasper could almost see how Henry was waving him off without a care. “Relax, I’d say I’m the most capable one among the rich children in Harbor City. And Dad and Grandfather are the most formidable ones among the rich families. No one can stop me.”

“Well, aren’t you powerful? In that case, just give Mitch a simple beating and that’ll do.” Jasper smiled.

“He’s getting beaten up, alright. But I’ve got an even better source of entertainment for Mitch.

“The stupid f*cker’s dad just arranged for him to get married, having chosen some daughter from this rich and powerful family from Golden Peninsula. They’re getting to know each other right now.

“Coincidentally, this f*cker just got a student from Harbor University pregnant two months ago. There’s no reason for me not to make use of such good material, right?

“Hehehe, I’ll talk to you later, then. I’ll be reaching soon and I’ve got work to do.”

Hanging up the phone, Jasper sighed.

It was easy dealing with trust fund babies since their family backgrounds were the main form of competition. That was until they started attacking with scoundrel-like moves. This made them a pain to deal with.

Henry seemed to be walking further down this crooked path.

...

The business war between JW Real Estates and the Hanks family was sudden and fierce.

The entire Southeast Province was none the wiser while the war had already started in full force.

The first to suffer were all the construction projects under JW Real Estates in the Southeast Province.

From the approval to acceptance procedures, to the checking of qualifications and reviewing funds, almost every part of the procedure before physical construction was subjected to obstructions.

As for construction projects that were already in process, people would either come to cause trouble once or twice a week, or there would be construction workers and other employees requesting leave and going on strike.

All in all, it was an absolute mess.

Among all the projects, the Southface River project was the only one exempted from any attacks.

However, it was also a project that had suffered the greatest loss. The large fire from before had resulted in at least a two-week pause in its construction, and there had been more than a 100 million loss in funds.

Other people and families in the Southeast Province believed that the business war between JW Real Estates and the Hanks family was due to this fire.

It was because the incident was a slap on the city and provincial government's faces. The high officials had already made it known that anyone who screwed with the Southface River Project would have to face terrible consequences.

No one dared to ignore the words of the high officials within the country, so even the Hanks family left the Southface Rover Project alone.

However, that meant the other projects were screwed.

People who had just moved on from the frenzy of the New Year's could now entertain themselves with the first gossip of 2001.

Those from the upper class were acutely aware that something was off.

While the Hanks family was considered a wealthy family in the province, it was unrealistic that they were able to launch such an exaggerated attack in the entire Southeast Province in such a short time.

There definitely had to be a family more formidable than the Hanks who was the true mastermind behind all this.

Everyone had their eyes wide open as they watched JW Real Estates, waiting to see how the company would retaliate.

Life at the Top Chapter 608

JW Real Estates did not disappoint as they quickly launched a counter-attack against the Hank family's series of attacks.

It was one single counter-attack.

Yet the moment this attack was made known to the public, the gossipers in Southeast Province were in an uproar.

Everyone now looked at JW Real Estates with inexplicable surprise and excitement.

That was because JW Real Estates... had stolen the Hanks family's electronics business in Waterhoof City!

It was a trade with four billion revenue each year and a profit margin that was guaranteed to be over 30% percent. It was stolen, just like that.

This business was one of the Hanks family's main pillars of survival recently.

The Hanks family used to be just as powerful as Dawson, but multiple of their properties later faced bankruptcy and they made huge losses since their failure in the Southface River Project.

Moreover, the Hanks family had only been doing worse ever since Sylva and Zayden stepped down.

The loss of this business trade was a critical hit to the Hanks family!

However, this was not the end.

JW Real Estates' parent company had issued an official statement on the first day of work after New Year's holiday.

[JW Capital is officially setting up JW Electronics, which will mainly focus on the vigorously growing electronics industry in the country. JW Electronics has already achieved a partnership with the strongest electronics company in Waterloo City, with the agreement that JW Electronics is to buy no less than five billion worth of goods each year. JW Electronics welcomes all sales channels to partner with us.]

Following that was an official statement from Schuler Group.

[All 232 supermarkets under Schuler Group in the country will open a section solely to sell goods from JW Electronics. The first three months will be a promotional period and all electronics will be sold at a 20% discount.]

To describe it plainly, they were getting rid of the Hanks family for good.

“The Hanks family is still going in full swing to try to cut JW Real Estates down when JW Real Estates has just directly uprooted the Hanks family. This is the end of the war, isn't it? The Hanks family has got nothing left.”

Someone commented.

As of that moment, this was no longer an issue within the Southeast Province, but one that attracted attention from all over the country. Especially those who were in the electronics business.

Orders worth five billion Somer Dollars a year! That was enough to shake the country now as its market was not considered too big yet.

A huge monster in the electronics industry had appeared in the Southeast Province overnight, and that infuriated other businesses in the same industry in other provinces.

Everyone was irritated at the insignificant Hanks family. If not for this f*cking family, they would not have such an immense competitor to worry about right now.

“I didn’t start up this electronics company just to have the last word. I did it because this is a promising industry.”

Sitting in Dawson’s office, Jasper pulled out a brick-like metal box and placed it in front of Dawson who looked very doubtful.

This metal box may sound new now, but in five years, the product and its new name would be a major hit throughout the whole country—the MP3 player.

In truth, the first MP3 player had already been invented in Coreana three years ago.

Last year, in the year 2000, this device had also begun to trend in European countries and the United States.

However, the MP3 player would only truly trend in 2002. Since Jasper had the chance to go back in time, there was no way he would let go of the opportunity to make a profit that was destined to grow by 50% each year. Up until 2010, at least, for that was when the MP3 player would slowly phase out and be replaced.

It had to be known that the first person who built a fortune through electronics had made their first big bucks through this cheap yet profitable MP3 player.

From 2002 to 2010, this device would accumulate a profit totaling 500 billion.

“This is it?”

Dawson was very doubtful considering he did not have memories from the future.

“You spent 2,000 bucks to import this, and you’re telling me this music listening device will earn you at least one billion a year?”

Life at the Top Chapter 609

Dawson believed Jasper. He really did, or he would not have issued a statement claiming that all his supermarkets would open an exclusive section for JW Electronics’ products before he saw the physical products themselves.

Not to mention that JW Electronics still did not have an operating license yet. It did not even have an official employee in charge.

However, Dawson was doubtful about this. According to the country’s citizens’ spending ability, a luxury item costing 2,000 bucks was hardly something most families could afford.

One had to know that the average citizen could not even make 2,000 bucks a month.

“This is only a sample. It’s so expensive because firstly, it’s imported. Secondly, it hasn’t been fully developed yet.

“I plan to take a trip to Coreana after this is over and buy their exclusive domestic license for this piece of technology. Then we can cut at least 70% of its size and increase its internal storage. As for pricing, well, we can cut it down by half.”

Hearing Jasper, Dawson replied, “That’s still too expensive.”

“We’ll only know about its actual cost when the time comes. But JW Electronics will only manufacture high-end products. We’ll leave whatever else to others.”

Seeing how Jasper seemed to have a perfect plan, Dawson did not dwell on the issue any longer. Putting down the ‘brick’ in his hands, he smiled. “The sky’s the limit. Don’t worry about anything else, you’ll have all of Schuler Group’s supermarkets as your strongest sales channel.”

Jasper nodded. Honestly speaking, Schuler Group had a terrifying sales ability. With that and the country’s top website with selling power, many problems had now solved themselves.

No matter how good the product, without a good sales channel, the product was pointless if no one bought it.

There was a well-known domestic mobile phone brand in his past life that had an operating cost of eight billion Somer Dollars, five million of which went to developing their sales channel. This spoke volumes about how important a sales channel was.

“How is it with the real estate company? Is the situation alright there?” Jasper asked.

Dawson replied calmly, “It’s just a waste of money. We have 24 projects in the entire province and we’re losing tens of millions from each of them every day. It’s not any better for the Hanks family, and the functional departments are still being difficult about it. I’ve already put pressure on them.”

“So while it looks like we’re in trouble now, nothing much can happen for the time being. After all, our projects are following all the regulations, from design to building materials. They haven’t thought about messing around with the quality of our materials yet. All this trouble they’re giving us are just cheap tricks.”

Jasper nodded. “That’s good then.”

Just then, the landline in Dawson’s office rang.

Dawson picked up the phone, and the other person must have said something as Jasper saw Dawson scoff before replying, “What a large sacrifice. That plot of land in Flora City is worth no more than 30 million. Any more expensive means there won’t be a profit when construction begins later on. And they’re charging 40 million?”

“They can have the piece of land if they want it. It’s just another plot of land to us, we don’t need it.”

Hanging up the phone, Dawson turned to Jasper angrily. “Sirius and the others have already begun to increase their pressure on us. As long as we’ve shown interest in a plot of land in the province, they would turn it into an auction open to everyone else.

“They’re obviously trying to steal this plot of land in Flora City from us even if it’ll result in a loss. There were two other plots where they made borderline losses just to steal them from us.”

Jasper was intrigued. “They’re trying to hurt us at the cost of their own capital? Just give it to them, then. As you said, we’ve got enough projects on hand as it is already. We only wanted these plots of land just so we could construct them when they appreciated. I don’t see why we can’t just give these to them if they want them so much.”

“The only thing we have to worry about now are the rumors from the general public,” Dawson spoke.

“They’re just ignorant people who don’t know how cruel a true business war can be. These tricks are hardly anything to be proud of,” Jasper spoke indifferently.

Jasper had spent his past life working in a finance company before he reincarnated. Business wars were truly battlefields where people died without bloodshed. It was where wealthy businessmen worth hundreds of billions could topple and fall in the blink of an eye.

Jasper looked down on the tricks Sirius was coming up with.

“Conrad has been laying low in the dark ever since this began. What I’m concerned about most is what tricks he has up his sleeve. Everything Sirius is doing now has to be with Conrad’s full support, and without Conrad destroyed, I can’t help but feel uneasy,” Dawson confided in Jasper.

After a moment of silence, Jasper replied, “My thoughts precisely. This Conrad reminds me of a turtle living in a deep pond. If he doesn’t want to show himself, then we’ll force him to come out.

“At the same time, let’s teach those outsiders how a true business war is won.”

Jasper squinted and looked at the sky outside Schuler Tower’s highest floor. Now was a perfect time as the sun was shining brightly.

...

At first, the Hanks family had lined up a series of attacks on the construction projects under JW Real Estates. Following that, JW Real Estates countered them by stealing the Hanks family’s main business.

After that, the Hanks family won all auctioned plots of land in the province, no matter the price, that JW Capital had shown interest in as revenge.

This messy series of attacks from both sides provided those interested in keeping tabs with different updates every day. Everyone had their eyes wide open as they waited for JW Real Estates to fight back.

However, everyone was shocked to find out that for the next few days, JW Real Estates no longer took any monumental actions as if everything had been put on halt.

This had everyone speculating if this was the end to JW Real Estates and if the company was about to surrender.

People who believed that they had better intel sources began to spread rumors. The speculation made sense because the Hanks family did have roots that ran deep and strong influence in the Southeast Province. Not to mention that they had someone helping them in the dark as well.

In comparison to that, JW Real Estates that was only established a year ago would have fallen long ago without Schuler Group's support.

Everyone had come up with the same unanimous conclusion.

JW Real Estates was about to surrender soon.

Such a result had the other real estate companies in the province elated. After all, JW Real Estates had stolen much of their business last year.

JW Real Estates was rich and owned a lot of plots of land. Their design was futuristic and impossible to compete against.

Yet now that JW Real Estates was over, it was another celebratory event for these real estate businesses. They were ecstatic.

Just as everyone waited to see JW Real Estates lose, the company dropped another bomb that blew everyone's mind in the Southeast Province. It was news that shook the country's mining industry.

JW Capital announced that they would partner with Haddock Mining Group with an investment of three billion. They would work together to acquire the entirety of Southeast Province Mining Co., Ltd!

Life at the Top Chapter 610

Haddock Mining Group.

The country's first large private mining company. While it was a private capital, Waterhoof City Mining Group owned 32% of its shares and the IBCS owned 19%. To some degree, it could be seen as a state-owned enterprise.

Its franchise had always belonged to the Haddock Chamber of Commerce, meaning it was in Gale Hurlbutt's hands.

After all, without the state's funds, it was impossible to even get the license to mine, let alone open a mining business in the country. Mining fell under controlled resources, and it was not a trade that anyone could take as they wished.

At the same time, it was also a business enterprise on the stock market.

The moment JW Capital and Haddock Mining Group both released official statements, the latter's share price began to rise.

At the same time in a manor in the outskirts of Nauritus City.

In the luxurious room, Sirius slammed his hand on the table with a bang and growled wretchedly. "What the f*ck is that b*stard Jasper doing?! Is he really going to fight to the death with us?!"

Conrad was the only person in the room beside Sirius, and he was currently focused on cutting the cigar in his hands.

Hearing him, Conrad replied calmly, "Calm down. Do you not find yourself being ridiculous? We've already gone past the point of reconciliation long ago. Or did you somehow think this won't end with one party dead?"

"There's no rule under the sun stating that only we can attack but they cannot counter back. He just managed to hit you where it hurts this time."

Sirius suppressed the anger within him and complained to Conrad, "You might not know this, Mr. Monty, but the Hanks family's entire focus is on this one business. We were just about to import the goods for the year when Jasper destroyed our plans.

"The sales channels under us have been coming to find us in the past two days, saying that either we compensate for their losses as per the contracts signed, or we give them the goods. At this rate, the Hanks family will be over even without Jasper's attack."

Conrad replied calmly, "That's easy, then. There's more than just one Waterhoof City manufacturer in the country. Nothing is stopping you from buying from other manufacturers."

'Oh, you f*cking sly b*stard!'

Sirius was extremely displeased, but his expression did not betray his emotions. He smiled bitterly instead. "It's not that easy. Business like this requires a deposit before the manufacturer starts manufacturing the goods.

"We've tried to look for substitute manufacturers before, but they either directly declined us, or they set an ungodly high price. The Hanks family isn't stupid. We would end up making a loss if we agreed. I might as well pay compensation as per the contracts at this point."

“So pay the compensation, then.” Conrad smiled.

Sirius quickly explained, “We have tens of sales channels under us. We’ll go broke instantly if we compensate them according to the contracts. We’ve got an alliance, don’t we, Mr. Monty? You can’t just watch me meet my end like this.”

Conrad glanced at Sirius and asked calmly, “Do you wish that I provide you with money or goods?”

Sirius was stunned as he did not expect Conrad to be so willing. He probed, saying, “It’d be best if I got the goods. That way, we can still continue the business.”

“You’re a funny man, Mr. Hanks. The Monty family isn’t involved in such an industry, so how do you expect me to find you so many goods in such a short time?” Conrad asked calmly.

“As for money, I’m sure you wouldn’t believe me if I said I don’t have any. It’d be insincere of me to say so as well. However, the Monty family’s money belongs to the family, meaning that I can give you a bit to help with the situation, but not enough to save your life. Do you understand what I mean?”

Sirius’ expression soured.

His end was inevitable if even Conrad was not going to help him.

Over the past few days, while his sales channels asked him to repay his debts, they had also been in contact with JW Electronics. A large majority of them must have signed new contracts with JW Electronics as well.

He only came to know because a few old partners told him. They were people whom he had been working with for a long time, so they told him about it seeing that they were friends.

Sirius felt lost.

Seeing how devastated Sirius looked, Conrad's impatience grew.

However, he did not express what he felt for he knew that if the Monty family wanted to benefit from this, he had to watch out for the Hanks family as well.

"Relax."

Conrad fiddled with the cigar in his hand and explained calmly, "Patience is crucial to many things. Look at this cigar, for example. From planting to picking these tobacco leaves, to processing, fermenting, and making these leaves into rolls, it takes around a dozen skilled workers at least five months before one cigar is made.

"The world would have less fascinating things if everyone is as impatient as you."

Lighting the cigar, he took a deep breath and slowly exhaled. The dense and fragrant smoke wafted around the room, covering Conrad's face slightly, making the man look unreal.

"I'll talk to people in Harbor City about your situation. If Kennedy wants you to work for him, then it wouldn't make sense for him to do nothing and watch you die. Just because I can't do anything doesn't mean he can't, do you understand?"

With such a promise, Sirius' expression smoothed out as he nodded. "Seems like that's the only thing we can do now. I'm afraid I can only last five days at most if I don't have anything to give the sales channels."

"Outstanding," Conrad mocked calmly.

Just then, someone knocked on the door.

"Come in."

The door opened at Conrad's reply.

“Mr. Monty, I’ve just received news from the investment department. There’s been a change in the family’s Skyward Aluminum’s share price. It’s already risen to the limit now. According to our predictions, someone might be trying to buy Skyward Aluminum’s shares for malicious reasons.”

Conrad was stunned for a moment before he exploded. “You useless piece of trash! Why’d it take you so long to report it to me?!”

The person looked distressed as he explained fearfully, “It happened too fast, Mr. Monty. It only took five minutes for the share price to rise to the limit. We couldn’t even react in time.”

“All of you are absolutely useless! Immediately call for a managerial-level meeting at Skyward Aluminum! Go, what are you waiting for?” Conrad roared.

That person immediately fled without hesitation.

Sirius could not help but feel pleased to see Conrad agitated at that moment.

Jasper had finally made a move against Conrad.

It filled Sirius with relief as he was not the only one suffering anymore.

In fact, he even wanted to take a cigar for himself and repeat Conrad’s words to him unhurriedly. ‘Relax. The world’s more fascinating things are not to be rushed.’

Life at the Top Chapter 611

In Skyward Aluminum Co., Ltd.

The atmosphere was suffocating.

Expressionlessly, Conrad took the main seat and slammed his palm on the table, frightening the senior executives who shuddered in fear.

“Are all of you useless? I spend a few millions each year on you and you’re telling me none of you have a single plan when someone is trying to acquire our company?!”

“They’ve just made their move and you guys are already frantic? How do you expect me to believe in your abilities from now on, huh?”

Conrad’s reprimand echoed in the meeting room, and everyone looked down silently.

No one dared to meet their boss’ eyes at such a critical time.

Conrad’s sinister eyes swept through the meeting room before they finally fell on a balding middle-aged man.

“Benjamin, you’re the manager of the investment department. This is part of your business scope. I want a report written right away and given to me today, or you can go to the Human Resources Department, finalize your salary, and leave.”

Benjamin looked distressed as he spoke, “Please calm down first, Mr. Monty.

“There’s something strange with the funds that were used to increase our company’s share price this time. The evidence we have on hand shows that these funds were from Harbor City, not the Mainland.

“So I’ve been wondering if our share price rising to the limit is a result of an investor who decided to enter the market to benefit from it, seeing how JW and Haddock are going to team up and acquire.”

Benjamin’s words had everyone’s eyes shining with hope.

Everyone had assumed that the rise in share price was caused by Jasper and Haddock, so they had not thought of it from such an angle.

If what Benjamin said was true, then the nature of the matter was completely different.

It did not matter who bought those shares, as long as it was not Jasper.

Conrad furrowed his brows and pondered aloud, “Not bad. This is a completely different view on the matter. Continue.”

Seeing that his thoughts had been approved of, Benjamin let out a sigh of relief and continued to speak, “If that’s the case, then the situation is much better. Despite being faced with a forceful acquisition, I believe that there’s quite a lot we can do.

“You currently hold 40% of the company’s shares, Mr. Monty. Southeast Province Mining Co., Ltd holds another 30%, leaving 30% more in the stock market. This is the situation now.

“We have two options. We either officially announce that the company is buying back its shares, or negotiate with Southeast Province Mining Co., Ltd to see if we could take back a percentage of the shares they hold.

“We just have to ensure that you have more than 50% of shares in hand, Mr. Monty. Because even if Jasper manages to buy all the shares and becomes one of our shareholders, what can he do?”

“Nothing.

“He’d have wasted all his hard work only to advertise for us in the end. Plus, if we manage to buy our shares back this time, our share price would increase quite a bit as well.”

...

While Conrad had summoned all of Skyward Aluminum’s senior executives to discuss plans to retaliate, Jasper was currently on a video call with Jake who was far away in Harbor City.

“As per your requests, Mr. Laine, we’ve spent 1.2 billion in funds to purchase 3.96% of Skyward Aluminum’s shares.”

Skyward Aluminum as a whole had a market price of around 30 billion. This purchase was not unnecessarily expensive.

Jasper nodded. Looking at Skyward Aluminum’s market, he spoke, “Continue tomorrow. Buy as many shares as you can. Don’t worry about the money, someone will pay for it.”

Jasper thought of how wealthy Gale was. Despite never once feeling like he was broke after reincarnation, Jasper could not help but be stunned over how exceptionally rich this old man was.

Not only had he transferred the funds needed to acquire Skyward Aluminum in advance, but he had also promised to give Jasper a 1% commission after everything was done.

1% of a business with a market price of 30 billion was 200 million.

That was enough to replenish the loss the real estate company made.

Since it was a condition that was already agreed upon, Jasper was very happy to earn such a commission.

Jake nodded in understanding and spoke, "We've investigated Skyward Aluminum's share structure and realized that Conrad currently has the most shares. He has a total of 40%, while the remaining 60% is split between Southeast Province Mining Co., Ltd, which runs on state funds, and the general public.

"In such a situation, we'll need Southeast Province Mining Co., Ltd's support to take their 30% of shares or it won't be enough for us to acquire it just by buying the 30% open to the general public.

"Plus, the stock market right now only allows a maximum purchase of 22%. The remaining 8% are in the hands of countless retailers so it's impossible to buy all 30% of the shares."

Jasper nodded. "I've already accounted for this. Don't worry about it, just focus on the share market over at your side."

Jake acknowledged, saying, "Yes, Mr. Laine. I understand."

"Tell me how the investment is going with the Harbor City Stock Market that I had you invest in."

"Basically, the situation now..."

More than an hour later, Jasper exited the study and made his way to the airport.

It was evening by the time he met Henry at the airport.

The man got into the car excitedly and grinned almost maniacally at Jasper. “You have no idea how absolutely amusing it was to see the look on that f*cker Mitch’s face. The scene of what happened, oh my God. Harbor City’s gossip magazines got such a kick out of it that they’re just churning articles after articles. Oh, man, those were some f*cking hilarious articles they wrote.”

“Will they still get married? Even after you released news of Mitch getting another girl pregnant in front of his fiancée?” Jasper asked with a chuckle.

Henry pursed his lips. “It’s not that big of a deal. This is mostly a hiccup for the Langdon family. Plus, it’s not like the girl can do anything even if she wanted to. This is a marriage union between two families, so the family’s benefits come first. They’re going to have to marry no matter what happens.

“Or no one would let Wallace’s and the girl’s families live this down.

“But a few slaps from his dad is pretty much guaranteed for Mitch, though. Hahaha. Damn it, I should’ve recorded the scene when it happened so that I can rewatch it every day and relive that moment.”

At that, Henry suddenly remembered something and turned to Jasper. “Oh yeah, I heard my dad say something about the Langdon family ordering a large batch of electronic goods before I came here. I think they plan to send it over to the Southeast Province after customs clearance.”

“That’s probably their support for the Hanks family. What’s going to happen to it now?” Jasper asked.

Henry snorted. “Dad’s going to take a trip over there himself. He told me to tell you not to worry. With him there, the Langdon family won’t even get a chip out of Harbor City.”

Life at the Top Chapter 612

“If that’s the case, I can get rid of one of them first, then.”

Jasper smiled and sent Dawson a message.

Since the beginning, neither Jasper nor Dawson had found the Hanks family’s tricks worth their attention.

With the power they held now, it was not a difficult feat to completely destroy the Hanks family.

The Hanks family only became a tough nut to crack when Conrad was there supporting them.

Now with the Law family giving them trouble at Harbor City, Jasper and Dawson’s plan could immediately begin.

“Are you sending me back to the hotel?” Henry asked.

“Do you still have more work to do?” Jasper asked curiously.

Henry chuckled and waved his phone. “I know a few beauties in every single place I’ve been to before, so I can contact them at any time.”

Jasper scoffed. “Your dad said that the playground project at the Southface River will be done soon. He wants you to supervise the finishing touches.”

Henry replied irritably, “I don’t understand a thing about construction. As to what the workers are doing, who am I, an outsider, to ask?”

“You might not have to pay attention to the specifics of the construction, but what about the quality specifications, the final checking, and the financial aspects? You need to at least know something, don’t you? Else, you’ll be the one suffering when you get back. Don’t say I never warned you, but your dad is definitely going to ask you about it when you get back.

“I’m sure you’re much more aware than I am of the consequences if you can’t answer him.”

Henry’s expression darkened as he spoke in an upset tone, “This old man is controlling my every second here. Fine, fine, we’ll go back to the hotel. I’ll read through the playground’s documents first then.”

Leaving Henry at the hotel, Jasper returned home.

Dawson returned very late that night, but he had a mirthful smile on his face when he came back.

Dawson pulled out a thick stack of documents from his briefcase and smiled widely at Jasper. “It’s done. We’ve bought all of their debt contracts. This alone is enough to crush the Hanks family to smithereens.”

Jasper took over the thick stack of documents.

These papers were the reason behind Dawson’s busy day.

“The Hanks family previously signed a total of 48 sales businesses. I found 38 of them today, and these are all of them for now.

“The remaining ten are probably the Hanks family’s loyal partners, so they’re not worth us using such a large amount of money to bribe them over.

“The 38 businesses I’ve negotiated with come up to a total of 2.7 billion worth of compensation. And we’ve bought their contracts with 2.4 billion.”

“Tsk, tsk. And we made three hundred million too? What good business.” Jasper smiled.

“Just suing the Hanks family would cost these businesses a huge amount of expenses. It’s expected that they were willing to sell us their contracts at a discount.”

“Now we wait. Tomorrow, we can make our move.”

...

The following day, the Hanks family seemed to have noticed something for they began to attack JW Real Estates’ projects maddeningly.

In a few days’ time, they had caused Jasper 200 million worth of loss.

Not that Jasper cared.

It was because swallowing the Hanks family would easily cover this loss.

At the same time, there was no halt in the purchase of Skyward Aluminum’s market shares. If anything, the purchase continued unrelentingly.

However, Conrad was a capable man. Excluding the first day when he was caught off guard, he had been fiercely fighting back in all the following days.

Life at the Top Chapter 613

Jasper had spent 4.8 billion to buy 10% of Skyward Aluminum's shares.

In truth, Skyward Aluminum had no more than a market price of 30 billion. The only reason it cost 4.8 billion to buy 10% of its shares was that 1.8 billion was spent on acquisition premium.

In other words, they had benefitted retail investors who decided to jump on the bandwagon.

Not that Jasper cared, since he was spending Gale's money.

That old man had too much money that he would never get to spend it all, and there was nothing wrong with benefitting the general public.

That day, Jasper arrived at Hanks Residence with Julian in tow.

Despite having such a long-standing battle with the Hanks family, this was still the first time Jasper had stepped foot in their house.

They were a wealthy family, after all, so the entire park was the Hanks family's property.

As for their base, the Hanks family had exquisitely renovated the park, which was by both the mountains and bodies of water.

"Not bad. I'd say this entire park as a whole could be sold for 100 to 200 million," Jasper chuckled and said.

"Who are you two looking for?"

An old man walked out of the park and asked Jasper confusedly.

Jasper smiled. "Help me inform Sirius that his creditor is here to collect his debts."

The old man was stunned for a moment before he spoke in a tense voice, "What kind of nonsense are you saying? Leave. This isn't a place for you to fool around."

"Please pass the message, sir. You only need to tell him that the creditor's name is Jasper. He'll want to see me." Jasper was very polite to the old man and did not give him any attitude.

Sensing the situation, the old man glanced at Jasper and Julian suspiciously before turning back.

Soon later, the old man rushed out again. "Mr. Hanks wishes to see you."

Entering the park, Jasper saw Sirius standing in a large estate.

"How dare you come to my house, Jasper?" Sirius demanded coldly as he stared at Jasper.

This was Sirius' home, after all, so there were several family members present.

Among them was an old man who had a head full of white hair. He was possibly an entire generation older than Sirius. There were also two younger men who were around Zayden's age when he passed away.

"This isn't some lion's den, so why won't I dare?" Jasper asked with a smile.

The two youths were Neville and Dave. Between the two, Neville had once fought Zayden for the role of heir.

Seeing Jasper, Neville, who was hasty to show off in front of his family, scoffed. "You're Jasper, aren't you? Tsk tsk, I suggest you get your head out of your *ss and stop acting like you're above us all. Do you even know where you are?"

"You were still a nobody when the Hanks family became one of Southeast Province's upper class."

Dave laughed and agreed, saying, "Exactly. Seriously, Dad, just throw this ignorant b*stard out as I said. He's an eyesore."

Jasper did not even spare the two of them a glance and spoke calmly, "I thought Zayden was useless enough, but I didn't expect you two to be even worse. It explains why Zayden was the only one from his generation in the family who managed to make a small name for himself."

"You b*stard! What did you say?" Dave was furious.

Neville stared at Jasper coldly and sneered, "Looks like you're just an arrogant b*stard who wants to die."

With that, Neville whistled and a huge German Shepherd that reached the waist of a fully grown adult ran over. It sat beside Neville and glared at Jasper who was a stranger.

"I'm going to have my dog bite you to death."

Life at the Top Chapter 614

This was an extremely smart dog. Hearing its master Neville's words, it barked twice at Jasper.

The sight had all the Hanks present chortling.

Everyone looked at Jasper with disdain as if they were looking at a beggar who had come asking for scraps.

Julian, who had been standing behind Jasper the entire time, took a step to stand beside Jasper with a cold gaze.

Everyone then watched as Julian took a deep breath, one that went straight to his core. The man's eyes widened abruptly as he opened his mouth to shout.

It was a loud growl that was deep, powerful, and extremely thundering. It reminded Jasper of a lion's roar in the savanna.

Everyone felt their chests stifle while their hearts seemed to skip a beat. Their breathing grew heavy and they felt uncomfortable.

Meanwhile, the fierce dog beside Neville let out a pitiful whimper. His tail shook between his legs as a puddle of liquid began to form between its hind legs.

It had peed itself in fear.

That scene shattered whatever dignity the Hanks family had.

"What do you think you're doing, Jasper? So you're bringing people over to my house to assert dominance now?" Neville's face was flushed red as he looked up to Jasper to shout. He felt the urge to kick this shameful dog to death.

"A dog will always be a dog. Fierce as it is, it's still just a dog, no?"

Jasper spoke with a subtle smile, and all the Hanks family present felt the color drain from their faces in anger.

While it seemed like he was talking about the German Shepherd, it was really an insult to the Hanks family.

Neville roared, "Who are you calling a dog here?"

"So you acknowledge it then?" Jasper commented calmly.

"You f*cking b*stard..."

"Enough!"

Sirius shouted to interrupt Neville, glaring at the young man who had an indignant expression on his face. He said, "Don't you think that we've made a big enough fool of ourselves already? Either shut up, or bring your dog and get out!"

Neville clenched his jaw. Flames of fury were set ablaze in his eyes and he balled his fists, glaring at Jasper resentfully.

However, since Sirius had already spoken, Neville remained silent regardless of how pissed he felt.

"Is that what you came to do today, Jasper? To scare a dog?" Sirius looked at Jasper and spoke calmly.

With that, smiles reappeared on the Hanks family's faces.

Sirius was much more experienced than Neville, after all. A mere sentence was all it took for him to slap Jasper in the face. It was a great relief to the other members of the family who were greatly infuriated by Jasper's taunting a second ago.

Jasper did not waste time on Sirius and waved a hand at Julian.

Julian immediately pulled out some documents from the briefcase that he carried with him everywhere and handed them to Sirius.

Sirius looked at Jasper suspiciously before taking a look at the papers.

One look at the contents of the documents was enough to stun Sirius. His eyes widened as he stared at every single word on the papers, rereading it as if he had read it wrong the first time.

Following that, Sirius' hand trembled as he held the papers. His breathing turned heavy.

The scene startled the members of the Hanks family. Reflexively, they were about to ask what the documents entailed and why it had caused Sirius to lose his composure.

Just then, Jasper spoke up instead.

“As you can see, Mr. Hanks, I’ve come today to collect your debts.”

Neville stared at Jasper and scoffed at his words. “Are you so broke that you’ve gone f*cking mad? Go on then, bark twice for me, and if it’s to my liking, I might just give you 100 or 200 bucks.”

Life at the Top Chapter 615

“You came to Hanks Residence to collect our debts? Since when did my family owe you money?”

“Will it hurt for you to shut up?!” Sirius turned to shout at Neville.

Having been shouted at, Neville looked at his dad who had a wretched expression on his face and looked like he was about to eat himself alive. Terrified, Neville spoke with a quivering voice, "I'm your son, Dad. Jasper's an outsider who's coming to bully us at our house, what's wrong with me standing up for our family?"

At that moment, the only old man in the room realized that there was something wrong with Sirius and asked with a frown, "What's going on, Sirius?"

Sirius took a deep breath and looked up at the old man. "This is a notice of breach in contract, Uncle Silas."

With that, Sirius turned to look at Jasper coldly. "What a trick you've got here, hmm?"

Jasper replied calmly, "You're not so bad either."

"I'd like to know how you managed to get your hands on so many sales business' contracts in just two days. How'd you get them to agree to transfer the contract compensation rights to you?" Sirius asked coldly.

At that, the expressions of all the Hanks family members changed.

The Hanks family was currently in a great crisis as their main pillar of income, the electronics orders, had been stolen from them. The sales businesses that they had signed contracts with were rioting every day as well.

As members of the Hanks family, they were well aware that it would be the end of the Hanks family if they could not brave through this.

However, Jasper had now brought those contracts over to collect their debts.

Everyone, including Neville, now looked at Jasper with absolute resentment. They wanted nothing more than to rip Jasper apart.

“Faith County had only developed its electronics market after signing a contract with the Hanks family for a year’s worth of goods. The contract amounts to a total of 1.5 million, with an advanced prepayment of 800,000. The moment either party breaches the contract, they are required to compensate the loss with twice the contract amount. So, I decided to buy that contract with 1.3 million Somer Dollars.

“And the same followed with other sales businesses you signed with. There was no reason for them not to take my offer, especially when they’d have to come up with the expenses themselves to sue you otherwise. There’s no point in dragging debt on forever, correct?”

Sirius paled at Jasper’s words.

Then, he cruelly barked out a laugh. “Wow, very well done, Jasper. Very well done! Aren’t you afraid that I’d go bankrupt and you wouldn’t even get a cent out of me?”

Jasper shrugged and replied calmly, “Even if you went bankrupt, I’m sure the Hanks family’s properties are still worth something. I’ll just have to treat it as picking up the scraps and helping you repay your debts at a discounted price. Even if you’re unwilling, I’m sure the court will agree.

“Plus, let’s be honest, I can afford that bit of cash.”

Sirius glared at Jasper menacingly and was utterly infuriated.

Yet no matter how angry he was, the situation left him no other choice but to surrender.

“Is there truly no way we can negotiate this, Jasper?”

Hearing him, Neville and his brother Dave looked at Sirius with disbelief. They did not understand why their father was surrendering to Jasper.

“Negotiate? My only suggestion is that you repay your debts as soon as possible. That’s 2.7 billion. Ordinary people can live their entire lives on one day of interest alone,” Jasper spoke calmly.

“What? 2.7 billion?!” Neville shrieked.

Dave’s eyes widened in disbelief.

“Dad, he’s obviously just extorting us here! We won’t be able to come up with such a large sum of money in such a short time even if we liquidated all our properties!” Neville explained to Sirius.

Neville was very well aware of the Hanks family’s current situation. They had lost a lot of money ever since the Southface River Project, and the family’s wealth had shrunk greatly.

Over the past few days, they had made losses after losses from taking deals that did not benefit them just to attack Jasper and Dawson. Not to mention that Sylva had also taken an amount of the family’s wealth and vanished!

‘So what if our family has a lot of assets? They’re all side businesses and only a small number of projects are actually profitable! There’s no way we can procure 2.7 billion in such a short time to repay our debts!’

“Then liquidate it!”

Jasper spoke indifferently, “The Hanks family has quite a number of assets. Plus, with all the money each member of the family has, I’d say it’s enough to pay what you owe. Even if it isn’t enough, we can bring it to court. The worst-case scenario? You get blacklisted. But the Hanks family is so formidable that this should be the least of your problems, no?”

Life at the Top Chapter 616

“You’re going too far, Jasper!”

Dave stared at Jasper and roared.

“What’s wrong with a creditor coming to collect my debtor’s debts? How am I going too far? Or are you telling me that I’m just supposed to give you that 2.7 billion? Is that it?” Jasper asked curiously.

“You won’t get anything good out of crushing the entire Hanks family to bits! Doing so will only make the situation more difficult to deal with,” Dave spoke grimly.

Smiling, Jasper replied to Dave calmly, “Then how would you propose I do this?”

“We’ll pay you 20 million a year until we repay everything. That’s the most we can do.” Dave’s eyes shifted as he spoke.

Jasper chuckled at the suggestion and turned to look at Sirius, ignoring Dave. “Mr. Hanks, should I take this as your family’s final decision?”

Dave roared. “I’m talking to you here! What’s with your attitude?”

“Enough,” Sirius suddenly spoke, interrupting Dave.

“Jasper, it’s not a lie that we can’t pay you such a large sum right now. The Hanks family is now a mere shell of its former glory. We have no other choice but to run it through the official procedure if you’re so adamant about getting the money back. That’s all I have to say,” Sirius replied calmly.

“But I don’t believe that’s the result you wish to see.”

Jasper chuckled and turned to ask Sirius, “Did you have anything to do with Zayden’s death?”

Sirius frowned slightly at how Jasper asked him a tricky question instead of replying to his question.

“What are you saying? You were the reason Zayden was put in the detention center in the first place. He killed himself because he couldn’t take the reality of it. If anything, you were the one who directly caused his death!” Sirius spoke grimly.

Jasper replied calmly, “He had it coming, being put behind bars. But I’ve never once thought of killing him. After all, this is a federal society we live in. It would do you good not to spout nonsense.

“But you didn’t answer my question at all. So tell me, what role did you play in his death?”

Sirius’ expression darkened. He did not need to turn back to know that his family was looking at him with shocked, complicated, and confused gazes.

“I’m the one who’s suffering the most. I swear, I’ll find the person who killed Zayde—”

“Didn’t you just say that he killed himself because he couldn’t handle the fact that I put him behind bars? Now you’re telling me that you’re going to find the killer who killed him? Aren’t you contradicting yourself here?” Jasper interrupted Sirius and asked.

Being interrogated by Jasper, Sirius roared with his face pale from anger, “What the hell do you want? Are you going to take revenge for Zayden?”

“He and I are enemies, not friends. I’d be the last person to help avenge him. In fact, I should be here clapping my hands in joy about the fact that he’s dead. But this incident has also shown me how cruel and heartless you and Conrad are. How do you expect me to let people like you off the hook?”

Jasper spoke softly, “You treat an illness by treating its cause, do you not? You might not know this, but Sylva came to me with a lot of information after Zayden passed.”

Sirius’ eyes widened as he asked aggressively, “Where is he? Tell me! Where is he?”

Jasper was shocked. “You seem very interested to know where he’s gone?”

“No sh*t. He took 600 million in cash from the family’s funds when he left! I...” Sirius spoke without hesitation. Halfway through, he realized how he had said something he should not have.

Looking at Sirius whose face had been drained of all color, Jasper replied calmly, “What a close relationship you have with your brother. Who’d have thought that this so-called family had already fallen apart long ago?”

With that, Jasper then walked to leave and spoke slowly, “Just wait for your subpoenas. Oh, my lawyer has probably already filed for a case, so you should be receiving a notice about the freezing of your assets soon.”

Watching Jasper leave, Dave and his brother Neville could not hold it anymore and ran over to block Jasper’s path. Neville spoke to Jasper with a cold look in his eyes, “What, you’re just going to leave now?”

“Why? Are you in a rush to transfer this park to me?” Jasper asked calmly.

Life at the Top Chapter 617

Neville took a deep breath. He was so infuriated he felt like he was about to explode.

“Stop dodging the question, Jasper. So what if you’re good at talking? Tell me, where’s Sylva Hanks?”

Dave agreed. “Exactly. You want money, don’t you? He’s taken all the cash in the family. Find him and you’ll get the money!”

“What makes you think that he’d tell me where he’s going and when he’s planning to flee?” Jasper frowned slightly. “How can you two be so stupid?”

“You’re going too far, Jasper!”

Neville could no longer control the rage within him and raised his fist to punch Jasper in the face.

Jasper stood expressionless in place and did not move at all.

Julian reached out from beside him and grabbed Neville’s wrist. Before anyone could register what was happening, Julian flicked his wrist and Neville’s sharp cry sounded in the air. His arm was immediately fractured.

A young master like Neville could hardly endure such immense pain. Tears and snot began to flow freely that instant, and he grabbed his arm while hopping around.

“Insolent b*stard.” Jasper shook his head and turned to look at Dave who was gulping with a pale face. “Are you going to block my path as well?”

Dave could neither move nor stay, so he remained rooted in place. Regret filled his heart as he wondered why he rushed out on impulse.

His elders had yet to say anything, so who was a youth like him to act out?

“Come back, Dave.”

Sirius’ words saved Dave from embarrassment, and he quickly ran back to Sirius’ side.

Sirius looked at Jasper with a deep gaze and said, “You’ve won.”

“As expected.”

Jasper glanced at Sirius and spoke, “The Hanks family never had the right to join the game since the very beginning. But since you had decided to join, then it’s only right you pay the price.”

“The Hanks family is out.”

With that, Jasper brought Julian and left Hanks Residence.

After standing in place for a long time, Sirius’ family members all surrounded him and asked him what they should do next. Then, he finally exploded.

“Stop asking me what to do! I don’t even know what to do now!”

“What else can we do? We’re screwed. It’s over for us! It’s over for the Hanks family!”

Silas asked with trepidation, “Should we ask Conrad’s family for help?”

Sirius scoffed. “This is a huge sum of 2.7 billion, not 27 million. There’s no way we can come up with so much money even though we have got a good amount of assets. Conrad has his own issues to deal with already, and I haven't been able to contact him since yesterday. We're discarded pawns now, do you hear me?"

Silas shuddered and hissed. "Then what are we supposed to do now?"

"Let's split up. At least then, we'll still get to stay alive."

Sirius waved his hand dismissively. "You heard Jasper, didn't you? I know all of you have your own hidden reserves. Take that money and run as far as you can. This is it for the Hanks family."

With that, members of the Hanks family felt their hearts shake in their chests. It felt like the end of the world to them.

Life at the Top Chapter 618

The fall of the Hanks family caused an uproar within the entire Southeast Province.

It was abrupt and under the intervention of the Provincial High Court where all courthouses in prefecture-level cities within the province were to investigate all of the Hanks family's assets.

Seeing the red tape that sealed off the Hanks family's properties, people could not help but remember how the Hanks family had blindly attacked JW Real Estates' projects. In the end, JW Real Estates stood strong while the Hanks family had fallen.

Everyone could not help but look in the direction of JW Real Estates. No one dared to look down on this company anymore.

They knew that change was about to hit Southeast Province.

At Nauritus City in the provincial capital, in the study of Monty Manor.

Conrad had his hands under his chin as he listened to his subordinate's report.

"Mr. Monty, that's basically the situation now. All members of the Hanks family have already left Southeast Province last night. They've all gone to other places and some even left the country. It seems like it's truly over for them."

Conrad was unfazed, and there was no sign of mirth nor anger in his eyes.

"What about Sirius?" he asked faintly.

"Unreachable. He's completely dropped off the grid and our people are unable to find any traces of him," the subordinate replied carefully. He was afraid that his inability to trace Sirius would irk his employer.

Conrad separated his hands and pulled out a cigar from his drawer. Cutting it carefully, he spoke with his head still down, "It's not your fault. Sirius had spent decades working in Southeast Province, after all. It's only normal for him to have a few methods to save himself at such a time. If he truly wishes to run, then there's no holding him back."

"Should we continue searching for him?" the subordinate asked, exhaling a breath of relief.

"No need. The Hanks family is over." Conrad sighed unexpectedly.

Not even the man himself remembered when was the last time he sighed, but it must have been years ago. He had lived his life confidently since he made a name for himself at a young age, and nothing nor anyone seemed to be worthy of his sighs from then on.

However, Conrad could not help but feel a wave of exhaustion wash over him now.

“Jasper has dealt me a heavy blow and he’s not giving me the chance to take a breather at all. Should we borrow money to help the Hanks family at such a time? Then we’d surely lose when it comes to Skyward Aluminum’s shares.

“He has already foreseen that we won’t give up Skyward Aluminum just to help the Hanks family, so I have no other choice but to take the hit. I have to say, this hit hurts.”

Conrad slammed his palm on the mahogany table as he spoke, and there was a cold glint shining in his eyes.

“So what if this is the end of the Hanks family? We’ve already wrung them dry of their use to us anyway... How’s the progress with Colin from Southeast Province Mining Co., Ltd going?”

The subordinate’s expression changed slightly and he looked down, not daring to look at Conrad’s expression. He spoke softly, “Mr. Monty, Colin claimed that he had left Nauritus City for a business trip... but our men saw him in the city yesterday.”

“This fellow knows that there’s another party also seeking his mining company’s support, so he’s only agreeing to whoever pays the higher price then?” Conrad spoke coldly.

“Call him again. Tell him that I’m treating him to a meal and ask if he’s free enough to talk. If he can’t come down to the city, then I’ll look for him where he is. He’s just a general manager. We can find someone else to take his place if he’s unwilling to listen. No matter what, I will not let Jasper get his hands on this.”

The subordinate hastily replied, “Yes, I understand.”

“Go, then.”

With a wave of his hand, Conrad had the subordinate leave. Peace returned to the study, and Conrad walked toward the window with his hands behind his back. Staring at the newly sprouted grass downstairs, he murmured, "The year 2001 sure is filled with hardships!"

...

In a hotel, Jasper was currently treating someone to a meal.

It was none other than the general manager of Southeast Province Mining Co., Ltd, Colin Walter.

Even though Jasper was hosting, the main character of the night was Henry instead.

This little brat had indeed brought Jasper a surprise.

"Here, a toast to you, Mr. Law." Colin raised his wine glass and stood, leaning over lightly as he proclaimed courteously.

Henry beamed as he knocked his glass with Colin's. "Don't worry about your daughter and son-in-law's businesses in Harbor City, Mr. Walter. I'll call them in a bit and put my name in. I'll make sure they earn a lot."

Colin brightened up immediately. "Mr. Law, I've lived more than half my life and the most important part of my life is this daughter of mine. I'm not too outstanding myself, so I sent both her and her husband to Harbor City.

"It's not easy for those from the Mainland to make a living in Harbor City, and I'd be very grateful if you could look out for them, Mr. Law."

Henry gave Jasper a weird look when he heard Colin claim that it was hard for those from the Mainland to make a living in Harbor City.

“Don’t worry about it, I already promised that I would help.” Henry grinned and then spoke intently, “But about my friend’s situation? What do you think we should do about it?”

Colin’s expression changed slightly as he looked at Jasper with a smile. With a conflicted look on his face, he replied, “Mr. Law, Mr. Laine, I’m not trying to decline you, but there really isn’t much I can do.

“You should know that even though I’m the mining company’s general manager, it still isn’t my company. It’s the higher-ups who decide what happens and they’ve already told me we will remain impartial to the situation between Mr. Laine and Mr. Monty.

“Both you and Mr. Monty are formidable men, Mr. Laine. I’m merely someone who survives on a salary. I cannot afford to offend anyone.”

Henry’s expression darkened instantly at Colin’s words.

It was a rare chance that he got to show his abilities in front of Jasper, yet this *sshole was about to screw him over.

“Now, this, Mr. Walter, I don’t like hearing. Don’t pull the higher-ups into our conversation now. I’ve promised to help your daughter and her husband, so I will. I have no complaints. But the moment I ask you for a bit of help, you start giving me excuses and whatnot. Are you looking down on my abilities?”

People like Henry mainly came in contact with other big shots. Even in situations where Henry’s existence was just as an insignificant youth, he was still much more formidable than nobodies like Colin.

Colin’s words had also ignited Henry’s spoilt temper at that moment and he exploded.

“Look, there’s no point in saying nonsense now, so let me just get straight to the point and tell you what’s going to happen.

“If you promise to help, then everyone will be happy and I promise that your daughter and her husband will live a sophisticated life worthy of the upper class. You know my family background, so I’m sure you know that I have the power to make that happen.

“But if this really is out of your hands and you can’t help, then that’s alright too. I don’t like forcing people to do things. But I also can’t promise what’s going to happen to your daughter and son-in-law in Harbor City. As I said just now, I have the power to make anything happen.”

With that, Henry then clapped a hand on Colin’s taut shoulder while grinning. “Understood?”

Life at the Top Chapter 619

What were trust fund babies?

Henry was the epitome of one.

‘Work for me, and I will reward you.

‘Yet the moment you’re unable to do your part well, I’ll screw you over.’

While it may sound like a simple piece of logic, it was in truth filled with bossiness and arrogance.

They did not fear revenge. In fact, revenge was welcome. ‘Go ahead. Let’s fight, shall we? Let’s compete to see who has the more formidable parent.’

There was no way Colin could compete with Henry's parents, so after a moment of pondering, he smiled bitterly and replied, "Mr. Law, what else can I do but listen when you've already made it so clear?"

Henry's expression finally brightened as he laughed out loud. "There we go. Here, come, Mr. Walter, let's have a drink. As for tonight, don't be in such a rush to return, okay? Let me make preparations."

Colin immediately raised his glass and replied, "Next time, Mr. Law. I'll treat you next time. The issue now is to make a stand, isn't it? So I've got to go back and make preparations in advance. I'm not the only employee in the office, after all."

Henry was very understanding and nodded. "Sure. I like your attitude toward work, Mr. Walter."

After eating their fill, Jasper and Henry sent Colin off.

"Mr. Laine, Mr. Law, there's no need to send me off any farther. I'll be getting into the car now," Colin told the two.

Jasper smiled and reached out to shake Colin's hand. "There's something else I would like to discuss with you, Mr. Walter."

After the dinner, Colin could tell that Jasper was someone whom Henry held in extremely high regard.

Even if it was not the case, Jasper was not someone he could afford to offend considering the former's prestige in Southeast Province.

Thus, Colin replied courteously, "Do tell, Mr. Laine. I'm listening."

"It's for your sake as well, Mr. Walter," Jasper smiled and spoke, "If I'm right, Conrad must've been contacting you over the past few days, right?"

Colin smiled bitterly.

To be frank, Colin would undoubtedly choose Conrad if it were a choice between him and Jasper. It was Henry's existence and his hold over his only daughter's family that he had to concede.

"Indeed. But don't worry, Mr. Laine. I definitely won't contact him in the future anymore," Colin promised.

Jasper shook his head instead and replied meaningfully, "Actually, what I wanted to say was please feel free to agree to whatever requests Conrad asks of you, Mr. Walter."

"The Monty family is very prominent in Southeast Province and I fear for your position should you end up offending him."

Hearing Jasper, Colin was stunned.

Honestly speaking, if possible, Colin was very much open to the idea of not taking the dangerous role of being the mining company's general manager. Being a simple chief in some other company was a much better option.

However, Jasper's words swarmed Colin with a feeling he had never once felt in more than half his life of working in the system.

"What do you mean, Mr. Laine?" Colin asked dumbfoundedly.

Jasper smiled. "You're a smart man, Mr. Colin. I'm sure you understand what I'm trying to say. Two days, at most. Two more days and all of this will be over. I promise to return the favor once all of this is over, Mr. Walter."

Colin looked at Jasper with a deep gaze. Before this, the reason why he had agreed to stand on Jasper's side on the Skyward Aluminum incident was that he was terrified of Henry's threats.

However, Colin now truly believed that the so-called genius from Southeast Province that appears once every half a century might truly be thrown off his high horse by Jasper.

No matter what, Colin still had to decide. Naturally, he would stand on Jasper's side since the odds were in his favor.

Colin clenched his jaw and spoke, "I know what to do, Mr. Laine."

Jasper smiled as he opened the car door for Colin who thanked him with a bow before getting into the car.

Watching Colin's car vanish into the distance, Henry suddenly sighed.

"What's wrong?" Jasper asked.

"Motherf*cker! Seriously, if not for the fact that it'd obstruct your plans, I really wish he'd say no. The number of people who'd risk disrespecting me now is dwindling. What a bunch of cowards."

Henry did not seem to realize how arrogant and irking his words were.

Then, Henry turned to ask Jasper, "You said that you'll finish it in two days. You mean it?"

Jasper smiled. "Why? Are you interested in this too?"

Henry snickered, saying, "My dad has actually told me so many times before that the most important thing I should learn from you is not how to make money but how to fight people.

"That's more important than making money. My family's rich, I don't even need to work and it'd still be impossible for me to spend all of our money. There's no need for me to make more money, but it's a different story with fighting people. I want to be the number one young master in Harbor City. Do you know how cool that'll make me?"

Jasper hummed noncommittally at Henry's very outstanding ambition. As he walked to his car, he said, "I've already bought 15% of Skyward Aluminum's shares. Conrad has been fighting with me the entire time and he bought another 5%.

"Now that I have the support from Southeast Province Mining Co., Ltd, their 30% will then belong to me. That leaves both 45% in both mine and Conrad's hands."

At that, Jasper opened the door and glanced back at the brightly lit restaurant. Bending his head, he got into the car and continued calmly, "Therefore, the fight for another 5% of shares tomorrow will be the most important battle of all. But Conrad doesn't know that.

"Conrad's lack of knowledge on that will be enough to secure his loss.

"Think about it, we'll be fighting the battle tomorrow with the courage and commitment to end it all, while he's still contacting Colin and receiving a verbal promise from the man. Conrad will think that victory is in his hands.

"In that case, what reason do I have to lose?"

Henry got into the car with him. After hearing Jasper, Henry felt enlightened.

Then, he turned around to look at Jasper weirdly and said, "Just hit me if you ever get pissed at me in the future, okay? I promise I won't fight back. Just don't plot against me, please? I won't be able to sleep normally if you do."

"Your dad's rich, isn't he? Think you could ask him to buy you a bit of intellect?" Jasper commented.

It took Henry a long while before he understood what Jasper meant and he shouted, "What the f*ck, man? Who the hell talks about their brother-in-law like that?!"

...

In the blink of an eye, it was already a new day.

At 9:30 a.m., the country's share market A opened as usual.

Jasper sat before the computer at nine that morning. He would do the work himself today and claim victory in this battle.

Life at the Top Chapter 620

After a week of having its price blown up, Skyward Aluminum had now become a hotspot in share market A.

All investors knew that there were dealers trying to fight for control in this company.

Therefore, both retail investors with idle funds and organizations are trying to do everything they can just to get their hands on even a slight portion.

In truth, these past few days, investors who had shares in Skyward Aluminum had indeed made a lot of money.

Jasper alone had thrown in more than two billion Somer Dollars, while Conrad had thrown in 1.5 billion.

Jasper did not care though, for this was all Gale's money, after all.

That morning, Gale had transferred another 1.5 billion over to assist Jasper.

Jasper was truly impressed by Gale's wealth.

Work was much easier this time compared to the other trades he had done in stock markets before.

All he had to do was buy.

It was not his money anyway, so Jasper immediately bought all available shares the moment the market opened with nothing remaining.

Such a transaction instantly caused the share price to increase.

"Holy sh*t. It's going to rise to the limit in five minutes with how you're buying the shares. How are you planning to buy 5% of the shares?" Henry asked in shock when he saw the scene upon his arrival.

Jasper smiled. "I have my ways."

With that, Jasper then canceled all transactions that had yet to be confirmed backstage.

There was a sudden stunt in the momentum of purchasing.

At that, retail investors who were filing in maddeningly were instantly stunned.

An extremely expensive order had been canceled. Did that mean the share price had reached its maximum?

At the same time, Jasper called Jake.

"You can release the news now."

A few minutes later, the news spread like wildfire among the investors.

[JW Capital and Haddock Mining Group have come to an agreement regarding Skyward Aluminum. They've decided to cancel their plans to merge and acquire Skyward Aluminum.]

There was no need for a formal statement for the investors to feel panicked. They immediately sold all their shares.

Over the past week, Skyward Aluminum had already risen to the limit seven consecutive times and the market had closed every business day with the prices rising to the limit.

Anyone with the slightest sense of stock speculation would know that any single share could have their market price increase by 95% after rising to the limit seven times.

Skyward Aluminum that once had a market price of 30 billion was now approaching a market price of 60 billion. It was almost twice the amount it started with.

It was a miracle.

Yet at the same time, this news had frightened the investors who had calmed down amidst the frenzy. The share price was just too high now.

A pause in an upward trend was followed by none other than a revengeful drop.

As such, investors all began to sell their shares crazily.

Even a few large organizations within the country had sold their shares as well.

Life at the Top Chapter 621

Skyward Aluminum's share price began to fall without stopping until it arrived at the week's first limit down.

It had been no more than three hours since the share price rose to the limit only to fall to the limit down. It was just in time for the morning market to close.

"We'll wait for the afternoon market to open and buy everything there is. I'm going to forcefully raise that price at the limit down until it reaches the upper limit. That should be enough for 5% of shares." Jasper leaned against the chair and smiled at Henry who was gaping in shock.

Henry gave him a thumbs up. "So this is what true power looks like."

...

The unusual movement in the share market had also piqued the interest of Skyward Aluminum's Investing Department that had been watching its company's shares.

"Uh, Mr. Clark? Should we tell Mr. Monty about this?" A trader turned to ask Benjamin as he stared at the share price that had reached the limit down. Sweat was beading on his forehead.

Benjamin had a very weird expression on his face as well. The company's shares had been rising to the limit when the market opened this morning and he naturally believed that it was because JW Capital was trying to buy more shares.

He was about to follow up on it when a sudden piece of news came to light. Then, the share price immediately plummeted.

The K-line for the share price was now in the shape of an upside-down V after reaching the summit only to plunge into a gorge.

“I’ve already called him, but it was the butler who picked up instead of Mr. Monty. He said that Mr. Monty is meeting with an important guest and can’t be disrupted no matter what.” Benjamin ground his teeth together. He could not help but feel like something big was going to happen.”

Pondering over it, there were still two more hours before the market opened in the afternoon, so Benjamin stated, “Watch the market during noon. Don’t do anything even when the market reopens without my instructions. I’m going over to Monty Manor.”

With that, Benjamin rushed to Monty Manor.

At the door to Monty Manor, Benjamin was drenched in sweat as he spoke to the butler, “Please tell Mr. Monty that Benjamin has come to see him. It’s really important.”

The butler frowned and replied distastefully. “What makes you think that Mr. Monty will meet you just because you want to see him? I told you on the phone, didn’t I? Mr. Monty is with a very important guest and cannot be disturbed no matter what.”

Benjamin glanced at his watch and realized that there was still an hour before the market reopened. He presumed that their lunch would be over in another hour anyway, so he had no other choice but to wait at the door.

Time ticked by slowly and Benjamin felt more anxious with each growing minute. The butler, though, looked at him calmly with slight disdain.

Up until two in the afternoon when it was time for the market to reopen, there was still no sign of Conrad. Benjamin was frantic now.

“What are you doing?” the butler shouted at Benjamin who was trying to force his way in. “Does Monty Manor look like a place for you to fool around?”

With that, around half a dozen bodyguards rushed out and stared Benjamin down.

“What the f*ck... I’m the investment manager of Skyward Aluminum. I have some very important news to tell Mr. Monty!” Benjamin was close to tears with how frantic he felt.

The butler scoffed. “I don’t care who you are. All I know is that Mr. Monty has ordered that no one is to disturb him no matter what. Either listen and wait, or I’ll throw you out. Understood?”

As the two spoke outside, sounds of conversation could be heard from inside the room as well.

At the next moment, out walked Conrad and Colin together.

Conrad had a small and satisfied smile on his face.

After personally sending Colin out the door, Conrad reached out to shake the man’s hand. “It’s been a pleasure talking to you today, Mr. Walter. So I presume that what we’ve discussed will be confirmed, then. I’ll have to thank you seriously once all of this is over.”

Colin hurriedly replied before looking at Benjamin weirdly. The latter looked like he was about to explode at any second. Colin smiled, saying, “Of course, of course.”

Seeing how the two were still dilly-dallying, Benjamin could no longer hold it back and directly spoke, “Something has happened, Mr. Monty! The company’s share price started off rising to the limit this morning only to suddenly drop to the limit down because of a false rumor! I suspect that Jasper’s doing this on purpose so he can sweep more of our shares!

“He’s going to end up buying all the shares on the market if we don’t do anything!”

Before Conrad could react, Colin’s expression immediately turned weird.

Life at the Top Chapter 622

“Haha. If you’re busy, Mr. Monty, then I shall leave you to it.”

Guilty, Colin did not dare to stay for too long and hastily told Conrad.

Conrad grabbed Colin’s hand intimately and spoke, “Then I shall trouble you with this, Mr. Walter.”

Colin bid him farewell and got into his car.

From the rearview mirror, Colin watched Benjamin speak to Conrad nervously and sighed.

Today might just be the last day Conrad treats him respectfully.

It would be a miracle if Conrad does not kill him the next time they meet.

In addition to the fear swirling in Colin’s chest, there was an inexplicable sense of pride as well.

Naturally, he knew of the situation that Benjamin just reported.

‘Benjamin’s a skilled man himself and he has precisely caught Jasper’s goal. It was a shame... that Conrad would never expect me to turn against him.

'He probably won't care about Jasper's move, would he?'

Colin suddenly exhaled a long sigh. 'Jasper's terrifying. This was a simple plan, to have me pretend to agree to whatever Conrad requests. I'm essentially brewing a cup of poison and making Conrad drink it willingly.'

Hearing Colin fish, the driver asked curiously, "Why are you sighing, Mr. Walter?"

Colin replied calmly, "Change is coming to the Southeast Province."

...

"So what?"

Conrad heard Benjamin's report in the study and turned on his computer. It had already been half an hour since the afternoon market reopened.

The shares limit down had been opened but the share prices did not plummet. As if someone was trying to control the market and not let the share prices drop.

"Victory is already ours."

Conrad was in a great mood as he thought about his agreement with Colin today and smiled. "We have 45% of the shares at hand, and with the Southeast Province Mining Co., Ltd on our side, Jasper can do whatever he wants and he'll only have 20% of the total shares. What's he going to do then?"

Scoffing, Conrad spoke, "This is merely his last crazed attempt."

Benjamin was stunned and he asked instinctively, "Mr. Monty, so we'll ignore him, then?"

Conrad laughed aloud and spoke, "He wants to buy shares, doesn't he? Then let him. Instead of fighting for it, we'll sell the 5% we bought with high prices over the past few days."

"This 5% of shares had cost me more than a billion unnecessarily. Now we'll make Jasper give me all that money back. I wonder how angry he'd look when he finds out."

Benjamin's eyes shone and he spoke, "I understand, sir."

Watching Benjamin leave in a rush, Conrad realized that he liked this employee of his a lot. Ignoring everything else, this man's sense of responsibility was a very rare trait.

Planning to promote Benjamin, Conrad walked over to the window to stare at the beautiful spring scenery. His emotions had also truly relaxed since all of this started.

...

"That's a lot of transactions."

Henry suddenly shouted at the computer monitor. The man sat in the study with a straw in his mouth as he drank his bottle of coca-cola.

"I saw." Jasper's eyes shone.

"That's a huge business, he's giving you control over the market." Henry gasped.

Without hesitation, Jasper bought everything. Thus controlling the k-line to stay unmoving as it approached limit down.

"I'm more than happy to control it."

Jasper stared into the monitor as if he could see Conrad through it and spoke calmly, "It's him. He wants to earn all that money he paid unnecessarily for these stocks from me."

Henry snickered. He was about to speak when his phone suddenly rang.

Picking it up, Henry conversed with the other end shortly before he waved his phone at Jasper. "It's from Colin. He called and said that Conrad invited him to a two to three-hour lunch."

"As you predicted, Conrad requested that he take a stand on his side. Colin's acted just as you requested and Conrad must've been sold."

The k-line moved around the limit down throughout the entire transacting day and along it tugged the heartstrings of thousands of investors.

Everyone stared at the weirdly moving market and was engulfed in utter turmoil.

Some people could tell that this market was the result a dealer wanted. These people wanted to join, but they did not dare. For the moment the dealer retreated, they would have to take up control next.

However, if they do not enter the market, not earning from a rapid jump in share prices would be as distressing as losing money.

Even organizations with professional teams were confused, let alone retail investors.

Countless professional analysis teams within organizations around the world were wracking their minds trying to analyze and predict what this dealer had in mind.

Amidst everyone's internal conflict, it was currently two-fifty in the afternoon, ten minutes away from when the market would close.

The moment the minute hand hit fifty, the renowned Skyward Aluminum's shares suddenly skyrocketed.

A big upward trendline had pulled Skyward Aluminum's shares from its lowest limit down price straight up.

The line truly resembled a rocket launch.

Countless organizations and retail investors cursed. They wanted to join in but the share prices were rising every second.

The price changed every second and by the time one wanted to buy it, all shares of that specific price were already sold out and the price would rise by another point.

Countless people were so impatient they wanted to break their keyboards, and they regretted their indecisiveness.

Just like that, a huge sum of 2.5 billion entered the market in less than ten minutes. It pushed the market price that was struggling by the limit down for the entire transaction day all the way up to rise to the limit. Locking it there.

In a single day, Skyward Aluminum had undergone a total trade of shares worth over 10 billion. This terrifying amount of transactions had undoubtedly created history in share market A for the year 2001.

Pme could only imagine how editors of financial channels would have to burn the midnight oil working tonight. For all financial news outlets would be reporting this incident tomorrow.

While the mastermind behind it all was sharing a celebratory glass of champagne with Henry.

"I currently have 24% of the shares on hand right now. I've got to thank Conrad for that 5%, though. Coupled with the 30% premium shares from Southeast Province Mining Co., Ltd, I suppose it's time for Skyward Aluminum to change its name.” Jasper chuckled, sipping on a glass of champagne with a relaxed look in his eyes.

This wasn't even a true battle, but man was that f*cking exciting,” Henry exclaimed to Jasper with his eyes shining brightly.

Jasper was in a great mood too. He was about to speak when he suddenly received a call from Gale.

This old man must have been watching the share market as well.

“I may not understand the share market, but I do have the country's best traders and analyst teams. I am an old man, sly child, but your work today has me dazed just from listening to them explain it to me.”

‘Do you know how they described you? They said that your work today would be entered into a series of actual analysis cases taught in countless Schools of Economics. You have shown textbook control of the stock market. Very well done. Good job!’

Life at the Top Chapter 623

“One can only do this provided that one is backed by a strong capital, Old Master Hurlbutt. In short, one should spare no expense in exchange for the greatest share of earnings in the shortest time possible.

“Even though this is a good method, it can't be used often as the price-performance ratio is too low.”

Jasper said rationally, not losing his head just because Gale complimented him.

He needed to prepare Gale mentally lest he thought he was losing money upon finding out that he had merely purchased 25% of Skyward Aluminum's shares with a whopping ten billion.

"Mineral resources are massive gold-swallowing beasts. Skyward Aluminum's mine in the Southeast Province was initially worth 60 billion in exploration value. Even after several years of development, it is still worth about 40 billion. This money is worth spending." Gale laughed.

Jasper grinned but did not proceed with the topic.

He could think of several massive mineral resources overseas off the top of his head. Once those mines were developed, each of them would have an output value worth hundreds of billions, and most importantly, the currency was in US dollars.

However, he could only set the plan aside because first of all, the time was not right yet; second of all, the funds and power he had were not enough for him to develop foreign resources.

Nevertheless, the mines would always be there. As soon as Jasper was competent enough, any mining site he chose to develop could easily surpass the mine that Gale and Conrad treasured so dearly.

"I plan to hold a shareholders meeting. I've submitted the application to the Securities Regulatory Commission this afternoon and an announcement will be made much later. Are you sending anyone over, Old Master Hurlbutt?" Jasper asked.

Gale was in high spirits, saying, "I am not going to make a trip there myself. I put you in charge. It is not that easy to earn my commission, you know? I still need you to run a few errands for me.

"Just do what you need to do. I do care about that young man Conrad Monty. His father Steven Monty used to be my good pal. I will talk to him."

After receiving Gale's promise, Jasper said, "I've been waiting for you to say those words. Well then, wait for my news tomorrow."

That night, the Securities Regulatory Commission issued an announcement on their official website.

JW Investment Company now held more than 25% of Skyward Aluminum's shares, and according to the company's article of association under shareholder rights, an official request in convening a shareholders meeting in Skyward Aluminium Co., Ltd had been sent to the Securities Regulatory Commission and was approved.

Conrad had been notified by the Securities Regulatory Commission even before the announcement was made.

In the face of the inquiries made by the relevant person in charge sent by the Securities Regulatory Commission, Conrad let out a breezy smile and said, "Please do what you need to do in accordance with the company's articles of association. He does hold 24% of Skyward Aluminum's shares, and I have no right to refuse the convening of the shareholders meeting, so be it.

"Since he wants to be humiliated so much, don't blame me for using this opportunity to teach him a lesson."

After hanging up the call, Conrad summoned Benjamin.

"The shareholders meeting will be held tomorrow. I need you to make necessary preparations," Conrad ordered.

Still unaware of the news, Benjamin was slightly stunned and said, "Why is he holding a shareholders meeting when he only holds 25% of shares? Does that even make sense?"

“He’s putting up a deathbed struggle, perhaps. Or maybe he’s just trying to release news into the outside world to tell them that he hasn’t given up yet.” Conrad chuckled, fidgeting with the cigar in his hand.

Benjamin sneered and said, “Does he have nothing better to do?”

“Doesn’t matter anyway. Victory lies in our hands. He can do whatever he wants in front of me but I will never let him slip through my fingers.

“That kid Henry is always with Jasper and that’s a bit tough to deal with.” Conrad found this problem slightly difficult to deal with.

He had no scruples about trampling Jasper to death, but when it came to Henry who had the Laws as his backing, he could not help being cautious when taking action against Jasper.

The Laws could not be more terrifying, and the higher one’s ranking was, the greater the effects one would experience.

Life at the Top Chapter 624

Conrad knew he could not offend this unruly young master in public.

After thinking about it, Conrad picked up his phone and made a call to Harbor City.

“Interested to come to Nauritus City to have some fun, Mr. Langdon? The flight’s tonight. You’re in for a great show tomorrow.

“Yeah, I just want to show you how I’ll end Jasper and Henry. Jasper is easy to deal with, but Henry...

“Okay, I’ll leave Henry to you, then. I’ll book your flight ticket and pick you up at the airport.”

...

With the outside world following this news, Skyward Aluminum’s shareholders meeting began on time at eight o’clock the next morning.

Downstairs of Skyward Aluminum, Jasper met up with the Securities Regulatory Commission’s retail representative.

“We meet again, Mr. Laine.”

This time around, the representative was a man called Dwayne Martin. He was from the Securities Regulatory Commission’s middle management, representing the Securities Regulatory Commission to oversee the shareholders meeting and to represent the retail investors.

Listed companies were required to accept the Securities Regulatory Commission’s supervision when it involved events that could bring major changes to the company.

Since this was a listed company, there were bound to be retail investors who held the company’s shares. The law stipulated that the right to exercise shareholder rights be given to these retail investors, but since it was impossible for a company to gather all its retail investors, a retail representative would be chosen instead.

As a representative, Dwayne was also here to protect the interests of a group of retail investors.

Jasper shook hands with Dwayne with a smile, saying, “How are you, Mr. Martin? I see you’re here to handle this in person today?”

Dwayne let out a wry smile. “Share prices have fluctuated greatly these days because of you. Yesterday, there was a record-breaking 60 billion direct trading volume and even the higher-ups were alerted. We even worked overtime till late last night just to investigate this.”

“Haha, this was done unintentionally. Please don’t come to me for your overtime pay, Mr. Martin,” Jasper joked.

Jasper would not hesitate to build good relationships with those who held true power and authority because he would never know when he might need their help.

After letting out a chuckle, Jasper and the rest walked into the company’s private elevator. Dwayne spoke under his breath, “Mr. Laine, it’s best if you lie low this time. After all, the share market is really volatile right now and many people are keeping an eye on this news. This won’t be easy for the higher-ups to handle.”

“Rest assured Mr. Martin. Everything will be carried out according to the rules and regulations. I won’t do things rashly.”

At the sight of Jasper’s indifference, Dwayne was a little puzzled.

If this kid knew better than to do things rashly, he would not have caused such a huge problem, and they would not have to deal with this massive headache either.

What was more, in Dwayne’s opinion, Jasper merely owned 24% of the shares. He simply had no ability to contend with Conrad in the shareholders meeting.

Why was he holding the shareholders meeting, then? He would only be tormenting himself, no?

Shaking his head, Dwayne then said with a sigh, “Mr. Laine, our meeting today is going to be a tough battle to fight. Have you made any preparations?”

Jasper could tell that Dwayne was sounding him out and grinned, saying, "Preparations? Well, I woke up early this morning and even changed into a new set of clothes before coming here. Does that count?"

Dwayne glanced at Jasper. This kid's lips were clearly sealed. Not bothered to ask any more questions, Dwayne simply clammed up and said no more.

They were each occupied with their own thoughts. The elevator doors opened and closed several times. A moment later, the meeting on the 16th floor was ready to begin.

Life at the Top Chapter 625

Conrad and Colin were already in the conference room. After Jasper led Henry, Julian, Dwayne, and several of his employees into the room, the main door was closed.

The shareholders meeting had officially begun.

Countless forces and individuals in Southeast Province stared at the main door of the conference room.

In a sense, this was Jasper and Dawson, both emerging bigwigs, challenging the veterans of Southeast Province, the Monty family.

The result of this battle could potentially affect the trend of the entire upper class circle in Southeast Province.

In other parts of the country, the hot money market institutions involved in the mineral industry and even the real estate industry had their eyes fixed on this event today.

The shareholders meeting had a much wider scope of influence than anyone would have imagined.

In the conference room, Jasper and the group's arrival caught everyone's attention immediately.

After exchanging glances with Colin, they both tore their gazes away. Jasper was about to speak to Henry when he heard a fit of laughter.

Conrad walked toward them with open arms.

Obviously, he was here to greet Dwayne, not Jasper.

Conrad and Dwayne seemed really close.

"It's been half a year since we last met, Dwayne. I remember you have rheumatoid arthritis, are your legs better now?"

Jasper mulled over Conrad's deliberate show of friendliness.

Dwayne seemed a little awkward, but he still hugged Conrad lightly and said in a polite tone, "Thanks for your concern, Mr. Monty. My legs are much better now."

"Much better means that they haven't completely healed, then." Conrad seemed to be unaware of how awkward Dwayne looked. He finished his sentence with a smile and turned around to say to Benjamin, "Remind me to send Dwayne a jar of my old medicinal wine after this. That's the best cure for rheumatism. Even my father is drinking it."

Benjamin said delightfully, "Alright, Mr. Monty. I'll make sure to remember that."

Dwayne waved his hands immediately and said, "You're too kind, Mr. Monty. Should we get straight to business first?"

“Straight to business?” Conrad gave Jasper a meaningful look and said, “Of course, we should get straight to business.”

As soon as Conrad said those words, Benjamin said sarcastically, “I wonder what’s going through some people’s heads sometimes. Just because he got lucky and earned some money, he thinks he has become the richest man in the country? He should probably look at himself in the mirror and see who he really is.

“Just because he has a bit of stinking money, he thinks he can lay his fingers on everything? Be careful, because you might not even know how you got killed.”

Benjamin looked at Jasper as he said those words, sneering. “I’m talking about you, Jasper Laine. I really wonder what’s going on inside that head of yours. Why are you even holding this shareholders meeting? Just so you can get humiliated?”

“Does that have anything to do with you?” Jasper asked.

Benjamin said in disdain, “It has nothing to do with me, of course. Mr. Monty is a really understanding man. Since you’re so eager to be humiliated, I will very reluctantly work with him to give you a proper humiliation then.

“You’re holding a shareholders meeting just because you bought some shares on the share market? How hilarious! The shares you hold are only enough for you to do inconsequential things like that.

“Are you ashamed and angry because you’ve failed to acquire Skyward Aluminum after announcing it? Haha.”

Henry was most annoyed when someone behaved excessively complacent in front of him.

He cast sidelong glances at him immediately.

“Do you hear a dog barking? F*ck, I think only the boss has the right to speak here, don’t you think? You’re just a f*cking employee. Who do you think you are?”

“You!” Although Benjamin was furious, he still panicked when he caught sight of Henry’s sinister expression that seemed to be waiting for him to go berserk.

As soon as he panicked, Henry cut him off and spoke first.

“You what? I’ll drag you to a cesspit and throw you in if you keep looking at me with those smug eyes. Watch me!”

Henry’s words left more than a dozen people in the conference room dumbfounded.

Life at the Top Chapter 626

Those who could attend the shareholders meeting were either super big bosses like Jasper and Conrad, senior executives like Benjamin, or someone outside of the system like Dwayne.

To put it bluntly, they were all people who had inner qualities and class.

If they must compare, Henry had the highest status of them all.

The profanities that came out of his mouth were not only awkward and hilarious, but they also made one imagine things.

Most people subconsciously imagined Henry commanding a group of men to drag a middle-aged man to a cesspit...

Benjamin's eyes turned crimson with anger, but what Conrad said next forced him to stifle his anger abruptly.

"That's enough. Shall we begin now, Mr. Martin?"

Conrad darted Benjamin a cold glance as he spoke. The look in his eyes was obvious.

Conrad had hinted at Benjamin earlier to provoke Jasper, but not only did he fail to accomplish his task, but he was also cursed and berated by Henry.

Even though Benjamin was the one who got berated, everyone knew that Benjamin was his subordinate, so he was also humiliated by extension. Naturally, Conrad was unhappy about it.

Dwayne cleared his throat and walked to the head of the table before announcing loudly, “Today, Jasper Laine, the shareholder representing JW Investment Company, will be the initiator in Skyward Aluminum’s shareholders meeting.

“Official participants include Mr. Jasper Laine, chairman of JW Investment Company; Mr. Conrad Monty, chairman of Skyward Aluminium Co., Ltd; Mr. Colin Walter, general manager of Southeast Province Mining Co., Ltd.

“And myself, Dwayne Martin, director of the Market Management Office of the Securities Regulatory Commission.

“Next, as the retail investors’ representative and the supervisor of the Securities Regulatory Commission, I will preside over this shareholders meeting along with a consultant who will record the meeting. We will be fully present in this shareholders’ meeting.

“If there is any objection regarding my position as a notary, please raise it immediately; if there is no objection, then I announce that the shareholders’ meeting will officially begin.”

As Dwayne said those words, he paused for a moment to wait for anyone who might want to raise objections regarding his identity. Though, of course, no one would.

After a moment’s pause in the quiet venue, Dwayne motioned to the consultant who had video equipment with him to begin setting up in order to proceed with the audio and video recording later.

He then explained, “To ensure the fairness and legality of this shareholders meeting, we will record the entire meeting to be reviewed by the Securities Regulatory Commission.”

When everything had been set up, Dwayne turned to look at Jasper who sat at the far end near the door. It was because he held the lowest shareholding ratio. Dwayne said, “Since Mr. Laine was the one who proposed to hold this shareholders meeting, we ask you to please elaborate on your need for holding this shareholders meeting.”

Henry’s eyes gleamed when he heard those words.

At this moment, everyone had doubts about Jasper’s ability and believed that no motions he made would be passed at the shareholders meeting, hence everyone was just waiting to watch a good show and see Jasper make a fool of himself.

Henry was different. He knew that his future brother-in-law held the real trump card, and based on his understanding of Jasper’s character, he would surely not let Benjamin off the hook after how he had humiliated him earlier.

It was again time for Jasper to show them his true ability!

‘Spotlight, please! I need a spotlight over here! Point it at Mr. Jasper Laine. I’m ready to see the VIP Jasper showcase his true ability!’

In the midst of Conrad and the rest’s sneers, Henry was beyond excited for what was going to happen next.

Sitting at the very far end, Jasper chuckled and said his first words.

“I move that certain unqualified company senior executives be removed. Take, for example, Benjamin Clark, the current general manager of the investment department, and I ask that he be investigated for corruption.”

As soon as he said those words, Conrad and Benjamin sneered while looking at Jasper as if he was a fool.

“Secondly, I move for a reorganization in the board of directors of Skyward Aluminum, and that the current chairman, Conrad Monty, be removed.”

Swoosh!

The audience was in an uproar as soon as he said those words.

He had thrown a bomb during the opening remark itself!

Life at the Top Chapter 627

Henry was so thrilled that even his brows were knitted together.

It was as if he was the talented one.

At the same time, Henry observed the gap between him and Jasper.

When he showed off his powers, the most he would do was beat the other party up and destroy him physically.

Jasper's attack, on the other hand, could cause devastating psychological blows to a person.

At the thought of this, Henry turned to look at Conrad with great excitement. Now that Jasper had placed the bait, anyone who so recklessly came forward to attack him would be crushed to pieces by this mega show-off.

Upon hearing Jasper's first motion, Conrad responded with mockery and disdain, thinking that Jasper was simply playing to the gallery.

Even though he was already mentally prepared to hear the second motion...

Conrad still flew into a rage considering how Jasper was sitting in his company's conference room and asking for the board of directors to be reorganized as well as for him to be removed from the position of chairman in front of him!

“Have you gone insane or am I hallucinating, Jasper Laine?!”

Conrad glanced at Jasper with a cold gaze before bursting out into laughter.

“You know what? I admire you a lot, really. You started from the bottom and accumulated so many businesses in such a short period of time. That’s really impressive.”

Conrad, who used a lofty tone to commend Jasper, suddenly switched the conversation around. “But you’re too arrogant, and it just so happens that arrogance will only bring you destruction in our society today.

“You’re sitting in my company in my conference room and asking me to be removed?”

“You know that your motion cannot be passed yet you still insist on doing it. That alone makes you so childish, don’t you think?”

Conrad knocked on the desk and then pointed at the luxury decor around the conference room, saying at the top of his voice, “I, Conrad Monty, began working in my family’s business as soon as I graduated from university. Up until today, I’ve taken firm and steady steps, keeping my feet on the ground.

“Everyone praises me, calling me a rare genius that only appears once every half a century, but I never took them seriously. I firmly believe that there is always someone better than us, so I’ve always remained humble and prudent.

“What about you?”

“You’re acting all haughty and so full of yourself just because you’ve gained a bit of profit, and that’s what sets us apart.”

With a faint smile on his face, Conrad fixed his gaze on Jasper and said, “You probably haven’t experienced any setbacks yet, but remember this day because you’ll pay a hefty price for your actions!”

Benjamin looked at Conrad in awe as soon as he was done speaking.

This was what real humiliation should look like.

There were no profanities involved, yet it was more than enough to humiliate anyone who still had the last bit of dignity in them. It made them eager to dig a hole in the ground and jump into it.

However, just as Benjamin was about to say words of flattery to Conrad, a deep and powerful voice sounded from the other end of the conference table.

“Idiot.”

It was only one word. It was short yet full of power.

The conference room was engulfed in silence as everyone turned to look at Henry.

Henry was probably getting uncomfortable from sitting down, so he simply leaned back on the chair, clasped his hands together, and cushioned them behind his head. He crossed his legs and rested them on the conference table.

He even shook his feet from time to time. His polished shiny leather shoes glinted in the light, and his haughty appearance looked extremely unpleasant to the eye.

When Henry noticed the crowd looking over, his mouth twitched as he cursed, “What are you looking at? Have you never seen a handsome man before? You’d better turn those eyeballs away. It sickens me to get stared at by all of you.”

Boom!

Life at the Top Chapter 628

Conrad smacked the table hard and roared, “Don’t be so full of yourself, Henry Law! Do you think you can disrespect us just because your father is rich?”

“Hehe...”

Henry removed his feet from the conference table and stared at Conrad before saying, “Anyone else is qualified to say those words but not you, you old braggart. Got it?”

“Had it not been for your rich father, would you even have stood a chance to be here today? You’re just a f*cking idiot.”

“Darn it. We’re both trust fund babies with hard-working dads, so don’t pretend like you’re some sort of VIP in front of me!”

As he spoke, Henry grinned at the sullen and livid Conrad, adding, “Oh that’s right, you forgot something. I not only have a hard-working father, but also an awesome grandfather. Your father is the only one you can fall back on, so stop boasting in front of me or I’ll smack you to death.”

Conrad was losing his mind.

He merely said one thing about Henry in a fit of pique earlier, but Henry shot back like rapid fire and said at least seven to eight things about him.

Moreover, there was no room for him to refute.

Truth be told, he had indeed relied on his family’s business to get to where he was today. Had he not been a Monty and had he not been lucky enough to be born in a well-off family, he probably would not have achieved what he had achieved today.

Conrad gritted his teeth, and with a trace of sanity left in him, he said with a sneer, "Just because you have a stronger backing than me, you think you can disregard me as a human? Fine, I'll find someone who's on par with you and see how you can handle that."

As he said those words, Conrad got up and walked toward the conference room's lounge. He opened the door and said, "It's your turn now, Mr. Langdon."

Having said those words, Mitch Langdon walked out of the lounge with a smile while everyone's attention was on him. He first glared bitterly at Jasper and then looked at Henry while smirking. "Hey, Henry. Surprised to see me?"

Henry was surprised indeed. "F*ck me. No wonder Conrad is so full of himself. It's because you're here to back him up, huh?"

As Henry said those words, he chuckled and continued, "What's wrong? The slap you received in Harbor City wasn't painful enough? Do you want me to do it myself?"

Mitch's expression changed abruptly.

He thought his presence would leave him shocked and stunned, but little did he know, both Jasper and Henry were completely unstirred.

The words that Henry said felt like a knife twisting in his wounds.

It had been absolutely humiliating for him to receive a slap in the face by his fiancée at the celebrity cocktail party in Harbor City. For a fine young master like Mitch, getting humiliated in public was worse than having his life taken.

All the old and recent grudges swept over Mitch, and he said coldly, "Henry, keep being so arrogant and someone will claim your life one day."

Henry replied with a sneer, "Well, I'm already eager to die. Do you want to claim my life?"

"..." Mitch was livid, saying, "Calm down. It'll happen one day."

After Mitch spoke, he gave Henry no chance to rebuke and said to Conrad, "What are you doing, Conrad? This is your company, how could you allow outsiders to make irresponsible remarks like that in the shareholders meeting?"

Conrad had calmed down tremendously by now. He took a deep breath and replied, "That's right. We're in a shareholders meeting. Let's not talk about things unrelated to the motions."

Upon hearing his reply, Dwayne, who had long felt as though he was sitting on pins and needles, breathed a huge sigh of relief.

To be honest, he felt as though two gods were fighting each other, and he was afraid that they would take their anger out on him.

At this moment, he quickly said, "Back to the meeting. Mr. Laine, do you want us to vote on both of your motions?"

"Yes."

Jasper did some stretches. He seemed as though he had just come back to his senses and became aware of the things he needed to do.

"Hurry up, I'm in a rush to go home for lunch!"

Life at the Top Chapter 629

As soon as he said those words, everyone's faces turned dark and somber.

Conrad felt like the fire within him had been ignited. Even though he managed to keep a lid on it, it was at the brink of exploding at any time.

"How ignorant can you get?!" Conrad said with a sneer.

Henry was full of smiles as he was pleased to see Conrad and Mitch infuriated yet were unable to vent out their frustrations. They looked as if they had eaten a fly.

After clearing his throat, Dwayne turned to Jasper. He was unsure what Jasper had up his sleeve, so he asked, "Mr. Laine, are you sure you want to make those two motions you mentioned earlier?"

"I'm sure." Jasper nodded, giving Dwayne his affirmation.

Dwayne sighed. Seeing how Jasper was determined to embarrass himself, he made no further attempts to stop him and said, "Now that Mr. Laine, holding 24% of the shares, has made the motions, we will begin voting on the first motion."

"I object."

Conrad expressed his opinion at almost the same time Dwayne finished his sentence.

Dwayne cleared his throat and said, "Mr. Monty, holding 40% of the shares, objects. I abstain from voting on behalf of the 6% shares held by all retail investors."

As Dwayne said those words, he turned to look at Colin Walter who had yet to say a word so far. After thinking about it, Dwayne thought it was pointless for him to prompt the other man and announced straight away, "Because the majority voted against the first motion, I announce that Mr. Laine's first motion is invalid—"

"Hold on, Mr. Martin. Mr. Walter has not spoken yet. Isn't this against the standard operating procedure?" Jasper said calmly.

Dwayne was taken aback for a moment and gazed at Jasper with a look of dissatisfaction.

In his opinion, Jasper was too hard-headed that he had even failed to recognize his good intentions.

He was helping him out of the embarrassing situation lest he felt humiliated by the absolute majority. What was wrong with this guy?

"Haha, Mr. Martin, if he wants Colin to give his vote, then so be it. We still need to go with the standard operating procedure no matter what." Conrad burst out laughing.

As he spoke, he slowly took off the gold-rimmed glasses resting on the bridge of his nose, slowly wiping the lenses with a glass cleaning cloth.

"Jasper, oh Jasper. You amaze me more and more. Does it feel that good to be humiliated in public? If that's really what you want, then hey, move your face closer. Let me swing my arm and give you a good slap across the face."

"I agree."

The two unexpected words left Conrad's hands frozen in the air. Thinking that he was probably having auditory hallucinations, his head shot up abruptly. He turned his incredulous and furious gaze to Colin.

Colin, however, was seen staring fixedly at the conference table without blinking. He did not meet Conrad's eyes at all.

He looked so focused as though there was a rare treasure on the conference table.

Conrad was not the only one who was dumbstruck. Both Dwayne and Mitch looked as though they were looking at an alien.

Everyone's heart was pounding frantically.

At this moment, Colin Walter, a man no one had paid any attention to since the beginning, seemed to have turned into the center of attention.

Henry looked at the scene before his eyes, itching to open up a bottle of fine wine to sip on while he admired the grand scene before his eyes. This was so thrilling to watch.

Even movies would not play out such plot reversals.

"What did you say, Colin Walter?" Conrad asked slowly, pausing after every word. His tone was cold and stern as if he was giving out the sternest warning ever.

Life at the Top Chapter 630

Colin wore a stiff expression, and his gaze remained fixed on the conference table. He did not look up as he was too afraid to meet anyone's eyes.

Under tremendous pressure, huge beads of sweat were seeping out of Colin's forehead at a speed visible to the naked eye. His throat moved and his lips quivered. Though slow, he remained firm as he said, "I said I agree with the motion Mr. Laine made."

Boom!

Conrad smacked the conference table, no longer able to hold back the fury that tore through his heart. Amidst the thunderous boom, the frame of his expensive gold-rimmed glasses twisted and the lenses shattered in his hand. It tore the flesh of his hand, covering it in blood. The entire time, Conrad was unblinking.

"Do you have a death wish, Colin Walter?"

Conrad was so agitated that his voice changed. The sharp hiss made his voice sound particularly grating to the ears and especially terrifying.

Conrad stared fixedly at Colin, his gaze almost turning into two blades that threatened to slice Colin alive.

"Well, aren't you really powerful?" Henry said sarcastically while leaning back in the office chair, looking at Conrad with a fascinated gaze as if he was staring at a monkey performing a show.

"We're having a meeting, what's with the rotten behavior? If you interrupt the meeting, then I will have no choice but to step in and take action.

"He has said it twice that he agrees with the motion. Do you not understand human language?"

Mitch stared at Henry with a sullen expression and sulked. "Can you shut up, Henry? What does this meeting have anything to do with you?"

"You want me to shut up?"

"Who the f*ck do you think you are?"

“Believe it or not, if I can bash all your teeth out in Harbor City, I can bash you up in the Mainland to the point where you can’t even find your teeth.”

Mitch was in a towering rage. He stood up and roared, “Don’t push it too far, Henry Law!”

“I enjoy bullying you, what are you going to do about that? Do you want to fight me one on one or do you want to call your parents? Why don’t we both call our fathers, or maybe go straight to our grandfathers?”

Henry stood up, looking sideways at Mitch while sneering.

Mitch’s breathing was getting labored, and his eyes were bloodshot. Clearly, his rage had gone through the roof.

Seeing how things were getting out of hand, Dwayne regretted not turning down the offer to preside over this meeting. His wrong move resulted in him getting sandwiched between two big shots and feeling the effects of their wrath.

Afraid that the situation would get out of hand, he said cautiously, “Should we continue with the meeting, gentlemen? If you have anything to say, say it after the meeting, okay?”

“Who do you think you are? Are you even qualified to speak? F*ck. Jasper has clearly bribed Colin, how the f*ck is this meeting supposed to go on?”

Mitch, who was in a towering rage, could not care less about his image anymore and turned around to spit curses at Dwayne.

Dwayne was livid. His expression then turned cold as he cast a chilly glance at Mitch, saying sternly, “The meeting still needs to go on no matter what. If you’re unhappy about this, Mr. Langdon, then feel free to report this afterward to the Securities Regulatory Commission so they can investigate it.”

Having said that, Dwayne announced straight away, “The first motion put forward by Mr. Laine of JW Investment Company is to dismiss certain unqualified company senior executives such as Mr. Benjamin Clark, the current general manager of the Investment Department, and investigate him for corruption.

“Those holding 54% of shares are in favor of the motion, 40% objected, and 6% abstained from voting. I declare that the motion is officially passed. This will be noted down in the meeting minutes. In the name of the shareholders meeting, this motion will be carried out with immediate effect.”

As Dwayne said those words, he turned around and looked coldly at Benjamin who was still in a daze, saying, “Mr. Benjamin, you’ve been voted out by the shareholders. Please leave the conference room and await further investigation.”

Life at the Top Chapter 631

Benjamin was dumbstruck.

Everything still felt so unreal. Perhaps he had not even woken up from his bed this morning. Was he still dreaming?

Why had Colin suddenly switched teams? Benjamin was even dismissed from his job and was going to be investigated?

Benjamin's heart was thumping wildly as he subconsciously looked at Jasper. What he saw was the same calm and unruffled Jasper from the moment he first walked through the door. He looked breezy and indifferent regardless of the mockery and ridicule thrown at his face. There was a layer of calm on his face that was impossible to comprehend.

The mysterious and calmness he exuded was nothing at first, though when Benjamin realized that Jasper had so stealthily got the entire situation within his grasp, everything suddenly seemed so terrifying.

The things he and Mr. Monty did and said earlier must have seemed like a joke to Jasper, right?

At the thought of this, the completely disheartened Benjamin looked to his only backer for help, hoping that Conrad could speak up for him.

Conrad, however, was livid at the moment. He looked so gloomy it was as if a thunderstorm was approaching. How could he possibly be in the mood to help him?

After casting several glances, Benjamin sighed hard and said dejectedly, "I understand."

As Benjamin said those words, he stood up and walked out of the conference room.

His departure did not catch anyone's attention.

From the very start, Benjamin had been an insignificant character sitting on this conference table. No one cared about him.

The things Mitch said earlier had offended Dwayne, so he was not going to be so cautious anymore.

Dwayne was a mid-level senior executive in the Securities Regulatory Commission. He had connections of his own and wielded authority, so even powerful bosses of listed companies were exceedingly polite to him.

Dwayne did not want to offend Mitch, the young master of Harbor City, but that did not mean he would put up with anything.

He enforced the law impartially so no one could find fault with him. Dwayne refused to believe that the Langdons would come all the way to the Mainland to pick on him because of this.

"If that's the case, let's begin voting on the second motion—"

Dwayne was halfway through his sentence when Conrad cut him off. "Hold on."

Dwayne looked at Conrad. Although he was upset with Mitch, he still needed to show Conrad some respect.

Conrad looked at Jasper and took a deep breath, saying, "You've planned all this from the start, haven't you? Colin has already picked your side, right?"

Jasper chuckled and said, "Don't say that. The voting system of this shareholders meeting is open and fair. The entire process is recorded and filmed. The Securities Regulatory Commission will review this too. How could we have possibly colluded?

“This is for the good of the company, everyone.”

Conrad sneered. “Since you already hold the winning card, Jasper, then stop pretending. That will only make me despise you more.”

As he said those words, Conrad turned to look at Colin and said calmly, “Mr. Walter, I don’t know what Jasper offered you or what he used to threaten you, but you must make careful considerations when voting for the next motion.”

“If you make the wrong choice, someone will pay the price.”

Jasper said calmly, “Mr. Monty, there are many people watching and listening. Do you think it is right for you, as the chairman, to threaten your shareholders so overtly?”

Conrad sneered, “Are you afraid?”

“Afraid?” Jasper let out a fascinated smile and then looked at Dwayne before saying, “Mr. Martin, let’s begin voting.”

Dwayne nodded. This time, everyone in the conference room, himself included, no longer thought that Jasper was only playing to the gallery.

Even if Jasper was playing to the gallery, they were the ones who were pulled onto the stage in the end, whereas Jasper was the bigwig sitting in the audience watching the show.

Dwayne let out a sigh. From the bottom of his heart, he admired the means and strategies that Jasper had adopted.

He had managed to deceive everybody with his strategies and pulled the rug out from under Conrad's feet. This was simply... ingenious!

"If that's the case, let's begin voting on Mr. Laine's second motion on reorganizing the board of directors and removing Mr. Conrad from his position as the chairman. The voting will begin now."

"I object!" Conrad stared fixedly at Colin, gritting his teeth.

"I represent the retail investors holding 6% of the shares to abstain from voting."

Dwayne looked at Colin. At this moment, he felt slightly anxious as well, and his palms were drenched in sweat unknowingly.

He knew that Colin's answer would determine the direction of the shareholders meeting. He could also tell the result of this match between Jasper and Conrad, the genius from the Southeast Province that only appeared once every half a century.

Life at the Top Chapter 632

There were too many people paying attention to this news.

It had also brought a huge impact.

Even Dwayne, someone who was used to being part of huge occasions like this, found himself with a parched throat and a pounding heart.

Colin raised his head stiffly, looking at Conrad for the first time.

His gaze was an exceedingly complicated one.

He opened his mouth with much difficulty and said in a slow yet determined tone, "I... agree."

When those two words left his lips, there was only silence. No one spoke, and everyone was holding their breaths.

Then, for some reason, everyone sighed in unison.

The direction of the company had been decided.

Ultimately, victory or defeat had been determined.

Jasper won.

Conrad, a genius that only appeared once every half a century, lost.

He lost thoroughly and completely.

The audience looked warily at both parties.

Conrad slumped on the chair as though his soul had left his body. There was a slightly dull and bleary look on his face. His palms were still bleeding, and this made him look both wretched and sinister.

As for Jasper, he remained calm and breezy, looking as though he had just accomplished an insignificant task. There was a hint of weariness amidst the calmness on his face, like nothing about this meeting could excite him.

Mitch was livid. He slowly turned around and gave Conrad a death stare, saying, "This is the fun you wanted me to watch? It's really fun indeed—simply hilarious!"

Conrad trembled, finally coming back to his senses. He stood up abruptly.

Mitch was sitting next to him, and the sudden movement startled him. He looked at Conrad and was about to yell at him when he was taken aback by the man's sinister and ghastly expression.

Mitch had never seen anything like it. This was an expression that no ordinary people should have.

“Jasper!”

Conrad roared in an ear-piercing voice. His roar sounded like the howling of a mad beast.

“You want to fight it out with me, huh? Don't forget that I still hold 40% of the shares. So what if you kick me out of the board of directors? Worst comes to worst, I'll use the Monty family's aluminum mine that's worth tens of billions in assets to fight you to the end!”

The Monty family had plenty of assets. Skyward Aluminum might be one of their core industries, but it was one of the many and certainly not everything. It was not a crucial industry that they could not give up either.

“I've never suffered defeat but I didn't think I would win all the time either. Even so, I certainly won't lose to you! Who do you think you are?! You're just a piece of rubbish that crawled up from the bottom-most layer. You don't deserve to win!

“You'd better listen up. Yes, you may have won, but I've not lost yet. I would rather destroy this company that's worth tens of billions than let you have it!”

As Conrad roared like he had gone insane, Jasper interlocked his fingers and propped up his chin. He waited in silence for Conrad to finish.

After that, he said slowly, “Sure.”

Sure?!

Jasper agreed to it?

He agreed to Conrad destroying this company that was worth tens of billions?

Why would Jasper even bother spending tens of billions then?

Everyone was struck dumb by what Jasper said.

Everyone but Young Master Law. He felt a sense of superiority, as though everyone was drunk and he alone was sober. He was even itching to laugh out loud.

This was such a great show to watch!

Henry was well aware of how capable Jasper was and knew the way he handled things better than anyone. To him, earning money was not at all a difficult task. Jasper would only need to ask and the Laws, or even Gale alone, could easily sponsor him with tens of billions at any time!

Moreover, Jasper had ways to make the same amount of money in the shortest time possible. Could Conrad do the same?

Life at the Top Chapter 633

07/06/2021 by Novel Heart

When Jasper said sure, he turned the already tense atmosphere in the conference room strange and tumultuous.

Everyone was puzzled, not knowing what Jasper was thinking or plotting at.

“This aluminum mine in Southeast Province that belongs to Skyward Aluminum was discovered five years ago. If I’m not mistaken, the exploration team at the time was sent by the provincial mining company.

“Logically speaking, the aluminum mine should have belonged to the provincial mining company, but how did it end up as the Monty family’s property? Anyone can smell that something’s fishy about it, right?”

Jasper leaned back on the chair and said indifferently.

Colin’s expression changed as soon as Jasper said those words.

In fact, as the general manager of Southeast Province Mining Company, he was more than aware of this massive problem.

Even to the point where he had received countless benefits from the Monty family for this.

This was an open secret to many.

The person behind this was Conrad, who at the time was just beginning to rise to power in the family.

It was precisely because of this that Conrad’s plans were divulged to Southeast Province’s upper class circles.

What was Jasper’s purpose in revealing the truth now?

Was he trying to settle old scores?

If that was the case, then Colin would most probably be the first man to be thrown out as a scapegoat.

Conrad stared coldly at Jasper and said, “I don’t know what you’re talking about.”

“It doesn’t matter if you don’t. We’ll find the original materials as long as someone is willing to dig them out.” Jasper shrugged.

“By the way, most of the previous exploration team members now work for Haddock Mining Group.”

At this point, Jasper chuckled. Hidden behind his gentle smile were his actual schemes.

“You think destroying the company will be the greatest threat to me? Are you trying to destroy indiscriminately?”

“What you didn’t expect, however, is that I never intended to take this aluminum mine that you treasure so much. Gale loves it, though. I’m sure you know who Haddock Mining Group’s boss is, right?”

Jasper grinned at Conrad whose complexion had changed abruptly and said, “Destroy it, then! Why don’t you destroy it right now? When the time comes, you don’t have to worry whether I will feel great about this or not because Gale certainly won’t make the Monty family feel great about it.”

Conrad was so furious that his lungs nearly blew up. He roared at Jasper, “Gale?! So after everything you’ve done, they were just orders from Gale?! Gale has always wanted to seize Southeast Province’s mining industry. You’re bringing disaster upon yourself!”

“You must have hit your head, huh, Conrad?” Jasper said flatly.

“I have nothing to do with whether Gale wants to seize Southeast Province’s mining industry or not. This isn’t the industry where I make my living from. Do you think I would work with Gale had you not provoked me first?”

“It’s not so bad, though. At least I made a lot of money. He can take this mine if he wants to. I don’t need it anyway.”

Conrad sat down dejectedly, saying no more.

No one knew what Conrad was thinking about at this moment.

Dwayne waited for a very long time and realized that Conrad had nothing else to add. He forced himself to stand up and said, "We'll proceed with the voting, then.

"The voting result is out. I hereby announce that the second motion initiated by Mr. Jasper Laine, who's representing JW Investment Company, to reorganize Skyward Aluminum's board of directors and remove Mr. Conrad as chairman is passed!"

Having said that, Dwayne looked at Conrad and then at Jasper before letting out a wry smile. "Are there any other motions?"

His question was met with silence.

After breathing a deep sigh of relief, Dwayne announced, "All motions have been submitted, taken into deliberation, as well as decided in the shareholders meeting. I hereby announce that the Skyward Aluminum shareholders meeting has now officially ended."

Having said that, Dwayne led his men away without looking back.

This was clearly a living hell, and Dwayne, who was used to putting his own safety before matters of principle, could not bring himself to linger a second longer in this place.

When Dwayne had left, Colin stood up as well. He glanced at Henry, who was sitting next to Jasper, and was aware that he needed to keep a low profile at this moment. As such, he turned around and left as well.

Therefore, Jasper, Henry, Conrad, and Mitch were the only ones left in the conference room.

Although he had won, Jasper did not taunt Conrad further.

On the one hand, this was not in line with his character.

On the other hand, the Monty family was way more capable and powerful than he thought. Skyward Aluminum was nothing.

He and the Monty family were now sworn enemies. There were still plenty of chances for them to have fun together in the future.

On the contrary, Henry was full of zest, but he was disinterested in inferior trust fund babies like Conrad. As such, he stared at Mitch whose face was growing sullen by the minute, tutting and sighing non-stop.

“Tsk, tsk!”

Henry did not blow his trumpet nor sing his own praises either. He simply tutted from time to time. This degree of mockery was far more lethal than using actual words.

“What the f*ck are you tutting about?!”

Mitch could not stand it anymore and sprung up from his chair. He glared viciously at Conrad and said, “I will report everything that has happened today to my father. Aren’t you just f*cking marvelous?”

“What kind of f*cking genius are you? A genius that appears once every half a century? Motherf*cker! I can smack nine out of ten idiots on the streets to find one just like you.”

Mitch stomped away after saying those words.

“We should leave too,” Jasper said to Henry.

Henry chuckled. "I'm in a good mood today. Should we go to the bar and have some fun later?"

"Are bars the only places where you can have fun?"

"There are many gorgeous ladies there. Why else do you think I want to go?"

"You can go yourself. I'm not interested."

"Darn it. Yeah, yeah, I get it. You're noble and refined."

"I call it self-discipline."

Their conversation drifted further and further away. Ultimately, all noise was cut off by the dull sound of the door closing.

The conference room was engulfed in pin drop silence, so silent that Conrad could hear his own heavy breathing.

It was at this moment that he finally felt his palm going numb from the pain.

"Hahahaha, Jasper Laine! I'll make this a living hell for you!"

Conrad looked at his bloody palm and started laughing hysterically.

Life at the Top Chapter 634

After some time, the door to the dimly lit conference room opened.

A man with a tall frame walked over and placed his palm on Conrad's shoulder. Conrad had stayed in the same position in the conference room for more than ten hours now.

"Dad! It's you..."

Conrad called out with trembling lips.

"It's time to go home."

In the dark, the man's voice was heard.

"You're still young. There's no harm in suffering some setbacks. The finest diamond must be cut."

"I refuse to accept this." Conrad clenched his fists.

"It's right to feel that way. If you refuse to accept this result, then find a chance to strike back."

"If you keep being so low-spirited, then you don't deserve to be my, Steven Monty's, son."

...

News about what had happened in Skyward Aluminum's shareholders meeting spread like wildfire.

Southeast Province was in turmoil.

No one had expected Jasper to gain victory with such incredible ease in the shareholders meeting.

Meanwhile, Conrad, whom the people of Southeast Province held in such high regard, had fallen from his throne after this incident.

As it turned out, a genius that only appeared once every half a century was nothing but a load of bullcrap. The glory he basked in back then was also how bad of a fall he had taken this time. Those who jeered at him grew in numbers as well.

The turmoil in the outside world did not stop Jasper from carrying out his original plan.

After the shareholders meeting, the first thing Jasper did was transfer all the shares to Gale.

Gale got control of Skyward Aluminum as he had wished while Jasper walked away with 300 million in commission.

Not only that, Jasper and Dawson had also received all of the Hanks' properties throughout the entire Southeast Province.

Without Gale's help, it would have been almost impossible for Jasper to get rid of the Hanks family so efficiently. After all, one must not underestimate a family that had taken root and operated in a province for decades.

At the end, when every last drop of blood was squeezed out of the Hanks, they declared bankruptcy.

Nevertheless, even if a camel had been starved to death, its meat was still extremely valuable.

Almost all of that meat was shared between Jasper and Dawson, both father and son-in-law.

Up until now, the people of Southeast Province still had their eyes fixed on his strife with the Monty family. No one noticed how much Jasper had benefited from this kerfuffle where he devoured the Hanks.

This was also precisely why Jasper had worked with Gale in exchange for Haddock's support.

"There are 34 real estates, 28 of which are worth more than ten million, and almost all of them are commercial buildings located in flourishing locations.

"There are also bond contracts that have yet to expire and some miscellaneous equipment that totals up to 2.98 billion."

These assets had fallen into Jasper's hands as a form of compensation from the Hanks for breaching the contract.

"Sure enough, robbing is the best way to get rich fast."

Dawson was in such a good mood that he joked with Jasper.

Jasper said with a smile, "Actually, the Hanks are much more capable than this, but their family members have taken away all that could be taken away when they escaped. Also, my guess is that they've robbed their own hidden reserves."

Dawson said, "This explains exactly why I dislike family-run management. Even if they're related by blood, there will be rotten apples when there are too many people. Rotten apples like that, even if just one or two, are enough to turn the entire family bad in a short period of time."

"What we need to do next is exercise caution," Jasper said.

Dawson nodded to agree and then said with a frown, "I just received news that Steven Monty will be reappointed as the chairman of Monty Enterprise's board of directors after nearly ten years of retirement. This shows that he's planning to intervene to handle the repercussions that this storm has brought."

“They’re not going to let this drop so easily.” Jasper massaged his temples, and Conrad’s face popped up in his mind.

Life at the Top Chapter 635

Honestly, in terms of schemes and means, Conrad was by far the most powerful peer whom Jasper had ever encountered.

If Gale and the Laws had not backed him up this time, he might not have had trouble bringing down the Hanks family, but he would have had trouble subduing Conrad.

Jasper had a hunch that Conrad would be a huge problem to him.

After suffering a massive blow this time, Conrad was not going to attack rashly anymore, but when he would attack, it was bound to be an earth-shattering one.

“What are you afraid of? When the soldiers arrive, we’ll use a general to keep them off!”

Dawson patted Jasper on the shoulder and laughed. “If you can beat him once, you can beat him twice.”

Just then, the office door was pushed open and Wendy walked in.

“Dad, I’m having dinner with Jasp tonight.” Wendy finished her sentence and was about to drag Jasper out the door.

“We are? I didn’t know that!” Jasper exclaimed in surprise.

“You’ve been working your tail off. Didn’t Julian tell you yesterday that he and his sister wanted to invite us to dinner?” Wendy was exasperated.

Jasper smacked his forehead and said, “Oh, right! Julian wants to introduce his martial artist friend to us. I plan to hire a female bodyguard to protect you.”

Wendy used to be very resistant to bodyguards but had now learned her lesson and did not object. She knew that her safety was no longer her own affairs. She had to think about Dawson and Jasper too, at least to reassure them.

Wendy said helplessly, “I hope she isn’t the nosy kind.”

After a quick conversation with Dawson at the company, Jasper and Wendy went downstairs together.

Julian and Cathy were already waiting downstairs.

“Mr. Laine, Ms. Schuler.”

Cathy took the initiative to greet them with a bright smile.

“Looking good.” Jasper laughed.

Cathy was recuperating really well after her surgery. Now that her leukemia had cured, coupled with her stable job, Cathy felt as though her life had changed completely.

She had put some effort into dressing up, and though she did not look gorgeous, at least she looked healthy and ruddy—like a completely different person.

“Thanks for taking care of me, Mr. Laine, Ms. Schuler.” Cathy thanked them from the bottom of her heart.

Jasper got into the car and waved his hand with a smile, saying, “You’re more than welcome. You can call me Jasper. I’m just two months older than you, so it doesn’t really matter.”

“Okay, Jasper,” Cathy said with delight.

“What sort of dinner are you treating us to today?” Jasper asked Julian who was currently driving.

“Now that your earnings have increased, I can finally eat the food you’re treating me to in peace, so don’t be stingy, okay?”

Julian could detect the humor in Jasper’s words and said with a smile, “I’m sorry to disappoint you then, Jasper. I’m not planning to take you to a high-end hotel.”

“Oh, please don’t.” Jasper waved his hands, looking appalled. “The food in hotels may be exquisite but I’ve gotten tired from eating it every day. I’m hoping to eat something ordinary right now.”

“Well Jasper, Ms. Schuler, have you eaten crayfish before?” Julian asked.

Jasper’s eyes lit up.

This was 2001, and crayfish had yet to become popular.

Two years before his reincarnation, around the year 2017, crayfish started becoming insanely popular.

“Let’s eat that, then,” Jasper said.

“What’s crayfish?” Wendy asked Jasper, tilting her head.

She had eaten all kinds of fish and lobster but not crayfish.

“An exquisite supper. In the world of supper, crayfish skewers can be considered the King of Supper.” Jasper chuckled.

Life at the Top Chapter 636

As crayfish was not that popular yet, Julian drove around the city for a very long time before he found a crayfish shop near the suburbs on a food street with stalls that sold midnight snacks.

At this moment, the evening lights lit up. The food street was near several factories, so many workers and residents who lived around the area would come out for a stroll. Thus, the place was currently bustling with energy.

Julian went to order the food, and when he returned to his seat, he muttered, “This stuff is incredibly cheap back home. You can see crayfish everywhere in the waterways, and they cost one buck per pound. I can’t believe this place is charging me 15 bucks.”

There were two men and two women at Jasper’s table. Especially with Wendy’s good looks, everyone had their eyes on them.

Wendy hardly ever visited places like this, so she began studying her environment curiously.

Whenever she threw a glance at the shirtless men who were holding glasses of draft beer and boasting loudly, they would subconsciously tone down their actions—even to the point where they put down their foot that was propped up on the stool.

Jasper arranged the disposable tableware for Wendy and said with a smile, “The food in a hotel is good, but street food is unique in its own way as well. If I must pick one, I’ll pick street food over food in hotels because I feel more at ease here.”

Wendy scrunched up her nose and said in disbelief, “Why are you still racking your brains thinking of ways to earn so much money then?”

“I’m not making money for the sole purpose of buying food. Although food is viewed as a primary need, how much can we really eat? If eating is my main goal, then I would’ve retired a long time ago.” Jasper laughed.

“What’s your purpose of making money then, Jasper?” Julian asked because he rarely heard Jasper mention these things.

Jasper pondered for a moment and chuckled. “There are many beautiful places in this world that I have yet to discover. I’d love to visit these places, but I’m bound to bump into problems in the process. It just so happens that money is the best solution to these problems.”

After hearing what he said, Julian scratched his head and said awkwardly, “I don’t understand.”

As they spoke, the female shop owner came over with the dishes they ordered. A large bowl of steaming crayfish was placed at the center of the table. The scarlet-colored crayfish stood out, while the steam and fragrance aroused everyone’s appetite.

“I’ve not eaten crayfish for so long.” Jasper picked up a crayfish despite it being steaming hot. He quickly peeled off the shell and popped it into his mouth. His eyes lit up as he said, “Yup, this is it. This is the taste!”

Having said that, Jasper peeled another crayfish for Wendy and said, “Try it. You can’t get this in hotels.”

Wendy was about to take it when there was someone guffawing at the next table.

“F*cking dope, I’d say. I’ve seen people put on a show, but not as good as them. They’re talking about making big bucks one second and big hotels the next.”

“Those who are clever enough will know that you’re eating in a shop in a food street, but those who don’t might think that you’re a king from a foreign country here to gain life experiences.”

What followed after those words were bursts of laughter.

Julian frowned and then turned his head in annoyance. He saw three to five men sitting next to their table. The man who spoke earlier had a perverted look on his face as he leered at Wendy, seemingly proud of the things he just said.

Julian was even more crossed now and was just about to get up when Jasper said, “Remain in your seat, Julian.”

Jasper then turned around and looked at the perverted man, saying, “Whether I’m pretending or not is my business. Does that affect you?”

The pervert chuckled and said with a sinister gaze, “I didn’t know that eating at a food street can boost your sense of superiority. We lads should keep a low profile when we go out. We shouldn’t say hilarious things like that just to pick up ladies.”

As he spoke, the perverted man whistled at Wendy frivolously and laughed. “Hey gorgeous, what’s so good about dating this good-for-nothing pretty boy? Why don’t you come over and sit with us? Have a drink with tough men like us, eh?”

As soon as the man finished his sentence, a wine bottle was smashed into his forehead.

Life at the Top Chapter 637

The sudden attack caused a commotion. Jasper looked up and saw a keen-witted woman with short hair. She lifted the perverted man, the same man who spoke rudely earlier, like she was lifting a little chick. She said indifferently, "I hate it when a man takes liberties with a woman."

"Senior!" Julian exclaimed in delight when he saw the woman.

In the blink of an eye, all eyes were on them. The head of the man who was being lifted up by Julian's senior was covered in blood. He was wailing non-stop, while the other men who were sitting on the same table as him had long since slipped away.

"Get lost!" Julian's senior tossed the man on the floor and roared.

The perverted man covered his forehead, too afraid to say a word. He ran off while pissing his pants.

"Julian." Julian's senior first greeted Julian before turning to look at Jasper.

"Senior, I'd like to introduce you to Jasper, the man I told you about. He's my boss and my savior," Julian said, standing up.

"Jasper, this is my senior. Her name is Fallon Murray. Her combat skills are no worse than mine."

"Hello." Jasper stood up and stretched out his hand politely.

Fallon glanced at Jasper's palm and said with a straight face, "I'm sorry, I'm not used to touching strangers unless this is the arena."

Such a powerful aura!

Fallon's actions left a deep impression on Jasper.

"Alright then. Shall we sit down and talk?" Jasper said with a smile, not the slightest bit crossed by her attitude toward him.

Fallon nodded and sat beside Julian.

“When did you arrive, senior?” Cathy asked immediately. Surprisingly, Cathy and Fallon were really close.

“I just arrived. It was hard to find this place. The cab driver drove around for a really long time,” Fallon said in an unrestrained manner.

As Fallon spoke, she turned and looked at Wendy. With a different kind of zeal than what she showed Jasper, she asked, “Are you the target I’m supposed to protect?”

Wendy was a little overwhelmed by Fallon’s blazing gaze and looked subconsciously at Jasper.

Jasper narrowed his eyes slightly and said, “Only after we hire you.”

Julian tugged at Fallon’s shirt in secret and whispered, “Be more polite to Jasper, senior.”

Fallon twitched her mouth with displeasure and said, “So what? Nine out of ten rich people like him hope to hire me as their bodyguard but I always refuse. It’s not like I’ve never met one before.

“Rich people like them have always looked down on others just because they have some stinking money. We don’t need to be so polite to them.”

“Senior!” Julian was slightly crossed now. He pulled a long face and said sternly, “I don’t know about others but Jasper isn’t that kind of person.”

“Argh, alright. What does a little kid like you know? You don’t even know when you’re being taken advantage of by others.” Fallon waved her hand without a care and turned to Jasper again, saying, “You want to hire me? I’m really expensive to hire.”

Life at the Top Chapter 638

“Money isn’t a problem. I don’t think I need to go in-depth about this. You can just ask Julian.

“Not only does he have a high income, but his income is also considered the highest in the country.”

Jasper took his time to peel the crayfish, eating one by himself and feeding another to Wendy.

Jasper noticed something with his keen senses.

Fallon’s eyes would flash whenever he fed Wendy.

Jasper was fascinated by the discovery.

“Likewise, I’m a businessman, and for every penny I pay, I expect a return of equal value. Therefore, I’d like to know how capable you are.”

Fallon crossed her arms and smirked smugly, saying, “Don’t worry about that. Julian has never won against me until I turned 20.”

“Does that mean that your abilities began to decline after you turned 20 years old?” Jasper asked sharply.

Fallon’s expression turned stiff as she complained, “That’s the physiological gap between men and women. Do you actually think I’d get better the older I am just like in the movies?”

“Besides, my abilities aren’t declining. I can remain in tiptop condition for at least another decade. Julian is getting stronger, but even now, he still can’t beat me by too much.”

Julian scratched his head after hearing what she said. He said to Jasper, “What she said is right, Jasper. Even now, I’m not entirely sure I can beat her.”

Jasper nodded and said, “In that case, your skills and abilities have passed the requirement. Most importantly, I’m getting Wendy someone that’s trustworthy. You play a crucial role, and her life and safety are in your hands. Do you think you can handle it?”

Fallon said, sounding unconvinced, “I wouldn’t have come if I couldn’t.”

As Fallon said those words, she frowned and said a little impatiently, “Also, I think you ought to know that I’m selling my skills, not myself. I need to have my own freedom and time as well.”

“If that’s the case, I don’t think we can proceed with this conversation.” Jasper shook his head.

“Are you expecting me to set up an eight-hour work schedule for you? So you can clock in and out every day? You need to be ready to deal with emergencies at all times. You will work so long as Wendy is outside.”

Fallon said with displeasure, “Hey, don’t get so full of yourself just because you have some stinking money. I’m not going to starve to death if I don’t get this job.”

“It just so happens that I can also hire someone else to do it if you can’t.” Jasper stood in sharp opposition to Fallon with a grin, having no intention of giving in.

Fallon gritted her teeth in anger and then looked at Julian, asking, “Why is your boss acting like that, Julian?”

Julian scratched his head and said, "This is a misunderstanding, senior. Jasper is really easy to talk to. I don't know why both of you can't get along."

"No one wants to get along with him!" Fallon harrumphed and looked at Wendy, saying, "Can we talk?"

Wendy smiled and said, "Sure, what would you like to ask?"

Fallon said with a frown, "I'm a really casual person, and I certainly can't take care of you all the time. Besides, I'm only responsible for your safety, so you can't order me around like I'm your servant."

Wendy nodded and said, "Yeap, that's what I want."

Fallon said with a smile, "You're so much easier to talk to than him and much more pleasing to the eye."

Wendy noticed Fallon's eyes glowing when she stared at her and felt uneasy. She subconsciously leaned toward Jasper.

"To be honest, I have a pretty simple work-life schedule. I'll either be at the company or at home. I don't have anything in particular to do as well, so this is going to be quite an easy job for you. Besides, I don't think I'll be attacked every day."

Life at the Top Chapter 639

Wendy figured that Jasper made things sound too serious and took the initiative to explain.

Coincidentally, as soon as Wendy finished her sentence, they heard the sound of a car suddenly screeching to a halt.

A van pulled over at the side of the road, and five to six men with sharp blades hopped out of the vehicle. One of them was covering his head that was sloppily bandaged and shrieked while pointing at Jasper. "That's him, Drake! Hack him to death!"

Jasper frowned and glanced at Fallon.

Fallon tacitly understood. She stood up and lifted the plastic stool from underneath before charging forward.

Terrified, Wendy said to Jasper in a haste, "Shall we call the police, Jasp?"

Jasper said with a smile, "No, we have two bodyguards. You're going to embarrass them if you call the police. When you deal with thugs like them, it's best to do so using their own strategies."

Nowadays, most of the folks in Southeast Province had doughty spirits. Most ordinary citizens would only fan the flames and crowd around to watch the show.

Therefore, when they saw five to six men rushing over with blades, not only did the others not run away screaming, but they even crowded around to watch with great interest.

Soon after, these onlookers and Jasper got to witness what being doughty was like.

Fallon was seen lifting the plastic stool all by herself and rushing toward the five to six burly men who were wielding knives.

The men were stunned for a moment, but these thugs were used to fighting the minority with large numbers and bullying the weak. They could not care less and began hacking at Fallon while clamoring.

When the plastic stool was in Fallon's hands, it turned into a sharp and effective weapon. Anyone who touched it would let out a shrill cry and crash to the ground.

It was as though she was chopping melons and vegetables.

Jasper knew that as Julian's senior, Fallon could easily handle these thugs, but little did he expect this woman to use only a plastic stool to finish off those knife-wielding thugs.

Moreover, Jasper realized that Julian's approach resembled traditional martial arts more, and every move he launched was traceable.

Fallon was different. She moved without a trace and would smash everything within her reach. Her every move was not rigidly adhered to any form.

Within two to three minutes, Fallon returned to Jasper's side, neither flushed nor out of breath. She threw away the blood-stained and cracked plastic stool that was still in one piece and raised her chin, saying, "What do you think?"

"Great! You're really skillful indeed." Jasper could only say that.

He figured that even ten to 20 versions of himself would not be nearly enough to help Fallon with her warm-up exercises.

Her skills were enough reason for Jasper to hire her.

However, why was this woman so zealous toward his woman?

"Are you impressed, Ms. Schuler?"

Jasper could not help but think that something was not right when he saw Fallon showing off to Wendy so smugly.

Wendy replied awkwardly, "I'm impressed!"

“You know what, I don’t see why we should continue having this meal. Let’s go home. Go and pay the bills, Julian,” Jasper said after standing up.

Fallon watched as Jasper led Wendy to the car and cried out in a hurry, “Hey! You didn’t tell me my schedule yet.”

“Julian will take you around to familiarize yourself with your job. You’ll start working tomorrow and will receive the same benefits as Julian.”

Life at the Top Chapter 640

Now that matters regarding Fallon had been taken care of, this relieved one of Jasper’s anxieties.

However, Jasper could not help feeling that Fallon’s behavior toward Wendy was a bit unusual, especially in the way she looked at Wendy. The way Fallon gazed upon her was exactly the way he himself gazed at Wendy.

This made Jasper feel rather uneasy.

As a result, the next day, Jasper requested two female bodyguards from Dawson. Although they were likely not on par with Fallon in terms of ability, their forte was that they were professional and reliable. Jasper’s main objective for hiring them was to keep an eye on Fallon.

When Fallon found out about Jasper’s decision, she immediately went to see him, looking extremely dissatisfied.

“Jasper, what is the meaning of this? Don’t you trust me?”

“Those two you’ve just hired—I can dispose of them with just one finger.”

Jasper was sorting out some clothes. After listening to what Fallon had to say, he replied coolly and calmly, “Didn’t you say you wanted freedom and time for yourself? Now that I’ve hired two more bodyguards, you can take things a bit easier.”

“But...”

Fallon still wanted to say something, but then she noticed Jasper looking at her.

Truthfully speaking, Fallon could easily deal with an ordinary person like Jasper—she could do it with just one finger even. Yet she did not know why she felt the hairs on the back of her neck stand up as Jasper fixed her with a seemingly calm, serene gaze.

It was the same sort of feeling that one would get if they were being scrutinized by a ferocious beast. The sheer unadulterated pressure on her nerves made her apprehensive.

“I’m usually an easy person to talk to most of the time, so you can also express your own opinions, and I’ll take them into consideration. However, when I’ve made a decision on any particular matter, I don’t wish to hear any voices raised in opposition. Do you understand me?”

Fallon nodded instinctively when she heard what Jasper had to say.

The next second, however, she began fuming at herself for being so useless. She had actually been intimidated by Jasper, who was merely a physically weak, ordinary man. By now, however, Jasper had already gotten into the car with Julian.

“I’m headed to Waterhoof for a few days and won’t be at home, so I’ll entrust Wendy’s safety to you. I hope I can rely on you.” Jasper rolled up the window of the car once he finished speaking, and drove off grandly in the large Bentley without so much as a backward glance.

Watching the Bentley's shadow disappear down the end of the road, Fallon gritted her teeth in anger.

"That f*cking son of a b*tch. All he has is a bit of lousy money—what's there to be so smug about!"

Fallon kept on muttering in extreme dissatisfaction, but then her eyes lit up immediately. "Doesn't that mean Wendy and I will have some time alone then?"

...

"Jasper, where do we head first when we get to Waterhoof City?"

Julian, who was driving the car, asked.

"We'll go to the Wonderland Hotel first to check-in. After that, I'll go meet a few people. This time around, we might need to stay in Waterhoof City for about three to five days.

"The first matter of business will be to communicate with the personnel in the city government about the development plans for that piece of land we purchased previously. The second thing will be to go shopping."

Jasper was seated in the back of the car, the luxurious and comfortable back seat having been customized to suit him. Subsequently, he commented comfortably, both legs on the seat's leg rest as he switched on the massage feature.

"So, you'll have a bit more free time. When there's nothing on the agenda, you can go look around on your own and buy whatever knick-knacks you like. After all, our economy in the Southeast Province can't compare with Waterhoof City. There are many things you can only find in Waterhoof City."

"I really don't have anything that I want to buy. I already have everything I basically need," Julian said bluntly.

Jasper replied somewhat helplessly, “I’ve heard your sister say before that you always only rotate between these two sets of clothing and that you don’t know how to dress up. If you keep on like this, how are you going to find yourself a girlfriend?”

Life at the Top Chapter 641

Julian said awkwardly, "Jasper, I haven't even thought about these things."

Jasper noticed Julian's somewhat embarrassed response and said with a smile, "How about this, I'll give you a commercial property on Gold Pedestrian Street when you get married in the future?"

"Gold Pedestrian Street? What kind of place is it?" Julian asked with some confusion.

Jasper laughed and said, "Waterhoof City has built a demonstration site for the national pedestrian street early last year. It's still not that famous now, but from how I see it, it'll one day become a famous pedestrian street known throughout the country, even becoming one of the landmarks of Waterhoof City.

"If we buy it now, it'll bring in steady profits without any losses. Plus, I've always thought about being a landlord."

Judging from his words now, the shopping that Jasper had mentioned to Julian earlier was naturally not one that entailed shopping for clothes or luxury items. Those things were, at best, something to spend his pocket money on and not even considered a serious purchase.

What he really wanted was ownership of the commercial properties on Gold Pedestrian Street.

Jasper had only remembered about this business opportunity when he was counting the Hanks family's assets.

There had been a letter of intent written in Sirius's third uncle's name for the purchase of ten commercial properties on Gold Pedestrian Street and this triggered Jasper's memory.

Gold Pedestrian Street was but one of three top pedestrian streets in the country. It had now just been completed and was still many years away from becoming popular.

The disposable income per capita would increase when the national economy rose in the future. Simply put, when people had more money in their wallets, they would start to travel and spend. Only then would the potential of the pedestrian street really burst forth.

Jasper's trip to Waterhoof City this time was so that he could purchase Gold Pedestrian Street from Waterhoof City Hall. He had been here more than once in his past life, and back then, he had imagined that if he had a commercial property in a place like this, repaying credit card debt would not have been a problem.

He could even just relax and enjoy the rest of his life.

Now that he had power as well as a great opportunity in front of him, he would eventually follow through on his unfulfilled dream from his past life of becoming a landlord.

What was more, in terms of investment value, Gold Pedestrian Street was also, at present, the real estate project with the highest investment value.

Two and a half hours later, Jasper and Julian arrived at Wonderland Hotel in Waterhoof City.

They checked into the room they had already booked a long time ago. Given his title of vice president of Haddock Chamber of Commerce's Waterhoof City branch, Jasper wasted no time and met with the head of Waterhoof City's Investment Promotion Department in the hotel suite.

Victor Gul was a powerful individual.

“Pleased to meet you, Mr. Gul,” Jasper shook Victor’s hand and greeted.

“Mr. Laine, I’ve been looking forward to meeting you for a long time.”

Seeing as Victor Gul was able to secure his position as head of an important department, he was naturally a smooth and slick individual. He had thoroughly gone through information on Jasper earlier, and his eyes were scrutinizing Jasper as though he was looking at the God of Wealth.

Nowadays, attracting investments was the number one objective for any city in the country, and everything else had to be pushed aside. Someone like Jasper, a God of Wealth, was therefore a welcome guest of local city governments everywhere.

“The turmoil from the earlier Skyward Aluminum incident has not completely passed. Even a regular man like myself has heard plenty about Mr. Laine’s operations in the stock market. Many colleagues in my department also trade in stocks and have earned quite a bit by following you. I would like to thank you on their behalf.”

Victor said with a hearty laugh.

Jasper invited Victor to take a seat on the sofa and smiled. “Mr. Gul, it seems you know quite a bit about me.”

After flattering one other, Jasper explained his intentions.

“Mr. Gul, in all honesty, I’m here this time mainly to buy up all the commercial properties on Gold Pedestrian Street.”

As soon as he said this, even Victor Gul, who was not unused to witnessing great storms, could not help the change in his expression.

Life at the Top Chapter 642

Gold Pedestrian Street was a project of great importance even in the esteemed Waterhoof City.

One could imagine the importance attached to the project as it was under the direct supervision of the relevant divisions in Swallow City.

With the money Jasper was throwing in, Victor was shocked by his generosity and could not help himself from saying, “Mr. Laine, how much do you know of the current situation with Gold Pedestrian Street?”

Jasper replied with a smile, “The pedestrian street is connected to the Bund and is a total length of 1,033 meters. It was expected to be completed by the end of 1999 and would be officially opened at the start of the millennium. Apart from the few shops on both sides of the street that have already been reserved by some large companies, there’s still a remainder of 266 shops that are not for sale but only open for rent, isn’t that right?”

Victor laughed bitterly. “Mr. Laine, it seems you’ve come rather prepared. However, if you already know that the city hall is only looking to rent the remaining stores and not sell them, aren’t you putting me in a difficult spot by making such a request?”

Jasper was smiling as he said, “There’s no rush. I’m a businessman, and from a businessman’s perspective, there’s no request that can’t be discussed.”

“Mr. Laine, you may be a businessman, but the city hall and I aren’t. This sort of thing is a matter of principle. I’m sure you understand what I mean,” Victor hinted.

Jasper waved his hand as he replied, "Please don't be in a rush to decline, Mr. Gul. What if I say I want to build a 630-meter-tall building, worth a total investment of more than 16 billion next to Pearl Tower?"

Hearing this, Victor stood up abruptly and exclaimed, "Really?"

What was the domestic city hall lacking at present?

It was lacking in funds and political achievements.

In this era, a vanity project was the best way to boost their political achievements.

If it were other cities, this construction project that Jasper suggested was like him asking for the stars; and those city halls would find a way to retrieve them for him.

However, it was also a big enough project for Waterhoof City that the city hall would be shaken up.

"At present, the tallest building in the world is the Petra Tower in Marshmeet and it's only 451 meters. Although the 110 building that is still under construction is slated to be the next tallest building in the world, it's also only 509 meters.

"This building I'm proposing, however, is designed to reach a height of 630 meters. It'll be the tallest building in the world for at least ten years once it's completed. It will also hold the record for being the tallest building in the Mainland for at least 20 years."

Jasper was not just spewing empty words as they were all real data from his previous life.

The record for the tallest building in the world had only been snatched away by the Dubai Tower in 2010.

“I’m personally not that interested in the reputation that comes with having the tallest building in the world, but I think the city hall would be, am I right?”

The words that Jasper was saying with a light chuckle had pierced right into Victor’s mind.

He knew that the current deputy mayor of the city hall had come from Swallow City years ago and that he was desperately in need of achievements to prove his capability.

Would he not immediately become a close confidant if such a huge project was delivered to the deputy mayor on a platter?

Thinking of this, Victor, who was in his 40s, flushed red.

Jasper took a sip of tea. He knew that ordinary people could rent the property rights to the pedestrian street, but buying it was very difficult. There were, after all, many talented individuals in the country and he was not the only one with an eye for business. The number of people after such an opportunity could fill up the sea.

The city hall would not possibly agree without being promised adequate benefits.

Thus, this skyscraper project was Jasper’s bargaining chip with the city hall to exchange interests.

Jasper had no need for the title of the world’s tallest building, but the same could not be said for the city hall and Swallow City.

After so many years, there were already some promising results. Now, Swallow City was in urgent need of major events to boost its national confidence as well as increase its international influence.

That was why the Olympics had been so grand.

Jasper's plan for the world's tallest building would certainly impress the Waterhoof City Hall.

Life at the Top Chapter 643

"Mr. Laine, do you mean what you said? It's not a joking matter once I report it," Victor asked as he tried to hold back his excitement.

Jasper shrugged and replied, "I'm not a renowned individual but I do, at the very least, possess some assets and credibility. I wouldn't gamble away my future. What good will it bring me to trick you?"

"A businessman never does things that aren't profitable."

After hearing Jasper's words, there was a little more credibility to his plans even though there was no guarantee.

Victor nodded and said, "Alright then. I'll inform the deputy mayor in charge of this immediately. Could you lend me a quiet space, Mr. Laine?"

Jasper smiled and pointed toward the study. "It's quiet over there."

Victor went ahead, and when he returned in front of Jasper again after three to five minutes, the look he gave Jasper had softened incomparably.

"Mr. Laine, the deputy mayor has invited you to pay him a visit now. He has rescheduled his meeting and is waiting for you in his office."

Jasper stood up and said, "Let us go, then. We shouldn't keep the old man waiting."

...

Jasper remained in the office at the highest floor of Waterhoof City Hall since the early evening for negotiations that lasted about five or six hours. He had even taken his lunch with the 60-year-old deputy mayor in the city hall cafeteria.

However, Jasper had also gained impressive rewards from those five to six hours.

He landed an investment of at least 16 billion and had to complete the project proposal within a month. This was, of course, just a demonstration of his intentions as Waterhoof City would then give him the green light and offer full support in expediting the approval of the project.

The design draft had to be submitted within three months and the construction of the building had to begin within six months.

The above were the requirements made by Waterhoof City and Jasper had wholly agreed to them.

In exchange, Jasper would receive the contract for the transfer of ownership of the remaining 266 commercial properties on Gold Pedestrian Street.

In terms of price, Jasper had once again taken advantage of Waterhoof City. He had pretended to be hard of money and expressed that the 16 billion investment was not enough.

“Jasper, 266 commercial properties and each of them cost 20 million? That’s daylight robbery! And you still agreed to that? They must have taken you for a fool!”

Julian was extremely dissatisfied. Since he had now fully considered himself as one of Jasper’s subordinates, Jasper’s loss was more distressing than him losing his own money.

Jasper replied with a huff, “You have to look at it in the long run. In your opinion, 20 million is too expensive for a commercial property, yes?”

“It’s completely outrageous! A commercial property in the busiest part of Nauritus City in the capital of our Southeast Province is only worth 30 million!” argued Julian.

“Oh? You knew about this?” Jasper asked in awe.

He patted Julian’s shoulder and continued, “Would you still find it a loss if I told you that the annual rent for each of these 266 commercial properties that have an average area of 30 square meters will be more than three million dollars in the future?”

Jasper smiled as he noticed Julian’s eyes widening in disbelief. The man no longer dared to refute and offered no more explanations.

A 30 square meter commercial property with an annual rent of 30 million? Was it not too much of an exaggeration?

However, this was the power of a first-rate pedestrian street in the country.

By then, the commercial properties here would only be for rent. They would not have a selling price because no one would sell their golden geese. It would be a move more stupid than killing chickens to get their eggs.

“These 266 commercial properties have a combined price tag of 5.3 billion. Waterhoof City Hall has also allowed us to make the payment across 20 years. The rent will skyrocket up to three million annually in just five years, let alone ten years. By then, the annual rent for each of these 266 commercial properties will be 800 million dollars and in seven years, we will be able to recover the 5.3 billion. Where else could we find such a deal?”

Jasper rubbed his chin, thinking that the reserved and kind deputy mayor was a deity in disguise.

“Let’s go. Before we head back, let’s go take a look at our 266 golden geese.”

Life at the Top Chapter 644

While Gold Pedestrian Street was, at present, not as crowded and lively as it would be in the future, it was still popular.

It was way busier than any other city in the country.

As he walked along the bustling pedestrian street, Jasper thought of his past life. He had been here a few times, and one time, it was during a holiday. One would not even need to walk if they were caught by the flow of people. Being sardined by the crowd, they could only be dragged along.

It was not at all an exaggeration to say this as Jasper had actually experienced it before.

It was funny, but at the same time, it proved the horrors and exaggerations made about this pedestrian street.

One could even sell rocks for a sky-high price on a street with such high popularity.

Jasper looked at the distinctive buildings that lined both sides of the pedestrian street with his hands clasped behind his back, feeling very pleased.

Although he had not obtained concrete details on the list and location of the 266 commercial properties, given there were 300 to 400 properties along the entire length of the pedestrian street, he already owned more than half of it.

Right now, he felt as good as when he made billions on the stock market.

After all, a long-cherished wish of his from his previous life was to own a commercial property on Gold Pedestrian Street and to be someone who only needed to wait for the money to come rolling in.

Maybe he could become an internet celebrity blogger in a few more years after one of his short videos went viral. Others might create content about beauty, luxury cars, and big houses but he could easily share the deeds to the 266 commercial properties he owned on Gold Pedestrian Street. That would feel so good.

Although it had not even been a year since the pedestrian street opened for business, Waterhoof City had already spent great efforts on this project. All the big shots in Swallow City were watching, and they would not allow the commercial properties to remain empty.

That was why all of the shops were already open for business by now and many of them were opened by the relatives of those in the city hall.

On the one hand, those who were smart knew that this pedestrian street had the support of the city hall and thus, would undoubtedly be developed. As such, they seized the opportunity to leverage their connections and power to offer benefits to their relatives while the competition was still not as fierce.

On the other hand, Waterhoof City was also turning a blind eye to what was happening as they were just happy that the pedestrian street could become a bustling venue.

However, now that Jasper had bought over the remaining commercial properties, their smooth sailing days were about to come to an end.

“When the time comes, they will have to pay rent according to the current market value or clear themselves out. They will definitely not be allowed to continue having unfair advantages,” murmured Jasper.

After patrolling around his territory, Jasper was satisfied.

Feeling a little hungry, Jasper looked up and saw a restaurant not far away that served local specialties of Waterhoof City. Jasper then brought Julian along to the restaurant.

Food was the people's priority, and there would definitely be restaurants regardless of where one went.

It was even livelier at the restaurants along the pedestrian street.

Although it was already past dinner hours, there were still a lot of patrons at the restaurant. It was also obvious that many of them were tourists who had come to experience the local delicacies of Waterhoof City.

Jasper and Julian got a table after waiting for a good ten minutes.

"Jasper, there are so many people here," Julian lamented to Jasper.

He now somewhat believed Jasper when he said that the rent here would rise to three million per year in the future.

"There are two floors to this restaurant, so its rent will cost up to six million in the future. No, at least eight million!" Julian exclaimed excitedly.

Jasper smiled and said, "Do you like it? I did say before that I'll give you one of the shops when you get married. You can take your pick. This shop is rather small, though. The one I'll give you will definitely be the biggest one."

Julian scratched his head and replied, "There's no need for that, Jasper. The salary you're giving me is already enough for me to live a good life. I don't even need to worry about being able to put food on the table or clothes on my body."

"You might not need it, but your wife and children in the future definitely would," said Jasper casually as he gestured for the waiter to take their orders.

Life at the Top Chapter 645

Jasper decided to order only three dishes and one stew since it was just two of them. He also picked common dishes that were comparatively cheaper.

It was not that Jasper was frugal. It was just that food and drinks were the one thing he would not compromise on. In his opinion, one did not get rich by saving but rather by earning. However, being wasteful was not condoned either.

The waiter who was serving them was not too happy with this, though.

“This is all two large-sized men are eating when they come to Waterhoof City? These are all cheap dishes that don’t even amount to 200 Somer Dollars. How stingy.”

The waiter had a strong accent belonging to residents of Waterhoof City. Coupled with their sarcastic tone, it immediately caused those listening to feel uncomfortable.

“The two of us can’t eat that much in one go. Please just serve what I ordered,” Jasper said calmly.

“Foreigners,” the waiter muttered irritably to themselves before they turned and walked away.

“Jasper, that waiter has such a bad attitude,” Julian frowned as he spoke to Jasper.

Ever since becoming one of Jasper’s men, Julian had been to his fair share of extravagant events. He might be a bodyguard, but the servers would serve him enthusiastically all the same. The fancier the venue, the higher quality of service that was provided. He would rarely get looked down upon, unlike what was often written in novels.

Thus, Julian had grown used to such treatment and became dissatisfied when he was suddenly confronted with the waiter's attitude.

Jasper smiled as he said, "Isn't this what usually happens in the country? There's no need to hold a grudge against her. We're just here to grab a bite."

The higher Jasper's standing in society, the better his temper became. He could not be bothered, nor did he even have the time to deal with those who were entire levels beneath him.

They might all be humans, but their time was valued differently.

Jasper earned, at the very minimum, a million dollars a day, while these waiters received a salary of fewer than 2,000 dollars a month. What was more, they worked in Waterhoof City. How could they be compared to each other?

Since Jasper had already made such a statement, Julian merely shrugged and did not say anything else.

However, Julian's patience gradually began wearing out when he realized that none of Jasper's dishes had been served even though those who had arrived after them had already finished their meals, paid their bills, and left.

The two of them seemed to have been given the cold shoulder. No one paid any attention to them for the whole hour.

No one said a thing, but Jasper knew it must have been done by the waiter who thought they had ordered too little food.

Jasper frowned.

He could ignore these people, but their attitude would destroy Golden Pedestrian Street's reputation, which would in turn affect his earnings.

"Julian," Jasper said calmly.

"Bring the owner over here."

Julian, who had long ago been unable to stand it, stood abruptly and walked down the stairs.

Soon, a commotion sounded downstairs. Then, Julian walked up the stairs with a man in his 30s. The man's snobbishness and impatience were evident on his face as he walked over.

"Are you the owner here?" Jasper asked.

"Spit it out." The owner had an impatient look on his face.

"Firstly, you have an extremely problematic attitude. Secondly, we arrived first, but why hasn't our food been served after more than an hour while those who arrived after us have already finished their meals and left? What's your explanation for that?" Jasper asked calmly.

"The two of you only ordered four dishes. F*cking hell, don't come to eat at Golden Pedestrian Street if you're poor. Who are you putting on a show for? Stupid foreigners, I ordered them not to serve you. Do you want to eat? Sure, you'll have to wait for two hours. Get the f*ck out if you don't have the patience!"

Life at the Top Chapter 646

To be honest, it was not considered cheap for two people to spend 200 dollars on a meal in these times.

However, it was not the case if they were at Golden Pedestrian Street in Waterhoof City, a lively and bustling place.

Flynn Herrett's hands had been cramping from the amount of money he handled each day ever since he opened up this restaurant. He had a relative working as a property manager who was initially against him opening up a restaurant here, but they were now on their knees begging him to extend his lease.

After all, for every customer they served, they would order at least 600 or 700 dollars worth of food that cost less than 100 dollars to prepare. These huge, sudden profits had naturally led Flynn to look down upon seemingly poor people who were taking up space like Jasper.

With his sudden surge in wealth combined with the fact he had a property manager backing him up, Flynn was never scared of customers complaining or finding fault with him. Had there been anyone who he failed to deal with?

Jasper gazed calmly at Flynn as he asked, "Do you treat all your customers like this?"

Flynn said exasperatedly, "F*cking hell, you two foreigners are trying to put yourselves on a pedestal now? I've always had this attitude. What are you going to do about it? You can eat here if you want to, or get the hell out if you can't wait any longer!

"You'd best believe that I'll get someone to throw you out if you don't get the hell out right now!"

“I’m going to remain sitting here. Why don’t you try getting your men to kick me out?” Jasper asked calmly.

“Hey!”

Flynn laughed oddly as he said, “Have I met someone who doesn’t know what’s good for them today? Where’s security? Security!”

Two security guards appeared behind Flynn.

“Drag these two dumb foreigners out. F*cking hell, how dare they behave atrociously in my territory? They must be blind.”

Upon hearing Flynn’s orders, the two guards immediately walked toward Jasper so they could drag him down the stairs.

Just then, Julian placed himself in front of Jasper and grabbed hold of the two guards’ wrists with one hand. In a few simple moves, he had the guards howling as they knelt on the floor.

The expression on Flynn’s face turned ugly as he watched his guards clutch their wrists and howl.

“You hit them?! You dare hit my people in my restaurant?!”

Flynn yelled in surprise as he pointed at Jasper and shouted angrily, “Just wait, you stupid foreigner! We’re not done here. You’d best stay here if you have the guts to do so!”

As Flynn spoke, he fished his phone out of his pocket and began making a call.

“I haven’t even had my meal yet, why would I run off?” Jasper asked calmly.

Those who could start businesses on Golden Pedestrian Street all had some level of connections and power. After a moment's thought, Jasper asked Julian to call and inform Victor of what was going on.

Dealing with the city hall was different from dealing with the usual forces. It was best to take care of things from the city hall's level instead of utilizing brute force.

Besides, Jasper planned to publicize what had just happened. Else, bad morale would spread throughout Golden Pedestrian Street if other stores all began imitating them. It would be difficult to remedy the issue if that happened.

Flynn had strong connections. Several uniformed men walked up the stairs after a mere ten minutes.

A calm and composed middle-aged man was among them.

"What's going on?" Scully Herrett asked the minute he arrived.

"Uncle, this is the guy who caused a ruckus in my restaurant and injured two of my guards. You must punish these foreigners severely, or I'll never be able to do business here! They'll all climb over my head!" Flynn immediately ran over to Scully and began complaining.

When he saw that many of the onlookers were tourists, Scully immediately frowned and berated, "Nonsense. Stop pinning the blame on foreigners all the time. How bad could their influence be?"

Then, Scully walked over to Jasper and asked in a low voice, "Did you beat up those two guards?"

Julian stepped forth. "I did."

Scully sneered. "Alright then. I'm in charge of both the property and the security in this area! You two come with me."

Life at the Top Chapter 647

Then, two employees came forth to grab Julian.

Julian frowned and turned to look at Jasper.

Jasper stood and stared at Scully as he said, "Are you going to arrest him without even clarifying the situation first? How high and mighty of you! Besides, what gives you the right to arrest him? Is it because you manage the property here, or because you work as the security here?"

Scully said angrily, "I don't care what reason you had. No matter the situation, hitting people is never the right thing to do, and you should take responsibility for your actions! If your attitude improves after you come with me, I can choose not to phone the police. Else, you're going to spend at least a couple of days in jail!"

Flynn became delighted and sneered as he said, "That's right, did you think you're God? Don't think you can leave here intact!"

Jasper glanced coldly at Scully as he said, "Think twice before bringing me away. You'll have to take responsibility for this."

Scully stared at Jasper and smiled coldly as he said, "From the looks of it, I'm guessing you have some sort of powerful background? I'm dreadfully sorry, but that doesn't mean a thing to me. I don't care who you are. How am I supposed to lead my team in the future if I don't teach you a lesson today?"

Scully had just finished speaking when an angered voice rang out behind him.

"Scully Herrett, just how are you going to lead your team?"

The expression on Scully's face changed when he heard that voice. Turning around, he saw Victor walking toward him with a dark expression on his face. He hurriedly said, "Director Gul, what are you doing here?"

Scully was panicking now because he knew Victor would not have come here for no apparent reason. Could it have anything to do with the young man before him?

What power did this young man hold to be able to summon Director Gul?

Scully immediately felt that things were going to get troubling.

"You would've been in deep trouble if I hadn't come!"

Victor's finger nearly poked Scully in the nose.

He had been present the entire time Jasper was negotiating with the deputy mayor, and he knew how much the deputy mayor had praised Jasper after the latter left.

Without taking other matters into account, the whole city hall would be having a meeting tomorrow to place their support on everything Jasper had invested in Waterhoof City.

Who could receive such treatment?

It would not be an exaggeration to say Jasper was Waterhoof City's God of Wealth now. Not even the deputy mayor would dare insult him.

Yet, Jasper was nearly arrested due to such trivial matters. Many people would be out of luck if a fuss was made over this.

"Director Gul, this is all a misunderstanding," Scully hurriedly explained.

Flynn panicked as well when he assessed the situation and instinctively said, "Director Gul, you might not know this, but these two were causing a ruckus in my restaurant. They even hurt my guards."

"Bullsh*t!"

As Victor yelled, Flynn received a shower of spit on his face.

"Mr. Laine has already told me what happened just now. You neglected to serve him and spoke rudely because you disliked how he only ordered a few cheap dishes. You were going to kick him out of the restaurant and have him arrested because of this. Flynn Herrett, who gave you the guts to do this? Was it you, Scully Herrett?!"

The expression on Scully's face changed as he hurriedly said, "No, Director Gul. How would I dare to do that?"

Victor glared at the two before he turned and smiled apologetically at Jasper. "Mr. Laine, I'm so sorry you had to go through that due to our inadequate management. We will definitely take this matter seriously and ensure you're satisfied."

Both Scully and Flynn were stunned when they witnessed Victor's attitude toward Jasper.

They had initially thought Victor was supporting Jasper because he was a youngster he had set his hopes on. However, they had not expected Victor to treat Jasper so respectfully.

"Who on earth are you?" Flynn managed to choke out the words as he glared at Jasper.

Life at the Top Chapter 648

“Who am I?”

Jasper smiled mischievously. “In your eyes, aren’t I just a stupid foreigner from the countryside who has never experienced the outside world?”

Jasper’s words were more effective than a slap as Flynn’s face turned bright red with a sting.

As he watched the color change on Flynn’s face, Jasper said calmly, “However, this country bumpkin might very well be your landlord as well!”

Then, Jasper turned to Victor and asked, “Director Gul, is this property included in my batch of commercial properties as well?”

Both Scully and Flynn were stunned when they heard that question.

What did he mean by his batch of commercial properties?

Could the word ‘batch’ be used as a measure word for commercial properties?

Victor nodded and answered, “Yes, it is.”

“That settles it, then. I’m your landlord,” Jasper said to Flynn.

Then, he narrowed his eyes slightly and turned to Victor as he said, “Director Gul, why don’t you sit down and have a meal with us since you’re already here?”

Victor smiled awkwardly as he said, “Mr. Laine, I can treat you to a meal if we go elsewhere. I don’t think this is a suitable place, do you?”

“Of course, it’s suitable. Why wouldn’t it be?”

“I’ve even ordered four dishes that haven’t been served yet.”

Helpless, Victor could only nod and sit down. At the same time, he glared at Scully and Flynn, his anger apparent in his eyes.

“Aren’t you going to serve the dishes Mr. Laine has ordered? Are you waiting for me to walk to the kitchen myself?”

Scully was smarter. Turning around, he slapped Flynn across the face and scolded him.

Flynn did not dare make even a peep although he had just been slapped. Frightened tears appeared in his aggrieved eyes as he ran down the stairs.

Jasper did not pay any attention to Scully, who did not know if he should sit down or remain standing. After a moment’s thought, Scully brazenly walked up to Jasper and poured him a glass of water. Smiling bitterly, he said, “Mr. Laine, I’ve spoiled my nephew to the point where he’s become arrogant. I hope you don’t mind.”

“He wouldn’t hold a grudge against me and poison my food, right?” Jasper seemed to be holding back a smile as he spoke.

Scully hurriedly answered, “No, no. He would never have the nerve to do that.”

“Mr. Herrett, I wonder how much money your nephew pays to rent this shop?”

The expression on Scully’s face changed abruptly when he heard that question. Smiling awkwardly, he answered, “Well, his circumstance was rather special, which is why he’s only charged 70,000 to 80,000 dollars rent.”

“Any two-floor shops in Waterhoof City would cost more than 70,000 to 80,000 dollars, right? Not to mention the fact that it’s on Golden Pedestrian Street,” Jasper said calmly.

Scully looked to Victor for help.

How could Victor not understand what the look on Scully’s face meant? Due to special circumstances, the commercial properties on this street required their own property company to manage and maintain order.

Scully was one of the people in charge of this company, but who would have expected for him to not only offend Jasper but also drag him into this mess?!

Victor coughed drily as he said to Jasper, “Mr. Laine, the city hall considered various factors back when the commercial properties were first put up for rent, which was why the rent was so cheap in those early stages. After all, the main focus during the early stages was to attract more businesses so we could drive up the area’s popularity and economic conditions.”

“I understand. After all, it must not be easy to work in the city hall.” Jasper was even more fluent than Victor in talking business, and he smiled as he spoke.

Victor was stunned. He had no idea what Jasper intended to do by drawing the conversation in this direction.

Just then, Flynn had hurriedly assembled a group of waiters and got them to serve the three dishes and one stew that Jasper had ordered as quickly as possible. He had also included seven to eight expensive dishes.

Both Scully and Victor cursed inwardly when they saw the seven to eight free dishes that were wildly expensive.

Sure enough, Jasper halted the conversation when he saw the additional dishes and asked, “Chef Herrett, did you think I didn’t order these dishes because I couldn’t afford them? Are you taking pity on me?”

Life at the Top Chapter 649

A trickle of cold sweat appeared on Flynn's forehead as he hurriedly explained, "No, I would never dare to do so. I'm just trying to make it up for how I offended you just now, Mr. Laine."

"Making up for a mistake is a must, but these aren't necessary. They won't solve the problem," Jasper said coldly.

"Stupid fool! Aren't you going to take them away?" Scully gritted his teeth as he bellowed at Flynn.

Flynn had no idea what he had done wrong. However, the only thing he could do was get his staff to remove all the dishes that had been added before he stood at attention on the sidelines.

Jasper used his fork to get himself a meatball and said to Victor, "Director Gul, let's eat. Don't be shy."

Victor laughed bitterly. He had no choice but to pick up his cutlery and begin eating, even if the food tasted bland to him.

"Let's continue with our previous conversation," Jasper said as he ate.

"I don't care how the leases for these commercial properties were worded previously. Either way, the previous leases will naturally all become invalid now that I've bought these 266 commercial properties. I wouldn't want any complicated relationships getting in the way of the area's advancement in the future."

“I spent so much money buying these commercial properties, there’s no way I’ll rent them out for 70,000 to 80,000 dollars. I wouldn’t be able to get even the interest back. Director Gull, I trust you guys would be able to understand, right?”

The expression on Victor’s face changed as he hurriedly said, “Don’t worry, Mr. Laine. I’ll take care of the relevant work to clear out all the problematic contracts.”

“That’s good. I won’t have to trouble anyone above you if that’s the case. After all, they have a lot of matters to take care of every day, and I would be embarrassed to trouble them with such trivial things,” Jasper said as he smiled.

Victor finally breathed a sigh of relief.

What Jasper said sounded soft and gentle, but in reality, it was an iron fist in a velvet glove.

He had made his meaning clear. Victor could be in charge of this if he was capable enough. If he was not, Jasper would look for his superiors.

How would Victor have the guts to let the deputy mayor know about the sh*tshow that had happened today? All the praises he received this afternoon would have been for nothing, and he might even end up getting punished instead.

Flynn felt his knees go weak when he finished listening to the conversation.

He was sure of one thing.

Jasper was really his landlord.

Not only was he his landlord, but he was the landlord for all 266 commercial properties on Golden Pedestrian Street!

266 commercial properties!

How f*cking much would that cost?!

Flynn did not even dare imagine how huge that figure was. However, he knew that even if every person he had met since he was born were to give him 100 dollars, he still would not have enough money to buy 266 commercial properties.

Face ashen, Flynn nearly fell to the ground. God knew what sort of big shot he had offended.

“There’s one other thing.”

Flynn shuddered instinctively and looked fearfully at Jasper when he spoke again. He had a feeling that whatever Jasper was going to say would be directed to him.

“I can’t control the other places, but I want all 266 tenants on Golden Pedestrian Street to view everyone as equals and treat each other with the same level of enthusiasm.

“To a lesser extent, the 266 commercial properties on Golden Pedestrian Street are my, Jasper Laine’s, property. But they represent the prestige of Waterhoof City to a greater extent. If the business operators here are all like Flynn Herrett, who serves customers based on the number of dishes they order and screams to have tourists kicked out of the place...

“...this pedestrian street would be ruined sooner or later. I will never allow my industry to be ruined by black sheep.”

Jasper slammed his fork down onto the table when he finished speaking. Standing, he took 200 dollars from his wallet and threw the bills down as he said, “Chef Herrett, I’ve paid for this meal. However, you have to take responsibility for your actions.”

As Jasper spoke, he smiled at Victor and said, “Director Gul, I’m going to have to trouble you.”

“Don’t worry, Mr. Laine. I know how I should take care of things. I’ll definitely give you results that you’ll be satisfied with.”

Victor had a solemn expression on his face as he nodded.

“Alright, we’ve finished eating. Julian, let’s go!”

Jasper stood and walked down the stairs with Julian. Those who stayed back had unusually complicated expressions on their faces.

Life at the Top Chapter 650

Julian seemed to have something he wanted to say to Jasper on the way back.

Jasper asked, “What’s up? You can say anything that’s on your mind, Julian. No need for formalities between us.”

Julian scratched his head as he said, “Jasper, will the person you called Director Gul be dissatisfied with the way you treated him just now? It might be a problem if he decides to make things difficult for you in the future.”

Jasper smiled as he said, “Julian, I realize that you’ve learned how to read people now.”

Julian said rather shyly, “I’ve slowly picked up on some things after spending time with you, Jasper. But there are some things I still can’t understand.”

“Well then, I’ll explain it to you.”

Jasper looked out the car window at the scenes of Waterhoof City that were flashing by and said, "We cannot treat Victor Gul as an individual when we deal with him.

"He represents the city hall of Waterhoof City. As businessmen, we only engage in legal trading and make our earnings via legal methods. Our relationship is a cooperative one rather than subordinative. Of course, I'm willing to cooperate with the workings of Waterhoof City Hall, but at the same time, they can't merely stay on the sidelines without lifting a finger when we're in trouble.

"The way I treated him tonight will be documented in a detailed report that will appear on the mayor's desk tomorrow. Thus, this is my way of making my stand known to Waterhoof City Hall."

Julian only understood half of what Jasper meant, but he still nodded. He did not know that what Jasper had just told him would be the real reason why JW Consortium could take the lead and dominate the market in the future.

"Jasper, how do you manage to think of so many things?" Julian asked curiously.

He sometimes thought that Jasper's brain was different from the average person's. He saw things as they were, but Jasper could manage to think outside the box.

"You learn to take more things into consideration after suffering losses," Jasper said slowly.

He had suffered multiple losses due to his simple mind in his past life.

Julian was even more confused now. He had never seen Jasper suffer losses ever since he started working for him. His opponents would always be the ones suffering losses... However, Julian did not ask any further questions. He knew he would never attain the same level of success as Jasper in his life.

Jasper got a call from Henry when he returned to the hotel.

“F*ck, are you having the time of your life in Waterhoof City?”

Henry, who was nearly drowning amidst a sea of project documents in his hotel room at Nauritius City, asked with a jealous expression on his face.

Jasper clicked his tongue as he said, “The streets of Waterhoof City are filled with beautiful ladies. It’s a pity you didn’t come along.”

Henry was even more distressed and had a bitter expression on his face as he threatened, “Don’t mess around. I won’t say more about Wendy Schuler since you guys got to know each other even earlier. However, as your future brother-in-law, I won’t allow you to continue being a womanizer after getting together with my sister.”

“Let’s get down to business. How’s it going with the matter I asked you to deal with?” Jasper could not be bothered to pay any attention to the man whose rationality was blinded by jealousy.

“I was just about to tell you. The chief designer from Gensler Design and Architecture Firm, Grant Morgan, will be rushing over with his team to meet you at Waterhoof City tomorrow.

“But I’m curious to know why you’re so insistent on using their design. Aren’t you going to consider the top architectural firms like SOM or KPF?”

Of course, Jasper would never tell Henry that in his past life, Waterhoof City Financial Tower only existed because it had been the design from Gensler Design and Architecture Firm that was selected.

“They might only be ranked fifth among the architecture firms in America, but their designs are not lacking compared to the four firms above them. Besides, design is something based on personal taste. There’s no such thing as the best design, only the design that best fits you.”

Life at the Top Chapter 651

Jasper explained casually.

“Alright, are you going to Coreana in a couple of days? Can you take me with you?” Henry grumbled.

“The amusement park will be completed in two months, and the Southface River Project will have already held its topping out by then. You should keep an eye on the amusement park and not go anywhere for these two months.” Jasper immediately rejected Henry’s request.

Henry himself knew he had his duties to tend to, but he was so used to being rebellious that his force of habit caused him to resist this little. However, he had no choice but to obey Jasper upon hearing his displeasure.

...

The next day, Jasper met with Grant and his team in the hotel.

“Mr. Laine, forgive me for being forward, but you’re so much younger than I imagined.”

Grant, who was one of America’s most well-known architects, was already past 60. He had met countless successful people, but they were all around his age.

Grant Morgan had thought his mysterious order from an Eastern country was from some rich kid who came from a prestigious family. He had not expected Jasper to have built his empire from the ground up.

He sighed in admiration as he gazed at Jasper, genuine respect and appreciation shining in his eyes.

Jasper smiled as he shook Grant's hand and said, "Mr. Morgan, thank you for your praise. I'm a big fan of Sky Theatre, the building in Sauof which you designed some time ago. In my opinion, you're the only architect who has succeeded in fusing both modernities with tradition among all other world-known architects."

People were supposed to praise each other. Grant was obviously pleased with Jasper's flattery as he said politely, "You're a very likable man, Mr. Laine. I think we're going to enjoy working with each other."

Smiling, Jasper invited Grant to take a seat as he said, "Henry Law has already explained the conditions of the surrounding terrain to you via email. May I know how long it will take for you to come up with a first draft for the design, Mr. Morgan?"

The expression on Grant's face turned serious as he said, "Mr. Laine, what you want to design is the tallest building in the world. A building that's at least 630 feet tall will pose a huge challenge to any architect. It's not an easy feat."

"But a design fee of 1.2 billion US dollars is not cheap either, is it? Furthermore, every architect dreams of designing the tallest building in the world. Wouldn't you want to put your best foot forward for that, Mr. Morgan?" Jasper asked as he laughed lightly.

Grant had an excited expression on his face as he said, "It's indeed tempting, which is why we rushed all the way here last night. We'll be conducting site visits this time. Do you have any other specific requests, Mr. Laine?"

Jasper said calmly, "I won't have much time because I'll be traveling to Coreana tomorrow. But I do have one request. It's to do what you do best, Mr. Morgan. I want you to combine both modernities and tradition. I want a skyscraper that the entire world will marvel at."

Grant said probingly, “This is a huge building that will require a lot of resources. Based on my team’s experience, we estimate that it won’t be possible without at least 15 billion Somer Dollars.”

Jasper massaged his temples. Grant’s statement had hit him where it hurt.

He had calculated the amount of money it would take to construct the building, and 15 billion Somer Dollars was only a modest estimate. In his past life, the construction of Waterhoof City Financial Tower had used a total of 17 billion dollars, while Jasper’s estimation was around 18 billion dollars.

This was just for the outer shell of the building. A tuned mass damper that needed to be used in reducing the building’s vibrations would already cost two billion dollars.

The cost required to purchase equipment and furnish the buildings would require at least another seven billion dollars.

An investment that cost nearly around 25 billion dollars was not something the average person could take part in.

Thus, Jasper realized that he was out of money!

Life at the Top Chapter 652

Jasper’s current financial situation was not complicated. He had about six billion dollars in funds in his investment company.

He had another billion dollars from his long-term investments in the country’s stock market.

He also had a little more in Harbor City, around four billion dollars.

Moreover, he had around 1.5 billion dollars in cash in his personal account.

Which meant Jasper could procure only 12.5 billion dollars if he did not sell any of his existing assets.

It was already a shocking number.

However, he had to take out 1.5 billion dollars from that 12.5 billion a couple of days later to pay Waterhoof City Hall as a deposit for the 266 commercial properties he had purchased on Golden Pedestrian Street.

Thus, Jasper would only have, at most, 11.1 billion dollars left.

It was still a mind-blowing number.

However, it was far from enough to construct the building that would require at least 25 billion dollars.

It was the first time Jasper was feeling poor since his reincarnation.

It was this sense of urgency from feeling poor that had Jasper in such a rush to travel to Coreana to obtain the agent rights for United Legends and the patent for the MP3 player.

These two projects would generate huge profits for Jasper within the next two years.

“Mr. Morgan, an architect is supposed to stick to the person in charge’s requests as closely as possible to complete the design, not worry about their financial status,” Jasper said as he smiled.

Grant laughed and said, “Mr. Laine, please don’t misunderstand. I just meant that I could come up with an even more radical design if you have the sufficient funds.”

“I wouldn’t want to design the tallest building in the world if I was being conservative, would I?” Jasper asked.

Grant’s eyes lit up. He could not care less about how much money Jasper had and whether he would go into debt by constructing this building. All he needed was a moneymaker who would fund his lifelong dream in architecture and let him work to his heart’s content for once.

“Mr. Laine, I understand what you mean now. I must say you’re one of the most special people of Somer descent that I’ve ever met. I have a feeling that we’ll not only be partners but also friends,” Grant said solemnly.

“That would be my honor.”

...

After four or five hours of bouncing off ideas with Grant’s team, Jasper finally got these western architects to understand how he wanted the building to look.

Grant’s team would stay in Waterhoof City to conduct inspections after this. Jasper could not get involved in this.

Jasper was satisfied when Grant’s team promised him they would come up with a design draft by the end of the month at the very latest. Taking Julian with him, the two boarded the plane to Coreana.

Nearly at the same time when Jasper and Julian were boarding the plane...

In an office in Coreana that belonged to the person who invented the MP3 player, Damond Golding.

“Mr. Conrad Monty, congratulations on obtaining the patent to sell MP3 players within Somerland.”

After exchanging contracts, Damond laughed and clapped Conrad on the shoulder as he spoke.

The patent fee cost 80 million US dollars, and Conrad would have to pay a commission fee of one US dollar for every MP3 player he produced.

These terms were enough for Damond to treat Conrad as his closest business partner.

Although the MP3 player had only recently started gaining popularity, the majority of the people had yet to fully accept this product. Additionally, Somerland’s level of consumption was still extremely low, which was why Damond had not expected to earn much from selling the patent.

However, Conrad’s generosity managed to both shock and surprise him.

Life at the Top Chapter 653

People of Somer descent were really stupid people with a lot of money.

However, Conrad was extremely satisfied. After he rejected Damond’s invitation to stay back for dinner, he left the office with the patent licensing agreement.

In his car downstairs, Conrad flipped through the documents he was holding as he said calmly, “So, this is what Jasper Laine wanted so badly?”

A look of deep hatred flashed through Conrad’s eyes when Jasper’s name was mentioned.

His previous defeat had been so painful he would probably be depressed now if it were not for his strong will.

He had only managed to snap out of it in the shortest time possible when his father related to him a piece of news.

According to a reliable source, Jasper was just about to head to Coreana to negotiate for a patent for MP3 players.

That proved why Jasper had spent so much money taking away the right to represent the electronics industry from the Hanks family.

Admittedly, it might be to defeat the Hanks family. However, there were plenty of ways to defeat the Hanks family. There was no need to pick the most costly one.

More importantly, Jasper had even increased his investment in electronics after the Hanks family was defeated.

“JW Electronics spent 60 million dollars in a week to purchase four product lines. Preparations for the plant, equipment, and its employees are in full swing right now, and it’s all for this?”

Conrad smiled as he pinched the documents in his hands.

He would take everything Jasper wanted from him. He wondered what the expression on Jasper’s face would be like when he made the long trip here and realized that Conrad had been a step faster than him.

His assistant, who was sitting in front, turned and asked confusedly, “Mr. Monty, Damond Golding knows he’s committing daylight robbery on us. He sold his patent to other countries for half the price he offered us, and yet you still agreed to it?”

Conrad said calmly, “I don’t mind giving him a little more money. After all, these problems can all be solved using money.”

“Jasper must think this product will do well if he’s this desperate to get his hands on the patent. The people I sent to research the market will return with results soon. I’m more than willing to dominate the market for MP3 players in the country before Jasper does.

“Even if we don’t make any money, this deal will be considered a success as long as we manage to make him feel pissed.”

The assistant shrugged and said, “Mr. Monty, in my opinion, you could just get someone to kill arrogant men like him.”

“This is why you can only work as my assistant and can’t hope to fly solo,” Conrad answered calmly.

Realizing that he had said something wrong, the assistant hurriedly changed the subject and said, “So are we going back to the hotel now?”

“We’re flying back home now. I want to finish assembling the production line before Jasper does. Let’s see how he can retaliate this time!” Conrad said coldly.

...

This was Jasper’s first time traveling overseas. In his past life, a colleague of his had a girlfriend who worked as a personal shopper. She frequently posted photos of her plane tickets and the products she had bought on Instagram.

Ever since then, Coreana had established itself as a modern, commercial country in Jasper’s mind.

In reality, Coreana did not disappoint Jasper as well.

Sela, Coreana’s financial hub, was an area that exuded strong business vibes. Tall buildings could be seen everywhere, and the faces of every person on the crowded streets were lit up by flashing neon lights. Everyone seemed to be hurrying as if they had countless matters to attend to.

The person whom the Law family had appointed to be in charge of the Sela office had come to pick them up from the airport. His name was Edmond Kelley.

After exchanging greetings, Jasper was sitting in the car and admiring the beauty of Sela when Edmond, who had just contacted one of his men through the phone, broke the news to Jasper with an uncomfortable expression on his face.

“Mr. Laine, we’ve contacted Damond Golding’s office and expressed our intent to visit as per your request. However, we’ve been informed that the patent for Somerland has already been purchased by someone else.”

The expression on Jasper’s face turned incredibly dark when he heard that.

Life at the Top Chapter 654

Jasper never thought that he would end up being intercepted by someone else when he had been using his memories from his past life to progress without any hiccups thus far.

He had always been the one who intercepted others. What did this mean?

Did that mean things were returning to bite him on his bottom?

At the same time, this served as a punishment to Jasper. It led him to understand that his memories from before he reincarnated were not invincible, and mistakes were inevitable. He could not rely solely on his memory to do anything.

Else, he would suffer great losses.

“Can you find out who it is?” Jasper managed to recover from the regret and anger he was experiencing. He chose to focus his attention on solving the problem instead.

Edmond breathed a sigh of both relief and admiration when he saw how quickly Jasper had managed to regulate his emotions.

“Damond isn’t willing to disclose that information. He says they’ve signed a privacy policy.”

Jasper laughed coldly as he said, “Is he afraid his thieving actions will be exposed? Let’s see if he’ll be able to never use that patent after buying it.”

According to his memories from his past life, no one in the country had bought the patent for MP3 players. Even in his later life, fake ones could be found everywhere on the streets. Any random workshop could produce one, but no one had ever bought the patent for it.

After all, the country had been known for its counterfeit products then.

In many cases, patents were the last resort for many companies to avoid repercussions.

For example, Jasper’s goal was to establish a multinational consortium, so he could not let foreigners use any issues regarding patents against him.

Thus, whoever had managed to buy the patent for MP3 players was definitely coming for him.

Who could it be?

Countless thoughts emerged and dissipated from his mind. Sighing lightly, Jasper said, “Make an appointment with Damon Golding for me. Tell him I would like to have breakfast with him tomorrow morning.”

Edmond nodded and said, “Very well, Mr. Laine. I’ll do that right now.”

“That’s right, about Damond, I have zero understanding of him. Did you make any preparations on that part?” Jasper asked.

Edmond smiled and said, “Mr. Laine, this is what the office was established to do. Don’t worry. According to our sources, Damon has a 16-year-old daughter who he treasures a lot. We’ll prepare the relevant gifts tomorrow.”

Jasper nodded in satisfaction.

At the same time, he observed the difference between himself and the Law family.

The Law family had even established an office in Coreana for the sole purpose of finding out what the higher-ups liked and forming good relations with them. This way, they would be giving themselves a chance to collaborate in the future.

It was his first time in Coreana, and if he had not had the help of the Law family’s office here, he would be running around like a headless chicken.

After all, the local higher-ups could not care less about who he was. It was not that simple to arrange a meeting with them.

JW still had a lot of room for growth in this area.

When they returned to the hotel, Jasper shut himself in the study for three to four hours. He did not come out for meals even when Julian called for him.

However, Jasper was not demotivated. Instead, he was working hard to solve the crisis at hand.

He got in touch with Anna who was far away from him in the west.

“Hey, busy bee. You’re finally the one who called first.”

Life at the Top Chapter 655

On the other end of the video call, Anna's background showed that the sun was shining where she was. She was sitting in an office, her delicate fingers fiddling with a pencil as she rebuked him.

Jasper said somewhat embarrassedly, "I've been really busy. A lot has happened."

"My dad told me all about it. Everything's been taken care of now, right?" Anna asked as she smiled slightly.

As he nodded, Jasper was still thinking about how he should bring up the topic when he heard Anna say, "So tell me, how can I help you?"

"How did you know?" Jasper asked in surprise.

Anna's flirtatious behavior was evident even though she was thousands of miles away. She stared at Jasper with her beautiful eyes and said, "I know you better than you think I do."

Seeing how his goal had been exposed, Jasper gave up trying to be secretive and said, "I remember you once told me you had a friend who's part of the Sentel family?"

Anna nodded and said, "That's right. She's the third granddaughter of Sentel Corporation's current president, Kit Lang. We're on pretty good terms."

Jasper hurriedly said, "I was hoping you could introduce us."

Anna said in surprise, "You want to meet her? That might be a challenge."

“What’s wrong?” Jasper asked as he frowned.

“She just left for Greece last week and won’t be back for another month.

“But can you tell me what’s going on?” Anna asked.

Jasper did not hide anything from her and told her his objective, “I’m planning to buy the patent for MP3 players from Sentel Corporation.”

Anna was startled. She might not be in the business sector, but she was still part of the Law family and was well-informed in what went on in the business sector.

She said, “I’ve heard of MP3 players, but I remember the person who invented it is Damond Golding, the current president of Sunrea Company. Although he used to work in Sentel, the patent was only completed after he began working at Sunrea. Shouldn’t you meet with Damond instead of Sentel if you intend to purchase a patent?”

Jasper smiled as he said, “There are still things you don’t know about. Back when Damond was working in Sentel, he was already using the company’s resources to design the first MP3 player. He had even built a prototype, but Sentel didn’t pay much attention to it at that time.

“Damond only arrived at Sunrea after Sentel encountered a financial crisis and fired him.

“According to Coreana law, Sentel has the right to 50% of the patent because Damond used the company’s resources to complete his invention while he was still employed there.

“However, Damond was given priority to its benefits, which is why Sentel is not earning from the sales of MP3 players even though they’re slowly gaining popularity now. Not only is this patent worthless to Sentel, but it also annoys them.”

“So, you’re planning to buy off the 50% of the patent that Sentel holds?” Anna immediately understood what Jasper was thinking after a brief explanation.

Jasper sighed and said, “As Coreana’s largest monopolistic corporation, Sentel is both a brutal and greedy corporation. Moreover, this affair will include several legal disputes, which is why I’m leaning more toward purchasing the patent from Damond. However, I’ve been intercepted. This is my only way now.”

“You’ve been intercepted?” Anna asked as she raised an eyebrow.

“I’ll help you get in touch with Sentel, it shouldn’t be a problem. But you can’t just ignore the fact that you’ve been intercepted. Do you have any ideas yet?”

“Seems like I can’t fool you,” Jasper said as he smiled.

“It’ll be impossible for me to get the patent from Damond now. Since that’s the case, I can still obtain authorization to upgrade the MP3 players. By promising to upgrade and develop the technology used in MP3 players, Damond will waiver his rights to the patent.

“The technology used to produce MP3 players isn’t that advanced. It can easily become MP4 or MP5 players if we just change the design slightly and conduct a little product iteration. That way, not only can I dodge past the patent required for MP3 players, but I can also force the person who intercepted me into a dead end.”

“We’ll see who’s the embarrassed one when that happens,” Anna said happily as she immediately caught onto Jasper’s train of thought.

Jasper’s eyes shone as he said slowly, “That’s right, but Damond only holds 50% of the patent’s ownership and priority rights. Thus, the 50% of rights that Sentel holds to the patent is key!”

Life at the Top Chapter 656

It could not be denied Anna had an extremely strong network and public relations skills.

The next morning, Jasper was on his way to meet Damond when he received an email from the office of Sentel Corporation's president.

He had one hour to meet with the current president of Sentel Corporation, Emerson Lang, this afternoon.

Jasper's brows, which had been tightly knotted the entire night, finally relaxed when he received the news.

As long as he was given the chance to converse with the higher-ups at Sentel Corporation, Jasper was confident he could persuade the other party.

After all, they were both businessmen. He knew what Sentel Corporation wanted.

Jasper met with Damond at the cafe below Sunrea Company.

Unlike the frail, old man he had seen in pictures from his past life, Damond was still a little chubby now. However, just like most people in the tech industry, the top of his head was balding.

"How do you do, President Golding? I'm Jasper Laine from Somerland." Jasper took the initiative to introduce himself first.

In his past life, Jasper had spent a lot of effort on mastering Coreana's national language just so he could secure himself a customer from Coreana. Thus, he was quite fluent in the language.

Halfway through the meal, Jasper retrieved a large present that had been prepared by Edmond.

“President Golding, I heard your daughter grew up in the Netherlands and has a particular affinity for the tulips there. I’ve specially prepared these purple tulips that usually only the royalty have access to. I hope both you and your daughter enjoy them.”

Damond happily took the present from him and said, “Mr. Laine, I must say that your present is extremely apt. I was just fretting about what I should give her for her 17th birthday party. Many thanks.”

Damond smiled as he invited Jasper to take a seat and asked, “Mr. Laine, I was wondering if you’re used to having a typical breakfast most people from Coreana have?”

“I’m the type of person to go with the flow, and I’m not picky with my food either,” Jasper said as he smiled.

Damond nodded in approval before he ordered two typical breakfast sets.

“I’ve been frequenting this cafe for several years. Their food is extremely tasty to me. I hope you’ll enjoy it too, Mr. Laine.”

Jasper felt his scalp grow numb as he stared at the various plates of pickles before him.

However, he seemed at ease as he chewed on the sour, pungent pickles. He looked completely comfortable with the food here.

Jasper’s attitude caused Damond to take a liking to him, and he said, “Coreana’s food is the best in the world. I’m extremely happy that a person of Somer descent like you would like it too, Mr. Laine. I had a former customer from Somerland who could not get used to the taste.”

Jasper said meaningfully, “But that customer from Somerland must have gotten what he wanted from you, right, President Golding?”

Damond took a sip of seafood broth and smiled as he said, “Mr. Laine, you must understand that I can’t reveal anything more to you due to the privacy policy.”

“I understand,” Jasper said and shrugged before immediately continuing, “Frankly, I was also planning on buying the patent to sell MP3 players in Somerland from you, President Golding. However, it seems that this is impossible now.”

Damond had a curious expression on his face as he said, “From what I understand, the economy in Somerland is still extremely stunted, and citizens would never be able to purchase an MP3 player with their current consumption level. Why the sudden fight to obtain a patent from me?”

“President Golding, you must understand that there will always be a way of earning money in this world. The only difference is that some can do it themselves, while others can only imitate,” Jasper said.

“Seems like you have a plan of your own, Mr. Laine,” Damond said.

Life at the Top Chapter 657

“I’ll be direct with you. I’m planning to purchase a letter of authorization from you that allows me to upgrade the MP3 players, President Golding,” Jasper said.

Startled, the smile on Damon’s face grew cold as he said, “Mr. Laine, do you think you have more advanced techniques than I have and that the MP3 player can be further improved?”

“Yes.” Jasper paid no attention to the indignant expression on Damon’s face as he answered confidently.

Damond sneered as he said, “Mr. Laine, I think our conversation has been an utter waste of time. I will never allow anyone to exploit my patent. I don’t need an outsider to come here and say they want to upgrade my inventions!”

“President Golding, you may be a technician, but you’re also a businessman. Why wouldn’t you take advantage of this situation to earn more money if you think the MP3 player has no further room for improvement?” Jasper asked.

Damond laughed and said, “You’re an excellent negotiator, but I won’t fall for your tricks. Goodbye, Mr. Laine!”

Then, Damond got up and left.

“President Golding, it’s extremely rude to up and leave when the other person has not finished speaking. I thought people from Coreana were extremely particular about manners?” Jasper asked.

“I’ll only take a couple of minutes of your time, President Golding. After all, I have many matters to tend to as well. For example, I have a meeting with the president of Sentel Corporation, Emerson Lang, this afternoon.”

When he heard Jasper’s words, Damond finally realized that this young man from Somerland was entirely different from Conrad Monty, whom he had met with before this. This man was like a sly fox and much more difficult to deal with.

“What do you mean?” Damond asked expressionlessly.

“Truth is, Sentel Corporation could not be bothered with your invention of the MP3 player, Mr. Damon. Thus, even though the MP3 player is slowly gaining attention, Sentel Corporation can’t do anything with the half of the patent it owns because you’re currently employed in Sunrea Company, President Golding.

“I trust no one would be pleased with this, would they? Much less a multinational group like Sentel Corporation? You must’ve had a front-row seat in witnessing just how overbearing they could be, President Golding.”

“Are you threatening me?” Damond said as he laughed coldly.

“I’m a businessman from Somerland, not an employee at Sentel Corporation. I have no right to threaten you, President Golding, but I need you to understand what will happen if I obtain 50% of the patent and upgrade the technology in the existing MP3 players.

“When that happens, your MP3 players will be blocked by my patent. You will have to either pay huge amounts of money to get past the barriers or turn around and purchase the rights to use from me. President Golding, this is not a good deal, is it?”

Damond glanced darkly at Jasper as he said, “Are all Somerland businessmen as despicable as you are?”

“No, I’m not being despicable. I merely hope we can build a strong base for our collaboration, President Golding,” Jasper said as he smiled.

“How are you so confident that you’ll be able to upgrade the MP3 players and receive the market’s approval?” Damond asked expressionlessly.

“That’s my business, President Golding. All you have to do is think about how much you’ll price this authorization letter for me and then receive the check. Everyone will be delighted then,” Jasper said calmly.

“One billion US dollars.” Damond quoted his price after a moment’s thought.

Jasper laughed in disbelief.

“President Golding, are you joking?”

“I would immediately pay up if this were the price for the patent. However, are you going to charge me one billion US dollars for only half of an authorization letter to upgrade the technology?”

Damond laughed coldly as he said, “That’s my condition. It’s up to you whether or not you’ll accept it, Mr. Laine.”

“How about we make a bet?”

Life at the Top Chapter 658

“A bet?”

Damond looked like he had just heard a joke. “What are you going to bet?”

“It’s simple.”

Jasper gazed confidently at Damond and said, “Let’s make a bet since you think I can’t upgrade the MP3 player. If I manage to successfully upgrade the MP3 player, you’ll have to give me the authorization letter for free.”

“What if you fail?” Damond was now interested as he asked.

“If I fail...” Jasper shrugged and said nonchalantly, “I’ll give you two billion US dollars.”

“You Somerland people are really sly.”

When Damond heard what Jasper said, he was obviously unhappy but still smiled coldly at Jasper with an expression that screamed ‘I’ve already seen through your tricks!’

Jasper narrowed his eyes as he gazed at Damon, waiting for him to continue.

Sure enough, Damond soon spoke again, “We haven’t agreed on a time. Will I have to spend the next ten years waiting for you if you take ten years to do it? Thus, I’ll only give you three months.”

Damond glanced confidently at Jasper. He was convinced Jasper would never dare agree to such harsh terms.

In his opinion, the technology used in MP3 players might have room for improvement, but there was no way anything could be accomplished in three months.

How long did it take him to create the MP3 player from nothing?

Two whole years!

One also had to put in mind that he was one of Coreana’s best experts in the tech industry.

In Damon’s opinion, Somerland was a poor, backward place that would never be able to produce a talent half as talented as he was.

They might require half a year to just understand the technology used in his MP3 players.

Thus, how was it possible that Jasper could upgrade it in three months?

However, it was beyond his expectation that Jasper did not have an indignant expression on his face and even breathed a sigh of relief after hearing what he said.

“Alright.”

Jasper's determined one-word answer immediately caused Damond to feel like he had walked straight into Jasper's trap.

Damond tried his best to recall every detail in the conversation they just had. The second he realized that it really was a trap, he would immediately go back on his promise. After all, nothing had been written down on paper yet.

However, the more he thought about it, the more Damond realized this deal would only bring him benefits. He had a clear advantage.

Glancing suspiciously at Jasper, Damond laughed coldly and said, "You'd best think it through. You won't be able to pull out halfway once the bet is made!"

Jasper immediately beckoned for a waiter to hand them a sheet of paper and a pen. The pen scratched across the paper as he wrote down the details of their bet. Handing the paper to Damon, he said, "Please sign it if you don't have any questions."

Damond frowned as he took the agreement and realized it had been phrased carefully. There were no loopholes that could be found.

That made Damond think of Jasper as a proud fool who was practically dumping money at his doorstep.

"You people of Somer descent are really rich."

After saying that one sentence with a meaningful look on his face, Damond spun his pen and signed his name on the contract.

"You can use my patent now that this agreement exists. I'll get someone to send over the relevant information this afternoon. However, you must remember that you'll have to pay me two billion US dollars if you fail to upgrade the MP3 player within three months."

Life at the Top Chapter 659

Damond shot a warning glare at Jasper before adding, "I won't mind fighting an international lawsuit for two billion US dollars."

"Don't worry, President Golding."

Jasper carefully tucked away his copy of the agreement and smiled as he said, "If you win, I won't be a sore loser."

"Hopefully."

When Damond finished speaking, he stood and stared deep into Jasper's eyes. 'Such arrogance! You will pay for your words and actions. Your technology is so backward there's no way you'll be able to decipher and upgrade my technology within three months!'

"I'm looking forward to the day you wire two billion US dollars into my account."

Then, Damond turned and left.

Jasper remained seated and waited until Damond had left for his office before standing up.

When he walked to the door and saw Julian, who was waiting for him, Jasper immediately took Julian to a nearby burger joint.

The food in Coreana was disgusting.

While they ate, Jasper shared what had happened during the meeting earlier like how one would share anecdotes.

Julian was a martial artist who was not sensitive to the mutual deception going on in the business industry. However, he was extremely displeased that Damond had looked down on his country.

“If I ever meet anyone like that, I’ll make sure they get firsthand experience of the beauty of Somerland’s martial arts!” Julian huffed.

Smiling, Jasper sipped on his tea and said, “It’s the same concept of them needing to drink seafood broth first thing in the morning while we drink tea instead. Everyone has their traditions and culture, but it doesn’t matter if you drink seafood broth or tea, you shouldn’t look down on anyone else.

“I have my ways of teaching such people a lesson so memorable they’ll shudder every time they hear the word ‘Somer’ in the future.

“It was a spur of the moment thing and didn’t mean much,” Jasper said calmly.

If today’s bet were made between anyone else in the world today, it would only end badly.

Damond Golding might be a despicable person, but he was so skilled in technology that he would still hold his position at the top of the industry even after ten years had passed.

However, Jasper had the advantage of being reincarnated, so he knew the first version of the MP3 player was filled with mistakes. All he needed to do was give it a few upgrades before he could market it as a completely new version.

Consumers were not idiots. They could discern if a product was good or bad.

Without taking anything else into account, he would surpass all the original MP3 players just by adding a screen that could show the name of the song and its lyrics.

When such a product was released to the market, Jasper was confident he would be able to cause whoever had taken his patent to become bankrupt.

As for Damond Golding, he would be shocked when he realized he had ended up worse off after trying to gain an advantage!

After they were done eating, Jasper arrived at Sentel Corporation when it was almost time for his meeting.

It was much easier than Jasper had expected to meet with the president of a corporation ranked annually within the top 100 of Fortune 500 companies.

“Mr. Laine, I know you’re a friend of Ms. Sylphie, but you’ll have to forgive me for only being able to give you an hour because of how busy I am.”

Emerson, who already had gray hair even though he was only 50 years old, spoke politely to Jasper as they sat in his spacious office.

Sylphie, who was Anna’s best friend, was also the third granddaughter of Sentel Corporation. Upon her referral, Emerson had taken time out of his day to meet Jasper even though he was extremely busy.

Jasper accepted Emerson’s invitation to sit down on the couch that was prepared for guests. He understood that the Ms. Sylphie he had just referred to must be the princess of Sentel Corporation.

“I won’t beat around the bush then, Mr. Lang. I’m here because I hope to purchase the half of the patent Sentel Corporation owns for MP3 players.”

Life at the Top Chapter 660

Emerson looked startled for a split second before he rang the call bell.

“Get the head of the patent department here.”

Several seconds later, an elegantly dressed woman in her 40s hurried over to Emerson’s office.

“This is Mr. Laine from Somerland. He wants to purchase the half of the patent the corporation owns for MP3 players. Is there such a thing?”

Jasper felt slightly disgruntled when he heard Emerson’s question.

He had been rushing to places for the MP3 player patent and was close to using up all his tricks and contacts.

However, in Sentel Corporation, the MP3 player patent was not even worth remembering for these higher-ups.

The woman was skilled in her job and immediately began explaining how the patent had come about.

After understanding everything that had happened, Emerson got her to leave before he smiled at Jasper. He said, “Sorry about that, Mr. Laine. We have tens of thousands of patents registered under the company’s name, which is why I can’t possibly remember everything.”

“I understand.”

Jasper, who was thinking to himself that JW still had a long way to go, answered calmly.

“I’ve now understood the situation. You heard it too. The legal department has been gearing up to sue both the patent office and Damond Golding. After all, this is a loss for the company as well.”

“I understand, which is why I’m now offering you a way to get rid of it once and for all,” Jasper said with a smile.

“By buying it? Forgive me for being straightforward but there’s no use in buying only 50% of the ownership as it’s not entitled to any priorities, Mr. Laine. Even Sentel Corporation would have to resolve the situation via legal means... Or have you made an agreement of sorts with Damond Golding, Mr. Laine?”

As the president of Sentel Group, Emerson’s train of thought was extremely sharp and agile. He only needed a couple of minutes to come up with a hypothesis that was very close to the truth.

Jasper was not planning to hide matters as the other party would find out sooner or later. He took the contract and showed it to Emerson.

After looking through its contents, Emerson said in surprise, “Mr. Laine, this contract is extremely disadvantageous to you.”

“I’ve requested Damond to sign it. He had no reason to say no to such a bargain. However, you can just think of it as preparing your bait before you fish,” Jasper said as he smiled.

Emerson laughed and said, “Thank you for your honesty, Mr. Laine. You didn’t need to tell me about this, but I can sense your sincerity from your actions.

“To be honest, I would be happy to see Damond suffer losses too. After all, he’s considered a traitor to the company.”

'You were the one who kicked him out of the company during the layoffs that happened when you suffered an economic crisis, and yet, you're calling him a traitor.'

Jasper muttered sarcastically to himself but put on a surprised expression.

"So, do we have a deal?"

Emerson smiled and said, "In theory, there should be no problem. After all, the company is not interested in doing much with the MP3 players, and it would take a long time to file a lawsuit. If you're interested, Mr. Laine, we would be happy to sell you our half of the patent.

"Since you're a friend of Ms. Sylphie, you'll be given special treatment in regards to the price. How does 20 million US dollars for a buyout sound?"

In all honesty, 20 million US dollars was extremely cheap.

However, to Sentel Corporation, they would have earned 20 million US dollars for absolutely nothing.

After all, all Sentel Corporation had done to obtain this patent was provide some equipment. The thought process and skills that went into this all belonged to Damond Golding. All they had to do was sit back and enjoy the benefits it brought.

Jasper did not dwell too much on these problems and immediately agreed.

"Deal."

Emerson smiled as he stood and said while shaking Jasper's hand, "You're a very frank person, Mr. Laine. I'll arrange to have the relevant information prepared as soon as possible."

Life at the Top Chapter 661

“I will give you the check once I get my hands on the material.”

Emerson Lang chuckled. He knew that Jasper understood his good intentions.

20 million US dollars was a drop in the ocean for a company like Sentel Corporation.

Emerson could have easily chosen not to sell the patent rights for the MP3, but he had decided to do so at an extremely reasonable price. This was because he wanted to befriend Jasper, who seemed to personally know the princess of Sentel Corporation.

It was easy to deal with smart people. As long as they understood each other's intentions, not everything had to be stated out in the open.

After both of them signed the contract, Jasper prepaid an amount of 10 million US dollars. At that moment, someone barged into Emerson's office.

“Uncle, did Ms. Sylphie introduce a man to the company?!”

The person who barged into the room was a young man. Once he entered the room, he immediately fired a question at Emerson.

Emerson frowned. “Mr. Jonathan, this is the office of the group president. If you want to see me, you need to have a valid reason, and you need to make an appointment through my secretary!” He reprimanded the young man.

With his immaculate appearance, Jonathan Lang looked more like a pop star than a company president. He fixed a glare upon Jasper and grumbled, “What about him? Isn't he the person that Ms. Sylphie introduced to the company? Did he make an appointment?"

"Mr. Jonathan! Remember your position!" Emerson voiced out. He was obviously angry.

"You're just the president of one of the company's branches. You don't have the right to yell at me in the office of the group president. Did I teach you to behave in this way?"

Jonathan cast a vicious and envious glare at Jasper. He then lowered his head and apologized to Emerson. "I'm sorry, Mr. Emerson," he said.

"Get out!" Emerson shouted.

Jonathan clenched his fists and continued to stand his ground. "I won't go out. I need to know what is the relationship between him and Ms. Sylphie," he said in a determined tone.

"Is this something that you should be concerned about?" Emerson asked with a frigid voice. "Don't make me repeat myself a third time. Get out!"

Jonathan's face flushed red in anger. He fixed a deadly glare upon Jasper, then turned around and left the room in a fury.

"My apologies, Mr. Laine. Sorry you had to witness that," Emerson told Jasper.

"It's alright. Mr. Jonathan must have misunderstood," Jasper said in an even tone.

"He's way too spoilt," Emerson said. His voice revealed his dissatisfaction toward his nephew.

Even so, Jasper did not want to be involved in Emerson Lang's family matters. They exchanged a few more courtesies before Emerson's secretary reminded him that an hour had passed. Thus, Jasper bid him farewell politely.

Both parties had decided to complete the deal within the shortest amount of time possible. Because of this, Jasper left Emerson's office feeling fully satisfied.

Jasper had not walked far from the office and was just about to enter the elevator when a hand reached out and blocked the elevator entrance.

Jasper raised his eyes and looked over. Jonathan Lang had been waiting for him all this time.

"What's your relationship with Sylphie?" Jonathan asked, his voice tinged with jealousy.

"We don't know each other," Jasper replied.

He would not lie to Jonathan on purpose, nor did he want to explain anything to him. He had managed to obtain Sylphie Lang's recommendation because of Anna Law's connections.

He had never even seen the princess of Sentel Corporation.

"That's pure bullsh*t!" Jonathan exclaimed. Obviously, he did not believe him.

"Everyone knows that Ms. Sylphie never intervenes in company matters. However, she personally asked my uncle for a favor because of you. Yet, you're telling me that you don't know her?" Jonathan roared.

Life at the Top Chapter 662

“I think you must have misunderstood.”

A slight frown formed on Jasper’s face as he explained patiently, “There isn’t any special relationship between Ms. Sylphie and me. I only came to the company for business.”

Jonathan sneered as he continued to glare at Jasper. “I don’t care why you’re here at the company, but let me warn you. Ms. Sylphie is the princess of Sentel Corporation. She would never have a relationship with a foreigner no matter what,” he growled.

“You’d better give up on your devious intentions.”

Jonathan then lowered his voice and inched closer to Jasper’s ear. “You do know that you’re just an outsider here, right? If you aren’t honest, you may disappear from the face of the earth without anyone realizing. Nobody will bother to find out what happened to you,” he said coldly.

Jasper stared at Jonathan calmly. “From the tone of your voice, I can tell that you aren’t joking, Mr. Jonathan,” he replied.

Jonathan snickered. “As long as you are aware. Don’t forget where we are right now. This isn’t Somerland. Don’t entertain any thoughts that you shouldn’t have. Otherwise, you’ll meet a terrible end. Do you understand?” He growled.

Jasper did not mind Jonathan’s threats; He did not refute him either.

At least Jonathan had said something right. This was Coreana, not Somerland. Jasper did not want to make any enemies here.

Furthermore, it would not be worth doing so over a woman he had never even met.

In Jasper's opinion, he may never cross paths with someone like Jonathan Lang ever again, so why should he hold a grudge against someone like that?

Jonathan scoffed loudly after seeing Jasper enter the elevator. Upon turning around, he caught sight of Emerson's secretary.

Jonathan instantly figured out Jasper's intentions after hearing Emerson's secretary speak to him.

"Mr. Jonathan, this deal had been specially ordered by Mr. Emerson, and it will be completed in the afternoon," the secretary explained cautiously. She understood Jonathan's character extremely well.

Jonathan stared at her with wide eyes and asked, "How could he sell a patent to Jasper Laine for only 20 million US dollars? This is the corporation's property. My uncle obviously intends to befriend him. I do not agree with him on this matter!"

The secretary had an awkward expression etched across her face.

"Alright, don't worry about it. I'll handle this issue."

After ending their conversation curtly, Jonathan left with the documents regarding the said deal.

Utopia Beauty was the top medical beauty company in Coreana. From cosmetic surgery to cosmetic equipment, this company monopolized the medical beauty industry in the country.

However, not many people knew that this medical beauty company had been established by Sentel Corporation. It was owned by none other than the princess of Sentel Corporation, Sylphie Lang.

After leaving Sentel Corporation, Jonathan arrived at the headquarters of Utopia Beauty.

Jonathan walked into the office courteously. Obsession and passion flashed across his gaze when he caught sight of Sylphie, who was busy approving documents at her desk. “Ms. Sylphie,” he greeted.

Sylphie was now between twenty-four to twenty-five years old. She was at a critical period where her youthfulness was slowly transitioning into maturity. With a graceful figure and a beautiful face, she had the perfect mixture of girlish features and womanlike charm.

Her gaze remained fixed on the documents as her head remained lowered. “Mr. Jonathan, I had previously told you not to disturb me if there was nothing important to discuss,” she said nonchalantly.

“This time it’s something important,” Jonathan told her confidently.

Thus, Sylphie raised her head to look at Jonathan.

Jonathan felt heat flare across his body when Sylphie cast her gaze on him. He called out eagerly, “Ms. Sylphie...”

Life at the Top Chapter 663

“Please address me as the president when you’re in the company,” Sylphie said with a frown.

Jonathan immediately changed the way he addressed her. “President Sylphie, let me explain the situation. I found out that my uncle is selling a company-owned patent at a low price in order to get on someone’s good side,” he told her.

Sylphie was shocked upon hearing what he said. “Mr. Jonathan, it seems like you’re one who places righteousness above familial loyalty. However, shouldn’t you report something like this to the company discipline department? I’m not working in the corporation. Why are you telling me this?”

“That’s because I think that this incident has something to do with you, President Sylphie. It’s likely that someone is using your name to scam the corporation, and my uncle is simply a victim of this fraud,” Jonathan explained righteously.

Sylphie responded in an interested tone. “This has something to do with me? Explain everything to me in detail,” she said.

With that, Jonathan explained the deal between Jasper and the corporation in to Sylphie. “Jasper Laine asked for such a low price just because you recommended him to the company, Ms. Sylphie. MP3 is now a very popular product in the West,” he asserted eloquently.

“How could he buy a patent of a product like that just for 20 million US dollars? That is daylight robbery!”

“Indeed, I was the one who recommended Jasper Laine. What do you think we should do about this?” Sylphie asked calmly. Her tone and her expression were unreadable.

Jonathan replied proudly, “Obviously, this deal should be cancelled immediately. After that, tell Jasper Laine that if he wants to buy the patent, that he can buy it at the market price. It is worth at least 50 million US dollars. Otherwise, he should just scam!”

“You’re raising the price from 20 to 50 million US dollars. Mr. Jonathan, you’re really good at doing business,” Sylphie remarked.

Before Jonathan could even enjoy Sylphie’s praise, a loud slam rang out in the room. Sylphie had picked up a document folder and slammed it onto her office desk.

“Is the reputation of Sentel Corporation only worth 30 million US dollars to you? Even if Sentel Corporation backs out of the deal, the company would have to pay a penalty of 20 million US dollars. If that happens, the company will only be left with 10 million US dollars. Is that worth it?”

Jonathan’s expression darkened. He did not dare to utter a single word.

“I know your intentions, Mr. Jonathan. But if you want to want to impress me, you’ll have to show me abilities that are beyond that of a genius. If all you know is such measly tricks, I won’t even spare you a second glance!”

After speaking, Sylphie stared at Jonathan, who was trembling all over. “Get out,” she said in a frigid tone.

Jonathan raised his head and intended to say something. However, after noticing Sylphie’s icy and distant gaze, he did not dare to utter a single word. Hence, he left the office room in dismay.

Jonathan’s dark expression overflowed with resentment after he left Sylphie’s office.

In his opinion, Sylphie scolding him was for no fault of his own. It was all because of Jasper Laine!

“B*stard, how dare he say that he doesn’t know Ms. Sylphie! She reprimanded me because of you, you b*stard! Damn Somerland b*stard!”

Jonathan growled in a vicious voice, “Just wait and see, I won’t let you go so easily!”

At that moment, Sylphie was on the phone with Anna Law in her office in Utopia Beauty.

“Alright, alright. How could I dare to neglect your matters? It has been done a long time since then. The initial intention has been reached, and the formal contract will be signed in the afternoon,” Sylphie said cheerily while gripping her phone. The coldness and noble arrogance etched across her face when she had previously been talking to Jonathan was long gone. It was now replaced by a joyous smile.

After chatting for some time, Sylphie put down her phone. She rapped her dainty, fair fingers against the documents before her.

There was a detailed report from JW Investment Company on the very top of the pile of documents.

“What an interesting man. He has done so many great things from scratch within a year, and he has even generated a fortune worth tens of billions. It’s no wonder that he managed to steal the heart of that woman despite her high expectations.”

After that, Sylphie stood up and pressed the buzzer on her desk.

“Call the secretariat of the group president’s office and out who is in charge of the contract signing with Jasper Laine in the afternoon. I’m going to meet this man.”

Life at the Top Chapter 664

At half-past one in the afternoon, Jasper met up with Jack, who had come over directly from Swallow Capital.

He had initially intended to come to Coreana with Jack. However, Jasper had decided to travel at rather abruptly. Jack had been busy back then, so he could not come along with him at the time. Therefore, he could only travel to Coreana after wrapping up his remaining work.

“Mr. Laine, have things been going well the past few days?” Jack asked Jasper with a smile after they entered the room.

Jack had asked the question jokingly, but Jasper shook his head. “Things haven’t exactly been going smoothly,” he said.

Jack was just about to ask for the details when Jasper handed him a document.

“Midas Company? United Legends? Online gaming?” Jack blurted out. He stared at Jasper in shock after flipping through the document.

“Mr. Laine, the profit point for Sena that you previously mentioned is online gaming?”

Jasper sat down. He threw a cigarette at Jack and chuckled. “Why? You don’t like it?” He asked.

At this point in time, most of the domestic Internet companies consisted of highly sophisticated and advanced intellectuals. Therefore, they considered things like games as trifling and looked down upon them.

“It doesn’t matter if I like it or not. Can we really make it work with online gaming?” Jack asked suspiciously.

“The development and popularization of the Internet is inevitable, and those who are exposed to the Internet are bound to be of the younger generation. For young people, their enthusiasm for games will not diminish. Just look at the number of people that play pirated stand-alone game discs in the country!

“If just a small proportion of these people start to play online games, this industry can immediately be turned into a cornucopia.”

Jack sighed after registering Jasper’s words. “Mr. Laine, although I have my own opinions on this, your strategies has never once gone wrong. Therefore, I’m willing to try it out. Even so, I've never even heard of this company and this game. Shouldn't we develop one ourselves?" He asked.

"If you've heard of this game, it would mean that it's already popular. If that was the case, there would be no room for us to profit. Don't worry about the choice of game. If we manage to bring it back to Somerland, we will definitely open up the entire online gaming market.

"Just imagine, in a few years time, it will be beginning of the reign of online games within the country, and it will be you, Jack Tanner, who had led the industry. Isn't that quite the proposition?" Jasper said with a chuckle as he patted Jack on his shoulder.

Jack's eyes shone in excitement. "In that case, what was the purpose of me contacting them before this? Was it to obtain the agency rights?" He asked.

"I assigned you the task of buying over all the copyright and developmental rights of this game. If it's necessary, you can recruit the entire project team," Jasper said. His words came as a shock to Jack.

Although Midas Company would be the largest game manufacturer in Coreana, the online games that they produced would all perform poorly in Somerland except for "United Legends". Furthermore, a small market like Coreana did not deserve Jasper's attention.

In his past life, Senator Agency and Midas Company had both been involved in a lawsuit that lasted several years due to the copyright issue of "United Legends". Finally, Senator Agency obtained a full acquisition of Midas Company in a fit of rage.

It seemed like a huge deal then, but with his knowledge of the future, Jasper knew that this deal was not exactly a bargain.

Furthermore, the management of Midas Company was really underwhelming. The European server leak caused the number of private servers to ramp up.

Later on, there had even been jokes about the official server updates consisting of content copied from the private servers.

“Mr. Laine, this must all be rather pricey. Are they really willing to sell it to us?” Jack asked. There was an awkward expression etched across his face.

“Money isn’t a problem. As long as it’s within a reasonable range, I’ll give you sufficient authority to purchase it. The beta testing results of “United Legends” haven’t exactly been satisfactory in Coreana, so you must seize this opportunity. Buy over everything that is within your power.”

“It’s evidently a difficult task, but why would I bother to call you over if the task wasn’t difficult?”

Jack nodded at Jasper’s words. “Alright, I’ll head back and analyze this information, and I’ll try contacting them in the afternoon,” he replied intently.

After watching Jack leave the room, Jasper’s confidence bloomed.

Was “United Legends” an extremely spectacular game?

In truth, that was not the case.

However, “United Legends” was exactly what they needed right now. It had the potential to become a legend in the online gaming industry in Somerland if it was developed during this exact period of time.

The wealthiest man in the country had generated his wealth through an online game. He could earn billions in profit every year.

Life at the Top Chapter 665

Something like this could only happen in the early 2000s, and it was only possible in Somerland.

Julian came into the room to give Jasper a reminder. "Jasper, it's about time to sign the contract with Sentel Corporation. Your appointment is coming up soon," he said, instantly interrupting Jasper's train of thought.

Jasper patted his forehead, grabbed his coat and left the room. "Should I hire an assistant? You shouldn't be carrying out these duties all the time," he said.

Julian scratched his head and replied, "I can carry out simple tasks, but I may not be able to handle it once your work gets more complicated."

"Let's discuss again when that happens," Jasper said with a chuckle.

He was yet to decide on a management team at the investment company. Therefore, Jasper was not in the mood to recruit a secretary for himself either.

After returning to Sentel Corporation, the secretary led Jasper to a small meeting room.

"Please wait for a moment, Mr. Laine. The person in charge of signing the contract on our side will be here very soon," the secretary said politely. After serving him some tea, the secretary left the room.

After that, Jasper waited for twenty whole minutes.

It seemed like nobody intended to open the tightly shut door. A slight frown formed across Jasper's face.

It was quite unusual for a formal contemporary company like Sentel Corporation to make such a rookie mistake as to leave a client that they were about to sign a contract with alone in a meeting room for half an hour.

If this was not a mistake, then they it was likely that there was a problem with the contract on their part.

Just as Jasper was about to lose his patience, the door suddenly opened.

Jasper's eyes lit up upon catching sight of the person that entered the room.

Sentel Corporation was indeed one of the top 500 companies worldwide. Even the person in charge of signing the contract was gorgeous.

"Excuse me, Mr. Laine. I was late because of some work issues," Sylphie Lang bowed and apologized sincerely upon entering the room.

"Beautiful women deserve special treatment. Waiting half an hour is nothing much if it means that I get to meet a gorgeous lady like you," Jasper chuckled.

The polite smile on Sylphie's face remained unchanged after she registered what he said. Nevertheless, her impression of Jasper declined greatly.

What kind of preferences did her best friend have? Why did she choose to work with such a snake oil salesman?

"Alright, can we start signing yet?" Jasper asked. Sylphie, who had expected him to flirt with her, was slightly taken aback.

Sylphie felt that Jasper was acting unconventionally. Since he started off the conversation so smoothly, she had expected him to ask her some personal questions or even request her contact number.

"Excuse me."

Jasper did not know Sylphie's name. It was impolite to call her "Miss", so he could only give call out to her with a neutral phrase.

"Ah, I'm sorry. I zoned out," Sylphie said awkwardly.

She had not experienced these emotions in many years.

Such emotions did not go hand-in-hand with the elite education that she had received for more than two decades.

"It's alright. Shall we sign the contract?" Jasper asked in an even tone.

Sylphie pulled out the contract from a folder. She gritted her teeth in anger.

This Somerlander was despicable. Was he in a rush to go home? Why did he keep urging her to sign the document?

Right then, someone kicked open the door of the meeting room.

Life at the Top Chapter 666

“Mr. Hampton, come in and look at this at once! The contract that will cause serious harm to the interests of the company is being signed over here just like I told you!”

Jonathan Lang’s voice rang out from the entrance.

As soon as he finished speaking, a large group of people barged into the meeting room.

Everyone immediately looked at Jasper, who was suspected of colluding with members of the company in order to undermine them.

Conversely, nobody paid attention to Sylphie, who stood with her back facing the door.

Jasper did not expect this sudden incident at all.

He raised his eyes. He instantly understood that Jonathan was behind everything once he met his vicious, but joyous gaze.

Meeting Jasper’s gaze, Jonathan spoke up with a cheerful expression etched across his face. “Jasper Laine, how dare you lie to me and tell me that you don’t know Ms. Sylphie? If you don’t know her, why would she stand up for you?” He questioned.

“I’ll make you pay for lying to me!”

“Don’t assume that you can disregard me just because you have Ms. Sylphie on your side. Today, I’ll show you that one sentence from me can bring your wonderful deal crashing down!”

“Why are you so concerned about the relationship between Sylphie Lang and me? I have to wonder, what’s the relationship between the two of you?” Jasper asked calmly.

Jonathan was taken aback by Jasper’s question. He soon realized that everyone else from the company was also attentively waiting his reply.

Right then, a thought surged into his heart and pervaded his mind.

If he told everyone that he was Ms. Sylphie’s boyfriend, given her proud and haughty personality, it was likely that Ms. Sylphie would not refute him or clarify the truth behind the matter.

It was even possible that the public clamor would confound things such that even Ms. Sylphie would gradually loosen up over time.

This thought spread through his mind like parasitic vines. Excitement bloomed within him at once.

“Hmph, my relationship with Sylphie is beyond your imagination. It’s just that we’ve never gone public about it!” Jonathan said loudly.

After he spoke, everyone stared at him in shock. Minister Hampton, who had been acting all high and mighty just a moment ago, looked at him in disbelief as well.

Initially, Jonathan Lang was simply Emerson Lang’s nephew. Although Emerson was the group president, at the end of the day, he was still just a high-ranking employee. Having said that, things would take an interesting turn if Jonathan and Ms. Sylphie turned out to be dating.

Could Jonathan Lang become the future son-in-law of Sentel Corporation?

The shock and reverence in everyone’s gazes caused an intense sense of pride to wash over Jonathan.

Right then, Jonathan felt like he had really become the son-in-law of Sentel Corporation. He pointed a finger at Jasper and spoke arrogantly, “He’s the one who has colluded with executive members of the company. He’s trying to buy the patent at a low price. Seize him right now!”

“Is this how Sentel Corporation treats its clients?” Jasper shouted out suddenly. He faced the large group of people led by Mr. Hampton without a trace of fear.

“I have reached an agreement with Mr. Emerson, and I have signed a contract of intent as well. I have also paid a deposit of 10 million US dollars to Sentel Corporation.

“It’s now time for us to sign the formal agreement, but you’re spouting ridiculous nonsense about internal and external collusion. Is Sentel Corporation not afraid that they will become a laughing stock after this news gets out?”

Mr. Hampton furrowed his brows as soon as Jasper finished speaking.

That was because Jasper’s argument had hit the nail right on the head.

For a multinational company like Sentel Corporation, they did not really care if they earned 10 million or 100 million US dollars.

They only truly cared about the issue of creditability.

Life at the Top Chapter 667

If new about this got out, Sentel Corporation’s reputation would be tainted.

A major incident like this would cause the executives to be outraged.

“That’s bullsh*t!” Jonathan yelled out in anger once he realized that Jasper was about to make his way out of the trap that he had tried so hard to set up.

“The patent for the MP3 is worth at least 50 million US dollars. You’re buying it at a price of 20 million US dollars. What is this if it isn’t a collusion between internal staff and an outsider?”

Jasper glanced at Jonathan and replied in a calm and collected voice. “I discussed this deal with your uncle, Mr. Emerson Lang. Do you mean to say that your uncle is the person that is colluding with me?”

Jonathan’s expression changed. Although he wanted to put an end to Jasper Laine, that did not mean that he dared to involve his uncle in the matter.

“Of course, my uncle wouldn’t collude with a figure of low importance like you. You must have deceived him with your sly words!” Jonathan yelled. He glared at Jasper with a sneer spread across his face.

“Furthermore, you can’t change the fact that you bought a patent that is worth 50 million US dollars at the price of 20 million US dollars regardless of the excuse you try to draft up. Sentel Corporation would never do business at a loss.”

Jonathan looked at Jasper proudly. “If you want to try to win a bargain, you’ll have to wait till your next life. With me around, don’t even think of taking advantage of us. People like you are always like this. You’re filthy poor, undeveloped, and completely rotten,” he shouted.

“You must apologize for insulting us,” Jasper said in an even tone.

Jonathan scoffed. Just as he was about to say something back, Jasper continued speaking, “Since you guys intend to back out on this contract, there’s nothing more I will say. I can give up on it, but you guys will have to pay me 20 million US dollars in compensation as per the conditions of the contract of intent that we’ve previously signed.

“If you refuse, I wouldn’t mind raising an international lawsuit against you.”

There was a vexed expression on Mr. Hampton’s face. First off, the group president was involved in this incident. If things went south, the company would face a huge loss.

He was simply a small department head that was in charge of overlooking issues regarding the company’s integrity. He did not dare to get involved in major issues that involved the group president and the company’s reputation.

Meanwhile, Jonathan gritted his teeth without saying a single word. He could not care about anything else right now. The only thing he knew was that he just had to destroy Jasper Laine’s deal.

Although he did not personally benefit much from this, he just wanted to see Jasper suffer.

Such was the mentality of a villain like him.

At that moment, Sylphie, whom nobody had noticed, put down the folder. She turned around to speak.

“I agreed to sign the contract.”

Sylphie Lang’s voice instantly attracted everyone’s attention.

Mr. Hampton and Jonathan widened their eyes and found themselves at a loss of words when they saw Sylphie. It was as if they had just seen a ghost.

Nobody expected the princess of Sentel Corporation to appear here.

Jonathan’s heart lurched instantly. His instincts told him that something bad was coming his way.

As expected, Sylphie's gaze landed on him immediately.

Her gaze was as icy as a glacier. It made Jonathan feel like he was in a cavern made of ice.

"Naturally, I don't have any official duties in the company. However, I will report this incident to my father. Having said that, I reckon I still have a say in a deal worth 20 million US dollars, right?"

As soon as she finished speaking, Mr. Hampton immediately nodded and backed down. "Why are you here, Ms. Sylphie? I think this is all just a misunderstanding. It's just a misunderstanding," he said.

Sylphie did not even spare a glance at Mr. Hampton, who was sweating profusely. Instead, she turned around to look at Jasper as a radiant smile formed across her lips. "There won't be a need to file for a lawsuit if we just sign the contract now, right?" She asked.

By then, Jasper had managed to get a grasp of the situation. The beautiful woman before him seemed to have a terrifying identity. There was no way she was just a simple office clerk charged with the signing of contracts.

Life at the Top Chapter 668

"Let's introduce ourselves once again. Nice to meet you, I'm Sylphie Lang. I'm Anna Law's best friend," Sylphie said, extending her hand to Jasper with a gracious demeanor.

Jasper understood everything immediately.

That was right. Only the highly-regarded princess of Sentel Corporation had the courage and ability to come up with a final decision at a time like this.

Jasper shook hands with Sylphie with a bitter smile etched across his face. "Ms. Lang, we're meeting each other under such unique circumstances," he said.

"To be honest, I only came over because I was curious about the man that managed to steal Anna Law's heart. Because of this, I had to come here under another identity. I hope you don't mind," Sylphie said sincerely.

Jasper waved his hand and replied, "It's all good, I don't mind. However, this..."

When Jasper said this, Sylphie turned around to face Mr. Hampton and the others. "What are you lot standing there for? Are my words falling on deaf ears?" She asked.

Mr. Hampton and the others left the room immediately.

"Wait right there."

Just as Jonathan, whose emotions were beyond conflicted, was about to escape the scene of the crime, Jasper stopped him from leaving.

Jonathan turned around to glare at Jasper. "What do you want?"

"Aren't you Ms. Lang's boyfriend? Weren't you extremely concerned about our relationship? Ms. Lang is here right now. Why don't you clarify things once and for all?" Jasper asked matter-of-factly.

Upon hearing what he said, Jonathan, who was already flustered, turned pale immediately.

He had been blinded by his anger earlier. He had told everyone that he was extremely close to Sylphie, and she had heard everything that he had said. He had been thinking of how to rescue the situation when Jasper Laine suddenly decided to hit him where it hurts. Jonathan was immediately overcome with an extreme sense of unease.

“Why didn’t I know that I have a boyfriend like you?” Sylphie asked in a frigid tone.

Jonathan decided to just bite the bullet. “Ms. Lang, please don’t misunderstand. I never said that I was your boyfriend...” he said awkwardly.

“You simply said that we share a close relationship, and that we’ve never told the public about it. Isn’t that right?” Sylphie interjected with a cold sneer.

Jonathan’s complexion turned ashen. He did not dare to continue trying to salvage the matter at all.

“Jonathan Lang,” Sylphie called out his name in a calm and even tone.

Jonathan shivered. He looked at Sylphie instinctively.

“I don’t want to see you anymore. Do you understand me?”

Jonathan turned as white as a sheet. He knelt down on the ground and wailed out loud. “Please forgive me, Ms. Lang. I didn’t do it intentionally. Regardless of everything else, I did it just for the benefit of the company...”

“Also,” Sylphie added, ignoring his tearful expression and wails of despair. “I wish to see you apologize for your disrespectful behavior toward Mr. Laine,” she said.

Jasper glanced at Jonathan and added in a calm voice, “I told you that you’d have to apologize for what you said to me.”

Jonathan was trembling all over as flames of fury blazed within him. At the moment, he wished that he could skin Jasper alive.

If looks could kill, Jasper would have been dead many times over.

However, Jonathan had no choice but to suppress his vicious thoughts and resentment.

Instead, he took in a deep breath and lowered his head toward Jasper. "I'm sorry," he said softly.

"I didn't hear you," Jasper remarked.

Jonathan raised his head suddenly. "I told you I'm sorry!" He roared out forcefully.

"You didn't say it with a sincere attitude," Jasper responded with an unchanging expression.

Jonathan glared at Jasper hatefully. "You b*stard, don't go overboard!"

"You'd have to apologize for what you just said as well," Jasper added calmly.

Crack, crack, crack...

Jonathan gritted his teeth in anger, the sound of his teeth grinding against each other resonated around the room.

He wanted to leave the room and slam the door shut, but Sylphie Lang's cold, piercing gaze rendered him motionless.

He knew Sylphie's attitude and temperament well. If he left like this right now, she had a hundred ways to torment him for the rest of his life. Because of this, he did not dare to take the risk of invoking her punishment.

"I'm sorry. I'm apologizing to you right now!" Jonathan said. It was useless for him to struggle, so he had no choice but to surrender to Jasper.

"Are you satisfied? If you aren't, I can make him apologize to you for the entire day," Sylphie told Jasper.

“Let him go,” Jasper said.

“Did you hear what he said? He asked you to leave,” Sylphie told Jonathan.

Feeling like a dog that was being ordered around, Jonathan clenched his fists tightly in anger. Then, he turned around and left the room without uttering a single word.

As soon as he opened the door, he ran into Emerson Lang, who had been rushing over to the meeting room.

After realizing that he had bumped into Jonathan, Emerson slapped him harshly across the face in an intense burst of rage.

Jonathan, who was yet to get recompose himself after bumping into Emerson, got hit across the face at once.

He clutched his face and stared at Emerson with bloodshot eyes. “Uncle, why did you hit me?” He shouted.

“Didn’t you report me for colluding with outsiders? Am I not allowed to hit you for that?” Emerson asked. He was so angry that he suddenly burst into laughter.

Jonathan suppressed the rage in his heart and tried to explain himself. “Uncle, I didn’t mean to do that, I...”

“That’s enough,” Emerson said coldly. He frowned and turned away from him. He did not want to spare him another glance. “From now on, don’t call me your uncle ever again. I can’t bear the weight of it any longer,” he said.

After saying this, he rushed into the meeting room without even looking back at Jonathan, who simply stared into space blankly.

When the door of the meeting room slammed shut. Jonathan could finally express his burning hatred.

He raised his hand and swiftly punched the wall. A loud sound rang out as the skin around his knuckles tore apart.

However, he could not feel the pain at all. "Jasper Laine, just you wait! Just you wait!" He roared in a low voice, his face twisted in fury.

.....

At that moment, the atmosphere in the meeting room was calm and tranquil.

"I'm so sorry, Mr. Laine. Jonathan Lang, that b*stard, caused so much trouble for the both of you, Mr. Laine and Ms. Lang."

Emerson explained. He was sweating profusely.

At the same time, Emerson casted occasional glances at Sylphie.

After all, Jasper did not mean much to Emerson. However, Sylphie Lang's attitude determined how his future would look.

As a senior executive, he would be tormented if he was involved in a dispute with the Langs' darling daughter.

"Mr. Emerson, I think that it is necessary for the company to reconsider Jonathan Lang's position as a branch president," Sylphie said solemnly.

Emerson immediately understood what Sylphie was implying. He nodded and said, "Yes, I agree. From this incident, I can see that his abilities are inadequate for his current position. I will consider reshuffling his work."

"That's great. You can leave now," Sylphie said.

Emerson glanced at Sylphie's expression cautiously and saw that she did not seem angry. After that, he bid the both of them farewell and left the meeting room.

After the matter ended, Sylphie handed the contract over to Jasper with a cheery smile across her face. "Let's get back to the matter that we didn't manage to finish just now," she said.

Life at the Top Chapter 669

An odd expression formed on Jasper's face after he registered her words.

No matter how he interpreted her words, they still sounded extremely misleading.

However, Jasper did not spend too much time pondering it as he swiftly signed his name on the contract. After that, he pulled out a check for 10 million US dollars and handed it to Sylphie.

"Thank you for your help, Ms. Lang. This deal wouldn't have been possible without you," Jasper said sincerely.

Without even looking at the check, Sylphie handed the folder containing the patent documents over to Jasper. "It's alright, I just did a small favor for Anna," she said with a cheery smile.

"How do you know Anna?"

"It was by sheer coincidence," Jasper said as he explained to Sylphie about how he had gotten to know Anna.

“You’re quite a bold one. Back then, Anna’s father definitely wouldn’t pay any attention to you. How dare you brag about yourself in front of him?” Sylphie said, a hint of interest in her voice.

“There’s nothing fundamentally different about the two of us. Firstly, we’re both humans. Secondly, we’re both businessmen. He’s undoubtedly a prominent businessman whereas I can only be considered a small businessman, however, this doesn’t mean that I can’t come up with something that he needs.

“In fact, we’re both working together happily now. We both take what we need, and we mutually benefit from our collaborative work,” Jasper said with a smile.

Sylphie nodded in an understanding manner. “You’re different from the others. You carry yourself with confidence, and this gives you a type of charisma that can’t be found in ordinary people,” she said.

“Is that a compliment?” Jasper asked.

“Of course,” Sylphie said with a faint smile.

Jasper bid Sylphie farewell after chatting with her for around half an hour. It was almost time for them to get off work.

Sylphie did not ask him to stay either. She simply watched him leave after they exchanged their contact numbers.

After Jasper left, Sylphie took out her phone and made a call.

“Anna Law, I met your man today.”

“I knew you couldn’t resist. How is he? He’s not bad, right?” Anna’s voice rang out from the other end of the phone.

Leaning comfortably on the chair, Sylphie casually played with the check in her hand. She suddenly chuckled after looking at the intricate scrawl of Jasper's signature on the check.

"Why are you laughing?" Anna asked curiously.

"Its' nothing. I just thought of something interesting."

Anna immediately became alert. "I took a fancy to him first, so don't snatch him from me. I already have a headache right now," she said.

"Oh, is the high and mighty Ms. Law afraid that someone will steal her man? Don't worry, I'm not interested in men or women. I just want to focus on my career."

...

After leaving Sentel Corporation, Jasper went to look for Damond Golding once again. He then obtained the authorization certificate for the patent upgrade under Damond's devious gaze.

Although there were several obstacles, everything eventually ended smoothly.

Jasper knew that it was time to return to Somerland as he held the two patent documents in his hands.

His trip to Coreana could be considered a complete success.

After returning to the hotel, Jasper and Jack both filed into the room at the same time.

"How were things today, Jack?"

Looking at the dark expression on Jack's face, Jasper knew that things must not have gone very smoothly.

However, Jasper had not expected him to get everything done on the first try either. Purchasing a game was different from purchasing a patent, as it involved many more moving parts. This was also the reason why Jasper had allocated this task to Jack.

In the future, Sena's main focus would be online gaming. Thus, Jack had to begin dabbling in this industry as soon as possible.

Jack let out a tired hum in response. He then sighed deeply. "After these Coreanans found out that I was from Somerland, they acted beyond haughtily. They had no sincere intention to discuss business with me. Besides suggesting a colossal price, they also proposed a whole bunch of harsh requirements," he grumbled.

"I told them that they were being insincere. Guess what they told me in response?"

"They told me that Somerland is a poor and backward country. Businessmen from Somerland are mostly scammers, and that we can't even afford their games."

Jack tugged on the tie wrapped around his collar in rage. "These Coreanans are really mad," he remarked.

Jasper laughed as he patted Jack's shoulder. "That's normal. Plenty of people from overseas still think that we are a backward and undeveloped country. Their impression of us will gradually change over time," he said.

"People will only look upon you with reverence after you grow stronger. Discrimination like this will change in the future."

Jack continued to complain distastefully, “I’ve never even been subject to such obvious discrimination during my time at Weresoft. What should we do now, Mr. Laine? Should I go there again tomorrow?”

“You need to go there again,” Jasper said, nodding his head with determination.

“The more they look down upon us, the more determined we must be to accomplish our goals. With regards to their harsh requirements, agree to them if they aren’t too unreasonable. One day, they will realize how powerful we are.”

Jack nodded and said, “Alright, I’ll approach them again tomorrow. However, today hasn’t been completely fruitless either. At the very least, they seem to have the intention of selling the game. They’re just yet to find a suitable buyer.”

“If you manage to buy the game, don’t forget about the agency rights as the agency rights are still firmly in their hands. This means we will be subject to their control regarding the production of future game version updates. Most importantly, they will definitely try to compete with us for it after they witness the huge profitability within Somerland.

“Therefore, be sure to purchase this game in its entirety. This is an important task, and it must be handled properly. I can only leave it to you.”

“Don’t worry, Mr. Laine. I will definitely complete this task,” Jack reaffirmed solemnly in response to hearing Jasper’s trust in him.

“That’s good. I’ll be returning to Somerland tomorrow. Stay here and deal with this matter, and come back after the deal has been completed,” Jasper said.

...

Jasper’s current main priority was to finalize the MP3 production line, and then start the production and sales in Somerland.

After handing all the remaining tasks to Jack, Jasper took a flight back to Somerland in the afternoon of the next day.

While Jasper boarded the plane, Jonathan Lang walked out of the company despondently.

Half an hour earlier, he had received a notification from the company. He had been relieved from his position as the branch president, and would be transferred to another company as a sales manager.

The drastic demotion in his career caused his resentment toward Jasper to grow even stronger.

As soon as Jonathan got in the car and left the company, he received a phone call from one of his close associates.

“Boss, I found out that Jasper Laine has already taken a plane back to Somerland. I’ve also found all the information regarding his company over there. Shall I send it to you later?”

Jonathan’s expression grew lighter after receiving the news. “Send it to me. Heh, does he think that I won’t be able to do anything to him after he goes back to Somerland? There are plenty of people in that country who want to get on my good side. I can put an end to him by conspiring with the people there!”

Life at the Top Chapter 670

Meanwhile, Jasper had no idea that Jonathan was doing so many things behind his back.

After a four-hour flight, Jasper finally arrived at Reed City.

Upon arriving in Somerland, Jasper took in a deep breath of the air in Reed City. Although the air was not fresh, at least he was back in his home country; It still felt much better than being in a foreign place.

Reed City was located right next to Cavern City. Therefore, it benefited from Cavern City's development. Reed City would develop rapidly in the future, and it would even go on to produce 15% of the world's electronic products.

However, at that point in time, Reed City was still deserted and barren. It was a major contrast from the lively and bustling city that it would become in the future.

Julian, who had followed Jasper back, gazed at the large fields covering Reed City as he drove the rented car. "Jasper, are you really going to build the MP3 factory here?" He asked him curiously.

Jasper chuckled. "Why? Do you think that's a bad idea?"

Julian shook his head and said, "Of course I can't tell. However, this place doesn't seem very different from other places."

Jasper could not tell Julian that Reed City would become the top production hub for electronic products in Somerland, and in the world. At the peak of its powers, nine out of ten people in Reed City consisted of migrant workers.

Meanwhile, he was taking advantage of his rebirth by building the first physical factory under JW here. This was a huge bargain.

The land here would become extremely pricey in the future. However, it was now selling on a buy one, get one free basis.

When the Reed City Government discovered that he was going to invest in the city by building a factory here, they tripped over their own feet thanking him.

"I think that this area will develop greatly in the future," Jasper remarked while he stared at the barren fields outside the car window.

After arriving at the city hall, the general manager of the state-owned company responsible for land transfer came out to greet Jasper.

He greeted him extremely passionately.

“Mr. Laine, we’ve been waiting for your arrival for ages. You’re finally here,” Chad Wright said as he welcomed Jasper into his office with a smile on his face. He then served Jasper a cup of tea.

Chad’s eyes shone as he looked at Jasper. He could not help it. Although he was the general manager of the company, Reed City was still extremely underdeveloped. There was nothing that could attract the attention of investors to the city. As a result of this, the lives of the people in Reed City had not been exactly easy.

After the God of prosperity finally blessed them with the appearance of Jasper Laine, Chad naturally had to fawn over him.

“You’re being way too courteous, Mr. Wright. We’ve talked through the phone before. Have you guys come to a decision regarding the piece of land that I proposed purchasing back then?” Jasper asked with a chuckle after he sat down.

An awkward expression formed on Chad’s face. “Well, about this... you’re someone that understands how the industry works, Mr. Laine. Therefore, I’ll tell you about it directly,” he said.

After hearing Chad say this, Jasper’s smile gradually vanished.

He knew that there had to be a problem with the deal.

As he expected, Chad proceeded to tell him something that made him extremely displeased.

“Initially, we were extremely willing to sell the riverside plot that had captured your attention, but the size of land that you have requested is simply too large. We need some time to discuss it. At first, things like this could have been disregarded as everyone had voted in favor of selling it to you.

“However, I don’t know what happened after that. After the news about the deal got out, a local company in Reed City also notified us with their intention of purchasing the same plot of land. The other company has been extremely active within the industry lately, so it’s hard for us to finalize the deal whilst ignoring them.”

Life at the Top Chapter 671

Noticing conflicted look on Chad's face, Jasper could basically guess what had happened.

"Mr. Wright, there is still plenty of empty land in Reed City. Why is it only the plot of land that I wanted to buy so high in demand right now? Furthermore, the other party only showed intentions of buying the land after they found out that I wanted to buy it as well. Is he trying to become my sworn enemy?"

Chad's expression changed drastically. "Please don't say that, Mr. Wright. It's hard for us to come to a decision on this issue as well. After all, you haven't bought that plot of land yet, Mr. Laine. Since it doesn't belong to anyone, we have no choice but to consider their request to purchase it as well."

"It seems like that person is out to end me," Jasper said in an even tone.

Chad laughed bitterly. "Mr. Laine, there are some words that only you can say. Deep down, we all know how these things are. This company is renowned within Reed City. It is also quite notorious, as they have taken out several of our previous investors," he said.

"They're snatching this plot of land away from me after discovering that I had intentions to buy it. After that, they will resell it to me at a higher price. Methods like this are indeed beyond the capabilities of ordinary people," Jasper added.

An awkward expression formed on Chad's face. "Why don't you choose another plot of land, Mr. Laine?" He asked.

Jasper shook his head, rejecting Chad's suggestion.

The plot of land that Jasper had chosen would end up becoming the most valuable part of Reed City in the future. The 1500-acre plot of land would also be enough to fully sustain the future development of the factory.

“If I have to choose another plot of land, I’d pull my investment out of Reed City altogether. After all, since they’ve taken that plot of land from me, it means they’re perfectly capable of snatching other things away from me too.”

Jasper’s words caused a troubled expression to flash across Chad’s face. He sighed heavily and said, “Mr. Laine, I really wish that I could help you on this, but I don’t have the abilities to do so. However, if you want to discuss things with the other party, I can help you contact them.”

“There’s nothing for us to discuss.”

Jasper had a calm expression on his face.

“They’re doing this with the intention to thwart me. If I discuss things with them, they’ll just ask me for money. Money didn’t just fall onto my lap, so I won’t hand it over to them just because they ask for it.”

As Jasper spoke, he walked out of the office.

Chad led Jasper downstairs awkwardly. He continued explaining and apologizing as they walked. Nevertheless, Jasper did not blame him for the matter either. As they walked, he was already considering the possibility of setting up the factory in Nauritus City.

After all, nobody could pose a threat to him over there, right?

Just as Jasper was about to get in the car upon arriving downstairs, a black Mercedes drove up to them.

The car window rolled down to reveal the face of a young man. “You’re that investor from out of town, right? It must have taken you some time to come here.

Why are you in such a rush to leave? You are yet to experience the burning passion of those from Reed City,” he said in a mocking tone.

Upon catching sight of the man, Chad, who was standing beside Jasper, immediately lowered his voice. “Mr. Laine, he’s the person in charge of that company. His name is Marcus Coine. I have no idea how he learned of your arrival,” he whispered.

After hearing Chad’s explanation, Jasper spoke to Marcus in a calm tone, “I’ve gone through a rather profound experience.”

Marcus opened the car door and got out. He chuckled in response. “You sound like you aren’t too happy about things. Why is that? Are you not investing in Reed City anymore, Big Boss?” He asked.

“Since there are people that won’t let me in, I have no choice but to leave,” Jasper replied.

Marcus scoffed loudly. “What an exaggeration. It’s just a plot of land, isn’t it? I heard that you intend to buy the 1500-acre plot of land for 200 million dollars. It isn’t much, but it isn’t a sum of money to scoff at either. Why don’t you pay a little more? You should treat poor people like us to some good food while you’re at it,” he said.

“That’s just the way it works. People that are overly stingy cannot survive in Reed City, Big Boss. You can offend anyone here but me. If you do something that I don’t like, I’ll send you back to where you came from. Do you understand?”

Life at the Top Chapter 672

Marcus Coine’s words reflected his extreme arrogance.

Even Chad frowned after listening to what he had said.

“Mr. Wright, I’ve changed my mind.”

Jasper turned around and told Chad.

Just as Chad’s expression morphed into one of confusion, Jasper spoke in a calm and collected tone, “JW Electronics would like purchase the plot of land as soon as possible. If someone wants to snatch it from us then let’s have auction to decide who gets to keep it,” he said

Jasper suddenly understood something from Marcus Coine’s proud and arrogant attitude.

At this point in time, there were still plenty of people like him in the country.

Most of them relied on their parents’ connections to build up sizeable influence in their localities. However, they chose not to follow the same paths as their parents.

The only way for people like these to make it big was through running businesses. After all, most of them were already used to being a dominant force within the local district due to their parents’ influence.

Marcus Coine thought of Reed City as his territory. Hence, anyone who wanted to enter the city had to show their respect to him by providing him with some benefits.

Reed City had Marcus Coine, but it was very likely that there were people like Marcus in other districts as well.

Because of this, Jasper could not just keep giving in to them.

He needed to do something so that those who viewed JW as an easy target would learn to take a good look at themselves before acting out of order!

As soon as Jasper finished speaking, Marcus burst out into laughter. Chad was yet to even come up with a response.

“Hahaha, nobody has dared to go against me in Reed City for many years. It seems like someone who isn’t afraid of death is here today.”

Marcus cast a sideways glance at Jasper. His gaze was dripping with sarcasm and mockery. “I know you’re from the Southeast Province, Laine. How do I describe that place? Although there are a few presentable families over there, they are still nothing compared to the families here,” he drawled.

“If you think that you are capable of going against me just because you’re a somebody over there, you’ll die a painful death.

“Listen to my advice. You can either go back to where you came from, or pay some respect to me till I’m satisfied with your performance. All you need is a nod of my head, and you won’t face any trouble even if you tear down half of Reed City.”

Jasper looked at Marcus with an unchanging expression. “In that case, how much respect will you need to be satisfied, Mr. Coine?” He asked.

Marcus rubbed his thumb against his index and middle fingers nonchalantly. He chuckled and said, “I won’t ask for a lot. I’ll make it simple. You just need to prepare a sum equal to the amount that you spent on buying that plot of land.”

“Is 200 million dollars enough?” Jasper asked knowingly.

“We’re all grown men. You don’t have to say things so forwardly,” Marcus said.

“Your planning is simply immaculate, Mr. Coine. You simply wagged your fingers three times, and now you intend to take 200 million dollars from my pocket. You earn money at a rate that far surpasses me,” Jasper said.

Marcus guffawed loudly. “You have your ways, and I do too. Just consider it a toll fee, but it’s not like you’ll walk away with nothing either. As long as you pay me this sum of money, I’ll look after your factory in the future. No one from Reed City will dare cause you any trouble,” he said.

“So, you mean to say that if I don’t pay you this sum of money, this factory will have nothing to do with you, and people will come to wreak havoc on my property every day. Am I right?” Jasper asked.

Marcus cackled. “Not bad at all. It’s no wonder that you own so many assets at such a young age. You pick up things quickly. You seem like a smart person as well, so I suppose that you know what decision to make. It’s better to ward off a disaster by making a payment instead of begging for mercy in front of me after going through a ton of hardship, right?”

“That sounds very reasonable,” Jasper said.

Joy flashed across Marcus’s face. He was just about to say something when Jasper spoke again.

“Forget 200 million dollars, I won’t even give you two cents.”

Jasper’s expression remained impassive. It seemed like he did not notice the disgruntled look on Marcus’s face. “If you want money, earn it through your own efforts. Of course, it doesn’t matter to me if you prefer to do shady activities, as everyone still needs to earn a living. However, don’t try your filthy tricks on me. I will never compromise on any attempts at extortion. Understood?”

Marcus’s expression darkened. He stared at Jasper coldly and blurted out, “Were you mocking me just now?”

“I just wanted to gain a thorough understand of the type of person that you are,” Jasper said calmly.

“Haha!” Marcus let out a bark of angry laughter. He raised his finger and pointed at the tip of Jasper’s nose. “Well, since you’re so adamant on going against me, let’s just wait and see what’ll happen next,” he said.

“Let me give you a reminder, Laine. You’re just an outsider here. You want to go against me? Why don’t you take a good look at yourself first? Do you really think that you’re invincible just because you have some money?”

Jasper shrugged and said, “You’re right, there’s nothing impressive about having money. However, you’re angry at me because you’re ashamed that you can’t get your hands on my money. Isn’t that even more pathetic?”

Marcus gritted his teeth angrily. At that moment, he realized what a smooth talker the young man standing before him was.

Even so, Marcus suppressed his rage and said, “Little b*stard, a sharp tongue is nothing to be proud of. I’ve said what I wanted to say today. If you manage to purchase that 1500-acre plot of land, I’ll adopt your last name!

“Just wait and see!”

Marcus blurted out in anger. After that, he turned around and left.

After watching the Mercedes fade into the distance, Jasper turned around to face Cha, who was smiling at him bitterly. “Mr. Wright, I would like you to pay extra attention to the auction. Please resolve it as soon as possible,” he said.

“An auction is a very simple affair as I’ll simply report to my higher-ups. I don’t think there’ll be any problems on that regards. It can even be held tomorrow. However, Marcus Coine is a tough one to handle, Mr. Laine,” Chad explained immediately.

After making sure that there was no one around them, Chad lowered his voice as he spoke to Jasper. “Marcus Coine’s grandfather is a respected senior from the older generation that has lived through the war. He retired a few years ago.

“Although that old man is now in his twilight years, he has been managing Reed City for decades. He has the ultimate say when it comes to everything that happens in Reed City.”

Chad was an official from the city government, so it was risky for him to reveal so much insider information to Jasper since his job was at stake.

Jasper nodded solemnly. “Mr. Wright, thank you for your good-hearted warning. However, I don’t intend to concede to him. I don’t believe that people will stir up trouble for me just for running a legal business in Reed City. How could that be the case?” He questioned.

“That old man has lived through difficult times. He shouldn’t want to see his grandson behave in such a manner.”

Chad sighed in exasperation as it seemed impossible to convince Jasper otherwise. Thus, he did not say anything more.

He felt that Jasper was being way too naive.

Not everyone in the world was followed such ideal principles.

When people grow old, isn’t it their only wish for their children and grandchildren to live safely and prosperously?

“Alright, we’ll hold the auction tomorrow,” Chad said.

Life at the Top Chapter 673

On the way back to the hotel, Julian turned to look at Jasper. He asked while waiting for the traffic light to turn green, “Should we ask Henry for help on this, Jasper?”

Jasper was stunned. “Why would I do that? He’s busy working on the amusement park project every day. The fact that he’s actually putting his mind to work is rare enough, so I don’t want him to lose focus.”

Julian scratched his head. “I just think it’s best to have a trust-fund child deal with other trust-fund children like Marcus. I’m sure Henry’s got a repertoire of methods to deal with him.”

Jasper smiled. “Why bother? Afraid that I’d lose to him?”

Julian smiled dumbly, “Of course not, Jasper, there’s no way you’d lose. I just don’t like Marcus’ attitude, and I thought that Henry would have a lot of fun stepping over him.”

“Henry won’t be to do anything even if he did come over. After all, Marcus’ family has been doing business in Reed City for decades, their influence here has already surpassed that of any other family.

“This is something that we’ve actually got to deal with ourselves.”

Julian was slightly confused as to what Jasper meant by this, but he did not think too deep much about it. “I don’t understand things like this, but if they’re going to play dirty tricks, I’ll give them a good beating.”

...

Members of Reed City's upper-class did not seem to care about the fact that Jasper had come to invest in the City.

After all, Jasper's fame was mainly centered around the Southeast Province, and Reed City was thousands of kilometers away. It was unlikely that stories of Jasper's exploits had made their way here.

Even so, the fact that someone dared to oppose Marcus had indeed spread like wildfire throughout the city.

Reed City could be considered as Marcus' territory, and almost no one dared to offend him. People would pay others to keep their mouths shut if it meant that Marcus would not look in their direction.

This was the first time in many years that someone had dared to stand up against Marcus.

This news had caused an uproar among Reed City's upper-class.

After some investigation, they discovered that Jasper was a businessman from the Southeast Province and had come to Reed City to invest in a plot of land so he could build a factory.

When it came to the conflict between Marcus and Jasper, no one bothered placing bets on the latter.

At that moment, Jasper had received Chad's office notice at the hotel.

The auction would begin at eight tomorrow morning in the City Hall's meeting room.

It was natural that the City Government did not want to make the reality of the situation so blatant, so they also called in two other real estate companies to join the bid, for formality's sake.

Despite this, everyone knew that the main competition was between Jasper's JW Electronics and Marcus' Fortune Co., Ltd.

At the same time, in a hotel's deluxe suite, Marcus was busy smoking and playing poker with a few of his friends when he received the notice.

Smoke crept around the room and Marcus squinted as the smoke irritated his eyes. He took a look at his cards and folded upon seeing that he had a bad hand. Marcus growled, "Sigh. Seriously guys, it's almost like my name doesn't hold the same power here in Reed City anymore."

The three other young men playing with him had were also trust-fund children like Marcus. Their fathers and grandfathers were friends with Marcus' and they were also business partners that had worked together for years.

Their relationship was an extension of their elders and came purely from personal connections. It was a tight-knit group made out of people who shared a common interest.

The man sitting opposite Marcus was around one hundred and ninety centimeters tall, a broad and sturdy man who went by the name Ned Adkins. Ned snickered, causing a fierce smile to appear on his tanned and firm face.

Ned lazily folded his cards next. "It's not like this is the first time we're dealing with stupid outsiders. Just tell us if you need money, or tell us how we can help.

"All of us have shares in your company. Your problem is our problem too."

Life at the Top Chapter 674

Marcus's expression finally brightened, and he glanced at Ned before reprimanding him jokingly, "Stop fooling around. I've done some background checks on this Jasper, he's not like other outsiders. He's got quite a name over in the Southeast Province.

"Not to mention, he did come here legally to invest our land. He's registered with the officials in the City Government too. He's not like the other outsiders who came here for small business. I'm going to have to explain to the City Government if something happens to him."

Ned pursed his lips disdainfully. His family was in the pawning industry, and his pawning company was currently the largest in all of Reed City. In this city, the other businessmen tended to treat this strong man with respect.

As far as he was concerned, there was nothing in the world that his fists could not settle. If such a thing existed, then a machete would suffice.

Even bones turned soft upon contact with a blade.

"I've got to go to the auction tomorrow. I have to at least try to get a feel of how this Jasper guy is. Come with me tomorrow, Ned."

A new round was dealt as Marcus folded again.

"A Royal Flush, I win. Thanks for folding, Mr. Coine. Hahaha."

"F*ck!"

...

It was seven-fifty the following morning when Jasper arrived at the City Hall's meeting room with Julian in tow.

Chad was the host of this meeting, but he courteously introduced Jasper to a middle-aged and sharp-looking man.

"Mr. Laine, this is Mr. Powers. Our City Government's best secretary."

When Chad introduced them, Jasper and Mr. Powers shook hands.

"Nice to meet you, Mr. Powers."

Mr. Powers smiled in a friendly manner and replied, "Nice to meet you too, Mr. Laine. I'm here on behalf of the City Government to oversee this auction."

"It sure isn't easy investing in Reed City, Mr. Powers," Jasper commented intently.

Mr. Powers chuckled. "The higher-ups told me before I came here that good things come to those who persevere. People tend to have their own personal view on how important certain events are."

Jasper did not seem too elated at Mr. Powers' stance and he merely replied, "We can only hope that this is the case."

Mr. Powers did not prompt him any further upon seeing that Jasper was unwilling to continue the conversation. After all, they were smart people, and Jasper could easily tell that the City Government was trying to use Jasper to attack Marcus and his group of friends.

Jasper's position on this was clear as well. 'You can use me, but it will come with a price. I, Mr. Laine, am not an idiot. What makes you think I'd come all the way to Reed City just so you can use me?'

“Oh, and Mr. Powers?”

Jasper suddenly remembered something and turned around to call out just before they entered the meeting room together.

Mr. Powers stopped walking and turned to look at Jasper.

Smiling, Jasper stated, “I plan to build an electronics factory on this 1500 acres of land. I’m planning to invest a total of 500-700 million in it. I’ve already contacted the shipping companies, and the infrastructure is on its way over. It should arrive in ten to fifteen days.”

“For a factory that spans 1500 acres of land, a total investment of 500-700 million would amount to at least 200 million in tax a year, and would also result in local revenue of around 3 billion Somer Dollars.”

“The Southeast Province has filed quite a few complaints about this, claiming that I’m helping outsiders instead of benefitting my homeland. In other words, I don’t care as much about Reed City as you people think.”

Life at the Top Chapter 675

Mr. Powers’ expression changed greatly at Jasper’s carefree words.

Jasper had only said that he wanted to buy an industrial plot of land, but he never said anything about building a factory.

The government of Reed City had also done a background check on Jasper.

They knew that Jasper mainly did real estate and financial trades. He had never once taken part in any construction of industrial factories.

That was why the city government believed that Jasper had come to buy an industrial plot of land just to wait for its value to appreciate or something else. They never expected that it was to build a factory.

While the government of Reed City did value the amount Jasper was willing to invest, it had now become a business transaction of 200 million Somer Dollars. Reed City needed funds to further develop as well.

They just did not expect such a large amount.

To have Jasper provide such news out of the blue, Mr. Powers knew that he had to make the proper preparations now.

He was well aware that if Jasper's words came true, then a total investment of at least 700 million on a plot of land and an electronics factory in Reed City would be an extremely important business.

Ignoring the annual tax received, the most important part of this transaction would be the increased quota for jobs, and in extension, the increased businesses in surrounding areas.

It was normal to have 5,000 to 6,000 workers per factory.

Open positions for 5,000 to 6,000 workers also meant an exponential increase in profits of the food and beverage, transportation, and shopping industries around the area.

Not to mention that with such a huge factory, one would always need to buy components. That meant that the upstream and downstream companies would also shift closer to their core clients to decrease shipping and production costs.

The chain reaction caused by Jasper's factory would easily turn it into an important weight that would greatly affect Reed City's future developments.

“Mr. Laine, this is something we had no prior knowledge of. Please wait for a moment, I’ll immediately report this to them,” Mr. Powers spoke sternly.

Jasper waved him off with a smile. “Go ahead, Mr. Powers. I’m still discussing it with a few other cities as well, so take your time.”

Despite knowing that Jasper was trying to raise the price, Mr. Powers had no other choice but to smile. “There’s no reason to search anywhere else, Mr. Laine, since you’re already here and you like this plot of land. Just give me a bit of time. I promise to give you a satisfactory reply.’

Jasper smiled and glanced at the meeting room. “Then could you pass a word for me too, Mr. Powers?”

“Do tell, Mr. Laine,” Mr. Powers spoke politely.

“I came to Reed City to invest, and while I did come to make money, I’m also very willing to help move the economic development along. I came to make legal money through legal means, not to be treated unjustly and forced to deal with someone else’s attitude.”

With that, Jasper then smiled at Mr. Powers who looked rather embarrassed. “Don’t let me bother you further, Mr. Powers. I’ll be going in now.”

With that, Jasper turned and walked carefreely with Julian in tow.

Mr. Powers felt despondent as he watched Jasper leave.

Chad was terrified that Mr. Powers would end up disliking Jasper because of this and spoke carefully, “About that, Mr. Powers, I was there when Marcus sought him out yesterday. To be honest, I’d have left long ago if I were in his shoes. It’s understandable why he’s angry.”

Mr. Powers nodded slowly. "Alright. I'll report this to the higher-ups first while you go and talk to him. Keep him here and interested. The higher-ups will be very interested in this."

Marcus had yet to arrive when Jasper did, but the two other real estate companies called over for formality's sake had already sent their representatives over. These representatives were the ones currently glaring at Jasper.

As far as they were concerned, Jasper was just an outsider Marcus was bound to kick out of Reed City. He was not worth their time to socialize and acquaint themselves with.

Life at the Top Chapter 676

Jasper was carefree as well and took a seat on the chair with the name 'JW Electronics' written behind it. He took a sip of the hot coffee a staff member brought over.

By then, Chad had arrived as well.

Seeing Chad, Jasper suddenly spoke, "Mr. Wright, I heard that Reed City used to be making losses every year until you arrived. You managed to turn that loss into profit and have become quite the taxpayer here in Reed City now, haven't you?"

Chad waved him off and smiled. "That's nothing. It's just a small achievement, incomparable to the work you've done at such a young age, Mr, Laine."

Chad was not being humble, for there really was not another person within the country who could compare to Jasper's achievements.

The man was an entrepreneur who made tens of billions in a year.

How could anyone compare?

Yet Jasper merely spoke, "I beg to disagree. I know that the biggest problem with your industries here is with the people. It's too complex with people belonging to different groups and whatnot. They transferred you here so that you could save the situation because the person before you beat up his subordinate and he ended up in the ICU, correct?"

Those were all jokes and rumors that had spread in Reed City. While there were exaggerated bits, they were not complete lies.

Chad smiled. "It's all in the past now. It wasn't that severe when it happened."

“You came here to save the situation, yet you managed to solve a problem no one could resolve. I think that speaks volumes of your strength, Mr. Wright.”

Finally hearing the intent tone in Jasper’s words, Chad prodded. “You seem to have different intentions in mind, Mr. Laine?”

Jasper smiled. “My investing company is in need of a Director of Human Resources. They’ll mainly be in charge of internal management and human resources.

“I think that you’re very suited for the role, seeing as how you managed to give order to a state business that was riddled with loopholes and turned losses into profits.”

Chad’s expression shifted.

He was still considered a middle class man within the system. While there were few chances for promotions, he was technically not someone’s employee. As such, he was unwilling to have to work under anyone, even if it was Jasper.

Realizing that Chad wanted to reject him, Jasper interrupted, “Don’t be so quick to reject me, Mr. Wright. There’s only so far you can go while working for Reed City State Funds Co., Ltd. Maybe you’d get to take another half-step forward, but you’ll still be confined within Reed City.

“My investing company currently has business involving financial investments, venture capital and angel funds, the real estate industry, the electronic equipment manufacturing industry, the entertainment industry, and the internet industry. It’s a company now, but it’s only a matter of time before I expand it into a group, and finally, a consortium.

“Won’t you be interested in walking out of Reed City and into the entire country before your eyes, Mr. Wright? Exploring the world and its benefits?”

Clapping Chad on the shoulder, Jasper smiled at the shine in the man's eyes. "As for benefits and salary, it'll be ten times what you earn now once you start. Perhaps even 100 times that in the future. As a member of the company's core leaders, you'll even be paid option dividends.

"Frankly speaking, instead of me asking you to work for me, I'd like to think of this as a chance for you to change your life."

Chad flushed, but he forced down his desire with rationality. Smiling bitterly, he spoke, "You really are a professional negotiator, Mr. Laine."

Jasper chuckled. "You don't have to give me a reply now. Take your time and think about it. I'll be staying here in Reed City for another few days. I hope that you'll leave with me when the time comes."

Chad nodded. He was about to speak when the meeting room doors were pushed open.

They heard the man before they could see him.

"Hahaha. What a crowd, is the outsider here yet? We've got to take good care of someone who's visiting our Reed City. It'd be a shame if we scared him to death."

Life at the Top Chapter 677

Marcus strutted into the room arrogantly with a heavily tanned man next to him who was named Ned.

The two entered the room and their eyes immediately fell on Jasper.

Seeing how calm Jasper looked while sitting, Marcus snickered and walked over to him. Marcus raised his hand to knock on the table before Jasper as he spoke,

“I heard that you paid a big amount just to have this bidding meeting here with me, Mr. Laine? Is there even a point to this?”

“If I want you to have it, it’ll easily be yours. But if I don’t want you to have it, you can spend as much money as you want and all you’ll be getting is trash.”

Jasper looked at Marcus and spoke, “Oh? Now I’m curious how exactly you consider 1,500 acres of land trash, Mr. Coine.”

Ned scoffed beside him. “Are you actually stupid or are you just pretending to be stupid, outsider?”

“Without Mr. Coine giving the red light, it doesn’t matter if you’ve bought it or not. There’ll be people troubling you every day and you’ll have no other choice but to leave it empty in the end.”

“Oh right, let me introduce myself. I’m Ned, the owner of Ned’s Pawn Shop. If you think that you can’t take it anymore and want to pawn the land off, I promise I’ll give you a good price. Haha.”

Ned was tall and broad, and his loud laughs resonated around the room deafeningly.

Jasper furrowed his brows slightly. “Could you laugh softer? You’re a little noisy.”

Ned glared at Jasper fiercely. “Did you just say that I’m noisy? Do you want to die?”

At that moment, Julian, who had been standing behind Jasper all this while, stepped forward. From his stance, it was evident that he would forcefully hold down the 190cm-tall Ned if he even showed a sign of starting a fight.

Ned scoffed. “What’s this? You think because you have a bodyguard following you around that it makes you better than all of us? How dare you pick a fight with me?”

Seeing how the scene was beginning to get out of hand, Chad quickly stood up and smiled apologetically. "Mr. Adkins, Mr. Coine, please calm down. This is the city hall's meeting room, after all. The bid will begin soon. It'll look bad on all of us if someone were to get hurt now."

Marcus gave a carefree smile and replied, "Fine. So you're not completely stupid, Wright. I'll let him go since you asked."

With that, Marcus raised his hand to point at Jasper and spoke slowly, "You wanted this bid, so you have no one to blame when you regret it later. You're not the first to fight me for something in Reed City, so let's just take a look at who's more capable, hmm?"

With that, Marcus patted Ned and turned to the designated seats of the representatives from Reed City State Funds Co., Ltd.

Ned stared at Jasper threateningly and grinned wretchedly. He used his hand and gestured the slicing of his throat before he followed Marcus.

After all this trouble, it was finally 8:00 a.m.

Chad was the host of the bid, but he could not take the stage since Mr. Powers had not returned from reporting to the higher-ups.

News from Mr. Powers would relay the stance the city government was taking and therefore, how the bid would end. That was why Chad did not dare to start the bid when he still did not know the city government's intentions.

Thankfully, Mr. Powers did not make him wait too long for he hastily returned around five minutes past eight.

He first turned to Chad. "It's time, Mr. Wright. Please begin the bid."

Chad knew that this was Mr. Powers trying to usher him away so that he would not hear the conversation between him and Jasper.

Life at the Top Chapter 678

Chad did not mind. He knew that most of the time, knowing too much would only turn out troublesome, especially since he was not a formidable person.

Thankful, Chad quickly excused himself and walked over to the podium.

Chad then began to give an unnecessary opening speech to introduce the plot of land for formality's sake.

Meanwhile, Mr. Powers and Jasper began to chat privately between themselves below.

"Mr. Laine, the higher-ups state that as long as what you spoke of was the truth, then we're willing to provide the best discounts for you," Mr. Powers relayed.

Jasper was not surprised. It was a large investment, one every city in the country needed. Reed City's stance on the matter was rather satisfactory.

"What are the specifics?" Jasper asked.

"The tax payable for your business in Reed City for the first five years would be free for the first two, then for the following three, there'll be a 50% discount. Tax for the next five years after that will also be halved. Tax will only be paid in full after the ten-year mark. In return, Mr. Laine, you are required to employ at least 4,000 local workers," Mr. Powers explained.

"No problem. There's no way I'd look for workers from elsewhere. This is a very logical request," Jasper replied.

The duo's discussion had a great start and Mr. Powers smiled as he continued to speak, "The city government will be in charge of the traffic and road work around your electronic equipment factory. The city government also promises at least three public transport routes to your factory.

“In the future, should Reed City begin constructing railway lines, the city government promises that your electronics factory will be our first target to consider.”

Jasper nodded expressionlessly. Pointing at Chad, he smiled. “Then comes the most important question. What about his plot of land?”

Mr. Powers’ expression turned stern. He knew that the conversation now involved the main benefit.

The current situation was that Jasper wanted the plot of land for his factory, while the city government also needed Jasper’s 600 to 700 million investment as well as occupational quotas. It was a win-win situation.

However, the issue now was that Marcus and his friends wanted to make Jasper lose money, and Jasper refused to let that happen.

Therefore, Marcus and his friends’ existence was already affecting the city government’s plan and Reed City’s development.

After a quick moment of thought, Mr. Powers clenched his jaw as he thought back to what the higher-ups had told him and he replied, “To be frank with you, Mr. Laine, the city government is on your side. After all, there’s a big problem with Fortune Co., Ltd’s internal system. We’ve actually been investigating them in secret.”

“None of that matters to me. I’m just a businessman, but Marcus seems unwilling to leave me alone. I planned to buy this plot of land with 200 million but because of them, I’m going to end up paying at least 400 to 500 million for it. Does this seem cost-effective to you at all?” Jasper spoke calmly.

In face of Jasper who was unwilling to concede, Mr. Powers felt both frustrated and exasperated. Yet such was the current situation, and finding ways to resolve this was difficult.

Not to mention that Jasper's request was indeed very rational and reasonable. The city government's dignity was on the line if anyone found out about this.

"No matter what happens at the bid today, the city government will only take 200 million from you to transfer the property to your name." Mr. Powers promised on behalf of the city government.

Jasper smiled calmly but was not surprised. Instead, he asked meaningfully, "Would the city government be interested in watching a performance, then?"

At that, Mr. Powers looked confused and shocked.

Life at the Top Chapter 679

"What are they murmuring about?"

Ned asked curiously and glared at Jasper on the other side of the meeting room. He was currently engaged in a conversation with Mr. Powers.

Marcus, who was watching the scene, forced the unease down within him and spoke aggressively, "How would I know?"

"What if they're discussing how to deal with us?" Ned suddenly asked.

Marcus' expression darkened as he growled. "Can you shut up? Why would the city government join forces with Jasper to work against us?"

Ned had a weird look on his face as he spoke. “I refuse to believe that you haven’t heard the rumors, Mr. Coine. The city government this term has already been displeased with us for a very long time. If not for the fact that both our grandfathers are alive, they’d have done something to us long ago.”

“Your grandfather hasn’t been feeling very well lately, right? While the number of people aware of this isn’t a lot, it’s not a few either.”

Marcus’ expression darkened at Ned’s words. “My grandfather is just a little sick. He’ll get better in no time. These people wouldn’t dare to attack me at such a time.”

“That doesn’t mean we don’t need to be careful around them. Look at how close Powers is with Jasper. You can’t expect me to believe that they’re not plotting together,” Ned spoke.

Marcus scoffed. “We’ll deal with it when the time comes. We’ll know if there’s anything going between them once the bid is over. Something is definitely wrong if the city government is unwilling to let us bid, or you’re just overthinking this.”

...

“Without further ado, let’s begin the bidding ceremony. We’ll be using an open-bid method this time and the four companies present are free to call out your prices as you wish. The one with the highest bid owns the land.

“We’ll be bidding on a 1,500-acre plot of industrial land by Brac County. With a starting price of 150 million, every following bid is to have an increment of five million. Please begin.”

The moment Chad finished speaking, the owners of the two other companies that came to join the bidding raised their hands.

They called for 150 million and 160 million respectively.

After that, the two representatives had done their part and now sat at the side to watch the scene unfold.

They were not disappointed. Right after the call for 160 million, Marcus knocked on the table and easily called out, "250 million."

Marcus had increased the price by 90 million in one go, exceeding Jasper and the city government's agreed-upon 200 million.

It was a simple and direct taunt.

Marcus looked at Jasper after calling out the price and snickered. "You're a wealthy man from outside Reed City who has come to invest. Even though we locals only have so much money, it's only right we put up a fight."

Without looking up at all, Jasper called his price calmly.

"600 million."

The room fell silent at such a value.

Even though there were only ten people in the meeting room altogether, clear gasps could still be heard.

"Oh!"

No one had expected Jasper to call out 600 million right off the bat.

This was 600 million, not 600 bucks.

The owners of the two real estate companies gulped.

They suddenly realized that Jasper was not picking a fight with Marcus baselessly. Jasper was a capable man.

If anything, their companies were considered large in Reed City. They were renowned wealthy men in the city as well.

However, taking 600 million out was beyond their abilities—unless they chose to sell everything they owned.

‘But who would sell everything they owned just for an industrial plot of land that cost 600 million?’

‘Only crazy people would do that.’

This spoke volumes of how far beyond their imagination Jasper’s wealth was.

Marcus’ expression darkened.

He knew that Jasper would call a price higher than his, but he had not expected 600 million right at the beginning.

Life at the Top Chapter 680

In comparison to this 600 million, his 250 million seemed like an embarrassing figure now.

He had made a fool of himself.

“F*ck!” Marcus cursed internally.

“Fight him, Mr. Coine! If that brat is so confident, then we’ll make him pay more. I’d like to see how much he can afford.” Ned was a cruel man as he urged beside Marcus.

Marcus nodded and shouted without hesitation, "800 million!"

Another gasp.

This time, everyone's gazes fell on Marcus.

Marcus' unease had now turned into pride.

"What are you being so arrogant about? Do you think you're the only rich one here? As if I'd be afraid to compete with you money-wise," Marcus sneered at Jasper.

Jasper remained calm as a smile appeared at the corner of his lips.

"Is that so? Only the future will tell, then."

Then, Jasper called out stubbornly, unwilling to back down, "900 million."

From 250 million to 600 million and then to 800 million, and now, Jasper had added another 100 million to the cost.

"He's nervous, Mr. Coine." Ned acted as if he was already victorious. "And here I wondered how capable this brat was. Turns out he's just a nobody."

Marcus scoffed. "Very well, then. We'll wring him dry."

"950 million!"

Marcus played well, assuming that Jasper's limit was one billion.

There was no way he would spend so much money for a plot of land, so Marcus decided that he would raise the price to one billion, which was Jasper's limit, before he retreated.

By doing so, Jasper would end up paying 800 million more for a 200 million plot of land.

Marcus was extremely pleased with himself.

Marcus could not help but smile at the thought of Jasper calling out one billion only to realize that Marcus would not be calling out a higher price. Oh, how delightful Jasper's expression would be then!

He looked at Jasper disdainfully and provokingly, thinking that victory was in his hands.

Yet... Jasper ignored him.

Jasper showed no sign of calling for a higher price.

Marcus began to feel frantic.

At that moment, Chad had already been waiting for a while and stated, "950 million from Fortune Co., Ltd, is there anyone willing to pay a higher price? 950 million going once!"

Jasper still showed no sign of calling out.

Marcus' smile slowly vanished.

"950 million going twice. Is there no higher bid?"

Chad's voice sounded again.

Marcus was overwhelmed with the desire to kill Chad. 'Can you f*cking talk slower?!'

However, Jasper still remained num. Marcus could not hold back anymore and turned to Jasper, saying, "What's this? Are you shy, Mr. Laine? Not that big of a deal are you now, seeing as you're shocked by just 950 million?"

In face of Marcus' horrible attempt to provoke him, Jasper merely reached for the coffee cup and took a sip. Under Mr. Powers' stunned gaze, Jasper, who was beside him, spoke calmly, "If you like this plot of land so much, Mr. Powers, then I have no other choice but to give it to you. 950 million, huh? Tsk tsk, what a large amount you're willing to pay. As expected of Reed City's young master."

At that, Marcus' expression changed drastically while Ned paled beside him as well.

"950 million, calling thrice! Sold! Congratulations, Fortune Co., Ltd, the plot of land is now yours."

Following the sound of Chad's gavel, Marcus also felt it hammer onto his heart.

The entire meeting room was in an uproar.

Life at the Top Chapter 681

Everyone had thought the bid would either end in Jasper clenching his teeth and calling out for a higher bid while Marcus watched calmly as Jasper lost a large amount of money.

Or perhaps it would end with Jasper being understanding and giving up the land to Marcus at a low price only to buy it over at a high price.

Still, the current situation was something no one had expected.

Everyone understood now as they watched Jasper show his hand.

It had been a set-up ever since the beginning, a trap where he would lure Marcus in only to end Marcus with one strike.

The owners of the two real estate companies shared a look.

They looked at each other in confusion.

The same thought appeared in their heads, 'Are all outsiders so fierce nowadays?'

Then, they looked at Marcus. Having lost the game and his dignity, Marcus resembled an aggravated lion as he suddenly shot to his feet and slammed his palm on the table before him. The impact came with a loud bang.

Following that was a roar even louder than the slam.

"How dare you trick me, Jasper?"

Jasper sat in his chair, unfazed by Marcus' roar. He spoke calmly, "What do you mean? You were the one who jumped out and challenged me for this plot of land. The bid was hosted by the city government too, so how could you accuse me of tricking you?"

Jaw clenched tight, Marcus' eyes were bloodshot. He was so infuriated he might explode.

'This is 950 million Somer Dollars!

'Almost f*cking one billion!

'This one billion hard-earned money of mine is now gone! In its place is a 1,500-acre plot of industrial land!'

The land was useless in Marcus' hands, for he had no idea nor understanding of operating a factory.

What enraged him more was how he had stepped right into Jasper's trap.

This had made Marcus extremely uncomfortable, as business for him had always been smooth-sailing.

In comparison to Marcus, Ned was more enraged.

Ned and the rest were such a tight-knit group of friends because they had a common interest.

While Marcus was the main shareholder of Fortune Co., Ltd, Ned had his fair share of shares as well. This 950 million loss meant that Ned would lose a few hundred million as well.

If Marcus was already so infuriated, one could only imagine how much angrier Ned felt.

His pawnshop business did not make great profits. After all, the current social and economic development had yet to arrive at the heights in Jasper's past life. There were only so many things civilians could pawn off right now. Most people were either someone's employees or ran their own businesses. It was rare for people to suddenly need a large sum of funds.

As such, a few tens of thousands a year was the maximum Ned could earn from his pawnshop.

There was no way Ned was willing to pay so much money in one go today.

Roaring, Ned arrived before Jasper and spoke wretchedly, "Stop pretending to be innocent, Laine. Everyone with eyes can tell that you set a trap for us with this bid!

"You're going to pay this 950 million whether you want to or not! Or I'll kill you right now!"

Blinded by benefits, Ned no longer cared about the fact that they were in public as he threatened Jasper on the spot.

Threats were not enough to alleviate his anger, so Ned reached out to grab Jasper's lapels.

Behind Jasper, Julian had already stood up the moment Ned rushed over. Julian refused to see Jasper get hurt, so he stepped forward in front of Jasper and reached out to grab Ned's wrist.

Then, everyone present proceeded to watch Julian flip Ned, a broad and sturdy man of 190cm in height, off the floor and bodyslam him onto the ground.

With a loud thud, Ned's 100kg body hit the floor. Following this was a terrified and painful shout from the man.

Life at the Top Chapter 682

Julian placed a foot over Ned's chest and spoke coldly, "This is a warning. If you try anything dangerous again, I'll break more than just your arm."

'He broke his arm?!'

Stunned and dazed, everyone snapped back to reality and turned to look at Ned's arm. They found that his right wrist was bent at a strange angle. It was a shuddering sight.

"Chupse..."

Everyone present sucked in a cold breath.

They did not expect Jasper's bodyguard to be so strong, especially considering that Ned had fought his way up in Reed City.

Yet when faced with Jasper's bodyguard, he did not even last a single second.

At that moment, everyone realized that Jasper was someone truly formidable.

As expected, Marcus roared.

"How dare you hurt him, Jasper?!"

Jasper replied calmly, "Everyone in the room saw very clearly that Ned attacked me first. My bodyguard merely countered his attack."

Marcus had a wretched expression on his face. "You've broken Ned's hand. This isn't over Jasper!"

“I’d think about how I’m supposed to pay that 950 million first if I were you,” Jasper spoke calmly.

The words cut deep into Marcus’ heart.

“Jasper! F*cking... Fine!” Marcus clenched his jaw, utterly infuriated.

“You’re just making me suffer because you can’t afford that plot of land, hmm?”

Jasper shrugged. “You’ve misunderstood. I saw how much you wanted that plot of land, Mr. Coine, so I had no other choice but to give it to you. After all, I’m just an outsider and I’d never dare to fight a man as powerful as you, Mr. Coine.

“So I’ve decided that I’ll just choose another plot of land to build my factory. Reed City is huge, there’s bound to be somewhere suitable for me.”

Marcus widened his eyes and pointed at Jasper with a trembling finger. He angrily barked out in laughter. “Good! Very good!

“Very f*cking good!

“Just wait, Jasper!”

Marcus then helped Ned up, the latter still whimpering in pain. He glared at Jasper coldly before they left embarrassingly.

With Marcus’s exit, the performance had come to a momentary end as well.

The owners of the two real estate companies shared a look and ran over. They handed Jasper their name cards courteously and told Jasper to look for them if he needed a construction company for his factory, promising great results for a cheap price.

Jasper did not treat the two real estate company owners coldly despite the immense change in their attitudes.

Humans tended to act according to the situation, so how could he expect otherwise from men who had been doing business for decades?

Any less shameless and they would not even have the rights to join Marcus and Jasper in this bid.

After taking the name cards and conversing with the two of them, Jasper watched the two owners leave.

The two owners walked toward the door with excitement and unease. They were just about to leave when they heard Jasper's voice from behind.

"A 950 million revenue, Mr. Powers. Is it to the city government's satisfaction?"

At that, the two owners felt their legs give out and almost knelt on the ground.

'So Jasper has already gotten the city government's support without anyone realizing?!'

Life at the Top Chapter 683

Mr. Powers did not know what the two fleeing real estate owners were thinking.

All he knew was that his mind was currently blown.

Mr. Powers had not expected Marcus to actually act so well according to Jasper's plan.

The plot of land had a starting bid of 100 to 200 million and Mr. Powers believed that it would only come to a maximum of 300 to 400 million.

Mr. Powers had no qualms with that, for it aligned with the city government's desire to oppress Marcus.

Yet... Jasper had just taken 950 million from Marcus in one go!

"We're very well aware of Fortune Co., Ltd's financial situation, Mr. Laine. The entire company is worth around one billion only, and with how much he has to pay this time... I'm afraid it would only cause you trouble."

Mr. Powers' words were extremely subtle.

Jasper smiled and replied calmly, "There's no way I can invest in anything with Marcus still in the picture. Plus, the city government wants to get rid of Marcus too, correct? I believe the city government's and my interests align on this topic. I'm sure that you wouldn't want someone to slander the reputation of Reed City either, right?"

With that, Jasper then clapped Mr. Powers on the shoulder. "I understand that there are many things the city government is not in the position to do, so I'll do them for you instead. All I hope is that the city government is able to provide me support during necessary times."

Mr. Powers replied sternly, "I'll make sure to relay your message word for word, Mr. Laine."

Jasper politely bade Mr. Powers farewell and called out to Julian before he exited the meeting room while stretching.

Mr. Powers had a grim expression on his face as he watched Jasper vanish at the exit.

Just then, Chad walked over and whispered to Mr. Powers, “What should we do about this, Mr. Powers?”

“What else can we do? The only option is to report this to the higher-ups and let them decide what to do next. The situation has gone beyond what we can control.” Mr. Powers sighed.

...

“He dealt with the most complicated problem with the simplest method. What an interesting young man.”

A middle-aged man sat in the spacious and solemn office. There were two flags on this office table, ones that ordinary office desks were not allowed to have.

Mr. Powers stood respectfully before the table as he reported the details of the bid this morning.

He also relayed Jasper’s message without missing a detail to that middle-aged man.

After a moment of thought, the middle-aged man waved his hand. “I still have a meeting later. You’ll be in charge of overlooking the development of this situation. Essentially, you are to make our stance on the matter clear.

“Do not say what you do not have to and remain impartial. But you must do your part well.”

With that, Mr. Powers bade farewell and left the room while deep in thought.

...

In Reed City’s best people’s hospital, the Special Care Unit.

Ned lay on the hospital bed, his face sickly pale. He had just got out of surgery and was enduring the pain now that the anesthesia had worn off.

“The patient’s arm has suffered a comminuted fracture. We’ve already done our best to repair it, but there will be lifelong complications with his right hand. He’ll be able to use it as normal, but it will no longer be able to exert extreme force or participate in strenuous activity.”

The doctor looked at the group of people who had sinister and bloodthirsty expressions on their faces. He was too nervous to take a bigger breath.

“You piece of trash! Your entire family is made out of f*cking trash!” roared a man who looked a lot like Ned.

“Enough. They’ve already told us this, so we’ll get the same answer no matter where we go. At least his right hand isn’t completely crippled. That’s good enough, isn’t it?”

Len spoke expressionlessly.

“Thank you, doctor. Could you please leave us alone?”

Len’s peaceful attitude had the doctor let out a sigh of relief and he quickly excused himself.

After the doctor left, Len then grimly turned to look at Marcus who had been silent the entire time. “Talk, Marcus. Tell me what happened.”

Marcus then proceeded to relay the incident, albeit not without exaggeration on some parts.

In the hospital room, both Marcus’s and Ned’s fathers, Len and Fletcher, darkened their expressions.

“That’s essentially what happened, Dad, Uncle Adkins.”

“That Jasper Laine! He has no respect for Ned and me just because he’s rich. We didn’t even say anything and he immediately started yelling about a fight!

“This bid was supposed to be a fair competition, but who’d have thought that the b*stard had bribed Chad? Even Mr. Powers favored him too. Ned and I got roped into a trap he had set up and we ended up losing 950 million. There’s no way we’ll accept this outcome!”

After Marcus’ explanation, the situation now turned into a case of Jasper oppressing them and disrespecting the local families. Jasper had apparently also set up a malicious trap and caused Marcus to lose 950 million.

After Marcus was done, the hospital room fell silent.

After a long while, Len then glared at Marcus. “Do you think that just because we’re old we don’t know how you youngsters normally act? We only choose to let you act as you wish outside, but that doesn’t mean we’re blind to the kind of people you are.

“The part of it being a trap is true. But from what I can see, you provoked him first, didn’t you?”

Len’s words had Marcus flushing in embarrassment. He spoke up indignantly, “But it’s true that he broke Ned’s hand! He also bribed Chad to make me lose 950 million.”

“Hmph!” Len harrumphed coldly and spoke, “I told you guys not to provoke others as you wished, didn’t I? What about now, then? Do you finally understand how strong outsiders can be?”

“What do you want to do about this, Fletcher?” Len looked at the other man who was furious.

Life at the Top Chapter 684

Fletcher replied grimly, "No matter what the actual situation was, he did break Ned's arm. The Adkins family can forget about working in Reed City if I'm not even going to get justice for my son."

Nodding, Len replied, "Alright, it seems like we're on the same page, then. The Coine and the Adkins families have been close since our father's generation. There's no way I'd stand still and watch as someone bullies Ned."

"Dad, Uncle Adkins, I don't plan on giving the city government that 950 million," Marcus spoke darkly.

"They're obviously targeting us. The past few years of work would've been for nothing if I just gave them that money."

Len was about to speak when Marcus' phone rang.

"It's Mr. Powers from the city government." Marcus' expression changed as he accepted the call.

After a moment, Marcus hung up the call angrily and spoke, "Dad, Uncle Adkins, Mr. Powers wants me to pay the 950 million bidding price within three business days as per the regulations. What the f*ck is that supposed to mean?"

"Don't spout nonsense!"

Len glared at Marcus who did not seem to know how to choose his words properly and growled. "There are some things that you can just keep to yourself, okay? You don't have to exclaim every single thought that comes to your mind!"

How old are you, huh? Can you still not tell the difference between what you can and cannot say?"

Marcus replied angrily, "Mr. Powers sounded really stern on the phone. He said that if I don't pay up, the city government will then sue us and we'll be brought to court. By then, they'll even investigate and charge me for defrauding state-owned property! It's not even that big of a deal and they're blowing this out of proportion!"

At that, Len's expression changed as well.

He looked at Fletcher and spoke grimly, "It's that person who newly took office in the city government, isn't it?"

Fletcher sneered, "It has to be. He's the only one who doesn't like us. They've made quite a few moves against us recently so there's no way they'd let go of this opportunity."

"Hmph, the Coine family isn't their punching bag." Len scoffed and turned to Marcus, saying, "You have three more days, right? So before those days are up, I'd like you to get something done."

"What is it?" Marcus asked.

"You said Jasper bribed this man called Chad? Then go and think of a plan to get him fired."

...

The Coine and Adkins families were terrifyingly powerful in Reed City. The following night, Jasper received a phone call from Chad.

Walking out from the hotel, Jasper and Julian arrived at a skewers stall and saw Chad smoking by the road despondently.

“You’re here, Mr. Laine.” Chad quickly snuffed out the bud of his cigarette when he saw Jasper walk over.

While just as polite as before, Chad was also speaking to Jasper with a shred of respect and caution now.

Jasper pretended not to realize this slight yet important change and glanced at the small pool of cigarette buds on the floor beside Chad with a smile. “Is something bothering you, Mr. Wright?”

Chad smiled bitterly. “You don’t have to address me so politely anymore.”

“Come sit, I’ll tell you as we eat.”

Under Chad’s lead, Jasper and Julian sat at the table. Chad smiled at Jasper and spoke, “I love skewers, Mr. Laine, so much that I’d eat it every few days. So forgive me for not inviting you out to a high-class restaurant.”

“My parents were farmers. I don’t care much about how cheap the food is, especially when it comes to supper. Nothing’s better than lamb skewers.” Jasper chuckled.

“Nice!” Chad’s eyes brightened and he turned to shout at the owner, “I’ll have ten more lamb skewers, please!”

Chad cracked open two bottles of cold beer. He also handed Julian a few bottles of non-alcoholic drinks since he knew that Julian was Jasper’s bodyguard and did not drink.

“So tell me, Mr. Wright. What happened?” Jasper asked.

“My boss talked to me when I clocked out today. He said that he’s going to transfer me to a small village south of Reed City,” Chad explained with a deep sigh.

“From working in a city to being demoted straight to a small village? Not even to a town first? That’s unusual,” Jasper commented meaningfully.

“Haha. It’s the Coine family’s work.” Chad scoffed and downed a large gulp of beer roughly.

“So I banged my hand on the table and gave up. I exploded and vented all the unjust I’ve been keeping bottled up inside of me. If the Coine family wants to oppress and dominate, then I’d rather not work there anymore!

“I’ve been thinking about working with you, Mr. Laine. So I was wondering if I still had a chance?” Chad glanced at Jasper with a look of extreme anticipation.

If Chad was ever reluctant to leave his job because he had grown attached to this job he had done for more than half his life, he was not anymore now that he had seen through the truth behind the working system. He was ready to give it his all.

“I would want nothing more.” Jasper grabbed his bottle of beer and clinked it with Chad’s.

Chad grinned and spoke, “Alright then. I’m going to start working for you now, Mr. Laine. I’ll be your loyal subordinate!”

“You’ll realize how smart this decision is very soon.”

Jasper was truly grateful to Marcus for this incident alone.

After all, it was not easy to get such a talent in the management field like Chad on his side, and Marcus had easily done it for him.

Despite having the advantage of being reincarnated with memories of the future, Jasper knew that not every skilled person in the management industry was suited to work in a company like JW Capital.

Chad, though, was different. While Chad was not a famous man in Jasper's past life, this short period of time was enough for Jasper to recognize this man's potential.

The two were in a great mood now that their frustrations were resolved. Time began to tick by as they two drank and talked.

Just as they started the third round of drinking, two vans suddenly halted by the road and more than ten men dressed in black jumped out with machetes. All of them rushed toward Jasper's table.

The sudden development caught everyone off guard.

It resembled a scene from a movie, and the other customers who were eating around them all screamed while running away.

Julian reacted extremely quickly.

"Jasper, watch out!"

Life at the Top Chapter 685

By the time he finished speaking, Julian had already dashed over to stand in front of Jasper. He held a beer bottle in his hand and with a backhand smash against the table, the thick beer bottle shattered.

Julian's gaze was frosty as he pointed the sharp end of the bottle at attackers who were rushing toward them.

He did not rush up to them, for his most important mission was to protect Jasper.

After all, they were faced with around a dozen men now and it would end horribly if he rushed forward only to leave an opening for someone to attack Jasper.

Despite having lived more than half his life, Chad had never seen such a scene before and he grew pale from utter fear.

“Don’t worry,” Jasper’s gentle voice sounded...

“Jul’s here, we’ll be fine.”

Chad turned to look at Jasper only to see him calm as usual. There was no sign of panic on the man’s expression at all.

Perhaps it was Jasper’s influence, but Chad found himself calming down as well.

In a short while, the men with machetes rushed over.

It was evident that these people had been through professional training. They were on a completely different level from ordinary gangsters and were extremely professional machete wielders.

Their target was clear—Jasper.

The first three rushed over, and Julian was extremely focused as he raised his hand to whack the beer bottle on one of the trio’s heads. The opponent staggered with a pitiful whimper and fell. At the same time, Julian grabbed another’s throat before tossing him against the third person harshly.

Julian was extremely strong, especially when his strength exploded. Jasper had seen how the man burst a sandbag with one punch in practice.

The hit crashed into the three men like a train and they were sent flying with pitiful screams. They ended up toppling the adjacent table upon impact before they ended up passing out embarrassingly.

Julian had acquired a machete by now and with a weapon in hand, Julian resembled a God of War. No one could get three meters near him.

Had it not been to protect Jasper, Julian would have rushed toward the men and sliced his way through all of them.

Seeing how more than half of their men had been defeated, the remaining five to six shared a look. Jaws set, they changed their tactics.

They had three of them surround Julian while another three rushed to attack Jasper.

Julian roared angrily once he realized it and grabbed a table beside him with one hand. Then, he threw the table at them as if it were a weapon.

Two were immediately knocked down.

At the same time, two machete-wielding men had arrived on both sides of Jasper.

Despite not knowing how to fight, Jasper was not an idiot who would just stand there and let them do as they wished. His opponents had weapons and were professionally trained, so fighting back was not an option. Jasper immediately took two steps back and waited for Julian to come and help.

However, Chad was petrified and remained rooted in place.

The two men watched as Jasper retreated. Julian was angrily rushing over as well, and they did not have time to run after Jasper now. Grinding their molars, they swung their machetes at Chad instead.

At that moment, Jasper's heart raced.

He would not be able to find a manager who met his and JW Capital's standards if Chad died here.

Without further thought, Jasper walked forward and reached out to pull Chad away.

This move had the fatal slice merely nicking Chad's arm instead, while Jasper ended up taking a hit on his shoulder as well. Blood immediately streamed from the wound.

Julian's eyes grew red from fury at the sight.

His strength exploded within him and he arrived before the two men in the blink of an eye. Raising his hand, he smacked the two attackers just like how one patted a watermelon. The two men's chests folded inward upon impact. Countless ribs must have fractured and they immediately fainted.

The remaining two men saw the scene and turned to flee. Whatever bravery they had left had already vanished into thin air.

Not that Julian allowed them to escape as he was still enraged. He caught up to them in a couple of steps and grabbed the two by the shoulders as easily as grabbing small chicks. He then pressed them onto the floor.

With two loud thuds, the tiles on the floor shattered and the two attackers were on the ground before they could even shout. They lay there without moving.

"Mr. Laine!" Chad finally reacted to what was happening. Ignoring the wound on his arm, he rushed over to hold Jasper. Color immediately drained from his face as he took a look at the horrifyingly blood-soaked wound.

He knew that Jasper was hurt from protecting him.

"Get lost!"

Julian shouted angrily with red eyes. He wanted nothing more than to beat Chad up, considering Jasper had only gotten hurt from saving Chad who was too stunned to react.

Chad shivered in fear and quickly spoke, "I... I'll call for help right away!"

"Jasper." Julian rushed over to Jasper, his eyes filled with franticness and regret.

"F*cking hell, I'm still alive." Jasper could not help but curse at the pain. His shoulder burned where the wound was and hot blood continued to flow between his fingers as he pressed down on the wound. He assumed that the cut must have hit his artery.

It would be a lie if he said he was not panicking, for he would be dead if it was a major artery.

He had spent his previous life suffering as an ordinary and bitter man. Now that he had gotten the chance to start over and rewrite his past, it would be a tremendous shame if he died before he could fully enjoy his life.

Sucking a breath through his teeth, Jasper spoke, "Help me stop the bleeding first."

Julian quickly ripped Jasper's shirt by the shoulder. The wound cut deep to the bone and fresh blood streamed freely. It was a terrifying sight!

"They nicked a blood vessel. We have to get you to the hospital now." Julian panicked.

While the wound was on the shoulder and nonfatal, it was rather deep. Not even a large cow could survive continuous blood loss at such a rate, let alone a human being.

With that, Julian carried Jasper onto his back and got up to run toward the street.

A cab happened to pass by just then and Julian handed Jasper to Chad without a thought before walking up to hail the cab.

The driver was startled by the sight of Julian who was drenched in blood. Not daring to stop the car, he swerved left and right to make his way around Julian but the man jumped onto the hood instead. With a punch, Julian broke the windshield and almost gave the driver a heart attack.

“Send us to the hospital. I’ll kill you if you waste our time!” Julian’s eyes were frosty, and his ruthless tone made the driver’s legs go numb.

Jasper had no idea how he ended up in the cab, and all he could hear was Chad and Julian talking. He also heard the roaring of the engine, and his heavy eyelids took in no more than the shadows of the street lamps that flew past.

Sound and scenery slowly faded away as Jasper’s consciousness slipped.

Life at the Top Chapter 686

Jasper was severely injured and in shock. When he entered the hospital, he was already unconscious.

The entire Southeast Province was in an uproar when news spread to them.

Wendy received a call from Julian in the middle of the night, and she was too shocked by the news to even speak.

Dawson was the calmest and immediately contacted Henry who was also in Nauritus City.

Henry flipped a table at the news.

That night, Henry called for his private plane to fly over from Harbor City. The plane landed in Nauritus City only to fly toward Reed City within ten minutes of landing after Henry and Wendy boarded.

In the shortest amount of time, the situation had progressed at the most terrifying speed.

Its influence involved multiple circles and many people were losing sleep over the knowledge.

The first to know of the news was the chief of the government of Reed City.

After getting woken up by Mr. Powers' phone call in the middle of the night, the composed and sturdy man dropped his cup when he heard of the news in his study.

After exclaiming how ignorant of the law those people were for three consecutive times, Mr. Powers stood in the study frightfully while drenched in sweat.

“The situation is very complicated now, Chief. Everyone in Reed City has their eyes on what’s happening and I heard that Jasper’s family is making their way over tonight. At the same time, tomorrow is Marcus’ deadline to pay up the money. What do we do now?”

While terrified, Mr. Powers braved through as he asked for guidance.

After a moment of silence, the middle-aged man asked grimly, “How’s Jasper doing now?”

“The hospital said it’s a hypovolemic shock, and they’re doing everything they can to keep him alive,” Mr. Powers replied.

“A hypovolemic shock... That’s not exactly a small matter.” The middle-aged man quickly calmed down from his anger and began to analyze the pros and cons of the incident.

“Okay, I want you to keep a close eye on Jasper’s condition at the hospital. If Marcus is unwilling to pay us tomorrow, we’ll put this on hold first. We need Jasper’s help for that.”

Mr. Powers could tell that the chief planned to wait first before they made a move. If Jasper woke up, then everything would continue according to plan. If Jasper passed tonight, then all their previous hard work would have been for naught.

Mr. Powers sighed and replied, “Alright, I’ll keep a close eye.”

“Visit Jasper the moment he wakes. But if he doesn’t, our plan stops here,” the man ordered.

“Yes, Chief.”

...

At that moment, Ned chortled exaggeratedly in his hospital room.

“F*cking yes! Who knows if that f*cker is dead yet or not?” Marcus laughed aloud and spoke to Ned whose elation was shown brightly on his face.

“Heh, there should be news about it in a few hours. I heard that he was drenched in blood when he arrived at the hospital. His blood pressure was almost at zero, I don’t think he’ll make it.” Ned smiled wretchedly.

“That’s even better, then.” Marcus’ gaze was filled with hatred. “I’ve got to thank your dad for this, killing him in one go. We’ll get the others together and drink when you’re better, to celebrate.”

“But Mr. Coine, how reliable is this news? I can’t help but feel uneasy,” Ned told Marcus.

Marcus waved his hand dismissively. “What are you afraid of? Your dad made the first move and my dad was there to wrap it up. There’s no way anything could go wrong.

“So what if that f*cker is capable? This is Reed City, what can he do? Don’t you see how the city government hasn’t made a move yet? That means it’s fine.”

Marcus then turned to Ned disdainfully. “Or are you telling me you’re worried now? Just think about it, he broke your arm.”

Ned’s expression was filled with resentment as he spoke, “Worried? My only worry here is that he died too easily! I didn’t even get a chance to torture him yet!”

“Hahaha. Since we’re in such a great mood, how about I get you a few beauties to spend the night with?” Marcus got up happily.

Life at the Top Chapter 687

“Can you?” Ned’s eyes shone, but he seemed a little hesitant.

“Why the f*ck not? You just have an injured hand. Everything else is still working, no?” Marcus snickered evilly.

“Then bring me two! I’m going to f*cking celebrate!”

...

At the same time in Nauritus City, Southeast Province.

Someone knocked on the bedroom of a villa.

“Come in.”

Conrad’s tired voice sounded from inside.

The person entered and Conrad switched his desk light on. “What is it? Why did you come looking for me in the middle of the night?”

“We’ve just gotten news from the people we sent to keep a close eye on Jasper and the Schuler family. Something has happened to Jasper in Reed City and he’s currently in the emergency room in the hospital. We don’t know if he’ll make it through the night.”

Conrad’s head snapped up as he asked in a raspy voice, “Are you certain?”

The man nodded. “Wendy took a midnight flight over in Henry’s private plane. From that, I think we can pretty much confirm that the news is true.”

Conrad furrowed his brows. He was elated a moment ago, yet now he was in despair. He did not even know what exactly he was feeling anymore.

After a long while, Conrad asked, "Do we know who did it?"

"To prevent Jasper from realizing anything, we didn't dare keep too close an eye on him. All we can confirm is that he was attacked by a local family, most likely due to conflict over a plot of land."

Conrad chuckled weirdly. "What a powerful family. Jasper's a man not even I, Conrad Monty, could win, yet they managed to send him to the hospital so easily. What brutal countrymen from unremarkable villages!"

"What's next, Mr. Monty?"

Conrad closed his eyes and leaned against the headboard. After a long moment of thought, he replied, "Nothing. We continue constructing our factory for the MP3 players. Regardless of whether Jasper lives or not, this is still a largely profitable business.

"As for those villagers in Reed City, it'll only be a matter of time before they know how horrifying the consequences of sending Jasper to the hospital is. Leave them be."

The man nodded. "I understand, Mr. Monty. I'll be leaving now if there are no further orders."

Waving him off, Conrad waited for the soft sound of the door clicking shut before murmuring to himself, "I thought I'd be elated to know that you're dying soon, Jasper. So why can't I seem to feel happy about it at all? Who's going to be my opponent here in Southeast Province if you die?"

"It's too lonely here without a rival."

...

When Jasper opened his eyes again, the first sight he met with was Wendy's reddened and teary eyes.

Jasper was stunned as his mind had yet to realize what was happening. He then felt a sharp stabbing pain from his shoulder where his wound was, and Jasper could not help but make a muffled sound.

That sharp stabbing sensation woke Jasper completely, and all the memories of what had happened rushed into his mind.

"You're awake! You're awake!" Wendy shouted happily. She tightly grabbed Jasper's hand with both of hers and spoke with a tremble in her voice, "You have no idea how scared I was."

Jasper smiled at the sight of Wendy's haggard features. "How'd you get here? It's just a small injury, I'm alright."

"What do you mean it's just a small injury? The doctor said you would've been drained of all blood if you had arrived a moment later! You scared me to death!" Wendy wailed as she forced herself not to cry.

Jasper chuckled. "Shh, it's okay. I'm awake now, aren't I?"

"I'll make them pay a price they can never afford!"

Life at the Top Chapter 688

"You have to take revenge!"

Wendy's usually gentle and calm gaze was now laced with never-before-seen hatred and anger.

Jasper was just about to speak when he heard Wendy continue, "You can't stay here anymore. It's too dangerous."

Jasper smiled bitterly. "I was careless. It won't happen again, I promise... By the way, what time is it now?"

Indeed, Jasper had successfully distracted Wendy and changed the subject. "You've been asleep for more than a day already."

Jasper rubbed his temples. "That's not too bad... Where's Jul?"

"He's been kneeling at the door for more than a day."

Wendy sighed.

"He said he had to apologize."

Jasper arched his brow. "That idiot. This has nothing to do with him at all. Call him in."

Wendy spoke exasperatedly, "You think I haven't tried to? He just won't get up."

"Tell him I'm awake and I asked him to come in," Jasper spoke calmly and patted Wendy's hand.

He knew that kneeling was Julian's idea, but it did not mean Wendy did not have any intention to vent her anger on him. After all, Wendy did not know what had happened then, and considering Julian's personality, he would surely put the blame on himself when he tried to explain things.

As such, it was absolutely understandable that Wendy was angry at Julian when all she knew was that Jasper had gotten injured.

Wendy nodded and got up to ask Julian to enter.

Even Julian would feel the effects of kneeling for an entire day despite his physique, and he was slightly limping when he walked.

“Take a seat.” Jasper pointed at the empty spot.

Julian was about to say something but Jasper glared at him. “Are you refusing to listen to me now?”

Julian then sat on the chair.

“It’s not your fault I got hurt. I would’ve definitely been safe if I hadn’t reached out for Chad then, but Chad would most certainly be dead now if that were the case.

“He’s the new director of the Human Resources Department in JW Capital. He’s a very important character, so I can’t just let him get hurt.”

“But it’s fine if you get hurt?” Wendy piped up unhappily.

Jasper smiled. “I didn’t think much at that time, but I admit that it was rash of me. What happened this time was an accident. None of us knew what was going to happen. Plus, I couldn’t just watch as Chad died after getting attacked by a machete-wielding man right before my eyes, could I?”

“So Jul, none of what has happened is your fault. If anything, you saved me. I wouldn’t be lying here right now if not for you.”

Julian replied stubbornly, “But I exist to protect you, Jasper. You getting hurt is my fault.”

“I’ve never seen you so stubborn before. Are you telling me you’re going to step in when Wendy and I fight next time?” Jasper smiled.

Julian flushed instantly and was too embarrassed to speak.

“Don’t worry about it. No one blames you for what happened this time. In fact, I need to thank you for saving my life.”

Julian quickly spoke, “Jasper, don’t say that...”

Before Julian could finish talking, someone opened the door to the hospital ward.

Chad stood outside the ward with bandages wrapped over his arm. Beside him was a middle-aged woman with red eyes.

“You’re awake, Mr. Laine!” Chad exclaimed as he entered the room and walked over to Jasper’s bed excitedly.

Life at the Top Chapter 689

Jasper smiled. “Are you hurt?”

Chad shook his head. “You saved me at that crucial moment so I just got a small nick in my arm. I’m so sorry, Mr. Laine!”

Chad had just spoken when the woman beside him fell to her knees before Jasper and sobbed. “You’re our family’s savior, Mr. Laine. I don’t know how to thank you for what you’ve done!”

Jasper quickly gestured for Wendy to help the woman up before he smiled and spoke, “You must be Mrs. Wright, then?”

“No, please, call me by my name, Mr. Laine. I’m Alina Tyler.”

“Chad’s older than me by quite a bit. It’s only right I call you Mrs. Wright.

“It’s not that big of a deal, actually. I’m awake now, aren’t I?”

Jasper then turned to Chad. “What has been going on outside these two days?”

Chad sighed. “A lot of people have their eyes on you now. But at the same time, that’s also all the extent of it. Marcus was supposed to pay the 950 million yesterday but he didn’t, and the city government didn’t react either.”

“So they’re all waiting to see if I would make it out alive or not, hmm?” Jasper commented indifferently.

“I suppose my waking up would disappoint quite a few of them.”

“Jasp,” Wendy called out.

Jasper turned to look at her.

Wendy spoke with a slightly weird expression, “I actually came here on Henry’s private plane. He’s been here this entire time too, but I think he found out that the people who hurt you are in the same hospital. They’re in the other inpatient building. Around ten minutes before you woke up, he brought Fallon and went over.”

Jasper was stunned. “Why didn’t you tell me sooner?”

“There’s nothing wrong with Henry teaching them a lesson. Plus, he has Fallon with him. He’ll be fine,” Wendy spoke with a pout.

Women, no matter how knowledgeable, would channel all their thoughts to their men once they had one by their side.

A petty woman whose man was treated badly outside was much more terrifying than a man could ever be.

Jasper rubbed his temples and spoke, "Pass me my phone?"

Wendy was about to grab his phone when the door to the ward was pushed open again.

It had been a few days since they last met. Ned was kicked into the room pathetically with his right arm in a cast and his hospital robe in shreds.

Had it not been for the fact that Ned had a unique physique, Jasper might not even be able to recognize the man before him. Ned had tears and snot streaming down his face that was covered in bruises.

Henry followed into the room after. The sinister look on his face immediately morphed into a wide smile when he saw Jasper's widened eyes.

"Hey, you're awake! I knew you'd be fine. As if God would take *sshholes like you to cause trouble for him up in heaven."

As expected, that was just how Young Master Law spoke.

Jasper pointed at Ned who was still crying. "What happened to him?"

"What do you think?"

Henry grinned, yet his eyes were terrifyingly dark. "This f*cker thinks that just because he's a trust-fund baby and has a rich dad, he can do whatever he likes. Well then, today I'm going to teach him what it means to be a trust-fund baby."

Henry walked over and grabbed Ned's chin before slapping him across the face, shouting, "Weren't you f*cking proud of yourself just now? Hiring professionals to beat up Jasper, huh? Go ahead then, I'd like to see you call more of them over."

Logically speaking, Henry should not be able to win Ned in a fight. Jasper assumed that it was Fallon who had done the physical work, but when he looked out the door, he saw ten professional bodyguards in suits standing outside.

'Good job, man.'

"That's my team of bodyguards from Harbor City. I called them over this time as well."

Henry grinned at Jasper.

Life at the Top Chapter 690

Ned had been caught completely off guard when Henry suddenly dragged him off the hospital bed and began to beat him up.

He was still ready to fight and protest at first, but as time progressed, he realized that Henry was not joking and truly planned to beat him to death.

Ned was ready to surrender.

Ned was a patient with a handicapped right arm, so he was hardly a match for Henry and his dozen top-notch bodyguards. Not to mention that there was Fallon, who certainly was stronger than Julian, watching from the sidelines as well.

Ned's end was pretty much already determined.

It was only when Ned was dragged like a lifeless dog from his inpatient building to Jasper's and he saw Jasper upon entering the room did he know that Henry had come for revenge.

At that, Ned calmed down.

“So they’re your men, Jasper!” Ned had taken a beating and was just slapped across the face by Henry. He was in an exceptionally sorry state, yet his expression could not be more arrogant when he looked at Jasper.

“You’re actually still alive! Very good, then!”

“Haha!

“I’ll remember this, Jasper! Just wait, I’m going to kill you very soon!

“You haven’t learned from the last lesson, have you? Guess that means I went too easy on you, then! Don’t worry, I’ll make sure that instead of a hospital bed, you’ll be lying in the morgue next time!”

Jasper remained expressionless at Ned’s threats but everyone else in the room was irked.

“Jul!” Wendy called out.

Julian stood up and slapped Ned across the face without a word.

Julian had slapped him angrily without holding back at all.

Ned felt his cheek grow numb and his vision turned dark for a second. Following that came the burning feeling on his cheek, making him feel as though he had lost a layer of his skin from that slap.

The immense strength behind the slap had Ned flipping onto the floor. Turning his head, he spat out blood and there were several white chunks of what was most likely his teeth. Julian’s slap had lost him half his set of teeth.

Henry snickered and placed a foot over Ned’s head. He spoke in a malicious tone, “You’re still going to act stubborn? Even at this point? And you call yourself a trust-fund baby?”

“The smartest thing a trust-fund baby does is act according to the situation. Your loss is evident here, so surrender and look for other chances in the future to take revenge. You shouldn’t be acting stubborn now and asking for a beating! Have I made myself clear?”

Henry then lifted his leg without warning and used the shiny surface of his leather shoes to kick Ned’s face. Amid the clear sound of Ned’s nose breaking and his painful scream, Henry growled sinisterly. “I asked, have I made myself clear?”

Ned could not use his right hand so he could only cover his face with his left. Lying against the wall while partially drenched in blood, he glared at Jasper and Henry with wide red eyes and roared, “F*cking kill me if you dare! Or I’ll kill you if you leave me alive!”

“F*ck you and your entire family too, you mother f*cking b*tch! I gave you an option and you just had to choose death, hmm?”

Henry’s Harbor City accent laced his words as he was irked by Ned’s arrogance. He reached out, and a bodyguard with a very good understanding of Henry’s temper walked over from behind to hand him a baton.

With the flick of his hand, Henry swung the baton with practiced ease and smashed it against Ned’s left arm. With a crack, Ned’s left arm was immediately fractured.

Life at the Top Chapter 691

“F*cking hell! You ignorant and stupid f*cker. Who the f*ck do you think you are, hmm? The country has more than 100 cities like Reed City, but you think you’re the sh*t?”

“You think that just because people in Reed City call you ‘Young Master’ that you’re suddenly some trust-fund baby? F*cking bullsh*t! It’s ignorant b*stards like you who don’t know sh*t who has tarnished the reputation of all trust-fund babies!”

Henry swung the baton as he spoke, the act now looking like a form of art in his hands. The baton knocked on Ned again and again, and after a couple of hits, Ned had lost even the strength to make a sound. He lay on the floor and twitched, seemingly half a breath away from death.

“That’s enough, Henry.” Jasper stopped the man.

Henry might actually kill Ned in his fit of rage if he kept attacking.

Jasper did not care if Ned died, but he would not take revenge on someone as pointless as Ned. The main targets were the Adkins and Coine families supporting Ned. Killing Ned now would only further complicate this already complicated situation.

Henry heard Jasper and passed the baton back to the bodyguard with a pant.

Feeling hot from all the action, Henry loosened his collar and pointed at Ned who lay limply on the ground. “Drag this pile of flesh out to the corridor. We’re at the hospital anyway, so just leave him there.”

Two bodyguards quickly came over and bent down to grab a leg each before they dragged Ned over.

Everything was done with such practiced ease that it was proof this was not the first time they had helped Henry do such a thing.

After Ned was dragged away, Henry came to Jasper's bed and chuckled. "You weren't being nice this time. You know how much I like bullying *sshholes like him, so how could you come here and have fun all by yourself without me?"

"Yes, so fun I landed in the hospital," Jasper spat back irritably.

Henry was elated. "Thank goodness you're alright. Or this would be a much greater problem."

"The old master knows?" Jasper asked in shock.

"Not yet, we're hiding it from him. But my dad knows," Henry replied with a beam.

"He told me to tell you to screw them over. Do whatever you want and f*ck them up. Not for yourself, but for investors like us so we can have a better environment to invest in."

"Let's be honest, you're not the only one who's had to deal with this. The Law family has had to deal with this in too many places when we wanted to invest in those locations. Absolutely disgusting behavior. My dad has decided that he'll make quite a few calls to Swallow Capital this time, so this will most likely blow up to the point where the higher-ups are made aware."

Jasper frowned and spoke, "That changes the meaning of all of this, then."

"So what if it changes? Were you planning to just leave the matter be?" Henry glared at him from the corners of his eyes.

“Bullsh*t.” Jasper’s expression was dark. “I almost died, there’s no way I’m leaving this alone.”

Henry broke into a wide smile. “There we go. Don’t worry about it, you have the higher-ups supporting you. An eye for an eye.”

Henry had just finished speaking when someone knocked on the door.

Hearing that Mr. Powers had come to visit him, Henry spoke calmly, “Let him in.”

The door to the ward opened and Mr. Powers smiled bitterly at the sight of Jasper sitting indifferently on the hospital bed. “You look resentful, Mr. Laine.”

Life at the Top Chapter 692

“You must be joking, Mr. Powers. I just woke up. I don’t even know what has happened yet.”

Jasper knew that he could not blame Mr. Powers for what had happened. He was just angry about the fact that he had almost lost his life here in Reed City.

“I’m not here just to visit you, Mr. Laine. I was given a mission.”

Mr. Powers pulled out his phone and dialed a number before turning to Jasper. “The chief wishes to speak to you.”

Jasper’s heart skipped a beat. This ‘chief’ Mr. Powers spoke of must certainly be referring to the chief of Reed City’s government.

“Could everyone else please leave the room with me?” Mr. Powers requested politely.

Seeing Jasper nod, everyone left the room with Mr. Powers, leaving Jasper and one more person in the room.

...

An hour later.

Jasper called out to Wendy and the rest who were waiting by the door.

Wendy and Henry came in together.

“What did you talk about?” Wendy asked attentively.

Jasper smiled. “Nothing much. We just reestablished the relationship between us. We also showed our hands and talked a bit about the follow-up process, just so we both get a general idea of what’s going to happen.

“No one is allowed to interfere with the investment and no one is allowed to disrupt the peace in society.

“That was what the chief of Reed City’s government meant and it’s their stance on the matter.”

Henry pursed his lips. “Should’ve done that long ago.”

“Every place has its own rules, this goes for them too.” Jasper shook his head but did not dwell on the topic.

“This should be the end to Marcus and Ned, then!”

...

Marcus was in a horrible mood today, for he found out that the situation with Jasper was more complicated than he thought.

The only reason why the Coine family could have such a strong footing in Reed City was that Grandpa Coine was still alive.

While Grandpa Coine had been doing business in Reed City for years and never once left the city, he had quite a few friends outside.

Thus, the Coine family had gotten wind of what happened as well.

Even Swallow Capital had called the city government a few times after Jasper was sent to the hospital.

Apparently, a higher-up had made himself clear and scolded the chief of Reed City's government. They were also using this incident as an example and discussed it during a private meeting.

Although he was hiding in Reed City, Marcus could tell that something was different.

"Seriously, Dad? Do I have to leave?" Marcus looked at Len and spoke unwillingly.

Len took a drag out of his cigarette and spoke grimly, "This is your grandfather's idea. The situation has been blown up out of proportion and Jasper's power lies further than just the Southeast Province... Basically, we were rash this time and you have to leave. I've already prepared the transport and everything else for you. You'll be leaving Reed City on a ferry later in the afternoon and you'll wait until everything smoothes out before you come back.

"No matter what happens after, you have to learn to be humble."

Marcus was shocked when he heard Len's pessimistic words. "What are you talking about, Dad? You're telling me that Jasper's going to topple us or something? No one would have the guts to do that in Reed City!"

“Reed City?” Len scoffed. “How big do you think Reed City is? And how big do you think the world outside is? Do you really think the Coine family stands above everyone?”

Life at the Top Chapter 693

Marcus paled. Fear and unease overwhelmed his chest as he paced around the room, complaining, “I thought they said that Jasper has woken up? That means he’s fine, no? So why won’t he just move on and leave us alone?”

“This isn’t just a conflict between us and Jasper anymore. Our situation has become a case study in meetings and the higher-ups need to give investors a sign of a good investing environment. To them, people like us have become an eyesore that must be removed,” Len spoke weakly and sighed deeply.

“Who does Jasper think he is? He’s hardly worth us becoming a topic of discussion with the higher-ups,” Marcus spoke disbelievingly.

Just then, the doors were slammed open and a bunch of uniformed officers entered.

“Who are you? What are you doing?! Do you even know where this is? Tell me what your leader’s name is! Who gave you the right to barge into my home?”

Startled, Marcus stared at the group of intruders and shouted fiercely.

However, these men no longer spoke courteously like they usually did and were being very formal. “Marcus Coine, you’re suspected of defrauding state-owned assets. We’re here to bring you in for investigation.”

With that, two officers stepped over and surrounded him.

Marcus was truly terrified now and he fought back while shouting at Len, “Dad! Save me!”

Len could not just watch and do nothing as they brought his son away, so he got up and spoke, “Please wait. I’d like to see—”

The leader of the team interrupted Len ruthlessly and spoke in a cold tone, “Mr. Coine, you have the right to remain silent. Everything you say can and will be used against him in the court of law.

“We have discovered a great deal of tax evasion from Fortune Co., Ltd. As its former chairman, you’re not completely clear from suspicion either so please come with us as well.”

Len forced down the unease within him and spoke, “Then I want to call my father.”

“According to the regulations, you’re not allowed to make any contact with the outside world from this moment on.

“Of course, you have the right to talk to your lawyer. Any communication with the outside world can be done through your lawyer.”

The officer then added, “Lastly, your father, Old Mr. Coine, is fully aware of our operation.”

At that, Len felt his world go dark and as though a huge weight was pressing over his chest. It felt like the world was ending.

The same situation happened with the Adkins. The only difference being that Ned and Fletcher were brought away from their hospital wards.

Fletcher had been gravely injured by a mysterious person the night before. It was paraplegia caused by an injury in the spine, meaning that he could only live the rest of his life in a wheelchair or on the hospital bed. There was not much of a difference whether he spent his days in jail or not.

...

No one had expected the Adkins and Coine families to topple so quickly.

The upper class of Reed City was rendered speechless.

The havoc stopped after the toppling of the two families, and the rest of the upper class continued to live their lives.

However, they were all aware that change had come to Reed City.

A foreign investor had managed to topple the Coine and the Adkins families.

No one had thought this would be possible before.

Everyone held their breaths as they waited for the next bomb to drop. Parents also reminded their kids to be mindful and not cause trouble outside, while more cautious parents even tried to send their children overseas—just to prevent any misstep at such a crucial time.

No one dared to step up and say something, opting to just keep their eyes on Reed City Hospital instead. They knew that the mastermind behind it all was currently lying in a hospital bed there.

Meanwhile, Jasper was currently hosting a guest in his ward.

His arrival came as a surprise, but at the same time, it was only logical he would be here.

A frail old man in his 80s was slowly walking. His head was full of white hair and there was a cane in his hand.

The old man entered the hospital room and greeted Jasper gently, “Hello. Let me introduce myself, I’m Peter Coine.”

Life at the Top Chapter 694

No longer confined to bed rest, Jasper got off the bed and respectfully invited the old man to take a seat.

“Please have a seat, Mr. Coine. Moving is still a little difficult for me and this place really isn’t appropriate, so I’ll skip out on asking you if you’d like some coffee this time.”

Jasper smiled. “Next time, then. I promise I’ll invite you to a cup of hot coffee next time, Mr. Coine.”

Peter smiled gently and waved him off. “Don’t worry about it. I’m not used to drinking coffee anyway. Alcohol, on the other hand, is always a good choice. But I’ve grown old and my body can’t take that anymore, so I’ve quit it.”

Jasper nodded. “That’s good, then. Seniors like you, Mr. Coine, are important people to us. It’s good to see you taking care of yourself.”

Peter was surprised by Jasper’s attitude. “I thought that our meeting would be an unhappy one, but I like you a lot, young man. Most importantly, I can tell that everything you’re saying and doing now comes from your heart—it’s genuine respect.”

Jasper spoke sternly, “It is truly what I think, after all. People like you are old heroes, Mr. Coine. Your generation is the reason why we can live such great lives. Your heroic achievements are things anyone of Somer descent should never forget.”

“Very good. Thank you for remembering our hard work,” Peter smiled softly and spoke.

At that, Peter pulled up his sleeve and showed a deep knife scar as well as a few bullet wounds. He explained, “These are from three different battles. See this scar? It was from a bayonet that had pierced right into the bone. These few other bullet wounds were also from the enemy troops. I have more wounds on me, but I’ll spare you the sight.”

Jasper looked at his own tightly wrapped shoulder and smiled. “Looks like I’m just weak, then.”

Peter waved him off and spoke slowly, “People grow old and their thoughts change as well. Look at me and the tough life I’ve lived. Despite the enemies’ bayonets and bullets, I lived to 80 only to send my children off instead of the other way around.”

Jasper remained silent.

“Mr. Laine...”

“Please don’t, Mr. Coine. Just call me Jasper.”

“Alright then, Jasper. I’ll get straight to the point. Seeing that I’m asking you, could you at least leave the Coine family a living descendant?”

Jasper replied calmly, “Mr. Coine, they’ve broken the law. While it is a huge offense, it will not result in the death penalty. I can’t be certain of the judge’s ruling because I’m not the judge, nor do I have any power to change their mind.”

“Jasper, I’m here to shamelessly beg you, so there’s no need for such a grand facade. Your attitude on this is key. A word from you and they’ll be out in a year or two. I may be old, but I still have a year or two in me. It’d be nice to have someone send me off, no?”

Jasper looked at Mr. Coine and spoke, “Logically speaking, Mr. Coine, considering your identity, such a request is in no way overboard. But I also heard that you didn’t stop the prosecution of Marcus and Len.”

Peter smiled. “What use is there in stopping them? They did this to themselves. Who knows how many wrongdoings they’ve committed with my name all these years.”

“That’s why it’s too late now.” Jasper sighed lightly. “I respect you as an old hero, Mr. Coine, but your heroic achievements should not be used to forgive the mistakes of your descendants. Mistakes should be stopped and corrected once they come to light.

“I’ve met other old heroes as well, but they’ve done their part to educate and instruct their own students and descendants.

“Of course, it’s not that I’m being unreasonable or inconsiderate. I can openly admit that there is resentment between me and them, and I must seek revenge. Think of it this way. If I had lost too much blood the other day and passed away then, who would seek justice for me?”

Mr. Coine fell silent at Jasper’s words.

“How about this, Mr. Coine? Regarding my personal resentment with them, I’ll let go of it for your sake. I have nothing against Len Coine, so as long as he pays up the tax he has evaded, I’m sure the judge will be merciful when he gives the verdict. Marcus, however... Let’s not discuss his issue anymore. Will that be alright?”

Peter stood and turned to Jasper. “If that’s the case, very well then.

“Rest up, it’s time I return.”

Peter then rejected Jasper sending him out and turned to leave.

Standing by the window, Jasper shook his head as he watched Peter slowly walk out of the hospital and get into a car.

'Is Peter pitiful?

'Very. An old man like him should not need to send off his descendants first.

'But pitiful people are distasteful in their own way.

'Peter just happens to be spoiling Marcus.'

Coincidentally, Jasper was a person who believed in treating the cause instead of the symptoms. Jasper did not like leaving himself with future complications.

There was no way Marcus would be released for another dozen or two years, while Len would have at least three to five years waiting for him. By the time they were released, they would have lost all their power and prestige as well.

...

Jasper's talk with Peter marked an end to his incident with the Adkins and the Coine families.

Jasper was discharged the following day.

Once discharged, he immediately established a new agreement with the city government.

Since Marcus had breached the contract and was discovered to be involved in illegal activities, the plot of land he previously won from the bid would be returned as well. Now with 200 million Somer Dollars, the plot of land was sold to JW Electronics Equipment Manufacturing Co., Ltd.

Following that, Jasper did not forget to benefit the local businesses. He distributed the design and construction projects for the factory to capable local companies.

This was how benefits worked. If Jasper wanted this factory of his to operate smoothly, he would need more than just the city government's support. Recognition from the local forces was necessary as well.

These benefits were how Jasper showed his stance.

Without a doubt, JW Electronics had now become the next Coine family. However, the difference between the two parties was that everyone was earning money together now and benefiting from it.

Jasper's actions had gained the favor of many uneasy local forces, and his reputation immediately spread throughout Reed City.

The equipment Jasper bought through the Law family had arrived as well, and in a week, the factory had already started to prepare for production in an orderly manner.

Jasper temporarily put Chad in charge of hiring workers and managerial teams in Reed City, while he quickly rushed back to Nauritus City.

He needed a professional team to further upgrade the patented MP3 player technology.

This was Jasper's ultimate attack.

Life at the Top Chapter 695

Jasper took the Law family's private plane back to Nauritus City.

"I've been thinking of getting ourselves a private plane as well once my cash flow isn't as tight anymore."

Jasper turned to tell Wendy as he sat in the comfortable interior of the private plane's compartment.

Wendy pursed her lips and smiled. "I heard that it costs two to three million a year just to maintain a private plane. That's a waste of money."

Jasper shrugged. "A normal car needs maintenance too, but you wouldn't choose not to buy a car just because you have to maintain it, right? It comes with much more convenience that outweighs the cost, and we have to think of the benefits it brings as well. It's the same with a private plane. It's safer, more comfortable, and more convenient—very much worth that few million Somer Dollars worth of maintenance."

Sitting in front of them, Henry turned his head excitedly and asked, "How about you get me one too while you're at it? Kayden is the only rich kid in Harbor City with a private plane and the rest of us are very envious."

"This isn't yours?" Jasper was surprised.

"As if my dad would be so generous." Henry scoffed with an indignant expression.

"Forget buying me a private plane, he won't even let me borrow this one here when I ask. He only had someone fly this plane over for me because he heard that you got hurt. The only other time I get to sit in this plane is when I tag along on his business trips.”

“Yeah, he really shouldn’t get you a plane.” Jasper attacked him mercilessly, saying, “You’d definitely have those ridiculous parties up in the sky if you got one, wouldn’t you?”

Henry’s expression darkened, but he was not going to give up so easily. “Both of us can share a plane, then? You’ll be the first Mainlander with a private plane while I’ll be the second Harbor City trust-fund baby with a private plane. Don’t you think that sounds cool?”

“I’ll think about it when the time comes. Definitely won’t be this year, though. I’ve invested in too many projects and I’m broke.” Jasper sighed.

Construction of Waterhoof Tower would cost him at least 16 billion, and the patented MP3 player technology as well as the electronics factory would cost another 700 to 800 million.

Then, the acquisition of Legends was most likely going to cost him quite a bit of money as well.

Jasper had once again realized how poor he was since many things required a much greater sum of funds...

The plane arrived at Nauritus City safely. Henry had many things to handle now that construction of the amusement park project was coming to an end, so he went to the construction site the moment they landed at the airport.

On the other hand, Jasper and Wendy took a trip to Schuler Manor.

“I’m back, Uncle Schuler,” Jasper greeted Dawson.

Seeing Jasper return alive and well, Dawson finally let out a sigh of relief and clapped Jasper’s shoulder. “Good. It’s great to have you back.”

“I’m sorry for worrying everyone this time,” Jasper apologized.

Dawson waved him off with a smile. “Just be more careful next time. I’m pretty sure Wendy lost her soul over this. On the day it happened, she kept claiming that she needed to go over no matter what. Remember, Jasper, you aren’t alone here. Your problems aren’t just yours anymore, there are countless people affected too.”

Jasper nodded. “I understand.”

“I didn’t want your parents to worry too much, so I hid it from them,” Dawson told him.

“It’s best that they don’t have to worry about this. My parents have already worried so much about my littlest problems that I just want them to live happily now that I can provide for them. What kind of son would I be if I still made them worry about this and that?”

“Plus, I’m safe and sound, aren’t I? I’ll take some time to spend with them once all of this is over.” Jasper smiled.

Dawson spoke, “Sure. Go take a bath and rest. We’ll talk more after dinner.”

Life at the Top Chapter 696

After Dawson left, Jasper turned to hug Wendy. Smiling, he spoke, "Thank you."

"For what?" Wendy tilted her head and blinked confusedly.

"Thank you for caring about me," Jasper spoke as if he could not be any clearer.

"Who else is going to care about you if not me? Just promise you'll be more careful next time. Those people are willing to do just anything for their own interests," Wendy reminded.

Jasper nodded. "You're right. What happened this time was a lesson to myself as well.

"They say good men know better than to stand where danger strikes. And while I wouldn't call myself a good man, I'm terrified of dying. Reed City is a small place, but I suppose the fact that it's small means that there's more negligence with the law there. They've had a very smooth sailing history of doing business, so I got careless."

Wendy spoke gently, "There are no predicting accidents. I don't ask for much, I don't even need all these riches. All I want is for you and Dad to be alive and well. That's enough for me."

"We've already come so far, and on our journey here, we've met great allies like the Law family as well as rivals of different calibers like the Monty and the Coine families.

"We will always have more enemies than friends. After all, the growth of a new family means the redistribution of interests and benefits. We're threatening too many people's livelihoods.

“The moment we lose everything, I’m afraid the people who’d come at us first will undoubtedly be these enemies of ours. So for your sake and for my own, I cannot stop here.”

Wendy leaned her head against Jasper’s chest after he finished speaking and replied, “I just want you to be safe.”

In no time, dinner was ready.

At the dining table, Jasper and Dawson chatted casually and the topic quickly returned to the Southface River Project.

“Construction of the whole Southface River will be done in another two months or so. JW Real Estates will become a name that’ll spread across the land.” Despite his age, Dawson could not help but feel excited at the idea.

Dawson and Jasper, being the people involved, were the only ones aware of how much effort they had invested into this project.

Jasper had analyzed the country’s development plan for the next 20 years and poured the information he knew into the Southface River Project. The goal of it was to loudly broadcast JW Real Estates’ name to the entire country.

He would also use this opportunity to build the foundation for the country’s first private real estate company.

“Making a name for JW Real Estates is much more important than profits. We never planned on earning much with the Southface River Project. It’d be great if we can even earn our money’s worth back. The benefits of this project lie in the fact that it’s long-term and sustainable.

“That’s why I plan to keep all shops, office buildings, and most living districts under JW Real Estates as they are. They’ll be on a rent-only basis.”

Hearing Jasper, Dawson nodded. “I agree.”

Wendy blinked. “Are you that confident? What if the project ends up making a loss...”

Suddenly realizing that she might have jinxed it, Wendy stopped talking apologetically.

Jasper smiled. “I am confident. As far as I’m concerned, the Southface River Project will become the benchmark project for all future city developments in the country. Its influence will be immense, and the fact that no one believes it now is precisely what puts us at an advantage.

“Oh, Uncle Schuler, how did it go with the expert from the Southeast Province Research Institute of Sciences I asked you to help contact?” Jasper asked.

Dawson smiled. “The head of the Research Institute of Sciences and I are friends. But you know how it is with experts, they don’t normally respect businessmen like us. They’re hard to talk to sometimes, but I got you a chance to meet him. Just bring the materials over tomorrow.

“Just to remind you, these people don’t care about money. Technology matters more to them than their own lives, so how you talk to them really matters.”

Life at the Top Chapter 697

The following day, Jasper sat in his Bentley that he had greatly missed and arrived at the provincial Research Institute of Sciences.

While Southeast Province had contributed a lot to scientific research, the small run-down building before him revealed a very real issue.

The country was in dire need of economic development, so most of the money would go into construction or investment. Thus, it resulted in a grave decrease in investments in scientific research.

After instructing Julian to wait for him in the car, Jasper entered the run-down building that seemed to have three or four decades' worth of history.

Following the address Dawson had given him, Jasper arrived outside an office and knocked on the door.

"Come in." A man's raspy voice sounded from inside the office.

Jasper walked in and saw a man in his 50s wearing a white lab coat. He was tinkering with a chip behind his office desk.

What was supposed to be a clean lab coat was now dirty, and the man's hair that looked like a bird's nest greatly aged his appearance.

The man paid Jasper no attention once he entered. Instead, Jasper found him murmuring something as if he was trying to solve a hard problem—all while fiddling with the chip in his hand.

Jasper did not rush him, opting to wait patiently by the side.

Jasper took in the decor of the office. It was simple and very messy. Equipment could be found all over the place and most of them were rather old. It was evident that they had not been keeping up with the times.

The most eye-catching part of the room were the certificates and awards that covered the better half of the wall. Those were all testaments to the owner of this office's success and glory.

After ten full minutes, the man looked up and saw Jasper. Only then did he put the chip down, speaking slightly apologetically, "Sorry, I can't really stop when I'm researching. I totally forgot about you."

Jasper smiled. "Don't worry about it. You must be Professor Elbert McGee, I assume?"

Elbert replied, "I am. You must be the businessman the head introduced, Ja... Jas..."

"Jasper," he introduced himself after seeing how Elbert had forgotten.

Elbert knocked his forehead with his palm and replied, "Ah, yes. Jasper."

"How can I help you?" Elbert asked straightforwardly.

Jasper took a seat and spoke, "I've come to invite you to be my company's chief technical expert, Professor McGee."

Without thinking, Elbert shook his head. "No way. I just want to do my research in peace. I don't want anything to do with businessmen like you."

As far as Elbert was concerned, businessmen and people like him were completely different. Businessmen were willing to do anything for the sake of profits. His research that he had spent time and effort on would only become money-making tools once it fell in the hands of a businessman.

"I understand your concerns, Professor McGee, but hasn't it crossed your mind that no matter how capable a researcher you are, what new technology can you come up with in such a working environment?"

Jasper did not seem to be affected by Elbert's attitude, and he debated back in the calmest tone with a truth that Elbert could not refute.

As expected, Elbert opened his mouth a few times only to close it back again.

He had applied for five million in research funds for several projects, and the amount was already the lowest possible amount needed after going through multiple budget cuts. Still, a year after making the application, all he had now was two million.

It was not that someone was trying to cut costs with his projects, for the institution itself had limited research funds. There was too much demand than there was supply. After splitting the funds among everyone, he only had less than half of what he needed. There was nothing anyone could do about that.

“I can provide you with sufficient research funds and the respect you’re worth. Plus, please take a look at this, Professor McGee.” Jasper then reached out for the patented MP3 player technology he brought with him and handed it to Elbert.

Elbert glanced at Jasper doubtfully but took the piece of research. Upon opening it, Elbert found himself deeply entranced by the treasure in his hands. The papers were filled with technical data and sketches that Jasper did not understand.

Seeing how Elbert’s eyes shone as though he was a parched man finding water, Jasper smiled softly. He knew that he had succeeded this time.

...

While Jasper was negotiating with Elbert in the Research Institute of Sciences, in a villa on the other end of Nauritus City.

“So you’re telling me that the sample will be out in less than a week?” Conrad asked, looking at the sharp and confident in front of him.

Valentine Estrada smiled softly. “Don’t worry, Mr. Monty. I wouldn’t say such a thing to you unless I was absolutely certain.”

Conrad nodded extremely contentedly. “Well done. I spent a lot of money hiring you from overseas, and it seems I’ve made the right step.

“There’s one more thing you need to pay attention to.”

Conrad passed Valentine a document and spoke, "JW Electronics are manufacturing MP3 players as well, but they do not have the license to do so."

Valentine was stunned. The country lacked awareness when it came to patents and copyrights, so it was very common to see pirated products. In all honesty, normal people did not actually care about such a thing. However, the fact that Conrad, the only person in the country with the license to manufacture the MP3 player, was raising the issue meant that there was more to this than Valentine thought.

"Do you wish for us to pick on them, Mr. Monty?" Valentine asked.

Conrad smiled faintly. "Pirating without patent rights is a very severe problem overseas, right, Valentine?"

Valentine nodded seriously. "It is. The moment such an incident is found overseas, it does not matter how many funds were involved, the company would surely be sued to the point of bankruptcy while the person in charge of the company would also have to face civil responsibilities. That's why almost no one dares to do such a thing overseas.'

"Our country has a Patent Copyright Protection Act as well." Conrad thumbed his fingers on the desk. "Do you understand what I'm trying to say?"

Valentine's eyes shone as he replied, "I understand. I'll gather as much evidence as I can once I return and sue this JW Electronics. As long as you give me enough support, I can very well beat them in a court case."

"Don't worry. You'll get as much support as you need." Conrad waved him off. "Go wild!"

Life at the Top Chapter 698

On Jasper's end, he had brought out enough bargaining chips to pique Elbert's interest and surprise him immensely.

"Mr. Laine, this is the most advanced MP3 player design document in the world. Where did you get it?"

Elbert asked Jasper excitedly in the Southeast Province Research Institute of Sciences.

Jasper smiled. "Obviously through legal means. I bought it from the original creator, Damond Golding. Does the technology look difficult?"

Elbert smiled confidently. "I know about Damond. He's a very talented technician, but I'm not horrible either. With this document, I can most certainly copy the MP3 player."

"No. A simple copy isn't enough." Jasper shook his head.

"Why would I ask you for help if all I wanted was a complete copy with no technical expertise, Professor McGee? I'd be able to do that with a few research students with Masters in scientific research. What I want is an improved and upgraded version."

Elbert furrowed his brows deeply at Jasper's words and replied curtly, "You don't know anything about technology, Mr. Laine. A mature piece of patented technology is like a system of interlocking gears. Any slight change somewhere would result in a huge difference."

With that, Elbert then pointed at the stack of technological papers. “I can tell you that if I make the slightest change to any single thing here, the entire technology will end up failing. This isn’t as simple as you think.”

“What if I just want to add a screen?” Jasper asked.

Elbert was stunned for a moment, and his brows furrowed as he fell deep in thought.

“It shouldn’t be that difficult if I’m just adding things instead of changing anything. I’ll just have to leave a spot on the circuit board to attach the screen and rewrite the code.”

At that, Jasper smiled. “Would you be interested, Professor McGee?”

Elbert hesitated.

“I promise that as long as you agree to be JW Electronics’ chief technological officer, a status on par with the CFO, you’ll be paid two million a year with at least a 10% increase each following year. You’ll also enjoy the company’s dividends.”

Elbert looked conflicted.

“I also promise you complete authority to appoint and dismiss other technicians. You are free to lead your professional team to research all related areas and you’ll receive at least 50 million research funds from the company every year. Of course, any patent rights of your research will belong to the company, but you and your team will have a right to 10% of the patent, Professor McGee.”

Elbert shot to his feet and asked excitedly, “Really?”

Elbert seemed to care much more about research funds than his salary.

Jasper smiled bitterly.

However, it was employees like Elbert whom Jasper did not need to worry about.

“I’ve promised you, haven’t I? A businessman values his word.” Jasper smiled. “However, if you’d like more assurance, Professor, we could sign an employment contract right now.”

Elbert seemed embarrassed when he spoke again, “That’s not what I meant. I’m technically still working in the research institute, so I have to resign from the institute first before I can sign the contract with you... It’s just that I have two friends and six students with me. I was wondering if I could bring them as well?

“Don’t worry, those two friends are both experts in electronics and integrated circuits respectively. We don’t care too much about our salaries, but research funds...”

Jasper interrupted Elbert and spoke, “Professor McGee, as I said, you have complete authority over the appointment and dismissal of your team of technicians. There’s no need for you to bring it up with me.”

Life at the Top Chapter 699

Elbert spoke elatedly, “That’s wonderful. I’ll contact my friends right away and report to you in the shortest time possible.”

Jasper smiled and got up. “Very well, then. I shall await your and your team’s arrival.”

“I have a small request.” Elbert pointed at the document and asked, “Could you leave the documents with me? I still want to do some research and there are a few points worth borrowing from.”

Jasper replied, "Of course. Although, we're a little short on time so I'd prefer if you made improving the MP3 player your current priority, Professor. There'll be a lot of time in the future for you to slowly research what you wish."

"Of course!" Elbert laughed aloud as he was in a great mood. He could tell that Jasper was very different from other businessmen; he was not money-hungry like the others.

After agreeing with Elbert, Jasper got up and left. There was still a lot he had to do so he could not stay in Elbert's office any longer.

The following few days were spent communicating with Chad, who was in Reed City, about the construction progress and the equipment installation in the factory over there.

With money and the support of Reed City's government, the factory was being constructed at a terrifying speed.

In less than a week, the first batch of three 25,000 square feet factories were constructed and furnished.

To speed up the process, Jasper and Chad had decided to first complete construction of the first batch of factories, consisting of three factory buildings, and leave the other factories as well as the production district to be constructed while work began.

The day the three factories were completed, equipment installation and commissioning began as well.

"Mr. Laine, the 200 workers we've recruited have already completed their technical training under the skilled workers and managers we spend a lot of money to hire from other electronics factories."

Jasper nodded in satisfaction when he heard Chad's report through the video call.

“Good job. That’s already considerably fast. I’ve already contacted Elbert and his team has already completed the key research for the upgraded design of the patented MP3 player technology. The result should be ready in two days so I’d like you to try to produce a sample first.”

Chad hummed in acknowledgment and then suddenly spoke, “Mr. Laine, I heard that a domestically manufactured MP3 player is about to appear on the market? They’re already advertising it?”

Jasper nodded. “Indeed. They’re also a business based here in Southeast Province. It’s likely that they’ve successfully created a sample, so they’ve begun advertising through all large television stations as well as newspapers. The public should be made aware very soon.”

“Doesn’t that mean we’ve lost the element of surprise, Mr. Laine?” Chad asked despondently.

“It’s alright. We’ve got a unique advantage when it comes to advertising. So long as our product is on the market, no one will be able to compete against us in terms of advertisements. The only thing we need is enough goods and an upgrade in the product’s technology when our MP3 player becomes publicly available.”

Chad nodded seriously at Jasper’s words.

“Alright then, Mr. Laine. I’ll get back to work first. I promise to get a sample out as fast as we can the moment your technology over there is complete.”

Jasper let out a light exhale after he ended the video call with Chad

On his table was an issue of today’s Southeast Province Morning Post with the MP3 player advertisement printed on the most prominent spot.

Just then, Jasper’s phone rang.

Connecting the call, Jasper heard a familiar voice drift through.

“I was both relieved and disappointed to find out you lived, Jasper.”

Life at the Top Chapter 700

“You must’ve been very busy lately, Mr. Monty. And yet you’ve taken the time to find out how I’ve been as of late. I’m flattered, truly.”

Leaning against the sofa, Jasper replied. He knew that the call was from Conrad right when the man spoke.

Conrad chuckled on the other end of the line. “Looks like you’ve been attentive to my situation as well, then?”

“Not too different, are we? Though in comparison to the people you sent to follow me, I’d say my attention is hardly worth mentioning.”

Conrad harrumphed at Jasper’s words and spoke, “I heard that you took a trip to Coreana to buy the patent for MP3 players?”

“Didn’t you buy the patent before I could, Mr. Monty? Why would you ask if you already knew?” Jasper spoke calmly with no hint of displeasure in his tone.

Conrad chuckled. “Since you already know that I’m the one with the patented technology, then why would you still dare to manufacture MP3 players in your factory in Reed City? You’re a brave man.”

Jasper replied calmly, “You’ve misunderstood, Mr. Monty. What my factory in Reed City manufactures are merely small trinkets that you would never be interested in, Mr. Monty.

“Why, Mr. Monty? Are you worried about something?” Jasper asked intently.

Conrad’s expression darkened as he replied calmly, “Let’s not beat around the bush, Jasper. We have history between us, and this is far from the end of it. You wanted the patent rights to the MP3 player, so I decided to fight you for it and be one step ahead of you.

“Initially, I had just planned to pose an inconvenience to you. But I’ve realized that the MP3 player could be a very promising product in the country’s market. I’ve got to thank you for your guidance, or I’d never have found such a suitable way to make profits in such a short time.

“I’m the only one allowed to manufacture the MP3 player in the country now, so I suggest you be a little smarter and not think of little tricks. Or I’ll make you pay until you go bankrupt!”

Conrad chuckled before continuing, “You must be so angry, so pissed, so reluctant to give up, hmm? Because even though you found out about it first, I still stole it from you. One step is all it takes. You’ll never catch up to me now. I have the higher ground now, so how are you going to beat me this time?”

Jasper replied calmly, “I don’t really mind putting the entire JW Electronics at risk, Mr. Monty. If I do end up losing all of that, I’ll just treat it as having not earned anything from the aluminum company incident before. Now that I think about it, you were indirectly the one who gave me that money, weren’t you, Mr. Monty?”

“You!”

Fury burst from within Conrad. He had only ever lost once in his life yet this one loss had become a nightmare he could never escape from.

Jasper’s name had become Conrad’s trigger. Conrad only had to think of that man and he would completely lose all his composure.

“Haha!”

Conrad forcibly pushed the anger aside and spoke coldly, "We've got a long road ahead of us. So what if you win once? The one with the last word is the true winner, Jasper. You've already lost once, what makes you think you can win this time?"

"Just you wait. You won't be able to do anything but watch as I slowly take up all domestic MP3 player market shares. The money should've been yours, but you'll have no way of getting it. All you can do is watch and drool. Of course, perhaps I'll give you a chance or two to earn money if I'm in a good mood.

"But as to whether that's good or bad money, that's not for you to decide! I'll decide and you'll take what I give you!"

With that, Conrad hung up the phone.

Despite knowing that he had the upper hand, Conrad could not seem to lift his mood.

He threw the phone aggressively and took the new MP3 player sample from his table. Looking at the silver coating, Conrad asked grimly, "Can this thing be mass-produced yet?"

Valentine replied confidently, "All manufacturing lines have already been installed. It can be mass-produced any time."

"Good!" Conrad's mood lightened a little.

"Then begin production. Contact the sales department as well. We can sign contracts with business clients who've been requesting it but remember to raise the bar. We're the country's first domestic brand for MP3 players. It's not something any Tom, Dick, or Harry can sell on our behalf."

Valentine nodded after Conrad finished speaking. "One more question, Mr. Monty. What should we name this MP3 player of ours? And how should we price it?"

“Its name...”

Conrad fell silent for a bit and replied, “Let’s call it Melody. As for its price, it’s selling for 2,000 bucks overseas so there’s no reason for us to sell it at a cheap price. Let’s do 1,800 bucks per MP3 player.”

Conrad then scoffed and fiddled with the sample. “It costs us no more than 500 to 600 bucks to produce, yet we’re selling it easily at 1,800. What a profit.”

“How’s it going with the rights protection materials I had you prepare?”

Valentine smiled and replied, “Don’t worry, Mr. Monty. I’ve already prepared most of it. All we need to do now is for JW Electronics to start manufacturing. We can sue them the moment that happens and we can also request for all the company’s factories to be seized.”

“Good!” Conrad was excited, and his eyes shone with excitement. “I’ve been waiting for this day for too long. Don’t you dare disappoint me, Jasper. Produce your MP3 players as fast as you can.”

“I have a question, Mr. Monty.”

“About that Jasper, the owner of JW Electronics... If he knows that you have the patent rights, why did he still build a factory to manufacture it? Or perhaps he isn’t really planning on manufacturing MP3 players? In that case, won’t all our hard work be for naught?”

Conrad was in a great mood, so he explained patiently, “You don’t know Jasper. We’ve fought before and I can tell you that he’s a very calm man. It’s almost as if he doesn’t really care about anything.

“But it’s people like him who are truly arrogant. He thinks that he’s the strongest of us all. The reason why he doesn’t get calculative with anyone is that he doesn’t even think they’re worth his time.”

Conrad then pointed at his nose and continued, “Even I’m among the group of people he looks down on. So this factory of his is definitely manufacturing MP3 players. There’s no way it can be anything else. Perhaps he thinks he has another trick up his sleeve to counter me.”

At that, Conrad locked his fingers together and put them behind his head before leaning comfortably against the big office chair. Squinting, he looked at the ceiling and spoke calmly, “So this time, I’m going to crush him under my foot without giving him the chance to ever turn the tables!”

Life at the Top Chapter 700

“You must’ve been very busy lately, Mr. Monty. And yet you’ve taken the time to find out how I’ve been as of late. I’m flattered, truly.”

Leaning against the sofa, Jasper replied. He knew that the call was from Conrad right when the man spoke.

Conrad chuckled on the other end of the line. “Looks like you’ve been attentive to my situation as well, then?”

“Not too different, are we? Though in comparison to the people you sent to follow me, I’d say my attention is hardly worth mentioning.”

Conrad harrumphed at Jasper’s words and spoke, “I heard that you took a trip to Coreana to buy the patent for MP3 players?”

“Didn’t you buy the patent before I could, Mr. Monty? Why would you ask if you already knew?” Jasper spoke calmly with no hint of displeasure in his tone.

Conrad chuckled. “Since you already know that I’m the one with the patented technology, then why would you still dare to manufacture MP3 players in your factory in Reed City? You’re a brave man.”

Jasper replied calmly, “You’ve misunderstood, Mr. Monty. What my factory in Reed City manufactures are merely small trinkets that you would never be interested in, Mr. Monty.

“Why, Mr. Monty? Are you worried about something?” Jasper asked intently.

Conrad’s expression darkened as he replied calmly, “Let’s not beat around the bush, Jasper. We have history between us, and this is far from the end of it. You wanted the patent rights to the MP3 player, so I decided to fight you for it and be one step ahead of you.

“Initially, I had just planned to pose an inconvenience to you. But I’ve realized that the MP3 player could be a very promising product in the country’s market. I’ve got to thank you for your guidance, or I’d never have found such a suitable way to make profits in such a short time.

“I’m the only one allowed to manufacture the MP3 player in the country now, so I suggest you be a little smarter and not think of little tricks. Or I’ll make you pay until you go bankrupt!”

Conrad chuckled before continuing, “You must be so angry, so pissed, so reluctant to give up, hmm? Because even though you found out about it first, I still stole it from you. One step is all it takes. You’ll never catch up to me now. I have the higher ground now, so how are you going to beat me this time?”

Jasper replied calmly, “I don’t really mind putting the entire JW Electronics at risk, Mr. Monty. If I do end up losing all of that, I’ll just treat it as having not earned anything from the aluminum company incident before. Now that I think about it, you were indirectly the one who gave me that money, weren’t you, Mr. Monty?”

“You!”

Fury burst from within Conrad. He had only ever lost once in his life yet this one loss had become a nightmare he could never escape from.

Jasper’s name had become Conrad’s trigger. Conrad only had to think of that man and he would completely lose all his composure.

“Haha!”

Conrad forcibly pushed the anger aside and spoke coldly, “We’ve got a long road ahead of us. So what if you win once? The one with the last word is the true winner, Jasper. You've already lost once, what makes you think you can win this time?

"Just you wait. You won't be able to do anything but watch as I slowly take up all domestic MP3 player market shares. The money should've been yours, but you'll have no way of getting it. All you can do is watch and drool. Of course, perhaps I'll give you a chance or two to earn money if I'm in a good mood.

"But as to whether that's good or bad money, that's not for you to decide! I'll decide and you'll take what I give you!"

With that, Conrad hung up the phone.

Despite knowing that he had the upper hand, Conrad could not seem to lift his mood.

He threw the phone aggressively and took the new MP3 player sample from his table. Looking at the silver coating, Conrad asked grimly, "Can this thing be mass-produced yet?"

Valentine replied confidently, "All manufacturing lines have already been installed. It can be mass-produced any time."

"Good!" Conrad's mood lightened a little.

"Then begin production. Contact the sales department as well. We can sign contracts with business clients who've been requesting it but remember to raise the bar. We're the country's first domestic brand for MP3 players. It's not something any Tom, Dick, or Harry can sell on our behalf."

Valentine nodded after Conrad finished speaking. "One more question, Mr. Monty. What should we name this MP3 player of ours? And how should we price it?"

"Its name..."

Conrad fell silent for a bit and replied, "Let's call it Melody. As for its price, it's selling for 2,000 bucks overseas so there's no reason for us to sell it at a cheap price. Let's do 1,800 bucks per MP3 player."

Conrad then scoffed and fiddled with the sample. "It costs us no more than 500 to 600 bucks to produce, yet we're selling it easily at 1,800. What a profit."

"How's it going with the rights protection materials I had you prepare?"

Valentine smiled and replied, "Don't worry, Mr. Monty. I've already prepared most of it. All we need to do now is for JW Electronics to start manufacturing. We can sue them the moment that happens and we can also request for all the company's factories to be seized."

"Good!" Conrad was excited, and his eyes shone with excitement. "I've been waiting for this day for too long. Don't you dare disappoint me, Jasper. Produce your MP3 players as fast as you can."

"I have a question, Mr. Monty."

"About that Jasper, the owner of JW Electronics... If he knows that you have the patent rights, why did he still build a factory to manufacture it? Or perhaps he isn't really planning on manufacturing MP3 players? In that case, won't all our hard work be for naught?"

Conrad was in a great mood, so he explained patiently, "You don't know Jasper. We've fought before and I can tell you that he's a very calm man. It's almost as if he doesn't really care about anything."

"But it's people like him who are truly arrogant. He thinks that he's the strongest of us all. The reason why he doesn't get calculative with anyone is that he doesn't even think they're worth his time."

Conrad then pointed at his nose and continued, "Even I'm among the group of people he looks down on. So this factory of his is definitely manufacturing MP3 players. There's no way it can be anything else. Perhaps he thinks he has another trick up his sleeve to counter me."

At that, Conrad locked his fingers together and put them behind his head before leaning comfortably against the big office chair. Squinting, he looked at the ceiling and spoke calmly, "So this time, I'm going to crush him under my foot without giving him the chance to ever turn the tables!"

Life at the Top Chapter 702

"A set-up." Jasper shrugged and passed the invitation to Chad.

Chad took a look and reacted completely differently from Jasper by immediately frowning at its content.

"Melody Electronics wants to invite us for a joint product launch? And they even invited a few television and newspaper representatives?"

At that, Chad instantly reacted. "This is the MP3 player manufacturer that's been advertising their products all this while?"

"Exactly. And they have a domestic license to manufacture the MP3 player," Jasper spoke calmly.

Chad frowned and spoke, "So they're just intending to make a fool out of us in front of the media, then."

"That's why I called it a set-up. I'm afraid this isn't as simple as making a fool of us. They're going to use the power of the press to completely kill our product the moment it launches."

Jasper had a calm expression on his face. He could already imagine how excited and proud Conrad must have looked when he made this decision.

Even though Conrad's move was rather surprising and sudden, Jasper was not angry at him at all.

After all, they were rivals, and there was no law claiming that only Jasper could plot against Conrad and not the other way around.

The two of them were merely trying to spot weak points while they attacked and countered each other, in hopes to get rid of the other once and for all.

About the incident in Coreana regarding the patent, Jasper had found a way to counter Conrad. However, it was not a lie that Conrad's move had almost destroyed Jasper's chances of making profits through the MP3 player.

Conrad was still the one attacking now, and Jasper had to react.

This time, Jasper decided that he would counterattack.

"Perhaps we shouldn't attend, Mr. Laine," Chad suggested with furrowed brows.

Jasper smiled. "Don't worry, I have a plan. Come with me when I attend. The roles in this set-up haven't been decided yet."

Seeing how Jasper had already made up his mind, Chad nodded and decided to go along with it.

With Chad's agreement, Jasper immediately made two calls.

Chad's eyes shone brighter as Jasper made the few calls.

The first call was to Hudson Moore.

The second and third calls were to Ryder from Harbor City's Advent Entertainment and Ted from Swallow Capital's Easy Media.

He had done two things with those calls.

The first thing was to have the two companies under Advent Entertainment grant JW Electronics the right to use their artists' songs.

The second was to have the two media companies sign a strategic cooperation agreement with Terizone. Terizone would then create a downloading site for MP3 players, where available songs would include artists from both media companies, as quickly as possible. Those artists happen to make up about 70% of the famous singers in Harbor City and the Mainland.

"You want to play with copyright and patent rights, Conrad? Fine, then we'll block your content. So what if you have an MP3 player? You won't be able to download any music and even if you are, it'd be the pirated version while our MP3 players will provide tracks from the source. I'd like to see how you're going to win this."

Jasper smiled at Chad who was excited and impatient.

Life at the Top Chapter 703

Three days later, a piece of news had spread among the tech enthusiasts in the country.

Domestically manufactured MP3 players were available to the public now!

People did not have to save money to get the goods imported, nor did they need to bring cassette tapes around anymore.

Through all sorts of tactics, dozens of media representatives participated in Melody's new product launch event and countless people had their eyes on it.

The greatly anticipated event was held in the conference hall of Nauritus City's Sheraton Hotel.

Thanks to Conrad, not only did media companies of all sizes from Southeast Province send their representatives, but there were also representatives from six television stations from other provinces and two large official news stations from Swallow Capital.

The conference hall was packed with cameras and microphones everywhere. Reporters began to greet each other and exchange contacts before the event began.

It was a lively scene.

Backstage, Jasper saw Conrad standing with a smile not too far away when he arrived. From the way Conrad stood, it almost seemed as if he had been waiting for Jasper.

"I see that you've been well, Mr. Laine," Conrad greeted calmly.

"And you're as graceful as ever, Mr. Monty," Jasper greeted back.

Seeing that Jasper had only brought Julian and another middle-aged man he did not recognize, Conrad smiled. "You don't seem to care too much about this launch event, Mr. Laine.

"It can't possibly be because of my glory, can it?"

Jasper replied calmly, "It's just a launch event, what matters most is the product, no? There's no point in bringing a large group of people with me. I'm not here for a fight."

Although he was smiling, Conrad's gaze darkened slowly. He leaned toward Jasper and spoke, "I like that. Our products will speak for us, won't they? Though I do wonder if I could take a look at the product you've brought over today, Mr. Laine?"

"I'm not the only one anticipating it, of course. I'm sure the reporters are, too... Since a pirated version will be launched with the official one. Who knows, maybe the product you invested in to manufacture will become a widely-bashed product after today?"

Conrad's smile widened presumptuously. "After all, I'm the one with the patent rights."

"Are you so confident that you'll beat me today, Mr. Monty?" Jasper asked.

Conrad laughed aloud. "Jasper, oh, Jasper. Do you know what your biggest weakness is? You're too confident in yourself. Too much self-confidence will be the cause of your downfall. You think that everything is within your control, but there'll always be the unexpected.

"Like the patent rights and this launch event, for example. You know that the patent rights are with me, yet you're unwilling to give up on the MP3 player. What makes you think that I'd let you off? You're too naive if you think you've got a trick to turn this all around."

Conrad scoffed and spoke plainly, "This launch event will mark the beginning of your downfall. It'll be the MP3 player this time, then I'll move on to target all other companies under JW Capital. Just wait. Perhaps I'll even spare you some change the day I make you lose everything. Perhaps I'll spare you enough that you can continue living, albeit pitifully.

"With me in Southeast Province, there will be no room for you!"

With an arrogant smile, Conrad turned and left with light steps.

“What an arrogant man, Mr. Laine,” Chad spoke rigidly to Jasper, his expression dark.

Jasper replied unaffectedly, “It’s only normal for a man to go crazy before his death. His time is coming soon.”

Chad’s expression brightened greatly when he was reminded of the leverage Jasper had. He said, “Now I’m really anticipating the launch event. I’d like to see the change in his expression when he finds out. I wonder if he can still be so arrogant then.”

...

At two in the afternoon, with the reporters waiting patiently, the launch event started on time.

On the stage were two separated groups of people. On one side were the main characters of the event, Conrad and Melody Electronics’ person in charge.

While on the other side stood Jasper and Chad from JW Electronics.

A majority of the reporters looked at Jasper and Chad with curiosity. They did not understand why this insignificant JW Electronics would be here at Melody Electronics’ launch event.

Tapping on the microphone, Conrad spoke to the audience, “Dear friends from the press, I ask that you remain silent for a little longer as Melody Electronics’ new product launch will officially begin.”

Conrad then glanced at Valentine beside him.

After receiving a cue from Conrad, Valentine smiled and stood up with an MP3 player the size of his palm.

“Friends from the press, you should already have received the relevant materials about my company. Now, allow me to show you the first-ever MP3 player to be domestically manufactured that my company has researched and developed!

“I’m sure all of you know that the MP3 player is currently trending in the States and in European countries. Its compact design allows it to be conveniently carried with you, and it’s a music product that allows you to easily download and store songs. This product will surely bring a new era to the country’s electronics market. Our first-generation Melody MP3 player has...”

The introduction lasted for more than ten minutes, during which Valentine elaborated on a grand concept and managed to describe the first-generation Melody as the hope of domestically manufactured goods—a work of art that had surpassed countless foreign goods of the same type.

For a launch event of this scale, it was expected that Conrad had his own men among the reporters.

When it was time for the reporters to ask questions, it was their time to shine.

“Mr. Estrada, your introduction has piqued our interest in the first-generation Melody. But I’d like to ask, at what price will it be sold?”

Valentine replied with a smile, “Since this is a domestic brand, it’s only natural that we keep the price acceptable to its target consumers. We’ve decided to sell each product at 1,800 Somer Dollars.”

The reporters all gasped in shock at the number.

In comparison to the imported goods that would cost at least 2,000 Somer Dollars, the first-generation Melody from a domestic brand was indeed a little more budget-friendly.

“One more question. How many Melodies is Melody Electronics preparing to manufacture?” another reporter asked.

Valentine smiled proudly. “Melody Electronics is fully prepared with four manufacturing lines that work 24 hours a day. There are currently six million first-generation Melody products in the warehouse and we will be manufacturing at least 500,000 per day in the future!

“Our company has invested a large amount to reach that goal. We’re not worried about having invested too much, for we are confident that our product will stun the country’s MP3 player market!”

After the topic began to trend online, Conrad took over the microphone and suddenly spoke with a smile, “We have another piece of news to share, ladies and gentlemen. Mr. Laine from JW Electronics has a new product to launch as well. Would you like to show us your product, Mr. Laine?”

Life at the Top Chapter 704

Conrad’s words successfully diverted everyone’s attention to Jasper.

Turning his head secretly to glance at Jasper, Conrad felt his emotions thrum calmly within him.

He had waited too long for this day.

He would crush Jasper today and turn the man into the laughing stock of Southeast Province... No, the entire country.

Jasper, who had not said a word since the launch event started, smiled and took the microphone in front of him as the reporters looked over. He spoke, “I did come today to announce the launch of a new product as well. Coincidentally, it’s also an MP3 player like Mr. Monty’s first-generation Melody.

“Of course, my product is rather different from other MP3 players. In fact, I’m more willing to call it an upgraded version, the MP4.

“Unlike the first-generation Melody, my MP4 goes by the name Mellow, derived from the word mellifluous. From the definition alone, I can describe it as a revolutionary product that has completely surpassed all existing MP3 players.

“If one claims that Mr. Monty’s first-generation Melody to be an outstanding product among all other MP3 players, then my Mellow will lead and guide the path to the future of music playing devices.

“JW Electronics does not aim to copy what is already trending overseas. Instead, we aim to make a statement, that those abroad will be the ones to copy the products that we people of Somer descent create.”

Jasper’s words stunned all the reporters present, and everyone was inexplicably filled with anticipation.

2001 had only just started and people were beginning to fawn and worship foreign products. A majority believed that foreign goods were better than domestic ones, that the term ‘domestically manufactured’ somehow made it seem the goods were lacking in quality.

However, as fellow people of Somer descent, they wanted their country to grow stronger. They also wished for their domestically manufactured goods to be copied by foreigners and not the other way around.

Especially when Conrad’s first-generation Melody was introduced first. The introduction mainly compared the product to its foreign counterpart and how similarly they had managed to replicate it.

‘But Jasper?’

‘Jasper has introduced an evolutionary product, one that would have foreigners replicating them instead.

'The winner is evident!'

Conrad's faze instantly grew frosty as he looked at Jasper silently.

"There seems to be a change in the situation, Mr. Monty," Valentine leaned over to whisper, realizing the unusualness of the situation.

"Don't worry, we have the patent rights, remember? He can bluff as much as he wants but there's no escaping the patent rights. That alone is enough for me to screw him over!" Conrad spoke in a dark tone.

Just then, the reporters below were impatient and could not wait to ask, "Mr. Laine, have you officially manufactured this Mellow device you speak of?"

Jasper smiled. "Of course, or I'd just be bluffing, wouldn't I? Let me pass the microphone to the first factory director of JW Electronics Equipment Manufacturing Plant. He'll tell you more about the current manufacturing situation for Mellow."

Jasper then gestured to Chad.

Chad got up excitedly with an MP3 player the size of half his palm in his hand. The most eye-catching part of it was its compact size and a screen that took up more than half the space.

"Dear friends from the press, this is Mellow, JW Electronics' latest product. It's more than just an ordinary MP3 player. It's been upgraded to an MP4!"

The reporters grew more excited as Chad continued to introduce Mellow.

According to Chad's description, there was indeed no similar foreign product out there. It was evident that Mellow was much more outstanding compared to other music-playing devices on the market.

Conrad and Valentine turned grim.

Life at the Top Chapter 705

Conrad glanced at Valentine. The latter nodded and gestured to the few reporters they had bribed in advance.

One of them stood up and asked Jasper, “Mr. Laine, since your company has such an outstanding product, I’d like to ask if you have the related patent rights?”

The question stunned all the reporters.

He was right. No matter how outstanding Mellow was or how it called itself an MP4, there was no changing the fact that it was derived from the MP3 player. That meant there was no escaping the issue of patent rights.

Everyone fell silent and they turned to Jasper, waiting for his reply.

However, the one who spoke was the same reporter who asked the question. They were evidently proud of the effect their question had brought about and asked another question, “Mr. Estrada from Melody Electronics has already explained just now that they’ve received patent rights from Mr. Damond Golding in Coreana. Melody Electronics is the only company within the country with exclusive rights to manufacture the MP3 player. So, Mr. Laine, could you tell us how Mellow decides to tackle this problem?”

Everyone was watching both Jasper and Chad. Their every word and expression would surely be released in the newspapers and reported by news stations tomorrow. As such, they had to be extremely careful of what they said.

Just then, Jasper stood up.

“Indeed, JW Electronics does not have the domestic license to manufacture the MP3 player.”

That statement caused an uproar.

The reporters were rendered speechless.

While piracy was rampant in the country, it was something that no one dared to state blatantly. After all, that would only make a fool of them.

“If you admit that you don’t have the license, Mr. Laine, then why would your JW Electronics continue to manufacture pirated products without patent rights? Do you perhaps believe that you’re untouchable to the country’s law?” Conrad spoke indifferently.

“Or do you perhaps think that Melody Electronics would not dare to sue you?”

Conrad’s two sentences were incendiary.

The atmosphere in the room turned tense.

Yet the reporters only got more excited.

The launch event was supposed to be a normal press conference, and they had not expected the two companies to start a fight out of the blue.

This was earth-shattering news.

This was an incident that would easily increase their ratings and sell out their newspapers.

Each reporter had a foolish smile on their face as they imagined receiving an award from their editor-in-chief.

At the same time, everyone's eyes were on the stage. They were not going to miss out on any single detail.

"JW Electronics is a law-abiding company, there's no way we would do anything illegal," Jasper replied.

"Bullsh*t!" Valentine stepped over and pointed at Jasper, accusing him, "This stupid Mellow of yours was derived from the MP3 player patent and you've admitted that you don't have a license! How is that not illegal?"

Valentine then looked around and stated loudly, "Dear friends of the press, Melody Electronics has spent a large amount of money to buy exclusive licensing from Mr. Damond Golding in Coreana. Our company will not stand by and watch as someone infringes on our interest!

"Especially not nobodies who only play dirty tricks. We'll bring them to the court of law, so could our dear friends from the media please take clear pictures of this ingenuine man? He has blatantly broken the law by openly pirating!"

Life at the Top Chapter 706

Click, click.

Camera lights flashed endlessly in the conference hall, and all the video cameras were aimed right at the stage. No one wanted to miss any details.

If the fight between them was considered normal competition between two companies, then Valentine's words had instantly escalated the situation where it now involved the breaking of the law.

The man had used expletives.

The reporters present all flushed in excitement. The trip over suddenly felt really worth it.

There were too few instances of such situations in the country.

Therefore, the moment such instances occurred, they attracted everyone's attention.

Conrad was very pleased as well. Valentine was becoming more useful to him with every moment. Valentine knew that there were things Conrad was in no position to say, so he jumped out and conveyed the message Conrad wanted to say but could not.

"You're the one speaking nonsense!"

A loud shout came from beside Jasper, causing everyone present to look over in shock.

Especially Valentine. The man's expression darkened after being accused and he turned to look at Chad.

"Who says the only way to manufacture goods is with patent rights?"

Chad scoffed and pulled out a piece of document from his briefcase that he brought with him. He opened it before everyone and spoke, "Not only has JW Electronics bought 50% ownership of the MP3 player patent rights from Sentel Corporation, but we've also signed an improvement patent agreement!

"So as long as we've succeeded in improving the MP3 player, we're automatically granted the user rights to the patent."

Chad looked at the silenced group of reporters proudly as he continued, "In addition, JW Electronics will hold complete ownership over our improved patent rights. That means that our Mellow has fully independent intellectual property rights!

"Unlike some companies who seem to be very proud of the fact that they have a license. So what if they do? They're still working for the foreigners, aren't they? A portion of the profit made from very first-generation Melody has to be distributed to Mr. Damond Golding. Can you still call that a domestically manufactured product?"

Chad's words stunned the entire venue.

The reporters began to whisper among themselves. There were quite a few reporters who did not understand much about patents, licenses, and their pertaining laws, but they all came to an understanding after asking people who worked in those industries—Chad was speaking the truth!

No one had expected JW Electronics to have managed to sign an improvement patent agreement when they could not get a license. Not to mention that they had succeeded too!

This was what a domestic brand truly entailed.

The reporters looked at Jasper excitedly, and they all wanted to know how Jasper had done it.

The man remained calm.

“Ladies and gentlemen,” Jasper took the microphone and spoke softly, “I merely wish to show you with my actions that our Somerland is capable of manufacturing exceptional goods.”

Clap, clap, clap!

No one knew where it started, but all the reporters were fervently clapping at Jasper’s statement. The entire conference hall was instantly drowned out by the sound of applause.

At the same time, both Conrad and Valentine had a very sour look on their faces.

Especially Conrad, who had never expected such a move from Jasper.

“That stupid improvement patent agreement, does it actually exist?” Conrad suppressed his anger and asked Valentine.

Valentine’s face paled as he nodded with difficulty. “It does. There is such regulation under international patent law. As long as the owner of the patent agrees, it’s very much possible. But the issue is that he’d need all of the people with ownership to agree before it’s granted. Damond Golding only has 50%, so how did he get the remaining 50% from Sentel?”

Conrad was slightly shaking after receiving such a shock. He turned to glare fiercely and coldly at Jasper, grinding his teeth together.

“You already knew this was going to happen, Jasper, so that’s why you had everything prepared, right? You were just waiting for me to play my role. How dare you make me into a fool?”

Furious, Conrad asked directly.

“Mr. Monty, how could you accuse me of making you into a fool when you were the one who asked for all of this?” Jasper replied calmly.

“But I must really thank you for giving Mellow such a great opportunity for advertisement, Mr. Monty. It looks like I’ll get to cut down on quite a bit of advertising expenses.”

Conrad was about to combust from infuriation.

He had used up a lot of favors using the Monty family’s name for this launch event just to get dozens of media representatives over, including those two large stations from Swallow Capital. Now, he had given the advantage to Jasper on a silver platter.

The worst part of this all was that his first-generation Melody had its reputation crushed before it could be released.

Conrad felt his limbs grow cold and there was a stuffy gust of air that suffocated his chest. He could not swallow it nor push it out. It felt terrible.

Jasper smiled slightly at Conrad’s reaction.

‘That’s all it took to beat you?’

‘But I’ve only just started.’

He stood up again.

The reporters had learned from experience that if Jasper stood up to speak, it was going to be another large announcement. Everyone looked at Jasper eagerly and waited for another bomb to drop.

Indeed, Jasper did not waste time as he took the microphone and announced, "There's something I'd like to announce as well during this important event.

"Mellow will be sold at 1,699 Somer Dollars starting tomorrow and all consumers are welcome to buy them from any Schuler Supermarket within the country.

"Moreover, every consumer can download official tracks for free from us.

"For that purpose, we've already signed a strategic cooperation agreement with Terizone Inc, Easy Media, and Advent Entertainment Group.

"Easy Media and Advent Entertainment Group are currently the biggest media companies in the Mainland and Harbor City respectively. At least 60% of the famous artists we know now are signed under them.

"We'll provide the biggest official music library within the country, so as long as you buy Mellow, you will be allowed to download the songs for free.

"In addition, JW Electronics will work together with Easy Media and Advent Entertainment Group to attack all sources of pirated music within the country. Our related departments are already in contact and we've received immense support.

"That is all JW Electronics has to say for this launch event, thank you."

Jasper then placed the microphone down once he had finished talking. Leaving coolly, he left Chad to deal with the extremely excited reporters.

Just as Jasper left, Conrad quickly followed after.

His complexion was pale from anger, and his expression was wretched like he wanted to tear Jasper into pieces with his teeth.

“You stand right there, Jasper!”

Life at the Top Chapter 707

“Forget the fact that you’re dominating everything, Jasper, but you’re not even going to give others a chance to make money? Aren’t you afraid that your ruthlessness will come and bite you back in the *ss?”

Conrad’s gaze darkened as he roared. He felt the urge to punch Jasper in the face.

Jasper looked at him confusedly and asked, “What do you mean? You’re making this into more of an issue than it is, Mr. Monty. I don’t think I follow.”

“Stop f*cking pretending to be clueless!” Conrad roared.

“We’re all intelligent people here, what’s the point of this clueless act of yours?”

“What’s the meaning behind the official music library, huh? Tell me what MP3 player doesn’t need to download music! You’re just trying to make the entire market yours with that official music library and wanting to attack pirated sites, aren’t you?!”

Conrad was infuriated when he thought about how the mountain of goods in his warehouse was done for and could not be sold. It was a loss not even the Monty family could endure.

Coupled with the aluminum mine incident, Jasper had struck the Monty family hard twice.

'The Monty family is rich, but it can't take such a series of attacks.'

At that train of thought, Conrad felt like his heart had been pierced through with needles.

"Weren't you the one who kept saying I have to do things legally, Mr. Monty? Supporting the official version and ownership, correct? Or perhaps you don't agree with me attacking pirated music?" Jasper asked with a smile.

Conrad took a deep breath and spoke sinisterly, "You'll anger a lot of people like this, Jasper."

"That's alright. After all, the official music library is free to everyone who buys Mellow. As for imported MP3 players, sure, as long as the consumers pay. After all, I need to pay my employees in the entertainment companies salaries, and who wouldn't take money served on a silver platter?" Jasper spoke calmly.

Conrad scoffed and replied, "Fine. So this is what you have in mind then, making money? You're a cruel man. Fine, I admit my loss. How do you want me to pay you?"

"You've misunderstood, Mr. Monty." Jasper shook his head. "I meant those with imported foreign MP3 players are allowed to pay for access to my music library. But as for competitors within the country, I'm sorry, we're ultimately still rivals. There's no way I'd let my competitor steal my market quota, right?"

Conrad was stunned for a moment when he heard Jasper. The next second, he felt blood rush to his head.

"So you're just killing me off, then?!" Conrad spoke coldly.

“The market is a battlefield, Mr. Monty. I’m sure you wouldn’t have let me live either if our roles were reversed,” Jasper spoke calmly.

Conrad chortled. “Good job, Jasper! What a scheme you’ve plotted here!”

“But I heard that you spent tens of millions on your manufacturing lines, Mr. Monty? In addition to the storage warehouses, oh, and that license, you must’ve spent a lot, haven’t you?” Jasper asked.

“What are you trying to say? The Monty family doesn’t need you to pay for such a small loss.” Conrad spat out coldly as he suppressed the flames of fury within him.

“I was just thinking that if you don’t want them anymore, Mr. Monty, I wouldn’t mind acquiring all your factories and equipment. It just depends on whether you’re willing to part with them or not, Mr. Monty,” Jasper suggested.

Conrad widened his eyes. He could not believe such a shameless man existed in this world!

“You just screwed over my investment of almost one billion Somer Dollars and now you want my factory and manufacturing lines as well? How greedy can you be, Jasper?”

“It’s precisely because I’ve caused such a grave loss to you, Mr. Monty, that I was thinking of a way to make up for it. There’s nothing wrong if you don’t want to accept my kind proposal, Mr. Monty,” Jasper stated.

“Don’t worry. I’d rather lose out on all that money than ever benefit you!” Conrad sneered.

Jasper shrugged and spoke regretfully, “That’s a shame, then. Well, if that’s the case, please excuse me.”

Jasper turned and was about to leave when he heard Conrad speak behind him.

“Wait.”

Jasper turned and looked at Conrad.

Taking a deep breath, Conrad tried to speak in the calmest tone possible, “I can give you my factory and my equipment for free.”

Jasper looked at Conrad but did not speak. He knew that Conrad was not done speaking.

As expected, Conrad paused for a moment before speaking again, “But I want shares to JW Electronics.”

Jasper chuckled. “Sure.”

Conrad looked up and stared at Jasper, asking in disbelief, “Really?”

“Really, but on one condition. I want shares to Monty Group!”

Monty Group was the Monty family’s core business. All of the Monty family’s properties were controlled by Monty Group. It was a parent company, just like Jasper’s JW Capital.

Conrad flew into a rage when he heard Jasper’s condition. “No way, in your dreams! You could sell the entirety of JW Capital and you still wouldn’t be qualified to touch a cent of the Monty Group’s shares.”

“Exactly, that’s what I wanted to say as well.” Jasper had never intended to be a shareholder of Monty Group. It was just as impossible as him allowing Conrad to be a shareholder of JW Capital.

Conrad glared at Jasper and ground his molars. “You’ll get karma for being so merciless, Jasper!”

“If there’s nothing else, Mr. Monty, I’ll get going now.” Jasper shook his head. He was no longer interested in arguing with Conrad anymore.

Conrad glared at Jasper’s retreating figure and fell silent for a long while.

He clenched his jaw as a gust of humiliation and hatred surged in his chest. He did not understand why he could not win Jasper no matter what he did. Not even when he struck first.

Just then, Valentine rushed over to him. Seeing that Conrad was alone, he walked over carefully and spoke, “Mr. Monty, where’s Jasper? What should we do now?”

“News has already gotten out and the merchants already know what’s going on. The merchants have come to find us at the company and they’re requesting a refund. What do we do?”

“What should we do, what do we do... All everyone knows is to ask me what to do next. How the f*ck am I supposed to know?” Furious, Conrad suddenly pushed Valentine and the other felt his back knock against the wall.

“I got you people to work for me, not to ask me what to do!”

Seeing how Conrad seemed to have lost all rationale, Valentine sighed. He knew that he no longer had a place beside Conrad.

Someone had to take responsibility for the failure of Melody’s products. There was no way Conrad would take the responsibility, so it had to be him.

Life at the Top Chapter 708

“I’ll hand in my resignation to you tomorrow, Mr. Monty.”

Valentine sighed and spoke softly.

Conrad looked at Valentine sinisterly and spoke coldly, "What, you're just going to wash your hands off this incident just like that?"

Valentine shook his head disappointingly and spoke, "That's not what I meant, Mr. Monty. You know that someone has to take responsibility for all of this. It's only right that I take the blame."

Conrad halted and spoke solemnly, "Go back and calm down. I'm busy, we'll talk about everything else next time."

Conrad then left without turning back.

Exiting the hotel, Conrad drove straight to the quiet villa.

In the backyard was a middle-aged man in traditional clothing fishing by the lake. The sun was bright and the weather was good, but Conrad's mood was despondent like an impending storm.

"Welcome home, Young Master," a servant greeted.

Conrad waved him off and spoke indifferently, "You're all excused. I want to talk to my dad alone."

The servants left and Conrad sat beside Steven. His tone was full of despair when he spoke, "I lost again, Dad."

Steven was focused on the particles floating on the surface of the lake. He did not seem to be too agitated about Conrad's loss.

"I expected it."

Conrad frowned slightly at Steven's words. "Isn't it a bit too late to say that, Dad?"

Steven smiled and replied meaningfully, “Do you know what the biggest difference between you and Jasper is?”

Conrad replied coldly, “The brat is too good at scheming and very good at waiting.

“Every time! It’s like this every time! He always waits until the last minute to show his hand!”

Steven shook his head. “That’s just the surface of it.”

“Let me ask you. Have you dug up information on him and found out about how Jasper got to where he is today?” Steven asked again.

Conrad was stunned for a moment and replied with a sneer, “He earned himself millions from the futures market a year ago and then kept making more money based on pure luck. Then the international crude oil incident gave him a ton of wealth. But so what? With such opportunities, even idiots could grow rich.”

“What about you, then? Why didn’t you take those chances?” Steven asked.

Conrad was about to protest but he realized he had nothing to say when he opened his mouth.

Indeed, all of those incidents were hugely profitable opportunities, but they were all in the past now. There were not many people who could tell that there would be profitable opportunities before they happened.

People who could accurately make these judgments were rare, and they had all become rich thanks to that.

Sighing, Steven retracted his fishing line. The bait was gone, but he had no idea when the fish took it.

Steven replaced the bait as he spoke, “This is the biggest difference between you two. The fact that he’s willing to wait is only the surface of things. He’s detail-oriented and a very skilled man with an exceptionally sharp eye for things. There aren’t many people comparable to him in terms of that within the country, let alone you.

“But that’s not the point now. So what if you find a so-called chance to profit? How many people would truly dare to take the risk? He made his first trade with a mortgage from his only house here in the province.

“Lose, and you live on the streets. Win, and you’ll be bathed in riches. Would you have dared to take the bet if you had been in his shoes?”

Conrad fell deep in thought at Steven’s question.

“No, you wouldn’t have.”

Life at the Top Chapter 709

Without waiting for Conrad’s reply, Steven gave his opinion.

“Because you’re a Monty. You started on a finish line that most people could never reach even if they worked hard from the moment they were born till the end of their lives. You’re used to living a pampered and protected life. You were set for a comfortable life even without fighting for it.”

Steven tossed the fishing line out and spoke calmly, “That’s also the difference between a king who fought for his throne and one who inherited it.”

Conrad clenched his jaw. “I lost almost a billion dollars again this time. It’s not fair!”

“What’s a bit of loss? The Monty family can take much more than that. Jasper is the best target practice I can give you. This isn’t an easy target and you might get hurt if you’re not careful. You’ve lost twice against him, each loss worse than the last.

“Meanwhile, Jasper is growing stronger every day. He gains profits every time you lose and if this keeps going, the distance between the two of you will only reduce until you two end up as equals.”

Conrad was not pleased with Steven’s words. “Who does he think he is? As if he’s worthy of being my equal!”

“In reality, I’d say he’s somewhere above you in my eyes,” Steven spoke solemnly.

Conrad clenched his jaw. “I won’t let him get away with this!”

“Calm down and clear your mind. Then decide what you want to do next.” Steven passed Conrad the fishing rod.

“Come fish at the pond when you’re free. Take a breather and focus, it helps with pondering many important things. The more important a decision, the more calm and open an environment you need to be in to think.

“Don’t think about going in until you’ve caught at least three fishes.”

Steven then got up to leave.

“Oh, one more thing.”

Steven suddenly turned to Conrad while he was walking and asked, “You have a Valentine Estrada by your side, right?”

Conrad nodded. “I do, but he’s decided to resign.”

“He’s promising, keep him by your side,” Steven spoke.

Conrad frowned slightly and replied, “He’s skilled, but this incident...”

“Con, as superiors, we must learn to accept others’ flaws. More importantly, you have to know how to get your men to be utterly loyal to you. How will he see you if instead of pushing all the blame to him, you keep him by your side?” Steven prompted calmly.

Conrad thought about it before nodding slightly. “I understand.”

...

While Conrad and Steven conversed in the villa, Jasper had returned to the investment company as well.

Chad, who had been receiving phone calls the entire way over, was flushed with excitement.

“Its popularity is exploding, Mr. Laine! Mellow’s popularity is exploding! Countless merchants are begging us for products! They’re all willing to pay in advance as long as it means they’ll get the product!”

In the office, Jasper smiled as he sat down. “I expected no less. But I need you to make sure that we will only manufacture according to what we’ve predicted—not one device more.”

Chad was confused. “But why, Mr. Laine? Mellow is in very high demand right now. We should take this chance to manufacture in large quantities. Why do you want to keep it at 30% of our manufacturing capacity?”

Jasper chuckled. “The scarcer something is, the more precious it becomes. The best way to get someone to remember our product in the shortest time possible is by making it something everyone wants to buy but may not be able to even if they’re willing to pay. This is the brand effect.”

It made sense that Chad did not understand. For this was the hunger marketing strategy that a mobile phone company would be using in the future.

Jasper, though, could not be more familiar with the strategy.

Life at the Top Chapter 710

Jasper's words were thought-provoking.

After all, as a man who had spent more than half his life working with state-owned enterprises, Chad was not a man to be underestimated. After a moment of thought, he mostly understood what Jasper meant.

"You really are a natural-born businessman, Mr. Laine," Chad exclaimed with admiration.

Jasper smiled and passed Chad a cup of coffee. "Perhaps start nurturing a few well-trusted confidants for the electronics company, especially at the factory. That's going to be the company's important source of income in the future.

"But my plans for you lie in the position of director of the Human Resource Department in my investment company. You can't stay in JW Electronics forever to cultivate a team of managers. You should get this done as fast as possible."

Chad nodded in understanding. "Alright, I'll train a few leaders."

"I'll hold an overall assembly with all companies under JW Capital by the time you assume your position. One, so that everyone can get to know you and thus make future work easier; two, to deal with some of the company's internal issues."

Jasper rubbed his temples and spoke in a slightly tired manner.

There was quite a big problem with the investing company and due to various reasons, Jasper had yet the chance to deal with them.

The investment company's managerial team, for example. Excluding Chad, Jasper had no idea how the others' standards were.

The most important thing now was that Jasper needed someone who could take on the role of a commander when Jasper himself was too busy to deal with the company.

This was a very important position and one with very high authority. As such, Jasper could not trust hunting companies to help him look for such professional managers to fit the role.

There was a long road ahead of him and there was much work he had to do.

Thinking back to those reincarnation novels that he had read before, Jasper realized how unrealistic they were. All the main character had to do was appear with his dignified aura and all sorts of lackeys would bow to him, pledging loyalty.

...

The next day, following the report of the launch event in newspapers and television stations, Mellow had officially begun to trend.

Merchants had their own methods of gaining intel so they had gotten news of it earlier. Ordinary consumers, however, could only learn of such things through the media.

Not to mention that the internet had yet to be as advanced as the future, where news all over the world could spread like wildfire in just a few hours.

By the second day when the news of the launch event had simmered a little, all the consumers had gone mad.

Countless youths broke their piggy banks or begged their parents to go to the nearest Schuler Supermarket for a Mellow.

There were even cases of people lining up at some supermarkets in large cities like Cavern City, Swallow Capital, and Waterhoof City just so they could get their hands on a Mellow.

Authorized sellers had gone mad as well in face of such enthusiasm.

While JW Electronics had explicitly stated that most of their products would be sold by Schuler Supermarkets, other authorized sellers were still distributed 25% of the goods.

Therefore, consumers all ran to buy the device from other merchants when they were sold out at Schuler Supermarkets.

They would buy the device even if the price cost a few hundred more.

In addition, Terizone's music downloading site seemed to show a trend of being overwhelmed soon.

"We've already added three emergency servers, Mr. Laine, and we've talked to the operator to increase our bandwidth temporarily. But the load at the website has already severely exceeded its designed index. It might crash soon."

Life at the Top Chapter 711

Ever since Hudson had received Jasper's investment and was enlightened about monetizing traffic, he had not needed to worry about servers anymore.

At that moment, he was both elated and frustrated.

He merely thought that the website Jasper had asked him to create would be no more than a small gimmick, so he had not expected it to bring Terizone such great traffic.

Even Jack, who was currently in Coreana in charge of Sena's business, had called him to complain.

Jack was unhappy about Jasper's favoritism to Hudson by giving Terizone such an opportunity for huge traffic.

At the other end of the video call, Jasper smiled. "I don't care, do what you have to do to make sure the site doesn't crash. This is huge traffic, and how many consumers you manage to turn into Terizone subscribers will be up to you."

Hudson laughed aloud. "I've already assigned the majority of the company's important technicians to work on the website. It should be able to hold up.

"Oh, and Mr. Laine, you said something about looking for a professional manager right?" Hudson suddenly asked.

Jasper smiled subtly and asked, "Do you have someone in mind? But I've changed my mind. A professional manager has its own perks, but the problem now is how much I can trust them. You know how it is. What I need is someone who can deal with all business transactions in my investment company when I'm busy."

Hudson was an entrepreneur as well so he understood Jasper's worries.

"I think you could try and meet this man? He's a westerner. I understand that there'd be some reservations with a professional manager from the country, but the man is from the west so he doesn't have as many strings attached with the people here. There's a lot less to worry about," Hudson spoke.

"Who is it?" Jasper was interested.

"His name is Malcolm Malibu. You might not be too familiar with the name, Mr. Laine, but he's been working in the world's largest consumer goods corporation, Procter and Gamble, since the very start. He started as a salesman and made his way up to the position of the head of Global Fabric Care.

"I heard that he got rejected when he tried to join the East Terra Board of Directors recently so he gave up."

Jasper's eyes shone.

While Malcolm himself was not famous, the brand of powdered detergent he was in charge of within the country was a household name.

He was the one who started Tide from scratch!

This man had only failed once in his career and that was when he wanted to join the East Terra Board of Directors. His future career was smooth-sailing after that and not only had he become the president of the Terra region, but he also served as the COO at the P&G's headquarters and later, as the CEO.

In Jasper's past life before he reincarnated, which was the year 2020, Malcolm had already become the global president of Procter and Gamble and joined the board of directors as the vice-chairman.

He was a distinguished man who had developed and promoted the occupation of a professional manager.

“Are you two acquainted?” Jasper asked.

Hudson smiled. “I don’t know him personally, but my wife and his wife did their postgraduates together. My wife just told me recently about how Malcolm was complaining about being mistreated by P&G and how he wanted to resign.”

“Help me contact him as quickly as you can. I’d like to meet him,” Jasper immediately spoke.

If Malcolm was a fellow countryman, then Jasper would not hesitate to decline the notion. After all, there were too many subsidiaries under JW Capital now and the position of a senior executive would surely involve a great deal of interest.

It was not to say that professional managers in the country were not as professional as those in the west, but the main point here was that as a westerner, Malcolm would not have his judgment clouded by personal interests.

As long as hefty profits were promised, people like Malcolm were the easiest people to employ.

Life at the Top Chapter 712

Since both parties were willing, Jasper got the chance to meet Malcolm three days later.

The only difference from any normal meeting was that Malcolm had requested it to be a family meeting instead. This meant that both families were to bring their wives and children, if any. Their discussion would then be held in a more relaxed and calm environment.

Jasper was not surprised.

Malcolm had always been a family man and such a request was most likely for him to test out if he could work with his employer's temperament.

The relationship between a professional manager and his employer was not to be neglected. A frigid relationship would only end in a lose-lose situation.

The more top-notch the professional manager, the more requirements they had for their employer.

"Do you think Mr. Malibu and his wife will like our gift?"

Wendy asked worriedly on the way to the meeting.

Jasper smiled. "Top-notch professional managers like him start with earning tens of millions of US dollars a year, and they get company dividends too. Money is the last of their problems, so giving them unique trinkets might earn their favor."

Wendy blinked and replied, "This meeting seems to matter a lot to you."

Jasper stared out the window where the scenery vanished behind him and sighed. "I don't have much of a choice. The company's getting bigger and I'm only one man. My power alone isn't enough to build JW up."

Jasper was well aware of his own shortcomings. While the memories from his past life were the biggest advantage he had, his memories were also beginning to stray further from the current reality thanks to his involvement. There was no way Jasper could completely rely on them for the rest of his life.

The heavy responsibility to build up his enterprise still depended on his abilities.

While Jasper admitted that he had an average amount of knowledge about finance and investment, just about enough to support him, he was completely out of his depth when it came to modernized enterprise management and building company structure.

He had no other choice but to ask someone else for help.

Thank goodness that while talents were expensive to recruit, they were available as long as you were willing to pay the price.

“I’ll do my best to help you too,” Wendy spoke gently, knowing that Jasper had been under a lot of stress lately.

Jasper pinched Wendy’s nose adoringly and spoke, “All you need to do is be the woman of the house. Just take full control and authority over my finances.”

“What if I take your money and run?” Wendy pushed Jasper’s hand away and chided.

“You’re mine, aren’t you? Why would I be afraid of you running with my money?” Jasper asked with an arched brow.

“Who said I was yours? In your dreams!”

“Then who else do you belong to, hmm? Give me a name, I’ll kill him.”

“Oh my God, stop.”

As the host, Jasper was the one who chose the venue of the meal. Instead of choosing a high-class five-star hotel, he chose a famous underground restaurant in Nauritus City.

The owner of the restaurant was Dawson’s old friend and Dawson liked to drop by for meals when he was free. Jasper had been here before and the food was delicious.

Once they arrived, Jasper alighted the car and walked toward the restaurant while talking to Wendy.

They happened to meet a group of people coincidentally.

The man walking in front was a chubby middle-aged man with a big forehead and large ears. There was an eye-catching LV belt around his waist and it shimmered under the light. It was almost as brightly as the oleaginous surface of his face.

The middle-aged man was stunned when he saw Jasper and his expression immediately morphed into anger.

He was Marlon Bailey, the largest general merchandise distributor in Mustiece Province, Southeast Province's neighbor.

He had originally come to Southeast Province through connections and landed a large order with Melody Electronics. Not only had he put in favors with many people here and there just for this order, but he had also paid for everything in advance.

Life at the Top Chapter 713

It was supposed to be a profitable business, but the first-generation Melody was now completely done for and the money he paid for tens of millions of products was forfeit.

This was all because of Jasper's Mellow.

The worst part of it all was that Mellow was sold mainly through independent sales with merchants as a secondary supplier. This resulted in the embarrassing situation of Marlon wanting to be one of Mellow's merchants yet could never be distributed a portion.

Marlon felt his anger rise and all his inhibitions replaced by courage at the sight of Jasper.

“Jasper!”

Marlon shouted.

Jasper looked at Marlon and frowned slightly. “Hi? Do I know you?”

Marlon scoffed. “How could small nobodies like us ever catch the eye of Mr. Laine and his large company?”

Seeing that Marlon was not here for pleasant conversations, Jasper replied calmly, “I’m busy, I don’t have time to waste on pointless conversations with you here.”

Jasper then tugged on Wendy’s hand and led her to the side.

However, they had their paths blocked by two snickering men. “Why are you in such a rush to leave? Mr. Bailey’s not done talking yet, won’t you stay and listen?”

Marlon walked over to Jasper and spoke enviously, “Your business has been doing great lately, Mr. Laine. I can’t help but envy you. You’re earning a lot, aren’t you?”

“Not that it concerns you,” Jasper spoke calmly.

Marlon barked back wretchedly. “How does that not concern me? The public wouldn’t be as uninterested in the first-generation Melody if you hadn’t stepped in and foiled our plans! I invested more than ten million and it’s all gone now!”

It was then that Jasper understood. This man was one of the merchants who had suffered grave losses for betting on Melody MP3 players.

If the man was speaking the truth, a loss of more than ten million meant that he was quite a large merchant.

“There are prices to pay regardless of what business decision you make. It’s not my fault you made the wrong choice, nor did I force you to sign a contract with Melody,” Jasper replied.

Marlon sneered and said, “Don’t act so proud, Mr. Laine. How about I say it like this? I’m from Mustiece Province and I have quite a few contacts over there. If you want to do business in Mustiece Province in the future, I suggest you give me a compensation fee of at least ten million to cover my losses from my investment.

“Or else, I’ll make sure that there won’t be a single Schuler Supermarket in Mustiece Province. I heard that you do real estate as well, right, Mr. Laine? I wonder if you’d ever want to take real estate projects in Mustiece Province?”

Standing beside Jasper, Wendy’s small face paled in face of such blatant threat.

She was just about to scold the man when Jasper smiled and replied first.

“Could I ask for your name?”

Marlon thought that he had managed to threaten Jasper. Smiling proudly, he replied, “The name’s Marlon Bailey.”

“Well then, Mr. Bailey, which properties do you own in Mustiece Province?” Jasper asked again.

The lackey beside Marlon replied immediately in a haughty manner, “The biggest department store in Mustiece Province, Prosper Shopping Center, belongs to Mr. Bailey! We have six branch outlets in Mustiece Province and each of them is a few stories tall!”

“Quite the business indeed.” Jasper nodded.

People in Mustiece Province were fierce and there were all sorts of unspoken rules as well as underground forces there. The fact that Marlon could build up his business to such a scale was a testament to his strength.

“So you’re well aware. Southeast Province may be your territory, but you’ll have to listen to me if you want to do business in Mustiece Province in the future, understand?” Marlon spoke arrogantly.

As far as Marlon was concerned, Jasper was no more than a money cow ready to be milked right now.

He had not expected Jasper to be so cowardly. Marlon believed that with more threats in the future, he might even get his loss back and be distributed his share of the domestically trending Mellow MP3 players!

Life at the Top Chapter 714

“I think JW Electronics signed contracts with two merchants from Mustiece Province. Give me a moment, Mr. Bailey. Let me call and confirm.” Jasper then pulled his phone out to call Chad.

Drowned in his own fantasy, Marlon frowned at the scene and spoke harshly, “What are you calling to check for? Why would I lie to you? Stop wasting time and just pay up my ten million Somer Dollars compensation fee. And I want 100,000 Mellow MP3 players to be distributed every month.

“Or I’ll make business impossible for you in Mustiece Province.”

Ignoring Marlon who continued to shout, Jasper’s call with Chad had already been connected.

“Chad, do we have any partnerships with merchants in Mustiece Province?”

“We have two, Mr. Laine. One of them is Luck Shopping Center, Mustiece Province’s biggest department store, and the other is Leila, one of Mustiece Province’s best electronic wholesale companies.

“There were also a few smaller businesses who wanted to partner with us but we rejected them.”

Very familiar with the details, Chad immediately relayed the information to Jasper.

Jasper nodded and turned to ask Marlon, “Mr. Bailey, I wonder how your company fares in comparison to Luck and Leila?”

Marlon’s expression turned slightly awkward.

Leila was a wholesaler, so there was not much trade between them. Marlon knew that Leila’s owner was a capable man.

Luck Shopping Center, on the other hand, was a god-level business and hardly anything Marlon could compete with.

“What’s with all this nonsense? How my company fares in comparison to those two has nothing to do with you,” Marlon spat out the words.

Jasper smiled and told Chad through the phone, “Tell them that the person who manages to destroy Prosper Shopping Center within a week gets to sign an indefinite partnership with JW Electronics. All goods will be sold to them at a 10% discount and their share of distribution will be increased by 20%.”

‘Just how trendy are Mellow MP3 players now, you may ask.

‘Well, it has gotten to the point where professional scalpers have appeared.’

Everyone knew that as long as you had a way to buy the Mellow MP3 player, you could easily resell it and earn 200 to 300 bucks of profit.

Mellow MP3 players could become such a hot topic so terrifyingly quick only because of its superior quality as well as Jasper's hunger marketing strategy.

Therefore, the moment Jasper sent word out, competitors in Mustiece Province would instantly begin to take action.

As the target of all this, Marlon's expression changed drastically at Jasper's words and he roared, "What are you doing, Jasper?!"

Not even Marlon's fierce facade could hide the panic in his eyes.

He was well aware that the benefits Jasper was giving out would be too alluring to companies like Luck and Leila.

Moreover, Luck was Marlon's rival. The only reason Marlon's business was still running was that he kept a low profile and stayed away from trouble during the past two years. On the other hand, Luck was busy developing further and did not have time to waste fighting Prosper.

However, there was nothing stopping Luck anymore. Not with the temptation of making a hefty profit and the fact that getting rid of Prosper meant that Luck could take Prosper's market share as well.

Marlon was truly panicking right now.

He did not expect Jasper to be so ruthless.

After hearing a word of acknowledgment from Chad, Jasper then hung up the phone and smiled at Marlon. "Mr. Bailey, with how prominent your department store is, I'm sure you've got quite a few members, right?"

Marlon felt his heart squeeze and he glared at Jasper, growling. "What do you plan on doing?"

Department stores attracted customers to shop with them usually through the allure of memberships. Members tended to have discounts and were given vouchers once they had spent a certain amount of money.

Jasper did not reply. Instead, he chuckled and made another phone call in front of Marlon.

This time it was to Dawson.

There was no need to explain anything with Dawson so Jasper went straight to the point.

"Uncle Schuler, could you have the department in Schuler Supermarket that's in charge of Muestiece Province come up with a plan? As long as customers show proof that they've forfeited membership with Prosper Shopping Center, they'll be given a Schuler Supermarket voucher worth 50 Somer Dollars, available to use at all outlets in the country.

"I'll have the investment company compensate the expenses back to the group when I return."

Dawson did not even ask why when he heard Jasper's request, merely reacting by chiding Jasper mirthfully, "You little brat. Don't give me that compensation nonsense. Prosper Shopping Center, correct? Got it, I'll pass the word."

Jasper hung up the phone and turned to Marlon whose complexion was drained of all color. "Do you still need me to compensate you, Mr. Bailey?"

Marlon was both terrified and furious. Even though he was pointing at Jasper, he was too speechless to say anything.

Jasper had attacked twice. The first attack was harsh and placed him in an extremely difficult position.

The second was even more ruthless, and Jasper would completely screw Marlon over by taking all his members.

One could only imagine the scene of countless members asking to revoke their membership with Prosper and ask for a refund once news got out.

Such a scene was enough to close Prosper Shopping Center down.

“You heard what I said, didn’t you? I will compensate 50 Somer Dollars to every customer that revokes their membership with Prosper Shopping Center. This is quite a substantial temptation and it’ll cost me at least ten million.

“I don’t mind giving someone ten million for free, but I will never allow anyone to steal a cent from me.” Jasper’s tone was indifferent, but his words were cold.

“I’m going to kill you, Jasper!” Marlon roared.

Angry and afraid, Marlon seemed to have lost all rationale and was about to rush over.

Behind Jasper, Julian took a step forward and glared at Marlon.

Any movement from Marlon and Julian would physically instill the concept of respect in the man.

“It’s normal to make a loss sometimes when it comes to doing business, Mr. Bailey. What’s wrong here is you threatening someone to compensate for your losses just because you made a bad decision.” Jasper shook his head.

Just then, Jasper’s phone rang.

Marlon shuddered. He had become afraid of Jasper calling people on his phone now.

The two calls prior had resulted in his business meeting with impending doom. There was no saying if this call would result in the end of his life.

Trembling, Marlon suddenly realized how ridiculous he was. He could not believe he thought he had managed to threaten Jasper with his insignificant contacts in Mustiece Province.

What Jasper just displayed was the epitome of 'having contacts'.

'He only needed two calls to get rid of me.

'Why'd I even threaten him in the first place?'

Marlon was suddenly filled with immense regret. Before this conversation with Jasper, all he was facing was a loss of ten million. He still had his company despite facing a grave loss. Yet now that the conversation was over, it was truly over for Marlon.

Jasper's call had already connected by then.

"The Malibus have arrived. Let's go meet them," Jasper turned to tell Wendy.

The duo left with Julian in tow, leaving Marlon and his lackeys to become pitiful beings who no one could care less about.

Life at the Top Chapter 715

"Mr. Malibu, welcome to Somerland."

Jasper approached to greet Malcolm and his wife Kelly as they alighted the MPV hand in hand.

Malcolm was a middle-aged man in his 40s, and while his features looked stern, his smile was infectious.

“Hello, Mr. Laine. Thank you for having us.”

Jasper turned to look at Kelly and smiled. “And this beautiful lady must be Mrs. Kelly, correct?”

Kelly shook Jasper’s hand politely. “What a young man you are, Mr. Laine.”

Jasper laughed aloud and turned to pull Wendy over to introduce her, “This is Miss Schuler, my girlfriend.”

“Nice to meet you, Mr. Malibu, Mrs. Kelly.” Wendy shook both their hands amicably.

Malcolm looked at Wendy and then exclaimed to Jasper, “What a lucky man you are, Mr. Laine, to have found such a beautiful and distinguished lady.”

“I believe we’re both lucky men in this regard, Mr. Malibu.” Jasper smiled.

He had praised three people in one sentence alone. This was the art of speaking.

From Malcolm and Kelly’s expressions, they seemed relatively happy about it.

The group entered a reserved private room, and Jasper smiled at Mrs. Kelly who was looking around at the interior design curiously. “Since this is the first time you two have been in Somerland, I thought I’d find a place where both the food and interior could represent our culture. I hope it’s to your liking.”

“I already like the interior design,” Kelly spoke with glee.

Jasper smiled and cued Wendy with a look.

Wendy understood and pulled out the gift they had prepared in advance.

“I know you’re from Indiana, Mr. Malibu, just like the superstar Jackson, so I thought I’d get you a signed limited edition collectible album for you. I hope it’s to your liking.”

Taking over Jasper’s gift, Malcolm spoke excitedly, “Oh. This is the 1989 platinum collectible edition! I’ve been searching for it for a long time but couldn’t find it anywhere. Thank you, Mr. Laine, you’ve helped fulfill a dream of mine.”

Wendy was giving Kelly a gift too.

“Mrs. Kelly, this is a gift I got for you. It’s a small handmade panda pendant. Pandas are Somerland’s national animal. I heard you like pandas, Mrs. Kelly, so I hope you’d like this small pendant as well,” Wendy spoke amicably.

Mrs. Kelly was surprised. “Oh my God! I’ve been wanting my husband to go to Criucia Province with me to see the pandas since this is my first time in Somerland. I didn’t think I’d get such a beautiful gift before I saw them. Thank you so much.”

Seeing that the two of them liked their gifts, Jasper and Wendy locked eyes and smiled.

With a great head start, the conversation between the four of them became very joyful.

Jasper had also found out that other than the ability to manage finances, Wendy was also very talented when it came to socializing.

She had made a great impression on Mrs. Kelly at least, and she managed to join the conversation in a way that matched Jasper seamlessly.

With Jasper hosting and Wendy supporting him, the atmosphere at the dinner table was relaxed and jubilant.

Westerners did not have the habit of speaking about business at the dinner table, so Jasper waited until they were finished and were resting in the lounge before he delved into the topic.

Life at the Top Chapter 716

Malcolm was evidently prepared. Before Jasper could speak, Malcolm first gave his stance on the matter.

“To be frank, Mr. Laine, I came to meet you in hopes to change my career. As you know, I’m facing a small issue working with P&G, and I think that a change in my working environment might give me insight into my problems.”

This was the result of leaving a good impression. Malcolm would not have been so quick to speak if otherwise.

Jasper smiled. “My thoughts on the matter exactly, Mr. Malibu. You want a new job and I want a capable COO.”

“Not a CEO? Malcolm frowned and asked. This was not what he understood at the beginning.

Honestly speaking, Malcolm was slightly looking down on Jasper’s company. After all, as far as he was concerned, a modernized private enterprise did not exist in Somerland.

Even if there was, it was incomparable to P&G.

He was already the head of one of Procter and Gamble’s larger departments and there was no reason for him to accept anything less than the role of CEO of another company.

Why would he accept the position of COO?

“Mr. Malibu, my company is still in its initial stages and while there is quite an amount of funds, it has only just been established. I’ll take on the position of the company's CEO, but that will not hinder your authority as the COO," Jasper explained.

Malcolm shook his head and declined. "I'm sorry, Mr. Laine. I thought you would give me the position of COO, or I wouldn't have come tonight. Thank you for hosting us. It's getting late, I should return and rest."

Malcolm then got up and moved to leave.

Jasper tilted his head down to drink his coffee. He narrowed his eyes slightly but did not call the man back.

This moment was key to the game Jasper and Malcolm were playing. If Jasper agreed to Malcolm's whims, then he would be put at a disadvantage for the rest of the negotiation process.

Plus, Jasper refused to allow a professional manager to boss him around in his own company.

This was his company, so he had to have the final word.

Seeing how the negotiation was taking a turn for the worse, Wendy immediately thought of a plan and turned to Kelly, "Are you leaving already, Mrs. Kelly? It's a shame, I was thinking of inviting you to the zoo. We have two large pandas there, a gift from the Criucia Province last year."

Mrs. Kelly was surprised and she turned to tell Malcolm, "Can't you be a little more patient, dearest?"

Malcolm could not help but smile wryly at how his wife was completely at Wendy's mercy.

"I'd like to know about your company's current situation, Mr. Laine," Malcolm told Jasper who chose to sit down patiently in the end.

Jasper smiled and put the cup of coffee down. Then, he spoke loudly, “JW Capital is my parent company, and under it are a few holding as well as wholly-owned subsidiaries. Among which are two companies in the dot-com industry, two in the media and entertainment, one in real estate, and one in electronics.”

Malcolm’s frown deepened as he heard this. He could not help but feel like Jasper was bluffing.

“Pardon my bluntness, Mr. Laine, but you said that you were still in the initial stages of entrepreneurship? Involving your company in so many different industries at the same time makes your company really susceptible to crashing. This is a time where you should focus only on one industry.

“To be frank, I’ve seen many outstanding entrepreneurs who have ended their careers prematurely because they started branching out to other industries. It’s not easy to work in multiple industries, let alone like you, Mr. Laine, dabbling in so many industries at the very beginning. You’re not going to be able to do well in any of those industries.

“If I have to guess... the companies in the other industries you dabble in must all be small, right, Mr. Laine? Or perhaps, they’re just empty shells?”

Malcolm was direct. He was a little pissed about how Jasper got him to take a step back through his wife, so there was no reason for him to back down on a chance to offend Jasper.

However, in face of Malcolm’s words, Jasper only gave a mysterious smile as he sat before him.

Life at the Top Chapter 717

“Mr. Malibu, you might’ve heard of the two dot-com industry companies of mine.

“One of them is called Sena, Somerland’s first web portal.

“The other is Terizone Inc. Its main product is KK, an instant messaging software that currently dominates the most market shares within the country. It has no competitors.”

Mrs. Kelly suddenly gasped and interrupted Jasper.

“Terizone? Oh, their KK software is really nice. I have a KK number as well, their video calling function is just too convenient. Didn’t you register for a KK account too, dearest? And you complained about how their server only exists within Somerland, causing our video calls to lag all the time.

“I remember how you even emailed them and requested that they set up a server overseas as well.”

Malcolm flushed at Mrs. Kelly’s words.

She gave perfect assistance and Jasper could not help but smile.

“Thank you two for your suggestions. I’ll definitely bring it to Terizone’s managerial level and have them pay better attention to this matter.”

Malcolm spoke awkwardly, “Let’s not talk about this one anymore. What about your other industries? If your main business is the dot-com industry, then the development of your other companies in other industries must be rather average then.”

“The media and entertainment industry? One of them is Advent Entertainment Group. It used to be the best film company in Harbor City before I acquired it and more than 60% of Harbor City’s best actors are currently signed under it.

“There’s one more that’s slightly weaker, but it’s still one of the leading companies in Somerland’s media and entertainment industry. It’s called Easy Media.”

Malcolm’s features twitched, and he felt a little embarrassed.

He loved Jackson, so he was more or less aware of what went on in the media and entertainment industry. There had been numerous Hollywood reports about the founding of Advent Entertainment Group, so he knew about it.

He also knew that this Advent Entertainment Group had a very broad domain in Somerland.

As for Easy Media, while he did not know much about it, he could understand that it was to some degree formidable through its relation to Advent Entertainment Group.

“As for real estate, I have JW Real Estates which I founded half a year ago. As of now, we’re about to finish the Southface River Project in Nauritus City. Once the project is done, it’ll become the benchmark model for renovation in the other cities of Somerland.

“There’s another project still in its planning stage and that’s the construction of the world’s first skyscraper in Waterhoof City. It’s designed to reach a height of 650 meters and it’s been passed to Morgan’s team in Gensler Design and Architecture Firm. The actual design sketch should be completed soon and I’m estimating an investment of around 16 billion Somer Dollars.”

Malcolm’s eyes widened in disbelief.

Had he not done some digging on Jasper and found out that he was an exceptionally outstanding man, Malcolm would have mistaken him for a madman or a conman.

After all, all the companies that Jasper listed held formidable positions in their respective industries. These were companies that normal people might not even own after slaving their entire life away.

Yet Jasper claimed that they were all his properties.

‘Just how wealthy is Jasper?’

Malcolm could not believe that all this belonged to this young man in his 20s who was sitting in front of him.

Jasper ignored Malcolm who was deep in thought and continued to speak.

“As for the electronics company, it’s the newest one and therefore the smallest. The company currently has one product only.”

At that, Malcolm finally let out a sigh of relief.

‘Thank goodness. So it seems that there are still industries that Jasper can’t tackle. It’s only one product and the smallest business among the rest. How formidable could it be?’

Malcolm thought that perhaps not all dignity was lost.

“It’s a product called Mellow, an improved version of the MP3 player. We have full patent ownership over it and it’s currently the best-selling MP3 player within Somerland. I have plans to export Mellow and sell it overseas, but I’m still contacting sales channels.”

Malcolm was utterly stunned by Jasper’s words.

'I thought you said it was the smallest business?

'I thought you said you only had one product?

'Why are all of your products earth-shattering innovations?'

Malcolm flushed in embarrassment when he thought about how he had taunted Jasper earlier.

Jasper took in the change in Malcolm's expression. He felt proud, but he made sure his expression was one of exhaustion.

"These are all my current businesses, Mr. Malibu. You're right, it's not easy broadening my spectrum and working in multiple industries. I'm exhausted and I need someone to help take some pressure off."

Thank goodness that Malcolm was a foreigner who did not understand archaic Somerish, or he would have immediately thought of the saying, 'The mouth parts, and in its place is utter gibberish.'

Everyone around the world desired this kind of exhaustion yet not many people could achieve it.

Smiling frigidly, Malcolm suddenly wondered if he was qualified to be the CEO of such a company.

Malcolm's heart thrummed wildly in his chest.

While he had worked as a senior executive for P&G, he was only in charge of one single business in the group. JW Capital, on the other hand, was a multi-industrial group, and he did not know if he could do a good job alone.

"You're an outstanding enough man, Mr. Laine. I don't think you need the help of others," Malcolm asked.

Jasper smiled. "There's only so much one man can do, and there will always be things a person does not know no matter how intelligent they are. There is no promise that someone will never make the wrong choice in life.

"Every company in the world is backed up by a hardworking team. A company cannot be run by one person alone, not even if he's the founder.

"I need your intellect and experience to manage my company, Mr. Malibu."

Jasper's last sentence was extremely sincere.

Hesitation appeared on Malcolm's features.

"Mr. Malibu, I promise that as long as you wish to take the position of COO in JW Capital, you'll be paid double of what P&G pays you now. And like the treatment given to the other senior executives, you'll also enjoy annual company dividends."

Jasper gave his condition.

Malcolm waved his hand and smiled. "To be frank, Mr. Laine, I've saved quite a bit from working all these years so I'm hoping to look for a more suitable platform for myself..."

"You will have the highest authority, and I promise that as long as you do not compromise the company's major interests, I will not interfere with your decision." Jasper showed his hand.

Malcolm looked at Jasper in shock and exclaimed, "Mr. Laine, are you sure? You have to know that no one's ever given a professional manager so much authority before."

"There's a saying here in Somerland. To only hire the trustworthy, and to trust the hired. Plus..." Jasper smiled. "Those people you talk about aren't me."

“Alright then! I’ll be the COO!” Malcolm shot up excitedly.

Life at the Top Chapter 718

The hiring of Malcolm was an important turn of events for Jasper and JW Company.

In his future autobiography, this professional manager who had worked 25 years under JW Company until his retirement at the age of 70 described his meeting with Jasper as an important meeting that changed his life.

It was only second to marrying his wife, Mrs. Kelly.

To add to the joy, Jasper received good news from Jack the following day as well.

After a few rounds of negotiation, Midas Company had finally agreed to package sell the gaming project, United Legends.

It was not cheap, costing 40 million US dollars.

It cost Jasper all the profits he made from Mellow MP3 players as of late.

Even then, Jack had gone through a lot to get the deal. First, he used his connections with Weresoftware to find one of Midas Company’s shareholders. Then, he spent millions on that man just to get him to agree.

As far as Midas Company was concerned, this was an ordinary game with an average beta testing score from Coreana, so the deal had them profiting greatly from Somerland.

Yet to Jasper, excluding the MP3 business, United Legends would be another source of cash flow. The game would spark the beginning of the online gaming market in Somerland that would eventually reach the value of 100 billion.

Only time would tell who truly profited.

Jack was indeed an exceptional professional manager. He remembered Jasper's instructions clearly.

After buying the United Legends project, he had then taken advantage of the extreme rift between the game's developers and the company due to conflicting reasons about whether to sell the game or not. Doing so, he managed to bring in the better half of the project's technicians to Sena.

As a result, Sena now had the most top-notch and highly sought-after game developers and technicians in the country. This had saved them a lot of time and cost.

After Jack's return, Chad had also successfully managed to cultivate the senior executives who would make up the backbone of the electronics company. He had now arrived to work in the investing company.

Since everyone was around the area, Jasper took the opportunity to send an official notice under JW Capital's name. He called over all persons in charge of the subsidiaries under JW Capital to rush over for a meeting in Nauritus City.

Despite having an abundance of funds, the investment company was still based in the same villa. The office space was a little tight and the meeting room was also just the renovated living room on the second floor.

Despite how pitiful a sight it was, people who knew the power of this company knew better than to look down on JW Capital just because of this.

In the room were Hudson Moore from Terizone Inc, Jack Tanner from Sena, Lance Baldwin who Jasper had approved as JW Electronics' new general manager, Sean Tucker from JW Real Estates, Ryder Lawrence who was the president of Advent Entertainment Group, and Ted Swanson who was the president of Easy Media.

Then there was also the parent company, JW Capital's core decision-makers. Malcolm Malibu, the COO, and the director of the Human Resources Department, Chad Wright.

The group of people filled the meeting room. Every single one of them held formidable positions in their respective businesses.

This was his team.

Including Jasper and Wendy, who was hosting the meeting, there were ten in attendance.

"This is the first important meeting JW Capital is having with the persons in charge of its subsidiaries. There should be ten in attendance and ten have arrived. Would JW Capital's CEO, Jasper Laine, please begin?"

Wendy spoke rigidly and then took her seat.

Jasper took in the shining pairs of eyes directed at himself and smiled. "While this is technically a meeting, it's essentially just a space for us to discuss the problems the companies have faced and their solutions. There's no need to be too tense. This is just a conversation between friends."

Life at the Top Chapter 719

While Jasper did say it would be a friendly chat, the mention of talking about problems faced and their solutions had everyone sitting straight and becoming attentive.

Everyone present was an elite, so they understood the importance of the first formal meeting.

No one else spoke and Jasper continued.

“While the investment company has always been considered the parent company, system and organizational structure-wise, we have yet to make clarifications on the parent company and its various subsidiaries’ functions. That was due to both my negligence and the fact that we were lacking people in the parent company.

“So now with Mr. Malibu and Mr. Wright joining us in the parent company, I believe it’s time to solve the issue.

“Does anyone have any thoughts on the matter?” Jasper asked.

Jack spoke first, “This is great. But Mr. Laine, will JW Capital take this opportunity to change its nature of business, from being a company to a group?”

Everyone was interested in this.

Jasper shook his head. “Not yet, it isn’t time yet. Plus, it’s just a different name. The internal structure will not change.”

Jack nodded and remained silent.

Seeing how no one spoke, Jasper continued, “Then how about I give my thoughts on a solution that I’ve come up with from my conversations with each of you?”

“I plan to completely change the structure in the parent company. I’ll be the CEO while Mr. Malibu will take on the position as COO. He’ll be in charge of the company’s day-to-day transactions. Mr. Wright, as the director of the Human Resources Department, will be in charge of internal affairs and be the link between the parent company and its subsidiaries.

“Miss Schuler will assume the position of the CFO, and I think you all know what that means so I won’t delve into that.”

Hearty chuckles rang out in the room at Jasper’s words.

Everyone knew about Wendy and Jasper’s relationship, so with the knowledge that it was Jasper’s girlfriend watching over their money, no one disagreed.

“In addition, a real estate group will be founded within the company’s organizational structure. Sean will assume the position of president temporarily.

“As well as a dot-com group. Hudson, the situation with your Terizone is a little different since it’s just a holding company under JW Capital and I promised not to interfere with its operations, so Jack will assume the position of president. You can get a position if you want, as vice President.”

Hudson nodded. “No objections.”

Jasper had already talked to him about this and Hudson could not ask for better.

Nodding, Jasper continued, “Then the entertainment and media group. Ryder, you’ll assume the position as president, and Ted, vice president.

“Next, the electronics group. Chad, you’ll be the president concurrently and Lance will be vice president. But considering how Chad is in charge of quite a bit of business, you’ll oversee the daily business, Lance. Just make sure to ask Chad for his opinion for bigger projects.”

Lance, who had just joined JW Electronics, was shaken from the attention. “I understand, Mr. Laine. I’ll do my best.”

Smiling, Jasper continued, “While the company is undergoing a change in structure with groups through vertical management, there is no change in the workload or type of work you do.

“As I said before, JW Capital will not interfere with the day-to-day operations of its subsidiaries, but any important issues are to be reported to the parent company for approval and issuance. Anyone who dares to go around me on this will be fired.

“I’ll be mean now so we can all do great work in the future. I will not tolerate the breaking of rules that the company has established. If I find you in breach of anything, you will be dealt with strictly.”

Life at the Top Chapter 720

This meeting and company restructure was in truth a chance for Jasper to completely comb through and straighten things in JW Capital and its subsidiaries.

Not only had he clarified the authority and responsibilities of each group, but he had also straightened out the system of forces within the companies.

Now that the companies could work together and complement each other, they had finally taken the form of a strong system.

There were also some more secret changes but Jasper did not plan to tell them.

For example, there was now an investment group within the parent company and Jasper planned to have Jake Cullen in Harbor City be in charge of it. Business would mainly be financial operations.

“The company’s only growing larger with each day and I’m likely to reduce my investments under my own name but do it on behalf of the company instead. This is a very important task and I need you to take it upon yourself.”

Jasper’s words had Jake feeling inexplicably excited on the other end of the video call.

He had not expected his relationship with Jasper to develop to such a degree—from being on opposing parties to him following Jasper’s orders to becoming a core member of Jasper’s company.

“Don’t worry, Mr. Laine. I’ll do my best and follow your instructions,” Jake proclaimed his loyalty.

After all, the benefits of being one of the company’s core employees were evident. All he used to get was a commission from Jasper but things would be different now.

A hefty salary and great benefits, as well as company dividends. There was no better job elsewhere.

“I’ve been hosting meetings all day so I’m a little tired now. If there isn’t anything else, let’s end the call here,” Jasper spoke with a smile.

Jasper had put a lot of thought into whether he should appoint Jake or not. After a long period of observation, Jasper realized that Jake was exceptionally talented in his field and his only issue was that he was a little stingy. Still, that was a small issue.

Jasper knew that he was not perfect, so he did not expect others to be perfect.

“There is something else, Mr. Laine. Did you perhaps offend anyone in Coreana?” Jake’s sudden question had Jasper halting just when he moved to end the video call.

“What do you mean?” Jasper frowned.

“I’m not too sure either, but someone sought me out for intel on you. Quite a few people know about you since the Harbor City market rescue plan and that person seems to be aware of our history. But I don’t think they know how our relationship is now and they asked me about your current situation. It seems like they’re looking to trouble you.

“From what I understand, I think his partner over in Coreana tasked him with this.”

Jasper frowned at Jake’s words.

If there was anyone he had offended in Coreana, then it had to be Jonathan Lang.

‘But does he have great enough connections in Harbor City to get someone to deal with me?’

“Who’s the man who asked you about me?” Jasper asked.

“Also someone extremely wealthy in Harbor City. His name is Fabian Atticus!”

‘Fabian Atticus?’

Jasper felt enlightened now.

This man was rich and as much of a flirt as Bob Lancaster. He only began to keep a low profile after he married the beautiful Miss Harbor City, Roxanne Hart.

However, just because he was low profile did not mean he was truly low profile. He still had ambiguous relationships with young models, and there were rumors about how exciting his gatherings were.

As one of the richest men in Harbor City’s construction industry, there should be no reason for Fabian to be ordered around by someone like Jonathan.

Jasper could feel that there was more than met the eye.

“Alright, I got it. Don’t worry about it anymore, but do tell me if you have any new updates.” Then, Jasper ended the call with Jake.

Jasper gave it some thought and was about to call Henry when the man looked for him first.

“Holy sh*t! I can’t f*cking take this anymore. It’s literally just a small issue and they’re looking for me? I might as well just not f*cking do anything at all and follow them every day like their f*cking nanny or some sh*t!”

Henry began to complain the moment he walked through the door. He was pissed in a way that reminded Jasper of a mistreated wife.

Jasper asked curiously, “I thought the amusement park project was done? What more is there to do than pay them?”

Henry replied angrily, “I’d be free a long f*cking time ago if I just had to pay them. We’ve already checked everything and they’ve passed all the safety measures but my dad just had to say something about the importance of safety, so he got another f*cking team from Harbor City to come check and look for problems.

“Who knows what f*cking drugs those stupid f*ckers took from my dad but they pick on the littlest of issues, oh my God. It was fine until they somehow came up with 36 f*cking things to change. It’s so annoying I’m going to rip my hair out.

“F*cking hell, I’m going to kill every single one of them when I get back to Harbor City!”

Jasper frowned. “They’re just doing what they’re paid to do. The fact that they managed to find problems even when facing pressure from you means there really is an issue. Why would you take revenge after all of that?”

Henry slumped in the chair limply with his legs hooking over the armrests. “I wasn’t actually going to do it. My dad would be the first one to get his hands on me if I actually did it. Argh. It’s so annoying!”

Jasper smiled. “How about I take you out for some fun once this is over?”

Henry's eyes shone and he was immediately energized. He sat up straight in the chair. "Really? Where are we going?"

"Probably Waterhoof City." Jasper leaned against his chair and smiled. "I've got to take a trip to Waterhoof City in a bit. I thought I'd bring you too but you've got to finish things for your amusement park first."

Henry asked confusedly, "The amusement park and your Southface River Project finish at the same time, though. How are you free?"

"I just need to come back on the day of the completion ceremony. It's just for formality's sake anyway."

Jasper then suddenly asked, "Do you know anything about Fabian Atticus?"

Henry scoffed. "Who? Fabian Atticus?"

"That f*cker's the same age as Kayden, he's ten years older than me. We're not close at all, but Harbor City's also very small so I do know a bit about him.

"How should I say this? I wouldn't be surprised if that guy died one day while he was f*cking a woman. Why're you asking out of the blue?"

Jasper narrowed his eyes slightly. "Do you know if he's got any partnerships over in Coreana?"

"You've got to ask my dad about that. But his family is in the construction business, so why would he have partnerships with Coreana? It'd be more believable if you told me he was playing with women there."

Henry's mindless comment had Jasper frowning immediately.

'Now that I think about it, it's not impossible!'

Life at the Top Chapter 721

“But Fabian isn’t your average person. You have to think it through if you want to screw him over.”

Henry’s words had pulled Jasper from his thoughts. Instead of explaining himself, Jasper asked with interest, “I’ve never seen you describe anyone like that. You’ve always been quick to screw someone over if you don’t like them. Why’s it different with him?”

Henry smiled weirdly and leaned over to whisper to Jasper, “This Fabian is crueler than your average person.

“You’d think people like him getting women pregnant is no big deal, right?”

“Well, what these people usually do is have the woman abort the baby and then pay them as compensation.

“But Fabian’s different. This man forces abortion pills down the women’s throats with no care whether they die or not. Some had died before, and one of the women’s family was actually quite a formidable one over at Auma City.

“He killed their daughter, so there’s no way the family wouldn’t make him pay for it. The situation blew up and a lot of people got roped into this to smooth the issue out.

“It’d be fine if this was all there was to him, but as cruel as Fabian is to women, he’s even crueler when it comes to men. Offend him and your fate is more or less sealed. B*stard likes cutting people’s d*cks off and he does it himself.

“We all think he’s a pervert but we keep it to ourselves.”

At that, Henry shrugged. “You’d think perverts like this should be thrown in jail for the rest of their lives but he’s exploited a lot of loopholes in the law before. Everything requires evidence and witnesses back in Harbor City. It’s not that easy.”

“Aren’t you honest,” Jasper commented.

Henry snickered and replied, “Being self-aware is a virtue, isn’t it? This is something I’ve always known.

“But the reason why I told you to try to avoid getting into a conflict with this man is that he made a name for himself through fighting when he was young.”

Now that Henry had begun to speak, he also began gossiping about the horrible things Harbor City’s circle of trust-fund babies have done.

“Do you know why Kayden’s keeping it so low profile now? He used to be as much of a playboy as I am. But Kayden and Fabian fought once when they were my age.

“These are all stories about the previous generation of trust-fund babies, so I don’t really know how exactly they fought but I heard my dad tell me about it. It was a very fierce fight, so bad the higher-ups had to come and placate them.

“It almost became a full-blown war between the Langdon family and the Atticus family. Even the two old masters were planning to make their moves. It only calmed down when the other richest families came out and negotiated the issue. I think my dad was my family’s representative.

“Fabian ended up winning that time and it was a complete win. Kayden almost lost his life after it was over. Since then, the two of them calmed down and kept a low profile. It’s been a decade and I don’t even think the two of them have appeared in the same room again.”

After hearing Henry speak, Jasper had a completely different understanding of Fabian now.

Jasper and Fabian had never crossed paths before, but Jasper was no stranger to Kayden in both his past and current lives.

Kayden was certainly a top-notch capitalist and a business prodigy.

There was no way Fabian would be a match for Kayden if the former was a mere playboy who only knew how to flirt with women.

Not to mention that he had almost taken Kayden's life.

Thinking back to Henry's words, Jasper asked with a weird expression on his face, "Then is Kayden... still whole now?"

Henry was stunned for a moment before he burst into laughter. "What the f*ck, your imaginations are wild! Even if Fabian were crazy, I think he'd still value his own life. There'd be no smoothing things out if he actually cut Kayden's d*ck off.

"Oh yeah, you haven't told me how you two got acquainted," Henry asked.

Jasper rubbed his temples and replied, "What do you mean get acquainted? I don't even know what he looks like. He's the one asking around about me in Harbor City."

Jasper then relayed the situation he heard from Jake to Henry.

"I did end up offending a trust-fund baby back in Coreana, but he wasn't even one of the formidable ones. I'm more interested in how he managed to get Fabian to work for him.

"Not that it's important now. I don't know what Fabian has in mind, but he's going to have to show up sooner or later if he wants to do something. I'll deal with it when the time comes. I'm busy as of late, so I don't have the time to waste worrying about him."

"Alright then. I'll have my people keep a closer eye on Fabian's movements over in Harbor City. I'll update you the moment there's any news," Henry spoke.

Nodding, Jasper got up. "It's getting late so I won't send you off. Get some rest."

"What the f*ck. You're just going to throw me away once you've used me?" Henry complained.

Jasper smiled. "I've been dealing with the company for the past two days and I finally got things done today. I need a good rest or I won't have any energy when I get to Waterhoof City tomorrow."

"We're going to Waterhoof City tomorrow?!" Henry gasped.

"No, I'm going to Waterhoof City tomorrow. You're going to stay here and pass those tests for your amusement park. Then we'll talk about it," Jasper replied.

Henry huffed. "I'm going to call someone to knock those people out and send them on a flight back to Harbor City."

"Up to you." Jasper walked toward the exit of the study. Then, he suddenly turned around and spoke to Henry in a mysterious tone, "Gather a bit of money first. If there aren't any complications, something's going to happen soon and I'll bring you along for some quick cash."

Henry was only interested in food, wine, women, and making money. Among the four, making money took the top spot.

"This is your promise! I want at least double of what I put in or it'll be an insult to your title as the stock god!" Henry quickly spoke.

“Double?” Jasper widened his eyes. “Do I look like an actual god to you? I’d be the richest man in the world long ago if money were so easily made. Why do you think I’m still suffering like this?”

...

The following day, Hudson and the rest who had come for the meeting left. Jasper bade Wendy and Malcolm farewell as well before making his way to Waterhoof City.

The people following him were Julian, the strong man, and Sean, who was in charge of the real estate group.

The purpose of their trip today was to build a Waterhoof City branch company for JW Real Estates.

The real estate company would be in charge of the design for the skyscraper, but the most important thing now was for Jasper to deal with the more than 200 shops in Gold Pedestrian Street.

After all, there was no way Jasper would personally manage the renting process of these small shops, so it was up to Sean’s team to do it for him.

Sean’s eyes widened like saucers when he found out that Jasper had spent more than five billion to become the biggest landlord in all of Waterhoof City.

Life at the Top Chapter 722

“Mr... Mr. Laine, you bought half of Gold Pedestrian Street?” Sean exclaimed in shock.

Jasper smiled. “Not half.”

Sean let out a sigh of relief. It would be too much of an arrogant brag if he told others that half of the biggest pedestrian street in the country belonged to his employer.

“Two-thirds.”

Jasper’s following words had Sean completely sold.

“Property like this is worth keeping, we’d earn a living purely off of rent. Treat this as the future company’s fixed assets. Unless absolutely necessary, don’t touch them,” Jasper instructed.

Sean immediately understood what Jasper meant and nodded. “I understand, Mr. Laine. I’ll watch over these properties.”

Once arriving at Waterhoof City, Sean immediately went to manage the business for the real estate company.

From the forming of the company to the construction of its managerial ranks to the hiring of employees as well as things like deciding how the company would be interior-decorated, it would be several more months before anything was ready.

Sean would have to run between Nauritus City and Waterhoof City for the near future.

Jasper was planning to use this as a chance to test Sean. If he had managed to supervise the final touches of the Southface River project while taking care of matters here in Waterhoof City, then Jasper would consider pushing Sean up the ranks and officially passing the real estate company to him.

All financial decisions, senior executive employment, and final say were in both Jasper’s and Wendy’s hands. Jasper did not care what the people below him thought.

Whether someone was promoted or demoted would be up to him.

Since the investment company's meeting ended and the company's organizational as well as power structure was made clear, Jasper could finally be said to have his forces and team on hand.

In this unremarkable power structure, Jasper was undoubtedly at the very top where he could decide who stayed or left.

Jasper had come to Waterhoof City this time for two things.

First, Morgan's team would be coming to Waterhoof City for the second time and Jasper had to confirm the final design.

Second, Jack's Sena was about to open its online gaming studio here in Waterhoof City. the base of United Legends was decided to be stationed at Waterhoof City and this was where United Legends would make itself known to the public.

The next day after he arrived at Waterhoof City, Jasper saw Grant again.

"We're finally done with our final draft, Laine. I hope you like it." Straight from the airport, Grand no longer harbored the courteousness and doubt he once did. Now, he was filled with enthusiasm.

After all, Jasper's 120 million US Dollar commission fee for a design was the biggest order he had received over the past two years.

Regardless of whether someone was from the east or west, people tend to be very enthusiastic before a large client.

Jasper smiled and shook Grant's hand, he spoke, "I heard that you've fired two designers who've been following you for years over this design?"

Grant shrugged. “We care more about someone’s capabilities over in the west. While I’m great friends with Nathaniel and Alvin, their performance this time was too disappointing.”

“Then again, Laine, your requests aren’t easy to meet either.”

Jasper smiled as Grant complained. “I paid a high commission rate, didn’t I? Then there’s no reason for me not to have high requirements. I didn’t like either of the drafts you sent me remotely. It’s evident that those two designers think of me as a village fool who’s never seen the world before. You understand why I’d be enraged.”

Grant looked slightly ashamed.

He should be the one coming up with the design but he had chosen to be lazy. He thought that if his assistance had managed to hand in two drafts first that Jasper liked, then everything would be great and he would easily earn that 120 million commission fee.

However, Grant had not expected Jasper to scold him furiously through the phone from across the seas after the two designs were sent over.

Jasper had then threatened to end their partnership and look for someone else if their studio continued to treat him like a fool.

Grant had been terrified then and he immediately began to design it himself.

That was how this final draft came to life.

Clapping Grant on the shoulder, Jasper brought the man over the French windows on the highest floor of the hotel. Looking down at Waterhoof City’s river view, he spoke, “Look at this City before you, Grant, what comes to mind?”

Grant did not really understand what Jasper meant but he replied honestly, “Waterhoof City has sent out invitations to the world’s best Design and Architecture Firm when they wanted to design its Pearl Tower before. I came then. It's only been a few years but I have to admit that I've never seen a city develop as quickly as Waterhoof City."

"Waterhoof City can hold a match to any large City around the world now."

Jasper smiled. "Waterhoof City will become one of the world's financial centers in the future, a place just as magnificent as London, as New York in the States, and Eastern Capital in Sunrise Land. Waterhoof City's rapid development will only repeat itself in every other City in this country."

Grant widened his eyes in disbelief as he looked at Jasper. After a long while, he shrugged and replied, "Alright, Laine. This is your country, I understand that you want it to develop for the better."

"Whether you believe me or not Grant, time will prove my words true," Jasper replied calmly.

Then he looked at Grant sternly. "But if you continue looking down on us because you think being in a capitalist country makes you better, you will be the ones making a loss."

Grant thought that Jasper was just attacking him so he shrugged and spoke, "I understand, Laine. Don't worry, I'll make sure you're very satisfied with the rest of our partnership."

As the best architect in the world, Grant was respected everywhere he went, Except, things were different in front of Jasper.

He had to make sure and take care of Jasper's emotions, for his little trick before had shown him that Jasper was not easily fooled.

All of this was because Jasper was rich. 120 US Dollars was enough to motivate ninety-nine percent of the human population to do anything.

Jasper was too lazy to explain himself seeing how Grant did not believe him. After all, these westerners had gotten used to being arrogant, assuming that Somerland was nothing more than a poor and underdeveloped country. It would be another seven years until the Olympics was over before their mindset started to change.

“Let’s look at the design you brought over then. I’ll be mean and keep it real now, that if I find out this isn’t your design, the partnership ends here and I’ll sue you for fraud in that damned New York Court of Law.”

“Somer descents sure aren’t to be trifled... or at least, this Somer descent is truly not a someone to be messed with,” Grant murmured as he stared at Jasper’s back.

Life at the Top Chapter 723

“I’m the chief designer for this project and I had previously gathered 70% of the top designers from our firm to form a temporary group to brainstorm ideas for this project.

“After doing necessary measurements and calculations, we noticed that it’s best to design it at a height of 666 meters mainly because those of Somer descent see this as their lucky number. Somewhere along the six and eight range.”

At this point, Grant noticed a satisfied smile on Jasper’s face before finally breathing a sigh of relief.

He, a top designer in the world, found his aura completely crushed by Jasper without even realizing it.

“Taking into consideration the aesthetic, beliefs, and what we learned from field surveys regarding those of Somer descent, we think that it is vital that we adapt to local conditions. We’ll integrate the design of skyscrapers that have already been constructed and those that are still under construction around the world.

“Waterhoof City is located at the mouth of the Yahaza River, and the majority of the land belongs to alluvial plain, which means that it has a relatively weak bearing capacity. This makes it unsuitable for traditional-style buildings...

“We have decided to go with a dragon shape to form the aesthetic base, using modern architectural geometric engineering to complete the proofing design.

“The main body of the building will be cylindrical and slanting at a 23-degree arc to reinforce the structure, increase wind resistance, and minimize polar vortex impact. 64 auxiliary lines will coil around the cylindrical main body, moving upward in the shape of a dragon...”

Listening to Grant’s explanation and looking at the computer-generated renderings on the screen, Jasper was pleased.

The building shown in the computer was 666 meters in height, with six floors underground and 122 floors above ground. The building was divided into the main body and auxiliary lines that circled upward. On the highest floor of the main building, there was a hollow-out of 40 meters high and 25 meters wide.

When Grant noticed Jasper’s gaze fixed on the hollow-out portion of the rendering, he took the initiative to explain, “Taking the coast of Somerland, a hurricane-prone area, into consideration, high-rise buildings here must be designed to resist wind, hence the hollow-out forms the essence of the design this time around.

“Based on our calculation, the hollow-out can reduce wind resistance by at least 32%. Coupled with the 64 auxiliary lines, I guarantee that it can withstand at least a category four hurricane.”

Although the hypercane along the coast of Somerland had happened in his past life and did not ruin many high-rise buildings in Waterhoof City, Jasper was still very concerned.

After all, the tallest building in the world would belong to him, hence this should be treated seriously.

“Increase the wind resistance level to withstand at least a category five hurricane,” Jasper said.

Grant froze for a moment and hastened to say, “Mr. Laine, even with just one category apart, there’s a huge difference in wind speed. Category four and five are completely different things. Category five doesn’t often happen, so there’s no need to spend a tremendous amount of money to increase—”

“Do as I say, Grant,” Jasper said.

Grant shrugged and said, “Okay then, you’re the boss. I will improve the corresponding design but it’ll mainly be reflected in the materials because to be honest with you, the exterior design has reached the limit of modern architectural theory.”

“I’m very happy with the design.” Jasper gave Grant the recognition he needed the most at this moment.

“That’s the overall design. You can submit it to the relevant departments in Waterhoof City, and once it has been approved, you can then entrust the design institute to draw up a blueprint. Once that’s done, hand it over to me to carry out the construction,” Jasper said.

Grant responded in excitement.

According to the contract, they would be responsible for drafting the design, and once it was approved and the design institute had come up with a construction blueprint, they would have accomplished their task with 120 million US dollars in their hands.

“Don’t forget what I said about increasing the wind resistance level. If my building, the tallest building in the world, collapses because of a hurricane, I’ll sue your company and make you go bankrupt. When that happens, no one will hire you to design anything anymore,” Jasper reminded him.

Grant laughed. “Mr. Laine, you’re insulting my professionalism as the world’s top designer. I will execute your order without a problem.”

“Good.” Jasper got up and shook hands with Grant, saying with a smile, “Get everything done as soon as you can. I’ll be in Waterhoof City for the next two days, so feel free to discuss with me if anything crops up. I’ll be waiting for your good news.”

After sending Grant away, Jasper called Jack.

“Are you in Waterhoof City, Jack?” Jasper asked.

Things were a tad noisy on Jack’s side, but he quickly responded, “I’m here, Mr. Laine, but we’re facing a bit of a problem.

“I sent out an assistant to pacify the United Legends development team earlier and also relayed the message regarding the requirements you told me about to the team, but they seem quite reluctant to modify the game according to your requirements,” Jack said.

Jasper frowned slightly and said unceremoniously, “Jack, you’re an experienced manager now so you’ll take necessary actions to deal with these nitpickers. Do you really need to ask me about trivial things like that?”

Jack let out a wry smile. “Mr. Laine, I wouldn’t have come to you if this were an ordinary issue. That would only make me seem really useless, wouldn’t it? The main problem here is that the development team has now joined hands, banding together like strands of rope. If anything goes wrong, this team that has just been formed may soon be disbanded, so I can't take any rash actions."

Jasper said coldly, "Looks like someone is behind this. Otherwise, why would these Coreanans suddenly adopt a change of attitude after coming to our country?"

"I'm making my way there right now. Are you coming, Mr. Laine?" Jack asked.

"Send me the address. I'll go and take a look," Jasper said flatly.

After hanging up the call, Jack sent an address via SMS in no time at all. Seeing that the location was not far from the hotel, he summoned Julian and they went there together by car.

Sena's development team was receiving pretty good treatment because Jasper took this matter very seriously.

He rented the best office building in Waterhoof City, prepared the best server room, and even the place they stayed in was a four-star hotel.

Later, they would each receive an apartment and live in it for free—provided that they continued working in Sena.

In addition to that, they received salaries that were three times more than what they got in Coreana. Frankly speaking, this was the highest-paid team in the domestic IT industry.

There was not a single decent online game in the country at the moment, not to mention that the online game industry had yet to achieve full maturity.

Though even with the treatment they were getting, someone was still dissatisfied.

They were making attempts to give Jasper trouble.

Life at the Top Chapter 724

Jack had called the assistant in charge of the situation, hence when Jasper got downstairs, he was greeted reverently by a middle-aged man.

“Hello, Mr. Laine. My name’s Terry, I’m the person in charge of the newly-established online game department in Sena. According to Mr. Tanner, I’m in charge of the United Legends project for now.” When Terry saw Jasper, he came forward to introduce himself reverently despite being in his 40s and Jasper in his 20s.

Jasper and Terry shook hands, the former saying, “I remember you. Jack mentioned to me that you’re the senior employee in charge of the Fated Swordsman gaming project that he poached from Gama Corp.”

In fact, Jack had merely mentioned this man to Jasper in passing, but because he often had dealings with clients in his past life, he had an exceptional ability that allowed him to remember people easily. He could remember information after hearing it just one time.

Terry was obviously surprised that his name had been mentioned to the big boss and said in delight, “Yes, I was working in Gama indeed. I’m surprised you know me, Mr. Laine.”

“You’re a capable employee. Work hard and you will have a bright future ahead of you.” After a few polite exchanges with Terry, they walked into the building with smiles.

“What’s the situation now?” Jasper asked in the elevator.

“Sigh, Mr. Tanner brought over this team from Coreana some time ago, therefore their bond as a team is extremely strong. Initially, I planned to place several local programmers in their team to learn from them.”

Jasper nodded upon hearing what he said. Judging from this point alone, Terry was certainly a wise man.

The Coreanans were, after all, from Coreana. Hence, it was impossible for them to work for him with all their heart, hence Terry planned to cultivate Sena’s very own development and technical team. This was a far-sighted move.

“Unfortunately, they vehemently rejected the idea. I think they look down on Somerland’s technicians very much.”

Terry looked miserable. It was clear that he had suffered a great deal in trying to get this to work.

“We don’t have a choice, though. In terms of professionalism, there’s no denying that the domestic gaming technicians are still in the rudimentary stage. They can’t match up to them in any aspects at all and are degraded to nothing in their eyes. Not only are we not allowed to get mad, but we’re also forced to face their rude behaviors with a flattering smile. I’ve never felt so offended.”

Jasper ignored Terry’s criticism and stepped out of the elevator. Before he could step into his office, he heard a loud commotion coming from inside.

“This is simply bullcrap. We shouldn’t have come to Somerland in the first place. Everyone here is a swine. No one knows anything yet points fingers at us telling us what to do. Look at this amended proposal, is this even something that a person who knows gaming would propose?”

“How dare he mess with us when he doesn’t even know what a game is?!”

At this moment, another voice rang out. “That’s enough, Diamonique. Don’t rant anymore. Just throw their amended proposal into the trash can. We agreed that we're just here for the money anyway. If we must work, we can just show them that we don't know anything. They won't have the guts to lay a finger on us anyway."

"Mr. Adams, those of the Somer descent are just plain ridiculous. I can't believe they're actually expecting us to improve the game for them but are giving all sorts of opinions that will potentially ruin United Legends. We must teach them a lesson this time.

"Speaking of which, although Somerland is lagging behind, life over here is pretty comfortable. I can just sleep in the office every day, and when I go back, plenty of women rush at the opportunity to please us after learning that we're Coreanans. Honestly, I've slept with four or five beautiful girls in the past few days.

"Two of them actually expect me to take them back to Coreana. Hahaha."

Diamonique's words triggered tacit laughter from several other people in the office, and they were still laughing when the office door was pushed open. Standing at the far front was Jasper, who wore a blank expression on his face. He was followed by Terry and a professional female interpreter.

Jasper could understand Corean, but Terry and several others in the company could not, hence the female interpreter would help to interpret the conversation.

The Coreanans did not know who Jasper was, but they knew Terry.

They all let out a dry cough and turned around to stare at their computers, pretending to look busy.

Jasper could clearly see that one of them had not even turned on his computer.

Life at the Top Chapter 725

“What are you up to?” Jasper asked, walking up to that employee’s desk.

“Huh?” That man obviously did not expect Jasper to know how to speak Korean. Although he was slightly taken aback at first, he shrugged and replied, “I’m in charge of the numerical values. I was just planning to fix the value.”

“With a pen?” Jasper asked indifferently.

From his voice, Jasper could tell that this man was Diamonique, the man who claimed to have slept with several women.

Diamonique frowned and replied curtly, “What do you people of Somer descent know? Don’t ask if you don’t know.”

“Are the Coreanans so skilled now that they can modify the numerical values without even turning on the computer?” Jasper asked.

Diamonique could not stand the humiliation anymore and sprung up from his seat, flying into a rage out of embarrassment. He said to Jasper, “What do you mean by that? Do I need to report how I work to you?”

“Of course!”

Jasper raised his voice abruptly.

“I’m the one who’s paying the salary of each and every one of you here!”

Jasper's words left the entire office in pin-drop silence. Everyone, including the leader, Mr. Adams stared at him with a contemptuous gaze as though they were staring at somebody with more money than sense.

After hearing what the interpreter said, Terry stood next to Jasper and introduced him, "This is Mr. Laine. He's our big boss."

"So what if you're the big boss? Why don't you try firing us if you're so capable? None of the technicians in Somerland can interpret our codes. You can't do anything without us."

Diamonique refused to give in after listening to the interpreter.

Jasper laughed. "Yes, you're right. It's precisely because our technicians aren't good enough that I have spent a tremendous amount of money to poach you from Coreana."

Diamonique puffed his chest out after hearing those words and was just about to speak when Jasper cut him off, giving him no chance.

"In order to reward you for being absolutely right, you're now fired."

"Huh?!"

Diamonique was not the only one who was stunned. Even Mr. Adams and Terry were struck dumb.

In order to serve this group of men well, Terry had endured tremendous humiliation these days. He thought that Jasper would placate the group because after all, these men were the key to making this game a success. Now, however, Jasper was firing someone as soon as he arrived?

In addition to being surprised, Terry felt a great sense of pride and pleasure.

Sure enough, Big Boss was still the most domineering. He could make whoever would not stop yammering to pack up and leave straight away. He would never indulge these Coreanans who had their noses in the air.

“Terry, get the procedures done for this man immediately. Pay him the necessary compensation, not a single cent less. Once it’s all calculated, I want him to get out of my face immediately,” Jasper roared.

“Yes, sir!” Terry responded in a sonorous voice. This was his first time carrying himself with an air of pride and satisfaction after a very long time.

Life at the Top Chapter 726

Even Diamonique was dumbfounded. He did not know that he would be fired as soon as Jasper showed up.

Although the Coreanans always voiced out their contempt for Somerland and complained that Somerland was underdeveloped and poor, the Coreanans, Diamonique included, were well aware that the urban construction in Waterhoof City was nowhere worse than in Sela.

Even if they were in Sela, so what? Despite living in a big city like Sela, they were nothing but low-level white-collar workers whom everyone viewed with contempt.

Over here, however, they were receiving three times their salaries than in Sela, lived in a four-star hotel, and even managed to attract a bunch of women with their charms.

Here, they had experienced what it was like to be a top dog for the first time ever.

How could they possibly give this all up just like that?

Diamonique regretted it a little and cast a glance at Mr. Adams as though he was pleading for help.

Mr. Adams looked upset because what Jasper did had violated his authority.

Moreover, he could not allow Jasper to sack his own staff in front of so many subordinates as this would affect his prestige in the team.

“You can’t just sack my employee as you like, Mr. Laine.” Mr. Adams stood up and looked at Jasper unwillingly.

Jasper smiled and asked, "You must be Mr. Adams?"

"When you say I can't, are you saying it in accordance with Somerland's labor law or Coreana's labor law? No matter which country's labor law you're referring to, which clause stipulates that a boss cannot fire his employee? I did mention that I'd compensate him, not a single cent less."

Mr. Adams' complexion paled. He looked a little furious due to the embarrassment he was feeling.

In his opinion, Jasper was simply unreasonably punishing Diamonique to teach others a lesson.

He had no interest in discussing the unspoken rules in the workplace, nor about the balance of power. He was dismissing his employees simply because he was the boss. Would anyone be bold enough not to leave?

You had to leave even if you did not want to.

Mr. Adams was infuriated. "If you insist on doing so, then we will resign collectively!"

As soon as he said those words, everyone in the office was alarmed.

None of them expected the conflict to escalate so quickly in just a few sentences.

Diamonique looked at Mr. Adams emotionally. At this moment, Mr. Adams was almost like a beacon of light in his eyes.

He was surprised that Mr. Adams would threaten Jasper by saying they would resign collectively!

'Wussed out now, haven't you?'

Diamonique looked at Jasper triumphantly.

However, Diamonique did not detect the slightest fear or trepidation on Jasper's face. His face remained calm.

It was a terrifying and bottomless calm.

"Okay then." Jasper nodded.

"I can save the compensation money if you resign voluntarily anyway. You can hand in your letters immediately, then."

Jasper sat on the executive chair while nonchalantly speaking.

As soon as he said those words, the Coreanans could not sit still any longer.

Like Diamonique, these men had experienced completely different lives in Waterhoof City for the past few days.

Their extraordinarily high incomes and superior positions in those women's eyes made them reluctant to leave.

Life at the Top Chapter 727

Everyone looked at Mr. Adams with pitiful eyes.

Mr. Adams was caught in a difficult position.

If others were reluctant to leave, then he was even more reluctant. One must know that as the leader of the team, he was the one who received the most benefits.

“Aren’t you afraid that the United Legends game that you’ve spent a hefty sum to buy would come to naught? Without the technical maintenance from our side, you can’t even open beta testing!” Mr. Adams said in a threatening manner, though he was cowardly on the inside.

Jasper laughed. He shrugged and said, “With all the benefits I’m offering you, I can easily hire a group of top game developers from any country in the world to study your codes. How long will it take? One month? Or perhaps two months?”

“Or are you so confident to the point where you think that other developers in the world can’t understand the codes you’ve written? Hmm?”

Jasper’s words turned Mr. Adams’ face scarlet.

It was because Jasper had touched a sore point.

Even though they had put a lot of effort into developing United Legends, its technical content was just average. Otherwise, the EU server leak in the future would not have led to the birth of a large number of private servers either.

An ultra-difficult code was not one that could be constructed by private servers alone.

It even got to the point where ultimately, anyone with a bit of computer knowledge could set up a server with a single click.

Therefore, Mr. Adams knew very well that if Jasper was bent on hiring another team to study their codes, it was not going to be difficult at all.

It was at this moment that Mr. Adams realized that the ability he had been capitalizing on probably amounted to nothing in Jasper’s eyes.

What Jasper said next proved him right.

“You must understand that I was willing to spend a hefty sum to bring you over from Coreana not because I can’t do anything without you, but because you’re United Legends’ original development team and can get this game online in the shortest time possible.

“If you piss me off, though, I can just spend a bit more time and money to get this done. I have no scruples about dumping in tens of millions of US dollars to do this. This bit of money means nothing to me.”

Jasper’s gaze was cold, and his tone was calm. “Therefore, if you want to work here, then do your job according to my instructions. If you don’t, then pack up and leave right away!”

One must never stoop down to these Coreanans.

These were a bunch of contemptible individuals. A polite smile on your face and a slight show of courtesy as proper Somerland etiquette could give these contemptible individuals a chance to ride roughshod over you and trample on you like a doormat.

However, if you gave them two slaps across the face one day and one more slap on the third day, they would be deeply grateful instead.

A prerequisite course that Jasper had to go through as a superior was one that taught him how to exercise control over his subordinates and treat people according to their status.

He should not treat everyone equally and favorably. When faced with Malibu, it was crucial to treat him with all sincerity and honesty; when faced with the Coreanans, he should give them two slaps across the face and launch a kick or they would not behave themselves.

Mr. Adams looked grim. He stood awkwardly on the spot and was itching to swagger away but could not.

He noticed his subordinates avoiding his gaze and knew that if he walked away, then aside from Diamonique who had been dismissed and would come along with him, everyone else would just turn a blind eye.

After all, who would want to go back to their difficult lives as a white-collar after experiencing life as a superior over here?

After a moment's dilemma, Mr. Adams turned around and said to Diamonique, "Diamonique, you should resign yourself and go back to our country."

Diamonique's complexion was pale as he shouted, "You promised to never give up on me, Mr. Adams. You can't do this to me. I'm your most loyal—"

"That's enough, Diamonique!" Mr. Adams frowned and said irritably, "I can't sacrifice everyone's interests for your sake."

Diamonique slumped back on his chair and looked at Jasper teary-eyed, begging him, "I know I was wrong, Mr. Laine. Please forgive—"

Jasper waved his hand, not wanting to listen further.

Terry walked up to Diamonique with a smile and said to this unfortunate victim meant to deter others, "Mr. Diamonique, should I lead you to hand in your letter or do you want to do it yourself?"

Life at the Top Chapter 728

After Diamonique left while looking as pale as a ghost, there was an air of grievous silence lingering in the office.

Jasper looked at a total of eight men in front of him. These eight men were the technical development team for United Legends. Among them, Mr. Adams was the leader.

Even though Jasper's method of deterrence had suppressed their arrogance and helped them understand who the real boss was around here, it was still far from enough to get them to swear their allegiance to him.

However, Jasper did not need them to swear their allegiance to him.

"Diamonique mentioned that he was in charge of numerical values?" Jasper asked indifferently.

Mr. Adams was just about to nod when he abruptly recalled something and hastened to say, "We can fill the vacancy with our own—"

"Mr. Adams," Jasper cut Mr. Adams off with a grin and said, "You have too much on your plate already. Since you're short of one person, I'll send someone in to replace Diamonique, okay?"

Mr. Adams' complexion changed. He knew that Jasper was going to slot in one of his own men into the team.

He really wanted to reject it, but the words that Jasper said earlier were still echoing in his ears.

"Alright then." Mr. Adams submitted to reality.

"Also, since you're responsible for the entire team's technical work, Mr. Adams, I believe it'll be really exhausting for you. I'll assign you an assistant," Jasper said flatly.

Mr. Adams' countenance changed abruptly and he said, "Don't go too far, Mr. Laine."

“I’m thinking of ways to lessen your burden, Mr. Adams,” Jasper said.

Mr. Adams stared fixedly at Jasper and gritted his teeth. “I believe I can handle my own work, Mr. Laine. You’re paying me anyway.”

“So you do remember that I’m paying you, Mr. Adams?” Jasper asked.

Mr. Adams’ expression sank, and he did not utter a single word anymore.

Jasper stood up and walked over to Mr. Adams. Patting the man’s shoulder, he said, “I don’t expect your team to work for me with unswerving loyalty, so don’t expect to seize any form of authority in my company. You should do nothing more than to live a peaceful and secure life.

“Perhaps save some money for a few years so you can start your own business when you return to Coreana, am I right?”

Mr. Adams eyed Jasper suspiciously after hearing what he said.

Sure enough, Jasper’s words had hit him straight in the heart. As a foreigner himself, he had no plans of staying in Somerland forever, let alone work for Jasper his whole life. Therefore, he was bound to leave sooner or later.

Before that, though, he needed to earn enough before going home.

Otherwise, would he not turn into a laughing stock if he brought so many men over yet went home in less than a month in such a wretched state?

“I can fulfill your wishes, Mr. Adams. I’m also willing to look at us as partners and take you as my equal, provided that there’s mutual respect between us. Therefore, Mr. Adams, why don’t you put away your petty schemes? You know I’m not stingy with giving rewards.”

Jasper’s words broke Mr. Adams’ last line of defense completely.

Jasper did not expect these men to work for him with unswerving loyalty; Mr. Adams did not see himself staying in this gaming company in Somerland.

When both parties were clear on that, many things were much easier to manage.

Life at the Top Chapter 729

“I understand. You can send your men over and I’ll explain the United Legends game to them without holding back anything. I’ll also be in charge of the early stages of development and maintenance until the end of our cooperation.”

Jasper snapped his fingers and stretched out his hand toward Mr. Adams, saying, “I hope we will have a great time working together.”

“I hope we will have a pleasant time working together.” Mr. Adams stretched out his hand to take Jasper’s. After putting aside their differences and defenses, he admired the actions taken by this young man standing before his eyes from the bottom of his heart.

It did not take long for him to discipline a group of men, himself included, and tame them as soon as he came in.

He had achieved deterrence, placed his men in the team, and even obtained the technical abilities of his team.

However... Mr. Adams sneered in his heart. So what if Jasper was capable and brilliant? He was the one who had the technology and capabilities, so he had the final say in steering the entire project.

As soon as this thought emerged in Mr. Adams’ heart, Jasper spoke.

“I want you to follow the amended suggestions fully and thoroughly.”

Jasper pointed at the paper in the trash can that Diamonique had thrown earlier.

Mr. Adams frowned. He was against making compromises in his area of expertise. He said, “Mr. Laine, allow me to be frank with you, but those who gave these suggestions know nothing about games. Others aside, how could the so-called money bug even exist?”

“My game has only been tested internally in Coreana. How does this person know anything about bugs when he hasn’t even played the game?”

Jasper knew what Mr. Adams was referring to when he mentioned bugs. This was written out based on the memory of his past life.

In his previous life, when United Legends first released the open beta version, a mega game currency bug appeared. The said bug had caused the economic system in the game to collapse. According to United Legends’ magnitude and design at the time, having a stable and value-preserving economic system was completely doable.

Judging on this point alone, only one online game in the world, World of Warcraft included, had been capable of achieving it.

That game was Netsy’s West Fantasyland.

Jasper would not allow United Legends to fall into the mega hole again.

One must know that West Fantasyland’s stable economic system was the main factor why it was able to remain popular for more than a decade. It supplied no less than ten billion Somer Dollars and a net profit of more than six billion Somer Dollars to Netsy, climbing up to the position as the world’s top three most profitable online games.

Jasper did not explain this, nor did he know how to explain it. He simply said, "Set up the game on the internal test server."

Mr. Adams sneered seeing how hard-headed Jasper was and how he insisted on testing it. Eager to see Jasper humiliating himself, he immediately instructed someone to execute Jasper's order.

The game was set up on the test server in no time at all.

"Alvis Kristen, you're in charge of reproducing the situation where the bug occurs based on the suggestion. I'd like to see which ignorant brat is saying that my game has a bug even before playing it." Mr. Adams sneered.

A young man rushed out and sat in front of the computer. He opened up the client and after logging in, he spread open the crumpled up paper of amended suggestions upon taking it out from the trash can.

Based on the detailed explanation about the bug, Alvis' game character came to a specific storage keeper NPC and keyed in -5,000,000. In front of everyone's eyes, the game currency in the character's item pack did not decrease but instead increased by 5,000,000.

"F*ck!" Alvis cried out in surprise.

"What's going on? Who is in charge of this map's NPC transaction code?!" Mr. Adams shouted in embarrassment after the humiliating event.

"It's... It's me, Mr. Adams," Alvis said with a pale expression, standing up from his seat.

Life at the Top Chapter 730

Mr. Adams gritted his teeth and was itching to kick Alvis to death. He roared in fury, “Go and check the codes immediately and see which part went wrong!”

“And you!”

Mr. Adams pointed at his subordinates.

“I want all of you to go and check your respective parts. If this serious code error had been tested in public and used by the users, it would’ve led to very bad consequences!”

One must admit that Coreana’s technicians had basic professional qualities.

The men rushed back to their seats and began checking for bugs, stealing glances at Jasper as they worked.

They were both astounded and curious, wanting to know who it was who found the bug.

This was a question that was bothering Mr. Adams too.

“Mr. Laine, who found this bug? Is he a Coreanan?” Mr. Adams asked straight away.

Jasper replied indifferently, “I will give you an answer later, Mr. Adams. Since we have successfully proven the bug and loophole, do you think you can execute the rest of the amended suggestions?”

Mr. Adams said while pulling a long face, “Although detecting a bug has proven that the man who made this suggestion is someone with a certain level of skill, I must say that the other amended suggestions he made have shown that he’s a person who knows nothing about games.

“For example, the so-called beginner’s mission as well as the daily missions. Does he not know that doing so would speed up the players’ beginner-stage development and the progress of the game? If the players receive too much in the game, the lifespan of the game will decrease sharply.

“Forget it, Mr. Laine. You don’t work in our industry, so you won’t know what I’m talking about. I think you should summon that person and I’ll teach him how games are developed,” Mr. Adams said arrogantly.

Jasper shook his head at Mr. Adams’ arrogance. It was no wonder Coreana, the country that was at the forefront of the world when it came to high-grade high-precision advanced technology, could only rest on its laurels in the future. The citizens of this country seemed to all have an unfounded sense of superiority.

“Mr. Adams, you must know that abusing the players isn’t the only way a game can shoot to fame. Players must gain something and have something to look forward to. There must be something the players are eager to do in the game at all times.

“Take leveling up for example, or treasure-hunting, or even defeating a much stronger boss. Then there’s also the social systems, take guilds, for example, or sworn brothers—even marriage systems.”

These are all listed down to be added into the game in the amended suggestions. These will get players to linger in this virtual world and make them reluctant to leave, not giving them one boring and tedious thing to do repeatedly the whole time.”

The revisions that Jasper made were all recognized by the market in later generations. Even the world's first online game, World of Warcraft, had adopted these advantages created by the domestic operators.

"If you don't believe me, Mr. Adams, let's make a bet," Jasper said when he noticed Mr. Adams' disapproving gaze.

"Oh? What would you like to bet, Mr. Laine? I don't want to bet money because no one here is wealthier than you," Mr. Adams ridiculed.

"You will follow all instructions in this list of amended suggestions and implement all functions accordingly. If the number of players is less than two million on the day of the open beta testing, then I'll pay you one million US dollars straight away."

Jasper's words left Mr. Adams tremendously shocked.

"Two million?! That's impossible!"

In Coreana, even the most popular game had only recorded hundreds of thousands of online players at a time. Even if Somerland was a dozen times bigger than Coreana, Somerland had almost no foundation in online games. Having 500,000 players was good enough.

"If it's impossible, then why don't you just agree to the bet, Mr. Adams? Perhaps this is the time when I will give you money for nothing."

Life at the Top Chapter 731

Sure enough, Mr. Adams was convinced. He looked at Jasper. “What do I need to offer if you manage to do it?”

Jasper laughed and said, “You don’t need to offer anything as long as you promise to let everyone in your team take two apprentices each.”

Mr. Adams narrowed his eyes at Jasper and said coldly, “Are you trying to acquire our skills in the shortest time possible?”

“That should have been the case from the start, no?” Jasper asked mildly.

“Fine, I’ll take on the bet!” Mr. Adams harrumphed. In his opinion, he was bound to win this bet.

Seeing how Mr. Adams was so full of himself, Jasper remained unruffled.

In his past life, United Legends, which was not well-known at the time, almost went bankrupt from staking everything on a single chance to promote it. How many users were there during the open beta testing?

1.5 million!

It was precisely because of this record that the global gaming industry discovered the massive blue ocean in the gaming scene of Somerland.

At the moment, he had Terizone and Sena, the two largest internet portals. Surpassing the previous record of 500,000 could not be any easier.

What was more, Jasper was confident that the suggestions he proposed would capture the essence of domestic online games, bringing out United Legends' traits even more!

After sending Mr. Adams away, Jasper turned around and saw the look of admiration in Terry's eyes.

"You're so awesome, Mr. Laine. To be honest with you, and you can laugh all you want, but I've been awfully tormented by these Coreanans. But when you took over the situation, you managed to fix and tame them with such efficiency."

Jasper laughed. "It's not time yet. When the open beta testing is released, that's when they will bow their heads in submission."

Terry hastened to add after hearing what he said, "Don't mind me for saying this, Mr. Laine, but I honestly think that it was a little exaggerated when you said that the number of online users in the open beta testing would exceed two million."

"Do you think I will lose the bet?" Jasper asked.

Terry explained hastily, "That's not what I meant."

Though his mouth said no, his expression said otherwise.

"I understand that you want to get the most out of these Coreanans in the shortest time possible and kick them out, Mr. Laine, but you need to do it slowly. Both techniques you used earlier today have achieved very good results."

"Terry." Jasper led Terry to the office and said while they walked, "You need to learn from Jack. Jack never doubts."

Terry was slightly stunned. Thinking that Jasper was just putting on an act for no reason, he laughed dryly. "Yes, yes, I must learn from Mr. Tanner, indeed."

Although he inwardly disagreed, what could he possibly do? After all, he was just an employee and needed to show due respect for his boss' feelings.

Little did he know, within half an hour, Jack, who had rushed over to the company all the way from the airport, said in delight after hearing what Terry reported to him, "If that's the case, we need to speed up the progress and get United Legends prepared for the open beta testing. I find these Coreanans an eyesore as well."

"Mr. Tanner, don't you think Mr. Laine is exaggerating a little too much? When the time comes, not only will he fail to place his men in the team, but he risks paying one million US dollars," Terry said, astonished.

"Exaggeration?" Jack glanced meaningfully at Terry and continued, "You have never interacted with Mr. Laine before, so I don't blame you. But listen, you need to get used to seeing Mr. Laine creating miracles next time. There's nothing he says that he can't achieve!"

Life at the Top Chapter 732

In the next few days, under Jack's lead, Sena began publicizing and promoting United Legends.

This included the servers as well. A series of teams were rapidly formed because Jasper did not stint on using his wealth and power.

As for Mr. Adams, perhaps it was because he was hoping to earn Jasper's one million dollars as soon as possible, he was fueled with energy. He urged the Coreanans to work overtime every day in order to make progress.

As for the promotions, Jasper asked Jack to contact Hudson.

Terizone was extremely supportive. With Jasper's suggestions, they launched the first pop-up advertisement for all KK users.

The advertisement that popped up twice a day had brought unprecedented attention to United Legends.

Before this, the outdated game, Fated Swordsman, was the only game that domestic players knew. This was their first time being introduced to such a huge production.

With Jasper's personal intervention, Sena released United Legends' official website and even posted a video on it.

When the players saw the extremely cool special effects portrayed in the video and the horrific monster boss, they thought this was simply genius.

Therefore, in a very short period of time, Jasper's viral publicity stunt produced excellent results. Almost everyone knew that the open beta testing for a domestic online game called United Legends was about to begin.

This series of actions had attracted the attention of many people in the industry, but none of them knew that a behemoth was gradually rising. They merely paid attention to Jasper using Terizone and Sena, two major internet traffic portals, to carry out his promotions.

The excellent results had left everyone completely amazed.

Even Hudson learned for the very first time that KK had such massive potential when it came to publicity.

"Say, Mr. Laine, if I can sell the pop-up window as advertisements, can you imagine how much money I'll make every day?"

Hudson exclaimed in the video conference.

Jasper laughed. "If you do that, then KK users will start cursing you. Once or twice is fine. Do you think anyone would still want to use KK when a bunch of advertisements pop up every time they launch the program?"

Hudson sighed and said, "I was just saying. Although the Nobile KK business is developing really well, the company is still in urgent need of new profit growth points."

"Do you think I asked you to promote Sena's game for nothing?" Jasper said mysteriously.

Hudson's eyes lit up as he asked, "Do you have any good ideas, Mr. Laine?"

"I plan to take Sena and Terizone's cooperation to a much deeper level and launch a points card business," Jasper told him his plans instead of keeping him guessing.

To date, online payment was still a fictitious concept. Even though Jasper's reincarnation had placed him in an advantageous position, he could do nothing more than to point out that online payment was the general orientation in the future.

Jasper intended to put Sena on the market as the first listed company under JW Consortium. All of Sena's businesses must surpass or outdo all previous businesses. They had to receive the support of capitalists as well.

"Mr. Laine, are you saying that the players will place their order to purchase the points card and we will deliver the cards?" Hudson asked with a frown.

Jasper shook his head. He knew that even though Hudson was a business prodigy, his worldview had been restricted by the timeline they were in.

"What are points cards for? They're nothing more than a series of numbers. Why do you still need to make points cards? It'll make things easier for the players if you just send out these serial numbers online, won't it? It'll also save us the cost of card production."

Hudson smacked his forehead and said in pleasant surprise, "Yeah, in that case, this will be a win-win situation! But how will the payment be made?"

Hudson immediately noticed the key problem.

In truth, the core issue of online payment was the means of payment itself.

"This is one of the reasons why I'm here in Waterhoof City. I'm here to talk to the Industrial and Commercial Bank of Somer." Jasper narrowed his eyes slightly.

"I need the ICBS to give us access to an online banking interface so the users can use their ICBS cards to make seamless payments that go straight to Terizone.

"I will talk to the ICBS management about this in the afternoon. Wait for my good news."

Having said that, Jasper ended the video conference with Hudson with a smile.

ICBS was certainly going to be a hard nut to crack. Jasper needed to handle this with caution.

The best option would be to talk to ICBS' Southeast Province branch. After all, many things would be much easier to deal with when John Jackson, the vice president of Tefa's ICBS, was around.

Though unfortunately, the Southeast Province branch was only a tier-one branch that held no authority to work with Jasper.

The Waterhoof City branch, however, was a special tier-one branch with authority second only to the headquarters. Therefore, Jasper had no choice but to talk to the Waterhoof City branch.

Vita was already waiting at the entrance.

Amidst the greetings from the employees, Vita nodded indifferently as though he did not care.

Though when Jasper's car arrived, a zealous smile broke out on his face immediately. He walked out of the sentry box and toward the car, even taking the initiative to open the car door.

At the sight of this, the branch employees nearby looked at this low-key black business car with curiosity. To see Mr. Layne attaching such great importance to this person, they wondered if a VIP had arrived.

Life at the Top Chapter 733

"Mr. Layne."

Jasper got out of the car and shook hands with Vita who was grinning from ear to ear.

Vita took Jasper's hands with a chuckle and lowered his voice to say, "I will soon be the branch president, Mr. Laine."

Jasper was pleasantly surprised. "You got a promotion? Congratulations! You will have to buy me lunch, you know?"

Vita let out a modest smile and said, "I'm keeping a low profile. They came and talked to me earlier, so I think there won't be a major issue. The official documents have yet to be issued, though, so I can't disclose this to the public yet. As for lunch, sure, as long as you're willing to give me the honor, Mr. Laine, then I can buy you lunch anytime!"

"Speaking of which, I have to thank you for this."

"Oh? Why is that so?" Jasper asked curiously.

"It's all thanks to that plot of land previously." Vita led Jasper into the office building.

"You wanted to talk to the city hall regarding the construction of the world's tallest building on that plot of land, didn't you? The branch received the news the next day itself, alerting the headquarters as well. They knew that I had gone all out to make this happen, so they issued an order of commendation straight away."

"I heard that the head of Waterhoof City Hall even gave a call to the headquarters' boss and told him that our branch had done a great deed that would benefit the country and the people."

Vita said in elation.

A man of his age and status would find it extremely arduous to get promoted. After all, every level presented a massive barrier.

Though thanks to Jasper, he was able to take a big step forward effortlessly. In the future, he would remain in the vice president position to build up his skills for a few years. Then, he would be promoted as president in one of the provincial branches. When he retired, according to customary practices, he would be raised by half a level, serving temporarily as the headquarters' vice president.

This was something he had dared not even think about in the past.

Jasper was equally surprised when he heard what he said. The country was in urgent need of major events to boost national confidence and demonstrate national strength. The previous Olympics was one, and building the world's tallest building was another that was in line with the expectations.

It was no wonder Vita benefited from it as well.

This was a lucrative job in the municipality, what more for an ICBS branch's vice president in a financial center like Waterhoof City.

"You really do need to buy me that lunch," Jasper joked.

"Definitely. I will invite John as well when that happens." Vita chuckled, leading Jasper to his office and making him a cup of coffee.

Vita then took a seat, the smile on his face gradually diminishing as he spoke softly, "I have bad news, Mr. Laine."

Jasper raised his eyebrows slightly as he stared at Vita, waiting for him to continue.

After letting out a wry smile, Vita continued with a slightly awkward expression, "You spoke to me about the partnership two days ago, remember? I conveyed your requirements to the president and two other vice presidents about it. Everyone was pretty delighted about it at first.

"What's more, you're a huge figure in Waterhoof City now. Everyone in the branch is thankful for your contribution regarding that plot of land. So we compiled the documents and handed in the materials to the headquarters but did not expect the headquarters to reject it straight away."

Vita observed Jasper's countenance as he spoke, only to see no changes.

Vita was gradually losing confidence and felt slightly guilty about it.

After all, Jasper had helped him get promoted as the branch's vice president, yet he messed up the first time Jasper asked him to get something done.

Anyone would be upset about this.

Moreover, this was a reasonable and legal partnership. Jasper was not going through the back door or benefiting from him at all.

"The branch in Waterhoof City has the authority to grant me access to an online banking interface, right?" Jasper asked.

Vita chuckled bitterly. "We do, actually. If we hadn't reported it to the headquarters and kept it to ourselves, then it would've been doable. But the problem here is that the president who only initially intended to inform the headquarters did not expect them to reject it straight away. Since this is the case, it will now be inappropriate for us to force the partnership."

Jasper asked with a frown, "Do you know why it got rejected?"

Vita replied frankly without holding any information back, "When things like that are involved, the headquarters will need to have a meeting to seek permission. You know that ICBS' shareholder structure is slightly complicated, but almost all of them are state-owned enterprise holdings... All but one.

"Harbor City Trade Settlement Center!

"This trade settlement center holds 31% of ICBS' shares, making them the third-largest shareholder. Hence, they have a say in making decisions.

"The trade settlement center's representative was the one who opposed this proposal in the meeting. They're pretty firm about it. Mr. Laine, under normal circumstances, state-owned enterprises, especially one with a complex shareholder structure like ICBS, would choose to respect the opinions of major shareholders if they ever oppose."

Jasper finally understood what was going on after listening to Vita's explanation.

This problem might seem complicated but was actually pretty easy to understand.

ICBS' headquarters had held a shareholders meeting specifically about his application and Harbor City Trade Settlement Center strongly opposed it. As such, the partnership was considered to have fallen through.

However, Jasper bore no grudge against Harbor City Trade Settlement Center, so why did the other party oppose it?

Jasper had a feeling that something fishy was going on.

At this moment, Vita's voice rang out. "Mr. Laine, I suggest you find out if there's any misunderstanding between you and Harbor City Trade Settlement Center, especially the aristocrats who hold the shares. They are the ones who have a say in this."

"Do you know which aristocratic families hold the trade settlement center's shares?" Jasper asked.

"I do. One of them is the Half-the-Harbor Langdon family, holding 25% of shares. Then, there's the infrastructure magnate, the Atticus family, holding 24% of shares. The rest of the 51% of shares shouldn't be much of a problem because they're all under state-owned enterprises that can't even beat you. I don't think they'll make things difficult for you on purpose."

The Atticus family!

Jasper's eyes lit up.

He finally knew who was behind this.

Fabian Atticus!

Life at the Top Chapter 734

To be honest, Jasper was disgusted when he found out that Fabian was behind this.

He was sickened by people like that the most. Even when they disliked you, they refused to say it to your face and would instead make a move behind your back, grossing you out whenever they could.

This was as gross as having somebody's snot stuck to your body!

This was uncalled for.

Jasper had not completely run out of options either. He could easily partner up with commercial banks like Pfeiffer and Griffin.

The only thing about them was that their scale and services were slightly limited. These banks generally dealt with businesses more, like corporate loans, deposits, and the like.

They were weaker when it came to personal savings.

Even though things changed in 2020 after Jasper's reincarnation, it was still not enough for these two banks to catch up with the big four banking companies.

Jasper needed the interface to make payments easier for the players. If they were to take a trip to another city just to open up an account with these two banks, then this was simply putting the cart before the horse.

The players might not buy it.

These two options were not entirely out of the question either. The other party was aware of their shortcomings and would not hesitate to partner up with him when it involved a partnership that could promote their personal savings business in the shortest time possible.

Therefore, this was really not a big deal.

Even so, this was still very disgusting. After all, this was someone else's snot, and anyone would be grossed out by it.

"Okay, I will handle this. Wait for my update. I might even need your help when the time comes," Jasper said, standing up.

Vita knew that Jasper was about to leave and stood up with a guilty countenance, saying, "I'll see you off, Mr. Laine. Sigh, I couldn't even get one thing done for you!"

Jasper laughed. "There's no need to take this to heart. I have only myself to blame for not making enough preparations and giving others a loophole to take advantage of me. You have done your best and I will remember that. Let's have a meal together when John is free. I'll host."

Vita said hastily, "Oh, please don't! We agreed that I'll buy you a meal. I'll be the host."

Jasper smiled when he saw how anxious Vita was and did not insist further.

On the way back, Jasper called Jake and requested him to pull up Harbor City Trade Settlement Center's file regarding shareholder structure as well as the internal power structure of this company that ordinary people had no knowledge about.

Jake was highly efficient. Jasper had just stepped foot into the hotel when he received the information.

After turning on the computer, Jasper carefully studied the information that Jake sent him.

Like Vita said, Harbor City Trade Settlement Center was owned by three state-owned enterprises that made up 51% of the shares. Of the remaining 49%, Joe Langdon's family held 25%, whereas Fabian Atticus' family held 24%.

Strangely, despite being the shareholder that held the least shares, the company's power structure leaned uniformly toward Fabian's family.

There were 11 board directors, six of whom were made up of three state-owned enterprises, and three were occupied by the Atticus family alone. The Langdons, on the other hand, occupied only two seats.

According to Harbor City-style state-owned enterprise, state-owned capital only accounted for the controlling rights and decision-making power according to customary practices. The Atticus family had the final say in the company's daily operation.

That explained why Fabian could mess up his plan so effortlessly.

As he looked at the diagram of the trade settlement center's shareholder structure, Jasper lowered his head and picked up his phone. He located a number in his contacts that had never been dialed ever since he saved it and pressed on the number without a single hesitation.

After a moment, the call went through.

Life at the Top Chapter 735

Jasper listened to the slightly startled greeting that came from the other end of the phone and laughed. “Mr. Langdon, are you free to make a trip to Waterhoof City? Let’s discuss a big business that could earn you a conservative estimate of at least one billion dollars. How does that sound?”

...

Thompson Golf Course in Harbor City.

A gold golf ball formed a gorgeous arc mid-air before rolling into a golf hole cup 30 meters away.

“You’re amazing, Mr. Atticus!” A gorgeous woman dressed in tight golf apparel praised Fabian.

Fabian let out a nonchalant smile. He had clearly grown accustomed to such flattery as he said in a lackadaisical manner, “That’s what you said last night too. I’ve always been amazing.”

The woman’s delicate face flushed as she protested coquettishly, “Oh, stop it, Mr. Atticus!”

While walking back to the teeing area, Fabian asked the middle-aged man who was holding his golf clubs for him, playing the role of his caddy.

“Any update on the task I entrusted you to do?”

The middle-aged man hurried forward and replied reverently, “It has been executed, Mr. Atticus. ICBS’ headquarters got back to us today. They have officially sent out the letter of rejection to the Waterhoof City branch today.”

Fabian's face broke out in a grin as he said, "Not bad. Although I have no idea what Jasper Laine is up to, we'll disrupt everything he intends to do."

The middle-aged man responded in an ingratiating manner, "Yes, Jasper is probably still clueless as to who has ruined his plan. He must be so confused."

"What you're doing is ingenious, Mr. Atticus. He might not even know that he has offended you even after all his plans are ruined."

"He didn't offend me, nor does he have the right to offend me. A friend from Coreana asked for my help. Besides..."

Fabian twitched his mouth and continued, "I hate the Laines, or anyone with surnames that begin with the letter L. Those with these surnames are the flies and vermin of this world."

"Keep a close eye on Jasper. If he takes any action, then we'll continue to wreck his plans. Let's see what he's going to do about that. What can he, a Mainlander, possibly do? Raise the roof?"

"We must let him know that he has yet to meet the real bigwigs of this world. He thinks he can rest easy just because he's licking the Laws' boots? If I, Fabian Atticus, want to lay a finger on him, nobody can stop me—not even the Laws!"

"Ask someone to open up my precious bottle of Romani. I'm in a good mood today and a 200,000-dollar red wine would be perfect for such an occasion."

"Yes, Mr. Atticus."

...

The next day at Waterhoof City International Airport. A plane slowly landed.

After some time, Kayden Langdon walked out of the business aisle while dressed inconspicuously and with a rushed look on his face. Jasper, who came to pick him up personally, went forward to greet him.

“It’s been a while, Mr. Langdon,” Jasper greeted with a smile.

Kayden shook Jasper’s hands and joked, “You’re the second person in this world aside from my father who can get me to book an overnight flight with a single phone call. If I find out you’re lying to me about this business opportunity, I’m not going to let this slide for sure.”

Jasper laughed and said, “Is it worthwhile for me to get you to come this far just to play a prank on you, Mr. Langdon? Don’t worry, if I say that there’s a business opportunity, then there’s definitely a business opportunity. Besides, this business is one that will give you steady profits without suffering any losses.”

Under Jasper’s lead, Kayden got into a business car.

Once he sat down, he let out a meaningful smile and said, “When I first came out to do business, my father told me that there’s no business in this world that will give me steady profits without suffering some form of losses unless someone wants to gain even more from you.”

Life at the Top Chapter 736

“If that’s the case, did Mr. Joe also tell you that there’s always an exception, especially in the business field? Although experience is crucial, do you know that it’s taboo to say that experience is everything?” Jasper said with a smile.

Kayden shrugged and said in a breezy manner, “That’s why I’m here.”

Jasper chuckled. There was no denying how extraordinary both father and son were that they were able to become the richest people in Somerland in the future.

On the way, both Jasper and Kayden seemed to have a tacit agreement against talking about business in the car. Instead, they chatted about their experiences just like any ordinary friends and while they were at it, they sighed at how quickly the Mainland was developing.

After the previous evening party, Joe had become the major investor to invest in the Mainland among the four richest families in Harbor City. This was in line with Jasper’s experience in his past life.

In the next 15 years after the year 2000, Joe would have invested more than 120 billion in the Mainland. This was an astronomical amount.

This indirectly showed how jaw-droppingly high Joe’s wealth had expanded in 15 years.

Apart from everything else, at least Jasper now knew that he was not going to get 120 billion even after selling off Joe Langdon.

The pair’s total assets currently stood at around 40 billion.

US dollars, of course.

Jasper then recalled the 16 billion dollar building construction fee he was fretting about and could not help but sigh at how many wealthy people there were out there in the world.

From their conversation, Jasper learned that although it seemed like Kayden had come to the Mainland this time because of a call from Jasper, he was actually interested in several investment opportunities in the Mainland as well. He had already intended to come over and check things out. It did not matter if he departed earlier or later, hence he thought he might as well use this opportunity to show Jasper an adequate amount of respect.

The duo came to the hotel and found a table in an executive lounge. Kayden and Jasper sat facing each other. They both knew that real business was about to begin.

They were both extremely busy men, and every minute wasted could cost them hundreds of thousands of dollars. Therefore, they did not have the time for idle chats.

Jasper leaned on the couch and asked Kayden, “Do you know much about the domestic internet industry, Mr. Langdon?”

Kayden nodded and said, “A little. My family is engaged in the telecommunications business back home. Telecommunications and the internet are mutually dependent derivative markets. Although the Mainland’s telecommunications business is unlikely to be handled by private individuals, I must say that I’m very interested in the internet business.

“In my opinion, the domestic internet industry is a massive market that has yet to be developed. Once it has reached its full potential, it will inevitably shock the world.”

Jasper’s eyes lit up after hearing Kayden’s words.

Sure enough, talking to smart people was easy as he did not need to waste so much of his breath talking.

Moreover, Kayden's accurate judgment of the internet industry had impressed Jasper greatly.

He knew many things thanks to the memories he had after reincarnating, but Kayden was not equipped with such an advantage.

Even so, he was able to tell the huge potential of the internet industry in the future and to do so required an extraordinary vision.

He was just a little unlucky.

In his past life, Kayden had invested 20 million US dollars in Terizone and with the number of shares he had at the time, he waited until the day of Terizone's emergence and surpassed his father's, Half-the-Harbor Langdon, assets to become the new richest man of Somer descent.

This time, however, after making several hundred million in profit, he actually resold it to Naspers.

Thinking about this real-life anecdote, Jasper wore a mysterious smile on his face and asked, "I'm sure you know about Sena, Mr. Langdon?"

Kayden nodded again. "How could I not know about the largest web portal when I'm paying close attention to the domestic internet industry?"

"Sena is mine." Jasper broke the news to him.

Kayden wore a look of astonishment on his face before laughing. "Well then, I must congratulate you for seizing the first opportunity then, Mr. Laine."

Life at the Top Chapter 737

Knowing that Kayden was teasing him for seizing the position in the internet industry which he too, agreed was highly potential, Jasper shrugged and made no further explanation. He continued, "At present, all internet companies are facing the same issue of not earning any profit. I have ways to make Sena profitable, and this will soon be realized.

"Online games."

Jasper took the initiative to explain without waiting for Kayden to ask.

"An online game with more than two million players online at the same time. This same product can create millions of profits for Sena every day."

Kayden was slightly startled. Although he had been paying attention to the internet industry, he did not know much about the gaming industry. Nevertheless, he still politely said, "I'm sorry, Mr. Laine, but I still don't know what this partnership is after we've discussed this for so long. Do you want to partner up with me in online games?"

Ignoring the mockery in Kayden's words, Jasper continued, "When internet companies all over the world are struggling to make a profit, Sena has already achieved over one million dollars of profits per day. That, and it's Somerland's largest web portal.

"If I list Sena on the share market, Mr. Langdon, can you guess how much its share price will soar?"

As soon as the words left his lips, a door had seemingly opened before Kayden's eyes. Under the massive shock, his countenance abruptly changed. He was subconsciously trying to stand up.

“It... It’s going to be a mega bullish share!”

Although the burst of the dot-com bubble had kept every share market investor on their toes, it was still not enough to stop the trend.

The internet was the global trend, and that was an unchangeable fact.

Therefore, internet shares continued to be in good demand.

Nevertheless, investors were smarter now and would merely look for reliable shares to buy.

Gone was the era where one could easily make a fortune by buying a small portion of internet shares.

However, the more this was the case, the more profitable it was for high-quality internet companies as there were only very limited choices where the investment money could go.

Evidently, Weresoft’s shares were breaking new highs every day. How could anyone not see that this company was breaking its daily record of becoming the world’s most valuable company?

This meant that the market investors’ enthusiasm and cash were available, but everyone had learned to be smart and not easily deceived. What they needed most right now was a reliable market to invest in!

Once listed on the share market, Sena, the company that could achieve profitable growth and at the same time own Somerland’s Mainland market might very well turn into the capital market’s favorite company.

“Not bad. Yes, a mega bullish share.” Jasper was pleased with Kayden’s reaction.

If Kayden still could not make out what he was saying even after he had given him so much information, then he might as well just go back home.

“How will our partnership work?” Kayden looked at Jasper with burning eyes, his gaze filled with excitement.

If his predictions were right, Jasper was about to give him money for nothing.

“I will do my best to list Sena on the market and allow you to buy up to 100 million shares via pre-IPO placement,” Jasper said.

“Shares like that are bound to quintuple when trading is commenced. It’s also expected to decuple in the long run. Do you believe me now when I say that you will earn one billion?” Jasper said mildly.

Kayden fixed his gaze on Jasper and repeated, “Decuple? No matter how outstanding Sena is, how can you be so sure that it will decuple in share prices? Shares like that are really rare in share market history.”

“How can I be so sure?” Jasper grinned and stood up slowly, looking at Kayden with glowing eyes.

“I can be so sure because I’m Jasper Laine!”

Life at the Top Chapter 738

Staring at Jasper standing before him, Kayden was lost in thoughts.

He suddenly remembered that this man, who was seven to eight years younger than him, was the host of the Harbor City billion-dollar market rescue plan.

How old was he back then?

How old was he that he was bold enough to preside over a billion-dollar market rescue plan and most importantly, succeed?

Sure enough, backed by such glorious history and coupled with the already strong foundation of Sena, getting the share prices to decuple was not entirely unattainable.

Besides, even if it did not decuple, he would still profit even if it merely sextupled or septupled!

At the thought of this, Kayden suddenly realized that the words Jasper said about 'being so sure because he was Jasper Laine' might seem arrogant but were actually true.

"What do I need to do?"

Kayden was, after all, Kayden. He would not be blinded by the profits presented before his eyes. He knew that Jasper had conditions as well for offering him such a huge benefit.

Jasper smiled slightly and said, "You sure are a sensible person, Mr. Langdon. If that's the case, I won't beat about the bush anymore. You own 25% of shares in Harbor City Trade Settlement Center, right, Mr. Langdon?"

Kayden frowned and said, "Yes, I do. But key state-owned enterprises like that represent half of Harbor City's central bank, so even though I hold a portion of the shares, I can't really do anything with them. I'm sure you know this."

Jasper laughed. "I can't have any ideas about the trade settlement center, of course. What I need you to do, Mr. Langdon, is to use the shares in your hands to propose something for me."

Having said that, Jasper told him all about his partnership with ICBS to gain access to a payment interface.

“Are you setting up an online payment system?” Once again, Kayden studied Jasper carefully. All of a sudden, he realized that as they interacted further, he would eventually find himself underestimating the other party no matter how much importance he had attached to him in the first place.

Online payment was not something that ordinary people would touch.

The cost was too high, and the difficulty level was uncommonly high. Disregarding everything else, the policy itself was tantamount to climbing Mt. Everest. Any approval procedures for this system needed to go through Swallow Capital’s major departments. Those without the ability would not stand a chance at all.

Most importantly, no one knew what the future trend would be like. If things went south, all the money invested would be lost.

Jasper, however, was brave enough to do it.

“It’s just an attempt. Besides, the online payment system is crucial for the upcoming online game Sena is developing. It’ll affect the share prices once the company is listed in the future,” Jasper said.

Kayden came to a sudden realization and immediately flew into a rage out of embarrassment. He said, “You’re setting me up!

“You first lure me in with a huge mouth-watering pancake and then tell me that this pancake isn’t done yet. Now I’m supposed to work for it in order to have a taste?!”

Jasper laughed. “I deserve to be lectured, indeed. There’s no business in this world where you can earn steady profits at all times. The distinction here is that the things I want from you are far less than what you will get.

“This is a challenge for me, but for you, it will be nothing more than using your right as a shareholder to voice out. Besides, don’t you want to subdue Fabian?” Jasper asked flatly.

Kayden fell silent.

Although he was unhappy about this, Kayden must admit that every word Jasper said spoke his mind.

He and Fabian could not get along with each other. Their resentment was deeply ingrained and could never be resolved.

Although it was highly unlikely for them to go so far as to fight with each other, they would not hesitate to use any chance they could get to make the other party suffer just a tad.

Most importantly, it was not really difficult for him to get this done anyway.

It went without saying that he could easily obtain Sena’s 100 million shares via pre-IPO placement in the future.

Life at the Top Chapter 739

This was a good opportunity that would not come by often.

“Count me in,” Kayden said, standing up.

Kayden chuckled and stretched out his hand. “I look forward to our partnership.”

“May we have a pleasant cooperation.”

After a good firm handshake with Jasper, Kayden studied Jasper and said, “I think we can visit each other more often in the future. Although I’m a few years older than you, I rarely have any genuine friends around me. I think we can be friends.”

By saying so, Kayden was showing his recognition for Jasper’s ability, or perhaps he intended to take their friendship to a deeper level in the future.

This was often the case in the business field. Once your ability and power had been recognized by the people around you, someone would then take the initiative to be your friend.

After all, having more friends meant more opportunities. In the business field, making more friends was better than making more enemies.

Jasper laughed. “The honor is mine.”

“You’re too polite,” Kayden added.

After exchanging pleasantries with each other, Kayden left in a hurry.

They were both sensible men. Since they had set their hearts on doing something, they would do so with great efficiency.

After half an hour, Kayden’s words that represented the interests of the Langdons were conveyed from Waterhoof City to Harbor City Trade Settlement Center.

That afternoon itself, the trade settlement center held an emergency board meeting.

During the board meeting, although there were only two board members who supported the Langdons’ suggestion while three board members supported the Atticus family, the Langdons still held 25% of shares!

At the board meeting, six board members representing state-owned enterprises abstained from voting. After two board members representing the Langdons had failed two against three to make their proposal, the two board members immediately called for a general shareholders meeting.

At the shareholders meeting, the state-owned enterprises holding 51% shares abstained from voting, the Langdons who held 25% of shares won, and the Atticuses holding 24% shares lost.

Under the guiding principle that the company's general shareholders meeting was the supreme body, the Langdons' motion was passed.

The Atticuses flew into a rage yet could not do anything about it. They watched as the opinion letter representing Harbor City Trade Settlement Center was faxed to ICBS' headquarters.

That night, ICBS' headquarters held an overnight meeting. At the meeting, Harbor City Trade Settlement Center expressed their support for Waterhoof City's ICBS branch to partner up with Terizone to open up an online payment interface. Therefore, the same application that was rejected the day prior was met with a completely different result: unanimously passed.

The news reached Harbor City first thing itself.

In the villa, a crash was heard. A glass had been smashed to the ground.

Fabian's furious roars echoed in the villa.

"You useless good-for-nothing! I asked you to keep an eye on Jasper. What were you guys doing? Eating sh*t? Tell me, how did those two with surnames starting with L partner up?! Why am I only receiving the news after the general shareholders meeting?!"

Fabian flew into a rage with bloodshot eyes. Everyone in the villa stood in front of him holding their breaths.

Standing among them were the trade settlement center's board members representing the Atticuses' interests.

"Mr. Atticus, the Langdons are extremely firm. They did not even hesitate to call for a general shareholders meeting. This was unprecedented. Now the question remains, what did Jasper use to move the Langdons that they're so supportive of him?" a board member said softly.

"Do you think I need you to tell me that?!" Fabian glared at him. He had seemingly found a place to release his pent-up anger as he slammed an ashtray on the other party's forehead.

Amidst the shrill cries of the board member, Fabian said coldly, "Investigate! I want this to be investigated! That Mainlander and Kayden have worked together to humiliate me. I'll show them!"

Life at the Top Chapter 740

"Here we go! Cheers!"

Jasper and Hudson clinked their wine glasses in midair.

On the morning of the second day after receiving the good news, Hudson—representing Terizone Inc.—officially signed a strategic cooperation agreement with the Waterhoof City branch of ICBC.

Hudson leaned toward Jasper and said with great enthusiasm, "Are online games really so lucrative? We've done so many promotions during this period—if things don't work out, we'll be a laughing stock in everyone's eyes."

Jasper responded, grinning, "This is an absolute 100 billion-grade blue ocean market; its potential just hasn't been fully realized yet."

“United Legends will be our stepping stone to success!”

Hudson had complete confidence in Jasper’s discerning eye. When he heard Jasper’s comment, he immediately inquired eagerly, “Do you think Terizone could do it?”

Hearing this, Jasper immediately recalled his past life. Domestic gamers had described Terizone games through an ad slogan, “No cash, no chance.”

With a light laugh, Jasper answered, “It’s doable. Once United Legends becomes a hit, we’ll talk.”

The domestic online gaming market was undoubtedly a large one, with a market value of over 100 billion dollars. It was absolutely impossible for a single company to monopolize it.

This was the consensus Jasper and Malcolm Malibu had reached after communicating with each other.

They decided to follow Procter & Gamble’s example by establishing more sub-brands.

Most people were not aware that Rejoice and Head & Shoulders—competing rivals in the shampoo market—were actually both Procter & Gamble products!

Their objective was to generate confusion among consumers.

When buying, consumers would frequently choose between these two brands; it was rare for them to consider a third choice.

Similar methods were practiced by Pepsi and Coca-Cola, both of which were brands under the Coca-Cola Group.

The same principle could be applied to the domestic online gaming market. If Jasper could use Sena to acquire 30% of the market, the addition of Terizone Inc. and its vast number of subscribers meant that he could garner at least 70% and above of the entire market!

...

On the second day after the signing of the agreement, Terizone Inc. obtained the interface provided by ICBC with no trouble at all.

Truth to tell, it was rather incredible—the interface was only a string of key codes and an IP address.

Terizone had rushed to set up the completed platform and then had begun intensive testing.

Of course, a few issues had still emerged during the process. After all, this was unprecedented—it was the first time in the country that a bank had provided a private enterprise with access to its internal interface, so there were bound to be some hiccups.

However, these issues were resolved smoothly by technicians from both ICBC and Terizone who worked frantically overtime to deliver the necessary solutions.

Good news had also arrived from Sena. A version of the completed game had been finalized; once it had gone through internal testing, it would be ready for open beta testing at any time.

Jasper, who was in Waterhoof City, had personally gone to try it out, thereby satisfying his obsessive interest in internal testing. After ensuring that the game had been written according to his specifications, Jasper knew it was ready for testing.

“Tonight at 7 pm, we will officially launch the first nationwide free open beta test!”

Standing in Sena's Waterhoof City office, Jasper looked at Mr. Adams, Jack Tanner, and the others present, before giving his order.

There was nothing unusual about his statement. Everyone nodded and made note of it.

His next words, however, threw everyone into confusion as if they had been struck by lightning.

"Have 50 extra server groups on standby. Once the main servers are full, add those extra servers."

Mr. Adams was standing to one side; when he heard this, he was instantly bewildered.

"50 server groups? Are they only for backup?"

To them, what Jasper had requested was overkill. It felt as if they were going fishing by a lake; a packet of bait was obviously enough but Jasper insisted on bringing along 10 elephants.

What were they fishing for—fish or dinosaurs?

"Mr... Mr. Laine, that's very wasteful," Mr. Adams said, furrowing his brow and glancing at Jasper. His manner indicated that he thought this was not worth doing.

"Although I understand Mr. Laine is expecting great things from United Legends, what's the rationale behind 50 backup server groups?"

"We can set up a gaming region with just one server group, and each region will be able to accommodate at least 25,000 players online simultaneously!"

“50 server groups would mean 1.25 million people. To even think of getting 1.25 million people online on the first day of open beta testing? That’s absolutely impossible.”

The entire meeting room went so quiet one could hear a pin drop. Apart from Mr. Adams, no one dared to question Jasper’s decision upfront, no matter how ridiculous it seemed.

Sure enough, Jasper furrowed his brows.

Seeing this, Mr. Adams sneered. Shaking his head, he said to the people next to him in Korean, “Just look—a layman is a layman. He doesn’t even understand the basic concept of numbers, and already he wants to have 50 extra servers. If this were Coreana, we would have been the laughing stock of the country.

“This would only happen with a Mainlander who has never experienced the world beyond his own oyster,” someone next to Mr. Adams commented with a snicker.

“A server group can only host 25000 players?” Jasper found this rather inconceivable.

However, he immediately responded.

It was 2001, and technology was still far less advanced than that of later generations. Naturally, server performances were also very weak.

“If that’s the case, please prepare 70 server groups then,” Jasper instructed.

Life at the Top Chapter 741

Mr. Adams' eyes widened as Jasper said this.

He was about to say something when he noticed Jasper looking over with a smile. "Mr. Adams, do you have any more opinions?"

Thinking about the bet he had made with Jasper, Mr. Adams snorted coldly and said, "It's all your money, Mr. Laine. Of course, I have no objections if you're willing to spend that money. I just hope you won't end up feeling bad when none of the 70 group servers are usable."

Jasper only smiled and no longer mouthed off at Mr. Adams. He immediately announced, "Everyone, please work a little harder today, stick to your guns, and clock in a few extra hours. I'll join everyone in working overtime. Also, supper is on me. I'll get the chefs from Sheraton to whip up something for us. Just make sure everything is done well on your end!"

Cheers filled the entire branch office.

Coming out of the conference room, Jasper noticed Jack's slightly stiff expression as they made their way to Jack's office. He smiled and asked, "Jack, are you nervous? This isn't like you."

Jack laughed bitterly. "Mr. Laine, it might be nothing for you but we've spent too much time and money on this United Legends project. I don't think I'll still have the confidence to continue if this fails."

Patting Jack's shoulder, Jasper said with a smile, "First of all, we won't fail. Second, even if we do fail, that's not important. A loss is a loss. I can still afford to lose this bit of money, and it would be my first time failing so I wouldn't mind having a taste of it."

Jack gave Jasper a blank look before shaking his head and saying with a wry smile, “Mr. Laine, to be frank, what you say sometimes really... makes me want to punch you.”

“Hahaha!”

...

“United Legends is opening soon for open beta testing!”

The news spread across the country in a short period of time.

During this time, it did not matter if one was accessing a web portal or a messaging app, even when they had gone to the internet cafe to surf the internet, there were advertisements for United Legends everywhere.

Countless netizens had already been subtly turned into quasi-online game players. They were curious about the game that had been dominating the internet.

In the year 2001 when domestic games were still scarce, the kind of games that many people played were like Command and Conquer: Red Alert. Although they were interesting, they would still become boring after a while.

There were still none of those huge online multiplayer role-playing games in the domestic market.

Currently, all the players were looking forward to the game’s release.

After the news was released, everyone was trying to gather friends through phone calls and text messaging apps.

The men who had scheduled dates with their girlfriends all had to suddenly work overtime for the time being.

Not only that but students who had unfinished assignments were also suddenly working hard to finish them in one day.

Those who had plans at night were suddenly making excuses for not being able to make it.

At 6 p.m. in the evening, a sea of people flooded the internet cafes across the country at almost the same time. One after another, they sat in front of their computers after switching them on, waiting for it to be 7 p.m.

As they waited, they looked to the right and left only to see that everyone there was waiting for the release of United Legends. At once, they all smiled.

“What user ID are you gonna choose?”

“Which realm do you wanna go to?”

“Are you going for warrior or mage? Or maybe cleric?”

Just like that, they began chatting about the game.

The owner of the internet cafe smiled lopsidedly and began thanking Sena. It was hard to tell the future of such a game but at least for the time being, business was doing well.

Not only did the players have high expectations but other people from the local gaming industry and the internet industry were also keeping an eye on the game.

Sena was the first to venture into online gaming and had received quite a lot of attention because of it. Everyone was waiting quietly for the outcome, to see if this game would blow up in the country.

With the expectations of millions of players, the hand of the clock slowly struck 7 p.m.

“Open the server!”

With an order from Jasper, the first ten group servers were opened.

Mr. Adams and Jack were staring at a computer. This computer had the master control program and could directly observe the load in each server.

“The servers are open and some players have already entered the game.”

“Oh no, the load is too big! The server has crashed!”

These two sentences were said almost at the same time.

At that moment, Jasper’s expression was dark.

“What the f*ck are all of you doing? I told you all a long time ago to pay attention to the server loads! The moment a server reaches full capacity, stop the registration for the current server immediately and open up a new one to redirect the traffic! And yet, you still allowed the server to crash!”

The more composed a person was usually, the scarier they were when their temper flared.

Jasper was usually always calm and composed regardless of who he was dealing with. However, now that he had started reprimanding, no one in the entire office including the group of fastidious technicians from Coreana dared let out a squeak.

In the end, it was still Jack who bit the bullet and said, “Mr. Laine, we had already set a threshold but the traffic at that instant was so large that we couldn’t hold it back at all, so it crashed on the spot.”

Jasper frowned. “Let’s not talk about this now. Start redirecting the traffic and guide the players to the new servers.”

Just like that, the first batch of ten group servers was filled up within the first ten seconds of the launch of United Legends. New players had no way to register for an account and were anxiously tapping on their tables.

However, an announcement was immediately published on the official website, and with that, 30 groups of spare servers were opened in one go.

In any case, the people who were keeping an eye on United Legends let out a sigh because they could already tell that the game would be unstoppable!

Life at the Top Chapter 742

Despite releasing another 30 group servers, they still could not hold back the players' excitement.

Fresh new gameplay, novel user interface, and never-before-seen system; all these different elements were pulling new players in continuously.

Because of that, even the backup servers were being released one after another.

At the same time, the number of individuals going online on all servers was also rising.

From the first 100,000 to 300,000, it then rose to 500,000 and again to a million.

It was already half past one in the morning of the next day when the last of the backup server groups were released.

The opening of a new game region at half-past one in the morning was something that would not happen again in the country in the next few years.

At present, the number of players who were online in United Legends had reached a staggering number of 1.95 million.

A total of 80 server groups were filled to the brim.

Mr. Adams sat down in a chair, his face ashen as he looked at the figure on the computer screen in disbelief. He gulped, feeling that his mouth was a little parched.

A game he created actually had 1.95 million players online at the same time on the first day of its open beta testing. It was not something he had even dared to imagine before this.

However, a miracle had actually happened in front of his eyes.

How many people had been online when the game was tested in Coreana previously?

The figure was not even a miserable 100,000.

However, the game had actually achieved such a sensational result in the Mainland.

This was a matter worth rejoicing, but Mr. Adams could not let himself be happy.

This was because the outcome of his bet with Jasper had now been determined.

Even though they had not reached two million, everyone knew that the 50,000 gap would be easily bridged come morning when traffic would be at its peak due to it being a holiday.

At present, everyone in the branch office was cheering and celebrating.

Jasper had also fulfilled his promise. He had gotten an executive chef from Sheraton Hotel and his team of chefs to prepare a sumptuous supper for everyone.

Not only that, he even gave everyone an envelope packed with a one-month salary bonus.

Who would not like a boss like him?

Even the technicians from Coreana were looking at Jasper with stars in their eyes.

Mr. Adams was the only one who was beside himself.

He could forget about losing the bet, but what bothered him more was that Jasper had probably seen him as a clown since the very beginning.

Mr. Adams stood up and walked toward Jasper. Letting out a long and deep sigh, he said, "Mr. Laine, you've won."

Jasper replied indifferently, "We haven't reached the two million count, you've not lost yet."

Mr. Adams smiled wryly and said, "Mr. Laine, we both know clearly that breaking through the two million count is only a matter of time. There's no need to fuss over that little bit of time."

"Then, do you still plan on fulfilling your promise?" Jasper asked.

Expressionless, Mr. Adams replied, "Consider me won over."

Jasper laughed and said to Mr. Adams, "I'll give you an extra bonus when you leave in the future as long as you properly cultivate talents for me."

Mr. Adams was touched and said solemnly, "Thank you, Mr. Laine, for your generosity. I know what to do now."

Hearing Mr. Adams' response, Jasper felt very satisfied.

Life at the Top Chapter 743

Even though he hated the Coreanans' unwarranted superiority, he needed to wring them of all their skills. By adequately giving them some innocuous benefits, they would then be more obedient in teaching others their skills.

Moreover, Mr. Adams and his group believed that even if Jasper's people picked up all of their skills, it did not change the fact that they would not have any competition in Coreana, so they would not be pressured upon returning.

This was exactly the point that Jasper was also focusing on.

At present, the situation with the entire project was slowly stabilizing and as the night darkened, the players had also begun logging out of the game to rest. After ensuring that there would not be any more accidents, Jasper then returned to the hotel.

Jack and Terry would be on watch for the night just in case something happened.

With them here, Jasper could relax a little.

Jasper waited for a long time after leaving the branch office but Julian still had not arrived with the car. This was the first time something like this had happened. Just as Jasper was about to give Julian a call, he saw the car driving closer from afar.

“Julian, have you been slacking?”

Jasper teased as he opened the car door. However, he was shocked when he realized that there was someone else sitting in his seat.

“Why are you here?”

Jasper asked, pleasantly surprised to see Wendy who was smiling sweetly at him.

Wendy gave him a wink and replied, “Someone had quietly broken the world record for online games, of course, I’d come to sing him some praises.”

Jasper sat in the seat that Wendy had offered him and said with a laugh, “You found out about it too?”

“I’d see ads for United Legends everywhere these few days as long as I was surfing the internet. There are even promotional posters hanging in front of internet cafes by the road. It’s hard to miss.

“I plan to create a character and try it out tomorrow too,” said Wendy.

Jasper said with a smile, “That’s nice. Let’s play it together. We’ll get the tech department to adjust the game level for us and then we can go get married.”

“As if.” Wendy retorted with a blush, “Aren’t you afraid of the players finding out about you throwing your weight around?”

“It’s no big deal. I can just ask them to set up an internal server for the two of us,” Jasper said with a smile.

“Good for you.” Wendy leaned her head on Jasper’s shoulder and said, “I heard from Julian that you haven’t been sleeping before three in the morning these days. Look, it’s already half-past two now.”

“I was busy,” Jasper rubbed his cheeks, feeling a little tired. “There were many things I had to attend to personally, I had no choice,” he said.

“How about I find you a secretary later?” Wendy suggested.

“While I do need a secretary, I should look for one myself,” Jasper said solemnly.

“Why is that? Can’t I look for one for you?” Wendy asked while feeling confused, her head tilting slightly.

Of course, Jasper would not say that if he allowed Wendy to look for someone for him, she would definitely get a man to become his secretary. Jasper could not stand having a man tailing him as his secretary every day. Julian was enough.

For such a special role as a secretary, it was only fitting that the person should be a beautiful woman.

“My secretary has to be shrewd and capable. They also need to be familiar with the company’s various businesses. How many industries do you think the company is involved in now? Most people can’t handle it all, so it’s better for me to look for one myself,” Jasper explained convincingly.

Wendy understood what he meant and nodded. “You’re right, then you should go look for one yourself.”

Jasper had only just breathed a sigh of relief when Wendy added lightly, “They can only be a man.”

“...” Jasper was at a loss.

“By the way, I came today for something important,” Wendy said seriously all of a sudden.

“What is it?” asked Jasper.

“You’re still shameless enough to ask? You asked me previously to transfer five billion into the account of a real estate subsidiary company and now there’s only two to three billion left in the investment company’s account. There’s no more money...” Wendy said.

Jasper’s expression froze. Was he becoming poor now?

Life at the Top Chapter 744

“Give it one more week at most and we’ll have to pay the balance for the Southface River Project. It’s at least seven billion. We don’t have that kind of money anymore,” Wendy ranted about being poor.

Jasper coughed and said, “About the real estate subsidiary company, it’s the upfront investment fees needed to start the construction of the skyscraper, so it can’t be avoided. As for the rest, I still have money in my Harbor City account but it’s best that we don’t touch that. If we do, our profits will drop drastically.”

Wendy rolled her eyes at Jasper and said, “I already knew that you didn’t have much money on hand. My father will transfer ten billion over tomorrow but we can’t keep doing this. The skyscraper is too expensive, do you really want to build it?”

Jasper nodded and said, “It has to be built. Moreover, the die has been cast now. We have no choice but to proceed with it.”

Besides, Jasper was familiar with the real estate and construction materials market in the future. He knew that a building that could be built with 16 billion dollars now would require at least 20 billion in not even two or three years.

The four billion difference could be used to do so many other things.

“I’ve already paid the down payment for the pedestrian street earlier and as a result, I’m tight on cash...” Jasper said gloomily.

“You’ve pumped all your cash into investment projects.” Wendy’s eyes blazed like torches as she immediately pointed out the cause of Jasper’s penniless state.

Grinning, Jasper said, “This is also the reason why I’m rushing to get United Legends out there. The MP3 players aren’t doing too bad either. We could get millions in profits every day. While it’s not much, it’s going to be a lot of money once it accumulates.”

“But as big as United Legends gets, we still need a procedure to gain profits. Do you have any other plans?” asked Wendy.

Jasper narrowed his eyes and said, “We have to make money with United Legends but its most important function now is to create a good base for Sena. I want Sena to become a public listed company. Once it does, I’ll then be able to cash out huge sums of money from the stock market in an instant, and our problem will essentially be solved.”

Speaking of this, Jasper recalled the time when he had bought Sena before this. Even though it was in retaliation against Dane’s attack on Terizone, he had still planned on merging Sena and Terizone together then.

Looking at it now, however, fortunately they had not been merged.

JW Capital was currently still unable to manage such a large company from a merger. As such, the best solution was to control the two companies at the same time. One as a listed company and the other to preserve the status quo.

Leaving the two companies to perform their duties while keeping the competition was the best way.

“Anyone would also make a wrong decision,” said Jasper regretfully all of a sudden.

Wendy turned to look at him curiously but Jasper only smiled and asked without further explanations, “Why not stay in Harbor City for a few more days this time?”

“I wish. The reason I rushed here tonight was one, I wanted to pay you a visit; two, I needed to confirm things with you personally given that the five billion fund transfer was too big. I’ll head back tomorrow morning once I’m done with the transfer procedures. We’re almost done with the Southface River Project. There’s still a lot to do and since you’re not there, I have to be the one to keep an eye on things.

“Actually, we’ll also be able to recover a large number of funds once the work at Southface River is complete.”

Jasper held Wendy’s hand and said with a smile, “See, your man isn’t a pauper yet.”

...

Wendy had indeed been busy as a bee. She went to the bank early the next morning to carry out the transfer procedures. After that, she immediately got Fallon to drive her back to Southeast Province.

She did not even have time to have lunch with Jasper.

After Wendy left, Jasper then went to the airport.

He was there to welcome someone.

Life at the Top Chapter 745

She was a woman who would be crucial in the subsequent IPO plans for Sena.

Jasper smiled and walked over when he saw the charming Celine again. He had initially planned to shake her hand politely, but she embraced him in a tight hug.

“Tell me you weren’t joking when you said you’re drafting an IPO plan for Sena?” Celine asked, a smile blossoming in her beautiful eyes as she gazed at Jasper.

He took in the woman’s fragrance but suddenly saw the fire that was blazing from Miss Stone’s eyes. Jasper took a delicate step backward as he smiled. He said, “Of course, it’s true. Why would I joke about such matters?”

Celine rolled her eyes at Jasper as she said flirtatiously, “You never know. After all, it wouldn’t be the first time you’ve lied to me.”

Jasper knew she was referring to how he had used his shares to lie to her when he wanted to stop Dane Warren from releasing Sena to the market. He smiled and said, “They were right when they said you should never lie to a woman, they hold grudges forever.”

“Since you knew that women held grudges, you should have long since made up for the losses I suffered from your deception,” Celine said as she walked out of the airport with Jasper.

As Celine spoke, she ran a careless hand through her hair. Her femininity and charm caused the eyes of several tourists to widen.

“Well, aren’t I here now?” Jasper laughed and said.

Celine gave Jasper a meaningful look as she said, “I’m the one who traveled all the way to you, alright?”

Sensing how the conversation was turning flirtatious, Jasper hurriedly changed the topic and said, “Do you have any plans regarding the collaboration I mentioned earlier?”

Celine replied, "It's still in the evaluation stages now, and I haven't formally submitted it yet. You must remember that I'm only the general manager. The president, William, has more power than I do. He has always remembered you."

"Please make sure this doesn't fall into his hands, or else we'll be done for," Jasper said jokingly.

"I'll help you keep it a secret," Celine said as she laughed lightly.

As the two spoke, they did not notice the look that flashed through Miss Stone's eyes when she heard what they said.

When they reached the hotel, Jasper and Celine sat down in the same club lounge and seats that Jasper and Kayden had sat in before.

"Here's the current situation. The way Sena currently operates isn't that much different from before. The only difference is that the United Legends project has been successfully launched. It currently holds the world record for having the most online users at one time, and huge profits are waiting for me to collect them.

"Thus, Sena is currently even more powerful than it was when Dane came to meet you."

Jasper said as he gazed at Celine.

To be honest, Jasper did not want to be connected in any way to these bloodsuckers if it were not for the fact that foreign companies were required to have a licensed local investment bank as their broker before they could be listed on the Nasdaq Composite.

As one of the four largest investment banks globally, Colossal Investments was well versed in the procedures to help foreign companies begin their IPOs. However, that also meant they did not hesitate to drain one of their money.

Take Dane as an example. Colossal Investments had wanted to take 25% of Dane's shares back when Sena first went public. That seemed highly unreasonable to Jasper.

"Helping Sena go public will be a project that brings in loads of earnings, which is precisely why I'm interested in it. Let me congratulate you in advance. You'll be the next multi-millionaire when Sena goes public," Celine said.

Jasper smiled but did not say anything.

He had long since been a multi-millionaire, alright?

Life at the Top Chapter 746

“As the only internet company that has managed to successfully rebrand itself and gain profits, what do you expect the shares for Sena to be priced at when it goes public?” Jasper asked.

However, Celine shook her head and said, “It’s too early to tell now. There are so many factors that would affect the share price.

“Of course, the most basic prerequisite would be the company’s competence and financial status.

“Next up would be how the company goes public. Colossal Investments will help you get in touch with a bunch of millionaires who make private placements before the share market opens. This will be a great plus for us when the news goes public.”

“I’m already doing that,” Jasper said as he gave Celine a meaningful smile.

“I’ve gotten in touch with the J. Langdons and the Law family in Harbor City. They’ve offered their full support.”

Jasper and Kayden had come up with that plan the last time they met.

News of multi-millionaire Half-the-Harbor Langdon making private placements in Sena would certainly benefit the company.

At first, Kayden had thought Jasper was only letting him make private placements so he would put in a good word for him at the trade settlement center. However, he had not expected Jasper to have more tricks up his sleeve.

They were merely harmless tricks, though.

Thus, Kayden had merely smiled and glossed over it after he learned about it.

Celine was surprised, but she did not probe for further details.

“Alright, it seems like Colossal Investments won’t be earning commissions from you, but that’s alright. Colossal Investments will take care of the entire listing process for Sena, including the promotional activities in America.

“How many shares are you willing to put up as shares outstanding?”

Shares that were bought, sold, and traded on the share market were known as shares outstanding. These shares would be diluted before a company went public.

As Sena’s only investor, Jasper had complete say in whether he wanted to put up 10% or 50%.

The higher the number of shares, the higher the number of stocks, and the lower the price per share. However, this had nothing to do with the company’s total market value after it was listed. Comment by Amber Lee:

@joe.lambsheepmutton@gmail.com

Just like how both one one-hundred dollar bill and ten ten-dollar bills would both total to a hundred dollars.

Jasper had already thought about this, so he immediately answered, “32% shares.”

Celine frowned slightly as she said tentatively, “Companies usually issue at least 40% of their shares as shares outstanding if they want to be listed on the Nasdaq Composite...”

“Listing Sena publicly is just one part of my business strategy. It’s not the entirety of the plan.

“Besides...

“Only I can control Sena! And by that, I mean I will hold absolute control over the remaining 67%. I won't allow anyone to become a shareholder or part of the board of directors and mock me!”

Jasper said without hesitation.

Celine said nonchalantly, “Alright. Your company, your call. Colossal Investments won't make any further comments if you've already decided on issuing 32% of your shares.”

“I'll have my team meet up with Sena and crosscheck figures with the accounting, financial, and general management department this afternoon before we come up with a final evaluation report this afternoon. This report will first be audited internally by Colossal Investments before it's passed to the Nasdaq Review Committee for its final deliberation,” Celine said.

“I'll put a word in with Sena and ensure they cooperate fully with your investigation,” Jasper said as he nodded.

Upon finishing their formal discussion, Jasper and Celine had lunch and enjoyed a pleasant time together.

After that, Jasper was stunned to hear that Celine had booked a room beside his room.

“I was too lazy to book another hotel. Are you not open to having me as your next-door neighbor?” Celine said as she smiled and waved her key card in front of Jasper.

“Of course, you're welcome,” Jasper said with an odd expression on his face. “It's better this way too. We can contact each other easily if there's anything that needs to be discussed.”

“I heard your game is super popular now. Why don’t we go try it out this afternoon?” Celine said invitingly.

“I have another meeting this afternoon...” Jasper was just about to refuse when he heard Celine say, “I can let you have the final say in regards to the amount of commission you’ll receive.”

“Alright, I’ll call on you this afternoon,” Jasper said as he smiled.

“Hah, men.” Celine turned and pranced back into her room after she glanced flirtatiously at Jasper.

Behind her, Miss Stone was gritting her teeth as she glared at Jasper. She said softly, “I’m warning you, don’t even think about laying a hand on her, or else you’ll be in deep trouble.”

Jasper glanced nonchalantly at Miss Stone whom he had never gotten along with. He said calmly, “Can’t you tell that your employer is the one who’s trying to seduce me? Why don’t you try saying something to her?”

Paying no attention to the stony expression on Miss Stone’s face, Jasper turned and walked back into his room.

When Miss Stone finally suppressed her anger and entered the room, she saw Celine sitting on the couch with a glass of red wine. She seemed to be waiting for her as she swirled the liquid in the glass nonchalantly.

“Miss Maynard,” Miss Stone said carefully.

“What did you tell him?” Celine asked with a blank expression on her face.

Miss Stone’s body stiffened as she hurriedly said, “No-Nothing. I just wanted to say goodbye to him.”

“Really?” Celine smiled. She obviously did not believe her words.

She gazed at the liquid that was swirling in the glass. The maroon-colored liquid crashed against the walls of the glass before slowly dripping back down. It was a lovely sight to behold.

“If my husband, who is also your employer, is allowed to have mistresses, why can’t I have a lover?”

“You can very well go tattling to him, but remember that I know about everything you’ve done. Don’t try to anger me, understand?”

Miss Stone’s entire body stiffened as she said shakily, “Yes, understood.”

Life at the Top Chapter 747

The next day, Celine’s team went to Sena’s headquarters at Swallow Capital as well as its branch office at Waterhoof City to conduct a comprehensive review of its accounts, just as they had planned.

Celine had a lot of time on her hands now that everything had been delegated to her subordinates. She dragged Jasper to accompany her to go sightseeing all around Waterhoof City. She was seemingly delighted to have found some time in her busy schedule to let off steam.

The two seemed almost like a couple as they strolled through every road and alley in Waterhoof City.

Although Celine was a woman with beautiful looks and a wonderful temperament, Jasper was not a lustful person. However, he needed to ensure he was on good terms with Celine during a critical time like this.

Thus, Jasper gifted Celine a wristwatch that was priced at six figures. Although Celine teased Jasper about openly bribing her, she later gifted him a tailored suit that was equally expensive.

On the evening of the third day, the two were sitting in a restaurant. Celine swirled her glass of red wine and said to Jasper, "I heard you're planning to construct the tallest tower in the world here in Waterhoof City?"

"Colossal Investments has a great source for insider news," Jasper replied.

Although the project had officially commenced and was about to begin construction, the news was only circulating among a very small circle. It had not been publicized yet.

Celine smiled as she said, "That depends on who the person is. You're one of my most important clients, so it's only natural that I would consolidate more information on you. I gather it's true judging from your reaction?"

"Of course, it is."

Jasper nodded. He did not plan to hide it from her. After all, even if he did not admit to it now, the news would have to be publicized for Waterhoof City's advertising needs in the future.

Since this news would be announced sooner or later, Jasper was willing to share the news with Celine.

Celine's eyes brightened slightly as she said to Jasper, "To be honest, I would be more than willing to assist your parent company in going public. Believe me, you would have secured the position as the richest man in Terra if that business deal went well."

Jasper shook his head, showing his apparent disinterest in gaining wealth through market inflation.

Frankly, he would never have considered putting Sena on the market if the tower project had not caused him to be strapped for cash.

Born into a family of farmers, Jasper had always taken the concept of 'ownership' very seriously. He would never allow the risk of his businesses being out of his control, which was why Jasper had ensured he had total ownership over Sena even as he allowed it to be listed publicly.

"What if Colossal Investments was interested in investing in your company?" Celine asked abruptly.

"The rewards are far greater than you can even imagine. I promise that you'll immediately earn more than ten billion Somer Dollars if you agree to sell 40% of your shares. Moreover, Colossal Investments will absolutely never interfere in your rights to operate and manage the company."

Jasper could not help but smile when he heard these familiar statements.

Had he not said the same thing to 'befuddle' Hudson Moore before?

Of course, all capitalists were equally corrupt.

"Oh? Wouldn't that be giving me money for nothing?" Jasper asked teasingly.

"Of course."

Celine propped her face up with a pale hand as she tilted her head and gazed at Jasper. This posture caused her to look a little less mature and slightly more playful and spunky.

"Colossal Investments would have to send over at least three people to sit on the board of directors. Of course, that can still be discussed..."

“Never mind,” Jasper said as he shook his head. “Miss Celine, I will never consider splitting the rights to my parent company. That’s my bottom line.”

“What a stingy person you are.”

Celine glared at Jasper as she rebuked, “You must understand that the reason so many companies are making it big now is because they’ve received help from the capitalists. How long would it take for a company looking to expand to reach a market price of 100 billion dollars if they do not receive aid from the capitalists? Or are you saying you’re satisfied with owning a company that’s only worth tens of billions of dollars?”

Jasper chuckled as he said, “I’m more of a backward thinker, and my poor background has made me particular about such things. The thing I despise most is people trying to leech benefits from me. Moreover, who’s to say I’ll only have several billion dollars to my name in a year?”

Celine was startled.

True. In her process of researching Jasper’s journey from rags to riches, she had nearly forgotten he had amassed his fortune within a year.

That was not just a shocking fact but a horrifying one.

“Alright, but please let me know if you ever change your mind. Both I and Colossal Investments will always have our door open for you.” Celine smiled elegantly as she changed the topic wisely.

Life at the Top Chapter 748

After dinner, the two returned to their respective rooms. When Celine was done taking a shower, Miss Stone reminded her that the assessment team had completed their report.

Celine immediately sat down in front of her laptop and began reading the report that had just been written.

The team from Colossal Investments always produced detailed, professional reports which an ordinary person might not be able to understand. However, Celine merely needed to skim her eyes through the report to capture the key information.

Sena's main role was in acting as a web portal. It was currently the largest portal within Somerland, and in terms of web traffic, it was ranked first in Somerland, third in Terra, and sixth globally.

Every day, tens of millions of people used the portal to read the news and search for the information they were interested in.

The evaluation showed it had large traffic, a strong base, and a bright future. However, the problem was it was difficult to liquidate and make a profit from it, which was why it was making losses now.

Its secondary role was in online games.

United Legends had already completely taken over the gaming community within the country.

No matter if you were in the gaming industry, the internet industry, or not in either, everyone was surprised at the popularity United Legends had gained.

Within a month of the opening of servers, it had reached a peak of 2.4 million users simultaneously with an average of 2.1 million users online at any one time.

These statistics were what other online games could only dream about.

The steady popularity of the game had caused some who were observing from a distance to become jealous.

According to official announcements regarding payment details that had been put out by United Legends, the game would launch a charging system using point cards the week after the first wave of beta testing was over.

Players would begin being charged 50 cents an hour for every player that surpassed level seven.

If calculations were made based on the assumption a player would be online for four hours a day and that there were two million players in total who had surpassed level seven, then United Legends would bring Sena four million dollars worth of earnings by simply using the points cards charging system!

As for the costs?

The net profit would be 3.58 million dollars after deducting costs such as manpower and server bandwidth.

These were the most professional statistics provided by the assessment team.

Earning 3.58 million dollars a day was a shockingly huge amount in the year 2001.

Even Celine, who had been exposed to such things before, was also shocked at how much money one could make off online games.

As United Legends continued gaining popularity, new servers would gradually be opened to the public as well. This number could only increase and not decrease within the next two years.

Unless the developers fell ill or got themselves into a mess that would ruin the game.

However, based on Celine's understanding of Jasper, there was no way such accidents would happen.

It was not rare for a company to earn 3.58 million dollars a day. At least, Celine knew of several large corporations that could do so.

However, the problem was that this was an internet company. While countless internet companies across the world fretted over how they could cut their losses, Jasper was leading Sena to a point where they could make several million dollars a day.

That was great news to Sena when they were going to be listed publicly.

At the very end of the report, a grade of S+ had been given.

According to Colossal Investment's rubrics, this was only given to companies that had the most potential to expand and grow even further in the future.

Celine had worked in Colossal Investments for a long time, but this was the first time she had ever seen the S+ grade awarded.

Miss Stone, who was beside Celine, also saw the report she was reading. She stared at the contents in shock and muttered to herself, "These statistics are horrifying. Could there have been a mistake?"

Life at the Top Chapter 749

“If you’re doubting the abilities of my team, in which there are three chief appraisers with at least 20 years of experience under their belts, you may file a complaint to internal affairs and request for a reassessment saying you do not trust the results of this report. But don’t bring me into this,” Celine said coldly.

Miss Stone said hurriedly, “Miss Maynard, I didn’t mean it that way.”

“I know you didn’t mean it that way.” Celine sighed. “To be honest, I was shocked too.”

Compared to Miss Stone, Celine had even more things on her mind.

Sena was just one of the many companies Jasper had control over. The other ones did not even need mentioning.

His real estate company was about to begin work constructing the tallest skyscraper in the world.

Terizone Inc held rights to the number one instant messaging software, a blue ocean market anyone would drool over. Although it was still difficult to make profits from it now, Celine had a feeling it would not pose a problem to Jasper.

According to Celine’s informants, Jasper seemed to be supporting Terizone in creating an online payment system. Celine’s instincts told her the words ‘online payment’ would be a mighty thing that would shock everyone.

Even his newly established electronics company had managed to dominate 80% of Somerland’s domestic marketplace by upgrading the MP3 to a MP4. Apparently, several foreign merchants had gotten in touch with the electronics company in hopes they could sell the product overseas.

This MP4 product, which was developed based on patented MP3 technology, had attracted the attention of various western capitalists.

Who would have thought a tiny box could bring Jasper earnings of a million Somer Dollars a day?

This was when the market had not been fully utilized yet. If the product were sold overseas and brought about a ripple effect in the future, Jasper's electronics company was well on the way to having a net worth of at least three billion dollars!

Moreover, both the electronics company and Somerland's officials were highly supportive of the idea of selling the product overseas.

After all, it would benefit both the country and its people when a local product was exported overseas.

All these had been accomplished by Jasper alone.

If that was the case, how much money was Jasper's parent company worth?

This was the first time Celine realized she did not dare to even imagine the number.

With a jolt, she realized that both her past self and Colossal Investments had underestimated Jasper's power.

While no one was paying any attention, a tiny business group rooted in Somerland had quietly taken form and would soon expand to become a dominant force in the marketplace. Perhaps... it would even become a financial group in the future!

Could financial groups be formed in Somerland?

Celine shook her head and dispelled all her jumbled thoughts from her mind as she said to Miss Stone, "Contact the headquarters through the encrypted channel. I want to speak directly to President Paulson."

Miss Stone said hesitantly, "But Miss Maynard, if you take the time difference into account, the president might have just woken up..."

"Yvonne Stone." Celine's eyes glinted coldly as she stared at Miss Stone and called her by her full name.

"You seem to be getting more and more ideas lately. Do you think you're in charge of me now?"

"I'll have it done right now!" Surprised, Miss Stone hurried off to fulfill Celine's orders.

The call went through a short while later. Celine entered the study to talk to Paulson, the president and chief executive officer of Colossal Investments. Meanwhile, Miss Stone left the study.

Even as a personal secretary, she had no right to listen to a conversation of such high importance.

As Yvonne left the study, she caught sight of the laptop that had not been turned off yet. The report caused a look of jealousy and hatred to appear in her eyes.

Jasper's appearance had caused Celine to dislike her more and more. Before this, they had a pretty good relationship.

However, Yvonne could now sense that Celine was becoming less trusting of her and was maybe even dissatisfied with her.

It was all Jasper's fault!

A resentful look clouded over Yvonne's eyes as she thought of that. After secretly taking two photos of the report with her phone, she hurried into her room and dialed a number.

Life at the Top Chapter 750

After she entered her room, Yvonne hid in the bathroom. Her call was soon answered.

The person on the other end of the line was a man who spoke in a lilting Somerish accent.

"It's William."

That's right, Yvonne had phoned Celine's direct competitor, William. He also happened to hate Jasper with all his might.

William had always been looking for a chance to attack Jasper, but he was always too far away to have any chance of launching an attack on him. Thus, he could only repress his hatred of being tricked the first time.

Now, Yvonne was handing William a sword.

The sword would also hurt Celine, but jealousy and hatred were enough to drive a woman to do crazy things.

"Mr. William, I believe you wouldn't know that Celine and Jasper are in contact right now. They're planning to list Sena publicly again." Yvonne did not bother beating around the bush.

The other end of the line remained silent for a while. Only the sound of William's breathing that was rapidly growing heavier was heard.

"Which means that Celine was lying to me when she told me two teams needed dispatching to make return visits to some of our old clients. She was actually going to work with Jasper in secret and go behind my back to help him list Sena publicly, is that right?" William's deep voice, which could be heard holding back anger, traveled across the line.

Having such things being done behind his back was already humiliating enough when he was the president, not to mention the fact that he and Celine shared a competitive relationship in their workspace. As for Jasper, the two had a grudge against the other. How could William not be furious when he learned the two were working together while keeping him in the dark?

"The assessment report is already out, and Celine is talking to President Paulson right now. I'll send you a screenshot of the assessment report later. You'll understand everything after you read it," Yvonne said calmly.

"You're Celine's secretary, aren't you?" William asked abruptly.

Yvonne did not confirm nor deny the fact.

"Haha, what a surprise. Celine's personal secretary has betrayed her," William said mockingly.

No matter where you were, you would be looked down on if you turned and joined the enemy.

Yvonne's face turned pale from anger, and she bit down on her lip as she said, "I didn't betray her. You and I just happen to share Jasper Laine as our common enemy. You wouldn't let him have his way, would you?"

William laughed coolly and said, "Sena can stop thinking about getting listed publicly so long as I'm here."

“You’re wrong if that’s what you’re thinking. Sena was awarded a grade of S+ in the assessment report, and Celine has already told President Paulson that. The board of directors at the company’s headquarters will be receiving this report soon. Do you think that you, the president of Terra regional branch, will be able to go against the board of directors’ wishes?”

Yvonne’s cold words caused William to be utterly shocked.

“S+!? How is that possible!?”

“I’ll send you screenshots of the report. I don’t have any reason to lie about this, so if you really want to stop them, you must begin doing so before the board of directors at the headquarters have an official meeting.”

Yvonne hung up the phone after she finished speaking.

Then, she used her phone to send the screenshots of the report she had taken earlier to William’s email. She deleted her call history and the photographs from her phone immediately after that.

Yvonne heaved a sigh of relief after she completed all these actions in fluid movements. She sneered coldly at her reflection in the mirror as she looked at her crazed expression.

‘Jasper Laine, let’s see how cocky you’ll be after this!’

...

The next morning, Jasper stretched lazily as he walked out of his bedroom. When he saw Celine, who was smiling coyly at him as she sat on his couch, his first reaction was to pull his half-open robe tightly around himself.

Life at the Top Chapter 751

“How did you get in!?” Jasper asked in a surprised and awkward tone.

“Your bodyguard opened the door for me,” Celine replied as she smiled.

Jasper turned and saw Julian awkwardly placing a plate of breakfast the server had brought on the table before he immediately turned around and walked off.

“This guy!” Jasper massaged his temples as he said to Celine, “Please wait for a moment while I freshen up.”

Jasper did not bother waiting for Celine’s reply before he turned around and went to the bathroom.

As he brushed his teeth and mulled over the reasons why Celine would be in his room this early in the morning, Jasper caught sight of Celine leaning against the door to the bathroom. She was gazing at him with an amused look through the corners of her eyes.

He spat out the toothpaste from his mouth and said, “Did you come over this early in the morning to watch a man wash his face and brush his teeth?”

Celine chuckled and said, “I seem to hear a hint of humiliation in your voice.”

“Anyone would feel awkward if someone was staring at them the moment they woke up,” Jasper said.

Celine blinked and said, “You’re a guy. I’m the woman here. I would be the one suffering losses if there were any.”

“So, you mean I have to make things up to you?” Jasper asked.

Celine chuckled and said, “Alright, I’ll stop teasing you. I came over so early in the morning because I couldn’t wait to share this piece of good news with you.”

“Has Colossal Investments finally decided to underwrite the IPO for free for Sena after reading the assessment report?” Jasper asked teasingly.

IPO was the abbreviation for ‘initial public offering’. In a few years, this would be a buzzword that every corporation in the country would use while claiming to have earned five years’ worth of money in three years. This would set off a wave of people from the general public gaining financial knowledge through passive ways.

“You must be dreaming. However, Sena did score well in the assessment. The better the grade, the lesser the resistance it’ll have to be publicly listed. Its share price will be higher as well. Isn’t that a good thing?” Celine asked.

Right then, Jasper had finished washing his face and was about to leave the bathroom. However, Celine smiled as she stood by the door, seemingly without any intention to let him through.

“Want to have breakfast together?” Jasper had no choice but to ask as he stood by the door.

“Sure,” Celine answered as she smiled. She had no intention of refusing Jasper’s invitation, but... she still did not move.

“How am I supposed to get out if you won’t let me pass?” Jasper asked helplessly.

Celine blinked and said teasingly, “Hey, are you calling me fat now?”

Jasper huffed quietly to himself.

'If you, a woman, don't mind, what's the point of me caring?'

He squeezed right past Celine's body.

No matter how large and luxurious the presidential suite was, the doors were still standardized. A single person could walk through it easily, but one could not prevent some skin contact if a plump, curvaceous woman was standing in the way.

Jasper had a robe on while Celine was wearing loose, lightweight clothing. The subtle skin contact caused the look in both their eyes to change.

"How dare you!" Celine said upon watching Jasper squeeze right past the front of her body. She turned and stormed toward the dining room.

"I told you to let me through," Jasper said calmly as he sat at the table and scooped up a forkful of eggs.

Life at the Top Chapter 752

Although Celine was complaining about being taken advantage of, her smile never left her face.

She sat relaxedly in front of Jasper. As Julian had only prepared breakfast for Jasper, she reached over to take a sip from Jasper's cup of milk.

When Celine put the cup back down and saw Jasper staring at her, she said, "What, you can't bring yourself to let me have even a sip of milk after taking advantage of me?"

Taking his eyes away from the spot of milk at the corner of Celine's lips, Jasper laughed dryly as he said, "Of course, I can. I can even treat you to a meal every day if you want to."

"Oh, are you hinting that you want me as your sugar baby?" Celine said flirtatiously as she gazed at Jasper.

Jasper marveled at how as a woman, Celine did not even bat an eyelash when she talked about the vilest things.

"Hey, how did it feel just now? I'm much more curvaceous than your girlfriend, right?" Celine said as she snickered.

"Have you always been this open?" Jasper asked.

"Depends on my mood."

Celine then continued carelessly, "But I'm usually much more serious."

Just then, Jasper's phone rang.

Vita Layne was calling.

At this point, Vita's appointment documents had been finalized and he was now serving as the office manager for ICBS' Waterhoof City branch. All this had caused Vita to be in a great mood lately.

Now that the problems of his collaboration with Jasper had been settled, Vita made phone calls to both John and Jasper to invite them to dinner.

Jasper had no plans today and no reason to decline Vita's invitation.

He had just hung up when Celine asked curiously, "You have dinner plans tonight?"

“Meeting up with a couple of friends,” Jasper said.

“Can you take me with you?” Celine asked.

Jasper stared at Celine as he laughed incredulously and said, “They’re my friends from elsewhere, why would you want to attend such events?”

“Why, are we not friends now? Isn’t it normal to introduce your friends to some other friends of yours?” Celine asked.

“Alright, let’s go together.”

...

That night, Jasper picked Celine up from her room.

Used to seeing her dressed in business wear, Jasper was pleasantly surprised to see how she looked dressed in casual clothing.

To be honest, although Celine was beautiful, she did not have the kind of beauty that would cause one to take a second look. In terms of looks alone, Anna and Wendy were gorgeous women who won by a landslide.

However, what made Celine special was how she managed to meld both Eastern and Western culture into her personal aesthetic.

When you looked at her, you could see the elegance of Eastern women and the carefreeness of Western women.

Furthermore, Celine’s training in the most prestigious field in the world allowed her to emanate an aura of confidence and competence.

To put it frankly, she was attractive.

Women like Celine were at least, to men, a weapon that could instantaneously take out anyone between the age range of a teenage boy and wizened men.

Dressed in casual clothing, Celine looked like your average office lady who had just gotten off work. Smiling, she stood in front of Jasper and asked, "Do I look good?"

"Yes," Jasper said sincerely as he nodded.

To be honest, Wendy, Anna, and Celine were all beautiful in their own ways. Moreover, their beauty could not be replicated via artificial means.

Just like how Celine had put on light makeup now that accentuated her features but did not make her look cheap. It made her seem naturally beautiful.

Perhaps she had taken privacy into concern, but Celine was not bringing her personal secretary with her to dinner tonight.

Jasper was glad about that too. Her secretary, Yvonne, always looked at him as if he had killed her father. If it were not for Celine, Jasper would have long since taught her a lesson. It was just as well she was not here. He would have peace of mind.

Following Vita's directions, Jasper arrived at a farm on the outskirts of Waterhoof City.

The surrounding mountains and rivers put Celine in a great mood. As she breathed in the fresh air, she said to Jasper, "Your friend put a lot of thought into this. It wouldn't have been fun if we just ate in a normal restaurant."

"They're all old foxes now and naturally have more experience than us peasants in this regard," Jasper said as he smiled.

As they talked and laughed, Jasper and Celine entered the farm together.

“Mr, Laine, you’ve arrived.” Vita and John smiled as they walked out to welcome him.

However, the two men were startled when they saw Celine standing beside Jasper.

“This is Miss Celine Maynard, who’s also my friend. I invited her along because we both happened to be in Waterhoof City.” Jasper smiled as he made the introductions.

“Hello everyone. I’m not unwelcome here, am I?” Celine had obviously mastered the art of socializing, and she smiled warmly as she spoke in a joking tone.

Vita and John exchanged a look before they both ignored Jasper’s ‘we’re friends’ introduction.

A man and a woman were either a couple or family. How could there only be pure friendship?

“Of course not. It’s an honor to have a guest as beautiful as you, Miss Maynard. I was just fretting over what we three men could talk about.” Ever the social butterfly, Vita hurriedly smiled and replied.

The four of them laughed and caught up with each other. They were all expert socializers and did not find it awkward at all. It only took them a short conversation before they all became friends.

At least, it seemed that way on the surface.

As Vita walked toward the room with Jasper, he whispered, “Mr. Laine, I’ve prepared some good stuff today.”

“What is it?” Jasper asked curiously.

Vita chuckled and said, "You'll find out soon."

"You've only just got your new position, you'd better not get into any trouble," Jasper said meaningfully.

Vita hurriedly waved his hands and said, "How could I do that? I've just got some simple wild game here, nothing huge. Did you think I would engage in any illegal activity?"

Soon, Jasper learned what Vita meant by some simple wild game.

Almas caviar and other equally expensive dishes.

What was more, there was even snake soup!

Jasper thought to himself that there was no saving Vita and John as he watched the two men giggle at the sight of snake soup, which was apparently an aphrodisiac.

Dear God, the entire table was filled with rare, expensive dishes.

Thankfully, there were no endangered animals here although all these dishes were extremely expensive. Jasper would never have been able to eat those dishes.

Life at the Top Chapter 753

"Can't enjoy good food without some good wine." Vita laughed as he took out two bottles of aged brandy and said, "It's all thanks to you that I could advance further in my career, Mr. Laine. Let me give you a toast."

Smiling, Jasper picked up his cup and said, "Cheers to that. Before we talk about anything else, you should first stop calling me Mr. Laine. You're about John's age, and I should be addressing you as an older brother instead. Please, call me Jasper."

"Alright, Jasper, cheers!" Vita's face was bright red as he excitedly clinked his glass against Jasper's and downed its contents.

Jasper, too, tilted his head back and finished the entire glass.

...

"This is the meat of the albino beluga sturgeon, a rare fish which can only be harvested for half a month every year. It's suitable to be consumed by women because it nourishes your body and skin."

Jasper did not give Celine the cold shoulder as they ate. He cut her a slice of sturgeon meat as he spoke.

When he heard that, Vita smiled and said, "Two years ago, a pound of this could be bought for 8,000 dollars. But bear in mind that it was 8,000 dollars back in 1999. Now, there's simply no supply although there's a great demand for it. You can't buy it even if you have the money."

Celine took a bite of the meat. It was tender, fresh, and fatty without being greasy. She said in surprise, "It's delicious."

"I remember seeing lots of sturgeon in the rivers when I was a child. Are they this rare now?"

When he heard what Celine said, Jasper exclaimed in surprise, "You grew up by a river?"

Celine rolled her eyes at Jasper and said, "I'm a southerner through and through, alright? I only left the country when I was in fourth grade, but it's been more than ten years since I've returned to my hometown. I wonder what it's like now."

"There used to be a lot of sturgeons, but overfishing has caused its numbers to drop greatly. A policy was even introduced so now, they can only be caught for half a month every year so they'll have time to breed. It's much better than simply letting the animal go extinct," Vita said.

"A relative of mine back home caught this sturgeon two days ago. It's considered one of the largest ones that have ever been caught in recent years, but he didn't sell it to anyone despite being offered several million dollars for it. Instead, he brought it straight to me."

John stood and served Jasper a bowl of snake soup. He smiled meaningfully as he said, "You should have more of this, Jasper. It has amazing healing properties. All the herbs are aged and harvested from the depths of the forests, which means they have potent medicinal powers."

Jasper took the bowl from him as he said exasperatedly, "I'm still young and strong. You two are the ones who should drink more of this. Don't regret it when you're in your 40s and have weakened stamina."

Men would inevitably end up talking about slightly inappropriate things when they ate and drank together.

John and Vita were both well-versed in such topics. Jasper had initially been worried Celine would not be used to it but was shocked to hear her interjection.

"This stuff only provides a psychological effect. If you actually want treatment, you might as well take two Viagra pills."

Everyone at the table burst into laughter when they heard that.

The awkwardness that had been present because of Celine, who was a stranger, was cleverly defused.

It was a great meal, and everyone enjoyed themselves.

Jasper was extremely satisfied with the meal. The table had been filled with delicious delicacies made from top-grade ingredients by a skilled chef.

It was past ten at night when they finished eating.

It was either the snake soup or the brandy that had caused Vita and John to be slightly tipsy with reddened cheeks. After they left the farm, they giggled as they bade goodbye to Jasper. They obviously had more plans lined up.

Jasper had Celine with him, and it seemed they would not be bringing him with them.

Either way, Jasper did not have that many common interests with a bunch of middle-aged men. Thus, he returned to the city with Celine.

Celine had had quite a bit to drink that night too. She had chugged at least half of the brandy that was poured. Things might have gotten awkward if not for the fact Vita had only brought that much brandy.

Life at the Top Chapter 754

“Let’s go for a walk,” Celine said abruptly to Jasper when they had almost reached the hotel.

Jasper was startled but then realized his entire body smelled like booze. It was a good idea to get some air and clear his mind. Thus, he got Julian to pull the car over before he and Celine got out.

It was already past ten at night, but Waterhoof City was not the least bit deserted. You could still see lots of people making their way around.

As they strolled on the sidewalk, Celine turned and gazed somewhat drunkenly at Jasper as she said, "Why are you so far away from me? Are you scared I'll eat you up?"

When Jasper, who had been standing behind Celine, heard that, he immediately walked up to Celine and stood next to her before saying, "Is this close enough for you?"

Celine did not say anything. She reached out, took hold of Jasper's arm, and put her head on his shoulder. She said with a smile, "This is better."

Then, she pointed to a couple standing by the road and said, "Look, they're doing it like this."

Jasper frowned slightly and tried to pull his arm away as he said, "Miss Maynard, you're drunk."

"I'm not drunk." Celine tightened her hold on Jasper's arm as she said dismissively, "I'm a woman, and I'm not scared. What are you scared about?"

"But you're already married," Jasper said.

Celine was stunned for a moment before she let go of Jasper's arm and smiled meaningfully, saying, "Yes, I'm already married. I can't be like this anymore. I would have forgotten if you hadn't reminded me."

Was this another woman in an unhappy marriage?

Jasper shook his head. He had no interest in the relationships of other married couples, nor did he plan to butt in.

However, Celine seemed to have become a real chatterbox and said, "Who cares about marriage? We only got together due to a mix of interests. Him, his parents, and my parents were satisfied when we got married, but no one ever bothered asking if I was satisfied."

"So, are you satisfied?" Jasper asked.

Celine smiled and seemed to become more animated as she said, "Of course, I'm satisfied. He's handsome, rich, capable, and is an illustrious person. He's the perfect husband no matter how you look at him. What kind of woman wouldn't want to marry a man like that?"

"That's fine, then." Jasper sighed. "You wouldn't be so childish that you want a love story between a princess and a beggar, right? All relationships are built on a foundation of materialism. Or are you unwilling to be with your husband and spend the rest of your life with him just for the sake of benefits?"

"It's not that," Celine said as she shook her head. "I'm not a high schooler who daydreams about love anymore. That's hilarious."

"But..." As she spoke, Celine abruptly stopped and stood in front of a display in a department store. She was staring unblinkingly at a pair of red high heels the mannequin had on its feet.

"I want this," Celine said as she pointed at the window.

Jasper glanced at the store's tightly shut doors and frowned as he said, "It's already closed. Shall we come and buy them tomorrow when they're open?"

"No! I want them now!" Celine was as stubborn as a spoiled little girl asking for sweets from her parents.

“I can’t break the window and steal them now, can I?” Jasper said helplessly as he tried to forcibly drag Celine away. This woman was troublesome after she was drunk.

“Commission!” Celine shook Jasper’s arm off her as she stretched out two fingers. She said seriously, albeit with drunken eyes, “I’ll shave off 20% of the commission to list Sena publicly. But I want this, right now!”

Jasper’s head throbbed. However, his eyes widened when he saw a logo from the corners of his eyes.

It was a logo unique to businesses owned by the Law family.

“F*ck it, I’m going for it!”

Life at the Top Chapter 755

When he used a brick to break the glass of the store’s display, the sound of glass smashing was accompanied by the blaring of alarms. Jasper would have thought he was crazy if not for the fact this store was owned by the Law family.

Julian, who was smoking a cigarette as he sat in the car, stared in shock when he witnessed that.

If he had not witnessed it with his own eyes, who would have thought that a tycoon with a net worth of at least several billion dollars would do something as thuggish as smashing a store display and stealing from it?

However, Jasper did not have the time to think about it anymore. He was almost broke and was focused on the 20% commission cut Celine promised him.

He found a brick, smashed the glass, picked up the red heels amongst the shards, and pulled Celine along with him as they ran off.

He completed all these actions with fluid movements and without any hesitancy.

Holding the heels in one hand and pulling Celine, who was laughing delightedly, along with him, Jasper dashed all the way back to the car.

“Hurry, let’s go!”

Jasper yelled at Julian.

“Alright!”

Julian had no time to watch this exciting scene. He turned the key and stepped on the gas as they sped off.

Jasper sat in the car and managed to calm himself down slightly.

The only thing he could do now was pray that the surveillance cameras were not as advanced as they were in the future. At least there would not be cameras at every corner and junction. That way, he could send Julian over with some money as a form of reimbursement the next day.

If not, it would be embarrassing for him if he got caught for such trivial matters.

However, he could not deny that it was really f*cking exciting.

Jasper had a dark expression on his face as he gazed at Celine who was giggling as she hugged the heels to herself. He said, “You’d best remember you said you would shave 20% off your commission. Don’t wake up the next morning and say you’ve forgotten everything.”

Celine grinned and said, “Don’t worry, I won’t forget it. Do you really think I’m drunk?”

Jasper used a look to tell her that she was, indeed, drunk.

When they returned to the hotel, Jasper reminded Julian to inform Henry about what had happened and ask him not to cause a fuss. Then, Jasper asked Julian to pay the unfortunate store for the damages he had caused.

After that, Jasper took a bath and decided to turn in early.

He had just lain down on his bed when his phone vibrated. It was a text from Celine.

The contents of the text were simple, just two words with one punctuation mark.

[Thank you!]

Jasper smiled and put his phone aside. Turning off the lights, he went to sleep.

...

At this time in the opposite room, Celine was feeling rather unhappy as Jasper had not replied to her text even after a long time.

Someone knocked on her door just as she was about to send Jasper another text.

“Come in.”

Celine fixed her expression into a cold and aloof one.

Yvonne walked in with a warm towel, which she handed to Celine before asking, “Do you want me to bring you some warm milk? It can help cure hangovers.”

Life at the Top Chapter 756

“I want it cold,” Celine said somewhat tiredly.

Yvonne soon brought in a glass of cold milk and placed it on the bedside table.

“Miss Maynard, did you have dinner with Jasper tonight? How could you have drunk so much?” Yvonne asked.

Celine massaged her temples and said, “We had to talk about some stuff, that’s it. You don’t need to pry into my personal life.”

Not daring to retaliate, Yvonne hummed in response. However, her eyes glinted with hatred as she lowered her gaze.

“You can leave now. I’m turning in for the night,” Celine said as she lay in bed. Then, she abruptly added, “When you have time, pull up the quotation saved on my laptop and lower the commission by 20%. Add in a reasonable explanation that will be accepted by the company too. I want it by tomorrow.”

Startled, Yvonne said instinctively, “20%? The company will never agree to that. They might even suspect that you and Jasper have some unspoken deal. Miss Maynard, this is not...”

“This is my decision. As general manager of Terra’s regional branch, I have the power to adjust the commission within a 25% frame. Don’t you know that?” Celine’s eyes were cold as she asked the question.

“Yvonne Stone, I know you don’t like Jasper, but that’s your personal feelings which I have no control over. I won’t order you to be overly nice to Jasper but you must never let your personal feelings get in the way of your work, nor will I allow you to constantly question my decisions. Is that clear?”

As she gazed at Celine, who had a stern expression on her face, Yvonne bit down on her lip and said, "Understood, Miss Maynard. I'll carry out your orders right away."

"Go." Celine closed her eyes somewhat tiredly. She was feeling the effects of the alcohol now, and she did not have the energy to continue talking to Yvonne. "Turn off the lights when you leave."

Yvonne left the room silently.

When Yvonne left the room, she had a murderous expression on her face.

She immediately returned to her room and called William.

"Do you know how long it's been? Why haven't you taken any action yet?"

William, who was on the other end of the line, said in a disdainful voice, "Miss Maynard, please remember that you are merely the secretary to a general manager. What gave you the guts to question a president?"

Yvonne gritted her teeth as she said, "But we're equal partners in this case. You need me to provide you with information, don't you?"

William scoffed but still explained, "It takes time to persuade the board of directors back at the headquarters, but some progress has already started. Haven't you seen how the board of directors hasn't made any demands although Celine still hasn't handed in the quotation?"

Yvonne said vehemently, "Now that you've mentioned it, Celine just asked me to change the quotation. She wants to use her power to lower Colossal's commission by 20%."

William was first stunned for a while before he laughed and said, "Did Celine sleep with Jasper? Why would an otherwise smart woman do something that would only bring benefits to the other party? Has she come up with an explanation to give to the headquarters?"

"She said any logical explanation would do because she has the power to do so. Headquarters wouldn't mind," Yvonne said coldly.

"Either way, she's fully invested in this matter now. We must hurry and mess up Sena's plan to be publicly listed. I'll send you a copy of the quotation later tonight and leave several loopholes in the explanation that will be made to the headquarters. It's up to you how we'll proceed."

William laughed as he said, "Women like you who will do anything and everything to gain what they want are truly evil."

"Mind your own business!" Yvonne said before hanging up.

The next morning, Jasper was not surprised to see Celine waiting to have breakfast with him when he woke up.

Julian left after he served the two breakfast. He had to go clean up the mess Jasper made last night.

Jasper purposely glanced at Celine's feet and saw that the woman was wearing the red heels from last night. He smiled and said, "Not bad. They're gorgeous and suit you very well. Seems like my impulsiveness from last night was not for naught."

"Of course, it wasn't. I've already shaved 20% off from our commission and submitted the final report to the headquarters. We can sign the contract once they're done verifying it," Celine said in a relaxed tone.

"The total commission is 380 million dollars and I've helped you save 76 million dollars. What shoes could be that expensive?"

Life at the Top Chapter 757

Celine's statements caused Jasper to sink into deep thought.

At the same time, Jasper made a decision.

When his companies expanded and recruited more employees, he had to make sure he had control over the amount of power his subordinates held.

Else, would he not suffer major losses if he ended up recruiting a woman like Celine Maynard who readily gave away 70 million dollars at every turn?

They enjoyed breakfast together until Celine received an encrypted call.

"It's from the headquarters. It must be them informing us that we can sign the contract now," Celine said confidently to Jasper before she returned to her room to answer the call.

Celine returned moments later with an ugly expression on her face.

When Jasper saw the expression on Celine's face, he realized that the matter he had previously been so confident about must have gone wrong.

"Sorry," Celine said as she sat down in front of Jasper. She sighed before continuing, "Sena's listing has run into some problems."

"Tell me. I'm listening," Jasper said calmly.

Celine gazed at Jasper. Without taking anything else into regard, his calmness at such a time was already something that not most people would have.

“Headquarters just informed me that members of the board have raised their suspicions regarding this deal. They’re requesting a complete redo of the assessment to determine the possibility of Sena going public,” Celine said.

Jasper chuckled as he sat on the couch and said, “Which means that everything we did before this was for nothing?”

Celine had an apologetic expression on her face as she said, “No, there must have been something we missed. I’ll get to the bottom of this and solve this matter as soon as possible.”

“I don’t know how internal affairs at your investment company are, but it seems odd that an amazing business deal would go down the drain just because several members of the board came forth to stir things up,” Jasper said as he shook his head.

Celine hurriedly said, “Please don’t misunderstand. We just have somewhat of a unique structure at the investment company. Most matters are handled by the president, but the board of directors has the right to voice their doubts for large deals. It’s a form of insurance for the company in ensuring no problems are encountered.

“So, your insurance is to have me, your client, waste my time with you?” Jasper asked.

Celine went silent.

Realizing his attitude might have been a bit aggressive, Jasper softened his tone and said, “Miss Maynard, this has nothing to do with you. Don’t worry, we’ll remain friends no matter what. But in the spirit of maintaining business formality, I hope you’ll pass on a message to the headquarters for me.”

“Please continue,” Celine said solemnly.

“Colossal Investments is not the only company that can be Sena’s underwriter in the stock market. I believe that so long Sena is willing to do so, a simple announcement would be enough to attract major investment companies from States such as Layman Investments, Merlene Investments, Morgan Stanley Investments, and Citigroup Inc. to fly over and fight for the chance to work with me.

“It would do good for Colossal Investments to not think of themselves as such a big deal.”

Jasper did not bother trying to be nice. All this while, he had been involved in many fights. Thus, even his toes could conclude that someone was trying to sabotage him this time.

However, did Jasper care?

He did not.

It was because Jasper was not trying to leech benefits away from Colossal Investments. Both parties would benefit from this deal.

However, what was different was that Jasper could just switch investment companies and continue working happily with whoever it was. However, if Colossal Investments lost him as a client, they would lose out on profits of more than 300 million dollars and also the fame they would gain by helping Sena get listed on the Nasdaq Composite.

Ordinary profits were worth nothing to investment companies like Colossal Investments. However, they had to take on the position of being underwriter for stocks like Sena.

Life at the Top Chapter 758

It was because a company like Sena was bound to cause a huge surge of interest in investments the minute they were listed publicly. No one dared predict how much their shares would rise, but it was without a doubt that they would be priced sky-high on the very first day.

Colossal Investments was drooling over a business deal that would bring them such fame.

After all, the competition in the investment industry was brutal and competitive. No one knew which was the second biggest investment company, but everyone knew Colossal Investments was the biggest investment company.

If Colossal Investments ever fell from grace, they would be forgotten by the public in a matter of days.

That was why Jasper dared to ignore their shady tricks.

All he needed to do was switch companies. What was there for Jasper to worry about?

On the contrary, it was something that the internal affairs at Colossal Investments needed to worry over.

As expected, Celine's eyebrows were knitted together when she heard what Jasper had said.

"Don't panic yet. I'll take care of this as soon as possible," Celine said to Jasper.

"Three days. Give me three days."

Jasper gazed at the serious expression on Celine's face and thought about it for a moment before he nodded and said, "Alright, let me know if you need my cooperation in anything."

"But keep in mind that I don't have much time."

When she heard Jasper agree, Celine hurriedly nodded and said, "Alright, don't worry. I'll make sure to give you a proper explanation."

When she finished, Celine bade goodbye to Jasper and hurried back to her room.

"Yvonne, come here." Celine returned to her room and sat silently in the study for half an hour before calling out to Yvonne.

Yvonne had already received news that the board was stopping Sena from being listed publicly and was still celebrating inwardly. When she heard Celine, she did not think much about it and immediately entered the study.

Slap!

A loud slap rang out as a hand landed heavily on Yvonne's cheek.

Yvonne cradled her cheek as she stared at Celine in disbelief, yelling, "Miss Maynard, why did you hit me?!"

"Why?" Celine laughed coldly as she said, "You dared to turn on me but you never thought there would be a day when I found out about it?"

"Tell me! What sort of benefits did William give you to leak information to him?!"

Yvonne panicked when she heard Celine's questions and instinctively shook her head as she denied it. "Miss Maynard, you've misunderstood me. I have no idea what you're talking about."

“Yvonne, you’ve been with me for so many years. How do you still not know me well?” Celine gazed disappointedly at Yvonne. “Conversely, I know you very well.

“The members of the board who voiced their objections were all William’s superiors. He’s definitely involved in this. Besides, William’s been making frequent calls to the headquarters recently. Did you really think I wouldn’t have noticed that?”

Celine’s cold words caused Yvonne’s heart to sink to the pit of her stomach.

“I knew you hated Jasper, but I never thought you would be so ballsy to even work with my enemy to cause trouble for Jasper. Do you know this will cause me to lose any reputation I have?” Celine said through gritted teeth.

Flustered, Yvonne said stubbornly, “Even if William was the one making a mess of things, it still has nothing to do with me.”

“Nothing to do with you? Right now, only me, you, and President Paulson know of my collaboration with Jasper. Are you suggesting the president was the one who sold me out?”

Life at the Top Chapter 759

A flustered expression appeared on Yvonne’s face. She had not expected her plan to be exposed so soon.

Right now, she was so flustered the only thing she could do was grit her teeth and deny everything, insisting she had nothing to do with it.

She knew Celine had no evidence against her if she denied everything. However, she would be done for if she admitted to anything herself.

When she saw that Yvonne was still not going to admit to anything, Celine shook her head in disappointment. “I always knew he had sent you over to spy on me, but I never minded.

“After all, there would be others even if I sent you away. I can’t stop that.

“But you managed to fit my requirements, and you’re good at what you do. That’s why I’ve always trusted you.

“I was initially willing to give you another chance on the basis of the trust we shared. As long as you admitted to everything...”

Then, Celine gazed at Yvonne’s face which was progressively becoming more flustered and pale. She said calmly, “Yvonne Stone, from this moment onward, you are no longer my secretary. I’ll have HR inform you of any procedures you’ll have to go through.”

Yvonne’s face turned deathly pale as she screeched, “Miss Maynard, are you firing me?!”

“You abandoned me first.” Celine’s voice turned calm as she said coldly, “You rejected the last chance I gave you. Perhaps my tolerance has caused you to become more and more reckless.

“Were you thinking that because I had no proof against you and that William would never identify you publicly, I wouldn’t stand a chance against you so long as you denied everything?

“What you didn’t know is that I’m not a judge, and the investment company is not a courtroom either. I don’t need any proof before I can pass my judgment. All it takes for your resignation is a statement from me.”

Then, Celine said coldly, “Please leave right now. We no longer have any sort of relationship between us.”

When confronted with that severe blow, Yvonne hurriedly tugged on Celine's shirt as she sobbed. "Miss Maynard, please forgive me. I didn't mean anything by it. I didn't know you would be this angry. Can you just take it as a mistake I made and forgive me, please?"

"I did leak information to William on my own accord, but the only reason I did that was to cause trouble for Jasper. I couldn't just stand by and watch as Sena gets successfully listed. Who does he think he is? What gives him the right to reap all the benefits and have everything good in life?"

"Miss Maynard, I never wanted to harm you!"

The disappointment on Celine's already stern face only grew as she listened to Yvonne's sobbing complaints.

"It's alright if you make mistakes, and I'm always ready to give you a chance to correct them. But it's your parents' responsibility if your morals are corrupted. I have no responsibility in helping or tolerating you."

"Your mind is truly simple. Did you really think William would only target Jasper alone? Besides, what kind of loss would this cause for Jasper? All he needs to do is delay the listing by a couple of days. Even without Colossal Investments, there are still numerous investment companies lining up to hand him a contract."

"Everyone knows how powerful Sena is. It's a business deal that would rake in huge profits. Would there be any investment company that'll reject it?"

"Thus, William has made me his target from the very start. Jasper just happened to be thrown into the mix. William is smarter than you are and has known since the start that this would never be a problem for Jasper."

Celine shook her head in disappointment as she said, "Did you know what the headquarters told me over the phone? They suspect that I've made a private agreement with Jasper, especially regarding the 20% discount in commission."

They're suspecting I'm using my authority to work with Jasper to harm the company. The investigative team is already on their way.

"It doesn't matter if they find anything or not. It'll still be a huge hurdle for me to remain at the Terra regional branch. And who would be the happiest if I left? That person would be William.

"And what about you? What would you get from this?"

Celine gazed at Yvonne with pity. The woman's face had turned ashen, and Celine said coldly, "You gained no benefits at all. Conversely, you lost everything. Your job at the investment company, my trust, and your future."

Life at the Top Chapter 760

"In fact, people like you are the ones who should be hated and pitied the most. You brought trouble to both yourself and others, thinking you were smart. However, you ended up being the fool."

Everything she said caused Yvonne to stand rooted to the spot in shock.

She realized that things were exactly how Celine made them out to be. She was the fool here.

Not only had she not gained any benefits, but Jasper, the one she wanted to seek revenge on, had lost nothing. On the other hand, she had lost everything.

She also dragged Celine down with her in the process.

"Miss Maynard, I..."

Tears filled Yvonne's eyes as she tried to plead for mercy. However, she was too ashamed to actually say anything when she opened her mouth.

"Seeing how you still have some shame, I'll give you some leeway."

Celine's words caused hope to once again flare within Yvonne. She gazed hopefully at Celine.

However, what Celine said after that pushed her right back into an abyss of despair.

"You can hand in your resignation. This way, you'll still be able to find employment in other investment companies. If Colossal Investments were to fire you, it'll leave a permanent stain on your record and no other investment companies will think of hiring you."

Celine turned and walked off after saying that, leaving Yvonne to stand rooted to the spot in shock before she finally burst into tears.

Once she was done dealing with Yvonne, Celine gave William a call.

William did not seem surprised to receive a call from her. He seemed to be in a good mood.

"Miss Maynard, you don't seem to be in a good mood," William said leisurely as he leaned against his office chair in the brightly lit office.

Celine had a stiff expression on her face as she said, "Isn't this what you wanted?"

William laughed and said, "Please don't say that. You're an amazing partner, and I hope only the very best for you. I said the same thing to the investigative team when they were in my office earlier."

“How quick,” Celine scoffed and said, “William, you must know that the investigative team will never find anything wrong with me. Do you really think such tricks will work on me?”

William shrugged and said, “I don’t know if it’ll work or not. I only know that the minute your record shows that you’ve had investigations done on you, you’ll never be able to get the chair that my butt is resting on right now.”

Sighing, Celine said, “Jasper’s case to list Sena publicly has nothing to do with our feud. I hope you’ll think about this carefully.”

William laughed and said, “Miss Maynard, how did you get to where you are now if you’re this naive? Just like how you screwed up my case, I’ll ensure you never get to complete any business deals without causing a whole lot of trouble. Got it?”

“Your suffering is my source of happiness,” William said before he hung up.

Celine had a stiff expression on her face as she listened to the dial tone. Honestly, she was not surprised at the outcome.

Sighing, Celine muttered to herself, “You forced me to do this.”

Life at the Top Chapter 761

A video call that spanned the distance of half the earth was established.

Celine Maynard sat in front of the computer. She stared at the image of Paulson on the screen with a calm expression.

Due to the time difference, it was now afternoon on Paulson's side of the world.

Evidently, he was extremely busy. After accepting the video call, he immediately said, "Celine, you have ten minutes to talk to me. There's another important meeting that I need to attend in ten minutes' time."

Celine nodded to indicate that she understood. "In that case, I'll get straight to the point. I don't mind if the headquarter sends a team to investigate me, but Jasper Laine's listing plan for Sena cannot be put on hold because of this," she said intently.

Paulson shook his head. "Celine, although I've always admired your capabilities, you let your emotions get in the way this time," he said in a regretful tone.

"You have to understand that the questions raised by the directors are perfectly reasonable, and they also have the right to do so. This is the power that has been granted to them during the shareholders' general meeting, and I cannot do anything about it."

Celine replied solemnly, "Even so, anyone can tell that this listing benefits not just Jasper, but also our investment bank, right? We cannot just push Jasper into the hands of our competitors just because a few directors disagree.

"If that happens, Layman and Merlene Investments will be laughing at us in their sleep."

Paulson frowned. He fixed a deep gaze upon Celine and said, "Celine, tell me right now. Why did you take the initiative to reduce Jasper Laine's commission by 20%?"

"I did that to win him over," Celine replied immediately without thinking twice.

"As I had previously reported to you, Jasper Laine is undoubtedly a business prodigy that everyone is underestimating. Sena, which is an extremely high-achieving company in our eyes, is simply one of the many companies in the diverse group of businesses that he owns.

"I think that our investment bank will benefit greatly from working together with someone like that."

Paulson smiled and said, "I have to admit that Jasper Laine is a wondrous businessman. However, this does not mean that the board of directors will accept your excuse. To them, this listing case is indeed rewarding, but they are more concerned about the possibility of collusion occurring between internal members of the company and outsiders."

"That's why I'm not against the headquarters' decision to send an investigation team over. They can investigate all they like. However, if Jasper cancels his deal with us over this, we will hurt badly!" Celine argued.

A slight frown formed on Paulson's face. "As I said, this is our directors' choice. There is no way for me to prevent it from happening," he said.

"Yes, you can. As the chairman, you can use your veto power to veto their review of the listing," Celine said.

Paulson burst out into laughter. "Celine, are you kidding me right now? Are you asking me to go against those directors because of Jasper Laine? What good does this do me?" He asked.

"I'm willing to bet my entire career on this!" Celine suddenly said.

Paulson's smile froze on his face. He pinned a deep gaze on Celine and asked her solemnly, "Do you know what you're talking about?"

"By all means, run the investigation, but any no circumstances can you stop the listing. If any problem arise, I'll resign immediately," Celine said calmly after taking in a deep breath.

Paulson remained silent for some time.

Right then, someone knocked on the door to Paulson's on the other end of the line. His secretary had come over to remind him that his time was up.

"Ask them to wait for a moment as I have an important matter to handle right now," Paulson said. After that, the sound of the door closing could be heard. He then continued to face the screen to look at Celine. "Celine, your father and I have been close friends for decades. I don't want to see you make this big mistake," he said.

"This is too risky for you. There is too much at stake. If something unexpected happens, you will not be able to continue working in the financial industry for the rest of your life. This does not just apply to Wall Street. No other investment bank in the world would dare to employ you ever again."

"I know what I'm doing. Please help me this once, Uncle Paulson," Celine said in an even tone.

Paulson let out a sigh and said, "I'm afraid that your guarantee isn't enough to change the minds of those stubborn directors."

"In that case, I'll add on one other thing. If the share price of Sena is less than a hundred US dollars, I will voluntarily resign as well. I will also compensate the investment bank for their loss with an amount three times the commission. I'm giving you my word as the second-in-line heir to the Maynard family. Is that enough?"

Celine's words traversed across the oceans and rang out loud and clear in Paulson's office room.

Paulson stared at Celine, who was wearing a calm and determined look on her face, in shock. He then shook his head.

"A hundred US dollars? Do you know what a share price of a hundred US dollars means? After Nasdaq went through the Internet bubble, there are only a few dozen stocks worth more than a hundred US dollars left. Those companies all consist of large and well-known global companies!"

Celine did not say anything. She understood what Paulson was implying more than anyone else.

However, if she did not come up with such a bargain, the directors would never concede.

Therefore, Celine continued stare directly into Paulson's eyes calmly.

Meanwhile, Paulson did not say anything either. He had watched Celine grow up and understood that whenever she showed such an expression, it meant that she would not go back on her words.

"I will try my best," Paulson said and hung up on the video call.

After going through all of that, Celine leaned back on her chair in exhaustion. As she lowered her head, she caught sight of the red high-heels that she was currently wearing. Suddenly, she laughed out loud.

Was it worth it? Nobody knew.

Anyways, she had bet everything, her career included.

It was all because of this pair of red high-heels from that night.

...

Jasper did not see Celine for a few days. On the first day, Julian told him that he had caught sight of Miss Stone leaving the hotel despondently with all of her luggage.

Jasper was not sure about what had happened within the company. He did not intend to understand what had happened either.

He had even begun to contact other large investment banks like Layman or Merlene Investments.

In his opinion, Colossal Investments was acting like they were high and mighty. If that was the case, he could just change partners. It would be just another collaboration.

In any case, the company would be listed on the Nasdaq all the same. He did not worry about it at all.

On the third day, which was the last day of Celine and Jasper's agreement, Celine knocked on the door to Jasper's room.

She was still as graceful and charming as always. There was a hint of gentle loveliness in her pretty, feminine features as she smiled at him sweetly.

"It's done. The listing of Sena has officially been approved. On the other hand, the headquarters have already begun lobbying the Nasdaq Review Committee. We shall soon head to New York to ring the bells," she said.

Life at the Top Chapter 762

“Are you alright?”

Jasper glanced at Celine, who was sitting in his living room, in the midst of enjoying some snacks with milk. He then asked her this in a suspicious tone.

Although Celine looked exactly the same as she did usually, Jasper felt that something was wrong.

“I’m good,” Celine said, casting an odd glance at him. She then lowered her head to look at herself. “Is there something wrong?” She asked.

Jasper sat down and opened a bottle of beverage for himself. “Has everything been resolved?” He asked.

“Everything has been resolved,” Celine said in a relaxed tone. “Are you forgetting who I am? Is there anything that I can’t deal with? Do you really think that I’ve gained nothing from working at Colossal Investments all these years? I have plenty of connections, alright?” She added.

“You make it seem easy,” Jasper said. He narrowed his eyes at her as he did not believe a single word that she was saying.

The more indifferently Celine behaved, the more he certain he felt that the issue this time was serious.

Although he had never worked at Colossal Investments before, Jasper had been a veteran in the financial circle in his past life. He had seen all sorts of workplace battles.

Furthermore, he was managing a bunch of people under him in his current lifetime.

Jasper knew very well that one could be wiped out at any moment as people in the company schemed and plotted against each other.

It was a battlefield where smoking barrels could not be seen.

This was especially true for top investment banks like Colossal Investments, as they already had in place a complete ecosystem nestled within the company. Such working environments were terrifyingly cruel.

There were plenty of power struggles constantly occurring within the company.

“If you can’t do it, you can just give up. I’ve told you that we’ll still be friends. When it comes to Colossal Investments, I can always change working partners. There’s no need to give in to their demands,” Jasper said.

Celine pinned a long, meaningful gaze upon Jasper. “I’ve put in a lot of effort and work into this. I’ve put almost all that I have into this project, and now you’re saying that you want to change your working partner? I won’t agree,” she said.

“Alright, alright,” Jasper chuckled. “Since you’re giving me a 20% commission, I won’t let you down,” he said.

“Also, I heard that you fired your secretary.” Jasper asked casually.

“I’ve fired her,” Celine said nonchalantly. It was as if he was talking about something insignificant. “She is no longer qualified for her current position, so she has no choice but to leave,” she added.

“Your personal secretary wasn’t qualified for the position, and you only just realized it now? You’re only tackling this issue now?” Jasper asked.

Celine stared at Jasper. “Why are you asking so many questions today?” She questioned.

“Was she going against you or me?” Jasper asked her another question, blatantly ignoring Celine’s evident distaste.

Celine huffed and threw a chip into her mouth. “She was going against the both of us,” she said.

“Was it William?” Jasper asked.

“You’re quite a smart one,” Celine praised him.

“If she only went against you, I wouldn’t have been able to guess it. There are 8000 to 10000 employees in Colossal Investments, and the only people I know there are you and William. Therefore, if she was going against me as well, he had to be the one behind it,” Jasper said in a calm tone.

“Why? Are you unhappy about it? Do you want to go challenge him as well?” Celine asked him cheerily.

“If the opportunity arises, I won’t let him go so easily,” Jasper replied.

Although Jasper did not care much about the internal power struggles taking place within Colossal Investments, nor did he care about working together with them, someone that wanted to defeat him would be a danger to him sooner or later. This was especially true if it was someone holding a high-ranking position like William, the president of the Terra regional branch.

“Alright, I’m full now. I’m going back,” Celine said as she stood up and brushed off the crumbs of food from her hands.

“I’ll be busy with work the next few days due to the heavy workload. I still need to organize the entire process of your listing, so I have an afternoon flight back to Harbor City.”

Jasper got up and replied, "Since the listing of Sena has been confirmed, I need to make some arrangements as well."

"In that case, we'll both be busy with our own work," Celine said with a smile as she walked in front of Jasper.

"Will you miss me?"

"I won't miss a married woman," Jasper said with a rigid expression on his face.

Noticing the frown forming on Celine's brows, Jasper spoke again. "But I'll miss my friend," he said.

"You know exactly what to say," Celine said happily. She waved her hand and said, "Also, don't call me a married woman. We simply staged a wedding and received a foreign marriage certificate that isn't recognized in Somerland. That's it, there's nothing else going on between the two of us."

"Are you hinting that I can try becoming the third party in your relationship?"

Jasper chuckled. After knowing her for some time, Jasper knew that she could take a joke like that.

Celine rolled her eyes at Jasper. "You can try. It's easy to win my heart," she said.

"I could never move your heart," Jasper said as he stared at Celine's imposing figure.

"Tsk, what a man," Celine pouted in distaste as she walked toward the door.

She opened the door and stood by the exit. Then, she suddenly turned around and smiled radiantly at the sight of Jasper watching her leave. "In that case, see you in New York?" She asked.

“See you in New York.”

...

Celine left just like that. She did not look back.

She did not even ask Jasper to send her to the airport.

She called a taxi to the airport on her own.

Noticing that she had checked out and left, Jasper felt slightly somber.

“Please be careful, Jasper,” Julian, who was beside Jasper, blurted out suddenly.

“You little rascal. You rarely say anything, but your words never fail to make me uncomfortable.”

Jasper glared at Jasper. “Why should I be careful? There’s nothing going on between the both of us,” he said.

“I don’t know about that, but from a man’s perspective, if Ms. Schuler and Ms. Law are both beautiful flowers with contrasting styles, Ms. Celine Maynard is a wildflower that men simply cannot get out of their minds. It’s addictive,” he said.

“Furthermore, she’s a married woman. How exciting is that? A man will surely have fantasies, right?”

Jasper stared at Julian in shock. “F*ck, what have you been doing these days? The way you speak has levelled up greatly,” he said.

...

After bickering with Julian, Jasper no longer felt downcast about Celine’s departure for Harbor City. He then called Jack Tanner over.

“Jack, are you interested in going to New York with me to ring the bells?”

Jasper’s words caused Jack to feel a surge of excitement.

“Has the deal been completed? Didn’t you previously mention that there were some problems with it?” Jack asked in surprise.

Jasper could not hide his plans of listing Sena from Jack, who was in charge of the company. In fact, the both of them had negotiated and decided on many of the strategies that they would be imposing during this period.

Jack looked forward to Sena’s listing as well. For any professional manager out there, getting listed would be the highlight of their careers.

“Everything has been resolved,” Jasper chuckled.

“We’ve now officially started the countdown to the listing. We are yet to decide on a specific date, so you’ll need to carry out the relevant preparations. The company must not face any problems during this period.

“When the company gets listed, it will definitely benefit the employees. You should also design a reward scheme. After all, good things should be shared.”

Life at the Top Chapter 763

The news about Sena’s upcoming listing in the United States was spread by unknown sources.

This news instantly lit up the entire domestic Internet industry.

Frankly speaking, people with a long-term vision could already see that Sena's moves would completely change the ecosystem of the entire domestic Internet industry when the game "United Legends" was released.

It cleared the path and introduced a new way for Internet companies to make a profit, which was by earning money from online gamers through the development of online games.

For companies that were yet to find a profitable direction under the traditional Internet business model, online gaming was obviously a good way to plug their losses and increase their profitability.

However, when news about Sena's upcoming listing broke, everyone was shocked when they realized that this had been their actual goal all along.

Because of this, Sena's overall strategy and intentions had gradually become clear to the public.

Sena made use of United Legends to achieve profitability, and it proceeded to make use of its high profitability to promote the listing of the company.

It seemed like an easy process as it only consisted of two steps.

However, how could Sena be so sure that they would be able to achieve profitability through United Legends?

In fact, not only did they achieve profitability, but they earned crazy amounts of profits.

All the personnel within the domestic Internet industry gained a surge of confidence through their achievements. They looked up to Sena and wondered how a domestic company like them would perform after going public on the Nasdaq.

In a sense, Sena's public listing in the United States represented the honor of the whole of Somerland's Internet industry.

If Sena gained popularity, everyone else would be thrown under the spotlight as well. If Sena's market widened, the whole industry would benefit from it.

Moreover, if Sena did not make it big, everyone would just disregard them and just look for other online games to monitor. They could always think of other solutions if that were to happen.

...

As change rippled through the outside world and drew the attention of countless individuals toward Sena, Jasper, who was the driving force behind it all, was having tea with Mr. Malibu in his office in Nauritus City.

Henry Law, who had a wide smile on his face, was seated next to them.

"Malibu, your Somerish really sucks. You should really get a better teacher so that you can learn better," Jasper said while he handed a cup of tea to Mr. Malibu. Mr. Malibu, who was born in the United States, had fallen in love with the tea culture in Somerland lately. He had also miraculously quit drinking coffee.

With teary eyes, he had expressed his regrets of being poisoned by coffee for decades before encountering the magic of tea from Somerland. Indeed, it was such a pity.

"Really? However, Kelly told me that I have progressed a lot. Somerish is really difficult, but I will work hard to learn the language," Malibu said in a slightly embarrassed tone.

"Malibu, you meant to say that you have improved a lot, right? Progress isn't the right word," Jasper said in exasperation.

“Haha,” Mr. Malibu let out a bark of laughter. “Yes, yes, I have improved a lot...” he said.

After chatting and joking around for a while, Jasper looked at Henry. “How’s the plan? Have you figured out how much money you can raise?” He asked.

Henry had a look of anguish on his face. “Can’t I ask my father and younger sister to pay in advance?” He asked.

“I will send a document over to each of them. Don’t you want to spend the money that you’ve earned on your own? If you do, you have to use your capital, and yours alone. Borrowing money from others does not count,” Jasper told him in an irritated tone.

“I can’t bear to watch the opportunity to earn a fortune slip by. I can withdraw a sum of 30 million Harbor Dollars at most,” Henry said with a tormented expression plastered upon his face.

Jasper looked at him in shock. “You must be the poorest man among all those from the wealthy second generation out there,” he remarked.

Life at the Top Chapter 764

“I’ve already bought a yacht and a car. Besides, I also spend up to several tens of thousands of dollars every time I go out,” Henry said in a regretful tone.

Once Sena gets listed, an internal placement process will be carried out. In other words, shares will be sold to internal buyers in advance. When Sena gets publicly listed, they will then be able to sell their shares according to the market price.

Transactions like this usually yielded a profit unless the share that they owned was worthless, causing the listing price to fall below the opening price. In that case, a huge loss would be incurred. However, such incidents rarely happened.

After all, it was impossible for the shares of a foreign company that was worthy of being listed on the Nasdaq to be worthless.

Furthermore, anyone with decent insight could tell that Sena definitely had the prospect to be a profitable investment.

Naturally, Jasper did not forget about Henry when this excellent opportunity to earn a fortune arose.

Jasper gave the Laws a pre-IPO quota of 200 million dollars. Meanwhile, Kayden Langdon was allocated a quota of 100 million dollars as per their previous agreement. Of course, he did not forget about Schuler Corporation either. Dawson Schuler was also allocated a quota of 200 million dollars. As for the others, Jasper intended to release a quota of 50 million dollars for the company's veteran employees.

For instance, Hudson Moore and his team had worked under him for a long time and had faced countless struggles throughout their time with him. Nevertheless, it seemed like they did not have many opportunities to reap benefits or wealth.

Although Jasper paid them a salary that was above the industry standard, this did not stop him from awarding them with a variety of benefits for their conscientious work.

As for Henry Law, Jasper had always given him special treatment.

In addition to the Laws' pre-IPO quota, Jasper had promised Henry that he would allocate him shares equivalent to whatever amount that he was able to raise.

However, Henry did not fare well. His savings only consisted of 30 million Harbor Dollars.

According to the currency exchange rate at the time, it was only worth around 28 million Somer Dollars.

“You should just give up. I’ll help you round it up to 50 million dollars,” Jasper said. He had a headache when he thought about it.

Henry stared at Jasper blankly. “How much will I be able to earn then?” He asked.

“Don’t worry, you’ll definitely be able to get yourself a private jet,” Jasper said cheerily.

Henry immediately got excited. “Sure, I’ll follow you to the United States for the listing then. I’ve been there countless times before, but I’ve never seen the bell in Wall Street being rung before,” he said.

“No problem. Have all the issues at the amusement park been resolved?” Jasper asked.

“Everything has been resolved. There are just some small problems left, but matters like sorting out the materials and submitting them for approval do not require my involvement,” Henry said with a stony expression on his face.

Jasper chuckled. “Sure thing, I’ll notify you later on when the time comes. It should happen in the next few days,” he said.

After going through everything, Jasper suddenly realized something that seemed slightly off.

When other companies got listed, they usually worried about not being able to sell off all the shares allocated under their pre-IPO quotas, and they were usually left with a large sum of shares because of this. However, the pre-IPO quotas that Jasper had prepared were insufficient to meet the current demand.

As things stood, Henry's quota of 50 million dollars, the Laws' quota of 200 million dollars, Dawson Schuler's quota of 200 million dollars, the Langdons' quota of 100 million dollars, and the 50-million-dollar quota allocated to the company's veteran employees had all been confirmed. A total quota of 600 million dollars had already been met by these people alone.

"Mr. Laine, I would suggest not allowing any more pre-IPO allocations," Malibu offered Jasper his suggestion.

"A pre-IPO quota of 600 million dollars is already considered excessive as these will count toward the total share capital in the future. If it increases any further, too many shares will be cashed out at once when the market opens, and this will impact the share price."

Jasper nodded understandingly as he registered Malibu's words.

Once the stock price stabilizes, the pre-IPO quota of 600 million dollars will definitely be cashed out. If too many shares are cashed out at the same time, Sena's share price will indeed be affected.

If that happens, they might take a heavy blow.

Life at the Top Chapter 765

Jasper had just finished his discussion with Malibu when his phone rang. He had received a call from someone unexpected.

It was a call from Gale Hurlbutt.

"Old Master Hurlbutt, how have you been lately?"

It was necessary to remain respectful when he spoke to the leader of Sander Merchant Faction

Gale's laughter rang out from the other end of the phone. "You've been quite active recently, you sly child. Can't you put a hold on things for a moment?" He asked jokingly.

"There are too many wolves chasing after me from behind. I can't stop now. If I put a hold on things now, I'm afraid that they will swallow me whole," Jasper replied in a contemplative tone.

Gale was amused by Jasper's metaphor. "You're exaggerating. You're now a popular hotshot within the domestic financial circle. Countless people are using all possible means to seek out connections or win favors in hopes of buying over some of Sena's pre-IPO stocks from you," he said.

Jasper suddenly became alert upon hearing what he had said. "Old Master Hurlbutt, to be honest, I'm also struggling due to this issue right now. The pre-IPO quota is limited. The Laws want some of it, and my father-in-law wants some of it as well. I've also allocated some of it to Half-the-Harbor Langdon," he said.

"I can't refuse any of their requests. With requests coming in one after another, there simply isn't enough to go around. I have already used up the quota in my hands," he added.

Gale hummed and said, "You're a sly child indeed. Don't worry, I'm not interested in such businesses. I won't ask you for any."

After hearing what he said, Jasper was overcome with a sense of relief. If Gale disregarded his reputation and insisted on taking some of the reallocated shares, it would be impossible for Jasper to reject his request.

After all, both of them had shared a pleasant collaborative relationship before this.

Since a prominent old senior like Gale Hurlbutt was saying that he did not want any of the pre-listing shares, Jasper would not argue. Even so, Jasper did not mind asking him again out of courtesy.

“No, no. If you want it, I will allocate some to you regardless of the situation,” Jasper said.

“That trick doesn’t work on me. You’re a cunning one, sly child.”

Gale could tell that Jasper was giving him an offer out of courtesy since he had just become aware of the situation. Thus, he did not believe in him at all.

Since Jasper still did not immediately understand his intentions, Gale went straight to the point. “Alright, I’ll tell you everything straight. Initially, some of the members of Sander Merchant Faction that are involved in financial investment wanted to lend you a helping hand once they learned that Sena was about to get listed,” he said.

“However, I asked them not to join in since you already had the support of prominent families such as the Laws and the Langdons.”

A look of regret formed on Jasper’s face after he heard this. “Sigh, please thank them on my behalf. It is impossible to allocate any more shares to anyone now. We’ll work together if the opportunity arises in the future. We’ll earn a fortune together,” he said.

Gale agreed with him cheerily.

The two of them exchanged a few more words before hanging up the call.

After putting down the phone, Gale Hurlbutt got up from the armchair in his study. He snorted and cursed out loud with a smile on his face. “This sly child is always using the Laws and the Langdons to ward people off. Are you afraid that I’ll gobble you up? What a brazen and cowardly man,” he said.

At the same time, Jasper snorted out loud in his office as well.

“This old fox knows nothing about self-respect. Why is he being such a busybody at such an elderly age?”

...

It was evident that the news about Sena’s public listing had a large impact on the financial industry, as even someone like Gale Hurlbutt had been tasked with requesting an allocation of shares from Jasper.

Plenty of people could only watch Sena get listed without being able to join the bandwagon as they could not touch any of the preallocated shares. They were all beyond regretful for missing out on an excellent opportunity like this.

Riskless trading was extremely rare within the financial industry.

However, everyone was sure that they would gain stable profits by purchasing Sena’s shares!

The tides surged as Sena, whose impact had just turned the Internet industry upside down, caused the entire financial circle to be on edge once again.

Plenty of people were focused on the next step that Sena intended to take. People were also waiting for Sena to announce the specific plan for the company’s listing.

Amidst the raging chaos, William was the most upset person out there.

William, who had thought that he could successfully defeat both Jasper Laine and Celine Maynard this time around, sat in his office with a despondent look on his face.

“Sign it,” Celine said as she placed an investigation document before him.

William glanced at the investigation document and sneered. “Miss Maynard, you’re quite skillful. You actually managed to persuade the chairman to use his veto power and managed to proceed with Sena’s listing despite offending three directors,” he said.

Celine said calmly, “Anyone can tell that Colossal Investments’ collaboration with Sena will result in benefits for both parties. Do you think that you can stop me with those tricks of yours?”

Laughing coldly, William replied, “Don’t forget that you’re still under investigation. Although you’ve already passed the Terra regional investigation, you’ll still have to face a direct review after returning to the headquarters.”

“I’ve never harmed the interest of Colossal Investments, nor did I receive bribes from anyone ever since I joined the company. Do you think that I’m afraid of getting investigated?” Celine asked in a stony voice.

“Are you going to sign this document? If you aren’t, tell me right now. I don’t need to waste time over here.”

William picked up his pen and signed the document with a blank expression. He then pushed it back to Celine. “Don’t tell me whether you’ve done it or not. Just tell the investigation team,” he said coldly.

“You and Jasper shouldn’t be too proud of yourselves right now. Although Sena is going to be listed, its opening price is yet to be known. I heard that you promised to withdraw from the financial sector and compensate the bank with a sum equaling three times the commission if the share price is below a hundred US dollars,” he teased.

“I really want to know if Jasper is that good in bed, to the extent that you’re willing to pay such a high price in order to protect his interests.”

As soon as William finished speaking, Celine splashed a cup of hot coffee onto him.

William screamed and jumped up after being drenched in coffee. He slapped his face, which had scalded by the hot coffee, repeatedly.

“B*tch, what are you doing?!” William yelled out in anger.

Celine stared at William frigidly. A delicate and charming smile suddenly appeared on her icy face. “Please remember that not just anyone can joke with me like that. Take yourself for instance. Your words disgust me. If it happens again, you’ll get something far worse than a hot cup of coffee,” she said.

After that, Celine picked up the document, turned around, and left gracefully, leaving William roaring in fury in the office.

Life at the Top Chapter 766

After returning to her own office, Celine let down her guard and leaned back on the chair in exhaustion. She then closed her eyes to take a light nap.

She did not know how much time had passed when she was awoken by the sound of the door opening. She sat up straight in record time and recomposed herself to once again display the stance of a strong and capable woman in the workforce.

Celine sighed in relief when she noticed that it was her new secretary entering the room. "Is there anything urgent, Merrie?" She asked.

As Celine's new secretary, Merrie Jones admired this powerful woman whom she idolized from the bottom of her heart. "Miss Maynard, the investigation team has left today. I just wanted to ask about our work schedule tomorrow," she said courteously.

"Cancel everything," Celine said with a wave of her hand. "I'm returning to New York soon. My current priority is to get Sena listed successfully. Besides, I have to get reviewed by headquarters in New York," she added.

Merrie nodded. After a while, she mustered up her courage and said, "Miss Maynard, is it worth doing this? I heard that...I heard..."

"What did you hear? Did you hear that there's something going on between Jasper Laine and me? Am I his lover, or did Jasper Laine offer me tons of benefits so that I would help him out?" Celine asked in amusement.

A tense look of nervousness appeared on Merrie's face. "No, I don't believe the rumors circulating in the company. However, you have way too much on the line, Miss Maynard," she said anxiously.

Celine chuckled and said, "Alright, this is none of your concern. You can head home now."

Merrie turned around to leave after nodding in response.

Celine sat alone in her dark office room and stared at the colorful lights of the city below. She was overcome by an inexplicable sense of loneliness.

She took out her phone and called Jasper.

The moment the call went through, and a radiant smile formed on her lips, washing away all her fatigue and loneliness.

"Hey, it's been a few days but you didn't even bother to call. Didn't you say that you'd miss me?"

Thousands of miles away, Jasper was having a meeting with Jack Tanner and the other executives of Sena. He gestured for them to continue with the meeting and walked out of the meeting room. "I'm busy. Besides, you should have been busy these past few days as well. Anyways, we'll see each other very soon," he said with a chuckle.

"Once a scumbag gets what he wants, they usually use work as an excuse not to call," Celine said playfully.

Although they were talking through the phone, Jasper could picture the enchanting and charming expression on Celine's face right now. He could imagine the way that she would smile at him teasingly while fixing a provocative gaze upon him as she spoke.

Jasper emptied his mind of these thoughts at once and replied in a muffled voice, "After getting what I want? Others will think that there's something going on between us if they hear you say that."

“Alright, enough with the nonsense. In three days, we’ll be heading to New York,” Celine said.

“Has it been confirmed?” Jasper asked. His heart lurched. Although he had been preparing for it for some time, he was still inevitably excited when the moment finally arrived.

“It’s confirmed,” Celine said as she chuckled softly. “I have a feeling that you will shine brighter from the moment Sena gets listed. Everyone will look up to you in all of your dazzling glory,” she said in a complicated tone.

“...Were you previously involved in multi-level marketing?”

Jasper’s words caused Celine to hang up the call in a fit of rage.

Celine stared at the night view with a completely different mood as compared to a few minutes ago. She suddenly burst out in laughter after hanging up the call.

Her smile was the epitome of uncontended beauty. Her fatal, alluring smile could move the heart of anyone.

However, nobody had the chance to appreciate the view of her smile.

After returning to the meeting room in satisfaction, Jasper knocked on the table and gestured for Jack to stop the discussion. He looked at the executives of Sena, who were staring at him with sparkling gazes and looks of anticipation. Suddenly, he laughed out loud and said, “In three days, all the executives will get on a chartered flight to New York. The company will pay for everything!”

“Yay!”

“Long live Sena!”

Everyone in the office celebrated with a burst of excitement. The executives, who had been through countless struggles and were currently in their forties, were as exhilarated as children right now.

It was an extremely important and glorious moment in the life of a domestic corporate practitioner to be able to represent companies from Somerland on the Nasdaq listing in the year 2001.

They were standing right in front of the top 99.9999% of people in Somerland at this point in time.

...

Three days later.

Sena had booked a charter flight from Somerland Air. Jack had even driven Jasper out of the first-class business cockpit.

Henry had no choice but to take a seat in the economy class area with a somber look on his face while he watched Jasper chat with two women through video call at the same time using two different laptops.

He muttered the words "Make a mistake! Make a mistake! Make a mistake and let them find out the truth!" repeatedly under his breath.

Wendy Schuler was on the left while Anna Law was on the right.

An overwhelming tension underlined Jasper's usual calm expression.

Both women were oblivious to the situation. They did not know about each other's existence.

"Jasp, I've checked the weather. The weather in New York is quite cold right now. Remember to bring more clothes," Wendy said in a gentle voice.

“You aren’t allowed to fool around with other people!” Anna reminded him in a tone that was laced with threatening undertones.

From the way that they spoke, one could tell that both of these women had vastly different personalities.

Celine Maynard?

The thought of another woman surfaced in Jasper’s mind.

He pushed her image out of his mind immediately. It was already a battlefield with just the two of them. He only had two legs and two knees. If he added another laptop, where could he put it? Would he have to sprout another leg?

“Don’t worry, I know what to do,” Jasper replied to both of their contrasting questions with his immaculate speaking abilities. He then proceeded to smile at both of them.

“Sigh, I really want to go to New York as well... I’ve never been to Fifth Avenue or Wall Street before,” Wendy let out a sigh. The project at Southface River was coming to an end soon and she had to manage the project’s operation. If it were not for the project, she would have followed Jasper to New York.

“New York is a vanity fair for capital. It’s good to make more friends over there. It’ll benefit you,” Anna reminded him on a serious note.

“Yes, I’ll come back as soon as I can. I’ll bring presents for you,” Jasper said with a smile on his face.

“Alright, alright. The plane is about to take off, right? I’ll hang up now. Remember to call me after you arrive,” Wendy said with a small smile on her face.

“I’ll keep the present in mind. Let’s see if you manage to bring me something that I like,” Anna chuckled. “Alright, I’ll hang up now. Remember to call me when you arrive,” she added.

“The plane hasn’t taken off yet. Shall we continue chatting for a bit?”

When Henry heard what Jasper said, the renowned wealthy man from the second generation of Harbor City stared at Jasper with widened eyes. It was hard to believe that such a terrifying man existed in real life.

He advanced through the battlefield by opting to retreat. It was the perfect move.

Life at the Top Chapter 767

After bidding Wendy and Anna goodbye, Jasper led everyone onto the plane.

After a fourteen-hour flight, Jasper and the others arrived at New York, which was the economic center of the world’s most powerful country, the United States. It was also known as Gotham City.

After the plane landed, Jasper realized that Colossal Investments had sent a senior client manager named Jameson to greet them. Celine Maynard was nowhere to be seen.

“Where’s Celine?” Jasper frowned as he asked Jameson, who greeted them with a radiant smile on his face.

“Are you referring to the general manager of the Terra regional branch? She can’t make it as she’s busy with something at the moment, so she asked me to greet you on her behalf. Besides, I will also be in charge of contacting you on everything relating to the series of handover work that needs to be carried out for Sena’s listing,” Jameson said courteously.

Jasper halted in his steps after registering what he had said. He cast a thoughtful look at Jameson and asked, “Does Colossal Investments endorse the act of stealing the fruits of someone else’s labor?”

Jasper knew that Colossal Investments viewed their collaboration with Sena as a high priority case for the company. Plenty of people would surely get jealous of a case that brought forth as many of benefits as Sena’s listing did.

Jasper was worried that Celine would get buried by the power struggle occurring within Colossal Investments, and that someone else would take all the credit for her work.

If that was the case, he would need to have a talk with Colossal Investments.

Jameson was slightly stunned. Obviously, he did not understand what Jasper had meant by “stealing the fruits of someone else’s labor” as it was an idiom that was usually used exclusively in Somerland. However, after his assistant explained it to him, he immediately replied Jasper, “Mr. Laine, you must have misunderstood.”

“I’m only in charge of greeting you and communicating your needs and queries to the investment bank. Miss Maynard is still in charge of the specifics. She is currently caught up at the headquarters of Colossal Investments due to an urgent matter. She’ll be back once she’s done handling the issue,” he explained.

“I assure you that the investment bank will never change the person in charge of your listing without your consent.”

The look of distaste on Jasper’s face eased slightly after he heard Jameson say this. He smiled at Jameson and said, “Let’s head to the hotel at once. To be honest, I’m really tired after sitting on the plane for more than ten hours.”

Jameson was all nerves after he saw how quickly Jasper’s expression had changed. This man from Somerland did not seem like he would be easily fooled.

Colossal Investments would be responsible for the reception of all the executives in Sena's business team. As such, Colossal Investments had spent a generous sum of money to accommodate their needs.

The accommodation that they had arranged for Jasper and his team was the DoubleTree by Hilton Hotel, which was located adjacent to Wall Street.

Jasper and Jack each had a presidential suite to themselves whereas the other executives were each allocated to a luxurious suite respectively.

In terms of accommodation fees alone, their daily expenditure exceeded 10000 US dollars.

However, this sum of money was next to nothing for Colossal Investments.

Not long after arriving at the hotel, Jameson went to Jasper's room.

"Mr. Laine, according to the schedule, you and your team can rest for the time being. We will be holding a banquet for all of you in the evening. I will notify you beforehand."

Jasper nodded and said, "In that case, I'm sorry to have to trouble you."

A faint smile formed across Jameson's lips as he bowed down to Jasper. "It's my honor to be at your service," he said.

After speaking, Jameson walked out of the room swiftly.

Jasper sat down on the sofa and pondered something. He then made a phone call to Celine.

The situation aside, he had already arrived at New York, but Celine had yet to show herself. Because of this, Jasper sensed that something was off.

Life at the Top Chapter 768

Nevertheless, Celine did not pick up the call even after Jasper had dialed her phone number for some time.

Just as he was considering whether to contact Jameson with a frown, Jasper heard the sound of his door opening. This was accompanied by the sound of a phone ringing.

Picking up his phone, Jasper stared at Celine, who was standing by the door with her phone in her hand, speechless. She had a radiant smile plastered upon her face. "How are you capable of getting my room card no matter which hotel I stay at?" He asked.

Celine smiled proudly and said, "Please don't lodge a complaint about me. This hotel is one of Colossal Investments' partners. Clients of Colossal Investments will usually have their accommodation booked here, and it took me a long time to get acquainted with the manager. If you report me, it won't be that easy to get your room card the next time."

"I didn't think of that. Thanks for reminding me," Jasper said with a smile.

Celine walked into the room with her hands behind her back. She held the room card in her hand and closed the door on her way in. She then sat down on the sofa and surveyed the surroundings of the room. "Are you used to staying here?" She asked.

"Hotels are all the same, aren't they?" Jasper replied. He leaned on the sofa and fixed his gaze upon Celine, who was inches away from him. "Jameson said that you were busy with work," he said.

“Do you think that Sena’s listing is an easy matter?” Celine asked as she rolled her eyes at him.

“I know that you think that the commission fee charged by our investment bank is ridiculous. You even previously told me that I was an accomplice to a committee of vultures, “However, have you ever thought about it properly? For a foreign company to get listed on the Nasdaq, we’d need to conduct a tax review, asset review, debt review, and credit review in Somerland, and then covert these review reports into evaluation documents.

“This evaluation document will be sent to a third-party company for auditing after going through Colossal Investments’ internal professional evaluation. If there is no problem, it will be submitted to the Nasdaq Review Committee to be reviewed.

“Even after the trial, there are still a lot of branches and departments that we need to visit one by one. That process itself is so annoyingly tedious.”

Celine rolled her eyes as she continued rambling on. “After everything that I’ve done, I’ll only be getting 1% of the total commission at most,” she remarked.

“Quit your job then. Join my company. You won’t earn a penny less than you do right now,” Jasper said.

Celine fixed a gaze of amusement on Jasper and asked, “Are you really going to take care of me?”

“You can say that. I really do value your abilities anyways,” Jasper replied.

“Tsk tsk, what a scumbag. Other men are only after women’s bodies, but you’re asking me to work for you. It’ll only happen in your dreams,” Celine said.

Celine placed her fair arm on the armrest of the sofa and supported her temple with her hand.

This posture made her seem indolent but charming at the same time. She looked just like a wealthy lady that was lazing on the couch while emanating her charm and beauty to her heart's content.

"Aren't you even going to consider it?" Jasper asked half-jokingly.

"I'm only interested in the financial industry and banking. Let's talk about it again when you open a bank," Celine drawled.

After chatting for a while, Celine stood up and said, "Alright, I need to go back. A lot of prominent figures from Wall Street will be attending the banquet in the evening. They're extremely interested in you, so you can try networking. Colossal Investments will send some executives over as well. Contact Jameson if there's anything that you need."

"Aren't you coming?" Jasper asked with a frown.

Celine leaned on the doorframe and faced forward while she fixed her gaze upon Jasper. Her eyes dazzled under the light. "Do you want me to come?" She asked.

After speaking, Celine opened the door without waiting for his response. "I won't go even if you want me to. I've been extremely busy these few days. You probably won't see me for the next few days as I have loads of stuff that I need to handle. However, I'll be there on the day of the listing," she told him.

Life at the Top Chapter 769

After walking out from the DoubleTree by Hilton Hotel, the smile on Celine's face gradually dissipated.

By the time she arrived at a black commercial vehicle that had been parked at the entrance of the hotel for a long time, the expression on her face was impassive.

The door of the commercial vehicle slid open to reveal two men and two women sitting inside the car. One of the blonde women spoke out in a sarcastic tone, "Miss Maynard, have you finished catching up with your friend? If you're done, we should go now. We have fulfilled your request to visit Jasper Laine, but we hope that you can cooperate with us during our following investigation."

Celine eyed the blonde woman coldly. "Catherine, don't think that I'm oblivious about what happened between William and you. Didn't the two of you cause the scandal in the office back then? He threw you aside for his own future. Just look at you now. So many years have passed, but you're still so loyal to him," she said.

Catherine's expression darkened as she gritted her teeth. "Celine Maynard, don't get ahead of yourself. Don't forget that you're now being investigated by the bank!" She blurted out.

"An investigation is just an investigation. What's the matter? When have I ever said that I wouldn't cooperate with you?" Celine questioned her in a frigid tone.

"It's just an investigation. Maintain a polite attitude in front of me. I'm still the general manager of the Terra regional branch of Colossal Investments. In terms of position, I rank higher than any of you. If you offend me in any way, none of you will be let off easily."

Celine finished speaking with an impassive expression on her face. She then got into the car.

"Start the car," Celine took the initiative to give the order.

The employee that was in charge of driving the car was stunned. He turned to look at Catherine instinctively.

However, Catherine had a sullen expression plastered upon her face. She wanted to retort against Celine, but she did not dare to do so. "Start the car!" She said through gritted teeth.

The black commercial vehicle slowly left. It merged into the heavy traffic and headed toward the headquarters of Colossal Investments.

...

It was almost time for the evening banquet.

As the representative of Colossal Investments, William had returned to New York as well. He arrived at the banquet hall of the hotel before the actual event time.

DoubleTree by Hilton Hotel was Colossal Investments' long-term partner. Therefore, the people here all knew William, who was a young elite within the financial circle. They all greeted him politely.

William nodded with a smile in response.

He grabbed hold of a staff member and asked him nonchalantly, "May I know who the service manager in charge of the banquet in the evening is?"

The staff member was surprised by the fact that William was talking to him. He immediately replied, "That would be me, Mr. William."

"That's great," William said cheerily as he took out a hundred US dollar bill and handed it over to him. "The banquet tonight is extremely important. Not only will the executives of Colossal Investments be here, but a lot of elites from Wall Street will be in attendance as well. This is an opportunity for Colossal Investments to demonstrate its capabilities to Sena, so you must guard the event strictly. Don't let any strangers into the hall," he said.

"Especially a young man from Somerland. Understood?"

The service manager was slightly stunned. “Mr. William, I will definitely carry out my responsibilities to the fullest of my abilities, but a young man from Somerland? Isn’t Sena a company from Somerland? Is there a mistake?” He asked instinctively.

I want you to make a mistake!

William thought to himself. Nevertheless, he grinned widely at the staff member and said, “Don’t worry. Don’t bother about those who are older, but as for a young man... Think about it, how can a young man in his twenties attend such an important event? Anyways, just remember to check the guest list strictly. Here is your tip.”

The service manager pondered upon it for a while and figured that there should not be any problem with his requests. He agreed to it at once and put away his tip happily.

William turned around and left with a smile on his face. He felt extremely exhilarated.

He knew that arranging for someone to prevent Jasper from entering the hall was not anything great, but he just wanted to disgust him. That was more than enough for him.

William wanted to embarrass Jasper so that he would feel disgusted by them.

He felt beyond excited and satisfied upon thinking about the awkward scenario that would occur later.

...

The evening banquet commenced at the set timing.

With Colossal Investments' persuasion, and the Sena's attractive concept, Sena's pre-listing banquet managed to draw the attention of a lot of famous investors from Wall Street.

This evening banquet could be regarded as a high-end networking event between business elites.

Jasper attended the event clad in a formal business suit. As he had left his room slightly late, he did not ask Jack and the others to wait for him. He decided to head straight to the banquet on his own instead.

He had just arrived at the entrance when a manager with a blank expression on his face came over and said, "Sir, please show me your invitation!"

"Invitation?"

Jasper frowned. As the main stakeholder in tonight's banquet, Jasper did not need an invitation.

The manager smiled. He was just about to say something when the door to the hall opened.

Jameson walked out in a hurry. He seemed to be looking for someone. His gaze shone once he caught sight of Jasper, and he walked over courteously at once.

"Mr. Laine, the banquet has already begun. Without the main stakeholder, the banquet can't commence. Follow me in right now," he said.

Jameson's words shocked the service manager.

Jasper chuckled and patted the service manager on his shoulder. He then followed Jameson into the hall.

Jasper thought that the manager was just carrying out his usual responsibilities. He would not hold a grudge over a small issue like that.

Meanwhile, that manager broke out into cold sweat as he stared at the two figures walking into the hall. He had prepared for the worst and thought that he was about to meet his ancestors in heaven.

“Is this that certain someone who wasn’t supposed to be eligible to participate in the banquet? He is the main person being celebrated in tonight’s banquet! You b*stard, William. I hope you’re faced with bad luck tonight!”

The service manager dabbed at the cold sweat on his face. He was still pretty shaken up. He was lucky that Jasper did not blame him for all the trouble, or otherwise, his job would be at risk!

Life at the Top Chapter 770

When Jasper entered the banquet hall, his appearance immediately attracted everyone’s attention.

Under the propaganda deemed necessary by Colossal Investments, Jasper’s identity as the largest private beneficiary from the crude oil futures market last year had been disclosed to the public.

Another important identity of his, the organizer of the Harbor City share market rescue plan, had been revealed as well.

With these achievements associated with him, Jasper attracted the attention of everyone in the banquet hall, which was full of elites from Wall Street.

Everyone looked at this young man from Somerland with a curious and inquiring gaze. They wanted to see exactly what kind of extraordinary man was capable of making such an awe-inspiring move in the crude oil futures market.

“Friends, look who’s here!”

Jameson announced to everyone with a loud laugh as he wrapped an arm around Jasper’s shoulders passionately.

“This is Mr. Laine, whom I’ve told all of you about. He’s from the ancient and mysterious Somerland.

“Just like that great country, he is full of extraordinary power. During the crude oil futures incident some time ago, he snatched a bunch of coveted benefits from the hands of governments and capital predators.

“Of course, there’s the shocking Harbor City share market rescue plan as well. Mr. Laine, who is right beside me, initiated the entire plan. I believe everyone here is familiar with that wonderful game of capital, right?”

Shoved under the spotlight, Jasper responded to everyone’s curious gazes with a wide grin on his face.

Meanwhile, Jack Tanner, Henry Law, and the others stared at him with bitter smiles on their faces.

“The West really favors young geniuses. Old men like us don’t catch their attention,” Jack joked.

Henry was slightly envious as well. “When can I ever be that awesome?” He asked.

Jasper greeted the elites of Wall Street in fluent English.

Although these people were not the top dogs on Wall Street, they were not random nobodies either. Otherwise, they would not have been invited to this banquet.

In a larger sense, they were the backbone of Wall Street.

Because of this, Jasper naturally did not mind forging an amicable relationship with them.

In the future, he would be participating in the international market. Thus, it was possible that one of these people will be of great use to him in the future.

Not long after, Jameson came over with a blonde middle-aged man.

“Mr. Laine, let me introduce you to this man. He’s one of the most prominent figures within the real estate industry in the United States. He really admires your ability and wishes to get to know you.”

As soon as Jameson finished speaking, Jasper turned around to look at the said man. His gaze instantly wavered once he set his eyes upon him.

He would not have been that shocked if even Winston Bennett or Charles Granger had appeared before him.

However, the person before him had an insanely powerful identity.

He was the future president of the United States.

Donnie Todd.

He was from the second generation of an extremely rich family in the United States. After taking over the family business, he gradually flourished and became one of the most powerful real estate developers in the United States.

As a free-spirited man, he changed his focus to politics after engaging in business of the highest order... He then rose to the absolute top once he got into politics.

It was simply incredible.

However, all of this would take place in the future. As things stood, he was still a real estate tycoon in the United States right now. He did not have any other special identities.

Jasper did not expect Donnie Todd to appear at this banquet.

“Nice to meet you, Mr. Laine. I see a reflection of my younger self in you. You’re as capable and determined as I was back then.”

Todd said in his characteristic voice that resembled a drake.

Just like his personality, he was a detached and conceited man. He never failed to glorify himself even when others were already showering him with praise.

Life at the Top Chapter 771

Someone like this resembled the standard antagonist depicted in novels.

However, he was a winner in real life.

“Nice to meet you, Mr. Todd. I’ve been hearing about you for a long time now,” Jasper smiled and extended his hand.

It was now Todd’s turn to be surprised. “Oh?” He asked.

Jameson, who was standing beside them, had a curious look on his face as well.

“I really enjoy watching movies. I remember that there was a movie that had been shot in your family’s hotel, and you made a cameo in it as well,” Jasper said.

This was a small snippet that not much people knew about even in future years. However, it was something that genuinely existed.

Todd burst out into laughter and said, “Mr. Laine, not many people know about this. However, you are right. I did have a cameo role, but I didn’t expect you to notice it.”

“I’m really observant toward details,” Jasper said jokingly with a shrug.

Todd’s appearance caused complicated emotions to rise up within Jasper.

After all, Todd was considered one of the most prominent figures that Jasper had met after his reincarnation. In the future, he would be someone that had the ability to directly affect global situations.

Nevertheless, Jasper did not pay too much heed this.

Ultimately, Todd's future had nothing much to do with him.

In any case, the most he could do right now was to use this opportunity to get acquainted with him and leave a good impression on him.

That was all that he could do.

Jasper had no intention of participating in the United States' future political arena. One could drown if they walked into deep waters.

As one of the top real estate developers in the United States, Todd's conversation with Jasper attracted the attention of almost all the American guests.

"Mr. Laine, I've heard about what you've gone through as well. I think that Sena is a great investment opportunity," Todd said.

Jasper smiled and replied, "Of course.

"Sena is the first domestic Internet company from Somerland to be listed on the Nasdaq after the Internet bubble burst. Its performance will largely affect the confidence of the other domestic Internet companies within Somerland as well.

"You must know that Somerland has reformed and opened up, therefore its rise was only a matter of time. In light of this, I can confidently say that Sena has great potential, both subjectively and objectively."

"As far as Sena is concerned, it is the first Internet company that has truly achieved profitability instead of having to survive through capital injections from investors.

“Not only does it own Somerland’s top-ranking website portal right now, but it also operates the world’s second-largest online game. For a company like that, I really can’t think of any way it would make a loss.”

Plenty of people showed contemplative expressions after listening to what Jasper had said.

Todd smiled and said, “I believe your vision. Jameson, does Sena have any pre-IPO shares available for purchase?”

“My apologies, Mr. Todd. The pre-IPO shares have all been bought when Mr. Laine was back in Somerland,” Jameson said in a somber tone.

Everyone’s expressions changed immediately.

No matter how good a company was or how favorable it was to the public, it was unlikely for its shares to possess such huge demand before the IPO.

After all, this was a form of investment that was no different from gambling.

However, Sena had managed to sell out their pre-IPO quota a long time ago. The demand for its share seemed to far exceed its supply.

Noticing the regretful look in Todd’s gaze, Jasper chuckled and made a suggestion without thinking twice. “If you’re really interested in purchasing the shares, I can provide you with a special pre-IPO allocation of 10 million US dollars, Mr. Todd,” he said.

To Jasper, this was equivalent to sending money straight to Todd’s doorstep.

However, if he could manage to win Todd’s favor with a mere amount of 10 million US dollars, it would benefit him greatly.

“That would be excellent,” Todd said. His gaze warmed as he stared at Jasper and replied, “I will definitely be there on the day of Sena’s listing.”

Life at the Top Chapter 772

“Let’s toast to the successful listing of Sena tomorrow!”

Jameson was good at creating a celebratory atmosphere. In other words, he was extremely aware about some of the social norms of the upper-class in the United States.

Therefore, his behaviors and actions were all catered to please the people within these circles.

Everyone immediately reciprocated to his cues and prompts.

After all, with Jasper’s solid track record and Todd’s favoritism, most of them now wished to get their hands on some of Sena’s pre-IPO allocation.

Jasper was not stingy about this either.

He generously allocated another 10 million US dollars to each and every person that was present at the banquet.

10 million US dollars was not a small sum of money to Jasper, but he did not have to worry about earning money when he was on Wall Street. This was an important investment to forge more amicable connections.

Although a total quota of 10 million US dollars did not sound like a lot, everyone knew that the share price would spike once Sena got listed. If they invested a total of a million US dollars right now, it was likely that it would soon rise to 5 or even 8 million US dollars not too long after.

Nobody would reject the opportunity to earn easy money.

These elites of Wall Street, who were close associates of Colossal Investments, showed a high amount of admiration for Jasper due to his sensible way of handling things.

The banquet then officially commenced, at which point everyone sought an opportunity to talk to Jasper. During the entire process, Jasper received a lot of business cards.

His 10 million US dollar investment had started to show its efficacy almost instantly.

Meanwhile, Jack and the others had started mingling around as well. They began making toasts with the elites from Wall Street.

Although these elites did not have much individual power on their own, the widespread effects brought about by their favor toward Sena were clear.

Jack and the others were beyond delighted to get acquainted with these elites.

Besides, Jack had once been a prestigious professional manager from Weresoft. He wouldn't be out of place at a time like this.

In addition to the Wall Street elites that had been invited to this banquet, some senior leaders from Colossal Investments had attended the event as well.

The vice-president and two directors were at the banquet right now.

It was an event that was of a considerable scale.

Everyone treated Jasper with a high degree of friendliness and kindness except for one person.

William.

Standing by the corner, William watched Jasper skillfully weave his way through the crowd with a heavy gaze. He had a stiff expression on his face due to his overwhelming jealousy.

Initially, he had intended to embarrass Jasper. He had even made a pact with a few of the elites whom he was close to, and they had planned to humiliate Jasper when the banquet commenced.

However, Jasper had easily resolved the incident at the entrance. The elites whom he was close to had long forgotten their agreement—they were currently thinking about the benefits that the pre-IPO allocation that they had just received would bring to them in the future.

“F*cking b*stard, what a group of short-sighted country bumpkins!” William cursed under his breath harshly.

“Hey hey hey, come over here.”

Just as William was consumed by infuriation, the voice of a young man rang out.

It had been a long time since someone addressed him with a simple “hey”. William turned around and stared at the man with an icy gaze.

The man had despicable facial features that were characteristic of Somerland, and he seemed to be around Jasper’s age.

William identified this person’s name from the name list of Jasper’s accompanying executives. This man was Henry Law.

He heard that he was from the wealthy second generation in Somerland.

William's lips curved in disdain.

What kind of wealthy second generation could come out from a backward country like Somerland?

He had to be a country bumpkin that did not even know how to drink coffee, but thought that he was a nobleman just because he possessed a small amount of money.

"I'm calling you. Why are you daydreaming?"

Henry frowned in distaste. Were the hotel attendants in New York all so stuck-up? He did not seem to pay their guests any heed although he was clearly calling out to him.

Clad in a business suit, William did not engage in conversation with anyone or eat anything; He simply stood stiffly by the corner. Therefore, Henry had mistaken him as a hotel attendant.

"What is it?" William asked, suppressing the blazing fury within him.

"Go and get me a cocktail. Occasions like these are really boring," Henry said in an idle tone.

William finally got a grasp of the situation at hand. Did Henry Law mistake him for a hotel attendant?

Rage surged through him immediately as he pinned a frigid gaze upon Henry and asked, "Don't you have legs? What do you take me for?"

Henry frowned. He was growing impatient.

“Do you want a tip?” Henry asked. He then pulled out a bill from his pocket and threw it at William. “Sure, today is my brother-in-law’s special day. I’d rather not hold a grudge against you. I’ve given you the tip. Go get me a cocktail at once,” he said.

“...”

William stared at the ten-dollar bill in his hands. He felt like entire being, from his body to his soul, was being greatly humiliated at that moment.

“I’m not a hotel attendant!” William said stonily while gritting his teeth.

“Why are you standing here if you aren’t a hotel attendant?” Henry asked as he stared straight at him with an odd glance. He frowned again. “Do you think that the tip is inadequate?” He asked.

His words caused William to burst out in a fit of anger. He stared at Henry impassively and said, “Take your damn money back, you f*cking Somerland monkey.”

Who was Henry Law?

As one of the top members of the wealthy second generation, others had to thank him for his mercy if he chose to spare them.

William’s indolent attitude already triggered Henry’s temper. If this occasion was not important to Jasper, Henry would have slapped him in the face right there and then.

As soon as William insulted him, an overcast expression formed on Henry’s face.

Henry, who preferred actions over words, picked up a piece of cake from the platter of food on the banquet table and smashed it into William’s face without saying a single word.

William did not expect Henry to spring into action straight away. He was taken aback by swift movements.

Right then, Henry, who was overwhelmed with fury, kicked him right in the stomach.

Although Henry was not a martial arts master like Julian, he was pretty close. He had learnt a few moves from him, and also went to the gym quite frequently. Therefore, it was impossible for William to stand up against him.

William shouted out loud as Henry kicked him. He then fell down and sprawled onto the ground.

The loud ruckus immediately attracted everyone's attention.

Unlike in Somerland, the elites from Wall Street crowded around the scene and started watching them excitedly instead of showing fear or disgust when they caught sight of a physical scuffle.

Jasper made his way over as well.

"What's wrong?" He asked.

Henry grinned widely at Jasper and said, "This idiot called me a Somerland monkey, so I wanted to create some entertainment for your banquet."

Henry thought that Jasper would stop him, but he nodded instead. He glanced at William and said, "Do whatever you want, but don't kill him."

Life at the Top Chapter 773

With Jasper giving him the green light, Henry was instantly elated.

However, seeing as the rest of the guests had also been attracted by the commotion and had surrounded them, there was no way Henry could run over and deliver a few more kicks to William now.

As expected, a Vice President from Colossal Investments' Headquarters soon walked over.

"Mr. Laine, Mr. Law, I believe that there must've been some sort of misunderstanding."

The Vice President smiled wryly. He was infuriated by William's foolish actions, but he had no other choice than to clean up his mess after him.

Others may not know who Henry was, but he sure did.

Thus, he knew that it was going to result in huge trouble the moment William, that imbecile, insulted Henry.

To some degree, the Vice President would much rather William have insulted Jasper instead of Henry.

Jasper looked at the Vice President calmly and spoke in a meaningful tone, "I see. So, the Vice President believes that William's verbal attack and racist remarks to my partner were merely a misunderstanding, correct?"

In the United States, racial discrimination was a huge issue that was broadcasted loudly.

Hence, right after Jasper spoke, the expressions of the black people in the hall, as well as the white Vice President changed.

The black people looked at William distastefully, causing the Vice President to feel the urge to kick William twice more.

“Mr. Laine, Mr. Law, please believe me when I say that Colossal Investments will not allow any racist behavior or opinions. I’m sure Mr. William had accidentally misspoken.”

With that, the Vice President turned to look at William who had cake all over his face and was wearing an embarrassed and painful expression. “What are you waiting for? Apologize now!”

William suppressed the burning anger within him. He did not understand why he had to apologize when he was the one who had gotten hit.

However, under the Vice President’s demanding gaze, William bit his tongue. He knew apologizing was the only way to resolve this issue peacefully.

Apologizing to Henry was fine, he would treat it as an insignificant attack on his dignity.

However, he would much rather die than apologize to Jasper.

Rooted in place, William ignored the burning agony in his abdomen. He felt like a clown, one that everyone was currently laughing at.

All of this was Jasper’s fault!

William blamed Jasper for everything.

Taking a deep breath, William first apologized to Henry with a bow. While the latter sneered, William turned to Jasper.

“My apologies, Mr. Laine.”

Jasper took in William’s pitiful state and spoke calmly, “Now that I think about it, we’re old friends, aren’t we, Mr. William? If memory serves me right, you’ve always had something against me, haven’t you, Mr. William?”

William calmly replied, “Those are personal matters. They have nothing to do with what happened today.”

“Is that so?” Jasper chuckled, “And yet, I’ve heard that you tried to prevent Sena from going public through Colossal Investments, Mr. William.”

When he said this, all the guests’ looked intrigued.

Who would have thought that there was such a story behind today’s incident?

The Vice President’s expression changed as well and he hastily turned to Jasper, “No matter what, Mr. Laine, our partnership is going well now, isn’t it? I have faith that our partnership won’t deteriorate because of such external factors.”

Life at the Top Chapter 774

Jasper chuckled but neither agreed nor disagreed with the statement.

Capitalists were like vampires when it came to earning profits. They could shift from being an enemy to a friend for the sake of making a buck, but they were also just as likely to shift from a friend to become an enemy in the future.

That was why Jasper had kept Colossal Investments at a very specific distance from himself.

Not too far, but not too close either. Not too friendly, but also not too cold.

Essentially, they were both just using each other.

Their relationship was currently in its honeymoon phase, and Jasper wanted to make William's life difficult during this period. However, he made sure not to go too far.

"You're very right, but I do think that Colossal Investments should also reconsider whether some people are suited for their positions within the company or not. Mr. William, for example, should truly be reconsidered, considering our partnership almost ended because of him."

Jasper's words had the Vice President deep in thought as he repeatedly looked over at William.

William's eyes grew red in infuriation. He did not expect Jasper to bring up past incidents during such an event and rat on him in front of the investment company's senior executives.

Seeing how the situation was turning against him, William let go of all his inhibitions and fought back.

"What's the point of saying all this, Jasper? You can say what you want, but it won't change the fact that Celine has taken the blame for you. Do you really think that Sena would be getting listed so easily if not for Celine?"

Jasper replied indifferently, "I think you forgot something very important here. The only reason I came to Colossal was because of my connections with Celine. I believed that both her business prowess and other strengths could help Sena go public as quickly as possible.

"That's why I came to Colossal. Not because of how powerful Colossal was, but because Celine was in Colossal. I could've gone for Merlene or Layman if all I needed was a company that could sell Sena's shares and help Sena go public on the Nasdaq."

William scoffed. Wiping the cake off his face, he did not hold back at all. "Stop making it sound so professional. Nobody knows if you and Celine have had any secret deals behind our backs."

Jasper's expression immediately grew cold when he heard that.

Integrity was much more important in the financial industry as compared to any other.

Tens of millions passed through the industry's hands every minute, and the moment you were suspected of corruption, it would become a black mark on that person's record forever.

That person could be exceptionally talented, but they would not be valued after they were marked.

From what Jasper could see, William was merely using this chance to defame Celine.

There was no way he would let such a thing happen.

"Celine and my relationship is purely professional, and she has only discussed the partnership with me on behalf of Colossal Investments. Please provide evidence if you claim that there has been any secret deal between the two of us, or I will lodge a complaint to Colossal about your acts of defamation and exercise my right to sue you."

The appropriate solution varied depending on the circumstance. The financial industry was filled with elites, and Jasper could not counter William's verbal garbage with brute force.

Formal complaints and legal proceedings, however, were the perfect solution.

As expected, the guests all nodded at Jasper's determined words.

Even so, William scoffed at the sight of this and replied, "Colossal Investments is currently reviewing Celine. How else would you explain her disappearance over the past few days? It's because she can't come at all! The case is solid. She wouldn't be undergoing investigation if you two hadn't done anything illegal!"

As his words fell, everyone felt an immediate shift in Jasper's aura.

It was as if anger had been brewing under the man's gentle facade the entire time, and it was all exploding now.

"What did you say?!"

Life at the Top Chapter 775

William sneered at the sight of Jasper's stormy expression. "What, are you still pretending not to know anything at all?"

"Stop acting already, there's no way you wouldn't know about Celine being under review. Are you telling me that you haven't realized any abnormalities at all? Or did Celine just not tell you anything?"

Scoffing, William stared at Jasper coldly. He acted as if he had just caught a thief red-handed and was looking down at Jasper with disdain.

"If you had the guts to collude with Celine from the outside, then why don't you have the guts to admit it?"

"Though I have to say, I'm impressed. I'd like to know how you managed to get Celine to be so loyal to you. She values her career more than she values her life, and yet, she's willing to put her entire career on the line for you."

“What a shame, it’s over for her now.”

With that, William sneered at Jasper disdainfully and spoke, “Congratulations to you though, now you’re successful and famous. All the benefits go to you, and you don’t even need to take responsibility for anything.”

Jasper remained calm as he listened to William speak, his mind filling with memories of Celine’s unusual behavior as of late.

While Celine had maintained her shy and peculiar personality as always in front of him, Jasper had long felt that something was off.

Jasper did not think too much back then, for he believed what Celine had told him about her being busy helping Sena go public.

However, now that he heard William’s words, this, coupled with Celine’s unusual behavior, caused a clear idea to appear in Jasper’s mind.

“I need to see Colossal Investment’s President, Mr. Paulson, right now,” Jasper told the Vice President.

He completely ignored William, who was still speaking. That man played an insignificant role in all this, and all Jasper wanted to do now was understand what was happening. Then he would leave it to Celine to decide her fate.

The Vice President looked hesitant and replied, “According to our schedule, you and the President are set to meet at 10 a.m. tomorrow morning. I don’t know if the President is free if you wish to change the time so suddenly...”

Jasper ignored his explanation and spoke solemnly, “Mr. Vice President, I hope you understand that this meeting will affect whether Sena will continue to work with Colossal Investments or not.”

The Vice President's expression froze instantly. This was no longer something he could decide, so he quickly replied, "I'll contact the President now and schedule a meeting as soon as possible."

Then he left in a hurry.

Witnessing the scene, William could not help but sneer now that he had let go of all his inhibitions.

"You're telling me you don't know anything at all, Jasper?"

"What a stupid woman Celine is, haha. I can't believe this fool actually managed to fight against me for a couple of years. A miracle, really."

Jasper looked at William coldly. "Celine and I are innocent. You can search and investigate as much as you wish, but you're not going to find anything."

William chortled. "What a pair of partners in crime. That's what Celine said too, but how do you two explain the 20% discount in commission fee Celine gave you, hmm?"

Jasper replied calmly. "That's a decision she made with her own authority. Why does anyone have to explain this?"

William scoffed. "Looks like you really don't understand. Allow me to explain, then."

Life at the Top Chapter 776

“It’s true that as the general manager of the Terra regional branch of Colossal Investments, she has the right to lower your commission fee. However, this is also money that Colossal should receive, so she needs to provide a reasonable excuse for such a decision. One that neither she, nor you, has provided thus far.

“That alone is enough to screw her over!

William’s expression was wretched and twisted with delight, as if nothing sparked more joy in him than seeing Celine and Jasper in trouble.

At that moment, the Vice President returned and told Jasper, “The President’s willing to see you. Do you want to go over now?”

Jasper nodded. Instructing Jack to entertain the guests present properly, Jasper then followed the Vice President away.

Standing amidst the group of people, William stared sinisterly at Jasper’s disappearing figure and sneered.

The sneer was still on his face when a hand came to slap him right on his forehead.

“What the f*ck are you smiling at, looking so ugly and vile. Laugh again and I’ll slap your teeth out, is that what you want? F*ck right off, you disgust me.”

...

Colossal Investment Headquarters in Wall Street was not too far from the hotel that Jasper was staying in, being only two blocks away.

Following the Vice President in, Jasper took the designated elevator after alighting the car and arrived at the top floor.

In a luxurious-looking office, Jasper saw the head of the global economic and financial industry—Wharton Paulson.

Despite being past the age of sixty, Paulson still looked full of vigor while his eyes shone as if he could read minds.

Jasper was greeted exceptionally respectfully when he entered through the doors, with Paulson standing up and walking over from his office desk. He reached out and shook Jasper's hand. "Hello, Laine. It's nice to finally meet you."

No matter how you looked at it, Jasper did not hold a candle to Paulson's glory and capabilities. Thus, he was rather shocked by Paulson's politeness.

Jasper shook Paulson's hand and spoke, "You've heard of me, Mr. Paulson?"

Paulson invited Jasper to sit on the sofa in the meeting area and spoke with a smile, "I've been watching the Somerland stockmarket all this while. I thought that the western economy had reached a bottleneck after the year 2000 and that it would no longer be the center of the world's economic development like it was a few decades ago. I personally believe that Somerland was more qualified to take on such an important responsibility instead."

Jasper was shocked by Paulson's foresight, as reality would indeed unfurl as he had predicted. Somerland's position in the world's structure would also grow more important, while its economic development would also account for a greater percentage of worldwide growth.

However, neither of these were reasons behind why Jasper had come to see him today.

“Mr. Paulson, while I very much wish to continue exchanging views and opinions on the world’s future, please forgive me, as I have come today to speak about Celine Maynard instead,” Jasper spoke straightforwardly.

Paulson gave a small smile and replied, “I knew that you’d come to speak to me about this. But do not worry, Colossal Investments is not some violent hoodlum agency. A probity review is merely an investigation whereby we inquire about the reviewee’s previous work.

“Thus, Miss Maynard is very much alright now. Should you find it necessary, you are welcome to meet her at anytime.”

“But before we start, Laine, would you like some tea or coffee? I believe we should talk.”

“Tea, please. Thank you.”

Life at the Top Chapter 777

After the secretary brought two cups of tea over, Jasper spoke, “Mr. Paulson, I’d like to know how Colossal views Celine.”

Paulson chuckled and spoke, “Before I tell you that, I’d like to know how you view Celine.’

Jasper arched his brow slightly and replied, “She is my friend. When it comes to our working relationship, she has capabilities that others could only wish to possess, and thus, is able to save a lot of my time. In terms of our private life, she has a very unique personality and charisma, and I am fortunate to call her my friend.”

Paulson nodded. Leaning against the sofa, he replied, "That's a great answer. Honestly, I think I'm starting to envy you for having such a great friend. But Laine, you have to understand that the investment industry is very different from other industries.

"I encourage my employees to be friends with their clients, but they can only be friends professionally. The moment a client oversteps what we consider a normal friendship, it becomes a problem for both the investment company and the employee themselves."

Jasper replied calmly, "I understand the investment industry has its own rules of survival. But don't you think it's a bit too much to suspect Celine, who had just brought the investment company such a huge business deal, Mr. Paulson?"

"It's a necessary review. You have to understand that Colossal has its reasons too. Firstly, the biggest issue now is that neither you nor Celine can explain the reason behind the reduction in 20commission fee.

"There are clearly stated regulations within Colossal Investments. Someone in as high a position as Celine does indeed have the authority to reduce commission fee, and her limit coincidentally happens to be 20%... however, while she does have the authority to do so, it is also crucial she provides us a reasonable explanation when she does.

"She has to explain why she did it, and what benefits her action will bring the company. The truth now is that she cannot come up with a reasonable explanation for the 20% discount, so an internal review has to be conducted."

Jasper's mind went back to that night, of how Celine reminded her of a stubborn girl who wanted the pair of high heels in the showcase window. He could not possibly tell Colossal that Celine had given him a 20% decrease in commission fees because he had broken the glass and gotten Celine the pair of heels she wanted.

“You might not know this, Laine, but when a senior executive objected to her plan of helping Sena go public, Celine had promised me that she was willing to accept any investigation as long as the plan went through as stated.

“Moreover, she has also promised to resign immediately and compensate the Colossal three times the commission fee if Sena did not meet an IPO of 100 US Dollars.”

Jasper shot to his feet at Paulson’s words.

“Has she gone mad?” Jasper spoke angrily.

Jasper never had to cooperate with Colossal Investments, for they were not the only option available to him. There were other investment companies like Layman and Merlene elsewhere.

Jasper would never have agreed to work with these people if he knew that Celine had paid such a high price just to keep the deal going.

Jasper felt a nameless fury fester within him as he thought back to how carefree Celine had acted with him these days. She acted like nothing was wrong, despite the immense pressure she was under.

Jasper could still accept it if Celine was under review because of the 20% decrease in commission fees. However, if William was the one who was causing the problem that resulted in Celine paying such a high price and betting her entire professional career, then this was something Jasper could not accept.

He was both angry and frustrated.

Angry at himself for not knowing about this earlier, and frustrated at Celine for making her own decisions without first informing him.

Life at the Top Chapter 778

“Looks like you really don’t know about this. You’re not the only one who thinks she’s gone mad. I do too.” Paulson sighed and spoke, “More than her superior, I was also her uncle who brought her up. Her father and I have known each other for decades—we’re best friends.

“But I’ve never seen her make such a huge gamble before.”

Paulson looked at Jasper intently and continued. “That’s why I want to know what you plan on doing next.”

Jasper immediately quelled the flames within him. After a short moment of thought, he came up with a response.

“Mr. Paulson, I would like Colossal Investments to immediately end all investigations on Celine, and make William, the President of Terra regional branch, pay instead. Otherwise, Sena will unilaterally apply to the Nasdaq Review Committee and decline on going public.”

When he heard this, Paulson’s expression darkened.

He looked at Jasper and spoke angrily, “That isn’t a very smart decision, Laine. Are you threatening me? You have to know that doing so will put Colossal in a very embarrassing position. Sena will also lose a great chance to go public and you will have to repay those who had already bought shares through the pre-IPO allocation. You’ll also have to repay Colossal for a breach of contract!

“I’m sure a smart businessman would not make such a bad deal.”

Jasper replied calmly, “President Paulson, I am indeed a businessman, but more than that, I am a man. While every businessman does indeed weigh the pros and cons before every decision, a man does not care too much about such things when making a decision.”

Paulson heard the change in how Jasper was referring to himself and stared at the other party seriously. “Is that your final decision?”

Jasper nodded. “I won’t compromise!”

“Still, you have to know that Celine loves her career more than anything else. Sure, you’re free to look for another investment company if the relationship between Colossal and Sena goes cold. After all, all you lose is time and money.”

“But what about Celine? Not only will Colossal have to fire her after this, but other investment companies won’t employ her either. Have you not thought about that?”

Jasper frowned slightly at Paulson’s words.

With a victorious smile, Paulson took a hot sip of tea. The man before him was outstanding, but he was too young to be a match for him.

“Worse comes to worst, I’ll just open a bank and have Celine work for me,” Jasper suddenly looked up to tell Paulson.

Paulson froze mid-sip. After a long while, his eyes widened as he looked at Jasper who oozed with dominance and spoke, “Do you know how difficult it is to open a bank? Not only will you need hefty capital to sustain it, but you’ll need contacts and a constant flow of business. Especially in Somerland, I don’t think Somerland allows private banks.”

Jasper spoke calmly, “Allow me to repeat myself, President Paulson, my only problem now is the fact that Celine is under review.”

Paulson’s caressed the corner of the hot teacup. After a long while, he replied slowly, “I can immediately end Celine’s investigation, but you must promise that Sena will reach a price of at least 120 US Dollars. Or I will not be able to explain myself to the board of directors.

“As for William, if Sean’s share price is high enough, Celine’s capabilities will be on display to everybody, at which point it will be very possible for her to assume the position of President of the Terra regional branch. However, as I said, the condition here is that Sena’s share price has to reach at least 120 US Dollars!”

Life at the Top Chapter 779

Walking out of Colossal Investments Headquarters, Jasper’s mind echoed with the words Paulson had said before he left.

“There are no emotions here in Wall Street, nor do we care about who’s right or wrong. The only thing that separates me from my enemy are benefits.

“Whoever brings me benefits is a friend, and everyone else is my enemy.”

Jasper admitted that Paulson’s words had affected him deeply.

This was the cruel reality of a capitalist market. Without experiencing it first-hand, one would never understand how bloody the rules of the games are.

Take his partnership with Colossal Investments for example. In a short conversation, they had already decided who would assume the position of the President of the Terra regional branch.

Should Jasper truly manage to reach an IPO of 120 US Dollars for Sena, then he would have successfully proven his benefits and worth to Colossal Investments.

Colossal Investments would only toss William out if a happy partnership with Jasper mattered more to them.

Firing the President of the Terra regional branch to gain Jasper's trust and friendship was a very good bargain.

However, the premise was that Jasper had to prove his worth.

Sena's share price would be the quickest and most direct way to do this.

If he failed, Colossal Investments would not pay Jasper or Celine another glance.

This had nothing to do with who was right or wrong. This was a relationship purely comprised solely of monetary benefits.

The person who brought the larger cut of profits would be their friend.

After all this, the banquet was over by the time Jasper returned to the hotel.

Jasper did not know where Henry had gone to. However, he was not worried that this top-notch Harbor City trust-fund child would get into any trouble while out on a date in New York, so Jasper let him do as he pleased.

After conversing with Jack and coming to the conclusion that it was extremely difficult to push Sena's share price to 120 US Dollars, Celine arrived whilst seeking out Jasper just as they were about to formulate a plan.

Jasper returned to his room and poured Celine a cup of milk with practiced ease. Then he looked her over, "Not bad, very beautiful."

Celine was in a white chiffon tight-fitting dress while an exquisite red belt wrapped around her waist. The simple outfit spoke volumes of the wearer's excellent style.

Celine grabbed the milk and stared straight at Jasper.

"So, you went to look for Paulson?"

Jasper nodded.

“So you know everything now?”

Jasper continued to nod.

“And you also promised Paulson that the share price will reach 120 US Dollars?”

Jasper also nodded.

Celine suddenly spoke disappointedly, “Are you crazy? Do you know how difficult it is for a new stock to surpass a price of 120 US Dollars? No company’s ever produced such a result after the dot-com bubble burst.”

Life at the Top Chapter 780

“Am I crazy?” Jasper’s eyes widened as he looked at Celine and spoke, “You’re the crazy one here. Why didn’t you tell me anything?”

Celine lifted her hand to tuck the stray wisps of hair behind her ear as she replied, “It’s my business. Why do I have to tell you what I do?”

Jasper replied calmly. “In that case, my promise with Paulson is also my business, and I don’t have to explain it to you, yes?”

“You!” Celine’s eyes widened as she glared at him, infuriated by Jasper’s words.

The next second, however, the woman’s eyes shifted and she smiled secretly, “You’re actually planning to provide for me? Why else would you go through all that just to get me out of the investigation?”

“I just don’t want you to get involved in other matters because of me, especially when I’m certain that nothing is going on between us. I don’t make it a habit to sit and watch as someone else gets blamed for something they didn’t do.”

“Moreover, if you can tell Colossal Investment’s board of directors that you’ll resign and pay thrice the value of the commission if Sena doesn’t meet an IPO price of 100 US Dollars, then what’s stopping me from raising it to 120 US Dollars?”

Jasper looked at Celine seriously and spoke, “You have to trust me and Sena. 100 US Dollars to 120 US Dollars isn’t that big of a difference.”

“In that case, what are you planning on doing next?” Celine asked.

“Advertise it, what else? I have to try and tell all the investors within the United States that Sena is a share that they will definitely profit from. If I don’t you’ll lose your job, and I’ll lose both my reputation and my dignity,” Jasper spoke with a shrug.

Celine furrowed her brows as the cheerful look that she always wore vanished.

She was thinking of a plan that would greatly raise Sena’s share prices.

“To be honest, it’s all the same for me regardless of if this promise existed or not,” Jasper looked at Celine as he spoke.

“The higher Sena’s share price, the more I benefit. The only difference is that I didn’t have a specific target before, but I have one now. Anything less than 120 US Dollars is a failure, so even without this deal, my goal will still be to bring Sena up as much as I can.’

“But this target is too unattainable.” Celine frowned.

“Not really,” Jasper chuckled, “I’ll just have to spend a bit of money. We’ll do advertisements in television stations throughout the United States, then interview a few stock market experts and advertise it in financial magazines. What we need to do is sweep this information through the United States as fast as possible.

“All United States investors will be able to do is see and hear of Sena for the next couple of days.

“Couple this with the titles Sena holds, ‘the first Somerland internet company that’ll officially registered in the Nasdaq’, and ‘the first truly profitable internet company in the world’. What we need to do is tell the investors that a great way to earn money is standing right before their eyes.”

Celine’s expression lightened slightly at Jasper’s words.

She sighed and spoke, “That’s the only thing we can do now anyway. I’ll think of another plan. I do have some contacts here in the United States.”

“Thank you, then,” Jasper spoke.

Both he and Sena were considered foreigners here in the United States. Forget contacts, they would not be able to get anywhere if not for Colossal Investments.

Thus, these were things that only Celine could do.

The corner of Celine’s lips lifted upward, and a light and familiar smile graced her lips. “Paulson told me that you threatened the entirety of Colossal Investments for me. Do you know what you’re doing? That’s a financial behemoth we’re talking about here. The best investment company in the world. How could you just threaten them?”

“And yet, reality shows that it still works on them.” Jasper smiled.

“You also claimed, very dominantly, that you’d open a bank for me to work in if I resigned from Colossal?” Celine leaned over, with her four limbs on the couch as she pushed her small face right in front of Jasper’s.

Because of her position, Jasper only needed to tilt his head and he would see her collar exposed before his eyes.

Life at the Top Chapter 781

“Do you know how difficult opening a bank is? I[‘m pretty sure Paulson thought that I was just kidding,” Jasper shifted backward seamlessly and spoke, “Aren’t we a little too close right now?”

“Are we? I feel the urge to pounce over and devour you now, though.”

Instead of moving back, Celine leaned closer to Jasper. Her eyes shone with the wildness of a big cat.

It was not until she forced Jasper to lean against the armrest with nowhere to go that she snickered evilly. “You’ve said something like this before, but do you know what Paulson said about you? He said he actually saw you opening your own bank the moment you suggested such a thing.

“You’re willing to go so far for me and yet you claim that you don’t want to provide for me? All you think about is how you’re going to take care of my needs, yet you say I’m too close to you. All men do is lie.”

His ear were filled with Celine’s soft voice and his nose was filled with nothing but Celine’s subtle fragrance. All could see was a sheet of white that Celine displayed without care in the world.

“Are you really not afraid of playing with fire?”

Celine laughed aloud at Jasper’s words and sat back down. She stretched her fair and soft calf to knock it against Jasper’s thigh. While executing this rather intimate and amorous act, Celine replied, “Playing with fire’s what I’m good at. Besides, that conflicted and shy expression of yours just now was absolutely adorable.”

Not in the mood to reply to her playful words, Jasper asked, “How many resources can you mobilize in the United States? This is very important, as I need to know before I can carry out the rest of my plans.”

Celine crossed her legs, then reached out to press down on the hem of her skirt so as to not expose her undergarments. Despite this, her eyes were on Jasper the entire time. She huffed lightly upon seeing the man staring solemnly at her. Then she spoke, “Tell me your plan first, then I’ll work with you and mobilize my resources.”

...

The following day, half the citizens of the United States noticed Sena, the name of a Somerland business, appear on their televisions, radios, and newspapers.

Investors were not unfamiliar with the company.

All financial news portals had more or less covered Somerland’s Sena listing, and every stock expert in the country was giving their opinions on it.

The reality remained that professionals were the same within and outside the country.

Thanks to Celine, a television station had reported another piece of news.

“A banquet was held by Sena’s Business Team from Somerland, alongside investors led by Colossal Investments in DoubleTree Hotel’s banquet hall in Wall Street this year.

“According to a reliable source, the owner of Sena was the mysterious retail investor from the international crude oil futures incident last year. Under his lead, Sena now owns Somerland’s biggest internal portal, as well as a new game, United Legends, that had just hit the market.

“This game has broken the world record for the number of people online on the first day of public beta testing. With a final player base of 2 million online players, the game is undoubtedly the world’s biggest internet game.

“Currently, United Legends has already begun operation and charging fees. According to our reporter in Somerland, combined with the evaluation report Sena had sent to the Nasdaq, United Legends currently has 170 paid players who contribute to Sena’s profit of millions of Somer Dollars.

“Without a doubt, while internet industries around the world continue to think about ways to mitigate their losses, Somerland’s Sena has already begun to save their country’s struggling Internet industry by expanding their business and stepping foot into the gaming industry.

“To some degree, Sena is the only purely Internet company in the world who has resolved monumental issue of turning a profit.”

“As a result, we’ve invited our special commentary expert, Mr. David Smith, to tell us how different Sena is...”

Following the news was an unclear picture of Jasper’s side profile.

The picture had been taken from afar, so all they could tell was Jasper’s age range and physique.

Life at the Top Chapter 782

That was enough.

A man in his twenties, from Somerland.

These two important pieces of news had attracted investors from the United States who have been looking for this mysterious retail investor all along.

Either news was enough to pique overwhelming interest from everyone.

The Internet in the states was much better developed than it was in Somerland, so it had only been a few moments after the news and rumors about Jasper already began to spread online.

Countless investors were discussing Jasper's identity.

While even more of them instinctively went to read more about Sena going public.

Then they realized that the entire market followed closely and had a bullish outlook on Sena.

Not since the popping of the dot-com bubble has all the media spoke about the same internet company at the same time.

Let alone one that had not even gone public yet.

This had raised the attention of most United States investors and they began to search and learn more about Sena, as well as find out when the company would go public.

So as the date when Sena would go public crept closer, it only began to trend more.

Countless investors were preparing their funds to use this chance and make a lot of money.

Just then, Jasper turned off the television.

He knew that news about himself was something Celine's contacts and Colossal Investments had cooperated to release.

Jasper did not mind too much, for Celine had told him that she would bring up the hype in such a way. This was a capitalist request.

Just as Jasper turned off the television, he suddenly received a call from Celine.

"Turn on the television, Intercontinental Channel Three," Celine's tone was proud.

"I just turned it off. Is there some big news?" Jasper asked confusedly but immediately turned the television on again. As Celine requested, he shuffled to Intercontinental Channel Three.

The screen changed and Jasper took one look and could not move his eyes away.

Before his eyes was an interview with the stock god, Winston Benett. The content of the interview was precisely about Sena.

"I personally do think that there is a lot of potential for this internet company from Somerland. It's a shame that its pre-IPO quota has already been sold out long ago. However, I've already had my team watch out for the latest news. Once it goes public, I'm planning to buy a few of Sena's shares with the idea to keep them..."

If all previous advertisement was to tell the United States' investors about Sena's existence, then the interview with Winston Benett had directly ignited the investors' enthusiasm

The internationally recognized title 'stock god' had already spread throughout the world. The man's return on investments as well as his sharp decisions when it comes to the market has garnered worship from many investors.

With Winston Benett helping him out, Sena's hype began to grow exponentially.

Life at the Top Chapter 783

“This is so cool!” Jasper exclaimed.

It took more than just money to invite someone of Winston Benett’s caliber.

As one of the world’s top ten richest men, it made no sense to pay Winston Benett to advertise for you.

That would be utterly ridiculous.

It took favors and status to move such people into helping you.

Jasper had not expected Celine to be so powerful to that extent, to the point where she could get Winston Benett to help out.

Celine chuckled, evidently pleased with Jasper’s shock and praise.

However, she still explained. “Winston Benett is actually a really good friend with one of my elders. All I did was ask this elder to contact him. Winston Benett had taken a look at Sena’s evaluation and immediately agreed to help advertise it.”

“This was more than just a script for advertisement. He meant it when he said he planned to buy some of Sena’s shares.”

“So if you want to be shocked, be shocked about the fact that your Sena was what moved him.”

Jasper smiled as he heard Celine and replied, “With Winston Benett helping us out, I’m sure Sena’s share prices would be pushed to quite a high price when it goes public. We won’t have to worry too much about this, then.”

As the outside world got progressively more invested in Sena's situation, the day when Sena would go public had officially arrived as well.

On this widely anticipated day, Jasper woke early in the morning and washed up carefully. He put on the tailored suit that Celine had bought for him at Waterhoof City and demanded he wore today. Then he strode out of the room.

In the hotel lobby, Jack and the rest were waiting for him.

Henry was there too. While the man had vanished more than he was present, he knew better than to be late on such an important day.

Everyone was donned in formal suits, even Henry wore an iron-pressed one.

The only difference between them was that Jack looked rather nervous, while Henry remained rowdy as he always was. The man was even quietly muttering to himself about what kind of airplane he would buy to fly back after today.

"Mr. Laine." Jack led Sena's senior executives over to greet Jasper when he saw him arrive.

Jasper nodded and smiled at Jack. "Nervous, Jack?"

Jack smiled wryly. "It'd be a lie if I said I wasn't. After all, this is the first time anything like this has happened before. Sena's share price when it goes public will determine the result of all our hard work."

"Haha, that's understandable. After all, there are only so many times a person gets to ring the Nasdaq Opening Bell." Jasper patted his old partner's shoulder with a wide smile.

"Relax. The entirety of Wall Street will cheer for us, and the entire Nasdaq Composite will welcome our arrival. We are New York's owners today," Jasper replied.

Jack was stunned for a moment. He could suddenly feel the drastic difference between his and Jasper's vision and domineering aura. Looking up, all Jack would see was how Jasper seemed to carry a whole new world on his shoulders despite his rather slim figure.

Taking a deep breath, Jack calmed the excitement and nervousness within him and quickly followed Jasper's footsteps.

Reporters have long been waiting by the hotel lobby's entrance and they quickly rushed over to interview them when they saw Jasper and the rest walk out. Only to be held back by Colossal Investments' bodyguards.

With no other option, the reporters could only try to stretch their microphones out and ask all sorts of questions. Each of them prayed that they would be lucky enough for Jasper to reply to their questions, then they would surely be rewarded by their superiors.

However, in face of these reporters, Jasper merely smiled politely but did not answer anyone's questions. Then he walked toward the car stopped by the side.

Life at the Top Chapter 784

By the car stood Celine who greeted him with a mesmerizing smile.

"So handsome," Celine praised as Jasper walked over.

Jasper smiled and replied, "A woman's beauty lies in her features and her aura, but it takes more than a man's appearance to look handsome."

"Is that you showing off how successful you are now?" Celine asked Jasper.

It was a beautiful sight to behold.

Under everyone's inquisitive gaze and cameras flashing, Jasper knew better than to flirt with Celine here. So he merely smiled and bent down to get in the car.

"Wuss," Celine muttered and turned to get in as well.

The line of cars began to move and it broke past the crowd and made its way to Nasdaq Center.

Jasper's hotel was only five minutes on foot away from Nasdaq Center, but Colossal Investments had already arranged cars for the occasion.

After all, this group of people was going to ring the Nasdaq Opening Bell. How could they simply just walk over?

It took a couple of minutes and the line of cars arrived.

"There'll be a ceremony later and Nasdaq's president, Franklin, will come out in a show of how much they value a Somerland enterprise. It's more political than business, so don't think too much about it. It's just formality," Celine whispered to Jasper.

Jasper nodded in understanding.

Just then, the car doors were opened and Jasper walked out of the car.

Nasdaq had given Sena a welcome of the highest regard, with a red carpet rolled a long distance from its entrance and western bodyguards standing on both sides of the carpet. The electronic display by the entrance was filled with words of welcome.

Alighting the car, Jasper looked up at the large screen above Nasdaq Exchange and realized that there was a red Somerland flag as well as Somerish words of welcome.

Jack saw it as well.

Engulfed in an aura of western capitalism, a red flag with five stars appeared on the electronic display of the Nasdaq Exchange on Wall Street. It was a memorable sight to behold.

“The times are changing,” Jasper exclaimed.

Jasper smiled. “And it’ll only change more in the future.”

The two shared a smile and stepped on the red carpet, entering the Exchange Center under the flashing lights of reporters.

The Exchange Center was in a frenzy.

While every new company going public on Nasdaq’s market would ring its opening bell, they were all treated differently. Sena’s was of a much higher caliber, for the host of the ceremony was Nasdaq’s president, a seventy-year-old man called Franklin.

“Welcome to the United States, to Wall Street, and to Nasdaq, young man from the ancient Somerland.” Franklin’s words were flowery and he smiled as he shook Jasper’s hand.

Jasper smiled softly and replied courteously, “Thank you for the kind welcome, President Franklin. I’m sure I’ll achieve what I want here.”

Franklin clapped Jasper’s shoulder affectionately and spoke, “Miracles happen all the time here. I’m sure you’ll achieve what you want.”

“There has been a lot of news about you these days. I would’ve bought some of Sena’s shares as well if not for my job not allowing me to participate in share trading,” Franklin joked.

Life at the Top Chapter 785

“This proves that Sena is indeed a very outstanding company, then. They say great minds think alike,” Jasper teased.

Jasper’s western humor had Franklin laughing aloud, and his impression of Jasper improved all the more.

“Paulson and I are great friends. We’ve spoken in private about you before and now that I’ve met you, I believe that old friend of mine is biased,” Franklin spoke with a smile.

This seemingly normal sentence held quite a few important details and Jasper replied, “Thank you.”

While others may understand that Jasper was merely thanking Franklin for the praise, he was actually thanking him for the information.

Franklin nodded and spoke to Jasper for a little longer before he slowly left.

After Franklin left, Jasper looked at the time and realized that it was currently eight-thirty in New York and there was only one more hour before the market opened at nine-thirty.

The large Exchange Center was packed with staff and reporters, for there was only one more hour until Sena would ring Nasdaq’s Opening Bell.

Jack was answering the reporter’s questions while Jasper was about to look for Henry, only for Celine to get to himself first.

“Come on, Paulson wants to meet us.”

Jasper followed Celine to the second floor of the Exchange Center. It was a huge office with floor-to-ceiling windows that clearly showed the frenzy within the exchange center.

Paulson and William were sitting right by the floor-to-ceiling windows when Jasper and Celine arrived.

“You’re here. Come here,” Paulson spoke with a smile.

Jasper and Celine walked over and stood by the floor-to-ceiling windows. Looking down at the Exchange Center below, Jasper was about to speak when Celine leaned over to him.

“Stay away from that b*stard.”

William’s face paled in anger at Celine’s words.

Paulson smiled as if he did not hear anything and turned to Jasper. “One more hour before our promise shows its results, Laine. Are you confident?”

Jasper replied, “Confidence is something I’ve never lacked.”

“Too much confidence leads to arrogance,” William piped in with a scoff, “I’m afraid you don’t even know how much 120 US Dollars per share means, do you?”

“Did we ask you?” Celine looked at William coldly.

Celine’s scornful gaze fueled William’s fury but he forced himself to calm down and scoffed. “I’ll let you be proud of yourselves for now. But if your IPO cannot reach 120 US Dollars later, I’d like to see if you’re going to keep acting so proud.”

“I hope that you’ll keep your end of the promise, Mr. Paulson,” Jasper ignored William and spoke to Paulson.

Sighing, Paulson replied, "While I do not wish to see such a scene, Laine, I cannot find it in myself to have faith in you. Sena is indeed a very outstanding company, and I would surely believe you if you proposed an IPO of 80 US Dollars. But 120 US Dollars is just too difficult to accomplish."

"It was a difficult height to reach even before the dot-com bubble popped, let alone now. The market's changed, Laine, and it's still not too late if you want to change your mind now."

Jasper smiled calmly and replied, "I used to follow regulations and traditions long ago, President Paulson, and there are indeed many things that are unthinkable, things that are impossible according to what I've learned from my experience."

"But it's unfortunate that the world is controlled by people who can change the impossible into something possible. I wouldn't be standing here if I did everything according to convention as just a normal employee of some company in Somerland."

Life at the Top Chapter 786

Paulson could hear the resolute determination in Jasper's words and looked at him keenly, saying, "I hope you win the bet this time as you're now responsible for more than yourself."

40 minutes later, Jasper and Celine exited the office.

Halfway down the stairs, Celine asked Jasper, "Will it really be okay?"

Jasper turned to Celine and saw a worried expression on her face. With a smile, he replied, "I think it's a bit too late to ask this question, isn't it?"

Celine complained, "I just didn't want to give you more pressure. We both know that 120 US dollars per share is a very high price."

"What's the point in surpassing it if it isn't high?" Jasper asked.

Celine looked at Jasper suspiciously and asked, "Why does it seem like you still have a secret weapon up your sleeves? Tell me what it is, at least then I wouldn't need to worry so much."

Jasper turned over his palms and smiled, "What secret weapon? We've already done the most we can the past few days. Whatever comes next isn't up to us anymore. Plus, even if I had some secret weapon, there are only 20 minutes until Sena rings the Nasdaq opening bell. It's too late now, isn't it?"

Realizing that Jasper's words made sense, Celine replied exasperatedly, "True. I'm just a little too nervous now, I guess."

"Relax," Jasper consoled.

Celine nodded and exhaled deeply before blinking at Jasper, asking, “So if you succeed, how are you planning to celebrate?”

Jasper shrugged and walked forward. “I haven’t thought of it yet. Celebration isn’t the main focus here. We can think about that after we pass this round.”

In the beginning, Sena going public had only been a way for Jasper to improve his cash flow. As the situation progressed, it now became something much more important.

This was something Jasper did not expect.

Retreating was not an option now, so the only thing he could do was walk forward and try to push Sena’s share price as high up as possible.

In all honesty, Jasper did not have the confidence of attaining absolute victory.

After all, the situation was susceptible to many changes. While Sena had also gone public in his past life, he could not compare the situation then to what was happening now. Basing it off his memory of his past life was out of the question.

He only had himself to rely on now.

As he exhaled, Jasper saw Jack smiling widely on the podium and ushering him over to ring the bell. Sorting out his emotions, Jasper strode over.

At the same time, on the second floor. Paulson was standing by the floor-to-ceiling windows with his hands behind his back. William was nowhere to be seen and beside him now stood Franklin, Nasdaq’s president.

Franklin took a look at Jasper’s figure and spoke, “What an extraordinary Easterner.”

“And very crazy too,” Paulson added.

“I can’t help but think that you’ll be wrong this time, old friend.” Franklin laughed aloud.

“120 US dollars? Are you kidding me? No way,” Paulson shook his head and continued calmly, “Or these decades I’ve been working as Colossal Investment’s president would’ve been for naught.”

“The most dangerous thing to do in the financial market is work completely based on your experiences, old friend. Being old amounts to nothing in this industry and the only thing it represents is that you lack, more than the youths, the courage and aggressiveness the market needs,” Franklin spoke meaningfully.

Life at the Top Chapter 787

Time ticked by and it was now only three more minutes until the market opened and Sena went public. Jasper had been invited onto the temporarily built stage.

The stage was right under the largest main screen in Nasdaq Exchange Center, which was at the center of the room.

Under everyone’s attentive gaze, Jasper and Jack got on stage.

In the middle of the stage was a large bell.

Since Nasdaq Exchange’s founding, every business that went public would have its legal personality ring this bell.

It was a tradition as much as it was a symbol.

The electronic screen continued to display worlds of welcome like ‘Nasdaq welcomes Sena’ while hundreds of traders had already gotten into position.

There were a few dozen reporters holding their cameras, waiting to take a picture of this historical moment.

Jasper accepted a wooden hammer from a manager in the exchange center and was just about to invite Jack to ring the bell with him when he saw the other shake his head with a smile.

“You should ring the bell yourself, Mr. Laine,” Jack spoke.

Although he was stunned, Jasper saw the shine in Jack’s eyes and did not insist. “Alright then.”

Everyone looked up and focused on the electronic screen that covered the entire wall. It displayed both Nasdaq’s and Sena’s logo, as well as an analog clock.

The second hand of the clock ticked continuously until it was almost racing to 9:30 a.m.

“5...

“4...

“3...

“2...

“1...”

Hundreds of people counted down at the same time in the exchange Center.

It was currently 9:30 a.m. in the United States, and Jasper knocked the wooden hammer against the bell, signifying the opening of the market.

Ring!

The deep and strong sound of the bell rang throughout the entire exchange center.

Under everyone's cheers, the reporters' cameras flashed maddeningly as they tried to commemorate this historical moment.

At this moment, shares for the first internet enterprise from Somerland had moved on from the bursting of the dot-com bubble and registered itself at Nasdaq Exchange Center.

Its ticker—SENA!

Jasper and the group got down from the stage after they rang the bell. They began to pay attention to the changes in share prices.

"It's a little nerve-wracking." A senior executive sucked in a deep breath and felt a little antsy.

Jack was rather relaxed as he smiled and said, "The share market in the United States has different rules compared to the markets back home. New shares here normally pay more attention to the pre-IPO on the first day of trading and the more shares bought pre-IPO make for a higher share price. It'll take some time before the data is confirmed. Don't worry."

In the United States, most investors tended to buy shares of new businesses through pre-IPO.

Sena, for example, started with an issue price of 25 US dollars with 96 million US dollars worth of shares outstanding.

The more shares bought by investors through pre-IPO, the higher the price would increase.

The most important thing was that there was not a 10% rise limit when it came to buying shares through pre-IPO.

That meant if Sena was formidable enough, its prices could rise instantly to 200 US dollars.

How difficult would that be?

Impossibly hard.

The share market was no longer as crazy as it used to be before the burst of the dot-com bubble.

As the world's economic development slowed, trade also decreased in large exchange centers like Nasdaq, the Dow Jones Index, and the Nikkei Index.

This proved that investors were getting less enthusiastic and there was also less hot money in the markets compared to before.

Many investors were starting to be more rational and no longer rushed to one sector maddeningly.

Beneath Jasper's calm facade was immense pressure.

Within the bustling exchange center, Jasper watched the scene before him calmly.

Reporters were still thinking of ways to interview Sena's senior executives, and traders had already begun receiving phone calls while starting a new day of work.

The room was filled with the scent of money and benefits.

All of which added to the pressure on Jasper's shoulders.

An issue price of 25 US dollars had to grow at least five times to exceed 120 US dollars.

Not even Winston Bennett would dare to make such a bet, let alone Jasper.

“What’s with the long face?” Celine interrupted Jasper’s deep thoughts.

Jasper turned to see Celine’s relaxed expression and laughed. “And here I am, worried about whether the share price will meet the requirements when you’re acting like it has nothing to do with you.”

“Oh, come on.” Celine pinched Jasper’s shoulder and beamed at him. “Don’t worry about it. So what if it doesn’t hit the target we set? The point of Sena going public was to help contribute to your cash flow. From the hype we’ve garnered over the past few days, I’m pretty sure we’ve already met the initial goal.

“As to whether we win the bet or not, what’s the big deal if we lose? I’ll just resign and wait for you to open a bank for me.”

Celine looked at Jasper warily. “You’re not thinking about going back on your word now, are you?”

“It’s too late now.” Jasper smiled, but the curve of his lips fell a second after as he spoke calmly, “Ever since I started working, I’ve only ever lost a small amount when it came to comparing capitals with Wall Street. Losing is a horrible feeling...

“And I don’t like losing!”

At the same time, Nasdaq Exchange Center had also begun trading. Most investors all over the United States were currently seated before their computers and were trading seriously.

In a middle-class family in Michigan, Craig was a lawyer and his wife had a senior managerial position in a local enterprise. The family became wealthy as a result of the couple’s stable and decent-paying jobs, as well as due to the profits that David had earned from the share market these years.

“That damned state telecom operator. I’m going to sue them!”

Flushed, David stared at the computer. He wanted to buy Sena's shares but the stupid internet kept cutting off.

His roars attracted his wife's attention.

"What's wrong, David? Would you like a cup of coffee?"

His wife asked caringly at the door.

"It's alright. It's just this stupid telecom operator that's hindering me from earning my damn money. I'm going to sue the hell out of them if I can't buy Sena's shares!"

David spoke agitatedly.

Then, the internet suddenly connected again and on his screen was the notification of a successful transaction. David laughed aloud excitedly. "I bought it! I bought it!"

"Oh, oh my God! Are my eyes deceiving me? What's this price?! How did it rise so quickly?!"

The same situation continued all over the United States.

People who sat before their computers and were ready to buy Sena's shares realized at the same time that Sena's prices were rising at a terrifying speed.

It was one price at the last second, only to rise by 20% the next.

With the skyrocketing demand and limited equity, the hype around Sena's shares grew. Everyone wanted a portion for themselves.

Life at the Top Chapter 788

A majority of investors took a look at the price that had long surpassed their budget and hesitated.

Even so, the prices only rose during their hesitation.

This unimaginable rise led to the investors feeling immensely regretful.

They all thought the same thing, 'The difference between the two values would've been more if I hadn't hesitated just now.'

'God damn it!'

The investors' madness was reflected in Sena's share prices.

Transaction information from all over the United States arrived at Nasdaq Exchange Center's 16 servers within milliseconds through fiber channels.

These cutting-edge servers then responded and did the calculations as quickly as possible.

The result was then outputted in the form of a k-line for Sena's share prices, which was then displayed on the exchange center's electronic display and all the investors' computers.

Those from the financial industry in the United States who had their eyes on the share market were in an uproar.

"Sena officially went public at 9:30 this morning. It has only been five minutes and there has been a total transaction of 300 million US dollars backstage. Its share price has risen from 25 US dollars to 50 US dollars in only 5 minutes and 28 seconds!

“There’s no doubt that this share has broken the record for time taken to double in price in the history of the United States. No, in the history of mankind.

“Have investors from the United States gone mad? Why are they so obsessed with this internet company from Somerland?”

“Is the United States not the center of the world’s internet industry?”

The host of The First Fortune, the most authoritative financial radio channel with the most listeners in the United States, shouted.

His show was broadcasted to at least 35 million listeners in the United States.

“This Somerland share with the ticker Sena seems to have inherited something from this mysterious and ancient country from the east. This stock and this country have shaken the entirety of the United States in the shortest time.

“The investors’ enthusiasm now reminds me of the last quarter of 1993. That was one hell of a capitalist party all over the world and the global economy had risen to new heights. Everyone became more wealthy and everyone was buying shares. Almost every share had an increase in market price.

“Oh my God, look at Sena’s share prices! Why am I so excited about Sena’s share prices? Our share market has been despondent for far too long and it needs such strength to boost our confidence in the market!”

Everyone at the Nasdaq Exchange Center, both the busy or the free, was looking up at the large screen that showed Sena’s share prices.

A frightening big red trendline skyrocketed on the market, one so exaggerated that normal investors might not even be able to see such a thing in ten years if not for the current situation.

The electronic display took up the entire wall, and that big trendline seemed to be piercing through the top of the screen and was aiming for the sky.

There was no oscillation and no pullback. It did not waiver nor did it shake.

There was only an increase, an endless increase that no one understood!

The most terrifying part of it all was that Sena's terrifying trade and its upward trend had also managed to raise Nasdaq Exchange Center's internet sector as well.

There was a 7.6% increase in the internet sector.

One share could affect its sector, and the sector's increase could affect the entire market's index.

Nasdaq Composite had an increase of 1.54%!

Akin to a key, Sena had unlocked the festering enthusiasm within the investors.

Hundreds of billions of US dollars flooded into the market and it sparked the entire Nasdaq Exchange Center to life, moving the entire market upward.

Everyone's heart surged at the sight and their blood boiled with excitement. It was as if everyone was holding in such excitement that they wanted to shout out in joy but could not.

This was a feast of wealth!

"Buy! Buy them all! Buy as many as you can!"

Todd shouted raspily at his assistant in the VIP room.

“Damn it, I should’ve done this earlier. I was stupid to actually consider selling that ten million US dollars worth of shares I had bought through pre-IPO. Did I go mad?”

The assistant smiled wryly at Todd and spoke, “We’ve already bought them, sir. But the price now is just too outrageous and we don’t even have a chance to enter the market.

“All it takes is one second and the price we’re buying at immediately gets pushed down by someone who’s buying it at a higher price.”

“Then buy it back at an even higher price!” Todd’s eyes shone with excitement.

“I don’t care if you believe me or not, but Sena is a share with unlimited potential. While I don’t know how long this share will continue to profit but for the short-term, I want as many shares under 100 US dollars bought and resold for profits.”

No one knew what Todd was thinking when his eyes shifted and he turned to tell his assistant, “I want to see Laine and talk to him. You buy me my stocks and if I don’t see five million US dollars worth of stocks when I come back, then you can resign and get lost!”

With that, Todd turned and left the VIP room without another glance at his sorrowful assistant.

...

“The price has risen to 76 US dollars!” Jack turned to Jasper excitedly.

No matter how excited Jack and the other senior executives were, Jasper remained calm in the face of such value.

In truth, he had already anticipated any price under 100 US dollars.

If Sena could not even go up to 100 US dollars, then it would have been a waste of all his hard work.

The true obstacle was after the 100 US dollars mark. That was when they would test the durability of the United States' investors.

Still, from how the situation looked, it was hopeful.

Just then, Todd arrived to look for him.

"Laine, you really are my... How do you say it in Somerish? God of Wealth, correct?" Todd laughed aloud as he spoke to Jasper.

Taking in the blonde hair of the man who had yet to become as distant and cynical as he would become in the future, Jasper smiled. "Indeed, you seem to understand Somerish quite well."

Todd was in a great mood and turned to Jasper, saying, "Laine, would you be interested in the shares of one of my companies? Of course, instead of cash, I'd like to exchange it with Sena's shares."

Jasper frowned slightly and asked, "What company?"

Todd seemed rather embarrassed as he spoke, "This company's shares are actually something I bought from a friend some time ago. It's an investment I made because I was friends with that governor friend of mine. I should've known that there would be nothing good coming from all these damned politicians. All they do is think of ways to scam my money."

Jasper felt rather conflicted to hear Todd insult politicians.

He wondered how this man would feel when he thought back to this sentence the day he became the United States' largest good-for-nothing scammer.

“But trust me, that company has a lot of potential. They may seem small now but they’re looking for investors everywhere.”

“Since we’re friends, Todd, how about you tell me directly what company this is?”

Life at the Top Chapter 789

Jasper did not have much hope when he asked.

After all, Todd was merely enjoying his grandparents’ wealth and was focused on real estate.

His main assets were also real estate enterprises that he had inherited.

Jasper had never heard of Todd holding shares in any particularly large companies.

However, Todd’s following words immediately piqued Jasper’s interest.

“The company goes by the name Google. I’m sure you’ve never heard of it considering how weak and poor they are. They don’t even have an office but they’re working in the internet industry. They’re doing search engines, the kind of service that allows you to search websites and information online.”

Seeing how Todd was stumbling over himself as he spoke, Jasper was certain that he had no understanding of how huge this company he had invested in would turn out to be in the future.

“So, are you interested?” Todd asked Jasper, his eyes shining.

As far as Todd was concerned, he had only bought the company's shares to gain favors from a friend. He never expected to earn any money from this at all.

He only paid money to make a friend.

However, Todd realized that perhaps he could persuade Jasper to free him of these shares since Jasper also did business in the internet industry.

It would be an easy profit if he could exchange Google's shares with Sena's.

"Indeed, I've never heard of them before," Jasper frowned and shook his head slightly. "I do know about search engines, though. But there haven't been many similar businesses in the market, so profiting would be extremely difficult. Why would you invest in such a company?"

Todd replied, evidently upset, "I didn't have a choice. Businessmen like us will always have to deal with those damned politicians.

"But Laine, I've always thought that your mind and vision have been the most outstanding of all the people I've met. Maybe Google is a company with a lot of potential for development? Even Yahoo has a dedicated department for search engines, and its market price is comparable to large internet companies like Weresoft. You should know about those, right?"

'Of course, I do.

'I also know that Yahoo is going to make a severe loss in the future and end up going bankrupt until the point that it's worth nothing anymore.

'Google, on the other hand, will take over Yahoo's place in the United States as the main internet company and secure over 70% of search engine business within the country.

'If not for Somerland keeping Beido, Google would've easily become the top search engine all over the world.'

“You’re asking me to pick up after you, Todd,” Jasper spoke with a subtle smile.

With his thoughts exposed, Todd laughed to smooth out the awkwardness before speaking, “I’m just saying that it might be a chance. Of course, it’s fine if you’re not interested in it at all.”

“Oh, no, I’m interested.”

Jasper reignited Todd’s hope just as he was about to give up.

“Really?” Todd asked in surprise.

Jasper clapped Todd’s shoulder and spoke, “I told you we’re friends, didn’t I, Todd? That alone is enough for me to be willing to help you with this problem. How do you plan on exchanging the shares?”

Todd shook Jasper’s hand while feeling moved and spoke, “That’s great, Laine! We’ll be best friends from now on!

“I currently have 27% of Google’s shares and I plan to exchange all of them for Sena’s shares,” Todd spoke greedily.

‘I can’t believe I thought you only became worse when you grew older when in truth, you’ve been so evil ever since the beginning.’

Jasper scoffed internally but put on a conflicted expression. “You know, Todd, Sena is really important to me. I can give you the outstanding shares but I cannot give you my percentage.”

“That’s fine,” Todd waved him off and agreed readily.

He was not interested in being a shareholder of an internet company that was based all the way in Somerland. All he wanted now was cash, money!

Outstanding shares were even better as he could resell them.

“Alright, then. I’ll exchange 27% of my shares for 12 million worth of Sena’s shares. How’s that?” Todd asked.

‘This *sshole is eviler than I thought!’

Jasper smiled meaningfully and replied, “I don’t have that many outstanding shares on hand, Todd. And it’ll decrease my percentage of shares if I exchange them. Not to mention that 12 million US dollars is a big deal. I’m sure your 27% of Google shares didn’t cost more than three million US dollars.”

Todd’s face flushed red like never before.

“Fine, then. Eight million.” Todd lowered his price with a conflicted look.

Indeed, he had only used 2.4 million to buy 27% of Google’s shares.

To get rid of such a problem and even earn almost ten million from it spoke volumes of how vile Todd was.

“Five million worth of shares, according to their current price.” Jasper stood his ground.

How much would Google’s market price be in the future?

In the year 2020 before Jasper reincarnated, Google had a market price of one trillion US dollars.

By then, this 27% of shares would give him 270 billion US dollars.

That was money Jasper could not ever come up with even if he sold everything he had.

Such was an investment.

No matter how much money Jasper put in, Jasper would still be making a profit.

Still, any money saved was money saved and the most important thing about this negotiation was to get rid of Todd's doubt about Google.

Todd could not be too resentful about Jasper's behavior once Google started growing. After all, he was the one who proposed the trade.

Todd thought about it when he heard the suggestion. His intelligent and calculative mind quickly decided that it was a feasible transaction.

Sena's share prices were still rising. Since Jasper had agreed to trade at the current share price, this five million would also grow into something much more.

"Deal!" Todd laughed aloud.

"Alright, then. We'll each send someone to sign the contract later. Could you please help me contact the person in charge of this company, Mr. Todd? I want to meet them." Jasper was internally elated but his expression did not betray his emotions.

"Don't worry about it. I've got this covered, Laine. You really are a generous and kind friend," Todd told Jasper with heartfelt emotions.

Years later, Todd would think of today and be in utter agony, wishing to turn back in time and slap himself for his words.

Todd left happily, and Celine, who had not said anything the entire time, poked Jasper's waist.

"Hey, it's obvious that the blonde fellow is trying to scam you. Why would you take the bait so happily?" Celine spoke distastefully.

She had never heard of this Google company and it could potentially be a scam. Yet Jasper was buying its shares at such a great cost?

“I’ll just take it as making a friend,” Jasper spoke with a wide grin.

“He thinks you’re an idiot!” Celine harrumphed, slightly pissed.

She had no idea how this foolish man had made so much money.

The worst part of this was that Celine found no qualms with her taking advantage of Jasper, but she would feel pissed when someone else took advantage of him.

“Sena’s share prices aren’t rising as quickly anymore!”

Jasper was just about to speak when a voice sounded from somewhere and caught his attention.

Life at the Top Chapter 790

Jasper looked up and saw that the rise in Sena’s shares had stabilized on the screen.

Everyone seemed regretful at the sight but they understood that this was only normal.

After all, no matter how great a share was, there was always a limit. If the shares continued to increase at such a rate, its effects afterward would be horrifying.

It had been three hours since Sena went public.

The United States share market did not believe in lunch breaks, so the business day was from 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. every day.

It was currently 12:30 p.m.

Sena's share prices had risen from its issued price of 25 to 88 US dollars!

In three hours, its price had more than tripled.

This was an incident that would enter Nasdaq's books of history.

Everyone looked up at the exaggerating transaction volume. According to the data, it showed that Sena still had much more potential.

Everyone knew that Sena's share price would not stop at 88 US dollars.

However, it would still take time for its potential to be shown and it was almost a miracle for the share to reach such heights in merely three hours.

However, Jasper looked at the line that was no longer skyrocketing and instead oscillating around 88 US dollars with a frown.

"Have someone pull out transactions for Sena's shares over the past half an hour." Jasper turned to Celine.

Celine was stunned but did not voice out her confusion. She opted to instruct someone to pull the data out first.

"Do you think there's something wrong?" Celine asked Jasper after she gave the instructions.

Jasper was very pleased by this small detail, for any uncontrollable changes could happen in a one-minute delay. Jasper disliked people who only knew how to ask questions but never did their jobs.

“Something’s wrong with this pricing.” Jasper shook his head.

He had an indescribable feeling in his chest.

Sena’s transaction data had seemed normal this entire time, but under such normalcy, Jasper had acutely realized something unusual in the purchase and selling of the shares.

Without actual evidence, Jasper did not know how to explain this feeling to Celine in an in-depth manner.

Thank goodness that Celine was not digging deeper.

Soon later, a manager from the exchange center rushed over with a laptop.

Opening the laptop, the data that Jasper wanted immediately filled the screen.

Jasper read the data carefully and checked each one.

“Someone’s trying to control Sena’s share prices,” Jasper suddenly stated as he stared at the screen.

Celine was immediately on alert.

“Look at this. This account was crazily buying in all of Sena’s shares that they could get their hands on and then ten minutes ago, they sold the shares part by part.

“This isn’t a one-shot transaction. They keep buying, only to sell when the share prices arrive at a certain point. They’re preventing Sena from breaking through the limit.”

Life at the Top Chapter 791

Celine listened to Jasper as he spoke and indeed found irregular trading behavior from a batch of accounts.

It was normal to want to buy as much of Sena's shares as possible, for countless investors were thinking of ways to buy Sena's shares.

Selling was normal too since not everyone had a bullish view of Sena's development. There were chances of the share prices dropping in the afternoon later. It was actually a common phenomenon for newly listed shares.

However, buying huge bulks only to sell them batch by batch was unnatural. Doing so would strike fear in the investors and deter investors who wanted to buy the shares at a higher price.

Frowning, Celine looked at Jasper. "Who is it?"

"Who else? The person who doesn't want the share prices to increase the most," Jasper replied calmly.

At the same time, in an office beside Nasdaq Exchange Center. William sat proudly before his own computer.

He was the culprit behind it all.

"That's right! Too many people are taking a bullish stance on Sena now, and while I can't stop you from rising, I can control how much your share price rises!"

William muttered to himself with a proud look on his face.

“If you two damn cheaters think you can raise the share price to 120 US dollars, then you can dream on!”

William was filled with excitement when he thought of how upset Jasper would look when he failed to win the bet and Celine had to resign.

At that moment, William’s phone rang.

“Mr. William, it’s me, the financial director of the Terra regional branch.” A middle-aged woman’s voice sounded over the phone.

William furrowed his brows and asked, “What is it?”

“I see that there’s a deduction of one billion US dollars from the company’s funds. These are funds that we should hand over to the headquarters next week. According to the procedural forms, I see that you transferred the money this morning through special procedures, Mr. William?”

William’s hand shook, but there was no change in his tone of voice as he replied plainly, “I did. I’m currently at the headquarters now so I decided to transfer the funds over in advance. I’ll deal with the related follow-up work and procedures later.”

The financial director seemed rather hesitant when she replied, “But Mr. William, according to financial protocol, I have to confirm the money first before it gets transferred out. You going around me through special procedures will put both of us in deep trouble once they find out during the year-end review.”

“I already told you that I’m at the headquarters and the money was transferred in advance on the headquarters’ orders. You’re all the way in Harbor City, so how was I supposed to inform you first? Don’t worry about it, I’ll deal with everything.”

William then hung up the phone somberly.

He needed more than just a perfect plan to suppress the rising trend in Sena's share prices. He needed a large number of funds as well.

William himself did not have the money, so he was currently embezzling Colossal's funds.

William was well aware that he would lose his job and be put behind bars the moment his actions were exposed, but he could not care less now.

He would be the winner as long as he managed to control Sena's share prices and prevent them from exceeding 120 million US dollars. Then all he had to do was transfer the money back tomorrow morning and no one would know!

Taking a deep breath, William forced himself to calm down. Staring at the computer, William felt the unease within him be replaced with pride when he saw how Sena's share prices continued to dance around 88 US dollars.

What he had not expected was that once he hung up the phone, the financial director would realize how risky the situation was the more she thought about it.

It was a huge crime to embezzle company funds and the financial director did not want to risk going to jail just when she was about to retire.

Mulling over the thought, she believed that there was nothing wrong with being more cautious. After pondering, she decided to call Celine, the general manager of the Terra regional branch.

Life at the Top Chapter 792

After spending a few minutes on the phone, Celine hung up calmly.

“I know who it is.”

Jasper was shocked when he heard Celine’s words. “We just found out someone was fooling around a few minutes ago and you already know who it is?”

“You knew who it was earlier on too, didn’t you?” Celine asked.

“Who else could it be if not William? The problem now is that we don’t have evidence,” Jasper spoke calmly.

At this moment, William was the only person who would and could control Sena’s share prices.

“I just received a call from the financial director of the Terra regional branch. She told me that William used special procedures to transfer one billion US dollars from the company’s accounts.

“He didn’t transfer the money through the proper procedures and he also told the financial director that he transferred the money to the headquarters in advance. She didn’t want to risk it, so she called me to ask if it was true.”

Jasper laughed aloud after hearing Celine’s words and said, “You’ve got to give this financial director a pay raise.”

Celine scoffed. “I wouldn’t have been able to do anything if he had just sat still and waited for the results, but there’s no blaming me now since he’s actively trying to screw himself over.”

Jasper glanced at the share prices and asked Celine, “How confident are you?”

“Who do you think I am?”

Celine harrumphed arrogantly and spoke, “Half an hour. I’ll get rid of him for you.”

Then, Celine left the room, leaving Jasper to mull over his thoughts for a moment before calling Henry over.

Henry was currently happily staring at the k-line that he did not quite like.

There was nothing he could do. Every small increase was still money and Henry’s ten million Harbor Dollars had now turned into 30 million Harbor Dollars. There was no reason for him not to be happy.

It was a giddy feeling to almost hear the notification of money entering his account every second.

“What’s up?” Henry asked once he got into the room.

“Someone’s actively trying to stop Sena’s share prices from rising.” Jasper did not beat around the bush.

Henry was stunned for a moment before he immediately pulled up his sleeves. “Tell me, which f*cker is it?”

To Young Master Law, there were two unforgivable things in this world.

The first, anything that prevented him from acting cool.

The second, anything that prevented him from making money.

This person was currently preventing him from making money, thus preventing him from buying his private plane and acting cool back in Harbor City.

This person has crossed both lines and therefore should be charged with death!

Jasper seriously doubted whether Henry understood what he meant by preventing share prices from rising but he was too lazy to explain it.

“We might need your dad’s help this time.”

“While we already have plans to fish the person out, the damage is done and we need to think of a way to turn the situation around to save it.”

Hearing Jasper, Henry was stunned for a bit and his intrigued expression fell.

“What the f*ck, why’d you call me over then? Call my dad. He treats you better than me.”

“Cut the nonsense and call him.” Jasper glared at Henry.

No matter how good his relationship with the Law family was, there were still limits to the things he could do. Some things would be more appropriate for Henry to talk to his family about.

Henry did not think too much about it and called his dad obediently.

A moment later, Henry passed the phone to Jasper with a silent look that was meant to convey ‘What did I tell you?’.

“It’s me, Uncle Law. It seems like I’ll need your help to make a statement,” Jasper spoke politely.

Zachary’s laughter echoed through the phone and he spoke, “What are you so polite for? It’s no big deal anyway. Tell me, then. What would you like me to do?”

“Uncle Law, you could...”

After hanging up the call with Zachary, Jasper did not hesitate to call Kayden next.

“You’re a busy man, aren’t you, Mr. Laine? How do you still have the time to call me?” Kayden sounded like he was in a great mood.

It was most likely that this man had his eyes focused on the change in share prices. His mood was naturally great when he realized that the money he invested had now tripled.

Jasper smiled. “Would you like to earn more?”

That immediately put Kayden on alert. “I already fell for one of your traps last time, so what do you have in mind now?”

Jasper replied exasperatedly, “Now that’s where you’re wrong, Mr. Langdon. We’re all benefitting here, so how could you accuse me of setting up a trap for you? But I actually do need the Langdon family to come out and make a statement this time.”

Kayden could acutely realize the unusual situation from Jasper’s words.

Jasper had not asked for Kayden but rather the Langdon family.

While Kayden was part of the Langdon family, those had two very different implications.

“Tell me what happened first. My father is rather low profile, so it wouldn’t be suitable if his children did the opposite.”

Kayden’s words were well-spoken, for he did not agree straight away nor did he directly decline Jasper.

This was the good thing about Jasper and Kayden's friendship and mutually beneficial cooperation.

Jasper smiled. "Basically, while Sena's current share prices aren't low, they also have the potential of going higher. It's just that there's someone here trying to control the prices. We're already dealing with him but his effect still remains. If we want Sena's share prices to keep rising, the market is going to need another strong shock."

"So you want me to release a statement on behalf of the Langdon family?"
Kayden was a smart man and immediately caught on.

Jasper did not disagree and continued, "That's the situation. The Law family has already begun making a move."

Kayden fell silent for a while and replied, "I'm in Harbor City now. How about you just tell me what you need me to do?"

...

Due to the different time zones, 1:00 p.m. in the United States was precisely midnight in Harbor City.

Just when everyone thought that the day was ending, the Law and the Langdon families released an important statement at the exact same time at 12:00 a.m.

The Law family even held a press conference.

In truth, if not for the Law family's reputation, the reporters would not even think of attending.

However, it had to be some big news if the Law family was holding a press conference with the Langdon family.

This resulted in reporters being woken up from their sleep by their superiors to rush to Law Manor.

At 12:40 p.m. in Harbor City, or 1:40 p.m. in the United States, the Law family and the Langdon family officially began their press conference.

“The Law family and the Langdon family will each sign a Strategic Cooperation Agreement with Sena. Sena will help the two families expand their business in the Mainland while the Law family and the Langdon family will fully support Sena by bringing its web portal and gaming business into Harbor City.”

News spread across the Pacific Ocean and half the globe in the shortest time possible before it arrived in the United States where people were still going crazy about Sena.

In an instant, the news stations and papers in the United States all began to talk about this.

Investors in the United States went mad once more!

Life at the Top Chapter 793

The Law and the Langdon families' statement implied that Sena was going to enter the Harbor City market with these two families' help.

While the Harbor City market did not mean much, one should remember that the wealthy families in Harbor City currently held large influence over Southeast Terra.

To those who were wise, this statement implied that Sena would enter the broad market of Southeast Terra.

With that being said, Sena now had the possibility of spreading beyond the country and becoming the first multinational internet company.

The market's enthusiasm was instantly reflected in Sena's share prices.

The share prices had been jumping between 88 and 89 US dollars when they instantly jumped to 99 US dollars ten minutes after the statement was released.

It was only one step away from reaching 100 US dollars.

Jasper looked at Sena's share prices and let out a slight sigh of relief.

He had at least managed to get rid of the negative effect William's actions had brought.

Just then, Winston Bennett's team also released a statement.

Winston Bennett had used his funds to buy 120 million US dollars worth of Sena's shares.

This statement tallied with his bullish stance on Sena during the interview.

Just then, Sena's share prices surpassed 100 US dollars!

Just as all the investors in the United States began to cheer about Sena creating miracles, Jasper's phone rang.

"Hello, is this Mr. Jasper Laine?" A middle-aged man's gentle voice sounded on the other end of the phone.

Jasper replied, "I am. And you are?"

"Hello, this is Winston Bennett's assistant. He had me make you a call.

"Mr. Bennett actually wished to talk to you in person, but an emergency came up and he's unavailable. On behalf of Mr. Bennett, I'd like to invite you to have afternoon tea with Mr. Bennett this Wednesday.

"I'd like to ask if you're free to meet, Mr. Laine?"

Jasper was stunned for a moment, almost believing that this was a scam call.

Although it soon occurred to him that this was unlikely.

"I'll be there," Jasper replied.

The assistant smiled and said, "We'll confirm the time and place then, Mr. Laine. Have a great day, goodbye."

After hanging up the phone, Jasper felt a weird feeling come over him.

He never expected to get into contact with the stock god Winston Bennett so soon in this life.

Jasper was elated, for this was Winston Bennett, and the man taking the initiative to invite him for a meet-up spoke of his acknowledgment of Jasper.

However, he felt no additional excitement. After all, Jasper no longer needed to marvel at anyone else anymore. If anything, he was the one the majority of people marveled at.

Jasper was envious, though, seeing how Winston Bennett had an assistant to make a call for him.

It seemed that Jasper had to speed up the employment of a secretary as it would not do well with his current status not to have one.

Jasper stayed in Nasdaq Exchange Center and watched for minute changes in the share prices. At that same moment, Celine was bringing a team of people toward the office William was currently in.

Celine could not help but chuckle when she remembered how infuriated Paulson looked less than 20 minutes ago when she told him the news.

“Are we certain this is the address? I don’t want to end up in the wrong place and forcing him into hiding,” Celine stated to the people beside her gleefully.

The people following Celine were members of Colossal Investments’ Integrity Department.

These were not the people who previously reviewed Celine. These were Colossal Investments’ true elites.

Most of them were from the United States’ Undercover Department or other special departments like the prosecutor’s court.

It was precisely thanks to these people that Colossal Investments remained as the investment bank with the least internal corruption over the past decade and longer.

“We’ve already confirmed with special equipment that the IP address of that transaction account is in this commercial building,” replied a stern middle-aged man.

Celine nodded and spoke, “Alright, let’s go then.”

Just then, William roared in his office.

His hair was a mess and his eyes were bloodshot. His originally ironed suit was now in shreds and hung sparsely over his shoulders.

Sitting on the chair, William stared at the computer in disbelief as he muttered to himself, “No way, how could the share prices suddenly rise so much?”

William had actually tried to sell his shares when the Law and the Langdon families released the statement in hopes to keep the share prices down.

Yet the investors’ total capital was too strong and it was foolish of William to think he could fight alone against so much hot money.

In an instant, the shares he threw out were completely sold to the other investors.

Before William could realize what was happening, Winston Bennet’s statement was released as well.

William slammed his fist onto the table at the sight of the striking large trendline and shouted, “No way! What the hell happened?! Something must’ve happened without my knowledge! Damn it, it’s more than 100 US dollars already!”

Bang!

The office doors were kicked open and a group of people rushed in.

Celine followed behind the group, and her slim figure was truly alluring. Every step she took turned heads and she entered the room enchantingly.

“You’re right, something did happen without your knowledge. Not that you need to know what it is now, since it’s not important anymore.”

William’s face paled as he looked at Celine and the group of people who were glaring at him disdainfully.

“What are you doing?! What do you mean by bringing so many people over, Celine?” William pushed aside the unease that surged within him and growled.

Celine waved a hand in front of her nose to get rid of the disgusting smell in the office. With a hand over her nose, she spoke, “The headquarters already knows that you embezzled the company’s funds, William.”

William’s expression changed drastically.

While he already had an inkling when Celine appeared with these people in tow, Williams still could not stop the fear and disbelief when he heard the truth.

“What nonsense are you spouting?!” William roared fiercely.

Just then, a middle-aged man beside Celine walked over expressionlessly and spoke with his badge in his hand, “Mr. William, I’m the special executive officer of the headquarters’ Integrity Department, reporting directly to the board of directors. We have sufficient proof that you’ve embezzled one billion US dollars from the Terra regional branch.

“You have the right to remain silent and everything you say will be used against you when Colossal sues you.”

With that, he gestured to someone beside him. “Bring him away.”

“Wait.”

Celine suddenly spoke.

Even William looked at Celine confusedly, wondering why she would stop them at such a time.

Life at the Top Chapter 794

“Have you not humiliated me enough, Celine?”

William glared at Celine and sneered.

Celine kept her hand over her nose and spoke cheerfully, “You think too much.”

With that, Celine ignored the sour look on William’s face and pulled her phone out to call Jasper.

“We’ve caught him.”

Celine stretched her neck to look at William’s computer screen as she spoke. Seeing Sena’s stock chart blinking continuously on the screen, she continued, “We caught him red-handed. He was still trading when we arrived and from the looks of it, he’s tried his best to keep the share prices from rising. He’s close to clearing his account at this rate.

“So what now, do you want me to bring him to you?” Celine asked.

Jasper was currently eating lunch with Jack and the rest.

They had woken up early in the morning to ring the Nasdaq opening bell so that Sena could go public. Everyone had been so excited and high-strung that they only found the time to have lunch now.

“No need.” Jasper swallowed a mouthful of food, feeling slightly upset.

While there were some restaurants in the United States, the flavor of the food here was rather indescribable.

Jasper was starting to miss the taste of home.

“There’s no need for that. He’s no more than an insignificant side character.

“I’m eating now, we’ll talk when you get back.”

Jasper then hung up the call.

As if anticipating that Jasper would say such a thing, Celine had put the phone on loudspeaker since the very beginning.

William had heard Jasper’s words clearly.

William, who still planned to protest at the very beginning, was irked by Jasper’s attitude and suddenly became as mad as a rabid dog.

This was the biggest attack someone could land on their opponent.

The enemy he had been plotting to crush ultimately defeated him as if he was nothing.

This was what William felt now.

A surge of anger and humiliation flooded him, almost making him abandon all rationale.

“Who does he think he is? I’m the president of Colossal Investments’ Terra regional branch! Countless financial magazines could only wish to interview me! I have people begging for me to invest in their companies and to give them a job at Colossal!

“Who the hell does he think he is! How dare he look down on me? What does he mean insignificant? I’m going to kill him! He’s f*cking dead!”

Overwhelmed by his emotions, William continued to thrash and struggle, which only resulted in more people surrounding him and keeping him in place. They made sure he could not do anything in his agitation.

Celine watched William's reaction and her expression looked content. She waited until he was done speaking before she replied slowly, "You're indeed the president of Colossal Investments' Terra regional branch. That's going to change soon, but I suppose you still are right now.

"The difference between the both of you is that you're nothing once you leave Colossal Investments. Even if you manage to stay in Colossal, you're still nothing more than one of its many senior executives.

"But he's the soul of JW Capital and its chain of companies. He has various companies under his name, all with boundless potential.

"The world's first skyscraper in the future will belong to him and the currently most hyped dot-com enterprise belongs to him too. Only the future will tell of his success.

"And there's nothing you can do but watch him succeed from the confinements of your jail cell."

Celine stared at the deep hatred in William's eyes.

"I can't believe I actually fought with someone like you for years. Now that I think about it, it's unbecoming of someone of my status. My apologies."

With that, Celine ignored William who looked completely defeated and waved her hand, "Bring him away."

...

Half an hour later, Celine appeared beside Jasper with a smile on her face.

“All done?” Jasper asked.

Life at the Top Chapter 795

“All done,” Celine affirmed.

“Good, then.” Jasper nodded but did not say more.

“It’s already 110 US dollars!” Celine exclaimed when she looked at the computer and saw Sena’s current share prices.

“There’s still one more hour until the market closes.” Jasper pondered softly with his hands underneath his chin.

“It should be okay now. Even if we can’t reach 120 US dollars today, there’s nothing much anyone can comment on considering such a performance from Sena on its first day.” Celine looked at Jasper and consoled him, seeing how serious and stern the man looked.

Although she had always joked around with Jasper, Celine also saw how much hard work Jasper had put in to raise Sena’s share prices.

At such a moment, she did not have the heart to joke about such a thing with Jasper.

To her surprise, Jasper smiled. “Don’t worry, I still have a plan.”

“Jack, come over for a bit.”

Hearing Jasper, Jack quickly went over.

“What is it, Mr. Laine?”

Jack asked gleefully.

As Sena's manager, Jack received company dividends, and the higher Sena's share price, the higher his net worth.

He was not the only elated one here, for all of Sena's senior executives were too. Everyone was in a great mood and their eyes were filled with respect when they looked at Jasper.

This man had increased their net worth from the millions to tens of millions in a day. Especially Jack, whose net worth was at the hundreds of millions mark thanks to the increase in share prices.

"How much cash is there in the company's accounts?" Jasper asked.

Jack immediately replied, "A little bit more than 360 million Somer Dollars."

"Have the company release a statement saying that the company is considering repurchasing its shares back to ensure the interests of existing shareholders."

Jasper instructed.

Jack's eyes widened in disbelief when he heard Jasper.

Indeed, the company did have the right to repurchase the available shares in the market.

However, companies only tended to do so in preparation for privatization.

Privatization essentially meant repurchasing all outstanding shares from investors and leaving the market.

There had never been a company that repurchased its shares the first day it went public.

“We could induce panic in the market if this goes wrong, Mr. Laine,” Jack spoke.

Jasper smiled and pointed at the electronic display that covered the entire wall outside the windows. “Look at how frenzied these American investors are. What panic can we induce in the market?”

Speechless, Jack took a look at Jasper’s determined expression and nodded. “Alright, I’ll get right to it.”

Jasper smiled. “Thank you.”

Jack grinned. “There’s no need, I’m just doing my job.”

Ten minutes after Jack left, another huge statement was released from Sena.

Sena’s managerial ranks had plans to repurchase 300 million Somer Dollars worth of shares to ensure its shareholders’ interests.

The news very quickly spread far and wide.

The investors were stunned and so were organizations and investing parties in Wall Street.

No one understood what Jasper was doing.

Instantly, calls and messages blew up Jasper’s phone.

The man was well prepared for this and directly switched his phone off. Now, no one could contact him at all.

Life at the Top Chapter 796

The market reacted almost immediately once they knew of Sena's statement.

Sena's share prices had another burst once the statement was released and stabilized at 110 US dollars. It was likely for it to keep rising and its trend was steep!

At the same time, in the president's office of Nasdaq Exchange Center.

Franklin and Paulson were chatting. The duo had yet to find out about Sena's statement, so they did not realize that Sena's share prices had suddenly spiked.

Paulson still did not believe that Sena would surpass 120 US dollars per share, for the dot-com industry's economy had yet to recover after its bubble popped. To exceed such a price was an impossible feat!

"You've been sitting here all day, old friend. It seems like Sena's share prices really won't be able to exceed 120 US dollars as you predicted."

As the president of Nasdaq Exchange Center, Franklin had seen way too many hyped or insignificant shares go public and privatize.

Franklin had more experience in share securities than Paulson and perhaps even more authority when it came to theory, or he could not have assumed the position as president of one of the world's six biggest exchange centers.

Paulson smiled softly and pointed at his brain. "That's because I have a fundamental understanding of the financial market and dot-com industry as a whole."

“I agree that Sena is an outstanding company, and if it had gone public before the dot-com bubble popped, I’m sure a company with its results can easily amount to 180 US dollars. But the industry is no longer the same.

“The limits of its share prices isn’t the business, but the market’s ceiling.”

Franklin sighed regretfully. “I agree. As you said, the market’s environment is what’s limiting it. It’s a shame, considering how boundless Sena’s potential is as an enterprise.”

Paulson laughed aloud and spoke, “Let this be a lesson taught to the young Somer businessman. He’s an extraordinary man, but he has yet to see through Wall Street’s financial market. In many cases, a company’s determined share price is hardly a representation of the enterprise’s results and future.

“There’s nothing wrong with a few more obstacles for the youths.

“There’s still another hour before its first transactional day ends. Will you truly fire Celine if Sena doesn’t manage to exceed 120 US dollars? You should know that doing so would create a rift between you and this Somer businessman. Your relationship would take a horrible turn,” Franklin spoke.

Paulson shrugged. “The world needs the United States and the United States needs Wall Street. As the largest investment bank in the world, the last thing Colossal lacks are partnerships. I’m sure he’ll know what to do if he’s a qualified businessman.

“Perhaps he’s already considering admitting his loss to me.

“As for Celine, she’s indeed the daughter of an old friend of mine. I won’t fire her because of this, but I will have to teach her a lesson.

“I need them to know that many things in this world aren’t in their control. After all, there are still people like us who are more experienced and more authorized. We can’t possibly let them get away being so full of themselves.”

Paulson had just finished speaking when someone hastily knocked on the door.

“Come in,” Franklin spoke calmly.

Jameson entered the room quickly and greeted the two old men, “Hello, President Paulson, Mr. Franklin.”

Seeing his own subordinate enter the room, Paulson frowned slightly and asked, “I thought you were supposed to be by Jasper’s side, Jameson? What are you doing here?”

Life at the Top Chapter 797

Jameson reported with a strange expression on his face, “President Paulson, I just received reliable news that Sena has given an official statement about preparing to repurchase 300 million Somer Dollars worth of Sena’s shares. They claim that it’s to ensure the interests of their shareholders.”

Paulson gasped at that. “What?!”

Even Franklin was stunned.

Jameson quickly continued, “The news caught us off guard and Jasper didn’t tell us anything before he made the decision... Perhaps he did tell the general manager of the Terra regional branch, Celine, but she did not report it to us.”

“He has the right to make any decisions he wants when it comes to Sena. After all, Colossal Investments are just providing service and a partnership. You aren’t Jasper’s superior, so there’s no need for him to report everything to you.”

Franklin looked at Paulson intently and smiled. “Looks like you miscalculated today, old friend.”

“This little Easterner brat. Where’s all this bravery coming from? Does he not fear that doing so will induce panic and cause the upward trend to crash?”

Paulson spoke angrily, feeling humiliated. Then, he opened the computer and pulled out Sena’s share chart.

Franklin came over to take a look as well. After taking a glance, he laughed aloud. “Looks like the Goddess of Luck is standing in the east today.”

Sena’s share price was at a whopping 121 US dollars.

From the trade volume, it seemed that the upward trend was still going strong and would not stop even when the trading day came to an end.

“This little brat!” Paulson spat out the words with his jaw set, only to suddenly break into laughter.

Paulson turned to Franklin as he laughed and spoke, “How long has it been since we last saw someone like this? The last person who dared make such a thrilling move must’ve been Winston Benett, that old fella.”

Franklin nodded in deep agreement. “To some degree, those two are the same kind of people.

“They take risks that the world believes to be unnecessary, only for them to receive a reward that greatly outweighs their risks. Not to mention that they know the moment they make their decisions that they’ll win.”

Franklin sighed in awe, slightly saddened about the end of a hero’s era but relieved to know that a new hero had arisen to take their place. “The world does indeed belong to the youths. Perhaps we’re really growing old.”

Paulson looked at Sena’s share prices quietly and closed his eyes. He began to think back on Jasper’s actions since Sena went public.

First was the advertisement and paving of the path for the shares before Sena went public. This was so all investors in the United States knew that this was a very outstanding share that had broken many of the dot-com industry's records.

Thanks to that, Sena's share prices then doubled from its issued price in a very short amount of time after going public.

Following that was William troubling him, but instead of panicking, Jasper countered it with his own contacts.

This caused the first surge in prices.

Then came Winston Benett's tacit help, leading to the second surge.

However, this current move of Sena releasing its statement was one of extreme determination and ambition. This move truly proved how intelligent Jasper was and Paulson could not help but be impressed.

Life at the Top Chapter 798

The analog clock ticked slowly on the display until the second hand finally rested on the number 12.

It was currently 3:30 p.m. in New York and Nasdaq Exchange was officially over for the day.

Following the end of the trading day, a loud cheer resonated throughout the exchange center.

A red flag with five stars on it appeared on the electronic display again, and below it were Nasdaq Exchange Center's and Sena's logos.

Everyone was cheering about the miracle they had seen today.

They had watched as Sena's share leaped from its issued price of 25 US dollars and grew almost five times in just six hours to 122 US dollars when the market closed!

At this moment, the host of the financial radio channel spoke excitedly, "You heard it right, Somerland's Sena has once again made history. Reality has proven to every one of us that as long as you are capable enough, you can create true miracles here in the United States!

"The share has grown five times its price in just one day. This means that thousands of people have become millionaires and more thanks to Sena's shares in just six hours!

"According to the latest news and a reliable source, eight people from Sena's managerial ranks have net worths of a few millions, four are worth a few tens of millions, and one is worth hundreds of millions thanks to such phenomenal success!

"This is a great moment for Nasdaq and Sena! Sena has proven to us today that despite enduring a pop in the dot-com bubble, the industry is still filled with potential and it's still a viable direction for the world to further develop. Perhaps all of us could ask ourselves if we've been looking at the dot-com industry with a biased gaze."

Jasper could not hear the host's intonated speech anymore for he was currently surrounded by Jack and the rest.

If everyone was not restraining themselves, they would be throwing Jasper into the air to celebrate by now.

"Have fun relaxing in New York for the next couple of days, everyone. Understand the charm of this international financial center."

Jasper spoke with a smile to the group of people who had gazes filled with excitement and admiration.

At that moment, it was as if Jasper was glowing.

The man shone brighter than anyone, and a simple small smile from the man was so charismatic that it could leave people feeling intoxicated.

“All your expenses will be paid by the company, except for shopping. After all, you guys have just made a lot of money.”

Jasper’s joke pushed the atmosphere to its climax.

Meanwhile, Henry was long gone.

The man was shaking vigorously from excitement upon realizing that he had earned 50 million from this. He immediately went to contact an aircraft manufacturer and decided to spend his money on buying a private plane.

Celine took a step back from the crowd and watched quietly as the group of elites were in a frenzy. These men in suits all resembled excited little children who had just gotten an award.

At this moment, the deepest feelings of a person were exposed out in the open.

Yet no one would mock them. If anything, there was only envy.

As the harbinger of this all, Jasper was surrounded by people but there was no sign of any excitement on his face at all. The man was still very much composed.

He stood there with a charming and confident smile on his face as always. It almost seemed like nothing could shake him out of his calm state of mind.

Celine really wanted to open Jasper's brain up sometimes, just so she could take a look at what he was hiding inside. 'How is he so calm no matter what happens?

'It's almost as if nothing in the world is worth his excitement.

'Or perhaps... he has a different goal in mind?'

Life at the Top Chapter 799

The possibility suddenly came to Celine.

For ordinary people, or perhaps for Sena's senior executives who were already at the peak of their careers, this achievement was tantamount to great success.

Yet to Jasper, this might just be one small step toward his final goal.

If that was the case, then it made sense why the man was barely excited at all. He still had a long road ahead of him; his future was somewhere much higher and much further.

"What are you thinking about?"

Jasper's words suddenly snapped Celine back from her wayward thoughts.

Upon returning to reality, Celine saw Jasper's smile right in front of her.

"You," Celine teased Jasper instinctively.

"I thought as much," Jasper replied, and it was obvious he was in a good mood.

The two shared a look before they broke out into laughter.

“Come on, let’s go look for your superior, Paulson,” Jasper spoke.

Celine knew what Jasper wanted to do, but she showed no fear at all and immediately followed Jasper to the exchange center’s elevator. She knew that Paulson had stayed in Franklin’s office the entire day in the exchange center instead of returning to Colossal.”

“Hey, how much did you earn today?” Celine asked nosily when they got in the elevator.

While everyone was calculating their profits, Jasper had also done some rough calculations in his mind.

Sena had risen from 25 US dollars to the current 122 US dollars, which meant profit was five times whatever he initially put in.

According to the rise in price today, Jasper then calculated his profit according to his percentage of shares. The amount came up to an overall profit of around six billion Somer Dollars.

Considering how much it had cost him to acquire Sena back then, he had made big profits today.

However, there was no way Jasper could liquidize all his shares, for Sena was currently his golden goose. For a man who was not even willing to let go of his full authority, Jasper was definitely not going to sell the company.

As such, this six billion was merely an income in his book of accounts. If Jasper did not want his control over Sena to waiver, he most likely would only be able to liquidize around two billion.

He had already invested five billion in the skyscraper’s construction, so it would not be too much of an issue to support operations in all his companies with a reserve fund of two billion.

Not to mention that the electronics company was making a daily net profit of one million and Elbert's team was currently researching how to manufacture an even cheaper MP4.

The MP4 was now being sold in other countries and had a rich product lining. According to Jasper's conservative estimation, he was making a daily profit of at least three million.

Coupled with United Legends, another cash cow, JW Capital and its subsidiaries should be able to operate self-sufficiently.

Jasper had indeed reaped many rewards from Sena going public. The problem of his tight cash flow had been resolved and most importantly, he had opened the doors to doing business in Wall Street.

As to what Jasper wanted to do with that, well, he would decide when the time came.

"Probably a small profit of a few billion," Jasper spoke with a beam.

"Sena's market price has exceeded tens of billions of Somer Dollars. It's one of the largest enterprises in Somerland, part of the Ten Billion Club. Companies like Sena are considered huge even over here in the west and I'm sure you, as the founder, have earned much more than just profits that could be written in your books of accounts." Celine was a professional for a reason and managed to identify the true benefit of it all.

Jasper looked at the president's office in front of them and spoke calmly, "We've arrived. We can talk about that later."

Life at the Top Chapter 800

This was the second time Jasper saw Franklin and Paulson in Nasdaq Exchange Center.

The two of them reacted to his arrival very differently.

Franklin's gaze was filled with curiosity and admiration, while Paulson had a tense and expressionless look on his face.

"President Paulson, it seems like I've won our bet."

Jasper went straight to the point as he was not in the mood to deal with Paulson's temper and the fact that the man thought he was better because he was older and more experienced.

Paulson nodded. "Correct. Sena's share price is valued at 122 US dollars currently, so you've indeed won."

"And our agreement?" Jasper asked.

"I'll keep my end of the promise. I'll hold a meeting with the board of directors tomorrow and fully support Celine in assuming the position of the president of the Terra regional branch, as well as cancel all reviews on her," Paulson replied curtly.

Jasper was very pleased.

Meanwhile, Celine, who was standing beside them, was stunned.

She knew of Jasper and Paulson's bet, but she had no idea that Jasper's condition was her promotion.

President of the Terra regional branch. This was a position she had worked hard for years but could never assume, yet this man had so quietly dealt with it for her!

Celine felt a strong urge as she glanced at Jasper who was beside her.

She wanted to rush over and just pounce on the man!

The urge was tremendous despite it only just appearing and it was almost impossible to suppress.

Celine flushed and her eyes grew moist, almost as though tears were about to fall.

Jasper paid no attention to the change in Celine's expression.

"Laine, I have to admit that I've underestimated you," Paulson suddenly said.

Jasper smiled softly and replied unaffectedly, "You have your own views, President Paulson, just as I have my own beliefs. No one in this world, including the two of us, can claim that our decision will definitely be the right one. All we can do is try our best to make fewer mistakes and make better decisions."

A smile finally graced Paulson's features as he spoke, "The more I talk to you, Laine, the more I admire you. To be honest, I don't feel as though I'm talking to a young man in his early 20s when I talk to you. You're experienced and mature. I can't help but feel like I'm talking to a friend."

"It's my pleasure," Jasper replied, neither overly humble nor arrogant.

Paulson smiled and continued, "To be honest, I've been thinking about it... If possible, I'd like to invest in your company."

Jasper frowned slightly but still chuckled. “Sena is already a company listed on Nasdaq. You’re welcome to invest in us any time, President Paulson.”

Seeing how Jasper was deliberately acting clueless, Paulson cursed internally at the man’s craftiness.

He decided to ask directly, “I mean I hope to invest in your other companies.

“You should know that Colossal Investments is currently the largest investment bank in the industry. We wish to partner with every promising company and I can promise that no matter how many shares we own, Colossal will not interfere with the day-to-day operations of your business.”

Jasper sighed internally at Paulson’s proposal.

As expected, the issue that concerned him the most ended up happening anyway.

With his outstanding capabilities and the fact that his subsidiaries were growing larger and stronger, it was only natural that they would attract attention from other capitalists.

In truth, Colossal’s investment was something more than 90% of the world’s start-up companies wished for.

After all, such an investment would give the company a surge in cash flow in a short amount of time, and it could also rapidly increase the company’s competitive ability thanks to its relationship with Colossal Investments.

For example, if Colossal Investments was one of Sena’s shareholders, Sena could easily enter the United States share market and gain market share of the web portal and gaming markets.

However, Jasper did not want these things.

With the memory of the following 19 years, Jasper was not afraid that he would be unable to enter the market. He knew better than everyone where the world's future was headed.

“Sorry, but Celine has suggested something similar to me before and my response hasn't changed. I don't plan to accept any investments.”

Paulson did not look too happy about Jasper's direct rejection.

He felt that Jasper was not respecting him at all by putting him in a difficult spot.

“Won't you consider it again?” Paulson asked persistently.

Jasper shook his head firmly and replied, “Perhaps Colossal and I could have future partnerships, but it certainly won't be now and it definitely won't be through investing in one of my companies.”

The atmosphere in the office thickened, and the office fell into silence.

Franklin watched quietly and mirthfully like an old witty fox.

Celine did not say anything either and merely looked at Jasper with admiration. ‘He's too manly.

‘He's so different from the average man.

‘What do I do? The urge to pounce and eat him alive is growing stronger. I don't think I can hold it back any longer.’

Paulson looked at the man before him silently. Jasper's jet black hair, warm skin tone, and dark brown eyes—all of this made Paulson think that Jasper was different from the other people he had been in contact with before.

For example, no one had ever rejected him so unyieldingly... Or at least, others had always done it indirectly to preserve his dignity. Yet Jasper did not.

Jasper seemed to be stating his firm stance resolutely, that he would not allow anyone to meddle with his company.

Paulson was now faced with a choice, either to be Jasper's friend or his enemy.

With Paulson's status and temper, the latter was something he did not even need to consider.

After all, no matter how outstanding Jasper was, he was still too weak and too young in comparison to Colossal.

This was something Jasper knew very well.

That did not mean he was afraid.

Ownership and complete control over his properties were Jasper's bottom line. If he could not keep that, then there was no point in his reincarnation at all.

The stronger the force in front of him, the more he could not give in.

If he gave in once, then the other party would only force him to give in again and again until there was nothing left of him.

After some time, Paulson suddenly smiled.

He reached out and took the initiative to shake Jasper's hand. "Capital is free, as is a person's desires. While it is a shame, I respect your decision and will protect your right to make a free choice. I hope we'll still have a chance for further partnership in the future."

The atmosphere in the office loosened with Paulson's smile and words.

The smile hanging on the corner of Franklin's lips grew as well.

He knew that this witty and young Easterner had won again. He had forced his old friend to compromise after so many years.

Jasper smiled as well as he reached out to firmly shake Paulson's hand. "I'm sure we'll have the chance."

Life at the Top Chapter 801

Walking out of the president's office, Celine stared at Jasper who looked very carefree and asked, "Were you not nervous at all?"

"About what?" Jasper asked despite knowing full well what she was talking about.

"About Paulson. He's not as kind as he looks. The fact that he managed to become Colossal's president despite starting from a normal project manager means that he's more ruthless than anyone if need be," Celine replied.

Jasper smiled and spoke, "His ruthlessness is a testament to how smart he is, and smart men tend to choose options that are the most beneficial to them. He won't get anything by starting an all-out war with me, so he won't do it."

"Bullsh*t." Celine rolled her eyes at Jasper. "Sure, your companies have unlimited potential and they've already grown quite a bit in size, but they're still nothing more than weaklings to Colossal, okay?"

"The investment bank wants to make money and Paulson wants fame. Getting rid of a weakling like me won't bring the investment bank money nor will the world suddenly respect Paulson more for it. Plus, on the off chance that they don't manage to crush me, they'll have a monstrous force to deal with in the future. Why go through all that trouble?" Jasper replied calmly.

"God knows where you got this confidence from," Celine spoke calmly.

Still, despite her words, Celine's eyes shone as she looked at Jasper.

As of that moment, Celine had already lost all ability to ponder and mull over Jasper's words. She would not think about whether Jasper's words were realistic or not.

She only had one thought in mind, and that was how handsome and dominant Jasper was. She just wanted to pounce on him!

"Are you free tonight?" Celine suddenly asked.

"I'll be out celebrating with Jack and the rest. Why?" Jasper asked.

"Celebrate with them another day. Leave your schedule tonight for me," Celine demanded.

"What do you want to do?" Jasper looked at Celine warily.

"You're still scared that I'll take advantage of you?" Celine spoke distastefully.

"Fine." Jasper believed that it was unbecoming of him, as a man, to back down before Celine, a woman, did.

A look of pride was concealed in Celine's shining eyes as she pushed the excitement she felt within her away. She walked out of a long-emptied Nasdaq Exchange Center with Jasper.

A short distance away from the center, the two saw a familiar figure being forced into a police car embarrassingly.

It was William.

When Jasper and Celine saw William, he saw them too.

"F*cking b*tch and b*stard! You cheating wh*res!" William began to shout madly when he saw the duo.

Celine stood in front of William and curled the corner of her lips into a cold smirk.

“Look at you now. What’s the difference between you and a defeated dog?”

Celine’s words greatly bruised William’s confidence. Staring at her wretchedly, he roared, “Don’t you dare look so proud! You only got to where you are today because you seduced some barbarian! I’d like to see how much longer you can keep up this proud act!”

Celine looked at William pitifully and spoke, “Say I did seduce men, I’d still never seduce you. Does that anger you?”

William ground his molars hard. If not for the two burly men holding him in place, he would have rushed over and shown her a piece of his mind.

“You b*tch!” William spat out the words.

The mocking sneer on the corners of Celine’s lips grew, but she showed no signs of anger at all.

Life at the Top Chapter 802

“What a pitiful loser. All the insults you throw at me are nothing more than the rewards of my victory. It sounds better than songs of praise from someone else because the more you insult me, the more tragic you’ve lost. And, the more I’ve won.”

Jasper, who was standing beside, could not help but take another look at Celine when she spoke. In all honesty, women really were superior when they argued. This alone was enough to get rid of a large group of people and their potty mouths.

William's body trembled in infuriation but Celine was no longer interested in arguing with him.

"Do you even know what a true winner is? No, you don't. Look at this man beside me that you called a barbarian. Yet has he paid you any attention from the get-go? Your every insult sounds nothing more than the barks of stray dogs to him.

"You can insult us as much as you want, but remember that you're going to trial soon while we're going to celebrate. This is the true difference between a winner and a loser. It's not about who has the loudest voice."

With that, Celine wrapped an arm around Jasper's arm and the two turned to leave.

William's eyes were bloodshot as he glared at the two retreating figures. He was too infuriated to speak.

After taking just two steps, Celine seemed to have thought of something and suddenly turned with a smile.

"Oh yeah, I've also gotten Paulson's promise that I'll be taking over your position.

"I'll be the president of the Terra regional branch.

"See you, or maybe not. We belong to two different worlds now and there won't be any reason for us to meet again. You've already lost and have nothing left. How tragic."

Celine and Jasper left, leaving William to roar and shout. Following this was the sound of the car door closing and then, silence.

...

Since he had promised Celine, Jasper did not go out to celebrate with Jack and the rest. After all, with a superior like him there, those senior executives might not be able to fully relax.

Jasper may be around their children's age, but his status was completely different. Not to mention that with Jasper's growing wealth, his subordinates' attitude toward him only became more courteous.

Jasper told Jack about it and got into the car Celine had prepared for them. The car made its way deeper into New York City.

Celine brought Jasper to one of New York's, and even the world's, most famous tourist attractions—the Empire State Building.

Jasper joked as he took in the tall Empire State Building that seemed to shoot for the sky. "I can almost taste money in the air when I take a deep breath."

Celine chuckled and spoke, "Come on, I have something special prepared for you."

Jasper was a little shocked but did not ask any questions, opting instead to follow Celine into the Empire State Building.

Jasper once again realized how broad Celine's contracts were.

This woman had actually transformed the rooftop area on the Empire State Building into an open bar.

Frankly speaking, a mere general manager of Colossal Investments' Terra regional branch should not be able to invite Winston Bennett for an interview, nor make the rooftop of the Empire State Building into her own private garden and bar.

Jasper was curious about Celine's family background, but if she did not want to tell him, Jasper would not waste his time asking either.

They were friends, after all, and family background did not matter.

Jasper did not have a great family background, so all he could do was be the background for his future generations. He would not envy others who came from wealthy families, or it would truly be bad for his heart to spend every day by Henry's side.

"Come and look at the city's skyline. Stand here. You're going to own a building even taller than the Empire State Building soon and it'll only be a matter of time before countless people look up to you like they look up to the Empire State Building!"

Life at the Top Chapter 803

Jasper felt a ripple of emotion in his heart as he looked at Celine who stood by the roof railing of the Empire State Building and listened to her speak.

He walked over to stand beside Celine by the railing.

Feeling the chilly and raging winds 400 meters up in the sky, his surroundings were dimly lit this evening and Jasper felt as if the entire New York City was beneath his feet.

The neon lights in this immense city spread from under his feet and stretched all the way to the horizon beyond what he could see. The city bustled with liveliness.

No one could tell for sure how many separations and reunions the city, populated by millions, went through each day.

Or what went on in the families behind every lit window.

As one of the busiest cities in the world, New York was indeed heaven for the powerful and the rich.

“One day, I’m sure,” Jasper murmured to himself as he stared at the night sky, now brightened by the city lights.

Beside him, Celine turned to focus her gaze on Jasper’s side profile, completely besotted.

She loved these moments of Jasper.

Unlike how gentle and reserved he normally was, the man’s aura was now tinted with dominance and fame. It was as though Jasper was in his true form at this very moment. He was a man waiting for the right timing to stun the world.

Celine personally believed that men should not be too humble or keep too low a profile. A man was supposed to walk with an aura of dominance to him, and a man who could make her look twice had to be one with the strength to conquer the world.

Jasper fitted her requirements perfectly right now.

“For tonight, you’re the king,” Celine spoke softly.

“What did you say?”

The wind blew loudly on the rooftop and Jasper turned to ask Celine what she had said because he did not hear her.

“Nothing much.” Celine chuckled, turning to walk over to the sofa where the wind was not as strong. Sitting down, she asked, “Is there something you’d like to drink? I can have someone prepare a lot of alcohol for you.”

“White wine. I’m not really used to drinking stronger spirits, and I’m so-so with red wine,” Jasper replied.

Celine pulled out her phone and made a call.

Less than ten minutes later, ten bottles each of white and red wine were brought up.

Following this was a table full of mouth-watering and colorful Somer dishes.

Jasper glanced at the bottles of white wine that had all been aged for at least ten years and bottles of collection-grade red wine that were all from the same oak cellar. “Is the Empire State Building your wine cellar and kitchen?”

Celine took off her shoes and curled up comfortably on the sofa barefoot. Smiling mirthfully, she replied, “It’s not that exaggerated, all I did was borrow the rooftop. Plus, when it comes to alcohol and food, nothing is impossible in New York as long as you’re willing to spend money.”

Jasper’s stomach was starting to feel uncomfortable by the Western food he had been eating these days, so he was undoubtedly elated to be able to enjoy the taste of home again.

Celine seemed to have loosened up as well, no longer complaining about being on a diet as she dug into the scrumptious dishes that filled the table.

Jasper drank the bottles of white wine while Celine drank the red. Under the strong cold winds on the rooftop of the Empire State Building, the two toasted and ate.

After finishing an entire bottle of white wine, Jasper began to feel a little tipsy.

Sitting on the single sofa, Jasper stared past the railing at the skyline, all the way to the horizon until he could not see anything anymore. Then only did he pull his gaze back.

“What are you looking at?” Celine looked at Jasper and asked, her cheeks slightly flushed after drinking one and a half bottles of red wine.

“Looking at whether New York City has an owner,” Jasper spoke.

“It does,” Celine replied with certainty.

Life at the Top Chapter 804

Jasper turned to look at her. Celine chuckled and pulled out a 100 US dollar banknote and waved it. “Look, the city’s owner.”

Stunned for a moment, Jasper then laughed aloud. “You’re right. So very right.”

“I want to own this US banknote of yours,” Jasper suddenly spoke after he finished laughing.

Celine’s smile vanished after he finished speaking and she stared intently at him, to the point where Jasper felt his hair rise out of caution.

“Why are you looking at me like that?” Jasper asked.

Celine did not respond, but she stood and walked over to Jasper.

Jasper sat on his single sofa with Celine standing before him.

The wind continued to howl on the rooftop but it could not dissipate the warming tension between the man and the woman.

Suddenly, Celine put her arm on Jasper’s shoulder so he would not get up and then turned around to plop herself on his lap.

All of a sudden, there was a woman in his arms.

Feeling the gentle softness and shocking suppleness of the woman in his arms, Jasper's mind sobered substantially.

"What are you doing?" Jasper asked, instinctively moving to push Celine off and stand.

Yet Celine seemed to have anticipated that, for she pressed his shoulder down with one hand and looked up at Jasper. "Are you really willing to push me away? Do you dare to push me away?"

Jasper instantly froze in place, and at the same time, he realized something. 'How the f*ck is she so strong?'

Just as Jasper made a mental note to spend more time at the gym once he returned, Celine then wrapped herself around him and got closer to him. Her red lips whispered in Jasper's ear, "But don't you want to be my owner?"

"You're married and I have a girlfriend," Jasper replied, trying his best to keep his mind sober.

"So you're throwing me away?" Celine asked pitifully.

Jasper was just about to apologize when he saw a sly expression on Celine's face. He realized then that he had been played.

"Girlfriend? I don't want to be with you anyway. What's the point in doing all that? Marriage is a grave," Celine whispered.

Jasper was just about to speak when a slim and fair finger rested on his lips to quiet him.

"Don't say anything, and don't move.

"Let's keep drinking."

Celine's voice was soft and her mesmerizing tone seemed to be laced with magical power. Jasper sat on the sofa and stopped moving as instructed. He did not say anything either as he looked at Celine.

Celine chuckled and commented, "Men. They just can't hold their ground when you flirt."

With that, Celine then grabbed a bottle of white wine and took a large swig. Instead of swallowing, she put the bottle back down and turned to wrap her arms around Jasper's neck...

Jasper's eyes widened as he felt something soft and damp touch his lips. Following this was the fiery burn of white wine. Those were two very different feelings and the strong alcohol burned as it reached his heart.

Just like that, Celine fed Jasper another two bottles of white wine.

Coupled with the bottle before, Jasper had already drunk three bottles of white wine while Celine drank five bottles of red.

"Let's go! To the hotel room!"

Celine finally got off Jasper's legs, which were now numb.

Life at the Top Chapter 805

There was a complicated yet addictive taste in his mouth.

The aroma of pure white wine was mixed with a hint of indescribable fragrance.

Jasper felt his body heat up as the fragrance and the aroma of the wine entered his throat from his mouth.

Jasper felt rather dizzy after drinking two more bottles of white wine in such a new method. All he knew was that the moment Celine got up, his heart felt empty along with the loss of weight on his lap.

He felt an urge to pull her back, to have her sit on his lap obediently and not go anywhere.

Then, Celine said something that caused Jasper's head to snap up.

"What now, are you scared?"

Celine teased as she looked at Jasper with a shine in her eyes.

With that, Celine slightly leaned down to close the distance between them. Celine's face was so close to Jasper's that not even the harsh winds could dissipate the romantic air between them.

"Or perhaps, you want to do it here?"

A pair of fair and soft arms fell on Jasper's shoulders. Celine half knelt and half squatted before the man, asking her question in such an amorous and attractive posture.

Jasper did not know whether this was caused by the influence of alcohol or if it was something else, but he grabbed one of Celine's snow-white and flexible arms. He flicked his wrist so that he could hold her hand in his. "It's exciting on the rooftop of the Empire State Building, no?"

"I don't want to catch a cold," Celine spoke and then pulled Jasper to his feet from the sofa. Leaning her chin on his shoulder, Celine spoke by his ear, "My body feels weak. Carry me downstairs, I can't move."

Standing up, the harsh breeze cleared a considerable amount of Jasper's drunkenness.

Celine leaned into Jasper's ear to speak again, seeing how the man had yet to make a move. "Are you a man or not? I'm going to hold this over your head for the rest of your life if you bail on me now. I already told you I don't need you to take responsibility."

"Not everything is up to you once they happen," Jasper warned.

Celine scoffed and taunted, "Come on, then! As if I'd be afraid of you."

'Motherf*cker!'

Mr. Laine was a man and he had never once backed down in such a situation in either of his lives, albeit he had spent his previous life as an apple-polisher.

Throwing all rationale and consideration out the window, Jasper princess carried the woman who was leaning against him. Her soft gasp at the movement stroked Jasper's ego.

"It's too late for you to regret now."

Jasper then kicked the rooftop doors once he was done speaking and made a beeline downstairs.

A moment later, in the Empire State Building's underground car park, Jasper followed Celine's instructions and found a car waiting for them. There was a young woman sitting in the driver's seat. She was most likely the assistant or driver Celine had brought along.

Jasper was too lazy to ask so he threw Celine inside and got in behind her.

"Four Seasons Hotel, I've already booked a room," Celine spoke.

Shock flashed through the other woman's face when she heard Celine. After all, Celine had never been so intimate or taken such initiative with a man before.

She did not dare ask more, opting to start the engine instead. With its roar, the car came to life and left the underground car park.

The scent of wine filled the car compartment and the temperature rose. Both Celine and Jasper were flushed.

Not even opening all the windows in the car could quell the frustrating heat within them.

Celine leaned against the chair and reached out to put an arm on Jasper's leg. At the same time, she instructed the other woman, "Drive faster."

The only difference between a beauty and a wh*re was that the former could spark a desire within a man with the simplest actions and words.

Life at the Top Chapter 806

Jasper felt it at this moment.

The sports car sped up without his awareness and dashed through a rather short distance before it screeched to a halt at the hotel lobby's entrance.

Jasper immediately alighted and opened the car door. Then, he carried the soft woman in his arms and made his way straight to the hotel's concierge without looking back.

Jasper tossed both his and Celine's passport to the check-in counter and said, "The room's already booked, give me my card."

While the concierge in Four Seasons Hotel had seen his fair share of things, Four Seasons Hotel was still one of New York's most prestigious hotels and it was rare to see such a rushed couple.

However, upon reading the information from the system and realizing this Eastern couple had booked a Deluxe Presidential Suite that cost 20,000 US dollars a night, the concierge immediately changed his mind.

Rich people were just different and it showed in the ways they booked a hotel room for salacious activities. They were especially extravagant and carefree. They were much better than broke hypocrites who arrogantly pretended to be gentlemen.

Just as Jasper carried Celine to the hotel lobby and checked in under plenty of the guests' gazes, an exceptionally handsome and gentlemanly Westerner was also staring at them from the lobby's lounge.

Precisely speaking, he was staring at Celine.

The young man oozed an air of nobility, and while his expression was calm, anger and humility swirled in his eyes.

Sitting opposite him was a middle-aged man.

“Sir Wharton?”

Wharton snapped back to reality when the middle-aged man called out to him.

Smiling apologetically at the man, Wharton spoke, “My apologies, my mind drifted somewhere else. I’m a little tired today, so I’ll send someone to contact you about what we discussed just now. That’s all.”

At that, Wharton watched as the stranger carried Celine toward the elevator and immediately left the confused middle-aged man alone as he made his way to the concierge.

“I want a room right next to those two,” Wharton demanded the concierge expressionlessly.

“My apologies, sir, but those two booked Four Season Hotel’s Deluxe Presidential Suite. You’ll need to book three days in advance if you want the room next to them...”

Before the concierge could finish his formal reply, Wharton pulled out a low profile black card.

“Your president is a common visitor in my backyard. Could you quickly get to it? I’ll explain it to him for you if it comes to it, but do not waste my time. Understood?” Wharton looked at the concierge calmly and spoke.

The concierge’s eyes widened greatly at the sight of the black card.

This was a top-notch card with no limits from the Swiss Bank. Only extremely formidable and powerful people around the world had one. It was an existence the concierge could never imagine having for himself.

Coupled with Wharton's words, the man did not dare to hinder him and frantically replied, "I apologize for my disrespect, noble sir. I'll check you in right now."

Ignoring the frantic concierge before him, Wharton turned to look at the elevator.

Just then, Jasper was facing the elevator while princess carrying Celine. The woman had her arms around Jasper's shoulder and her eyes met Wharton's.

Wharton could clearly see the inexplicable smile that hung on the corners of Celine's lips.

There was mockery, disdain, and indifference, but no hatred and definitely no love.

With a ding, the elevator doors opened and Jasper carried Celine inside.

The elevator doors closed and cut off the gaze shared by Wharton and Celine.

"Sir Wharton, that was?" The middle-aged man rushed over and quickly asked when he noticed Wharton staring at the young couple who walked into the elevator.

"That woman is my wife, Celine Maynard, the second in line to inherit the Maynard business in the eastern United States." Wharton had a small smile on his face when he spoke, but his tone could not be more chilling. The middle-aged man sucked in a cold breath at the words.

Life at the Top Chapter 807

The United States was rather special.

Excluding Alaska and Hawaii, which were not connected to the main country, the United States was separated to its eastern and western parts at the Mississippi River.

The political center of the eastern United States was headed by Washington DC.

While the western financial center was headed by New York.

The formidable Maynard family, a group of Somer descents who were second to none, had a special existence in the east.

Despite clearly being of Somer descent, the family had an exceptional status and authority in the east.

The middle-aged man was born and raised in the United States, so he knew quite a bit about this family.

As to how strong the Maynard family was, it could be seen in their marriage partner.

Wharton was a member of the Welling family.

As a noble family from the era of the British Empire, the Welling family was limitlessly powerful and they had quite an influence over Continental Europe.

'How could such a thing happen in the marriage union of two formidable characters?

'How could the second heir to the Maynard family check into a hotel room with another man in front of her own husband?'

The middle-aged man felt immensely regretful. He should have left just now, and he should not have come over to ask. He was screwed now that he had seen such a scandal in Sir Wharton's family.

In a few seconds of silence, Wharton had already regulated his emotions.

A polite smile reappeared on his face as Wharton apologized to the middle-aged man remorsefully, "My apologies, I have to go up now. If there's nothing else, please excuse me."

The middle-aged man looked at Wharton who remained gentlemanly despite being cheated on and felt a chill run up his spine.

'How deep are this man's thoughts? He might as well be a sociopath, or how else can he remain so gentlemanly in such a situation?'

Not daring to hold Sir Wharton back, the middle-aged man quickly replied, "Of course, Sir Wharton. We shall continue this conversation on a later date."

"Then I'll take my leave. Please excuse me." Wharton turned and left for the elevator.

Watching Wharton leave, the middle-aged man's lips twitched slightly. He held a moment of silence for the man who dared touch Wharton's wife before turning and leaving without looking back at all.

At the same time, on the 36th floor of the Four Seasons Hotel, in the Deluxe Presidential Suite.

Celine stood on the floor on her tiptoes with her arms around Jasper's neck. Her head was tilted up to meet Jasper who was looking down at her. The tips of their noses touched and they could both feel the searing heat of each other's exhales mixed with the scent of alcohol.

Celine suddenly let Jasper go and took two steps back. She pulled out a pair of red high heels that Jasper could not be more familiar with. Then, before Jasper's eyes, she bent down and squatted to change into those heels.

A crude man would believe that a woman looked most beautiful when she took her clothes off, while a man with taste would tell you that a woman looked best when she was putting clothes on.

Yet when it came to a man like Jasper who was with a beauty like Celine, every frown and smile from her was the best view he had set his eyes on.

Despite how she was merely changing into a pair of shoes, her demeanor was elegant and poised. A mischievous lock of hair hung beside her ear when she looked down. Celine lifted her hand to tuck the lock behind her ear, and that act alone was filled with the essence of a woman's beauty and charm.

"How do I look?" Celine smiled and asked Jasper after she turned around in place upon changing into her pair of heels—almost as if she wanted to show off her figure to him.

"Stunning."

"Then what are you waiting for?"

Celine's soft words and gaze were laced slightly with anticipation and chiding, but there was also a flash of well-concealed shyness and determination.

Jasper no longer hesitated, marching forward to grab Celine and throw her aggressively onto the bed.

This was a room that cost 20,000 US dollars a night, more than 100,000 Somer Dollars. This was how much it cost in 2001, and all decorations and furniture in the room were of the highest quality.

Celine's shapely figure was tossed unceremoniously onto the bed, and her body bounced on the extremely springy Simmons mattress before landing on it again. It seemed more like she had landed in a pool of cotton—soft and comfortable.

Jasper looked down at Celine as he hovered himself above with his arms supporting his weight.

From that angle, the slightly flushed and glossy-eyed woman under him looked naturally coquettish. She was akin to the most valuable treasure in the world.

Life at the Top Chapter 808

"I don't want you to regret this," Jasper spoke.

Celine reached out to loop her arms around Jasper's neck and chuckled. "Do I look like someone who's going to regret it?"

"Have you two divorced?" Jasper asked in a serious tone.

Celine chuckled. "Why? Isn't adultery always more exciting to you men?"

After the entire trip over, Jasper had more or less sobered up. He replied, "This is a moral issue. I have no interest in involving myself with other people's marriage."

"Don't worry about it."

Seeing how serious Jasper looked, Celine pointed at the purse she had thrown by the bed and said, “Open the zipper on the outside and you should see a compartment. Take out what’s inside.”

Jasper got up and did as Celine told. There was a very thin piece of paper in the compartment and Jasper was shocked when he looked up to find that it was a divorce agreement.

“He and I divorced last month. Do you remember my former secretary who was always at odds with you? She was one of the people he sent over to keep an eye on me. If it weren’t for the divorce, how could he not have rushed over to look for me when I got rid of her?”

Celine sat up on the bed calmly.

“It’s just that both of us come from huge families and for the sake of our family’s interests and his dignity, we can’t publicize our divorce.”

Celine then sneered, “He’s already gotten what he wanted anyway. He’s taken every single cent of capital that I’ve saved up over the past seven years.”

Jasper looked at Celine and asked, “Is it okay to divorce in secret if this is a union between families?”

“What’s wrong with that?” Celine grew calmer as if she was talking about someone else.

“There have never been any feelings between us throughout the entire relationship and we were only husband and wife in name. He married me for my status and had another puppet he could control. I only agreed for the sake of my family. My father left me 15% of the family’s shares before he passed but Wharton took that too. All that’s left is me as a person while he’s already taken all he wanted.”

Just then, someone knocked on the room door.

Despite having controlled his emotions, the rather rushed knocks betrayed his anger and frustration.

Jasper frowned slightly, assuming that it was some foolish hotel staff knocking on the door.

Celine, however, knew exactly who the man was, so just as Jasper got up to open the door, she reached out and pulled Jasper over her.

A man and a woman's body was built very differently, to the point that they might as well be two different species.

All Jasper felt then was something soft and plump underneath him. An indescribable scent enveloped his body with the shocking touch.

At the same time, Celine opened her mouth and let out a gentle, feminine sigh.

Her sigh passed through the room door and drifted into Wharton's ears clearly as he stood outside.

Wharton's hand froze in mid-air as he prepared to knock again.

Slowly, he curled his fingers and balled them into a fist. He did not knock again.

Inside the room, Celine told Jasper directly and frankly, "He's the one outside."

"He knows that we're here?"

Jasper was not completely sober from the residual alcohol-induced haze and he began to ponder how he should deal with this complicated situation.

Thank goodness that Celine was a victim of this marriage and they had already divorced. Jasper no longer had any psychological burdens and all he thought about now was how to support Celine through this.

“Are you scared?” Celine’s gaze burned into Jasper as she suddenly smiled.

Jasper did not answer, opting to raise his hand and pull Celine’s arm away from his neck. Then, he got up and opened the door.

The action had Celine’s heart lurching. While she did intend to take her revenge and give Wharton a shock, she had not expected Jasper to face Wharton right this moment.

She was too well aware of the true wretched character Wharton hid under his gentlemanly facade. Jasper was not yet Wharton’s opponent.

When the door opened, Wharton was met with a calm-looking Jasper and Celine who rushed over.

“Was my wife to your taste?”

Wharton stared at Jasper and asked calmly.

Life at the Top Chapter 809

Jasper was rather impressed when he first saw Wharton.

Be it the man’s appearance or his aura, Wharton was surely an exquisite character among men of his caliber.

People like him had to have generations of nobility before them, for they would not turn out like this otherwise.

“From what I understand, you’re divorced,” Jasper replied.

As he spoke, Jasper intentionally took a step to the side to stand in front of Celine protectively.

It was a detail that both Celine and Wharton caught onto.

Wharton's expression remained unfazed as his gaze shifted to land on Celine. "So you dare go against me but you don't dare to admit that you did?"

Celine's face popped out from behind Jasper as she replied lazily, "Would you stop acting like you've caught me having an affair? We aren't related anymore, Sir Wharton."

'Sir?'

Jasper acutely caught on to the information Celine leaked with her words.

This was a modern society, so ordinary people could not possibly be called 'sir'.

This title had thus exposed Wharton's identity.

He was from a noble family, one conferred by the royal family.

While this was a modern society and being conferred by the royal family did not suddenly grant someone more power, it was symbolic enough that it showed this man carried the royal bloodline. This was something others could not and would not impersonate.

Wharton glared at Celine and spoke coldly, "We've already agreed that while we are divorced, it will not be publicized and you must defend the status of our marriage in public. You were not to taint my name and yet what have you done? Checking into a hotel room with another man?"

"You're provoking me, and in extension, the entire Welling family!"

“Did I make such a promise?” Celine asked curiously. Chuckling, she replied to Wharton, “Never believe a woman’s words, because lying comes naturally to women. Don’t tell me such a plain and easy concept is foreign to you, Sir Wharton.”

Wharton suddenly smiled. “Good, very good. You’ve finally impressed me.”

Celine replied calmly, “I’ve impressed you? It’s a shame that I’ve already seen through you. You want to talk about promises? Sure, then what about you? You won’t even leave my secretary alone and you made her supervise me for you. You truly have inherited the degenerated style of your so-called nobility, Sir Wharton.”

Anger flashed through Wharton’s fair and clean face due to humiliation. He turned to Jasper and spoke coldly, “I don’t care who you are to her nor do I care what has happened between you two. All you need to remember is that from this moment on, you will be an enemy that I have to eliminate.”

“I’ve never lacked enemies before, so what’s one more?” Jasper spoke calmly.

“Very well, then. At least Celine did not disappoint me on this. She didn’t find a completely useless piece of trash.

“But do not forget that you’ve provoked an enemy you cannot afford to provoke. No matter what your family background is, you have no right to show off in front of me. My power is much further beyond your imagination.”

Wharton glared at Celine and Jasper coldly as he spoke in a bone-chilling tone, “Enjoy your days, for there won’t be many left.”

With that, Wharton then turned and left without looking back.

“Wait.”

Jasper suddenly halted Wharton.

Wharton stopped walking. He did not turn, but he did not leave either.

“It’ll only be a matter of time before the things that do not belong to you get taken away.”

“That’s what I should be saying,” Jasper stated calmly.

Wharton finally turned around and scoffed at Jasper as if mocking how ignorant the man was. Then, he turned and left.

Jasper did not speak anymore and watched Wharton vanish at the end of the corridor.

Life at the Top Chapter 810

Jasper returned to the room and grabbed his clothes.

“Are you leaving?” Celine asked.

“Come with me, I’ll get you a room in the hotel I’m staying in,” Jasper spoke.

“Wharton already knows that you’re staying here, so there’s no saying what he’ll do. Just in case, it’s safer if you follow my suggestion,” Jasper stated.

Celine chuckled and said, “He wouldn’t dare do anything to me.”

“That’s a different story.” Jasper shook his head.

Celine got up and grabbed her purse, replying, “Alright. As you say, then.”

The two walked out of the room and immediately left Four Seasons Hotel.

The moment they left, Wharton also received notification in his room on the same floor.

“Leave, go ahead. I’d like to see how far you can run.” Wharton shed his facade in his room, and his expression turned wretched, horrifying, dark, and stormy.

He grabbed an expensive ashtray from the table and threw it harshly at the television. Panting harshly, the man let out an animalistic roar.

“No man will ever allow being cheated on, Celine! You b*tch! Just you wait!”

After venting it all out, Wharton pulled out his phone to make a call.

Wharton’s mood was regulated once the call connected.

“Charlie, I need all the information you have on the man Celine has been in intimate contact with. And have someone bring that b*tch Yvonne over to me. I have questions that need answers.”

...

Returning to DoubleTree by Hilton Hotel, Jack and the rest had yet to return from their celebration when Jasper booked a room for Celine.

Celine sat on the room’s sofa quietly and obediently as she watched Jasper walk toward the door.

“Get some rest. We’ve had a bit too much to drink today so I’m a little tired. We’ll talk more tomorrow.”

Jasper spoke as he stood at the door.

Celine looked at Jasper intently and said, “We’d be chatting in the bathtub now if not for Wharton, right?”

Jasper chuckled but did not reply. Instead, he wished her goodnight.

The door closed softly and Celine sighed. She settled her chin on her knees that were brought up to her chest, her gaze looking a little lost.

The following morning when Jasper woke up.

All traces of alcohol from last night had disappeared and Jasper's mind could be any clearer.

It was at that moment he found out Celine had checked out of her room an hour ago.

"I went back to hand over my position. Don't worry about me, coward."

Jasper looked at the message and chuckled.

Celine was the same as ever and it seemed like nothing could change her unique, inimitable personality.

Keeping his phone, Jasper opened his door only to knock right into Henry.

"What the f*ck?! You vanished for a day and came back early in the morning to murder me?" Jasper stated distastefully.

Henry had a solemn expression on his face as he shoved a pamphlet in Jasper's face.

"Take a look. What do you think of this airplane I chose?"

Life at the Top Chapter 811

It was very rare for Jasper to see Henry desire something so passionately.

Thinking about it, Jasper realized it made sense. Henry's family background ensured that he would have everything he wanted.

Even though the Law family was much stricter with him, they would not throw Henry to a farm somewhere to train his endurance like a ridiculous plot from a novel considering their wealth.

It was unrealistic.

A private plane, however, was a different story.

A private plane burned a lot of resources and while money did not mean much to the Law family, they were rather strict. The only reason Zachary had a private plane was that there was no alternative since he had to take frequent business trips since taking over the family's business.

To Henry who had been given anything he wanted since he was a child, the best things to him were those beyond his reach.

Henry had been extremely excited these days now that buying a private plane was no longer just his wishful thinking.

Jasper took the pamphlet and flipped through it.

'What the f*ck is this?'

'Helicopters too?'

“Which one do you have your eyes on?” Jasper asked, looking at Henry suspiciously.

“This one.” Henry pointed at a plane on the pamphlet and began to describe it, “The Dassault Falcon 2000. It’s 20.2 meters long and its main wings are 21.4 meters. Its height is 7.1 meters tall. This private plane can fly up to a speed of 851 kilometers per hour and is estimated to be able to fly 7,030 kilometers in one go.

“It’s cool right?”

Seeing how proud Henry looked, Jasper replied, “It is. But this plane costs 80 million. Do you have that much?”

Henry cleared his throat and whispered, “I borrowed 30 million from Anna.”

Jasper was shocked. “How did you persuade her?”

Henry sighed and replied, “I promised that I’d pay her back with interest in a year. And the money has to come from a legitimate business.”

“And if you can’t?” Jasper asked with a smile.

According to his understanding of Anna, her conditions would only be backed up with countless ruthless punishments.

As expected, Henry’s expression darkened. “Then she’ll confiscate my plane and freeze my credit cards, leaving me to fend for myself for two years.”

At that train of thought, Henry sucked in a cold breath and glared at Jasper. “You’d better do something instead of watching me suffer. I’m expecting you to start new companies and make them go public. I’ll come and join in on the profits.”

“Don’t worry, it shouldn’t be too hard.” Jasper consoled him as he could not bear to watch Henry wandering on the streets.

Henry immediately beamed. It was as if a nod from Jasper meant that making 30 million was no problem.

He leaned over to Jasper and spoke gleefully, “This Falcon 2000 is perfect no matter how I look at it. It has a cool appearance and awesome specs, so why don’t you get one too? Then we can ask for a discount.”

“I’ve already decided.” Jasper tossed the pamphlet back to Henry and continued, “These aren’t good enough for me.”

“F*ck you too, man!” Henry was enraged at how someone was bashing his precious love. Harrumphing, he asked, “What are you buying, then?”

“When it comes to private planes, everything is child’s play compared to the Gulfstream series.”

Henry’s eyes widened as he looked at Jasper, and the corner of his lips twitched.

While he was upset about Jasper calling his Falcon 2000 child’s play, he did not have the courage or the facts to argue since the man was comparing it to the Gulfstream.

There was too big a difference! Even the cheapest of the Gulfstream series cost at least 100 million!

Henry’s net worth was not even enough to buy that.

Henry looked at his pamphlet and his treasured plane no longer felt as valuable anymore.

Just then, Jasper had already made a call to Jameson.

“Jameson, could you contact General Motors for me? I remember that they acquired Gulfstream Aerospace last year, and I’d like to buy a private plane.”

With Jameson at his disposal, it would be a waste for Jasper not to use him.

Not to mention that Jameson contacting them on behalf of Colossal Investments would be much more efficient than if he went to look for them himself.

A wealthy man’s time was precious.

Jameson replied with an extremely envious tone, “Alright, I’ll contact them right away.”

After seeing the miracle yesterday with his own two eyes, Jameson now treated Jasper as a VVIP and immediately went to contact General Motors.

A moment later, Jameson called Jasper back. “Laine, they’d like to ask you which aircraft you’re interested in purchasing.”

“Has the first-generation G500 been manufactured yet?” Jasper asked, thinking back to his memories from his past life.

If his memory served him right, the G500 should already have been produced. Flying at a speed of Mach 0.88 kept the G500 as the fastest private plane for six years, until the record was broken by the Gulfstream G650.

Still, the Gulfstream G500 remained to be one of the best private planes.

“Alright, I’ll ask right away. Please hold.”

Jameson brought another phone to his ear and asked before replying to Jasper, “They’re shocked as the first-generation G500 was only commercially manufactured last month. They’ve just obtained a commercial sales license but have yet to give an official statement.

“They’ll send someone over to talk to you about this in person tomorrow because they just so happen to have two planes from their first batch on hand. They’re newly manufactured and if you’re happy with the price, they can sell one to you straight away and you wouldn’t need to wait at all.”

Jasper nodded, evidently pleased.

In the future, people even had to wait to buy cars that were in short supply, let alone airplanes.

There was no reason for manufacturers to keep planes worth hundreds of millions in garages waiting to be purchased, for it would take a toll on their funds.

Thus, most planes were preordered a year or two in advance and only paid when the plane had been manufactured.

To have the plane right now was indeed the best option.

Looking at the time, Jasper realized that it was already Tuesday and he had a meeting with Winston Benett on Wednesday afternoon. As such, Jasper said, “Have them come tomorrow morning. I’m busy in the afternoon.”

Jameson replied, “Alright, I’ll pass the message along.”

Hanging up the phone, Jasper found Henry looking at him sorrowfully.

“I want a Gulfstream too,” Henry wailed pitifully.

“Then go make your own money. It’s not that nice always reaching out and asking your family for money, is it? You don’t even get to choose what you want,” Jasper spoke.

“I know. But I want a Gulfstream now. Won’t you lend me some money?”

“I don’t mind lending you money, but tell your dad or Anna to ask me instead or they’ll hate me. They’re hoping you use this chance and get yourself together. You need to stop wasting your days away.”

Life at the Top Chapter 812

Henry wailed tragically. Upon realizing that it was impossible to scam Jasper of his money, he left with despair on his face.

Despite it no longer being as great, the Falcon 2000 was still a private plane he had been dreaming of owning. Plus, it was more than cool enough to brag about back in Harbor City.

Henry immediately confirmed the purchase after he consoled himself. He did not want to stay by Jasper’s side anymore in fear of suffering more.

Jasper found himself held back by Jack and the other senior executives after Henry left.

“You have to come join our celebratory party today no matter what, Mr. Laine,” Jack told Jasper with a smile.

“Won’t my presence restrain you from fully enjoying yourselves?” Jasper smiled.

Jack waved him off. “The older ones are resting today and they’re planning to buy souvenirs for their family. It’s just a few of us today and we’ve all been following you for quite some time. There’s nothing to be restrained about.”

“Alright then, let’s go celebrate.”

Jasper gave in at Jack’s persistence.

After all, celebrations like this were a good way for him to build better relationships with them.

He may be their superior, but it was still very important to gain his subordinates' favor.

Nothing was going on today anyway, so he was glad to relax his taut nerves that had been getting worse recently.

In Four Seasons Hotel, while Jack dragged Jasper away for daytime drinking.

Wharton was sitting behind the desk in the study with his hands held together under his chin. He was slightly frowning as he looked up at the frantic woman who was shifting in her seat not too far away from him.

This woman was Yvonne Stone, the secretary Celine fired.

Yvonne, who was once a high-spirited and high-ranking white-collar worker, had now fallen into an embarrassing state full of despair all in half a month.

Yvonne looked at Wharton cautiously. While she had a few lovely memories with this man in front of her, Yvonne knew his character all too well.

He had used too many women that he could no longer count them, and none of the women who ever thought that they could gain benefits by selling their bodies had ended well.

That was why Yvonne did not dare to think that Wharton would treat her any differently because they had slept together before. Instead, all she felt was fear when she learned that Wharton had asked her to come over.

“Yvonne Stone.”

Wharton called out Yvonne's name softly and stood from where he sat. He walked around the desk and stood in front of her before reaching out to gently lift her face.

Reflected in his pupils was a relatively beautiful face with a petrified expression.

"Sir... Sir Wharton," Yvonne spoke shakily and it was evident that she was trying to control her fear.

"You're terrified of me?" Wharton's tone grew even softer as though he was afraid of further scaring or terrifying the woman.

Yvonne was close to tears as she replied, "I'm sorry, Sir Wharton, I... I..."

"Why are you saying sorry? Do you perhaps think that you've done something wrong that you didn't tell me about?" Wharton asked gently.

His tone grew even gentler and his expression was calm, but his gaze was filled with ice-cold disgust.

"Tell me, why did Celine fire you? Who is that man beside her?"

"And why didn't you tell me she fired you? Why was your first response to hide? Did you think you could hide from me?"

Yvonne's heart instantly sank in despair at Wharton's words.

Life at the Top Chapter 813

She gulped and replied, "I didn't mean to do it, Sir Wharton. I just thought that I was of no more use to you, so I didn't dare return to your side."

“Because you’ve seen me get rid of everyone I’ve lost use for, because you were afraid, that’s why you didn’t dare come back. Is that what you’re telling me?” Wharton asked.

Yvonne was too terrified to speak.

“You do not get to decide whether you are useful to me or not, I do!

“If I claim that you are, then you’ll live a great life even if you’re in a persistent vegetative state. If I claim that you’re not, then you can be the most outstanding person in the world and I will still wipe you off the surface of it. I do not need smart*sses, understood?”

Wharton’s gaze was ice-cold and void of any emotion.

“Un-Understood.” Yvonne nodded frantically.

“Is there a man by Celine’s side?” Wharton asked indifferently.

Yvonne nodded and replied, “His name is Jasper Laine. A Somer businessman, he’s produced great results.”

“Great results, huh?” Wharton chuckled humorlessly. “That makes sense, or he wouldn’t dare touch women like Celine. Nor would Celine like him if he wasn’t an accomplished man.”

Yvonne mustered up the courage to speak, “Sir Wharton, Celine fired me because of that Jasper.”

With that, Yvonne received a harsh slap across her face from Wharton.

This was a strong slap, and it had Yvonne falling on the ground from the impact. Her reddened cheek immediately began swelling as blood trickled from the corner of her mouth.

Yvonne did not dare to make a sound, so she cupped her cheek with one hand and held back her tears. She was too afraid to cry.

“Who gave you the right to call Celine by her name? You lowly b*tch!” Wharton spoke in a dark tone.

“I’m sorry, Sir Wharton,” Yvonne swallowed and spoke, ignoring the pain and fear she felt.

“From now on, I will ask questions and you will answer them. Do not anger me again,” Wharton warned indifferently.

...

Colossal Investments’ headquarters, Paulson’s office.

Celine sat in the wide chair carefreely as she played around with one of the trinkets on Paulson’s desk.

Paulson signed a nominating document and handed it to Celine. “Alright. You’re officially the president of Colossal Investments’ Terra regional branch from now on.”

Celine glanced at the document that countless people could only dream of having and spoke lazily, “Meh. The moment you sign a document handing your position as president to me is when it gets truly interesting.”

“Why? Are you already tired of the position?” Paulson asked meaningfully.

“It’s different.” Celine left the trinket alone and supported her chin on her hand. “I always wanted this position when I couldn’t have it. But now that I do, you realize it’s not actually that big of a deal.

“But it’s different when it comes to people, you know. I’m a good woman who loves all the way to the end.”

Paulson furrowed his brows at Celine’s words and spoke, “Doing that will bring Jasper a lot of trouble. You know that your husband is hardly someone who can be negotiated with.

“As a man, I’m very well aware that no man will remain unaffected in face of such a situation. He will do everything he can to take revenge on you. Jasper will also end up a target of his revenge.”

Celine scoffed and replied disdainfully, “Wharton? Forget it. He’s only got a few tricks up his sleeve at most. He’s not shameless enough to take revenge on us blatantly.

“Or our secret divorce would immediately spread throughout Great Britain. He’ll become a laughing stock and the Welling family will be faced with humiliation.”

Life at the Top Chapter 814

At that, Celine suddenly smiled.

“As to him suspecting that I’ve committed adultery, well, I didn’t. Any intimate relationship I’ve had with other men can’t be considered that since we’ve already gotten a divorce long ago. Nothing happened between Jasper and me before we got the divorce.

“Not that anything happened between us after.”

Adding that last part, Celine then sighed, looking rather despondent.

After that great opportunity last night, it was going to be difficult for her to find another chance to pounce on Jasper.

That man was too smart and too difficult to persuade. He was still able to remain sober after all that drinking.

Celine spitefully speculated whether Jasper was even a man at all.

Paulson listened quietly as Celine spoke. He waited for her to finish speaking before he slowly said, "Honestly speaking, I would've fully supported you choosing Jasper if he had appeared before you got married."

Celine chuckled. "I don't remember seeing you stand up for me when the family forced me to marry Wharton for their benefit, though."

"The situation was special, then. Plus, it was a matter among the Maynard family. I'm merely an outsider and, at most, the man your father asked to watch over you after he passed."

"Let's stop here, Mr. President. You promised me not to speak of our personal feelings here at work." It was evident that Celine did not want to continue the conversation.

"Alright, then, let's talk about something else. What are your plans after this? Take this as a review from a superior to you, the new president of the Terra regional branch." Paulson changed the subject.

"What else can I do? I'm going to make the Terra regional branch greater so that it'll have the best results among the five branches under the headquarters. Then hopefully I'll get to use that to get a spot for myself in the board of directors and you'll get to retire two years earlier than your original plans."

"I told you this before when you first became the general manager of the Terra regional branch. The situation there is more complicated than you think, and many people are reluctant to see such a strong character of Somer descent appear...”

At that, Paulson looked at Celine intently. “Suppressing private Somer businesses from taking the path of internationalization and globalization is one of the most important things to them!

“This is something Colossal Investments’ shareholders as a whole cannot prevent, let alone me. As second in line to inherit the Maynard business, you should know better than I that businesses frequently rely on politics for survival.”

Celine frowned slightly. “You mean that Somer businessmen like Jasper would have to trek a rocky path when they try to spread beyond Somerland?”

Paulson chuckled aloud when he saw that Celine understood what he meant. Then, he diverted the conversation away from such a sensitive and secretive topic.

There were many things better hinted than said, for being too blatant about it might only reap the opposite results.

“As to you wanting me to retire two years before my plan, I’m afraid your wish will come true very soon.”

Celine frowned at Paulson’s words and sat straight, looking at the old man in front of her seriously and silently.

“I’m retiring next year. It was a decision made among the shareholders during their general meeting. As of now, it’s still absolutely confidential,” Paulson explained.

“Thos b*stards!”

“You’ve worked your entire life to make Colossal Investments the best investment bank in the world. You’ve put decades of hard work into this and they’re kicking you out just like that?” Celine was enraged.

“Haha.”

Seeing how Celine was genuinely angry, Paulson smiled in gratitude and spoke, “It’s not that exaggerated. I’ll still get 3.8% of Colossal Investments’ shares and I’ll become one of Colossal’s investors.

“You have to understand that Colossal Investments is a professional internationalized enterprise. Its ordinary share rights are very complicated.

“There is no individual large shareholder and the shares are all distributed to all sorts of large companies. With everyone holding a small portion of shares, the company itself may be able to make its own decisions, but rights to the company are also spread out.

“That was why as humiliated I felt when Jasper rejected Colossal’s investment, I was also very grateful.

“Look at it this way, Mr. Maxus founded Colossal Investments in 1869, yet his descendants have all been thrown out of the bank at least 100 years ago. There’s not even a sign of them left.

“Jasper has his eyes on a very long-term goal, so if one day...”

Paulson’s gaze was profound. “Jasper will become the king to his own business kingdom one day, and no one will be able to doubt his power.”

Celine sighed after she heard him. “That path is too difficult to tread.

“Other large international capitals aren’t like Colossal Investments and Colossal Investments won’t be the same once someone else takes your position. That person might not be as easy to talk to, so if I can't take it, I might as well destroy it before it gets too strong for me to do so. That's just how the world works, no?"

"Which is why..."

Paulson stood up and placed a beloved trinket that he had kept on his office desk for years into Celine's hand. Then, he patted her shoulder with the affection of an elder and spoke, "If Jasper really manages to open a bank one day, go help him and leave Colossal.

"Then again, this is if such a day ever comes.

"I'm giving you this trinket now. This was something your father gifted me to celebrate my promotion as Colossal Investments' president, and it's also the only thing I've never changed in my office all these years. I'm returning it to its owner now."

...

Jasper, Jack, and the rest spent the entire day moving between bars and places to drink, having a ton of fun. Jasper had lost count of how many places they went and how much alcohol he drank.

All Jasper remembered in his blurred mind was receiving a call from both Anna and Wendy who congratulated him and nothing more.

In the end, Jasper remained the last one standing. He was proud of the fact that he had outdrank Jack and the rest thanks to his strong physique and youth.

With great difficulty, Jasper managed to return to the hotel thanks to Julian's help and he fell asleep the moment he hit the bed.

It was 2 p.m. on a Wednesday when he woke.

Jasper reacted instantly when he opened his eyes and looked at the time. He was late!

Life at the Top Chapter 815

“Jul, why’d I sleep in so late? Why didn’t you wake me?” Jasper got up and spoke to Julian who walked in. He pressed a finger against his throbbing temple.

Julian replied exasperatingly, “I came over to wake you twice, Jasper. You didn’t wake up the first time, and you were incoherent when you replied the second time only to fall right back asleep after. I realized that you weren’t in a good condition anyway, so I let you sleep.”

Jasper got off the bed and went to clean himself up. Jasper saved a mental note to himself to not drink so much next time. Making him late was one thing, but the hangover the following morning was horrible.

“Have the people from General Motors arrived?” Jasper asked while brushing his teeth.

“They arrived half an hour before the agreed time at 9:30 this morning. They’re still waiting,” Julian replied.

“I’ll be there right away,” Jasper spoke.

“Won’t you eat something first?” Julian asked.

“It’s fine. I’ll be meeting Winston Benett later anyway and there’ll be food to eat for afternoon tea,” Jasper replied.

In DoubleTree by Hilton Hotel's executive lounge sat two irritated men clad in suits.

"It's already 2:10 p.m., Dalton. I don't think there's any need to wait anymore," the slightly chubby man spoke irritatedly.

Dalton was also irked as he glanced at the time. "Let's wait another ten minutes. We'll leave if we don't see him. It seems like this person isn't sincere at all."

"What if they're just joking? The Gulfstream G500 costs 47 million US dollars. How could someone with such horrible time management afford that?"

"I don't think that's possible. This is someone whom Colossal Investments' Jameson introduced..." Dalton spoke hesitantly.

"If he's not coming to buy later then we're not going to be very polite either. People like this need to be taught a lesson."

Five minutes later, Jasper hastily appeared in the executive lounge.

Jasper made a beeline for the two commercial sales representatives. He was about to apologize before one of them spoke impolitely with a frown.

"What on earth is going on with your boss? Where is he? Just tell us if he's not willing to buy the plane and stop wasting our time. Why'd he send a young man like you over anyway? To apologize?"

Dalton almost could not conceal his anger when he saw Jasper.

After being made to wait aimlessly for four to five hours, the other party decided not to show up and instead sent a young man over. Dalton felt severely humiliated.

Hearing him, Jasper knew that they had misunderstood.

“I’m Jasper Laine, the person who wants to buy the Gulfstream,” Jasper stated.

“My apologies, I’ve had too much to drink yesterday.”

Jasper did not fault them for their resentment considering he had made them wait four to five hours. He apologized sincerely.

This had nothing to do with wealth but rather a person’s upbringing. Having made them wait so long, Jasper was aware that it was his mistake and there was nothing wrong with being more humble.

“Mr. Laine, we’re only here because you’re Mr. Jameson’s friend. If you can’t even manage your own time, we’re seriously doubting your sincerity in buying our plane. Plus, with how young you are, do you even have the money to buy it?”

Dalton spoke coldly.

Jasper’s brows furrowed slightly. It was his fault for being late and he would not refute them if they scolded him about his lack of time management. However, that last comment did not sit right with him. This was the United States and he did not know looking down on people was a trend here too.

“Age and wealth have no direct correlations. I entrusted Jameson to contact you on my behalf because I sincerely do want to purchase your Gulfstream G500 private plane,” Jasper explained patiently.

Dalton sneered and mocked, “Really? You’re telling me you’re actually going to buy this plane priced at 47 million US dollars?”

At this moment, Dalton still did not believe that Jasper would buy his company’s plane.

Firstly, Jasper was too young.

Secondly, he was of Somer descent.

As far as he was concerned, Somerland was an extremely poor and underdeveloped country. There was no way people from such places could afford a private plane costing tens of millions of US dollars.

“I don’t like joking about serious things, nor will I make a fool of people because of a simple joke.”

Jasper spoke as he looked at Dalton calmly.

Dalton scoffed and replied, “I can’t imagine that people from the poor and underdeveloped Somerland can afford private planes. When Mr. Jameson said it was a Mr. Laine, I thought it would be some big shot from Coreana willing to do business with us. Looks like I’ve misunderstood.”

“How ridiculous of you to make us wait here aimlessly from 9:30 a.m. to now when it’s almost 2:30 p.m.”

Dalton then glanced at Jasper mockingly, saying, “The Gulfstream G500, priced at 47 Million US dollars with no available discounts. There’s nothing wrong with you buying it, but I’m going to need to check your bank account first. Please hand me your bank account card with the most money in it. I’ve already brought my device.”

At that, Dalton pulled out a small machine.

“Imagine if he brings out his payroll card and there’s only a few hundred thousand in it.” The slightly chubby commercial sales representative suddenly turned to Dalton and mocked with a sneer.

“I heard that instead of being given checks, people in Somerland receive their salaries by having it transferred to their bank accounts at the same time. Everyone earns a monthly payment of at least 100 US dollars.”

“Pfft.” Dalton laughed aloud exaggeratingly. “100 US dollars? Damn it, what a big amount. My daily coffee costs even more than that.”

The two shared a look and laughed aloud.

Jasper calmly pulled out a debit card and stared at them, saying, “Here you go.”

Dalton took a look at the normal debit card. Seeing how it was not some limited edition card either, he looked down on Jasper even more and simply swiped it over the machine.

“Please key in your password,” Dalton told Jasper lazily, “I just don’t get it, why do you actively try to make a fool of yourselves? Are all you people of Somer descents like that?”

Putting the machine back down, Jasper received a call.

“Hello, Mr. Laine. I’m Mr. Bennett’s personal life assistant. I previously invited you on behalf of Mr. Bennett for afternoon tea today. Are you free right now?”

“I am,” Jasper replied curtly, “But I’m currently dealing with something in the hotel’s executive lounge.”

“Alright, Mr. Laine. I’ll be there shortly. Mr. Bennett asked that I personally bring you over to meet him.”

While Jasper was on the call, Dalton and his colleague had also seen the balance in Jasper’s debit card on the machine.

Unit: US Dollars.

Balance: 31,294,124.12.

Life at the Top Chapter 816

The terrifying nine-digit balance had both Dalton and his colleague's hearts skipping a beat.

Dalton pinched his thigh harshly to confirm that he had read the number right and was not hallucinating.

Frankly speaking, no matter where a person was, a nine-digit balance in someone's bank account was enough to shock anyone.

Dalton felt his throat dry up and his scalp grow numb.

He could claim that the number was fake if Jasper had brought his own machine, but this was a machine Dalton brought from the company and it was made to check the balance in a customer's card. There was no way it would be wrong.

That meant the balance in the card was true!

This was money that he could withdraw at any time!

Looking up at Jasper again, Dalton did not dare to be disrespectful at all. Trembling, Dalton was lost for words.

"Are you done checking?" Jasper asked.

"Ye-Yes." Dalton immediately became alert and quickly replied, politely handing the debit card to Jasper with both hands.

The large change in attitude was because they knew, from the balance in his bank account, that this person of Somer descent was not someone they could afford to offend.

Dalton began to sweat abnormally. While he fumbled for words, Jasper continued to speak.

“I’m a little short on time right now as I have an important meeting in a few minutes, so let’s get the procedures dealt with quick and concisely.”

Dalton was so moved by Jasper’s words he could almost cry. “Thank you for your understanding, Mr. Laine. Let me first introduce the latest G500 to you.

“The G500 is a private plane manufactured precisely for VIPs like you, Mr. Laine.

“It can reach up to a speed of Mach 0.8 airborne, which is 0.8 times the speed of sound. This is the fastest private plane in the world, and it—”

Jasper raised his hand to interrupt Dalton and spoke calmly, “What I meant by quick was to sign the contract right away. I don’t need to know about the details.”

Gulping, Dalton turned to look at his colleague.

Frankly speaking, they had come in contact with quite a few wealthy customers considering they sold private planes.

However, even rich customers tended to ask about the plane’s specifications, like normal people with cars, as this was a purchase of tens of millions of US dollars.

This was the first time Dalton and his colleague had met such a ‘hasty’ customer.

“Is something wrong?” Jasper frowned slightly.

He did not hold it against them for looking down on him, for he had made them wait aimlessly for about five hours. Even the most patient man had his limits and Jasper would not be calculative about this with them.

However, the fact that these two seemed so easily stunned made Jasper wonder if they were reliable salesmen or not.

“No, no problem at all!” Dalton quickly replied, seeing how Jasper was beginning to feel displeased. He quickly pulled out a document and was about to pass it to Jasper when a middle-aged man in his 40s entered the executive lounge.

Doyle found Jasper at first glance when he arrived at the executive lounge. While he had never met the man before, Doyle had certainly seen pictures of Jasper.

Making his way to Jasper right away, Doyle spoke courteously, “Hello, Mr. Laine. I’m Doyle, Mr. Benett’s personal life assistant. We’ve spoken on the phone before?”

Jasper got up and shook Doyle’s hand with a smile. “My apologies, Mr. Doyle, but it seems like I’ll have to make you wait a little longer. I have a contract to sign.”

“Are you Mr. Doyle?” An extremely excited voice sounded beside them.

Doyle turned to see Dalton and his colleague looking at him excitedly.

“Mr. Doyle, I’m Dalton. We’re employees of Gulfstream Aerospace under General Motors. We met once when we went to do maintenance for Mr. Benett’s private plane early last year. How is Mr. Benett doing?”

Dalton’s voice trembled in excitement.

Doyle seemed to be used to such scenes. He gave a small smile and replied politely, “He’s doing quite well. He still drinks a bottle of coke a day and insists on having two beef burgers in the afternoon.”

“That’s great. Are you perhaps here to invite Mr. Laine, Mr. Doyle? He’s our new customer.”

Hearing Dalton, Doyle looked at Jasper in shock and asked, “Are you planning to buy a private plane as well, Mr. Laine?”

Jasper smiled. “I thought that since I’ll be flying a lot in the future, it’d be more convenient to have a private plane of my own.”

“Is there anything I can help with? I’m rather close with Gulfstream Aerospace’s president and Mr. Benett is one of their shareholders. I’m sure Mr. Benett would be glad to help you secure a satisfactory discount.”

Doyle spoke enthusiastically.

Jasper smiled. “It’s alright, I’m already signing the contract anyway.”

One had to take a look at the time, place, and from who when it came to taking favors.

Jasper did not believe owing Winston Benett a favor over a bit of money was a worthy trade.

Not to mention that Jasper did not care much about a discount.

He could have bought a Falcon 2000 with Henry if he wanted something cheap.

Plus, there was an invisible yet real price to pay for securing a discount through Winston Benett’s name.

It was an overall loss.

As he spoke, Jasper directly took the contract from Dalton and signed his name.

“I’ll transfer the deposit into your company’s account today and I’ll pay the rest in full when you hand over ownership of the plane. I would prefer it if you completed the procedures as fast as possible as I’m planning to return to my home country shortly,” Jasper spoke.

Dalton had nothing but utter respect for Jasper, a man who could enjoy afternoon tea with Winston Benett. He did not dare to harbor any other thoughts as he quickly replied.

“Of course, Mr. Laine. We’ll go through all the procedures for you so that you can proudly return to your country on your own private plane, the world’s first Gulfstream G500.”

“Thank you. You have quite the way with words” Jasper smiled.

After dealing with the purchase of the private plane, Jasper did not linger and followed Doyle out of the hotel.

A Maybach was waiting for them at the door.

Doyle personally opened the car door for Jasper and only got in after Jasper was settled inside. Only then did the car slowly drive off.

This was a scene that quite a few reporters waiting outside the hotel had managed to take pictures of. Instantly, the relationship between Sena’s owner, Jasper, and Winston Benett became another hot topic among the public.

Life at the Top Chapter 817

As the globally recognized stock god, Winston Benett had already made a name for himself in the 1990s’ financial industry around the world.

While the financial industry was considered one of the more sophisticated and closed-off ones, the man truly made his name known among ordinary folk when he started to auction his lunch for charity in the year 2000.

Jasper still remembered that this year in 2001, Winston Benett's lunch would be auctioned off at 18,000 US dollars, which was the cheapest in history.

In the year 2020 in his past life, Jasper had reincarnated before the auction that year. The latest he remembered was 2019. One might ask how much his lunch was auctioned off at.

4.56 million US dollars, which was 31.54 million Somer Dollars according to the exchange rate at that time.

Jasper had always thought that Winston Benett had made a great move by doing so.

For it had gotten him fame and actual benefits.

While it was done in the name of charity, Jasper's keen eyes and understanding of things had greatly exceeded those of ordinary people. He was well aware that Winston Benett auctioning his lunch was a much more complicated and wise business skill.

Ordinary people would never understand why someone would spend tens of millions for a plate of steak that Winston Benett had eaten before, but the increase in reputation was much worth the price paid.

The Maybach quietly drove past New York's streets and boulevards before it finally arrived at a seemingly normal restaurant by the streets.

Jasper realized that a white old man seemed to have been standing at the restaurant's entrance for quite some time.

That man was the legendary Winston Benett, an old man with a kind smile that never left his face.

Jasper had already stepped down from the car before Doyle could open the doors for him, and he made his way toward an approaching Winston Benett.

“Hello, Mr. Benett, it’s an honor to receive an invitation to join you for afternoon tea. I’m sure our conversation today will be immensely joyful,” Jasper spoke first.

Winston shook Jasper’s hand and spoke gently, “Mr. Jasper, while this is the first time we’ve met, I must say that I’m greatly impressed by your achievements. I’m also very glad to see such an outstanding talent emerge from the mysterious Somerland in the East.”

“My country has one of the oldest civilizations in the history of mankind. It’s also the only one of the four ancient civilizations that have continued into the present...”

“I believe all we lack back home are opportunities. Now that opportunities have arisen, I’m sure that there will only be more people like me making a name for ourselves outside the country for the world to know.”

Jasper was neither too humble nor arrogant when he spoke, and his confidence in his own ethnic race was rewarded with Winston’s admiration.

A man’s success would be limited if he did not even love his country and its people.

The two chatted happily as they entered the restaurant.

It was a normal restaurant and there did not seem to be anything special inside.

Considering the time now, the restaurant was rather empty. There were only two waiters with Jasper and Winston as the only customers.

Winston must be a regular here, for the waiters did not seem too excited at the sight of the man. They merely greeted him and asked if he wanted the usual.

Winston turned to look at Jasper and introduced, "I love the food at this restaurant so I chose to meet you here. Is there something you'd like to eat, Laine? I personally quite like their beef Wellington. It's very authentic."

"Alright then, I'll have a beef Wellington with a fruit salad and a cup of tea please." While Jasper was not used to eating Western food, he had no other choice but to go with the host.

Jasper was really hungry considering he had not eaten anything since he woke up hungover, so the large portion of beef Wellington actually tasted delicious.

"I must thank you for the statement you released on the first day Sena went public, Mr. Benett. Had it not been for you, I don't think Sena's share prices would've managed to reach 122 US dollars," Jasper told Winston after finishing half his food.

Winston smiled and replied, "It's what I usually do, releasing a statement after I've purchased a certain percentage of shares. It's nothing to thank me for. Plus, even if I didn't release any statement, I'm sure someone will manage to find out from the published data sooner or later."

"But there will be different implications to the public if they were to realize it themselves and if you were to release a statement about it yourself. Its effects and time taken are different too," Jasper spoke seriously.

Winston smiled and slowly said, "Laine. I actually invited you today because I'd like to discuss business with you."

"Business?"

Jasper put down his cutlery and looked at Winston intently, waiting for the other to elaborate.

As expected, Winston did not make Jasper wait too long and quickly spoke, “Laine, you own a company called Terizone Inc back in Somerland, correct?”

That sentence immediately raised Jasper’s defenses.

After a moment of thought, Jasper replied calmly, “I wouldn’t say I own it. Terizone has a group of founders and I’ve agreed that while I do own a majority of shares, I will not interfere with the company’s day-to-day operations.”

Winston smiled as if he had seen through all of Jasper’s thoughts.

“I understand. We play quite the same role most times, looking for promising companies and investing in them to earn profits in the end.

“But the difference is that the companies you’ve invested in as of late are all companies with unlimited potential. Your foresight is something no one can compare to and this Terizone Inc is one of the most outstanding of them all.”

Winston’s gaze shone with great interest. “From what I can tell, Terizone will one day become an entity so large it’ll stun everyone. It’ll become a topic everyone talks about in the internet era, but it’s a shame that you were a step ahead of me.”

In all honesty, if not for the fact that it was impossible, Jasper might seriously suspect Winston to be another reincarnated man.

This old man’s foresight was too accurate.

Terizone had already shown its strengths, but it still had a long way before it became a household name.

Especially the base of Terizone’s business, the instant messaging domain, which would be known as the social networking domain when the concept expanded in the future.

As of that moment, in the year 2001, no one in the world had any idea how socializing on the internet would completely change the way people socialized.

Yet Winston Bennett had already realized it.

“Are you interested in Terizone Inc, Mr. Bennett?” Jasper had to ask.

“I am!”

Winston replied straightforwardly and frankly.

“If possible, I’m even willing to invest one billion US dollars to buy all the Terizone shares you have.”

Life at the Top Chapter 818

Jasper smiled at Winston’s words.

One billion US dollars.

That was still an astronomical amount in the year 2001 when all currencies were severely depreciated.

Such money was enough to make an utterly poor man into the top 1% of the world’s richest people.

People slaved away for a better quality of life, yet how many people could ever make so much money their entire lives?

This was certainly a convincing price.

“That’s a very appealing price you’re offering, Mr. Benett,” Jasper commented.

Winston shook his head regretfully at Jasper’s response. “Yet I feel like you won’t agree to this business proposal.”

“Indeed.”

Jasper admitted without hesitation.

“Terizone is very important to me. It’s a major part of my plans for my business career that I cannot afford to lose. So unless you’re proposing to buy my entire future, I apologize as I cannot sell it to you.”

Winston laughed along with Jasper’s words. “That’s a very interesting way of speaking. You managed to reject me without making it too awkward. So, Laine, how much for your future?”

“Do you really want me to make an estimate, Mr. Benett?” Jasper asked.

“Haha.” Winston laughed out loud and spoke, “I hope we’ll have more chances to work together in the future.”

“I’m sure we will,” Jasper affirmed.

Jasper had begun testing online payment, be it for online shopping or for socializing online.

These were the main features that would change the rules the world played by, and Jasper would make sure all of the technology spread across the world.

Winston had made a huge name for himself in the United States and even the majority of the West, so he was one of the most important candidates for future partnership.

That was why Jasper believed that there would certainly be opportunities for them to work together.

“Then let us toast to our future.”

Winston, a great fan of coke, raised his cup of it which Jasper toasted with a cup of coffee instead of alcohol.

It was already evening when Jasper got back into the Maybach Winston had prepared for his return to the hotel.

While the two had not solidified any future partnerships, the conversation today had left the two with a chance for happy meetings in the future.

Both of them anticipated the day they would get to work together in the future.

Upon returning to the hotel, Jasper received a notification from General Motors.

Winston had indeed helped him secure a few advantages when he found out that Jasper had bought a Gulfstream G500.

Gulfstream had prepared a professional crew that would fly Jasper back to Somerland. This team would then stay to help Jasper train his own team of flight crew and teach them how to fly the world's most advanced private plane.

This alone had saved Jasper 500,000 US dollars.

In addition, Gulfstream would also gift Jasper three years of free maintenance service, which would save Jasper at least two million US dollars.

This was an advantage of making more friends. Of course, Jasper could always purchase such services with money, but it would not be as convenient or attentive.

It had to be known that Winston was a shareholder of both General Motors and Gulfstream Aerospace, so his words were just as powerful as the chairman of Gulfstream.

With his own plane dealt with, Jasper thought of Henry and immediately called the other. He then found out that Henry had left to pick up his own Falcon 2000.

To quote Henry, he 'could not wait to show off anymore.'

The man had taken dozens of pictures of his new plane, and half of Harbor City's circle of trust fund babies now knew that Young Master Law had bought a private plane with his own money. If not for the fact that WeTalk Memories had yet to be a thing, the man would have been trending throughout the country.

Now that all this was dealt with, Jasper was left with one last issue.

One last and most important issue of all.

The meeting with Google's founders.

Google!

It was one of the greatest companies in the 21st century! One could only imagine how powerful this company was.

Due to political reasons, ordinary people in Somerland might not know much about this company's influence.

Yet outside of Somerland, Google's influence was sensational.

It was a company that started off through search engines and its status in the search engine domain around the world was comparable to Terizone's status in Somerland's social networking domain.

Moreover, Google would soon play an active role in highly advanced industries such as artificial intelligence, cloud computing, and biotechnology.

It was as if Google excelled in every industry it dabbled in and had never failed before.

For example, Google had also decided to venture into mobile phone operating systems and the product they came up with was widely used.

The operating system went by 'Andriod'.

87% of the world's mobile phones in the market used this operating system.

If not for Apple's Steve Jobs being quite the man himself, Android would have taken over the world.

Thanks to Todd, Jasper had contacted two of Google's founders, Page and Brin. Both parties had agreed to meet in Hilton Hotel three hours later.

Jasper was confused about this.

'I clearly remember that Google's first office was actually one of their female classmate's garage. They only got an actual company with offices after they received enough funding half a year later.

'Yet the two claimed they'd arrive at the hotel in three hours, meaning they're in New York.

'What are they doing in New York, then?'

...

At the same time, in a luxurious office in another corner of New York City.

A young Westerner in a white suit and leather shoes sat behind his office table. The man's features were laced heavily with arrogance and indifference as he stared at the uneasy young man in front of him.

"My father is Rogers, the president of Quantum Fund, and I'm the senior investment manager at Layman Investments. How dare you reject me and turn to cooperate with a Somer businessman?"

Life at the Top Chapter 819

Morrison's overwhelming force had Page and Brin looking embarrassed and afraid.

While the three of them were of similar age, Morrison had grown up in a wealthy family and received the best education available. When he graduated, he got a job in the world-class Layman Investment Bank's middle management.

As for Page and Brin...

Page's family could still be considered slightly powerful, but Brin had come from an ordinary family.

Not to mention that Page's family background was nothing in comparison to Morrison's.

"We have no intention of offending you, Mr. Morrison, but you understand that cooperation has to be done on common grounds, at least. And we believe that you..."

"I mean that Layman Investment Bank's conditions are too harsh. By purchasing 80% of our shares with 60 million as well as accepting you as our operational supervisor, we would then lose all initiative."

Page glanced at his partner and spoke with difficulty.

“We cannot possibly accept such harsh conditions.”

Morrison scoffed and leaned back against the chair as he spoke coldly, “You need to know that there are at least 8,000 to 10,000 start-up companies like yours in the United States. Do you know what makes you different from them?”

“The only difference is that I like you and I’m willing to invest. Yet you’re criticizing me for having harsh conditions?”

“What makes you think that a small company like yours will still find other sources of investment after rejecting Layman Investments, huh?”

Page clenched his jaw at Morrison’s words and replied, “There are other people interested in our company, at least.”

“That man of Somer descent?” Morrison’s expression grew even more mocking.

“Somerland is nothing but a poor, underdeveloped, and feudal country. The only people you’ll find there are scammers and ruffians! Do they even know what the internet is? Or what a technology company is?”

“You’re people of the United States, and yet you lower yourself just so you can work with the lowly people of Somer descent? How shameless!”

Page frowned heavily at that and was about to speak when Brin tugged on his hand to stop him.

After stopping Page, Brin then gave Morrison an apologetic smile. “We’re merely getting in touch with them, Mr. Morrison. After all, this is someone Mr. Todd has introduced. He bought 27% of Google’s shares from Mr. Todd.”

“Even if not to discuss the terms of cooperation with him, it’s only right we meet him considering he’s one of our shareholders.”

“So you’re using Todd’s name to shut me up, then?” Morrison scoffed.

“Who the hell is Todd in comparison to my father?”

“Yes, yes, of course.” Brin smiled, much more tolerant than Page.

“But we aren’t you, Mr. Morrison. You have a powerful family supporting you and you’re the senior investment manager of Layman Investments. We’re but the founders of a small start-up company. We don’t have any power at all so we don’t really have a choice when it comes to a lot of things.”

Brin’s extremely humble attitude slightly brightened Morrison’s dark expression.

“Hmm, not bad. At least, you’re respectful when you speak.

“Go if you must, then. But remember that my conditions are here. You’d better decide quickly because if I change my mind, I won’t entertain you even if you come begging at my door.”

“Yes, yes, of course. We’ll definitely think it through and give you a satisfactory reply, Mr. Morrison.”

Brin spoke and dragged an upset Page out of the room.

After they left, a beautiful and lithe secretary strutted into the room.

Morrison slapped her on the butt.

“Have someone find out who that person of Somer descent in touch with Google is. Google’s a very promising company and investing in them will help me fight for the position as president of the Terra regional branch. There’s no way I’m going to let some stink*ss person from Somerland screw my plans over.”

“Very promising company?” the secretary asked.

“Yahoo has already agreed to use Google’s search engine technology. That’s what my dad said. No one knows about this yet, not even Google themselves have been informed.

“Google’s market price will immediately skyrocket by the time news gets out. Only idiots will think that Google’s an ordinary start-up!”

...

Page and Brin arrived at DoubleTree by Hilton Hotel one and a half hours after they left Morrison’s office.

They were shocked to see Jasper standing by the entrance to greet them.

Sitting in the car, Page, who had been wearing a dark expression on his face because of Morrison the entire ride over, suddenly turned to Brin when he saw Jasper standing by the entrance from afar. “Brin, I would prefer accepting this person of Somer descent’s investment if his conditions aren’t too harsh.”

“Why?” Brin asked.

“Take a look.”

Page pointed at Jasper’s silhouette that was getting clearer as the car drove toward him and said, “We’ve been smiling as we begged others to invest in us all this while, yet who has ever come out to greet us before? It’s been a very long time since I’ve been treated with such courtesy. He makes me feel respected.”

Brin’s gaze burned into Jasper as he pursed his lips silently.

Life at the Top Chapter 820

“It’s nice to get to meet you two.”

Jasper reached out to shake Page’s and Brin’s hands as he spoke, approaching them once they got out of the car.

Page shook Jasper’s hand and spoke with a smile, “Hello, Mr. Laine. I’m Page and this is Brin, we’re the co-founders of Google. It’s an honor to meet you.”

“I’m honored to meet you as well.”

In truth, Jasper had seen pictures of these two people in his past life.

Page was a shut-in obsessed with technology, a direct and blunt man. While Google was still in its most difficult incubation stage, they had relied mostly on generosity to overcome it.

Brin, on the other hand, was more restrained and had more tact. He was more of a businessman than Page.

When Google grew, Page became the face of Google most of the time but true control of the company still laid in Brin’s hands.

He was a low profile man who had self-restraint.

After quick small talk, Jasper invited the two into the hotel’s restaurant as they enjoyed dinner.

Page and Brin had just sat down when they realized that Jasper had attentively prepared a meal that catered to their Jewish tastes.

“To be honest, Mr. Laine, I’m feeling a warmth from you that I’ve never felt before during this time,” Page told Jasper, feeling touched.

Jasper smiled. “I learned that you two are Jewish from Mr. Todd, so I had the hotel prepare something else instead. It’s nothing much, actually. I just believe that mutual respect is the foundation of mutual trust between people.”

Page and Brin shared a look before nodding.

This alone had earned Jasper brownie points from both of them.

As they ate, Jasper also began to chat aimlessly with Page and Brin.

Jasper had merely been an employee of a small financial company back in Somerland in his past life, so he had only eaten meals outside with his superior a handful of times—let alone top-notch talents like Page and Brin.

Yet here Jasper was, eating dinner with them as the duo spoke politely to Jasper.

Such was life...

After simple small talk, Page first brought up the issue of investment.

“We know that you’ve bought 27% of Google’s shares from Mr. Todd, Mr. Laine. Do you perhaps see a bullish trend in our company’s future?” Page asked excitedly, extremely eager for Jasper’s recognition.

After all, in comparison to them, Jasper had achieved way more. They were both in the dot-com industry, and Jasper’s Sena had already successfully gone public and evoked the enthusiasm of the investors in the United States to invest in the industry. Sena’s share price had also exceeded 150 US dollars in a few days!

“My apologies, I don’t really know Google too well, so I can’t say whether I have a bullish or bearish stand on your company’s future.”

Admiration was one thing, but Jasper was not going to compromise at all when it came to business—even if he was facing future big shots.

Everything Jasper said now would affect the investment and distribution of benefits later, so Jasper made sure he spoke in accordance.

Ignoring the disappointed looks on the duo's faces, Jasper continued, "To be honest with you, I bought 27% of your shares because of my friendship with Todd. Google itself did not play too big a part in my decision.

"I heard that you're lacking in funds?"

With just a few sentences, Jasper managed to put Page and Brin, two future wealthy businessmen, through an emotional rollercoaster. At the same time, he had also grasped the initiative of the negotiation tightly in his hands.

"We are. Our company does indeed need more funds for future development. Not to toot our own horn, but our patent search engine technology is irreplaceable worldwide!

"All we need are funds to expand our company's business. Once we have the funds, I'm certain that we'll be able to further develop in a short amount of time. I promise that you won't make a loss if you invest in us, Mr. Laine."

Page spoke hastily.

After a moment of thought, Brin added, "We've been in contact with Yahoo three months ago, Mr. Laine. And we've proposed a partnership with them. We're willing to provide our search engine technology to them for free.

"The partnership hasn't been approved yet, but once it has, Google's search engine will immediately take up most of the United States' market share and we'll be able to gather a large number of users' data in a short amount of time.

"These are all beneficial to Google's development."

Both Brin and Page felt rather guilty after saying those words.

After all, including themselves, no one would believe that Yahoo would partner with such an insignificant company.

Yahoo was currently the largest web portal in the world and the technology company with the second-highest market price just after Weresoft.

Yahoo and Google were miles apart, so there was no way the former would consider their technology.

Yet Jasper smiled as the two were worried.

Page and Brin were still fresh to the world.

Life at the Top Chapter 821

Jasper knew that Yahoo was going to use their search engine.

He also knew that this partnership would help Google gather a large amount of technology and data, which would help them completely perfect the Google search engine.

Yahoo had only agreed to this partnership because they did not believe that the search engine domain would be a big profitable market. They merely saw the search engine market as a small direction for composite dot-com enterprises to gain more technology.

The fact that Google was willing to provide their technology for free meant Yahoo did not have to form a team of technicians to research search engine technology.

As such, it was already too late by the time Yahoo realized how search engines would become the gateway to the entire internet.

By that time, Google's technology would already have been completely perfected and no matter how skilled Yahoo's team of technicians was, there was no way for them to surpass Google's technology in such a short time.

Not to mention that Google would already have taken a majority of users and market share, so they no longer needed Yahoo anymore.

Humiliated and angry, Yahoo then cut Google off. Not that Google minded, as their company became independent.

Thus began the rise of Google and the fall of Yahoo.

"I'm willing to continue investing," Jasper replied.

Both Page and Brin were shocked by Jasper's words.

"What are your requirements in return, Mr. Laine?" Page asked carefully.

Jasper smiled meaningfully. "From what I can tell, Google won't need any other shareholders excluding the three of us. So I'd like at least 70% of the shares."

Both Page and Brin frowned at that.

The duo had sensed the same thing on Jasper as they had on Morrison... Greed!

"But I will not interfere with the day-to-day operations of the business, nor will I interfere with your managerial rights," Jasper explained unprompted as if understanding Page and Brin's concern.

Page and Brin gasped. "Really, Mr. Laine?"

Jasper shrugged and replied, "We're talking about a large business transaction here and I have no reason to joke about this with you. Of course, to ensure my interests, you will have to accept my requirement to control the company's financial rights."

Page nodded. "Of course, but your required percentage is too high."

Jasper sipped on his coffee and smiled at Page.

Page took a deep breath and came to a tacit understanding with Brin through eye contact. He said, "It's 70% of the shares, after all. That means we'll have to kick the other shareholders out and minimize mine and Brin's percentage. This... is costing us a bit too much."

"Whether it costs too much or not depends on what you're getting in return."

“For 70% of your shares, you will receive 150 million US dollars. I promise that the first 100 million will be transferred on the day we sign our contract and the second batch of 50 million will arrive after six months.”

Jasper’s words sparked Page and Brin’s ambition.

“150 million?!”

Page gasped in shock.

Even Brin’s expression turned excited.

As of that moment, Google itself had a market share of 100 million US dollars at most. Yet Jasper was willing to pay 150 million US dollars for 70% of their shares.

Doing so would triple Google’s market price.

Meanwhile, Morrison was offering 60 million US dollars for 80% of the shares and the company’s managerial rights, which meant that he could fire these two founders at any time.

In comparison to Jasper’s generosity, Morrison was just giving the bare minimum.

“I can sign the contract anytime, but I won’t be staying in the United States for long. I have to return to Somerland to deal with some things, so if you two need some time to think it over, please do give me a reply as soon as possible,” Jasper spoke.

Page and Brin replied at the same time, “No need, we agree.”

Jasper smiled and reached out his hand. “Then I wish for cordial cooperation.”

Page and Brin shared a look and then each shook hands with Jasper. “I’m sure it will be.”

“Alright then, we can sign the contract tomorrow. As we agreed, I will not interfere with the company’s day-to-day operations, but you’re free to contact me anytime you want an extra opinion. Of course, the final decision lies with you as well.

“I also hope that you can persuade the other shareholders as quickly as possible because I’ll only transfer the funds after the shares are under my name.”

Both Page and Brin nodded at Jasper’s words.

“We’ll get it done as quickly as possible, Mr. Laine.”

Jasper was in a great mood after the situation with Google was settled.

Seeing that it was getting late, Jasper directly checked the duo into a suite and dragged Jack over to talk for a few hours.

Everyone was working in the same industry, and with Page and Brin as top-notch technicians, they were able to give Jasper and Jack quite a few epiphanies in that aspect.

Jack was also a top-notch professional manager, so he was able to give the duo inspirations on enterprise management. Their conversation was an extremely joyful one and it lasted until midnight.

It was 2 a.m. when Jasper returned to his room and fell asleep after lying on the bed.

The following morning, Jasper woke up and planned to return to Somerland once he signed the contract with Google. However, a problem arose when they were signing the contract.

“Mr. Laine, we’ve talked to the other shareholders and they were very willing to sell their shares. But they suddenly declined this morning when we called to confirm.”

Brin looked unhappy, feeling ashamed about the fact that a problem arose the very first moment they partnered with Jasper.

“One of our shareholders, who’s one of our friends, told us the truth because we’re quite close. She told us that Layman Investment Bank decided to interfere with this transaction earlier this morning and asked to buy their shares at high prices.”

Life at the Top Chapter 822

“F*ck! It has to be Morrison! He’s the one behind all this!”

Page immediately roared after Brin spoke.

Jasper looked at Page and asked, “Who’s this Morrison you speak of?”

Page clenched his jaw and replied, “Morrison is the senior investment manager of Layman Investments. We’ve contacted him before for funds but his conditions were too harsh so we didn’t agree...”

“In truth, we were only in New York yesterday to negotiate with Morrison.

“But his condition was to have 80% of Google’s shares and its managerial rights for 60 million US dollars. We might as well sell ourselves to him if that’s the case, so we didn’t agree.”

Brin sighed and spoke, “Not only is Morrison the senior investment manager of Layman Investments, but his father is Rogers, the president of Quantum Funds.

“As far as he’s concerned, Google either has to accept Layman Investments’ humiliating conditions or it’ll be completely destroyed. I’m not surprised he would do such a thing.”

Jasper, who had not reacted much at all, arched his brow slightly at that.

Quantum Funds. Rogers.

After the Harbor City billion-dollar stocks rescue plan, the Law family and the other rich families had also found out who the culprit was.

Quantum Funds had been the culprit behind it all. While the head of Quantum Funds was Soros, the culprit behind Harbor City's stock crisis was Quantum Funds' second in charge, Rogers.

The first time Jasper had lost since he started his business was to Rogers.

This loss had Jasper deeply realize that he could not look down on others just because he had the memory of the world before he reincarnated.

The last thing the world lacked was capable people and Rogers was one of the most outstanding of the batch.

He was a man who could make art out of capitalism.

Jasper had never expected that by mistake, he was meeting Rogers' son, Morrison, before he got a rematch with Rogers himself.

Jasper did not know if Morrison was aware of his past with Rogers, but Jasper knew that Google was a chance he would not miss out on nor would he allow Morrison to screw this over for him.

"How much is Layman Investment Bank willing to pay to stop us?" Jasper asked directly.

Page replied embarrassedly, "According to our classmate, Layman Investments is willing to pay double of what we're offering to buy their shares."

Jasper chuckled at that and spoke, "That's a large amount. Is that actually Layman Investment Bank's decision, or did Morrison decide that on his own?"

Neither Page nor Brin dared to answer Jasper's question.

The question was too sensitive.

“Alright, don’t worry about this for now. I’ll deal with it. Go back and rest in the hotel first.”

Page and Brin nodded at Jasper’s words in agreement.

The acquisition of Google was now a personal fight between Jasper and Morrison, or even Jasper and Layman Investment Bank.

Page and Brin could easily partner with the person who was willing to pay the most, but they could not help but feel that Morrison had only made this move to prevent Jasper from acquiring Google.

Life at the Top Chapter 823

Should they end their partnership with Jasper for the current benefits before them, then they would have no choice but to be put under Morrison's control.

After a moment of discussion and thought, both Page and Brin decided that they would not participate in Jasper and Morrison's fight. Instead, they would wait for a winner to emerge and sign a partnership with whoever won.

The only difference was that both of them favored Jasper. After all, when they compared the conditions, the two of them would only get to operate according to Morrison's whims if Google fell into his hands. This was something the duo refused to accept.

After settling Page and Brin, Jasper contacted Paulson directly through Jameson.

Half an hour later, Jasper appeared in Paulson's office.

"President Paulson, I need Colossal's help."

Jasper went straight to the point and told Paulson what was going on.

However, he made sure to jump over the fact of how promising Google was and emphasized the history between himself and Morrison as well as the latter's father, Rogers.

Paulson frowned slightly after he heard everything. "You have to understand that Layman Investment Bank isn't any weaker than Colossal, Laine. Plus, there's only so much Colossal can do in your acquisition plan ... What do you want us to do and what benefits will Colossal gain from this?"

Jasper fell silent for a moment. After weighing his options, he spoke, "I need Colossal Investments to hold back all malicious movements Layman Investment Bank is making toward me and Google. As for the other business battles, I will deal with Morrison myself."

Paulson spoke calmly, "A clash between two parties over acquiring a company resembles an auction. Whoever pays more, wins. Do you believe that it's worth going to war with Morrison, or even Rogers, over an insignificant company, Laine?"

"More than just me, this is a question that they have to consider as well. The only difference is how much we believe the other party is willing to pay for this company."

Jasper spoke calmly.

"I've made a slight loss to his father Rogers before, so I have no other option but to win this battle with his son."

Paulson chuckled and spoke, "You're indeed a youth. I really envy you young people... but you still haven't told me what Colossal is going to get out of this."

"You'll have my friendship," Jasper spoke without hesitation.

"President Paulson, my friendship is very much worth the cost."

The United States subprime mortgage crisis in 2008 would trigger a global financial crisis.

Layman Investment Bank would end up going bankrupt while Colossal Investments would lose 120.3 billion US dollars, almost going bankrupt as well.

As long as Jasper was willing and Paulson believed him, Jasper was fully capable of helping Colossal Investments evade such horrifying loss.

As such, Jasper was fully dependent on Paulson's decision now.

If Paulson agreed, then Colossal would survive the crisis.

If Paulson disagreed, then Jasper had no chance to compare capitals with Morrison without Colossal's help.

Hearing Jasper, Paulson fell silent.

After a long while, Paulson replied calmly, "Trust me when I say that I would've thrown anyone else out like they've gone mad if they were to tell me that, Laine."

Jasper replied calmly, "But I'm still here."

"Indeed. Because I don't think that you're mad. Perhaps your friendship is worth a bit of investment from Colossal."

Life at the Top Chapter 824

Walking out of Colossal Investments, Jasper then contacted Page and Brin.

Jasper intended to meet Morrison through the two of them, but he had not expected the duo to tell him that Morrison was waiting for Jasper at the hotel.

Without hesitation, Jasper returned to the hotel.

In the executive lounge of DoubleTree by Hilton Hotel, Jasper met Morrison.

“You! You’re the one stealing what I have my eyes on, aren’t you?” Morrison sat on the sofa as he watched Jasper approach. The man showed no signs of getting up to greet Jasper but instead stared at him with an evaluative gaze that carried a hint of a sneer and disdain. The man’s tone was downright arrogant.

Jasper walked over to Morrison who was still sitting down and spoke, “Steal? I don’t think that’s the right word here. Google didn’t want to accept your offer so they came to me instead. That’s very normal.”

Morrison scoffed and played with the ring on his pinky as he spoke slowly, “You just got here, so perhaps there are things that you don’t quite know about.”

Morrison then looked up at Jasper sinisterly. “No one who’s tried to steal from me has ever ended well. No one can take what I want!”

“Your tone is misleading. And here I thought that you were Layman Investment Bank’s president, instead of an investment manager,” Jasper spoke calmly.

Morrison scoffed and spoke, “You mean that as an investment manager, I’m not qualified to offer such a high price? Fine then, I’ll use my own power. Let’s say, Quantum Funds?”

He then looked at Jasper intently before slowly speaking, "I've done some digging on you. You were the one who stopped Quantum Funds, weren't you?"

"I remember how my father told me that he met an interesting fellow when he came back. You must be this interesting fellow, then. Why? Haven't you learned enough from my father's harsh lesson?"

Jasper was not surprised that Morrison had found out about him, for most of what Jasper had done before was no longer a secret.

"You've got it wrong. First of all, when your father and I fought, I indeed lost but he did not win either. He and I could've earned even more from Harbor Stocks.

"It's a shame that I'm just a man of Somer descent, so I lost a few billion to prevent your father from earning tens of billions of profits."

At that, Jasper turned his palms over and spoke indifferently, "Do you still think I was taught a harsh lesson?"

Morrison's gaze turned cold as he sneered at Jasper, saying, "You honestly think that you could've won my father if not for how unique the situation was?"

"What unique situation? He was just afraid that he'd cause Somerland's government to take action. If he offended Somerland's government, then it won't just be a question of how much profit was made. The entirety of Quantum Funds would've met its end there." Jasper exposed the reality of the situation and did not leave Morrison any ground to retreat.

Quantum Funds had taken a huge risk to attack Harbor Stocks.

It was very similar to the stock crisis during the year of the handover. The only difference was that in the crisis during the year of the handover, Quantum Funds had led the entire Western capital into the financial economy of all Southeast Terra countries.

Harbor City could not defend itself then so they sought help from Somerland's government that then made a move.

That time, Jasper had merely contained the situation within Harbor City's government.

As expected, Morrison's gaze darkened as he sneered, "What's the use of all this talk? You want to acquire Google? Well, then you can dream on if you think I'll let you!"

Life at the Top Chapter 825

“If you pay one million, I’ll pay two million; if you pay five million, I’ll pay ten million. Let’s see who has more money. I heard that you’re in a poor financial situation right now.

“How much money can you afford to play this game with me?”

“You ignoramus! You need to understand that Somerland is a backward, garbage country. The United States is the ruler of the world, whereas you’ll always remain a pitiful little creature in front of me. If my father can take you down, then I can also crush you under my feet!

“Of course, to show you how generous the Americans are, I’m willing to give you a chance. If you’re willing to comply, I’ll probably give you a bit of compensation because that way, at least you won’t have to go back as a penniless good-for-nothing.”

Jasper looked calmly at the complacent and savage Morrison, saying in an intrigued tone, “Is that so? Let’s hear it, then.”

“I know you bought 27% of Google’s shares from Todd. Look, I’ll buy those shares from you for two million US dollars. Maybe I’ll be in a better mood that way,” Morrison said.

Jasper cast a meaningful glance at Morrison and said, “Looks like you’re really optimistic about Google, huh?”

There were slight changes in Morrison’s expression when Jasper said those words.

He stared at Jasper with intense displeasure.

He had a feeling that Jasper knew about the upcoming partnership between Google and Yahoo.

The news of it remained confidential, though. What did Jasper really mean when he said that?

“I have the habit of not letting others snatch the things that I fancy no matter how good or bad that thing is. I would rather throw it away instead,” Morrison said with a blank countenance.

He then pointed at Jasper’s nose and said, “A man who comes from a poor and backward country like you will never understand the United States’ law of survival. Wealth is the only truth, and this point alone shows that you’re not qualified enough to challenge me.”

“I will not give up on Google. If you’re interested, we can just fight for it,” Jasper uttered flatly.

Seeing how stubborn and ungrateful Jasper was, Morrison flew into a rage and said coldly, “Why don’t you look into the mirror first and see if you’re qualified enough to fight with me?”

“Just wait. Soon, Page and Brin will come crying to me begging me to buy their shares, whereas you’ll be eliminated! You’ll stay an ignoramus forever!”

As he spoke, a figure rushed into the executive lounge.

Looking as pleased as Punch, Henry’s eyes lit up when he saw Jasper. He rushed over excitedly to share his experience as a private plane owner with him.

He was not far away when he heard a man sitting in front of Jasper calling him an ignoramus.

Without hesitation, Henry walked up and smacked Morrison on the back of his head, nearly sending him falling to the ground face first.

“Idiot, you’d better clean that mouth of yours. If I hear you say degrading things like that to someone else of Somer descent, I’ll stomp the sh*t out of you.

“Motherf*cker, men these days have terrible mouths, don’t they? They always have ways to ruin my good mood.”

Life at the Top Chapter 826

Henry smacking Morrison nearly cracked Jasper up.

Morrison covered the back of his head and turned around, glaring at Henry with scarlet eyes. He roared, "Who are you?! How dare you hit me? Do you know who I am? I'll kill you!"

Henry was astonished when he heard the familiar script.

"He's a trust fund baby?"

Henry asked, turning to look at Jasper.

Those words sounded far too familiar and could be considered as the standard official words used by trust fund babies whenever they were bullied.

"His father is Mr. Robin, the president of Quantum Fund, the western capitalist who caused trouble in Harbor City share market previously," Jasper explained.

Henry immediately understood what was going on.

Jasper did not need to say more. As the saying went, when enemies come face to face, their eyes would blaze with hatred.

Morrison's head was struck the second time.

Morrison might be young and robust, but Henry had done some training himself. Other than learning a few moves from Julian, he was also a frequent gym-goer.

He was no doubt more skilled than Morrison, whose skills were merely for superficial displays.

Therefore, after two consecutive strikes, Morrison was so furious from the attacks that he nearly spat out blood. However, he could do anything other than glare fixedly at Henry. He was too apprehensive to launch a counterattack.

However, that did not mean Morrison was going to let this off just like that.

He made a call, and within a minute or two, six to seven tall and burly bodyguards clad in black suits and sunglasses rushed into the executive lounge's entrance.

Anyone could tell that these were a bunch of well-trained professional bodyguards.

Jasper frowned at the sight of this.

Julian showed up at the door immediately and stood in front of Jasper and Henry, staring calmly at the group of bodyguards.

Morrison stood up and said to Jasper with a sinister smile, "This is the States. You're in New York, my territory. How dare you lay a finger on me?"

"Idiot," Henry sneered.

Morrison's mouth twitched as he fixed his gaze on Henry, snarling. "Who exactly are you?!"

"Law is my last name. Stop comparing your family to mine. Your dad is nothing but a high-class wage earner, he's nothing compared to my dad," Henry said smugly.

Morrison said coldly, "I know. You're Henry Law, right? A useless good-for-nothing."

Henry looked sideways at him. "Speak another word of nonsense and I'll punch all your teeth out today."

A hand patted Henry's shoulder, and Jasper stood up.

"There's only one way to deal with a man like this, and that's to teach him a lesson he'll never forget," Jasper said.

Having said that, Jasper looked at Morrison and said, "I'm sure you've prepared yourself before you showed up. Don't waste everyone's time. Show me what you got. I'd like to see how you're planning to eliminate me?"

Morrison laughed and said arrogantly, "You came to the United States to get Sena listed, didn't you? Yes, Sena may have gotten listed and has excellent share price performance, but you've made the wrong choice to offend me. Do you not remember what line of work I'm in?"

Life at the Top Chapter 827

“Finance. I have the ability to destroy your company, Sena. This will be a lesson for you so you’ll know better than to offend me.”

After saying those words, Morrison fished out his phone and called his subordinates who had been on standby a long time ago.

“I want you to act immediately and strike Sena’s shares with full force!”

Morrison felt as though he had transformed into a big boss like the ones in movies. He was about to crush Jasper to death and it would be done easily.

On the other end of the call, however, his subordinates made no reply even after a very long time.

“What are you doing, idiots? Why aren’t you responding?!” Morrison questioned furiously.

After some time, a voice rang out from the other end of the call. It was Morrison’s immediate superior, the general manager of Layman Investment Bank’s Investment Department.

“Morrison, are you abusing Layman Investment Bank’s power to retaliate against someone for your own private interest? Do you know the severity of the situation?”

As Morrison listened to the voice on the other end of the call, his eyebrows knitted tightly together. He was speculating about how his superior, Dom, had found out about this.

After taking a deep breath, Morrison lowered his voice and said, “Mr. Dom, this isn’t about my private interest. Sena shares a close relationship with Colossal, which isn’t conducive for our investment bank...”

“That’s enough, Morrison. Colossal Investments has issued a strict warning letter to Layman’s higher-ups, so from now on, you’re not allowed to touch Sena. Do you hear me?” Dom had no time to listen to Morrison’s explanation and cut him off straight away.

Morrison’s countenance changed as he said incredulously, “How is that possible? How does Colossal know about my plans? And why would they threaten Layman for Sena’s sake? Aren’t they afraid that a war will break out between the two investment banks?”

Dom smiled and said in a meaningful manner, “Do you really think the old birds on the board of directors can’t figure out your plans?”

“How could Colossal and Layman possibly start a war over something so trivial? This is just a warning from Colossal. Layman isn’t going to offend Colossal for something this trivial, okay?”

“I don’t know why you’re going against Sena nor do I care about the techniques and force you’re resorting to, but there’s one thing you need to know and that is Layman will not get involved in this. This is something that both higher-ups in Colossal and Layman have agreed upon.”

Dom hung up the call after saying those words.

Faced with the crowd, Morrison held the phone that had been beeping a long time ago and glared resentfully at Jasper while hissing. “Are you behind this?”

Although Jasper had no idea what Morrison and the man on the other end of the call had talked about, he could roughly guess that Paulson had stepped in and brought this issue forward to Layman.

In cases like that, results were usually seen soon enough.

Colossal merely gave Layman a warning this time. This was no big deal, but if Layman ignored Colossal's warning and did things their own way, it would be a huge move of disrespect to Colossal, the world's best investment bank. They would surely not let this matter drop so easily.

Layman's higher-ups were probably aware of this, hence they refused to offend Colossal for something that would not even benefit them in any way.

Therefore, Morrison's plans naturally fell through.

One could imagine how aggrieved and ashamed Morrison must be feeling now that his plans had fallen through before he could even unleash his power.

"That's it?"

Henry guffawed, failing to hold back his laughter. He said hilariously, "I thought you were going to throw some kind of a grenade, perhaps a massive one, but you f*cking pulled out the smallest card in the deck. This is so darn hilarious. Is this the IQ of all trust fund babies in the United States?"

As if pouring gasoline into a blazing fire, Henry's words turned Morrison's face crimson and almost drove him crazy.

"You're simply despicable, Jasper! I can't believe you resorted to dirty tricks behind my back!" Morrison roared.

Jasper frowned slightly. "Is this guy a fool?"

Life at the Top Chapter 828

“You’re allowed to attack me but I’m not allowed to fight back?” Jasper asked.

Morrison’s face was flushed crimson. He was so embarrassed that he was eager to dig a hole in the ground and bury himself in it.

He thought that everyone in the executive lounge was laughing at him, especially that idiot Henry Law. The look on the man’s face was as if saying, ‘You’re so embarrassing’.

Morrison clenched his fists and took a deep breath, saying coldly, “You mean to say you’re planning to fight me to the end, huh?”

“This is just a countermeasure that I have to take.” Jasper’s expression turned cold and indifferent as well.

After letting out a malicious chuckle, Morrison glanced coldly at Jasper and said in a low voice, “Aren’t you something, Jasper Laine? Let’s wait and see, then. I’ll double all that you’ve done to me today and return it back to you one day.”

Having said that, Morrison turned around and led his bodyguards away.

Jasper did not stop him.

He and Morrison had officially become sworn enemies. Jasper had met people like Morrison far too often. Morrison would definitely think of a way to get his revenge.

Jasper’s top priority at the moment was to acquire Google as things would change if he dragged it for far too long.

If Morrison intended to fight him to the end, it could spell trouble and stir up great waves. Therefore, Jasper approached Brin and Page immediately to consult other shareholders in order to make decisions about the purchase of shares.

On the other side, Morrison looked terrifyingly grim upon leaving Hilton Hotel.

“Mr. Morrison, shall we continue contacting other Google shareholders and purchase their shares based on the previous offer?” a confidant asked.

“Purchase my *ss!” Morrison cursed.

The confidant clammed up upon seeing Morrison’s forbidding expression.

“We’ll go back. I need to see my father immediately.” Morrison hissed maliciously.

Soon, Morrison got home and found Robin working in his study.

Robin raised his head when he heard the door open and frowned upon seeing the look on Morrison’s face.

“Why do you look so mad? What’s with the slap mark on your face? Did you get into a fight?”

Morrison flew into a rage upon hearing Robin’s questions and spoke between clenched teeth, “Father, I want to destroy Harbor City’s Law family! Henry Law, that idiot, slapped me!”

Robin closed his laptop after hearing what he said and responded flatly, “Do you think Quantum Fund belongs to me?”

Morrison raged, yelling, “Am I supposed to just let him hit me for nothing then?”

“Tell me what happened,” Robin said.

Morrison recounted the incident and hammered his fist on the study desk, saying furiously, "I have never felt more humiliated in my life, nor have I ever suffered such a tremendous loss!"

"Who does Jasper think he is? Have the old birds in Colossal Investments gone crazy? Why are they standing on his side to the extent where they would not even hesitate to threaten Layman?!"

"What do you know?" Robin shook his head. He thought his son was simply too immature.

"Just because you're my son doesn't mean you can throw your weight around. After all that's said and done, Layman is still way more powerful than Quantum. When interests are involved, those old birds will not even show me any respect, let alone show you any.

"What's more, this is all happening because you offended Colossal. Who do you think you are to have such an insanely arrogant idea?"

Refusing to take it lying down, Morrison said, "But Father, Quantum Fund has made a lot of profits for them under your leadership. Regardless of everything else, they gained a tremendous profit during the Harbor City market share incident last year!"

"That's what capitalists are. They look at profits, not feelings." Robin waves his hand. It was clear that he did not take Morrison's words seriously.

"The Laws aren't as easy to deal with as you think. They have an extremely firm foundation in Harbor City, and to some extent, the four richest families will advance and retreat together.

"This includes Wallace Langdon, that old fox. Do you think he's our ally? That old fox is the hardest to deal with and will not hesitate to bite us viciously during critical times.

“More importantly, the Laws share the strongest bond with Somerland’s government, and they will not allow anyone to knock down the reputation they had built so hard for overseas Somer businessmen just like that. Therefore, you can keep dreaming about dealing with the Laws.”

Having said that, Robin looked at the slap mark on Morrison’s face and continued with a frown, “However, this is all just a game theory on a larger scale. What you got involved in with Henry was nothing more than an argument between children. If you’re that capable, use your own capabilities to make Henry suffer losses without anyone fussing over it. Do you understand what I’m saying?”

Morrison raised his eyebrows and stood up, saying, “Father, I would like to be transferred to the Terra regional branch of Layman Investment Bank as the president. Please help me.”

Robin pondered for a moment before saying, “Johnson is the current Terra regional branch’s president. He’s too old. Besides, his investment strategies are extremely conservative and he’s being pressured every step of the way by Colossal in the Somerland market, causing dissatisfaction in Layman’s higher-ups from a long time ago...

“I’ll handle this for you, but you must remember that Henry is easier to deal with while Jasper is the real pain in the *ss. No matter what you do, make sure you do it in one clean strike and give him no chance to rise back up. Otherwise, I would suggest you to not do anything at all!”

Life at the Top Chapter 829

After Morrison withdrew from the acquisition of Google, coupled with Page and Brin's cooperation, Jasper's subsequent acquisition went on without hindrance.

Jasper did not go easy on the shareholders who were selling only to make a fortune by getting a good price.

He lowered the price by 30% and put on an air of nonchalance.

Page and Brin gave Jasper their full cooperation. These shareholders had made them really unhappy previously when Google nearly fell into Morrison's hands because of them. It was tantamount to taking Brin and Page's lives.

What was more, Jasper bought the portion of their shares at a high price.

In the end, Jasper spent 120 million US dollars to acquire 70% of Google's overall shares and became Google's largest shareholder. Meanwhile, Page and Brin were the two remaining shareholders holding 30% of the shares in total.

The rest of the shareholders were flushed out by Jasper.

At this moment, those shareholders, including Todd, still felt as though they had made a fortune.

With the Sena shares Jasper gave Todd, which were still rising during this period of time, Todd had earned nearly 80 million US dollars.

In other words, Google's 27% shares translated to 80 million US dollars, which made this a really lucrative deal no matter how one looked at it.

At this critical juncture, at almost the same time Jasper completed the overall acquisition of Google, Yahoo made an announcement.

Yahoo agreed to partner up with Google by fully adopting Google's search engine technology.

All of a sudden, Google went from being an underdog that everyone had doubts about to being a new sensation that was backed up by Yahoo. It quickly became the top US internet search market share.

When Page and Brin received news about this, they had just finished finalizing the contract with Jasper and received a one billion dollar check from him.

"My God." Page looked at the check in his hands with a dumbfounded expression and then looked at Jasper, feeling that this whole ordeal was slightly unfair.

If the news had been released a day earlier, Google's value would definitely be far more than this.

"Mr. Laine, your 120 million US dollars investment has doubled just after it's completed," Brin said with a strange look on his face.

At this point, he began to wonder if Jasper had planned everything in advance. How else was he supposed to explain this coincidence otherwise?

Despite that, Brin reasoned with himself and thought that it was impossible. If he, the party involved, did not even know what Yahoo was up to, how could Jasper know?

However, Brin still felt conflicted because he had sold off the company at its lowest price on the exact same day its value skyrocketed.

Jasper laughed. "I believe that Google will do far better than this in the future. This bit of good news is just the beginning of the rise of Google."

Brin and Page let out a wry chuckle upon hearing Jasper's words. What was done could not be undone. The contract had been signed and the shares had been transferred. They had even received their checks. It was too late for regrets.

"Cheer up and be far-sighted." Jasper patted their shoulders. He empathized with them very much and had not expected the news to arrive so quickly either.

"Google will be a global market in the United States in the future. Don't focus on these small benefits that you'll be getting from partnering up with Yahoo."

Page nodded and said, "Yes, our goal is to make Google great. Just like Yahoo, BIM, and Weresoft."

"Google now owns the most advanced web ranking algorithm technology. The only thing that's missing is cumulative users. The partnership with Yahoo will be an opportunity for us, but I suggest not relying on Yahoo too much.

"In my opinion, Yahoo only agreed to work with you because they haven't seen the potential of the search engine market in the future. When they finally realize what's happening, I'm afraid Google will be the first to be kicked out by them."

Jasper's tone sounded extremely stern.

"In this partnership, Google needs to do two things—accumulate user data and enhance its technology. These are the only two things that belong to Google. Even if Google leaves Yahoo, it can still conquer the market in no time at all.

Upon hearing Jasper's words, Page and Brin nodded in agreement.

Later, Page and Brin left New York to make preparations for the cooperation between Google and Yahoo.

Jasper calculated his assets.

The initial 300 million US dollars was the profit he obtained by cashing out shares after Sena was listed. This was done on the premise that he had full control over the company.

However, buying a private plane and acquiring Google had cost him almost 180 million US dollars.

He had 120 million dollars left.

Although Sena's share prices had risen again during this period of time and reached a new high of 150 US dollars, even the hottest share would slump one day. Today, Jasper realized that Sena's share prices were beginning to weaken.

If there was no major news, Sena's share prices would eventually settle between 130-140 US dollars.

That was also to say that Jasper could once again cash out about 40 million US dollars from the share market.

Currently, JW Investment Company was in urgent need of funds to support the development of various subsidiaries. JW was still operating at a loss, hence Jasper did not hesitate to cash out the 40 million US dollars. A total of 160 million US dollars and Google were the two things that Jasper gained from his trip to the United States this time.

Money was no big issue as it would be used to help in any emergencies JW may later face. Acquiring Google was the highlight of the show.

After everything was complete, Jasper had nothing else to do in the United States, hence he brought Henry and Julian to a major supermarket in the States to buy some luxury goods as souvenirs for when they returned.

These were for Wendy, Dawson, his parents, and so on. Gifting was absolutely essential.

Jasper spent hundreds of thousands of dollars, roughly three to four million
Some Dollars, without a single frown.

Thus was the dull life of the rich...

Jasper, who planned to return the next day, received a call that night and contacted Gulfstream Aerospace to request an overnight flight home.

His father, Charlie Laine, was hospitalized after getting beaten up by someone.

Life at the Top Chapter 830

Nauritus City International Airport in Somerland.

Gulfstream G500, one of the only two private planes of this model in the whole world, landed gracefully on the airport runway.

Many tourists and even the airport employees looked at the unfamiliar-looking aircraft curiously.

Only pilots, who often kept up with the current news about aircrafts, were able to recognize the aircraft's origin.

“F*ck me, look at that, Brett. Isn't that the Gulfstream G500 we saw in the pilot magazine the other day?”

In the cockpit of a Boeing plane that was about to taxi to the runway, the co-pilot stared and exclaimed at the Gulfstream G500, which had just landed on the runway and was about to enter the apron.

Brett, the pilot, immediately turned over to look and recognized the private plane at first glance. He said while drooling, “Are you kidding me? This aircraft has just obtained the sales permit but someone has already bought it? Could this be Gulfstream's test flight flown by their own employees?”

“Have you ever seen a foreign private plane flying to Somerland for a test flight? It must be a new aircraft that a super-rich boss just bought,” the co-pilot said as though he knew this very well.

“Damn. These rich people are just dope, purchasing a plane as soon as it's listed in the market. How much does this cost...”

“Money isn’t the main thing here but that person’s network. It’s crazy to think how broad this person’s network is to be able to buy a private plane immediately after it’s listed,” the co-pilot said enviously.

Under countless envious gazes, the Gulfstream slowly came to halt at the tarmac. Jasper disembarked the plane first.

Jasper did not have the mood nor the time to appreciate the fact that he had returned to his country. He headed straight to Wendy who was already waiting there.

“What’s wrong?” Jasper asked with a sullen expression.

No man would be able to stand the fact that their parents were beaten up by others.

Jasper was a man of status and identity, which was all the more reason why this should not be allowed to happen.

If he could not even protect his parents and his family, what was the use of having so much power and wealth?

Wendy had no time to exchange greetings with him and said, “Don’t panic. Uncle is fine but suffered a broken rib. He needs to rest. My father is already investigating the specifics. From what Uncle told us, he was out on a walk when he had a conflict with a young man who was walking his dog. That young man gathered a few men to beat him up.”

“Let’s go to the hospital first,” Jasper said, taking Wendy’s hand.

Julian rushed forward to drive the car.

Henry was the only one who followed closely behind. For Jack Tanner and the rest, Jasper had arranged for a flight crew to fly the Gulfstream overnight to send them back to Swallow Capital.

Sena had just been listed, so there were plenty of things that needed to be handled at the headquarters. It was crucial that the management team was there.

“Henry, should I get someone to send you to a hotel to get some rest?” Jasper asked.

Henry’s face broke out in a grin as he said, “It’s fine. I’ll go and take a look with you. We’re friends. I can’t possibly turn a blind eye when something like this happens, can I?”

“Alright then.” Jasper flashed a smile of gratitude at him and got into the car with Henry.

Nauritus City Province General Hospital. Jasper and the group rushed to the intensive care unit.

Jasper met his parents in the ward.

“How are you feeling, Dad?” Dad walked to the bed and asked with concern.

Life at the Top Chapter 831

Although Charlie was lying on the bed, he was in good spirits. He waved his hands and said, "I'm okay. It's just a broken rib. I've experienced all kinds of things doing farm work in the field back then. This minor injury is nothing."

"Stop acting tough," Sally said grumpily, "Do you think you're still a young man in your 20s? Do you not know how old you are now? Don't you think it's time to change that attitude of yours?"

Jasper breathed a sigh of relief when he saw that his parents were fine. He then asked, "What exactly happened?"

Charlie was just about to speak when the door of the ward was kicked open.

A young man walked in with a sullen and sinister expression, cursing at Charlie who was lying on the bed, "F*ck! This wretched old man isn't dead yet?"

As soon as he said those words, the expressions of everyone in the ward sank.

Henry stood at the door and was ready to listen to Charlie's story, though when he heard how brusque this idiot who came out of nowhere sounded, he burst out laughing in anger.

"Where did this idiot come from?"

When the young man detected the unfriendly gazes from the people in the ward, he sneered and said, "What? You think I'm scared because you have more people here? I can get two cars full of men over to end all of you any minute so don't act tough in front of me."

As he said those words, he swaggered up to Charlie and said, “Hey, you beggarly old man, I heard you refuse to let this matter drop and insist on suing me for assaulting you? I know what people like you are thinking about. Money, right?”

Having said that, he pulled out his wallet and drew out a stack of money. He tossed it on the hospital bed, sneering, “This 3,000 dollars is for your hospital fee. Go and withdraw the lawsuit or I’ll destroy your entire family.”

As soon as the words left his mouth, a punch had already landed on his face.

It was from Jasper.

Standing on one side, the furious-looking Wendy and Sally exclaimed. On the other hand, Charlie cheered, “Good punch!”

Henry widened his eyes. He rarely saw Jasper hitting anyone himself. This would have qualified as a souvenir if a photo had been taken.

Julian walked out immediately and stood next to Jasper lest the man returned the punch.

“Motherf*cker, who do you think you are?! How dare you hit me?!” The young man covered his face and roared at Jasper with a malicious look on his face.

Jasper did not even spare him a glance when he ordered Julian, “Julian, he broke my father’s rib. I want both of his arms broken.”

Julian responded and stepped forward. Although it did not look like he moved much, he had already clamped the young man’s arms with his hands that were like a tiger’s claws. After a quick interlock, two clicks were heard as the bones dislocated and cracked. It was followed by the man’s tragic screams that echoed throughout the ward.

Jasper pulled out a stack of US dollars from his pockets. He had just rushed back from the United States, hence the cash he was carrying was all in US dollars.

Jasper tossed the US dollars on the man's body and said coldly, "These are your hospital fees. Get lost immediately. Don't worry, this isn't over yet. I'm just charging you a bit of interest."

The young man was lying on the ground letting out a blood-curdling screech. When he finally got up, he could not even exert any strength in his arms as they hung limply on both sides of his body.

He screamed in terror and fury, "Motherf*cker! Do you know who I am? I'm Gabriel Webb, my father is Thompson Webb! We contracted the Southface River Project and the Laws' amusement park construction project! My father is friends with the Laws' young master. How dare you hit me?! You're dead! I'll kill you!"

As soon as he said those words, everyone, including Jasper, looked at Henry with enquiring gazes.

Not knowing who Henry was, Sally and Charlie were the only ones who were dumbfounded. Gabriel seemed like a really influential man.

In the crowd, Henry wore a puzzled expression before slowly turning his gaze to Gabriel who was still clamoring non-stop.

Without hesitation, Henry raised his foot and kicked the idiot's waist while cursing aloud, "Motherf*cker, stop talking crap using my name. Who the f*ck do you think you are? And who the f*ck is your father?"

Life at the Top Chapter 832

With Gabriel's shoulders dislocated, his arms had lost their strength and he was barely able to maintain his balance. He was caught off guard when he was kicked in the waist by Henry. He shrieked on the spot before rolling a few times on the floor.

Henry's expression sank as he stared fixedly at Gabriel, itching to snap this idiot's bones in half.

This idiot could hit anyone in the world but chose to hit Jasper's father. If his sister learned about this, then his puny life would be over.

"You know him?" Jasper asked, patting Henry and pointing at Gabriel who was lying on the ground.

Henry spat out the words sullenly, "Don't taint my name. Do you think idiots like him are qualified enough to get acquainted with me? But I do know his father, Thompson Webb, the man he mentioned earlier. He's the amusement park supplier for the equipment. I've met him several times before."

"Hold on, I'll summon Thompson over this instant," Henry said.

Jasper nodded, saying, "Be quick. Let's get this over with."

Henry drew out his phone and dialed a number, most probably making a call to the person in charge of overseeing the Laws' amusement park project.

Henry scolded into the phone like a machine gun. When he was done scolding, he ordered the other party to drag Thompson, that idiot, to the province's general hospital.

When he put his phone away, Gabriel had also stopped screaming. He looked at Henry in trepidation and asked frightfully yet furiously, “W-Who exactly are you?!”

“Who am I? I’m your ancestor,” Henry cursed, glaring at Gabriel.

“Motherf*cker, you used my name to brag to everyone out there yet you don’t even know who I am? Do you live with the dogs?”

How could Gabriel not know who Henry was after hearing what he said?

He stood blankly on the spot, his complexion paling instantly.

Disregarding the pain he felt, he crawled his way up and tugged at Henry’s trousers while pleading, “Young Master Law, I didn’t know this old man was related to you. Otherwise, I wouldn’t have the guts to disrespect him at all.”

“Motherf*cker!”

Already humiliated enough to begin with, Henry was even more irritated now. With a smack, he hit Gabriel to the ground. “Why do you keep calling him an old man? Do you have a death wish?”

“That’s enough. Stop hitting him,” Jasper persuaded him.

“It’ll be difficult to clean up this mess if anything happens to him.”

Since Gabriel was indeed Henry’s partner, he should more or less show Henry some respect.

Henry said with a sullen expression, “This idiot deserves to be beaten to death. You don’t have to think of my feelings. I’ve met far too many people like that!”

“Let’s not even talk about the damned partnership, this piece of trash is beneath contempt. Even if he’s related to me, I’ll still be the first to end him for being such an idiot.”

Jasper turned to look at his somewhat astounded-looking parents, saying, “What happened before this, Dad?”

Charlie saw the wretched state Gabriel was in currently and shook his head, saying, “He was walking his dog without a leash. His huge and fierce dog frightened the children who were playing by the roadside, so I lectured him, to which he reacted by trying to attack me.

“However, his attacks were really weak and I could easily tell that he came from a well-off family. He was no match for me and I managed to press him to the ground in no time at all.”

Charlie actually sounded a little smug at this point.

Life at the Top Chapter 833

Jasper had no doubt about this.

His father was no martial arts master, but he had been farming all his life, so his strength surpassed ordinary people's—let alone someone like Gabriel whose health had long deteriorated from drinking too much wine and fooling around with too many women.

“He wasn't happy about it so he called a few helpers. I was no match for them and ended up having one of my ribs broken from getting kicked.”

Charlie finished his sentence, and the overall incident had been roughly described.

“Idiot!” Henry could not help but curse again, glaring at Gabriel who was now too afraid to say a word.

If Jasper was not around, he would have gone over and stamped on him again.

“I thought I was wicked enough. But at least I don't bully the young and the old. You share the same qualities as your dog. I can't believe you went to get help even after you lost in the fight.”

Sally felt sorry for her husband, so she chimed in, “He's really arrogant. When he realized how serious things had gotten and that we were planning to call the cops, he kept saying that he wanted to take revenge. He threatened to hurt us and said that he could easily kill everyone in our family.”

Jasper smiled and looked coldly at Gabriel, saying, “You struck my father and threatened my family. I now stand before you, so why don't you try killing one of us to show me?”

Gabriel glared resentfully at Jasper and gritted his teeth. "If it isn't for Young Master Henry, do you think you—"

Before he could finish his sentence, Henry lifted his foot and kicked Gabriel's mouth, causing him to scream as he spat blood and saliva all over the floor.

"You refuse to admit your mistakes even now?!"

Henry sounded extremely irritated. "Also, don't call me Young Master Henry. Who gave a person like you the right to call my name?"

As soon as he said those words, the door of the ward opened.

A group of men rushed in hastily, led by a shrewd and experienced man in a suit and leather shoes. As soon as he spotted Henry, he rushed forward and said reverently, "I've brought him here, Mr. Henry."

Behind him, a plump middle-aged man rushed out anxiously. Upon seeing Gabriel lying on the floor covered in blood, he exclaimed and trotted over to hold his son. He lifted Gabriel's head to say to Henry, "W-What happened, Mr. Henry?"

"What happened?" Henry sneered. He pointed at Gabriel and said, "Ask your son. He caused all this."

Thompson was thrown into confusion when he noticed how furious Henry was. He then glared at Gabriel and said, "What did you do to anger Mr. Henry?"

Gabriel had a guilty conscience. Too afraid to tell the truth, he stuttered for a very long time but still could not utter a word.

Thompson knew that his son must have done something wicked to be reacting like this. At this critical moment, he quickly tried to think of something before frantically slapping Gabriel's body without giving him a chance to explain.

“I asked you to keep a low profile and learn business from me but all you do is go out and mess around with those hooligan friends of yours!

“As an adult, not only do you not work, but you’re also fooling around all day, causing trouble out there just because you’re a bit rich!

“You ran into problems today and nearly landed me in trouble. You’ve wrecked our family!”

To ensure survival, Thompson did not go easy on his strikes.

Gabriel was struck so hard that he started screaming, but Thompson continued to strike without blinking.

Thompson knew very well that regardless of what happened today, they were now in deep trouble for offending Henry. If he did not go heavy on his strikes and hurt his son to placate Henry, then both of them would be in huge trouble.

Life at the Top Chapter 834

“That’s enough, stop f*cking pretending.” Henry was irritated by what he was seeing.

Perhaps due to his lack of interest, Henry was slightly incapable when it came to doing business, but that certainly did not mean he was not clever enough or that he was a dunce others could wrap around their little finger.

Truth was, a prodigal son like Henry had cultivated the ability to act according to his elders’ mood since he was a kid.

If he did not know how to fawn over his elders whenever he got into trouble out there, he would easily get hung and beaten.

Therefore, the act that Thompson was putting on looked no different than a monkey show to him.

Thompson stopped hitting his son after hearing that. He wore a pained and regretful expression on his face as he said to Henry, “I don’t know what my insolent son has done to offend you, but now that this has happened, you only need to say one word and I’m ready to punish him if justice demands it. As long as it makes you happy, Mr. Henry.”

“As long as I’m happy, my *ss! Motherf*cker, I’m itching to throw both of you into the sea to feed the sharks right now!”

Henry cursed without hesitation.

“Do you think I’m a fool? Your son’s character is clearly a result of bad influence. Who would believe that this has nothing to do with you?”

“I heard that you like to play dirty tricks and are terribly unbridled. In order to get my contract, you secretly messed with a lot of people. Do you really want me to tell everyone what happened to the two bidding companies during the invitation to tender?”

Thompson’s countenance abruptly changed. He started stuttering, not able to say a clear word.

Henry sneered, saying, “I don’t care about rubbish like that. If anyone gets the contract, then so be it. As long as everything goes smoothly, I don’t give a sh*t about other things!”

Jasper looked at Henry in a different light after hearing what he said.

Sure enough, these trust fund babies who had received elite education from an early age were no easy targets. Henry’s superior attitude of disregarding his employees’ struggles as long as they got things done was one that no ordinary family could cultivate.

Kindness was a taboo subject to superiors. Take, for example, the invitation to tender that Henry mentioned. If Henry had refused Thompson’s service just because he resorted to dirty tricks against the other companies, then he would be an idiot.

It was precisely because Thompson was great at using dirty tricks that he was the perfect candidate to work with him.

Jasper figured that he needed to speed things up with training Henry.

Jasper narrowed his eyes, lost in thoughts.

“Also, I’m not the one you offended today. It’s him.”

Henry pointed at Jasper and sneered at Thompson, "You're working on the Southface River Project too, aren't you? I'm sure I don't have to tell you who he is?"

Thompson followed Henry's finger and turned over to look. The moment he saw Jasper, he quivered all over.

Who in Southeast Province had not heard of Jasper?

This was especially the case for someone like Thompson. He had heard so much about Jasper that the stories were like thunderclap piercing his ears.

Besides, as he was working on the amusement park project, he knew things that others did not. For example, he knew that Jasper was friends with the Laws, often flirted with the Laws' daughter, Anna, and was good buddies with the Laws' son, Henry Law.

Thompson, who knew a thing or two about Jasper, felt his blood freezing.

He would rather have provoked Henry than Jasper.

What Jasper said next chilled his limbs, and he could not wait to beat his son to death.

"The man lying on the bed is my father. Your son asked someone to beat him up and broke one of his ribs."

Life at the Top Chapter 835

Jasper said calmly, staring at Thompson.

“It’s wrong for any children to treat their parents with disrespect. Now that my dad has been beaten up by your son, do you think I should just let it slide?”

Thompson, whose limbs were ice-cold now, heard a ringing in his head. He nearly fell butt first to the floor.

He looked at Jasper with a teary face and said in trepidation, “M-Mr. Laine, there’s nothing more to say about this. Since my good-for-nothing son has done something so horrifying, we admit our mistakes and are willing to accept your punishment. We just hope that you can give us a chance to make amends.”

Jasper said indifferently, “How do you plan to make amends? With this?”

Having said that, Jasper pointed at the 3,000 dollar bills that Gabriel had tossed to the ground earlier. He said vaguely, “Your son threw the cash to us just now.”

Thompson turned around to look at Gabriel, whose face was full of blood, trembling and too afraid to speak. The older man was so furious he nearly fainted.

His good-for-nothing son had never been able to achieve anything but was always able to ruin things.

“From now on, my son and I will take care of your father for you until the day he’s discharged from the hospital. When the time comes, I’ll take this good-for-nothing son of mine to your father and apologize to him. You can punish him all you want and I will not comment a word,” Thompson said between clenched teeth.

As soon as Thompson said those words, Jasper had a whole new level of respect for Thompson. If this fellow was able to snatch the amusement park project from his competitors, it just proved that he was indeed capable.

He had remarkable skills for coming up with the perfect way to placate him in such a short period of time.

“Jasp,” Sally called out to Jasper softly.

“Yes, Mom?” Jasper responded quickly.

“Let’s just forget about it. Your dad isn’t terribly injured. Besides, the doctor said that he only needs a few days’ rest.”

Sally was a soft-hearted person. When she noticed how pitiful the pair was, especially Thompson, who had little to do with this yet pleaded for leniency and vowed to take responsibility for the trouble his son had gotten into as soon as he entered the door, she felt compassion for them.

Jasper glanced at Thompson without a word.

“Forget it, Jasp. All parents are the same,” Charlie, who was lying on the bed, added.

Looking wretched, Thompson’s gaze dulled at his words and he walked up to Charlie to thank him reverently.

“Send your son overseas after this and only allow him to come back once he has cultivated his moral character,” Jasper said flatly.

Thompson knew what Jasper meant. In other words, he wanted his son to leave so he would never appear in front of him ever again.

This was still better than losing his life! Thompson hastened to say, "Okay. I'll send him away tonight."

As soon as Thompson said those words, he kicked Gabriel and raged, "You'd better thank Mr. Laine!"

Gabriel had grown wiser by now. Without wiping the blood off his face, he stood up and said to Jasper, "Thank you, Mr. Laine."

He then ran up to Charlie and Sally, sobbing. "Thank you for sparing my life."

Charlie waved and said, "Just go."

Thompson and Gabriel left after thanking them profusely. Henry pulled a long face and dragged the person in charge of the amusement park as well as his subordinates outside to lecture them.

Jasper, Wendy, Charlie, and Sally were the only ones left in the ward.

Wendy peeled apples for Charlie when she heard Jasper saying, "Wendy, should we find something for Mom and Dad to do?"

Life at the Top Chapter 836

“Do what?” Wendy asked curiously.

She did not even notice that Jasper had said ‘Mom and Dad’ instead of ‘my mom and dad’, giving Jasper the chance to take advantage of her.

When Wendy noticed Jasper’s smirk, she realized what was going on. She said angrily and embarrassedly, “Ugh, stop it! Can you judge the situation before you get into mischief?!”

“Your son needs to be disciplined, Aunt Sally, Uncle Charlie!”

When Sally saw Wendy protesting like a child to her, she chuckled and said, “Jasp did a great job this time.”

Wendy was both embarrassed and mad, itching to punch Jasper, that idiot, to death.

“I’m serious about the things I say. I’m not joking.”

Jasper stroked his chin and said, “Actually, Mom and Dad, you’re not that old yet. Besides, you have been busy working all these years and probably don’t feel comfortable having so much free time all of a sudden. So I’m just thinking if I should bring you to Brac County?”

Wendy was a quick-witted woman. She reacted instantly, asking, “Are you referring to the shipyard in Brac County?”

Jasper laughed. “Not bad. You know me best.”

The shipyard was the Zions' property that Jasper had previously acquired for 50 million. Jasper sat by the bed and explained it to his curious-looking parents.

"I acquired a shipyard at Brac County previously. It's a factory that makes ships. I have too many businesses to handle right now so I don't plan to focus too much energy on that for now. But it's still a factory with huge assets, so it'll be such a pity to abandon it!

"Therefore, I've decided to send you there to take care of the shipyard. Doing so will keep you busy and it's not even that tiring to do. You're mainly supervising production and managing workers. It's not going to be tedious work."

Jasper liked his arrangement, though as soon as Charlie and Sally heard what he said, they quickly shook their heads in unison.

"No way, I don't know anything about that." Charlie refused.

"That's right. Your dad is used to being supervised by others and has never supervised anyone. If you send us to a shipyard, we won't know what to do and will only mess things up for you," Sally added.

Seeing how his wife was looking down on him, Charlie hastened to explain, "Who says I've not supervised anyone before? I was the deputy captain of the production team when I was a young lad!"

"Mm, and you got kicked out in two weeks. Don't you feel embarrassed to say that?" Sally exposed him mercilessly.

Jasper and Wendy exchanged glances with each other, smiling. Jasper said, "You don't have to worry about your managerial roles. I'll send you helpers. Let them do the complicated stuff. You just need to watch them and keep an eye on the products, that's all.

"I will be the one to make the orders, and when things slowly begin to settle and you've also learned a thing or two, you can then take over completely."

In fact, Jasper did not care about the shipyard at all.

It was mainly because Jasper had realized a problem after this incident.

His parents were simply too bored.

Things were still fine when they were in the countryside. They knew their neighbors and had a few plots of land to manage. Even though work was tough, they had no time to laze around doing nothing.

Jasper would never let his parents go back to farming, but it would be damaging to a person's physical and mental health to suddenly become idle when they were already used to a hectic life.

Therefore, Jasper decided to send his parents to the shipyard near the sea to manage it. Jasper did not care if the factory was not managed well. He just wanted his parents to be happy.

Of course, persuading them required skills.

"Therefore, I'll assist you in getting businesses this year but you still need to make a few trips yourself. This shipyard means a lot to me and I'm worried about leaving this to someone else. See, I don't have the time to manage it, but at the same time, I find it a pity to just let it lie idle. I'm too busy."

Sally and Charlie immediately changed their minds after hearing what Jasper said.

In their opinion, they were doing something to help their son.

As parents, nothing could stop them from helping their children.

"That's true. The factory is pretty big. It's not safe to leave it to outsiders." Charlie agreed.

“If that’s the case, we’ll go over once you’ve made the arrangements for us.”

Jasper laughed. “Okay. Get some rest first, Dad. I’ll send you over immediately once you’ve recovered. I’ll leave everything there to both of you, then. Be sure to watch over it for me.”

“Don’t worry. We’ll manage it well,” Charlie said heroically.

Half an hour later, Jasper and Wendy walked out of the hospital together.

As she was worried about her husband, Sally decided to stay behind and take care of him.

As soon as they left the hospital, Jasper noticed that Henry was still lecturing his subordinates with a sullen expression.

A bunch of professional elites in suits and leather shoes stood obediently in a uniform line at the hospital yard as Henry lectured them like a father lecturing his sons.

Upon seeing Jasper, Henry finally let the matter drop and drove the group away.

“How embarrassing.”

Henry said to Jasper.

Jasper laughed. “This has nothing to do with you. You can control your subordinates but can you control your partners? Don’t be too hard on them.”

Henry gnawed on a cigarette and said thankfully, “I’m glad that this project is ending soon. I’ll soon be released from this agony.”

“Are you going back to the hotel right now?” Jasper asked.

“Hehe, I know where to have some fun. Don’t worry about me.” Henry chuckled.

“Don’t mess around,” Jasper reminded before climbing into the car with Wendy and driving off.

In the car, Wendy could finally spend some time alone with Jasper.

“You must’ve been really busy in the United States, right?” Wendy asked softly.

“It’s alright. What’s most important is that everything went well,” Jasper said, holding Wendy’s hand with a smile.

“That’s good to hear. Initially, I thought you couldn’t make it to the Southface River Project’s topping-out ceremony,” Wendy said.

Jasper suddenly recalled something and said, “Give your father a call and tell him that everything here has been settled. Ask him not to worry.”

Wendy rolled her eyes at Jasper and said, “I would have grown old by the time you recalled this. I informed him a long time ago. He asked you to drop by when you’re free.”

“Sure. I have to go, that’s for sure. The Southface River Project is close to completion, and I still have many things to discuss with him. Is there anything else happening in the company recently?” Jasper asked.

“I have to tell you something,” Wendy said in a deep voice.

“I’ve been discussing with Chad a lot lately about integrating the job title system of state-owned enterprises. We put together an idea and plan to implement ranking posts within the company.”

Life at the Top Chapter 837

Jasper was no stranger to this concept.

In the future, even huge internet technology corporations like Abbylon, Terizone, or Warwick employed this strategy.

Among them, Warwick, the largest enterprise with the most employees, had as many as 25 internal rankings and 22 rankings that were opened to the public.

Divisions like that would be beneficial for internal management. At least they would be able to provide salaries according to academic qualifications and different levels of responsibilities.

For employees, there was a clear goal they could work hard to achieve.

Unlike in the past where an ordinary office clerk could not even serve as a manager even after working for a few years.

There were only so many leadership positions, and the number of employees would always be greater than that of leadership positions.

However, after separating salaries and administrative ranks, making them completely unrelated to each other, it would be beneficial for a company to grow stronger and larger.

“That doesn’t sound like a problem to me. This is a crucial path a company must take to modernize itself. An all-inclusive management strategy isn’t suitable for a huge corporation.

“Do you have a specific plan?” Jasper asked with interest.

Seeing how Jasper approved the idea that she had been racking her brains to think about during this period of time, Wendy said excitedly.

“I do. Chad and I discussed it for a very long time, revised it several times, and eventually formed two versions of the final draft. It’s on the computer at home. You can check it when we get back.”

It took only half an hour to drive home from the hospital.

When they got home, Jasper took a quick shower and sat in front of the computer, looking at Wendy’s fruit of labor during this period of time.

Jasper reviewed the 67-page report while listening to Wendy’s explanation, asking questions from time to time.

“Based on what you said, each applicant is ranked using a similar set of formulas. Can the formula guarantee objectivity and fairness?” Jasper asked.

Wendy replied, “Yes, the formula is used specifically on people.”

Jasper nodded after hearing what she said. Actually, Jasper had already planned to propose the idea during the last meeting.

However, he considered the fact that the company’s scale was not large enough and reformation needed to be done step by step. The entire hierarchy needed to be implemented after rigorous and careful considerations.

As this was a reformation that would affect the salaries of everyone in the company and perhaps even the situation as a whole, Jasper had decided to put off the plan temporarily.

Little did he know, Wendy and Chad had acted ahead of him.

Not only had they come up with the idea, but they had also formulated a perfect plan.

“Not bad. The plan is logical and workable. Most importantly, you were the ones who discovered this and even worked to solve it.

“To be honest with you, I did notice this problem and wanted to solve it, but my plans weren’t as good as yours,” Jasper shut his laptop and said to Wendy with a smile.

Wendy blinked, saying, “Do I get a reward, then?”

“Yeah. It’s in my luggage. I’ve prepared it for you a long time ago,” Jasper said with a smile.

Wendy cheered and rushed over to unzip Jasper’s luggage.

She eventually found a set of Givenchy limited-edition lipstick gift boxes, a total of 16 lipsticks that cost Jasper 30,000 US dollars.

“That’s cheating. This is clearly the souvenir you bought for me. It’s not a reward!” Although Wendy was over the moon, she quickly realized that she was nearly fooled by Jasper.

Wendy thought about it and then narrowed her eyes as she looked at Jasper, saying, “I won’t ask for much. You just need to answer one question.”

Jasper’s muscles contracted as he asked vigilantly, “What question?”

“Why are you so guilty?” Wendy’s eyes glinted sharply.

“I’m not guilty.” Jasper calmly picked up the cup of coffee and walked to the door. “I’ll go pour some coffee.”

“Wait!” Wendy stood at the door and stared at Jasper, saying, “Don’t change the subject. You are guilty!”

“Look, why don’t we do this? I’ll owe you the reward first. Since you’re the one who proposed the plan, submit a document to me tomorrow under your and Chad’s names.

“Once I approve it, you and Chad will implement this together with you as the leader and Chad as the assistant. I will determine the reward for you after that, okay?”

Wendy hesitated slightly. “Chad is the director of the Human Resources Department, though. Wouldn’t it be better if he leads?”

Jasper knocked on Wendy’s smooth forehead and said, “Silly, you’re the boss lady. He’s just a worker. Who do you say is better for the job?”

“Do you think a human resources director is capable enough to implement something this major? Only you and I are qualified to do this in the entire company. Therefore, I’m certain he won’t be bold enough to be the leader.”

Life at the Top Chapter 838

“Excuse me? What lady boss? You can dream on!”

Wendy glared coyly at Jasper before running back to her room.

At the sight of Wendy’s flurried back, Jasper laughed. “Do you think you’d have so many things to worry about if you weren’t the lady boss? Just admit it.”

“Go to hell!”

The door closed with a bang, cutting off Jasper’s field of vision.

The next day at the Southface River Project site. Jasper and Dawson patrolled the site while accompanied by a large group of site managers.

“It’s nearly done.” Looking at the clean road, refreshing greenery, and newly built buildings around him, Jasper said to Dawson with a smile.

“Yes, it’s all done. Now it’s just the ceremony.” Dawson was in a good mood as well.

They had both invested a lot of money and energy in this project in the past year.

Now that everything had finally come to fruition, even Dawson, someone who was used to seeing turbulence in life, felt a sense of joy and gratification. It was just like an old farmer who was finally harvesting his crops after a whole year of busy farming.

“Have all the invitations been sent out?” Jasper asked.

Dawson nodded and said, “The preparations are done. We were just waiting for you to come back from the United States, actually. We have also begun seeking investments. At the moment, 70% of the shops and office buildings in the entire Southface River Project have been rented out.

“However, in order to meet the publicity requirement set by the city’s government, the rental fee for the first three years is extremely low. The city’s government will give us a 70% subsidy and we will bear the 30% ourselves.”

After listening to what Dawson said, Jasper nodded and said, “This is all just a small sum of money. It’s fine. Let’s get this place crowded with people first. As soon as this place starts bustling with energy, we can easily earn back the rental fee by double in three years. Giving comes before receiving. There’s no need to be petty-minded with small gains like that.”

Dawson laughed. “Speaking of which, the city’s government is really considerate. They exempted as much as they could for Schuler Group’s and JW Company’s taxes. For the first five years, all the properties rented out here will be tax-free. After further calculations, we’re still making a profit.”

“The city’s government wants to attract more investors. We’ve invested billions in place of the city’s government so it’s crucial that they do something to show their appreciation. Now that the Southface River Project has been completed and Nauritus City’s investment has taken on a new look, the higher-ups of the city’s government will be over the moon,” Jasper said with a smile.

While talking, the group arrived at the core center of the Southface River Project.

At the sight of the 26-story building in front of him and the three dazzling words ‘Southface River Tower’, Jasper said, “Don’t rent out the ten levels at the top of Southface River Tower.”

“Are you saving them for yourself?” Dawson asked.

Jasper nodded and said, "Yeah. The tiny villa is too cramped. There are four to five people crammed in the room working. We should've changed locations a long time ago. We still need to wait for a very long time for the building in Waterhoof City to finish construction as I don't think it'll be done soon, so it's better to move the company over here first. Ten floors should be more than enough."

Dawson said in agreement, "Since JW is slowly building up its reputation, paying attention to the company's image is crucial. This is something that many people are concerned about. The building in front of us is almost in line with JW's current reputation. When JW becomes even more powerful in the future, the construction in Waterhoof City would be almost completed as well."

Jasper laughed. "When the time comes, Schuler Group can move there too."

Dawson laughed while waving his hands. "No thanks. Since its establishment, not once has Schuler Group left Southeast Province, so there's no need to waste the resources moving into a new place. However, I'll consider setting up a branch there. After all, Schuler Group has a large organizational structure. I plan to set up several branches in the country so it'll be easier to manage them when they're all divided."

Jasper and Dawson were chatting when a group of men approached them.

Conrad Monty!

Seemingly here to see Jasper, Conrad did not halt in his footsteps as soon as he saw him and walked straight to him.

There were several other men next to him. With a glance, Jasper knew what was going on. These were all the leaders of relevant departments in the city's government whom he had talked to before.

What were these two groups of people doing together?

Jasper narrowed his eyes and walked toward Conrad.

Life at the Top Chapter 839

“Aren’t you as pleased as Punch after your trip to the United States, Mr. Laine? Not only did you earn a reputation for yourself but you also made a fortune. The news about Sena has spread throughout the entire domestic financial circle. Well aren’t you something, Mr. Laine?”

Conrad looked at Jasper and said ambiguously.

Jasper let out a faint smile and said, “I don’t have a choice, do I? I need to earn a living for my family. Money isn’t easy to earn, so I have to do something. I’m surprised you still found the time to show up at Southface River despite your busy schedule, Mr. Monty. Are you here to give me some advice?”

“I don’t consider this advice. Judging from your reputation and status, do you think I have the guts to advise you?” Conrad said with a calm countenance.

“If that’s the case, are you here to attend Southface River Project’s topping-out ceremony then?” Jasper asked with a faint smile.

Conrad’s gaze turned icy. He looked at Jasper and said calmly, “Jasper, we can shed all pretense of cordiality. You know I will never come here to celebrate your project’s topping-out ceremony.

“However, we can make a fortune together. I’m here to partner up with you this time.”

As soon as Conrad said those words, Dawson and the rest looked at him with inquiring gazes.

Jasper and the Monty family’s strife was no longer a secret in Southeast Province. They were even so close to bringing their fight to the streets.

Following the success of Sena being listed in the United States market, everyone was speculating the amount of money Jasper had earned this time around.

Although no one knew the specific amount, everyone knew one thing at least.

Jasper had changed ever since he returned from the United States.

Many people were racking their brains thinking of ways to curry favor with Jasper.

Looking at Conrad now... Was he admitting defeat?

Was he seeking peace with Jasper?

Everyone was weirded out by that thought.

As the richest family in Southeast Province, the Monty family had been a giant sitting above the Southeast Province's upper class circle for far too long.

Right now, this giant was about to collapse.

All of a sudden, everyone felt conflicted.

Jasper was the calmest of all.

They said that your enemy knew you best.

Jasper understood people like Conrad the most.

There was no way he could settle as an official or a general because it was absolutely impossible for him to yield to others.

A person like that would only end up in two ways—be a king, or die.

How could Conrad submit to him?

Jasper was extremely vigilant, yet his tone remained calm while revealing a hint of curiosity.

“Partner? Let’s listen. I’m really curious to know how this cooperation would work.”

Life at the Top Chapter 840

“There are too many people here. Why don’t we find somewhere quiet to talk in detail?” Conrad said flatly.

“Let’s go to Southface River Tower. One of the floors has been renovated. There’s a slightly more quiet reception room there,” Dawson suggested.

Jasper and Conrad had no comments about that. Therefore, they turned around and walked into the building.

Upon stepping into the new building, Conrad was still wearing a calm countenance yet his gaze would not stop darting all over the place.

Actually, although he was here today to hinder Jasper, he had been carefully observing the entire Southface River Project on his way here.

He came to the conclusion that even though Jasper was contemptible, he had to admit that from the day Jasper started from scratch up until now, the man had portrayed traits of an extraordinary man.

Disregarding everything else, the Southface River Project had a formwork that could not be found in any other cities in this country.

On the contrary, this place would become a formwork for other cities.

When word about Southface River Project’s topping-out ceremony got out and the nation took a look at the style of this place, Conrad could almost see JW Real Estates becoming the first partner anyone could think of for the construction of the nation’s New City Project.

This place was simply too advanced!

In terms of concept, other real estate companies had fallen way behind JW Real Estates.

Conrad lifted his head to look at Jasper who was walking ahead and could not help but wonder if he had a different brain structure than other people. Why was he always able to impress his competitors no matter what he did?

When the group entered the reception room, Conrad had also put away the messy thoughts in his head.

When they had all taken their seats, Conrad did not wait for Jasper to speak and took the initiative to say, "You know, mining is the Monty family's main industry, so we know a thing or two about minerals."

There were only Conrad, Jasper, and Dawson in the reception room.

Upon hearing Conrad's opening remark, Jasper and Dawson remained quiet as they waited for him to continue.

After a slight pause, Conrad continued, "In the previous aluminum incident, the Monty family was more than capable of fighting for it to the end, but before that, something else happened and our family refused to invest too much in a site that has already been exploited to a certain extent."

When Conrad said those words, Dawson's expression changed. He understood the implicit meaning of his words.

From what Conrad was saying, he seemed to have located a new mining site?

This would be major news.

Dawson turned to look at Jasper.

Jasper, however, was seen shaking his head almost imperceptibly, motioning him not to be anxious.

Conrad observed their reactions with a blank face, and his expression did not even fluctuate.

“That mine is located in Hill County, at the junction of Southeast Province and Mustiece Province. As the name suggests, 90% of Hill County is covered by mountains. It’s a poor county where more than 40% of the villages and towns do not have access to road facilities.

“It’s precisely because of its harsh conditions that no one had discovered the aluminum mine, not even the Monty family.”

Life at the Top Chapter 841

“In recent years, we’ve dispatched more than a dozen exploration teams to search for new minerals, spending at least ten million annually. Aside from national mining enterprises, the Monty family has spent the most money among other private enterprises.

“Our hard work finally paid off. In the mountains of Hill County, we located this aluminum mine. In the preliminary exploration, we found at least ten million tons of aluminum ores, sufficient for continuous mining for ten years according to the annual mining volume of one million tons. Its value is no less than 90 billion.”

At that point, Conrad’s blank face revealed a rare excitement.

“Therefore, I plan to partner up with you to do this business.”

When Jasper was done listening, he raised his eyebrows slightly and said, “If that’s what you’re saying, Mr. Monty, then you can easily make a fortune from this aluminum mine yourself. Why would you want to share it with me?”

Conrad was not the slightest surprised by Jasper’s question. He replied, “Funds.”

“Like I said, Hill County is extremely poor. In order to develop a mine, the first thing you will need to do is build a road that leads directly to the mine so that heavy machinery can go in and out using the road.

“Judging from the current situation in Hill County, at least one billion Somer Dollars in investments is required to construct the road. Another tricky thing is that the minerals are located in the territory of provincial natural resources reserves. According to regulations, the vegetation and trees destroyed from building a mine will have to be replanted.

“That will be at least another billion in expenditure.

“Also, Hill County’s government once stated their conditions to me, saying that if I build a mine, the mining workers must be recruited from Hill County itself. That’s fine with me since building a mine requires workers, after all. But the problem here is the second condition. We must supply electricity and water to the towns and villages wherever the road passes.

“The expenditure is slightly lesser here, about 300 million Somer Dollars.

“In other words, excluding capital investment such as mining equipment and large amounts of employee safety equipment, as well as other funds, the additional expenditure required in the initial period to construct this aluminum mine is 2.3 billion Somer Dollars. In addition to that, we need at least three billion Somer Dollars in investment when the mining begin, and at least 500 million Somer Dollars for maintenance and operational costs in subsequent years.

“Although the mine is capable of making profits once operations and maintenance begins, during the initial period, including the additional expenditure of 2.3 billion, a total of 5.3 billion Somer Dollars is needed.”

After saying those words, Conrad spread his arms open and said nonchalantly, “If it weren’t for these funding issues, do you think I would want to split this juicy piece of meat with anyone? I would have kept it a secret. Why would I take the initiative to let you know and even invite you to partner up with me?”

“5.3 billion.” Jasper tapped his fingers gently on the armrest of the couch and said calmly, “That’s not a small sum.”

“The Monty family can take out three billion. The remaining 2.3 billion can be converted into shares. The approximate ratio is 60:40. I can give you the 40%.” Conrad put forward his condition for the partnership.

Jasper laughed. “Not everyone can take out so much money at a time even if it’s just 2.3 billion. You think too highly of me, Mr. Monty.”

“Others may not be able to do it, but I believe you can. Don’t tell me that you didn’t even earn two billion when you went to the United States to get Sena listed?” Conrad said indifferently.

Jasper chuckled and said, “Looks like you know a lot about me, Mr. Monty. That’s far too much concern on your side, don’t you think?”

“Let’s cut to the chase. I will give you two days to think about it. If you don’t want to do it, then I will find someone else.” Conrad stood up and walked to the door after finishing his sentence.

“Sure, I’ll give you an answer two days later,” Jasper said.

Conrad had just left when Jasper said to Dawson with a chuckle, “Did you smell it, Uncle Dawson?”

“Smell what?” Dawson frowned, still thinking about the aluminum mine.

“The smell of conspiracy.”

Life at the Top Chapter 842

Dawson asked with a frown, "Are you saying that he's lying to you? But you can't lie about a mine that has been explored. We can easily send someone over to investigate. Why would he use such a lousy trick?"

Jasper said knowingly, "Some simple tricks can play a key role in crucial times. It doesn't necessarily need to be a scam. Half-truths are always the most difficult to expose."

"Are you going to decline, then?" Dawson asked.

Jasper pondered and said, "If we don't destroy the Monty family, then they will remain a thorn in our sides or a fish bone stuck in our throats. He wants to destroy me, and I want to use this opportunity to remove the seeds of future troubles."

"I'm afraid this is not going to be easy to deal with. If Conrad wants to set us up, he will leave plenty of ways out for himself when so much money is involved."

Dawson frowned slightly as he continued, "Besides, the Monty family has deep roots and a firm foundation. We may be able to deal with Conrad, but let's not forget that he has a backer, and that person is the hardest to deal with."

Jasper chuckled and stood up, saying, "No matter what happens, we'll see how things progress first!"

Two days was neither too long nor too short.

In the midst of his hectic life, two days went by in the blink of an eye.

In the past two days, Jasper and Dawson worked together to prepare for Southface River Project's topping-out ceremony.

On the other hand, Jack planned to officially launch the online point card payment system, a joint partnership between Sena and Terizone. There were many tasks involved that required frequent communication with Terizone and Commercial Bank.

Plus, Sena was now a proper listed company and currently the most popular foreign-listed internet company in the domestic internet industry. Therefore, he planned to hold an annual meeting in Waterhoof City.

Jack's intentions were clear when he reported this to Jasper. He wanted Jasper to attend it.

Jasper did not decline. After deciding on a time with Jack, they waited for Sena's annual meeting next week.

The topping-out ceremony for the Southface River Project would be held immediately after Sena's annual meeting.

There were many complicated affairs to handle, and when Jasper was done handling them one by one, two days had already gone by.

Today, Conrad showed up at his doorsteps.

He was not alone. He brought with him Valentine Estrada, a man Jasper once had dealings with.

The two of them brought a stack of information and went straight to Jasper's office.

"If I hadn't heard about it in advance, I wouldn't believe that your parent company is squeezed into such a tiny villa." Conrad sat across from Jasper with a smile.

Jasper asked the clerk to prepare two cups of coffee and laughed.

“When Southface River officially opens, my company will then shift over. We can only do what we can at the moment. We have no choice. The company is less than a year old and is still very weak. It’s best to take things slow.”

“Why do I feel like you’re mocking old companies like us?” Conrad said meaningfully.

“Are you here to have idle talks with me today, Mr. Monty?” Jasper said with a grin.

Conrad motioned to Valentine and the latter immediately pulled out a stack of documents. Conrad said, “Two days are up. I’m here to ask if you have an answer? This is all the information regarding the aluminum mine.

“You will find verifications from the county, city, and province mining departments, as well as detailed and official certification of the surrounding environment of the reserves and mineral resources. I can’t fake these things nor am I allowed to fake these things. Just take a close look at them and you’ll know what I mean,” Conrad said.

Jasper carefully read the documents in his hands without a word.

Conrad picked up his cup of coffee and took a sip in an unruffled manner, turning around to study Jasper’s office. The competitive aura that emitted from within him when he faced Jasper in the past was non-existent now.

Honestly, Jasper knew nothing about the mining industry. The jargon and data shown in this thick stack of information made his head hurt. It was all Greek to him.

Jasper could at least tell a private document and an official document apart.

Among them were a few official documents with clear-written words to prove that the aluminum mine that Conrad mentioned did exist.

No one would fake things like that because, on the one hand, one could make a call to the department to know if this was fake. It would be too easily exposed.

On the other hand, once exposed, one would have to pay a huge price for forging official documents.

“I don’t understand the data and statistics, but I know this is probably real,” Jasper said bluntly while putting down the papers.

Conrad, who was studying Jasper’s office, withdrew his gaze and said mildly, “It’s alright if you don’t understand the data and statistics. You can find any undergraduate with a degree in mineral exploration and he’ll give you a clear calculation.

“If you’ve confirmed that it’s genuine, can you give me an answer now? Do you want this partnership or not?”

After pointing at the large stack of papers on the table, Jasper said with a grin, “Look, I don’t know about these things. Even if I find a professional to go through it, it’ll still take some time. Why don’t you give me two more days?”

Frowning slightly, Conrad looked at Jasper and said, “I’ll give you one more day at most. With every delay, I’m wasting hundreds of thousands of dollars. No one can bear this cost for too long. If you don’t want to, then I can just find other partners.”

“Okay, one day it is then,” Jasper said with a smile.

“Don’t worry, I’ll definitely give you an answer tomorrow at this time.”

Conrad stood up and said, “Hopefully.”

Life at the Top Chapter 843

After bidding an insincere farewell to Jasper, Conrad and Valentine left the villa.

Upon getting into the car, he lifted his head and said, "Cancel all the plans we prepared previously."

"Mr. Monty, we spent a lot of money and effort to prepare those plans. Are we... cancelling all of them?"

Sitting at the front passenger seat, Valentine turned around and asked.

"Cancel it all. Use a new plan."

Conrad added mildly, "Starting from the day Jasper built up his fortune, I can recite every piece of information I found about him backwards.

"From those pieces of information that can almost be written into a novel, I can tell that Jasper is an extremely conceited person. He's distrusting to his core and only believes in his own judgment.

"No matter how outrageous a judgment may seem to outsiders, he will execute his plan once he has made his decision. He has never cared about what outsiders think or say.

"Most terrifyingly... his outrageous judgments have all succeeded. The more outrageous it is, the more benefits he gets. It's precisely because of this that he's able to accumulate so much wealth in just one year's time.

"Ever since Sena was listed, there are not many people in Somerland who can compare to him in terms of wealth and fortune. No more than three digits.

“Just how arrogant and conceited can this man be? He isn’t afraid of schemes and tricks. He believes that he can solve everything.”

At this point, Conrad’s lips were curled into a strange arc.

“A conceited man like him will still eat the poisonous cake we sent him despite knowing that it’s poisonous because he believes that he can handle the poison to get rid of us.

“He covets the gains in front of him without being aware of the danger behind him. Jasper covets the gains yet has no idea that I’m the danger lurking behind him, pointing a sniper at his head.”

After hearing what he said, Valentine could not help but gasp in admiration.

Conrad had lost to Jasper twice, suffering tremendous losses. Moreover, Jasper was always able to leave with a bunch of benefits each time.

Valentine was not around the first time, but he had heard about it.

He experienced it himself the second time.

This was the third time.

Valentine had observed how terrifyingly fast Conrad had grown during this time. Conrad had been reviewing his defeat almost every day, carefully thinking about what went wrong that caused his defeat and Jasper’s victory.

In Valentine’s opinion, Conrad had completely transformed now. It would not make any sense if he did not win this time.

More importantly, Valentine had met Conrad’s father, Steven Monty, recently.

After meeting that man, Valentine realized what a true upright and indomitable man in Southeast Province actually looked like. With a man like him as Conrad's father and to have him back him up, how could Conrad possibly lose?

...

"They sure are willing to fork out so much money for this bait."

In the evening. In Jasper's office, Henry yawned constantly while Jasper studied an encrypted document that had been sent urgently from Harbor City. He tutted non-stop.

He rested his legs on the armrest of the couch, lying flawlessly on the couch. Henry picked a comfortable posture to lie down and said with disdain.

"That idiot Mitch didn't even have the guts to dig a hole and bury someone on the mountains previously but now he's bold enough to transport hundreds of tons of aluminum ores to the mountain and hide them, pretending like it's a new mine that has just been explored? He's pretty smart, isn't he?"

"Have you actually buried someone before?" Jasper asked.

"No."

Henry waved his hands.

"It's not what you think it is. We just beat up the idiots we don't like and drag them to the mountain, dig a pit, strip them bare, and throw their clothes into it. Then we bury them up to their chests. This way, no one dies and we can also teach them a good lesson. That's it, basically."

Having said that, Henry smirked and said, "Do you remember Bon Lancaster's son, Zane Lancaster? He's currently the one who has been buried the most among other trust fund babies in Harbor City. Hahahaha."

“Can you guess who made it to the top of the list for burying the most people? I’ll give you a hint. You know this person very well,” Henry said while winking his eyes.

“It’s not you, is it?” Jasper hissed.

Although he was talking to Henry, his eyes were fixed on the document that came from Harbor City. He was searching his brain for all the clues he already had, reassembling and restoring them as he tried to play out the scenes in his head.

“Hehehe, I knew you’d say that. You got it wrong this time. It’s my sister.” Henry laughed.

Jasper withdrew his gaze from the documents upon hearing his words and shifted it to Henry, asking dubiously, “Anna? I don’t believe you.”

“You don’t believe me? Although my sister doesn’t hang out with us, she has a reputation for teaching all the trust fund babies in Harbor City a lesson. Only Kayden, Fabian, and those who are much older than her had not been bashed up by her before.

“In the years before we met you, if she found any trust fund babies in Harbor City unpleasant to look at, or if they pissed her off, none of them would end well.

“When she was done crippling them, I would bury them. But she’s still the initiator, after all, so those idiots would shudder in fright whenever they see her now!”

Jasper recalled Anna’s matchless beauty and chuckled. “I can’t tell at all.”

“She changed after meeting you. She’s way quieter now,” Henry said with a sigh.

When he finally put down the document that was three to five pages, Jasper ignored Henry’s sighs and said, “I’m afraid Mitch won’t be able to handle something this big…”

“Sneaking hundreds of tons of aluminum ores through customs, burying them, and disguising them as a fake mine so flawlessly that it could even fool the most experienced veterans in the industry... This scam alone would cost them hundreds of millions of dollars, right?”

“They sure are willing.”

Life at the Top Chapter 844

“What’s the situation now?”

Henry managed to lift half of his body from the couch and asked Jasper.

“Mitch, that idiot, colluded with Conrad to transport hundreds of tons of aluminum ores from Harbor City just to trick you?”

Jasper nodded and said, “Something like that.”

“F*ck!” Henry cursed with displeasure. “Why has no one paid such a huge price to trick me before?”

“It only takes a few women to trick you,” Jasper shot back mercilessly.

“F*ck, I don’t like to hear that!” Henry roared grumpily.

“Stop shouting. It hurts my head.”

“This is all thanks to the Laws’ great influence. Your family was able to find out about this in just a few hours.

“Since they’ve spent so much effort preparing a good show, it would be such a pity if we don’t go along with their performance, don’t you think?” Jasper said meaningfully.

...

The next day, Conrad took the initiative to make a call. This time, Jasper agreed to meet him at a location.

“I think the partnership can go on,” Jasper said with a smile while looking at Conrad who was sitting across the table.

“Before that, though, I have a question.

“Aren’t you afraid that working with me will irk you when you have enmity against me?”

After hearing what Jasper said, Conrad said indifferently, “Enmity and business are two completely different things. If I can’t even draw a clear distinction between them, then why bother doing business at all?”

“Okay.” Jasper nodded, seemingly impressed by this answer.

“How will this partnership work?”

Conrad’s eyes twinkled as he said with a faint smile, “Like what we mentioned earlier, we will establish a company. I’ll hold 60% shares and you 40%. We’ll invest according to the ratio. You will contribute 2.3 billion while I will fork out the remaining three billion.”

“The interests that belong to the company after that will also be divided according to equity.”

Jasper nodded and said, “Not bad. This is a standard and reasonable way to distribute it. However, I don’t know anything about the mineral industry. What about the sales channels?”

“Don’t worry about the sales channels. I’ve already contacted several state-owned mining companies. As soon as the company is established, we can then sign a business contract with them as our suppliers and operate according to the market price.”

“In other words, you’ve done everything from exploration to mining to sales and I only need to fork out money before waiting for my share of profits?” Jasper asked.

Conrad looked at Jasper and asked indifferently, “You’re afraid that I’ll set you up?”

Jasper laughed. “Would you believe me if I say I’m not afraid?”

“I don’t believe you.” Conrad shook his head and raised his brows, saying, “I explained the reason to you earlier. Had it not been for insufficient funds, I wouldn’t have shared this with anyone—let alone you.

“At present, if I want 60% of these benefits, I will have to let someone have the 40%. In addition to that, I don’t have many candidates to choose from. After deliberating for a very long time, I think you’re the most suitable candidate of all.

“If you’re worried, then I can let you handle the aspects of legal representation, management, and even the signing of the sales contracts.”

“In that case, I can kick you out anytime. You’re not afraid of that?” Jasper asked.

“Would you believe me if I say that I’m not afraid?” Conrad replied to Jasper with his own words.

“I don’t believe you.” Jasper laughed.

“I’ll be in charge of setting up collateral,” Conrad said.

“Collateral? We have enough money. Why would you still need to set up collateral?” Jasper asked, raising his eyebrows slightly.

Smiling, Conrad said, “Do you think we can just cash out three billion so casually? I don’t have a listed company to be my backer like you. I need to put up the entire company’s equity as collateral. The loan will be at least 2.5 billion.”

The company was short of funds, and it seemed perfectly normal to apply for bank loans.

Jasper looked unruffled when he listened to Conrad’s words and said, “I thought you’d fork out three billion yourself and inject it into the company, but from what you’re saying right now, I will be the one forking out a large sum of money whereas you won’t have to pay anything?”

Conrad replied calmly, “You can’t say that. Is it not enough that I have put up the entire aluminum mine as collateral? You must know that the only reason why our partnership can work and the bank loans can be approved is that fundamentally, this aluminum mine exists, no?”

Jasper pondered for a moment and said, “I need to do a field trip.”

“Of course.” Conrad agreed readily.

“We can go anytime as long as you’re free.”

“I won’t be there. I won’t understand anything anyway so I’ll be going there for nothing. I’ll send relevant experts, though. I just need a bit of help from you when the time comes, that’s all,” Jasper said.

Conrad replied flatly, “Inform me when you’re done with the arrangements. I’ll be ready at any time to serve your men.”

...

Life at the Top Chapter 845

Jasper sat unmoving in his seat even after Conrad had left.

Wendy arrived soon after. After he stood and exchanged seats with her, Jasper beckoned to a waiter to order a table's worth of food.

"Conrad has pretty good taste. The food at this restaurant is quite good."

As Jasper spoke to Wendy, he ladled a helping of her favorite chicken onto her plate.

Wendy blinked as she gazed at Jasper, asking, "How did the discussion go?"

Jasper smiled and said, "It went just as I expected it to, but there were also some surprises."

He did not keep anything hidden from Wendy as he relayed the details about the conversation he had with Conrad, making sure to emphasize the request Conrad brought up.

Wendy had a solemn expression on her face as she nodded and said, "The request for a loan must not be agreed to!"

"After all, no matter who is responsible for applying for the loan, the bank will have to assess the company's assets regardless. Once the loan is approved and becomes an overdue loan, the bank will seek out the lender and legal representative, which would be you and the new company.

"Both parties need to repay the loan, but Conrad Monty would not have to shoulder even an ounce of responsibility."

“That’s right,” Jasper said calmly as he spat out a bone. “This is where Conrad’s schemes came into play.

“It might seem as if he’s given me all the power, but with great power comes great responsibility. By becoming the legal representative, I’ll be able to manage the company.

“However, I’ll also be the first to be blamed if anything were to happen to the company. If he takes out a loan of 2.5 billion dollars and fails to make the repayments, the bank will come looking for me instead of him.”

Wendy said angrily, “What a despicable person he is! We must not make any promises to him.”

“I didn’t reject him. I told him I needed to send some professionals over to conduct some field research and he said he would take good care of them,” Jasper said with a smile.

Wendy said angrily, “How could you have made a blunder at such a critical stage? If he’s already made that many preparations, there’s no way your experts can find anything when they arrive at the scene. They’ll tell you that everything is perfectly fine.”

Jasper shrugged and said, “I know, but I’m only doing this to placate him.”

Wendy stared confusedly at Jasper as she frowned and asked, “What are you planning to do?”

Jasper chuckled and said, “Conrad’s plans are about to be revealed at this point.

“He first obtained fake aluminum ore, which he’s using to swindle my funds from me. Everything will seem fine at first when I’ve invested enough money to set up the new company. We’ll even be making huge profits.

“However, as time goes on, I’ll suddenly discover that the mine has run out of ore to be mined. Thus, that would cause a breach of contract, and the state-owned enterprises who have already signed contracts with us will file a lawsuit against us. Then, the bank will also file a lawsuit when the loan repayments are overdue.

“When that happens, I either have to swallow the bitter truth of having to pay the state-owned enterprises for breach of contract and the bank interest on the loan principal, or I can deny everything and fight a lengthy legal battle with both parties. However, I will be on the losing side no matter which option I choose.

“As for Conrad, he’ll end up becoming the winner with the 2.5 billion dollars he loaned.”

Wendy gritted her teeth as she listened to Jasper. “How can such despicable people exist in the world?! Jasp, we should ignore him and make his plans fail!”

“I won’t cough up a single cent, but this scheme...”

Jasper had a meaningful look on his face as he placed a drumstick on Wendy’s plate. Smiling, he said, “We’ll take things one step at a time.”

At that very moment, Conrad had already arrived home.

He was sitting in the study and having a video call with Kennedy who was in Harbor City.

“Things are about 80% complete at this point.”

A look of delight appeared on Kennedy’s face when he heard what Conrad said.

“Not bad. I knew things would go well with you in charge.”

However, Conrad shook his head when he heard the praises and said, “Mr. Kennedy, we can’t get too excited just yet. We must wait for Jasper’s funds to be processed.”

Kennedy nodded and said, “Alright. One must not be impatient if one wants to achieve big things. I’ll be accompanying my father to America in two days. Thus, you’ll be reporting any updates regarding this matter to Mitch.”

Conrad frowned slightly as he said, “Maybe I should report directly to you instead, Mr. Kennedy?”

Kennedy said softly, “Conrad, Mitch has made progress since the last time. We’ve already planned everything out, so all he needs to do is follow the instructions I’ve given him. Nothing will happen. Get in touch with me if you need any difficult decisions made.”

When Conrad heard that, he sighed softly and said, “Alright, I understand.”

After hanging up, the corners of Conrad’s lips curled upward into a cold smile as he muttered to himself, “Stupid. The dad is just as stupid as his son.”

Then, Conrad took his phone and dialed another number.

“Start buying out Sena’s shares now, and remember to take each step carefully. This time, I’m going to turn on Jasper and cause him to suffer his most major loss yet!

“Who cares about the W. Langdon family? They’re just bait for me to tempt Jasper Laine with. Everyone will only realize they’ve been fooled by me when I reveal everything!”

Life at the Top Chapter 846

Conrad had never expected to fool Jasper with a scheme that seemed so costly and elaborate.

Thus, Conrad had from the very start abandoned the Langdon family and begun planning his scheme.

In his opinion, it would be best if Jasper was fooled by this scheme, but he knew the chances of that happening was tiny.

After dealing with him multiple times, Conrad understood exactly why Jasper was so terrifying.

Thus, he did not have a lot of hope.

He placed even more hope on the fact that he had secretly abandoned the W. Langdons and had another plan directed at Sena.

Conrad, who had done thorough research on Jasper, knew that Jasper would immediately be alerted if he took action against any of the companies the man owned.

Jasper had complete control over these companies because they had never been listed publicly. Nothing could escape his eyes.

Sena was the only one that was different.

After all, Sena had been listed publicly on the Nasdaq Composite. The company's shareholding structure would be a multi-class structure for sure.

Conrad knew Jasper would maintain a firm grip of control over Sena, but he did not care. He did not want to fight with Jasper for Sena but rather cause Sena to completely collapse once he was done making his move.

No one knew that Conrad had already begun laying out the share prices for Sena, and that was the last trick he had up his sleeve.

“Oh, Jasper. This time, it’ll be a battle of wits between the two of us. On the surface, I’m using the W. Langdons as a cover-up for what I’m about to do in the dark. I’m going to pull the rug out from under you through the Nasdaq Composite... Tell me, how are you going to win this time?”

...

Without surprise, the team of experts in the minerals industry that Jasper had gotten in contact with through Elbert Mcgee did not find anything out of the ordinary in Hill County.

After two days of field research, the report the team submitted to Jasper stated that there was indeed a large reserve of aluminum ore within the depths of Hill County. Moreover, these ores were worth billions because of their high quality.

The only downside was that Hill County was an undeveloped place with harsh conditions. A large amount of money would need to be invested before the ores could be mined...

Jasper put down the report the experts had submitted and dialed John’s number.

“John, it’s me.

“Haha, let me apologize in advance. I was in America before this and had a lot of things to take care of. That’s why I wasn’t able to keep in touch with you guys.

“You’re not wrong, I do have a favor to ask from you today.

“I was wondering if you could ask around your company and the other major banks in Southeast Province if Conrad Monty has taken any large loans that are worth millions?”

“Yes, it’s quite urgent. I wouldn’t have called you if it wasn’t.

“Alright, I’ll wait for you to get back to me.”

Within an hour of ending his call with John, Jasper received a message from him.

Conrad had requested a special financing loan of 2.9 billion dollars from Agricultural Bank.

It was a three-year loan that would be used for business development, with the collateral being the aluminum mine that had been newly discovered at Hill County.

The loan had not yet been approved because the lender had not been determined yet. Thus, it was still pending while Jasper and Conrad finalized the contract for the newly-established company and an expert from the bank did field research on the mine.

“Jasper, not only does Agricultural Bank view this loan as one of utmost importance but other banks, including mine, would like to claim it as ours too. Conrad has a lot of money under his name, and the banks are not worried that anything may happen. The amount of money he wants to loan is huge in Southeast Province. It’ll be a win for anyone who manages to secure the deal.

“Since you’re the one asking, let me add on something else. Make sure nothing happens. 2.9 billion dollars is a lot of money, and a huge fuss will be made if anything happens. No one will be able to handle it.”

John’s words swam around in Jasper’s mind as he sat in his office and thought deeply about things.

What could be confirmed now was Conrad was seemingly giving Jasper a huge opportunity to take hold of.

The minute he took it, it would clamp down on him and render him immobile. When that happened, the one gaining profits would be Conrad, while Jasper had to shoulder all the responsibility.

After a long while, Jasper called John again.

“John, help me get in touch with whoever is in charge of the Agricultural Bank’s Southeast Province branch. I want to treat them to a meal.”

After another few minutes of pondering, Jasper dialed another number.

“Old Master Hurlbutt, how has your health been lately?” Jasper asked as he smiled.

“Oh, it’s nothing. I was just wondering if you could help refer me to a few people?”

“I want to meet the head of the state mining enterprise, someone reliable.”

...

JW Company and Monty Group were about to collaborate and form a brand new company. This particular company had only one task, which was to focus on the development of the mining industry.

This piece of news was a shocker that traveled like lightning through the entire upper class of Southeast Province.

Not a single soul trying to make a living in Southeast Province did not know that Jasper and Conrad were sworn enemies. They had been in so many feuds that you could practically write a book about them. In short, the two simply hated each other.

However, they were working together now?

The industry they were collaborating in was none other than the minerals industry, which Jasper had zero experience in while it was where the Monty family thrived.

The upper class of Southeast Province was more willing to believe Jasper had killed Conrad or vice versa than they were to believe the two were working together.

It was as if a cat was working together with a mouse.

However, the news was already out now and no one had dared to spread rumors that involved both families.

It was true, then.

While the upper class society of Southeast Province was still in shock, the new company was established with fanfare.

It was located near the Southface River Project, which would be officially ready in just a few days!

The company was registered to operate on the sixth to the eighth floors of the Southface River Tower.

Both Jasper and Conrad attended the unveiling ceremony. Photos of the two of them cutting the ribbon and shaking hands as they smiled at the cameras were published by all major printing companies in Southeast Province.

It was also deemed the creepiest photo of 2001 by the upper class society of Southeast Province.

Life at the Top Chapter 847

Jasper immediately sought out John after the ribbon-cutting ceremony.

John had rushed over from work and began complaining the minute he walked into the bar where they had planned to meet. “Mr. Jasper Laine, couldn’t you have told me what you wanted to say over the phone? Must we meet here?”

“It’s not a good idea to talk about it over the phone. I’m alright, but you’re a high profile man. I don’t have the means to compensate you if anything happens to a man holding an important job like you,” Jasper said as he smiled.

As the two grew closer, John and Jasper slowly became less formal when they spoke to each other, paying no attention to titles or tone. John did not treat Jasper as a multi-billionaire, and Jasper did not treat John as the vice president of one of the largest banks in the country.

John had a startled expression on his face as he glanced suspiciously at Jasper, saying, “Just listen to what you’re saying. Why have you come looking for me? You aren’t trying to team up with me and rob the bank, right? I won’t take part in these crazy schemes, but you can go ahead.”

Jasper did not know if he should laugh or cry as he said, “Do you think I need to rob your bank? With time, I can easily earn as much money as a bank in the province has.”

John suppressed a smile as he said, “That’s the most depressing thing I’ve ever heard in my life.”

After the two sat down, Jasper beckoned for a waiter to serve them some appetizers as he said, “Frankly, this isn’t anything major. But it is quite urgent, and after a lot of thought, the only person I could think of who would execute this efficiently without compromising quality was you.”

John said boldly, “Stop beating around the bush. Tell me, what do you need me to do?”

“Help me register a shell corporation in the Cayman Islands,” Jasper replied.

Startled, John said hesitantly, “You could just pay a corrupt intermediary to take care of matters like this for a couple of million dollars.”

“That’s why I said it wasn’t a major problem, but do you think there are intermediaries who could get it done by tomorrow morning?” Jasper asked exasperatedly as he tossed John a cigarette and lit himself one.

John’s eyes widened as he asked in disbelief, “Tomorrow morning?! Do you think I’m a god?!”

Jasper laughed and said, “No one else would be able to do it, but you won’t have a problem.”

John ran his fingers through his hair, which had grown considerably thinner ever since he got to know Jasper. He said, “Give me a minute to think about it.”

“Registering a company in the Cayman Islands isn’t hard... but a shell corporation? Do you want it to have the minimum registered capital?”

“Yes, one US dollar will be enough,” Jasper said as he smiled.

Several places in the world were tax-evading heaven for multinational companies, and the Cayman Islands was one of them. In fact, even in the year 2020, after 19 years had passed, several large corporations would still register either their branch offices or mother company in the Cayman Islands.

First of all, that place was tax-free. Second of all, foreign companies entering and investing within the domestic market was beneficial to countries like Somerland, which relied on foreign funding to develop in the year 2001.

Every place was trying to attract investors now, and being able to attract a foreign investor was considered a big plus. Thus, those who could think outside the box would seek the opportunity to register their company in other countries.

Without considering anything else, just the preferential policies and lifetime exemption from taxes were enough to cause the masses to rush like ducks.

“I’m not planning on having all the companies registered overseas. The first reason being that the procedure is much too complicated and time-consuming. The second reason, which is also the main reason, is that as a person of Somer descent profiting off my countrymen’s money, I must pay taxes to my country.

“That’s why I’m getting you to do this for me. I just need a shell corporation that I can get rid of once I’m done with it.”

John nodded knowingly as he listened to Jasper speak. Then, he let Jasper watch as he took his phone and made four or five phone calls in a row.

Half an hour later, John said, “Thank the Lord I still have a couple of friends who are in this business. One of them has immigrated to the Cayman Islands and often helps others with procedures like these. At least you would be doing it in a somewhat legal manner.

“Having it done by tomorrow does prove to be a challenge, but my friend has promised he’ll make it happen. It’s almost daytime where he is thanks to the six-hour time zone difference, so we should send him the information now. He’ll go get in line first thing in the morning and get a headstart on the procedures. Everything should be done, at the very latest, in the afternoon,” John said.

“Alright, give me your friend’s contact information, then. I’ll arrange for someone to get in touch with him regarding the information and relevant payments,” Jasper said.

When he heard that, John wrote down a number for Jasper.

Jasper immediately passed the number to Malcolm after receiving it.

Perhaps it was due to cultural influences, but this American was exceptionally good at unorthodox shenanigans like these.

He was also the one who had come up with this plan that would help prevent Jasper from getting into trouble with the law.

“How did your meeting with Agricultural Bank go?” John asked curiously.

“No major problems. I didn’t ask for him to do much except to keep an eye on the loan Conrad wants to take out and ensure it’s channeled into the new company’s account in its entirety. Not a single cent can find its way into his account. Isn’t this what’s usually explicitly requested when taking out loans with a bank?”

Jasper laughed as he asked.

John nodded and said, “Then that shouldn’t be too big of a problem. However, if you hadn’t popped in beforehand regarding such matters, who knows if anything had been wired to another personal account.”

“You know what things are like. No one’s going to look into it if there isn’t anyone acting as supervisor. These are all minuscule things to the president of a district branch, and his words act as rules so long as no major incidents happen.”

After a while of eating and chatting, Jasper stood to leave.

“Well, that’s all for today. I’ve still got to rush to meet a few other people,” Jasper said as he stood.

“It’s late. You still have appointments?” John asked confusedly.

Jasper smiled mysteriously as he said, “We’re signing the contract tomorrow. Of course, I’ll have to prepare all my plans beforehand. I must ensure the people in charge of those state-owned enterprises are in place before I sleep.”

John shook his head and said, “Whoever is trying to go against you will have seven years of bad luck lined up for them!”

Life at the Top Chapter 848

After saying goodbye to John, Jasper immediately traveled to Sheraton Hotel in Nauritus City.

The supervisors of two separate state-owned enterprises had long since been waiting for him.

After a mandatory round of introductions, Jasper smiled at the two blushing and grinning supervisors as he said, "Guys, we'll be going through with the normal process of signing the contracts tomorrow, but don't forget our promise to each other.

"I'll first represent the new company in signing the contract with you tomorrow, but we'll also sign a memorandum in private. It's both to help me and prevent you guys from getting tricked, which is why we must ensure nothing happens!"

"Don't worry, Mr. Laine. We would have walked right into the trap if you hadn't reminded us. Who would have thought that Monty Group, a company that's somewhat well known in the country, would do something like this?"

"We won't let him get what he wants now that we're working together!"

One of the supervisors thumped his chest as he spoke.

They would not be idiots seeing as they were able to climb up to their current positions. They were actually much smarter than they seemed.

The first time Jasper met with them, he had skipped all niceties and told them straight to their faces that Conrad's mine was a fraud. Except for the surface layer, the ground underneath was completely devoid of any minerals.

The two men immediately believed what Jasper said when he procured the relevant customs declaration forms from Harbor City.

While in shock, the two were also gritting their teeth with hatred for Conrad.

They would have been held responsible if they fell for his tricks and caused their enterprises to suffer major losses. If that were the case, they would have reached the end of their careers.

To senior executives at state-owned enterprises like them, ending their careers was basically ending their lives.

Jasper did not even need to say much about a grudge like this before they immediately agreed to assist him.

Thus, Jasper's plans were born.

He would agree to Conrad's request to collaborate and would use the shell corporation he had registered to join shares with Conrad and act as the legal representative for the new company.

Then, he would secure the money Conrad got from the loan using the company's bank account and forbid Conrad from taking a single cent of it.

This time, he had formed a deal with the two supervisors from the state-owned enterprises. On the surface, they were signing an acquisition agreement, but they would also secretly sign a memorandum that denied the fact that the three of them had any responsibility to withhold in this situation. When things finally went wrong, Conrad would be the one to shoulder all the responsibility.

Jasper had managed to poke holes in Conrad's elaborate scheme using these three steps, and he was confident he could let Conrad have a taste of his own medicine.

It was already past midnight when Jasper was done doing a second run-through of what would happen tomorrow with the supervisors. He then returned home.

The night passed in the blink of an eye.

The next morning, Jasper and Wendy set out to the venue where the contract would be signed.

Jasper had just gotten into the car when he received a call from Malcolm.

The procedures to set up the shell corporation had been completed.

Upon receiving that piece of news, Jasper heaved a sigh of relief and finally relaxed.

“Has it been done?” Wendy asked when she saw Jasper hang up the phone with a relaxed expression on his face.

Smiling, Jasper nodded and said, “Now all we have to do is head over there and sign the contract.”

The multipurpose hall in Sheraton Hotel had been furnished to function as a small-scale launch event today.

[Cloud Rider Mining Company has been officially established!]

[Conrad Monty has made a private investment of 3 billion dollars, while Jasper Laine has invested 2.3 billion dollars under his newly registered foreign company, Tenra Corporations!]

[The company boasts a joint registered capital of 5.3 billion Somer Dollars and will operate mainly in the mining industry.]

[Cloud Rider Mining Company has already signed a sales contract with two of the five largest mining companies in the country on the day it was established. They have promised to provide no less than 700,000 tonnes of quality raw aluminum ore every year to both companies!]

[The Monty family has discovered a brand new mine, but instead of excavating it themselves, they have chosen to collaborate with their biggest enemy, Jasper Laine!]

[Could it be that, as Monty Group had put it, they lack the necessary funds to excavate the mine or because the Monty family is also attempting to extend an olive branch to the newly emerging power in Southeast Province, Jasper Laine?]

[No matter what, this company has been destined to shine since the day it was established. It's full of secrets and seems to be determining the fate of Southeast Province.]

Piece after piece of news was spread out from the venue of the launch event, and they quickly became the topic of discussion for every single family in Southeast Province.

After Jasper stamped his seals as the legal representative of the new company, he stood and exchanged the contracts with the two supervisors from the state-owned enterprises. Lights flashed as the contract officially took on legal validity.

“Mr. Laine, we hope this will be a good collaboration.”

The two supervisors of the state-owned enterprises roared with laughter as they spoke meaningfully to Jasper.

Jasper laughed lightly and said, “That’s a must. We’ll definitely enjoy working together.”

The three exchanged looks and smiled. Then, they went along with the reporters' wishes and turned to look at the cameras, giving them more time to take pictures.

Life at the Top Chapter 849

Conrad, who was sitting on the other end of the podium, had a slight smile on his face. No one could tell what was running through his mind now.

“Be happy now, Jasper Laine. Be as happy as you want to be now. The happier you are now, the more miserable you’ll be when you realize you’re trapped!”

After taking a deep breath, Conrad was just about to walk toward Jasper and the two supervisors so that they could exchange pleasantries and answer any questions the reporters might have when Valentine hurried over.

“Mr. Monty, the money for the loan has been approved,” Valentine said solemnly to Conrad.

When Conrad heard a reporter calling out to him, he immediately turned and smiled as he waved. His great mood made him exceptionally cooperative, and the reporter was delighted as they pressed wildly on the shutter.

Conrad, who was heir to one of the richest families in Southeast Province, would rarely treat such insignificant reporters so well.

“That’s a good thing. Why do you seem so panicked?” Conrad’s smile widened as he parted his lips to whisper to Valentine.

It was only then Valentine said, “But the bank didn’t do what we previously agreed on. They transferred it right into Cloud Rider’s account.”

Conrad frowned slightly as he said, “Didn’t we agree to have the money transferred into the personal account I provided? How could they have made such a mistake? Have you clarified things with them?”

“Yes, I have.”

Valentine lowered his voice and said, “The bank explained that headquarters has been tightening security measures lately, so it’s difficult for them to go around the rules.

“Moreover, they needed to report back to the headquarters because of how large the loan is, which means the higher-ups were paying even more attention to where the money was going. Thus, the only thing they could do was transfer the money into the company’s account. After all, we applied for the loan using the company’s name.”

Conrad narrowed his eyes. With his keen senses, he had managed to detect something deeper going on through this seemingly insignificant detail.

His gaze turned instinctively to Jasper who was being surrounded by a crowd.

He watched Jasper, who was surrounded by a crowd of clamoring people and flashing lights, who had a familiar smile on his face as he calmly spoke to everyone who came forth to speak to him.

He was not overly humble, nor was he domineering. The adjectives ‘gentle’ and ‘elegant’ could be used to best describe Jasper Laine.

However, Conrad only thought that Jasper was most dangerous and horrifying when he seemed unable to harm anybody.

It was as though there was a bloody gaping mouth behind his smiling face that was ready to pounce and swallow Conrad whole.

“Find a way to have the money transferred out immediately,” Conrad said determinedly.

“That money must not be left in the company’s account. It doesn’t matter if it’s a scheme to do with Jasper or not. The minute he knows we’ve transferred the money into the company’s account, he won’t let us have it transferred out easily.”

Conrad had fast reflexes and came to a decision within a minute of receiving the news.

However, no matter how fast he was, he would never be faster than Jasper who had begun making plans and arrangements a few days ago.

“I’m worried we won’t make it.”

Valentine smiled bitterly and said, “The people from Agricultural Bank just told me that when Cloud Rider was established half a minute ago, someone had already made a copy of the account’s documentation in the bank’s system.

“The company’s legal representative must sign off any transactions above one million dollars!”

Crash!

The sound of a chair being flipped caused many people who were present to look toward where the sound had come from. They were surprised to see that it was Conrad who caused that loud crash.

At that very moment, Conrad had an ugly expression on his face!

Conrad, who had caused the chair to flip over when he abruptly stood in shock and anger, did not seem to notice that people were staring at him. He glared intently at Jasper.

Jasper just happened to turn around.

Their gazes met and collided in mid-air.

Taking a deep breath, Conrad forced himself to suppress the chaotic and complicated emotions rushing through him. He knew that both the timing and venue did not allow him to lose control of himself no matter the situation.

“Let’s go!” Conrad said before he turned and walked off.

“Hey... Mr. Monty? We haven’t finished taking pictures!” the reporter yelled in panic at Conrad’s retreating figure.

However, Conrad had no time or patience for them. He did not even bother turning around as he walked off.

The reporter sighed, mumbling to themselves about how temperamental and hard to please these public figures were.

As he mumbled and lowered his head to look at the photos he took, he realized he had managed to take clear shots of how Conrad’s expression changed from one of happiness to confusion, and finally, to suppressed rage.

“Hello. Do you mind selling those photos to me?” A voice rang out by the reporter’s ears.

Startled, the reporter jumped and whirled around to find Jasper standing beside him.

“Mister... Mr. Laine!” The reporter’s voice trembled with excitement. He never dreamed that Jasper Laine would talk to him one day!

“Can you?” Jasper asked with a smile. “Those photos are very meaningful and will become sentimental items to me, which is why I’m interested in buying them. Name any price you want.”

“Of... Of course! I can give them to you right now if you need them, Mr. Laine. I don’t need money, but will you agree to do an interview with me?”

The young reporter had graduated barely two years ago and knew to hold on to opportunities that came his way.

Jasper chuckled and said, “No problem, but I might be busy lately. Why don’t you give me your card and I’ll have someone get in touch with you in a bit?”

“Thank you so much, Mr. Laine!”

The reporter did not seem to worry that a public figure like Jasper would lie to him as he excitedly took his name card and passed it to Jasper with both hands.

Jasper took the card and glanced at it. His name was Kennard Fraley and he was a reporter for the Southern Financial Times.

Jasper put the card in his pocket after reading it.

It was a seemingly insignificant gesture, but Kennard felt as if he was being respected by the other party. His heart bloomed with gratitude as he hurriedly fiddled with his camera and gave the roll of film to Jasper.

He swore that Jasper Laine was the only tycoon who could make others feel this charmed throughout his career as a journalist.

Kennard was feeling charmed, but Conrad felt as if he had fallen into an ice cave!

Life at the Top Chapter 850

“No can do, Mr. Monty. I’ve already spoken to the finance team over at the company and they’ve all given me the same answers. After reporting to the bank, no outsider is allowed to withdraw a single cent without the legal representative’s signature.”

Valentine had a vexed expression on his face as he hung up the phone and spoke to Conrad who was pacing around the room.

Conrad took a sharp breath and said, “Which means the 2.5 billion dollars we went to such great lengths to obtain has now genuinely become equity capital in Jasper’s hands.”

Valentine hurriedly said comfortingly, “Don’t be so pessimistic. At least the money is in the company’s account and not Jasper’s bank account.”

Ignoring Valentine’s comforting words, Conrad muttered to himself, “Now the most troublesome part is that we don’t know if Jasper did it on purpose or if it was a coincidence... What did our people in the bank say?”

“I’ve checked with them. It’s not just Agricultural Bank, but the remaining four major banks have also been doubling down on security lately.

“This is related to the recent spike in non-performing loans due to banks’ reckless lending to companies. The notice to enhance overall risk control was distributed by Central Bank to the headquarters of the four major banks at the end of last month.”

When Conrad heard that, he sat on the couch and closed his eyes without speaking.

After a moment's thought, Valentine said softly to Conrad, "Mr. Monty, if that's the case, this might have perhaps been a coincidence."

"Coincidence?"

Conrad opened his eyes and said quietly, "I've never believed in coincidences, nor am I willing to attribute everything to mere coincidences. I would rather believe this was one of Jasper's schemes."

Valentine said awkwardly, "So what should we do next?"

"We can't do anything..."

"It'll be a mistake to do or even say anything more since we'll be at risk of exposing ourselves completely. Let's see what Jasper does first."

Conrad's eyes glinted as he spoke.

"After all, this money was obtained through a loan using Cloud Rider. I didn't fund the money myself.

"At the very most, we'll have it remain in the company's account and have it go to whoever it belongs to when the scheme is exposed in the future. The bank can file a lawsuit against the two state-owned enterprises for that. My ultimate goal is still to trap Jasper's funds..."

...

The ICBS branch in Nauritus City.

In the president's office.

Raymond Lovell knew he had only become president of the best-performing branch in the province, the city center branch, because of John, who was one of the most influential people in the Southeast Province branch. He had always been looking for a way to repay John and the chance finally arrived for him to do so.

Raymond had just hung up the phone when someone knocked on his door.

“Come in.”

Raymond spoke calmly. Ever since becoming president of the city center branch, he felt as though he could finally become the dignified man he had been waiting a long time to become.

The person who entered was the manager of the bank’s Risk Management Department.

“President Lovell, we’ve discovered a major problem in the account that Cloud Rider Mining Company opened at our bank during our inspections today,” the manager said in a panic.

Raymond calmly took a sip of his coffee and smiled as he said, “Don’t panic, Wesley. Tell me calmly what’s going on. The sky isn’t falling on us is it?”

Mr. Wesley smiled bitterly as he said, “It’s a major problem, and the sky might as well fall on us if this is made public!”

“The company registered its equity at 5.3 billion dollars, but when we checked the account today, we saw that the account has only transferred the 2.5 billion dollars it obtained from a loan with the Agricultural Bank’s branch in Southeast Province. Not another cent has been transferred into the account. How can I be calm when 2.8 billion dollars is missing?”

Life at the Top Chapter 851

“So what you’re saying is, the company’s actual finances differ from its funds in the books by 2.8 billion dollars, is that right?” Raymond asked calmly.

Mr. Wesley hurriedly answered, “Yes, that’s it.”

“That has to do with the company itself. Why should we work ourselves up into a frenzy when the company hasn’t even said anything?” Raymond replied as he smiled.

Mr. Wesley looked stunned for a moment before he hurriedly said, “But we should request Cloud Rider to submit a report and file a registration with the Bureau of Industry and Commerce regarding their financial shortage.”

“Wesley,” Raymond said as he smiled, “The higher-ups ordered this to happen.”

Raymond pointed upward as he spoke.

“So you don’t need to think about this so much. Don’t worry, nothing’s going to happen.”

Still not convinced, Wesley said, “President Lovell, this is going directly against the rules. Are we really not going to do anything?”

“Wesley, this is why you’re still a manager after so many years. I heard that you went to argue with the province branch after you failed to get the position of vice president at one of the branches last year?”

Raymond patted Wesley meaningfully on the shoulder. “That’s why we say the higher-ups can see through every person. As a manager, you should know better.”

...

“Alright, everything has been signed now.”

Jasper passed the supervisors of the state-owned enterprises a copy of the signed memorandum each as he said, “It’s finally over.”

The two supervisors gripped the memorandum in their hands and exchanged a look with each other before saying.

“Mr. Laine, we’re going to head back soon. After all, this matter is too big for us and we’ll have to report it to the higher-ups. However, we won’t be able to hide anything the minute we file a report. Will you be able to deal with things here?”

“Deal with what?”

Jasper spread out his hands and laughed as he said, “The 2.5 billion dollars lying in the company’s account came directly from Conrad’s bank loan.

“The minute he’s exposed, you can file a lawsuit against Conrad and hold him responsible for contractual fraud.

“But it’s alright if you don’t have any concrete plans to calculate your losses, I don’t really mind. After all, I haven’t transferred a single cent of mine into Cloud Rider Mining Company.”

The two supervisors said in surprise, “You’re so good at this, Mr. Laine. I was already shaken to my core as I watched and I’m only someone who’s partially involved in this. You could have lost everything if you made one wrong move!”

“It’s fun to fight with people,” Jasper said as he smiled slightly.

Then, Jasper stood and shook their hands. “I won’t be sending the two of you off.”

The two supervisors nodded and said sincerely, "Our flight is this evening, and we'll probably arrive late at night. We'll immediately report to our superiors the minute we arrive."

"We'll probably be in emergency meetings all night long trying to come up with strategies. At the very latest, the news will be made public tomorrow afternoon."

Jasper nodded when he heard that and said, "Alright, thank you for that clear explanation. I have an idea of what's going to happen now."

The two of them were doing him a favor by giving him a deadline so he could finish everything he needed to do before then. Naturally, Jasper understood what they meant by that.

Laughing, the two supervisors said to Jasper in unison, "Mr. Laine, we hope we'll get the chance to work with you in the future. We think that it'll be a great experience for us all."

As Jasper thought of the huge mines located overseas, he said meaningfully, "That day will definitely arrive!"

Life at the Top Chapter 852

It was late at night when Jasper returned home. Wendy was sitting on the couch and watching television as she waited for him.

"Didn't I ask you to head to bed first? You didn't need to wait for me."

Jasper bent down and spoke gently to Wendy who had a bleary expression on her face as she curled up on the couch.

A smile appeared on Wendy's face when she saw Jasper's face in front of her. Taking her hands out from under the blanket, she encircled Jasper's neck as she said, "I can't fall asleep if you're not home. Are you hungry? Do you want supper?"

"It's okay, I'll just make myself some instant ramen," Jasper said.

"That stuff is so unhealthy," Wendy said as she glared at him. She got up and walked to the kitchen as she said, "Wait for me. I'll make you some pasta."

Jasper smiled as he watched Wendy's retreating figure and inhaled her pleasant scent before turning to walk into his study.

A sheet of paper was lying on his fax machine.

John had sent over Cloud Rider Mining Company's assets list.

Question marks were listed in every column, indicating that the amount was unknown, except the column for cash assets. That one was stated with a hefty 2,500,000,000—a string of numbers that would cause one's heart rate to increase.

However, such numbers had long since lost their appeal to Jasper.

Jasper was still staring at the sheet of paper when Wendy entered with a steaming plate of pasta.

"What are you thinking about?"

Wendy placed the plate in front of Jasper and leaned forward to take a look before she said jokingly, "Why, are you thinking of taking this money away?"

Jasper shook his head and said, "I wouldn't have left it in the company's account if I wanted it for myself. 2.5 billion is not a small amount, and it's also the country's money. No matter who you are, you'll find yourself in hot water if you touch it. I'm not that irrational. If not, wouldn't I have walked right into Conrad's trap?

"So this money must not be touched and should remain in here. When the scheme is exposed, it'll return to where it came from."

"So what are you thinking about?" Wendy asked curiously.

"I'm thinking about what Conrad is planning." Jasper frowned slightly as he picked up his fork and began eating his pasta distractedly.

"Based on my estimations, he must have learned that the money is in the company's account and can't be transferred out without my signature.

"I initially thought he would try and swindle the money away from me by saying he wanted to invest it into the mine site, pay salaries, purchase equipment, or anything of the sort. There were so many excuses he could use, and I had even prepared for the scenario in which he would confront me.

"The only thing I did not imagine was for him to let the day pass as if nothing had happened."

Jasper's eyebrows knitted themselves tightly as his voice turned even more serious.

"This makes me think that Conrad still has other people working for him, and they might be experienced people who we've never heard or thought about."

Wendy followed Jasper's train of thought and realized that it was indeed creepy Conrad had stayed put. However, no matter how much she thought about it, she could not come up with a logical explanation.

It seemed as if the whole plan had been laid out fully, and all the connections could be seen clearly.

The only abnormality was the way Conrad reacted.

However, none of the clues could support the reasons for Conrad's actions.

"Alright, stop thinking about it," Wendy said gently.

"The more you think about something, the less likely you'll be to make a conclusion. It's already happened, and you've done what you were supposed to do. At this rate, neither you nor Conrad can stop things from progressing.

"Maybe we should wait for a while longer. Perhaps Conrad will reveal something himself?"

When he heard what Wendy said, Jasper gave a wide smile and said, "Not bad. What you said makes sense. I'm overthinking things.

"I'm not a god, how could I predict Conrad's every thought?"

"It's good that you know that. You've always demanded so much from yourself," Wendy said.

...

Jasper had Wendy to prepare pasta for him, but Conrad did not receive such great treatment.

His eyes were bloodshot, but he was oddly energetic.

There was no way he would be falling asleep tonight because he had decided to start his plan ahead of time.

"I can't wait any longer. The more we wait, the more passive we'll become. We can't let Jasper have any time to catch his breath if we want to attack him!" Conrad said determinedly.

Valentine had a solemn expression on his face. Naturally, he had to accompany Conrad as well if the man was not going to sleep.

“What time is it in the United States now?” Conrad asked.

“It should be one in the afternoon now,” Valentine answered.

“Alright, it’s almost time. Tell our traders to come online now,” Conrad said.

Valentine immediately set off to make preparations when he heard that. In about ten minutes, which was the time Conrad took to smoke two cigarettes, everything had already been set in place.

As he sat in front of his computer and watched the lead trader through the video call, Conrad said in a low voice, “I’ve put my life savings of ten billion US dollars into this battle!

“At the same time, this battle will be the one that leads you into fame. If you succeed, you’ll become one of the best trading teams in the country. If you lose, well, we don’t need to say anything more. We’ll just have to jump off the nearest tall building.”

The plain-looking middle-aged man on the other end of the line said in a low voice, “Don’t worry, Mr. Monty. We’ve been preparing for this day for a long time.”

“We found out that although Sena has a solid share price with no premiums and wonderful company performance, it also possesses two critical drawbacks.

“Firstly is how there’s a majority shareholder. Jasper’s grip on power is too tight, and he’s the only major shareholder in the group, holding direct control over more than 67% of the shares.”

“Secondly, and most importantly, at the end of the day, Sena is still a Somerland company. Americans don’t trust companies from Somerland at all, which is why Sena’s shares are priced at this range instead of higher.

“You could say we wouldn’t have stood a chance at all if Sena were listed in the country. But things are different now. Sena can’t change these drawbacks of theirs, and we can use this opportunity to make our killing strike.”

Conrad nodded continuously as he listened to the man speak.

“Very well.”

Conrad sighed softly and said, “So we’ll begin moving according to the pace you’ve set. I won’t interfere too much with what you’re doing, but I do have one request. Be quick.

“We don’t have much time left.”

The man said solemnly, “Mr. Monty, we already have quite a lot of shares with us after several days of purchasing, but we still need time if we want to secure a win.”

“So start now!”

Life at the Top Chapter 853

The next day, many people were still discussing the news about the establishment of Cloud Rider Mining Company when they received a fresh new piece of gossip.

The two state-owned enterprises that had just signed contracts with Cloud Rider Mining Company found out that the so-called aluminum mine at Hill County had all been a set-up!

The sales contract they had signed was also fraudulent!

Once the two state-owned enterprises found out, they immediately halted the upfront payments they were supposed to make to Cloud Rider Mining Company. That helped prevent any major losses for the two enterprises.

However, the two state-owned enterprises would take legal action against Cloud Rider Mining Company for the fraudulent contract.

Everyone's initial reaction was to laugh when they first heard the news.

They had just signed the contract yesterday, but they were claiming it was all a hoax today? Everything sounded ridiculous. It must have been some guy with a death wish who was spreading the rumors about.

However, as more and more detailed news was released, everyone achieved an understanding.

Some even claimed to have seen with their own eyes the huge aluminum mine at Hill County. Except for that one layer on the surface, it was just soil and rocks all around without even a trace of aluminum ore.

In an instant, everyone felt a wave of shock ripple through them.

Jasper and Conrad's collaboration had always smelled fishy. Now, the basis of the whole collaboration, the mine, was said to be fake.

Who was the one who had been tricked?

What would Jasper and Conrad do after this?

Everyone stared intently at Cloud Rider Mining Company, which had only been established for a day, as they waited for the company to issue a statement.

However, creepily enough, there were no reactions at all.

Both Jasper and Conrad seemed to not care one bit about the rumors flying around. The two seemed to have gone mute as they did not provide any updates.

While the rest of the world was flying into a frenzy over the reveal of the set-up, Jasper was having coffee with John.

“I had an old friend of mine harvest these black tea leaves from their hometown, a tiny village in Empress Wood Village. There’s only this tiny bit available for harvest, and you can’t buy it no matter how much money you have. Tastes good, doesn’t it?” John said to Jasper.

Jasper picked his cup up and took a sip. It tasted sweet, refreshing, and much better than your average tea.

“Not bad. This is good tea,” Jasper said.

In his past life, he had never understood why the rich enjoyed drinking tea. However, now that he had achieved a certain level of status himself, his stance on this topic had changed.

When you were nearer to the bottom of the social ladder, the tables would be filled with bottles of beer that were drunk in exchange for a business deal. However, when one was not required to drink as a means of earning money, they would realize that tea was a great beverage.

It did not have much to do with wellness or showing off, but merely a simple understanding that tea was superior to beer.

“What do you think about the thing I mentioned to you just now?” John asked as he put his cup down, a concerned expression on his face.

“The set-up has been exposed, but Agricultural Bank has not lost a single cent from the loan they issued. They’re in awe of your abilities and are trying to get you to join them from Commercial Bank?” Jasper asked.

John nodded as he smiled bitterly, saying, “I’ve been working in Commercial Bank ever since the start and have never thought about job-hopping. They might both be in the banking industry, but you begin forming attachments as time passes...

“But Agricultural Bank was super sincere and promised me that I’ll hold the position of vice-president at the province branch. I’ll be in charge of the province’s corporate banking department. Who knows how long it’d take me to get to that position if I stay in Commercial Bank?”

Jasper smiled and said, “Vice-president of the province branch and in charge of corporate banking. Seems like whoever in Agricultural Bank who made this decision is a ruthless person.”

“They have their eye on our relationship. Agricultural Bank has always been the weakest among the four major banks in terms of corporate banking while Commercial Bank is the most powerful. And we have such a close relationship...”

“They’re hoping to attract all the companies under my name to Agricultural Bank through you.”

John smiled and said, “That’s precisely it, which is why I’ve purposely come to seek your opinion.”

Jasper hummed to himself. He could tell that the more his abilities improved, the larger the butterfly effect he brought about would be.

Take John as an example. He did not have anything like this happen to him in his past life and had always worked in Commercial Bank. He had pretty good luck too and retired as the vice-president of the province branch.

Although both spots were vice-presidents of the province branch, the responsibilities that came with the position were different, which led to the amount of power held being vastly different.

For example, Agricultural Bank was letting him be in charge of corporate banking. Besides bank savings and loan issuance, corporate banking was the third pillar holding it up. As the country's economy developed and socialism became ever more prevalent, new companies were emerging rapidly and corporate banking was becoming essential.

Corporate banking was definitely high in demand.

It would be beneficial to both Jasper and John.

"I think you can accept it," Jasper said.

When John heard what Jasper said, he heaved a huge sigh of relief.

To put it frankly, is there anyone who would refuse the opportunity to climb up the corporate ladder?

Agricultural Bank was providing John with so many benefits that he was finding it hard to refuse.

However, John understood at the same time what Jasper was referring to. Agricultural Bank might as well admit they were extending an olive branch to Jasper in hopes of working with him by offering John such an illustrious position in the company...

Life at the Top Chapter 854

There was not a single soul in Southeast Province's banking industry who did not know about his close relationship with Jasper. They would gain Jasper's support if they managed to get ahold of him.

However, John knew he could not get too big for his britches no matter what other people thought.

Which was why today's meeting was taking place. He wanted to know what Jasper's thoughts were.

He would have to give up the idea if Jasper did not agree. After all, Agricultural Bank could easily go back on their promise to give him the position if they did not receive Jasper's support. John was not a foolish person and knew he did not yet have the experience nor ability to fight against the superiors in Agricultural Bank.

Things would be totally different if he had Jasper's support, however. No matter how many cronies were in Agricultural Bank, Jasper would be able to defeat them all with just one of the many companies he owned. No one could hold it against him.

"Alright then. I'll get back to them tomorrow," John said happily.

Jasper picked up his cup of coffee and gently clinked it against John's as he smiled, saying, "I'll congratulate you in advance on your promotion."

John suppressed his excitement and happiness as he waved his hands, saying, "No, I still have to hand in my resignation letter and hand over my work before I familiarize myself with Agricultural Bank. It'll take at least a month or two before everything is finalized."

Jasper was just about to speak when his phone suddenly rang.

It was from an unfamiliar number he had never seen before.

When Jasper answered the call, a familiar sensual voice rang out.

"Mr. Jasper Laine, you returned to Somerland without so much as a goodbye after you used me. You just wanted to have a good time without taking any responsibility, right?"

Jasper nearly spat his coffee onto John's face when he heard what Celine said.

"Watch your words. What you said can easily cause misunderstandings."

Jasper had a befuddled expression on his face when he spoke, but there was a barely detectable trace of happiness in his voice.

John, who was sitting opposite him, raised his eyebrows slightly before his lips curled upward into a meaningful grin.

What sort of women could make men indescribably happy when they received a call from them?

It might be a girlfriend they were in an intimate relationship with.

It might be a mistress of theirs they had gotten together with after getting married.

It might be their daughter.

There was no fourth option.

"Misunderstandings? Who would misunderstand? Do you care what other people think of you, Mr. Jasper Laine?" Celine asked in a light-hearted tone.

"Here's a chance for you to repent. Come over to the airport now.

"A traffic accident happened in front of Nauritus City International Airport, causing a huge traffic jam to occur."

Celine was sitting in a brand new Audi TT as she spoke on the phone without a care in the world. Parked in front of her was a BMW 7 Series that had been rear-ended and badly scratched. The owner of the car was a young man who was currently screaming at Celine through the glass window of the Audi TT.

Finally losing her patience, Celine rolled down her car window and bellowed to the young man, “What are you screaming about? So what if I rear-ended you? Would I have hit you if you hadn’t been so aggressive and did an emergency brake when you were in front of my car? I’ll hit both you and your car if you don’t shut up.”

When Celine finished speaking, she did not spare the furious man another glance as she rolled the window back up.

“Are you in trouble?” Jasper asked as he frowned.

“I’ve met an idiot. I don’t have many connections in Southeast Province, and I might be kidnapped if you don’t hurry over.”

When Celine spoke to Jasper, she immediately switched from the shrewish woman she had been just seconds before to a damsel in distress who required his saving.

“Don’t get out of the car or open the door before I arrive. I’ll be right there.”

Then, Jasper immediately hung up the phone and stood to walk toward the door.

“I have something to attend to. We’ll meet next time,” Jasper said to John.

John stood and said, “Feel free to give me a call if you need my help with anything.”

“Sure,” Jasper said as he waved and walked out the door.

Jasper got Julian to drive to the coffee shop to fetch him and they rushed to the airport once he got in.

...

“Stupid b*tch, get the f*ck out the car! My name won't be Leonard Wagner if I don't kill you today!”

Leonard screamed crazedly at Celine who was sitting in her Audi TT.

However, Celine did not seem to hear him as she remained seated in the car. She even retrieved a mirror and began touching up her makeup with languid movements.

When Leonard saw that, he became even more angered. His features became contorted as he hit the car and growled. “Stop acting all high and mighty. I've seen enough b*tches like you. Some man lent you this car, didn't he?”

After he finished speaking, Leonard did not even have the time to look at the expression on Celine's face before he felt someone clap a hand on his shoulder. When he turned around, he saw a young man staring at him.

Behind the young man was another person with a cigarette hanging from their mouth. They narrowed their eyes to stare at him.

“Julian, teach this foul-mouthed man a lesson,” Jasper said calmly.

Upon receiving Jasper's orders, Julian's eyes glinted dangerously as he raised his hand and squeezed Leonard's mouth. A terrified expression appeared on the latter's face, and he did not have time to speak before Julian brought his fist down.

Crack!

The crisp sound of teeth being broken rang out.

Leonard covered his face with his hands as he howled in pain. The immense pain caused him to jump around in circles. When he felt the lower half of his face going numb and the warmth in his mouth, he spat out a pool of blood and two teeth.

“Teeth! My teeth!”

Leonard’s voice trembled.

Life at the Top Chapter 855

As he pointed at Jasper, Leonard bellowed, “You f*cker, you absolute piece of dog sh*t! You’re done for! You’re done for, you hear me?!”

Leonard did not seem to have vented out enough and was dissatisfied. He turned back to Celine who was still in the car and bellowed, “As for you, you stupid b*tch, just wait! I’ll take your last name if I don’t f*ck you so hard till you can’t get out of bed.”

Leonard had just finished speaking when Jasper slapped him across the face.

His mouth was already filled with blood after losing two of his teeth. Leonard howled even louder in pain after getting slapped.

His cheek became swollen and turned bright red as the blood in his mouth mixed with saliva. It dribbled from the corner of his mouth, which he could not shut. His upper torso was stained with blood and saliva, making him seem even more horrifying.

“It seems like your parents never taught you any manners. I guess I’ll teach you some instead. The first thing to know is you should always watch your words when you’re not at home,” Jasper said calmly.

“F*ck you!” Leonard was enraged now, and his eyes were bloodshot. With a roar, he pounced toward Jasper.

However, Julian had long since had his eyes on Leonard. When he saw Leonard pouncing toward Jasper, he raised a leg and kicked Leonard onto the ground where he lay panting.

Leonard trembled as he took his phone out and made a call...

“That slap was so cool!”

Celine smiled as she walked up to Jasper and spoke to him.

Jasper said exasperatedly, “How did you get yourself involved with someone like this?”

Celine replied lazily, “I didn’t do anything to him. Flies like him are always buzzing around me, and I can’t be bothered to give him another look. He was causing trouble because he failed to chat me up.

“He even said he would give me a ride from the airport in his BMW 7 Series.”

Celine chuckled, her eyes showing a multitude of emotions.

“Look at how generous he is. When are you going to let me ride in your Bentley?”

Jasper turned to look at his Bentley, which was parked by the road, and said, “I can give it to you if you want it.”

“I wouldn’t dare accept it.”

Celine was still speaking when the low roar of an engine sounded from a distance. In the blink of an eye, a Ferrari that would seem flashy even in 2020 drove up to them.

A young man jumped out of the car after it screeched to a stop. He had a dark expression on his face.

Leonard, who was sprawled on the ground, looked as though his savior had arrived when he saw the man. Gaining a sudden burst of energy, he hurriedly crawled over to the man.

“Brother, what took you so long? These two were about to kill me!”

Joshua gazed solemnly at the scene. He had been on his way to discuss an important matter with the head of the Monty family, Conrad Monty, but rushed over after receiving his brother’s call.

Joshua first opened the car door and said to Conrad, “I’m so sorry, Mr. Monty, I have some personal matters to take care of. It’ll just take a few minutes!”

Due to the angle the car was parked at, Jasper did not see Conrad.

Then, Joshua frowned as he walked up to Jasper and Celine before asking, “What’s going on?”

Leonard sobbed, saying, “I was driving on the road when this b*tch rear-ended me for no reason. As if that wasn’t enough, she also got one of her boy toys to beat me up. Look how bad these two men hurt me. I’ve lost two teeth!”

He clearly pronounced each word, and Celine managed to hear everything. She laughed but was too lazy to retaliate.

After all, the complete truth could not be known by just listening to what Leonard had to say.

Most importantly, Celine was too lazy to explain herself to Leonard’s brother. Who did he think he was?

Jasper shared the same sentiments. At this point, he had such a high status and standing in society that he no longer needed to explain himself to anyone else. It was usually the other party who had to guess what he was thinking.

If this person was willing to listen to reason, they would be able to solve this matter peacefully.

If they were not willing to listen to reason, then Jasper would not care either. This was not the first time he had met people like that.

In most cases, it was even easier to deal with someone who refused to listen to reason than someone who did.

Joseph huffed and walked up to Jasper, saying, "I know my brother's personality. Things are never as simple as he makes them out to be."

When Leonard heard that, the expression on his face changed as he said, "Brother, what I said—"

"Shut up!" Joseph roared, effectively shutting Leonard up.

It seemed that Leonard was extremely afraid of his older brother. After Joseph yelled at him, he shut up although he was extremely indignant about it.

Then, Joseph turned and continued saying to Jasper, "But no matter what caused this to happen, what I can see is that you've beaten my brother up. We can't let this just slide past. My brother's wounds might heal, but the reputation that I, Joseph Wagner, have lost from this will never be recovered.

"So, you must pay!

"That man can first kneel so my brother can beat you up. Then, we'll put a temporary stop to things while my brother takes the woman away for three months. Things will be settled once we return her in three months. I won't hold anything against you after that."

Joseph spoke rapidly and did not so much as glance at Jasper or Celine when he spoke.

The way he spoke and acted made it seem as if he was doing them a great kindness through the decisions he had made.

“Pfft.” Celine was the first to lose her composure as she leaned against Jasper and laughed hysterically.

“I was wondering what sort of backup he had called, and it turns out it’s a maniac who has escaped from the asylum!

“Hey, idiot, are you really crazy, or have you been playing the role of a king for so long you can’t tell reality apart from the story anymore?”

Life at the Top Chapter 856

“What did you say!?”

Joshua glared at Celine angrily, his eyes eerily cold.

“Do you know that no one in Southeast Province dares speak to me like that?”

Leonard also said angrily, “You’re done for. How dare you speak to my brother this way?!”

“Hmm,” Celine said as she poked Jasper with her finger, “This person seems pretty powerful. Have you ever heard of him?”

“No,” Jasper said as he shook his head.

He had never heard of a Wagner family that was powerful in Southeast Province. Right now, there was only the Monty family left who was slightly more powerful. The rest of the families did not even dare to breathe loudly in front of him.

“How ignorant,” Joseph said in disdain as he laughed coldly. “That makes sense. How could lowly people like you have heard of us?”

“Alright, stop with the bullsh*t. I’m giving you a chance to call your parents.”

Joseph seemed to have lost all his patience as he stared at Jasper and said, “It’s okay if you don’t know what to do, your parents should know. When faced with me, your parents won’t just make you kneel in front of me. They would push your head down and force you to eat sh*t if I wanted you to do that!”

“Haha, Brother, that’s a good idea. Let him be sprawled on the floor and eat sh*t later,” Leonard said as he laughed.

“I do have parents, but I’ve been on my own ever since I entered society. So there’s no need to call my parents over,” Jasper said calmly, “I’m in a rush too. We’ll be leaving now if there’s nothing else you want to talk about.”

“Thinking of leaving?”

Joseph laughed coldly as he said, “I think you’re crazy. Trying to run away now that you’re scared? Dream on!”

“So what do you plan to do?” Jasper had a curious expression on his face as he gazed at Joseph.

Joseph huffed coldly as he stared at Jasper and said, “You’ve made me very angry, and nothing good ever happens to people who’ve done that.

“Do you dare tell me what your job is? Or perhaps you own a company? Do you dare tell me the name of your company?” Joseph said haughtily as he stared at Jasper.

He laughed lightly as he said slowly, “It’s okay if you don’t dare to tell me. I have my own ways to find out about your details. Believe me, when that happens, I’ll have you become so poor that you can’t even afford a pair of underwear!”

“Oh, are you that powerful? No wonder you’re so arrogant.”

Jasper spoke calmly. He did not seem to notice the odd expressions on Julian’s and Celine’s faces as he sighed, saying, “I feel quite worried upon hearing you say that, but since I’ve already offended you, I’m sure you’ll be able to find my office anyway. I might as well tell you the name of my company.”

Then, Jasper retrieved his business card and passed it to Joseph.

Joseph's gaze fell on the card.

President of JW Investment Company, Jasper Laine.

It was a very simple-looking name card, unlike those who wanted to slap every title they had on the card when they only had just the slightest bit of credibility.

Jasper's name card only carried that one title. Underneath it was his name, phone number, and office landline.

Joseph sank into deep thought as he stared at the name card in his hands.

The names JW and Jasper Laine seemed inexplicably familiar to him as if he had heard someone mention it every day. However, he could not recall what this business was, nor who was the one who had mentioned the names to him.

Shortly after, the insurance company Jasper had contacted arrived at the scene.

Although Jasper did not know which company Celine's car was insured under, he thought it would not be a big deal to have someone come to have a look at the damages at the scene and give them an estimate. Thus, Jasper contacted the company he had insured his car under, People Insurance Company of Somer, otherwise known as PICS.

When the general manager of PICS heard that Jasper's car was damaged, he led a team and rushed over to the scene.

When he arrived at the scene, he did not stop to even catch his breath before he hurried over to Jasper and said respectfully, "Mr. Laine, I'm so sorry we're late. The traffic was horrible on the way."

Jasper smiled and said, "That's alright. Help me take a look at the damages to this Audi and give me an estimate. The owner of this Audi is my friend. If it's not insured under your company, I'll have one of my men take care of the necessary paperwork after this."

The general manager of PICS thumped his chest and said, “Don’t worry, Mr. Laine. Any paperwork is a small matter now that you’ve made your wishes known.”

“Are you... the general manager of PICS’ branch office?”

The general manager of PICS only realized that there were others present when Joseph’s voice rang out.

He obviously knew Joseph too. With a smile, he said in a polite voice, “You’re Young Master Wagner, aren’t you? Long time no see.”

Joseph’s heart thudded when he saw how respectfully the general manager of PICS treated Jasper. He could not stop himself from asking, “You guys know each other?”

Life at the Top Chapter 857

“Is there anyone in Southeast Province who doesn’t know Jasper Laine from JW Investments?”

The general manager of PICS replied matter-of-factly. Then, he jolted back to his senses and asked, “It’s not your car that’s in trouble is it?”

Joseph’s grip on the business card tightened when he saw the horrified expression on the general manager’s face. He replied, “It’s my brother’s car.”

The general manager’s lips twitched as he turned instinctively to look at Jasper. When he saw Jasper looking back at him with an indecipherable expression on his face, he hurriedly straightened himself and instinctively took several steps backward. He increased the distance between himself and the Wagner brothers.

“You must be crazy! How dare you hit a car belonging to Mr. Laine’s friend?!” the general manager reprimanded.

Leonard said indignantly, “This b*tch rear-ended me!”

Just then, Joseph, who had started realizing that things were going wrong, glared at Leonard as he yelled in a low voice, “Can’t you be more f*cking civil?!”

Leonard had an aggrieved expression on his face. He wanted to say more, but he did not dare speak a word.

The general manager of PICS had a feeling that things were not as simple as they seemed when he looked at Leonard who had blood all over his face. He had no interest in getting involved and said hurriedly, “I’m going to take a look at what’s going on.”

Then, he turned and walked to the two cars.

He rarely needed to survey the scene of an accident as a general manager. These were all done by his staff. However, the general manager felt that these two cars were much easier to deal with than the brewing warzone that was happening behind him.

The more Joseph thought about it, the more insecure he felt. He glanced at Jasper before walking toward the general manager, whispering to him, “Tell me the truth. What’s his background?”

“What’s his background?”

The general manager laughed coldly before saying, “His name is his background. I’m advising you not to get caught up in such messy matters anymore.

“He’s two years younger than you, but all you do is loiter around with the rich kids of Southeast Province while flaunting your family’s riches. Him, on the other hand, tsk tsk...”

“He’s not someone you can cross. Seeing how your parents are on good terms with me, I advise you to immediately apologize to him and show him you mean it. He’s not a man who won’t listen to reason. If you don’t do this, no one can save you!”

...

Joseph had an odd look in his eyes as he gazed at Jasper after returning from his conversation with the general manager.

He had a dark expression on his face as he mulled things over for a long time. In the end, he decided not to say anything.

“Let’s go!”

Joseph said to Leonard.

Leonard had a stunned look on his face as he said, “We’re leaving?! Brother, are my ears failing me?!”

“This b*tch crashed into my car and I got beaten up by them, but we’re not going to do anything about it?!”

“F*cking hell!”

Joseph, who was already annoyed, became enraged when he listened to Leonard continuing to call Celine a b*tch. He raised his hand and slapped Leonard across the face as he bellowed, “You useless piece of trash, we’re leaving when I say we’re leaving! What are you blabbering about?!”

Leonard’s pitiful face received another blow. With his new wound adding to his old ones, his face puffed up like a blowfish.

“You’re going? Don’t you think it’s a little rude of you to leave after what just happened?” Jasper asked calmly.

Joseph hurriedly turned and stared at Jasper. He could tell he was in deep trouble now.

When Joseph recalled his previous attitude as well as what he had said, he felt his face burn bright red.

However, he would still not beg for mercy from Jasper.

“Don’t take matters too far. This issue ends here, and no one makes a loss. I won’t let you take advantage of me if you insist on making a fuss.”

Jasper began laughing after he heard what Joseph said.

“I’m the one making a fuss now? Who was the one who wanted to force me on my knees earlier?”

“I thought I had time-traveled back to imperial times with the way you went on and on about making me go on my knees. What’s going on? Do you think you can just leave after making so many demands?”

Joseph’s lips twitched slightly as the expression on his face darkened. He took a deep breath, realizing that things would not be as easily settled as he had expected.

Thus, the only thing he could do was walk over to his Ferrari, open the door, and say, “I’m so sorry for delaying your schedule, Mr. Monty. We might need a little more time to solve the issue at hand here, why don’t you...”

Conrad did not even look at Joseph. While he was sitting in the car, he had caught sight of Jasper.

After all, it was hard to miss a human being standing by the road.

To be honest, Conrad had the urge to turn and leave the minute he saw Jasper.

He did not want anything to do with Jasper during such a critical time.

The next time they met would be when they decided who was the winner, but this was not the time!

However, when he remembered the relationship his family shared with the Wagner brothers and what he wanted to do, Conrad had no choice but to grit his teeth and get out of the car.

Conrad ignored Joseph's prattling and walked up to Jasper.

"What a small world Southeast Province is." Jasper took the initiative to speak first and smiled as he gazed at Conrad.

That opening sentence stunned both Joseph and Leonard.

They had initially thought Jasper would be terrified and might even go down on his knees and beg for mercy when he saw Conrad.

Yet, why did they sound like a pair of old friends reuniting?

A strong feeling of unease arose in the two brother's hearts.

What caused their fear to increase was what Conrad replied.

"Small world, indeed. If I had known you were the person they offended, I wouldn't have bothered coming over at all. I would have let you beat them to death."

Life at the Top Chapter 858

Who was Conrad Monty?

Conrad Monty was the head of the Monty family!

The Monty family was the oldest, strongest, and most powerful family in the entire Southeast Province!

It could be said that the Monty family presided above all the other powerful families in Southeast Province.

Plus, Conrad Monty was a one-of-a-kind prodigy. He was a genius in Southeast Province that only emerged once every 50 years!

He had just started when he managed to completely turn a nearly bankrupt company around into what was now known as Monty Group. Since then, the group had always held a spot in the list of top three companies and reported the highest earnings every year.

Conrad Monty was the role model for the younger generation in Southeast Province.

However, Conrad Monty from the Monty family was now showing so much humility when he was speaking to Jasper Laine?

Joseph felt his blood vessels contracting as oxygen failed to reach his brain.

Leonard, who was standing beside him, was in even worse shape. All color had drained completely from his face, and he looked as pale as a ghost now.

“You’re too polite,” Jasper said calmly as he turned to gaze at the Wagner brothers who had identical expressions of shock and horror on their faces.

Conrad turned around and asked, “What’s going on?”

Joseph’s lips were mumbling, but he did not dare say anything. He turned to look at his brother, Leonard.

Leonard shuddered when Conrad’s gaze landed on him. He was just about to stutter an answer when Conrad slapped him across the face.

Leonard’s face had suffered through plenty of beatings today. After getting hit multiple times, his face was now as swollen as a pig’s head.

Leonard howled in pain as he took two steps backward, the fear apparent in his eyes.

“You got slapped because you don’t know what’s good for you.”

Conrad retrieved a handkerchief and wiped his hands slowly as if his hands had been contaminated after he touched Leonard.

“I understand what you usually get up to, but I don’t care about those things. The Wagner family might be on good terms with my father and our fathers might be sworn brothers, but that has nothing to do with me. I don’t have any obligation to educate you on how you should behave.

“However, as hedonistic brothers, you should know who you should and should not offend. You’ll get yourself killed if you can’t distinguish between the two.

Conrad’s eyes grew colder as he raised his foot and kicked the two brothers. They covered their stomachs with their hands as they bent down, their faces contorted in pain.

After that, Conrad turned toward Jasper. He still had a demure smile on his face.

It was as though he had not just been insulting and beating up people.

“How’s that, are you satisfied now?” Conrad asked Jasper.

“I’m impressed, Mr. Monty. You know how to separate your private and official matters,” Jasper said,

Conrad pretended not to have heard Jasper’s dig at him as he turned to look at Leonard and Joseph.

“Get over here and apologize to Mr. Laine!”

The two were so terrified they did not dare say anything else. Crawling over hurriedly, they begged for mercy from Jasper with tears streaking down their faces.

“Mr. Laine, I’m sorry. It was my fault for being so f*cking rude. I shouldn’t have lost my temper like that. Please, treat me like a fart you need to let go of!”

“Mr. Laine! My brother and I are at fault here. I’m so sorry, please forgive us.”

Jasper ignored them and turned to look at Celine.

He had made his stance clear. Celine was the one in charge here.

If she was alright, then everything would be alright.

If she did not agree, Jasper would continue toying with them until the very end.

Celine immediately understood what Jasper meant and chuckled as she said, “Hurry up and get it done with. I’m hungry.”

Life at the Top Chapter 859

When Jasper heard what Celine said, he said calmly, "Let's go."

Then, he and Celine walked toward the Bentley.

Conrad's eyes were dark as he watched the two walk off.

"Mr. Laine, we've assessed the scene. There aren't any major problems, and everything can be fixed in a couple of days," the general manager of PICS said respectfully as he walked toward Jasper.

Jasper replied, "Please have the car towed to a car dealership that can fix it. And pass me the receipt for any costs incurred."

The general manager hurriedly said, "No need for that, Mr. Laine. We've already looked it up. This car is indeed insured with PICS, and we'll take responsibility for all damages. It'll probably take two to three days, and I'll have someone deliver the car to you once it's fixed."

"Thank you so much," Jasper said politely.

"Not at all, not at all. It's my pleasure to be of service, Mr. Laine."

The general manager, who was in his 40s, did not seem to find the way he spoke to Jasper odd. Nothing but niceties came out of his mouth.

After another round of exchanging pleasantries, the general manager got someone to tow the Audi away before he bade goodbye and left.

He did not dare stay and watch the impending war. Everything was fine so long he managed to establish a good image of himself with Jasper.

Soon, Julian fired up the Bentley and turned back around.

After everyone had left, Conrad spoke to the Wagner brothers who were still kneeling on the floor, "You can get yourselves to the hospital if you're not dead.

"Don't blame me for being cruel, I was trying to save you. Based on what I know of his personality, it won't be just you two but your entire family who will fall into misfortune. I don't care if you've seen through my pity act or not, but he has. Either way, remember to never cause trouble for me in the future!"

Joseph summoned all the bravery he had to ask, "Mr. Monty, is he that powerful? To the point where even you are afraid of him?"

Conrad stared at the Bentley that was rapidly disappearing into the night sky before he laughed coldly, saying, "Powerful? Oh, he has much more than power.

"What would you guys know? Don't think you're better than everyone else just because you've read a few biographies. You're no better than your brother in that sense. Pack up that high and mighty act of yours, or you might die before your brother does.

"F*ck off. I've got a lot to do lately, and I haven't got any time for you."

...

As Celine sat in the Bentley, she suddenly burst into laughter.

"What are you laughing at?" Jasper, who was sitting beside her, turned and asked.

“The one who came after that, what’s his name again? You called him Mr. Monty?” Celine asked.

“Conrad Monty, the head of the largest family in Southeast Province,” Jasper replied quietly.

“Oh, I couldn’t tell. He seems to be in his early 30s. I guess that makes him quite powerful?” Celine asked.

“You still haven’t told me what you were laughing about,” Jasper asked with great interest.

“I was laughing at how calculating Conrad Monty was. He knew that you wouldn’t lose your temper if he put on a pity show for you,” Celine said.

Jasper shook his head and said quietly, “Both he and I know that this problem wouldn’t be settled because of the show he put on. His pity show wouldn’t have an effect on me if I wanted to pursue the matter.”

“So why didn’t you insist on pursuing the matter?” Celine asked.

“You’re one of the main parties involved and you aren’t going to press charges, so why should I pursue it any further? At the end of the day, those two brothers are only minor characters who won’t be able to make it big. There’s no need for me to go all out with them,” Jasper replied.

Celine leaned over, her fragrance permeating the space around them as she asked, “What if I had insisted on pressing charges?”

“Then we’ll turn back and pummel them until they’re half-dead,” Jasper replied determinedly.

“I would be a fool to believe you.”

Celine glared at Jasper as she said, “I can tell that you and Conrad Monty are enemies, and you two have a massive grudge. I refuse to believe you would mess up your plans over such a minuscule thing.”

“Didn’t you say you were hungry? What do you want to eat?” Jasper insistently avoided that topic.

“Can we go to your house so that you can prepare noodles for me?”

Life at the Top Chapter 860

This showcased the importance of having a driver like Julian and the need to have soundproof curtains that separated the backseat from the front.

If Jasper had been the one driving, he would probably have crashed right into a ditch after that.

Firstly, it was because he never expected Celine to suddenly become flirty and passionate that quickly.

Secondly, it was because Jasper was reminded of how Wendy had prepared a steaming plate of pasta for him last night.

It caused Jasper to feel just the slightest bit guilty.

“Alright, alright, I’m just messing with you. I won’t eat anything you prepare even if you begged me to. Look at the shock on your face.”

Celine straightened her body as she complained to Jasper.

Although she seemed fine on the surface, women had always been difficult to understand. No one could tell if Celine was genuinely fine with things.

Jasper pulled the curtain apart as he asked Julian to drive them to a place that served good supper before he asked Celine, "So why did you come to Southeast Province all of a sudden?"

Celine had initially planned to tell Jasper it was because she missed him, but after seeing the odd expression on his face, she huffed and said...

"Just pretend as if I'm a client making a return visit. After all, both parties have gained huge benefits from working with you. I even got a promotion. So, Mr. Laine, are you pleased with the service you've received from Colossal Investments?"

"Yes, I'm satisfied," Jasper replied solemnly.

Celine giggled as she said, "Moreover, I have another piece of news for you."

"Morrison has been promoted to president of Layman Investment Bank's Terra regional branch. He's already arrived in the office. Soon, he'll be in charge of everything that goes on in Layman Investment Bank in the Terra region."

Jasper's eyebrows raised slightly.

Celine smiled mysteriously as she continued saying, "According to the news provided by our business consultant, Morrison will do two things upon taking over. First, he'll conduct a thorough investigation on all the businesses you own. Then, he'll get in touch with all of your enemies.

"Both matters affect you directly, Mr. Laine. Seems like you have quite a big influence."

"You even managed to find this out? Business consultant? More like a business spy, don't you think?" Jasper replied indignantly.

“Why say it out loud? Should have just kept it to yourself.”

Celine said languidly, “Tactics like these aren’t that common in Somerland, but they can be seen everywhere overseas. After all, the business industry is like a warzone. Insider information is the most important thing.

“At crucial moments, a single piece of information can determine the success or failure of a business deal involving tens of millions of dollars. Colossal Investments spends more than a billion US dollars per year hiring over a million business spies across the world. They hold more power than you can imagine!”

Celine smiled and said, “Let’s not talk about this now. What are your thoughts on Morisson’s promotion and the two things on his to-do list?”

“What thoughts can I have other than be jealous of the fact he has a great dad?” Jasper laughed as he said, “Look at him. You both work in investment companies, and Layman is even a tad smaller than Colossal Investments is. He has just committed a crime, but he even got a promotion by just turning his head to the other side. And look at you. Both of you are presidents of branches of the Terra region, but you had to put in so much more effort than him.”

Celine gritted her teeth as she glared at Jasper, saying, “You never know what’s good for you. I shouldn’t have bothered worrying about you. I’m showing you kindness by providing you with information, but you’re making cutting remarks about me”

“You just want to rock my boat, don’t you?” Jasper asked as he smiled.

“Boat or bed?” Celine was starting to talk inappropriately again.

Life at the Top Chapter 861

Without waiting for Jasper's reply, she said, "I know that I can't hide anything from you. As the newly appointed president of the Terra regional branch of Colossal Investments, is there any better way for me to highlight my abilities than to exterminate Layman Investment Bank's influence in Terra?"

"That's why everything will remain the same as it has been in the past. This will benefit both of us, so we need to work together earnestly.

"Perhaps I've been rather busy lately, which is why I haven't had the time to look at what he's been doing. He has only just started working in Terra. Even if he can't wait any longer to go against me, he should at least gain a firm foothold and build his own team up first. You're in the same situation as he is, so you can't rush things," Jasper said in a lukewarm tone.

"Don't worry. I'm not asking you to go onto the battlefield tomorrow. I'm just notifying you about it in advance so that you won't be taken aback when you go against him in the future. In any case, what have you been busy with lately?" Celine asked.

"I have too many enemies. They're all queueing up to attack me now. I have no choice but to slowly defeat them one by one," Jasper said with a smile.

"What a loud-mouth," Celine said, rolling her eyes at him.

Julian had been by Jasper's side for some time now. Jasper also realized that he was getting better and better at coming up with sneaky ideas.

Jasper had originally intended to take Celine to a snack stall to grab some scrumptious supper, so Julian had found a snack stall for him. However, the stall was surrounded by several small hotels. What was he trying to imply?

The streets surrounding them were full of men and women that were wrapped in each other's arms as they walked into the hotels impatiently. Jasper could not even tell if they were lovers or not. The women in the men's embrace may not even be their own wives—they could well be the wives of other people.

Celine evaluated their surroundings in amazement. She then cast a meaningful glance at Jasper.

Jasper fixed his gaze on the hotpot restaurant in front of them. "Do you eat mutton?" He asked Celine without turning to look at her.

"I don't mind," Celine said cheerily in a tone that resembled Jasper's usual demeanor. The explicit and implicit meanings behind her words were obvious.

"Let's go then. Let's have some mutton. I haven't had it in a really long time," Jasper said as he made his way into the hotpot restaurant.

The both of them soon sat down at a table. After placing their orders, Jasper regretted everything almost immediately.

A couple was seated right next to their table. Jasper and Celine both heard the man tell the woman that he had just bought some imported condoms with an evil smirk on his face. The woman then pouted shyly while she accepted a call from someone that she addressed as her husband.

"I'm working late tonight. I may be crashing at Lily's place tonight, so you should rest first.

"Yes, I know. You're so annoying. You don't have to fetch me or wait for me. I'm busy catching up with my work right now. Alright, goodbye."

The woman walked out of the hotpot restaurant in the man's arms while she talked to her husband on the phone. They then made their way into a small hotel nearby.

From their conversation, Jasper could picture a man putting down the phone in despair with a bitter expression on his face, then getting up to continue doing the chores

He just knew it. He had spent his all his days living that way in his past life.

However, Penelope Hunt had never cheated on him during their time together. Usually, she only stayed out late to play poker with a few of her female friends. Jasper was quite pleased about that.

Time truly flies. Those days felt like they were eons away now.

“Hey!”

Celine’s voice startled Jasper.

He returned to his senses and caught sight of Celine waving her hand in front of him. “What is it?” Jasper asked.

“What are you thinking about? I’ve called your name a few times now, but it seemed like you didn’t hear me,” Celine said. A mischievous smirk formed across her face as she said, “Were you thinking about what the couple that had just left are doing in their room right now?”

Life at the Top Chapter 862

“Do I seem that lifeless?” Jasper asked in annoyance.

Celine placed slices of mutton into the hotpot intently. She replied nonchalantly, “I don’t know. After all, you’re still a man.”

Jasper chuckled and asked, "How long do you intend to stay in the Southeast Province?"

Celine thought about it for a while before replying, "I guess I'll stay three to five days at most. I need to rush back to settle some work as my workload is piling up. I'm getting a few days of rest before I busy myself. I won't have much time to go around once I officially take up the position."

"What a coincidence. The topping-off ceremony of the Southface River project will be held soon. You can leave after attending it," Jasper said.

"I don't have much time. When does it start?" Celine asked.

"The day after tomorrow," Jasper said as he massaged his temples. "I've been working day and night lately. I have so much work," he added.

Just then, Jasper and Celine's phones rang at the same time.

Both of them exchanged glances and proceeded to pick up their phones.

Jasper received a call from Jack Cullen. The first thing that he said caused Jasper to frown.

"Mr. Laine, I realized that Sena's shares are fluctuating abnormally, which is very unusual, but I'm not sure why this is the case. Would you like to take a look at it yourself?"

Jasper replied, "Alright, keep your eyes on it. I'll take a look as soon as possible. Let's contact each other if anything happens."

"Alright, Mr. Laine."

After hanging up the call, Jasper looked at Celine. He realized that she was staring at him as well.

“I’m guessing that we’ve just received the same news,” Celine said. She seemed to be rather pleased that the both of them were often on the same wavelength.

“Is it regarding Sena’s shares?” Jasper asked.

“It seems like we can’t finish this meal,” Celine sighed.

“Let’s go for now. I’ll ask Julian to pack some supper for us later,” Jasper said as he got up.

Having fun was great, but business was still business. Jasper always recognized the boundaries that existed between them.

At this stage, he had to prioritize his career. Everything else came second.

After all, he did not have complete autonomy over his empire right now. There were too many people and forces working in the shadows right now. Even if he was unwilling to move forward, he would be pushed forward by the people and environment around him. If he stopped, his enemies would destroy him and everything around him immediately.

This was the price that he had to pay for his rapid rise to success. It was a necessary sacrifice.

On the way back to the office, Jasper’s head hurt. The internet speed during this era was way too slow.

If this had happened during the era before his reincarnation, everything would be much easier. He could just turn on his phone and check everything online.

However, as things stood, the phone was just a tool that enabled him to receive messages and make calls.

Staring at the latest Nokia model that Wendy had gifted him with, Jasper was lost in thought.

Should he lay out the market of the mobile phone in advance to accelerate the development of mobile data?

However, this was an extremely complex industry, and it involved the most sophisticated technologies. Forget him as an individual, other countries may not be able to successfully navigate this industry either.

All things aside, Warwick was considered the world's largest mobile phone manufacturer in terms of the number of units sold before his reincarnation. Officials from Somerland had also been vigorously showing their support for Warwick as it was a national enterprise. However, what were the results from all this?

The United States had its hands on all the technology. Without the processor chip technology, Warwick could only try to win over people's hearts to try and make an impact.

If Jasper were to do this, he would not walk down the same path. He had to get a firm hold of the processor technology.

Life at the Top Chapter 863

He did not aim to overtake the countries from the West, but he also did not want to be taken for as a fool. The last thing he wanted was to get tricked or driven off by other countries.

However, things were never this simple.

On an international scale, the technical blockade of Somerland and its businessmen was extremely serious.

If one was from Somerland, one could only dream of getting their hands on the best technology. They could only get their hands on things like the MP3, which none of the technology conglomerates took seriously, easily. This was evident from Sentel's careless attitude toward them previously.

Just as he was thinking about this issue, the car arrived at the company.

The company had already moved into the Southface River Tower. As it was around eleven o'clock at night, most of the lights in the building were off. The corridors were quiet as well, and the entire building seemed desolate.

Jasper took the elevator to the top floor. After entering his office, Jasper asked Julian to buy some supper. After that, he sat in front of his computer with Celine and opened the interface of the US Nasdaq index.

Sena's share price was 225 US dollars right now. It was an extremely high price.

However, Jasper frowned when he set his eyes on the share price.

Sometimes, a high share price did was not a good thing. If it was abnormally high, it indicated that someone was speculating about the share. It was fine if they just wanted to offload their shares and earn a large sum of money, however, things would be different if they had ulterior motives.

Li Jin opened the trend chart and transaction data from the past week. He then stared at the complicated data on the computer screen and fell into contemplation.

As the president of the Terra regional branch of Colossal Investments, Celine knew the financial share market well. After looking at the data for a while, she could tell that the overall direction of the index seemed normal. However, there were a few subtle points that most people would fail to notice.

Just as she was about to turn around and tell Jasper about it, she caught sight of Jasper's side profile. His brows were pinched into a slight frown while his gaze was fixed on the computer screen.

He was pondering something.

Right then, Celine had the urge to pounce on him and take him as hers as she stared at the conscientious expression on his side profile.

In Celine's eyes, a man's charm was definitely not found in his facial features.

Celine would not even bat an eye at the handsome young men out there. Furthermore, the youth were now ushering in a non-mainstream trend where men liked to grow out their hair and surround themselves with a melancholic aura. Celine was amused by this trend.

It made them look neither manly nor feminine. It was simply a deformed aesthetic.

In Celine's opinion, men had to have their own characteristic aura. It could be the residual scent of washing powder on clothes, or it could be the elegant scent of a cologne, but most importantly, they had to emanate self-confidence, maturity, and power!

A man should have a spine that was strong enough to support a woman. A man should have arms and shoulders that were capable of blocking all wind and rain for a woman.

"There's a problem."

Jasper was oblivious to the intense thoughts running through Celine's mind at that moment. After saying these three words, he immediately called Jack Tanner.

He did not even spare a glance at Celine.

Keen as he was, Jasper had detected something unusual in the index. The potential ploys raised by these unusual signs could give rise to very serious consequences!

Therefore, he did not have time to discuss or mull it over. He instantly woke Jack up from his deep slumber with a phone call.

“What’s wrong, Mr. Laine?”

Far away in Swallow Capital, Jack turned on the bedside lamp in his dark bedroom. He put on his glasses and asked Jasper over the phone.

“Haven’t you noticed that the trend of Sena’s share price is moving in an abnormal direction? We’re a listed company, so your vigilance really disappoints me!

“If any of our enemies want to go against Sena right now, they would start with the Nasdaq!

“They’re already pointing their guns at our doorstep, but you’re all still sleeping?”

Life at the Top Chapter 864

Jasper’s words caused all of Jack’s drowsiness to instantly vanish.

He snapped to attention, immediately awake.

“What’s going on, Mr. Laine? I did not receive any reports,” Jack said as he put on a coat. He rushed into his study without putting on his slippers.

Jasper suppressed the burning rage within him and spoke in a heavy voice.

“Some people have been secretly collecting shares since last week. It’s possible they have been doing so for even longer. They have pushed the stock price up by 8%. So, what does this mean?”

“This means that they have accumulated a large number of shares. If they aren’t worried about being discovered, they single-handedly have the ability to cause Sena’s share price to rise or absolutely plummet.

“Once they start doing that, the retail investors will definitely sell their shares in order to protect their investment due to the continuous fluctuations. This will happen regardless of if the price rises or falls to its limit.

“At this moment, if they accept any orders, the number of shares under their control will increase greatly. If they don’t, Sena’s share price will collapse. Do I still need to explain all this to you?”

After registering Jasper’s words, Jack, who was waiting for his computer to turn on, broke out into a cold sweat.

He understood why Jasper was behaving so sternly right now. Thus, he gulped and replied, “Sorry, Mr. Laine. We were being negligent.”

“You guys have been way too complacent lately. Do you think that you can sit back and relax now that you’re the top Internet company in the country?”

Although Jasper’s tone was not heavy, his words were harsh.

“I deserve to be penalized, Mr. Laine,” Jack said.

“It’s not the time to talk about punishments now. Ask the person in charge of this area to wake up and come up with a countermeasure right now.

“If I’m not satisfied with your plan, I don’t mind firing the entire department!”

Jack smiled bitterly as he heard the beep of Jasper hanging up the call.

Right then, Jack’s wife, who had gotten up as well, came in with a cup of hot tea. It was the blend that Jack usually enjoyed. She placed the cup beside Jack and said in a gentle voice, “What’s wrong? Did you get scolded by Mr. Laine?”

Jack sighed and said, “I don’t blame him. Everyone at the company is at fault, including me. Too many people have been blinded by the glory of our successful listing. We shouldn’t have acted that way.

“Alright, you should go rest. I don’t think I’ll get any sleep tonight,” Jack said as he patted his wife’s hand.

...

Nauritus City, Southface River Tower.

“You’re unexpectedly fierce when you scold people,” Celine told Jasper.

Jasper massaged his temples and said in exasperation, “It’s understandable if the people from Sena didn’t notice this problem, but I’m displeased at the fact that everyone, Jack included, has been blinded by the wealth and glory of the company’s listing!

“Do you know what half of Sena’s executives were up to some time ago? They were either throwing celebratory parties or accepting interviews from financial magazines. What nonsense!

“Dane Warren, the founder of Sena that I had previously kicked out, turned out to behave the best out everyone in the senior management team. He reaped the most profits amongst all the executives with all the shares that he owned. Nevertheless, he was down-to-earth and managed to operate most of the company’s business on his own.”

Celine shook her head. "This usually happens once a company expands. All sorts of birds tend to flock into a large forest. Those employees have worked hard for so many years. Now that the company has been listed and is making a large sum of profits, their bonuses have increased greatly as well. It's natural for them to become conceited," she said in an understanding tone.

"Such fickle-minded people. In that case, I'll pour a bucket of cold water over their heads. Only those who return to their senses can remain. Those who can't recover from their current states should all leave the company," Jasper said in an even tone.

"What do you intend to do about this?" Celine asked as she pointed to the computer screen.

"I have no idea," Jasper heaved a sigh while he shook his head.

"We don't know the identity nor goals of our opponent. The only thing we can do now is to keep track of their activity.

"We need to raise funds and wait for our opponent to take action. Once they hammer the market, we need to spend a large sum of money to get a hold of their shares. Otherwise, the share price will collapse. If that happens, Sena will suffer a major loss. We won't be able to recover from the damage even after a whole year. Now, everything depends on the number of shares that they own and what they intend to do with it."

"Look here!" Celine exclaimed suddenly as she rotated Jasper's computer monitor. She inched closer to Jasper and got up to grab ahold of the mouse.

She had to lean across Jasper's body to do so.

Jasper watched as Celine slowly approached him. When Celine moved the mouse and began to retrieve the data on the screen, strands of her hair tickled Jasper's face in a mischievous manner.

His face itched, but his heart craved for her even more.

The fragrance of her perfume lingered about his sense as strands of her hair brushed against his skin. It felt like she was teasing him slowly and trying to test his limits.

However, Celine did not notice all these details this time around. She did not even realize that the distance between both of them was very inappropriate at that moment.

After displaying the data on the screen, Celine sat back down on her seat.

“Generally speaking, the larger the trading volume, the higher the share price will be. After all, the price will naturally go up if there’s a consistent amount of trading.

“Although Sena’s trading volume has continually increased since last week, the share price has remained stable.

“This person is a master. His methods are extremely confusing.

“However, the data won’t lie. Linking all of these clues together, I’m almost certain that the person behind all this definitely isn’t trying to earn a fortune by manipulating Sena’s share price...

“This person is aiming to take over Sena completely by absorbing a large number of shares!”

Life at the Top Chapter 865

As soon as Celine finished speaking, she noticed that Jasper was looking at her like she was an alien.

“Why are you looking at me like that?” Celine asked.

“I realized that for you to be able to replace William and take the position of the president of the Terra regional branch of Colossal Investments, that you must be quite capable as well,” Jasper said sincerely.

“Why’s that? Don’t you think that I got this position just because I rode on your coattails?” Celine asked proudly.

“I never said that,” Jasper chuckled. “You got the position because of your own abilities,” he added.

Celine glanced at Jasper and continued speaking in a serious tone.

“We can basically confirm our opponent’s goal now. He doesn’t want money. He has acquired a book loss of approximately 200 million US dollars in order to stifle the share price during this period. This is just a rough estimate that we can use to make an educated guess.”

“Can you find out who is it?”

Jasper shook his head after hearing Celine say this. “As I’ve told you previously, I have too many opponents. All of them are imbued with a motive and the ability to pursue their goals. With the limited number of clues that we have right now, I still can’t tell who’s behind all of this,” he said.

“In that case, there’s no way to find out.”

Celine spread her arms and said, “I can only help you by analyzing the other party’s intention and possible goal on a technical level. I can’t help you resolve this problem or tell you how to fish them out.”

“You’ve already helped me a great deal,” Jasper told her in a sincere tone.

Jasper knew how to interpret the market board. His skills were impressive as well.

However, his skills only applied to general situations. They were not enough for him to see through the meticulous plots set up by masters in the share market like the one that he was facing right now.

He did not emerge victorious in the stock markets of Harbor City and Nasdaq because of his skills. Rather, he had managed to do so because he possessed a strategic vision and planning that went beyond the current era and extended almost two decades into the future.

He knew about the classic financial battles that would happen in the future. He also knew a lot of cases whereby immaculate manipulation of the market led to fascinating results.

Therefore, this knowledge served to greatly improved Jasper's strategic planning.

Meanwhile, he simply relied on the technical skills that he had gained from his experience of working at a financial company for more than ten years in his previous life to get by.

When it came to his technical skills, Jasper could not even begin to compare to Jake Cullen.

At that moment, Jasper had finally witnessed the extraordinary trading skills of the top trader of the era.

Ordinary people may see streaks of broken lines when they looked at a market index, but Celine Maynard could instantly detect the true meaning concealed by the data whenever she looked at it.

Jasper was beyond jealous of her talent and abilities.

“Now that we know that the other party is trying to hammer the market, we aren’t left with many options.”

Jasper said in an exceptionally calm and even tone.

“If an ordinary person were in such a situation, they would definitely be overcome with anxiety regardless of how self-confident they were. But, look at you. You don’t look nervous at all,” Celine remarked in amusement.

“It’s important not to panic before the battle begins. Furthermore, it’s useless to do so. I think that I’m rather lucky, as , at the very least, we have uncovered our opponent’s plans. It’d have been too late if we discovered his plans after he made his move,” Jasper said.

“By the way, was the person that reminded you about this issue one of your subordinates? If he is, you should really reward him. One of the professional teams from the investment bank discovered this problem on our side. That person managed to find out about it at the same time as our team did. His skills are pretty extraordinary.”

After hearing this, the image of Jake’s face flashed across Jasper’s mind. He chuckled and said, “He deserves a reward, but we’ll talk about it after we overcome this challenge.”

Since they had already uncovered the other party’s plans, the next steps that Jasper planned to take were extremely simple.

He began to raise money from Sena’s company funds as well as whatever money he could pull from his private account.

The share market could be complicated, but it was also extremely simple at times.

At the end of the day, everyone was just fighting for money.

Jasper planned to catch their opponent off guard by making sure that he did not have the chance to mobilize his funds. That way, he could achieve a highly satisfactory result with a minimum cost.

However, once they got into a tug of war, it would be a battle waged with money.

If their opponent offered to buy shares from the sellers for five dollars per share, Jasper would offer them a price of six dollars per share. If their opponent offered the sellers six dollars per share, Jasper would offer them seven dollars.

If their opponent sold his shares for five dollars per share, Jasper would sell them for four dollars per share. If their opponent offered to sell his shares for three dollars per share, Jasper would sell them for two dollars.

In the end, the one who finishes spending all of their money first would lose the battle.

“As the actual head and majority shareholder of Sena, you can always release some shares into the market. No matter how many shares our opponent buys, he would still only be buying the shares that you’ve released. There’s no need for you to personally engage him in battle.”

Celine told Jasper when she saw him mobilizing his funds.

Jasper shook his head and said, “I cannot lose control of the company. Who knows? This might very well be our opponent’s goal. Won’t I be in great trouble if some people came together and asked me for additional shares after forcing me to give up my rights as the company chairman? If that were to happen, I’d lose control of Sena.”

“In other words, you have a strong desire to have control over everything. If someone wants to overthrow you and gain control of Sena, it’d cost them a sum of more than 4 billion US dollars given Sena’s current share price and market capital. That is pretty much impossible,” Celine said.

“I managed to get all the way here because I’m good at making the impossible possible, and dashing my enemies’ hopes of defeating me,” Jasper said calmly.

Celine was stunned. She could not help but smile when she thought of his shocking life experience. “You’re right, I forgot how you made it big. In that case, I won’t comment any further on your choices,” she said.

“I need your help in terms when it comes to technical skills. I’m not as good as you are,” Jasper said.

“You need to pay me for this,” Celine said in a satisfied tone.

“Sure, I’ll pay you an hourly wage of 100000 dollars per hour.”

“Talking about money will hurt my feelings. I don’t need your money. Why don’t we talk about our feelings instead?”

“It’s a waste of money to talk about our feelings. I’d rather hurt your feelings.”

“You scumbag!”

...

Conrad Monty opened the door of a villa located in Nauritus City. Valentine Estrada was in the midst of a heated discussion in a video conference with their team in the United States.

“Mr. Monty.”

Valentine got up and greeted Conrad when he entered the room.

Valentine’s eyes were bloodshot, and she looked extremely tired. “You’ve worked hard during this period. I’ll let you go on a long holiday once things are over.

You'll be given a nice bonus as well, so you'll have time to relax by then," Conrad said in a gentle voice.

Valentine grinned and said, "I don't find it difficult. I've found something truly meaningful to do with my life; I've been wasting my life away before this."

Indeed, this was meaningful. They were attempting to pry apart a listed company with a market value of billions of dollars, with a capital flow of 10 billion US dollars. How could it not be meaningful?

"How's everything going?" Conrad asked.

Life at the Top Chapter 866

“Everything is going smoothly.

“As things stand, we have used up 600 million dollars. According to our original plan, 200 million dollars from the total of a billion dollars will remain as our backup funds. Once we get our hands on 800 million dollars worth of shares, we can start taking action,” Valentine said.

“At our current pace, we can start taking action the day after tomorrow as there’s still one more trading day tomorrow. We will start carrying out our plan at about nine o’clock in the evening on the day after tomorrow during Nasdaq’s trading time.”

“The day after tomorrow?”

“It must be fate. The topping-off ceremony of his project at Southface River will be taking place on the day after tomorrow. I wonder if Jasper Laine will be so touched by our massive gift for him that he’ll lose sleep over it at night,” Conrad said with an unreadable expression on his face.

Valentine chuckled when she noticed that Conrad was in a good mood. “I’m not sure if he’ll be touched, but he’ll surely lose sleep over it,” she remarked.

Conrad guffawed loudly.

...

Sena was instantly thrown into a state of turmoil after Jasper’s phone call.

Jack had called everyone in Sena’s financial department to the company in the middle of the night. The sky outside was still pitch black, but the meeting room within the company was brightly lit up. Jack scolded each and every one of them harshly.

“First off, I need to reflect upon myself for causing this incident as I’ve indeed become complacent. I’ve been blinded by our recent success.

“However, from this incident, it’s clear to see that the moment we get too relaxed, we’ll encounter a crisis. Mr. Laine managed to discover it early on this time around, but what if he didn’t manage to?!”

“Can anyone tell me who Mr. Laine would hold responsible for this incident?! Will it be you guys or me?!”

All the executives lowered their heads, not daring to look at the heavy expression on Jack’s face. Although there were more than ten people in the room, nothing else could be heard except for Jack’s voice. Nobody dared to utter a single word.

At that moment, someone knocked on the door of the meeting room. Jack’s secretary then entered the room.

“Mr. Tanner, here’s the data. It can be projected on screen right now,” the secretary said in a cautious tone.

“What are you waiting for? Project it at once!” Jack shouted.

The secretary responded to him aggrievedly and began to start up the equipment in a hurry.

Not long after, Sena’s share trading data and trend chart during this period appeared on the huge projection screen in the meeting room.

Everyone in the room was involved in financial trading. Thanks to Jasper’s guidance, they managed to detect the unusual parts of the data after some careful observation.

Everyone instantly broke out into a cold sweat.

Obviously, someone was manipulating Sena's share price. Once the other party started attacking them, the consequences would be unimaginable.

"Mr. Tanner, the other party has been planning this since a long time ago. It seems like they own a hefty amount of shares right now. I'm afraid we can't resolve this on our own," a pale-faced deputy manager said.

Jack replied icily, "What's wrong now? You guys were busy celebrating, shopping, and accepting interviews from financial magazines without anyone reminding you to do so. That's why none of you managed to detect the problem.

"Now that someone else has given you a clear reminder, you're telling me that you can't resolve this on your own. In that case, why did the company even hire you?"

The deputy manager's lips quivered. He did not dare to say a word.

"From today onward, none of you are allowed to go back home until this problem is resolved. All of you are required to stay at the company and pay attention to the activity on the Nasdaq at all the times. Meanwhile, Mr. Laine and I come up with a plan to salvage this situation."

Life at the Top Chapter 867

"However, due to the time difference, we need to pull an all-nighter if they take action. Make sure to re-adjust the work schedules of your departments. If anyone makes a mistake, don't bother explaining it to me. Explain everything to Mr. Laine himself."

Everyone gazed at each other after hearing Jack's words. Heaving a collective sigh, they agreed unanimously.

...

Back in Nauritus City, it was already two in the morning when Jasper arrived home after sending Celine back to her hotel.

Jasper had been communicating closely with Jake throughout his journey home.

Jasper did not have anyone that he could rely on in the United States, and the topping-off ceremony would be held in two days' time. Because of this, it was impossible for him to stay up all night just to monitor the American stock market. Thus, he had no choice but to hand this task over to Jake.

"Sena's funds amount to 600 million dollars right now. I have another 300 million dollars on hand. This is all held in US dollars. I'll let you handle this sum of money for now—our main goal is to snatch back all of their shares."

Jasper remained on the phone with Jake after arriving home.

"Mr. Laine, it shouldn't be hard to take over their shares, but the other party has been preparing for such a long time. It is unlikely that we'll be able to obtain an equivalent number of shares within such a short period of time. If we try too hard to do so, the share price will rise. If that happens, we will have to pay a higher price."

"We'll just have to pay the price then."

Jasper said in an even tone. "After taking down this cunning wolf, we'll gain a considerable amount of profits. The problem now isn't money. We need to know is how many shares they have under their control, and when they intend to take action."

“Mr. Laine, we’ll surely be able to notice the signs before they start carrying out their plan. I will be monitoring the share price the entire team. If anything happens, I’ll be the first one to tell you.”

Jasper nodded with satisfaction and replied, “Sure, I’ll hand this task over to you.”

“Don’t worry.”

After hanging up the call, Jasper stared out the window. The sky was always darkest before dawn. He sighed lightly.

Time passed at an alarming rate. The next day, people from Easy Media told Jasper that they have already completed all the equipment debugging and rehearsals required for the topping-off ceremony.

The Southeast Province, which was thrown into the spotlight after the mining company’s scam was resolved, became the center of everyone’s attention due to the upcoming topping-off ceremony.

Everyone had their eyes set on the Southface River project. Hundreds of millions of dollars had been invested into this project, which had lasted for a year. Now, it was finally time to unveil it to the world.

On this day, the mining company incident was collectively resolved with the joint intervention of the municipal government, the bank, and two state-owned enterprises.

Vista Mining Company declared bankruptcy less than a week after its establishment. The funds obtained from the Agricultural Bank in the company account were all recalled by the bank. After this, Vista Mining Company would no longer be held accountable by the Agricultural Bank or state-owned enterprises.

This included Hill County. Conrad had invested a lot of money into the poor county town of Hill County for the construction of roads and to develop utilities.

Since the people of Hill County benefited from the substantive welfare that he had provided, they did not continue to hold Conrad accountable for his actions.

After all, it's not like any of them were made worse off by this.

Conrad, who had set up the entire scheme from the very start, was the only one who suffered from this. The funds that he had previously invested vanished into thin air.

Most parties considered this to be an acceptable ending. However, they were now not as friendly toward Conrad as they had been in the past.

After all, anyone would be cautious when dealing with a vicious person who was willing to lose a hundred million dollars just to set up a trap for someone else.

Therefore, the number of people gloating over Conrad's misfortune soon outnumbered the number of people who felt sympathetic sorry for him after his scheme failed.

Life at the Top Chapter 868

The topping-off ceremony attracted plenty of prominent figures due to Jasper's renowned reputation and extensive connections.

Among other things, Zachary Law's appearance at the event alone garnered a lot of attention.

"Not bad. I heard that a lot of celebrities from Harbor City have volunteered to attend this event. Something like that is truly rare."

Seated in one of the reception rooms in Southface River Tower, Zachary chuckled as he stared out at the lively and happening ceremony going on outside the building.

The large reception was empty except for Jasper and Zachary. Meanwhile, Henry sat by the side of the door like he was a mascot for the event.

“Everyone simply feels obligated to show their support,” Jasper chuckled.

“You’re now a big boss within the entertainment industry. Those celebrities will definitely have to deal with the two entertainment companies under you. Nobody would dare to not show you their support.”

Zachary seemed to be in a good mood that day as he joked around with Jasper for a while. However, a frown formed on his face once he turned around to look at Henry.

“What’s with that private jet of yours?” Zachary asked him with a dark expression on his face.

“I bought that with the money that I earned on my own. It’s none of your business,” Henry said in an aggrieved tone.

Zachary was angered by his response. “Money you earned on your own? Do you think I’m unaware of how much money Jasp lent to you? He’s paid for half of that private jet. How dare you say that you bought it with your own money!” He barked at him.

“Besides, that private jet is parked in our space now. Our family is paying for its maintenance crew. How dare you tell me that it’s none of my business?”

“I’m your son. Do you need to be so calculative with me over every single thing that I do?” Henry asked bitterly.

“Hmph, when I took over our family business from your grandpa back then, I used the car that your grandpa passed down to me. I would never dare to even think of a private jet. What did I tell you? All you know how to do is enjoy life. You’ve never thought about where those luxuries come from.

“Let me tell you right now. If you continue being such a bum, I’ll pass down all of our property to Anna in the future. When that happens, you’ll have to rely on the family trust fund for your daily expenses. I’ll give you an allowance of a few million dollars every month. Let’s see what will happen to you then.”

“No! I can’t live a single day in such poverty!” Henry shouted out in terror.

“Pfft...”

Zachary and Henry both turned around to look at Jasper, who had spit out a mouthful of tea, with an odd glance.

“It’s alright, sorry for interrupting. Please continue,” Jasper said as he waved his hand awkwardly. He wiped away the water on the coffee table immediately.

The life of an aristocrat was really extraordinary! Even a disobedient son could receive a monthly allowance of a few million dollars. In this era, an ordinary person may not even be able to earn a few million dollars in their entire lifetime.

In the eyes of an aristocrat, a few million dollars was simply their monthly allowance.

Henry turned around and told his father, “Father, why don’t you give me more allowance? Besides, Anna is my younger sister. Isn’t it all the same if you gave all the property to me?”

“Besides, I’ve thought about it. Why should I follow in you and grandpa’s footsteps? Both of you are always tired. Why should I work that hard? Grandpa is smarter than you—he retired a long time ago.

“Those old men around the same age as Grandpa who are still reluctant to retire are all riddled with illness. None of them are as healthy as Grandpa. If you go for a health checkup right now, you may discover that you are less healthy than him. Because of this, I reckon that I’m meant to live a busy working lifestyle. It’s good to live in idle relaxation.”

“Pfft...”

Jasper spit out another mouthful of tea.

As the father and son were busy expressing how much they cared for each other, Wendy came over and knocked on the door of the reception room.

“Mr. Law, Jasp, the officials from the municipal and provincial government have arrived. My father has gone to meet them. Shall we head over to greet them as well?” Wendy asked.

Jasper got up and told Zachary, “Uncle Law, shall we head over?”

Zachary nodded. He left Henry, whose figure was now slumped from all the scolding, and said, “Alright, let’s go.”

They made their way out of the building. The entire area was glowing with bright decorations and immersed in a lively atmosphere.

A short distance away, Dawson Schuler was chatting with two middle-aged men in front of some cars with special license plates. Those with lower-ranking positions did not even have the right to approach them.

Jasper and Zachary made their way toward them. In an event like this, Zachary had to stand behind Jasper. Meanwhile, Wendy stood next to Jasper because of her relationship with him. They then joined in the conversation with the highest-ranking officials from the municipal and provincial government.

“Nice to meet you, Mr. Law.”

“Hello, Mr. Law.”

The two high-ranking officials from the municipal and provincial government smiled widely when they caught sight of Zachary Law. They immediately took the initiative to greet him.

Zachary laughed cheerily. After shaking hands with the two officials, he said, “Look at me. My memory is getting poorer now that I’m older. I was chatting with Jasper in the reception room and I forgot to look at the time. Otherwise, I would have come out and welcomed both of you.”

Zachary’s words were a sign of respect to the two officials.

As the head of the Laws, Zachary had every right to stand tall amongst these government officials due to his prominent status and social ranking. However, he took the initiative to lower himself before them in order to please them.

The official from the provincial government laughed and said, “You’re being way too courteous, Mr. Law. We should have greeted you at the airport when you arrived in the province. After all, we’re the hosts, and you’re our guest.”

Zachary smiled and said, “I’ve invested in a number of projects here. Now that the amusement park and Southface River projects are complete, I should be partly considered as a host as well.”

The group exchanged glances, then burst out into laughter.

“Learn from your father,” Jasper told Henry.

Henry pouted and said, “It’s impossible for me to learn how to speak courteously like these cunning foxes.”

While they were speaking, the official from the provincial government chuckled and said to Jasper, “This must be the young talent from Southeast Province. This is our first time meeting, right?”

Jasper behaved respectfully but without any hint of inferiority toward the high-ranking official. He grinned and spoke to him in a tone that was neither humble nor arrogant.

“This is your first time meeting me, Sir. However, I’ve often seen you on television. Also, the province is burgeoning with talent. I’m young, but I won’t say that I’m talented. I simply managed to get things done at the right time.”

The provincial official was stunned. He laughed out loud and told the municipal official, “Look at how slick he is with his words. My son is about the same age as Mr. Laine, but they’re on completely different levels.

“Nauritus City has produced a real talent!”

Life at the Top Chapter 869

The municipal official had previously dealt with Jasper a few times before this, and Jasper had left a great impression on him. The official chuckled softly.

“Yes, the Nauritus City Government is planning to compile a list of young and promising entrepreneurs; we intend to give them a commendation in order to encourage all the young people within the city to learn from their peers!

“Mr. Laine from JW Capital is on the list. However, he hasn’t been officially notified.”

The provincial official nodded and said, “That’s good to hear. A young man like him deserves to be supported.”

“We shouldn’t just stand here and chat. How about Jasper and I bring all of you to see the Southface River?” Dawson asked them at the perfect timing.

“In that case, Mr. Law, why don’t we take a look together?” The provincial official invited Zachary as he turned to look at him.

“Alright, let’s go and take a good look at the project,” Zachary said with a chuckle.

Not only did the Southface River project mean a lot to Jasper, Dawson, and JW Real Estates, the Nauritus City Government and the Southeast Province City Government also considered it an extremely important project.

JW Real Estates had spent a total amount of 1.8 billion Somer Dollars on the project. With the support of massive funding and Dawson Schuler’s full-time supervision, the project had progressed at an astounding pace!

Amazingly, the construction was completed within ten months.

Usually, the construction of a complex, large-scale project like the Southface River project typically took three to five years. It was common for such projects to encounter a shortage of funds. Occasionally, construction could take as long as ten years.

However, JW Real Estates had outperformed them all.

While Jasper and Dawson brought the group of prominent figures to the Southface River and began introducing the area to them, a young man glared coldly at Jasper’s silhouette from a short distance away.

“Damn f*cker! This jerk does not deserve any of this!”

Zane Lancaster, who had just arrived at the Southeast Province only two days before this, had been greatly shocked within the past forty-eight hours.

He initially thought that Somerland was a poor and undeveloped country, and had expected farms and wooden houses to litter the real estate. He did not even expect there to be a single six-story building in the entire country.

However, once he stepped out of the airport, he was faced with the sight of a bustling city as he traveled along the airport highway.

Although the excessively broad roads and tidy streets looked slightly aged, a vibrant energy surged through them!

None of this could be seen in Harbor City, which was small and cramped.

Harbor City was still much more developed than most cities within Somerland, and was filled with plenty of skyscrapers. The business district was extremely lively and happening as well.

However, anyone could tell that the development of Harbor City was now at a bottleneck, whereas Somerland had only just begun.

There was nothing wrong with this.

What Zane found the most unacceptable was Jasper Laine's prestigious reputation over here!

Almost everyone knew him!

Zane had just been here for two days, but he had heard the people around him shower Jasper with all sorts of praise.

The prince of business?

A young talent?

A business prodigy?

What an over-exaggeration.

They talked about Jasper like he was a deity.

Zane was filled with jealousy.

“F*ck this. Back in Harbor City, I’m always on the newspaper, and I’m also well-known by the public, but what do those newspapers say about me?”

“They either report on my recent purchases, my spending, or the women that I’ve slept with! Those reports make me seem like a useless jerk!”

Mitch Langdon stood beside Zane. His gaze flashed ambiguously as he replied in an even tone, “Aren’t you a useless jerk? Those newspapers are merely telling everyone the truth.”

“Is Jasper Laine any better than I am? Does he have less women around him than I do?” Zane huffed angrily.

“This has nothing to do with women. He’s different from you because he managed to get those women with his own abilities. What about you? Has any woman ever approached you after you left your father?” Mitch asked with a cold sneer.

Life at the Top Chapter 870

“.....”

Zane was rendered speechless. Nevertheless, the jealousy on his face grew much stronger and more obvious.

“Look at how glad Law is. As a young master from Harbor City, he’s truly an embarrassment. He’s so happy being someone else’s follower. He’s acting just like their assistant—he has nothing to be proud of,” Zane huffed in annoyance.

“At least he doesn’t rely on his family’s money and managed to buy himself a private jet. Do you think we have the ability to do so?” Mitch asked him.

Zane turned around to look at Mitch. “You always tell us that they are good, and we’re worthless, Mr. Langdon. Is it really that fun to do so?” He asked Mitch in distaste.

“Do you think that I want to do it?” Mitch sneered and replied, “However, it is the truth. Let’s wait it out for a few more days. Soon, he won’t have the chance to hop around freely like this anymore. What’s wrong with that?”

All of a sudden, Zane seemed to have thought of something. He lowered his voice and asked Mitch, “Mr. Langdon, how is the plan that you previously mentioned going on? If everything goes smoothly, Jasper Laine will be out of luck today, right?”

Mitch cast a wide-eyed glance at Zane and replied to him in a low voice, “This isn’t Harbor City. Jasper Laine may have eyes and ears everywhere, so you’d better be careful with your words. If Jasper hears about any of this, you and I will be in big trouble.”

Zane curled his lips in distaste. “Who does he think he is? Even if he hears about it, what can he do to me?” He said in an irritated tone.

While Zane and Mitch were talking to each other in hushed voices a short distance away, Henry patted Jasper’s arm.

“Look over there. Why are those two fools here?” Henry remarked with a curious expression on his face.

He looked like he had finally found something that piqued his interest and amused him amidst this sea of boredom.

Jasper glanced in the direction that Henry was pointing.

A slight frown formed across his face when he caught sight of Mitch Langdon and Zane Lancaster.

Neither Bob Lancaster nor Kennedy Langdon were his friends.

Although Jasper had sent them invitations out of courtesy, he did not know if they would be attending the event since they did not notify him beforehand.

Mitch and Zane were here at the event instead of Bob and Kennedy. What were they trying to do?

They were here without an invitation. What did that imply?

Hence, Jasper sensed that something odd was going on.

Just as Jasper was thinking about how to handle the situation, Henry walked over to them with a wide grin on his face.

“Don’t cause any trouble.”

Jasper only had time to give him a single reminder.

“I know, I know. It’s your big day today. I won’t cause any trouble,” Henry said, waving his hand nonchalantly. He did not even turn around to look at him.

“The Southface River project has been completed. This is the biggest urban reconstruction plan for our city since it opened up to the world!

“With this project, JW Real Estates broke the national construction time record due to their strong financial power, advanced design concepts, and the support of the municipal and provincial governments!

“The entire construction of the barren South Bank of the Southface River was completed within ten months.”

Meanwhile, Wendy, who was standing next to Jasper, began to give an overview of the Southface River project to the provincial and municipal officials. Naturally, she did not forget to shower them with praise every once in a while.

Jasper turned away from Mitch and Zane after hearing Wendy’s eloquent introduction. Then, he continued socializing with the two officials intently.

On the other hand, Mitch and Zane’s expressions instantly changed when they saw Henry walking over to them with a large grin on his face. Instinctively, they attempted to avoid him by walking away.

“Hey, why are you guys running away after seeing me? Am I that scary?”

Henry called out to the both of them, who had now turned away from him.

Zane and Mitch could not pretend not to have heard him in a situation like that. After all, they were all people of status. If they really did run away from Henry, it would be absolutely humiliating.

“Young Master Law, we didn’t do anything to provoke you,” Zane said in disdain as he looked at Henry.

He could not compare to any of these wealthy men from the four richest families of Harbor City. Although Bob Lancaster was a prominent figure in Harbor City, he was nothing compared to Zachary Law and Kennedy Langdon.

Henry tended to target Zane the most amongst the group of second generation youth, which led to Zane being overcome with frustration whenever he saw Henry.

Life at the Top Chapter 871

“I didn’t say that you did,” Henry replied, stopping in front of him. He wrapped his arm around Zane’s shoulder. “Why’d you even suggest that? Did you provoke me behind my back without my knowledge?” He asked in a cheery tone.

Zane, who was overcome with guilt, glanced at Jasper instinctively. However, he instantly returned to his senses and looked away from Jasper. He tried to pry off Henry’s hand.

“I did not do anything to you, so let’s both mind our own business. Don’t cling to me like that—we’re not that close to each other.”

“Oh.”

Henry patted Zane’s face with a wide smile across his face as he continued to speak, “I haven’t seen you in a few days, but it seems like your temper has improved. Why won’t you let me cling to you? In the past, you didn’t even dare to breathe loudly in front of me. I’ve just left Harbor City for a few days, and now you’re acting up against me.”

While Henry spoke, he cast a brief glance at Mitch Langdon, whose expression was dark and overcast. “Do you think that you can go against me because this guy is here?” He asked.

Zane stared at Mitch, silently pleading him for help.

Mitch could not bear to watch Henry bully Zane in front of him. After all, one still had to check with a dog’s master before hitting a dog.

“That’s enough from you, Law. We’re just here to look around. Why are you coming after us?”

Henry let out an evil snicker. He was acting like a gangster right now. "I didn't ask you why you were here. Why are you in such a hurry to explain things to me? Are you here with an ulterior motive or something?" He asked.

"But, with an idiot like him..."

Henry patted Zane's face again and scoffed. "I'm afraid nothing good will come your way."

Zane's face flushed red in anger. Rage surged through him as he flung off Henry's arm and said angrily, "Henry Law, you're crossing the line!"

Henry scoffed after his arm was thrown away. "Oh, why are you so pissed off today, little mutt? Do you want me to play with you?" He cooed.

Zane huffed in annoyance and said, "Who do you think you are? You're just one of Jasper Laine's followers. Do you think that you're that much better than me? What a f*cking disgrace to Harbor City. How did someone like you get born in Harbor City?"

Mitch's expression changed as soon as Zane finished speaking.

He knew that Henry despised such words the most.

As expected, a vicious rage flashed across Henry's gaze. He stared at Zane emotionlessly.

"Motherf*cker," Henry spat out as he slapped Zane across his face. "Why can't you talk to me properly? Are you asking for a beating?"

Zane shouted out in pain. He held his face with his hand and roared out in anger, "I've had enough of you, Law! Don't f*cking force me to do something that you'll regret!"

“Force you?” Henry sneered. “Even if I force you to die, what can you do to me? Motherf*cker,” he cursed.

“How dare you ask me not to force you to do anything? Do you think that you’re the main villain that everyone fails to defeat in a game? You’re nobody. You’re just a piece of worthless trash, idiot.”

Mitch took in a deep breath and put himself in front of Zane in order to prevent the dimwit from acting rashly.

“Gloat as much as you want, Henry Law. Let’s see how long all of this will last!” Mitch said, trying his best to suppress the burning anger within him.

“Oh? From what you just said, it seems like your devious scheme is yet to be in action.” Henry asked with narrowed eyes.

Mitch sneered and replied, “Those are your own words. I didn’t mention anything about a scheme.”

The commotion caused by Henry and Zane’s argument attracted a lot of attention. Jasper, who was paying some attention to them from a distance away, frowned slightly. Hence, he excused himself from the officials that he was talking to and headed over to the group.

As he made his way over, he coincidentally overheard what Mitch had said.

“Are the both of you here to celebrate the completion of the Southface River project?” Jasper asked with a smile.

Zane glared at Jasper and huffed in irritation. “I’m afraid that you’ve overthinking our actions,” he replied.

Life at the Top Chapter 872

“Oh? It seems like you aren’t here to celebrate then.”

Jasper turned around and called out, “Julian.”

“I’m here!”

Julian made his way toward Jasper.

“Kick these two people off the venue. They weren’t invited.”

As soon as Jasper finished giving his orders, Zane yelled out in a fit of rage.
“Jasper Laine, what are you doing?!”

Mitch had an extremely unpleasant expression etched across his face as well.

He did not expect Jasper to act in such an arrogant manner and kick both of them out after exchanging just a few sentences with them.

If he and Zane were to get kicked out of the event like a wounded dog in front of everyone, it would be beyond humiliating for them. They would be too ashamed to even return to Harbor City.

“This is a topping-off ceremony. I had personally invited everyone present to celebrate the completion of the Southface River project. Since both of you aren’t here to celebrate, why should I let you stay?” Jasper asked them calmly.

The corner of Zane’s mouth twitched; What Jasper said made sense. Thus, he glanced at Mitch instinctively.

There was a dark expression on Mitch's face. He sneered coldly and said, "There's no need to use your tricks on me, Jasper Laine. Didn't you send out invitations to both our families? We're here to attend the ceremony, but you're kicking us out instead. If news about this breaks out, who will seem to be the one at fault here?"

Jasper raised his brow and said, "You're mistaken. I sent out invitations to your fathers, Mr. Bob Lancaster and Mr. Kennedy Langdon. I intended to invite both of them, but neither of your are on the guest list."

Mitch and Zane's expressions changed. They had both seen Jasper's invitation. As he had said, their names had not been on the invitations. The invitation did not invite Bob and Kennedy to bring their respective family members along either.

Mitch's face flushed red in anger as he let out a disgruntled huff and said, "Since we're not welcome here, we'll leave."

"If you're here to celebrate the completion of the project, you're definitely welcome."

Jasper's words caused Mitch and Zane, who were both walking away crestfallenly, to freeze in their tracks.

"Regardless of your original purpose behind coming here, there's no need to leave in such a hurry now. Stick around to greet some guests with me."

Zane laughed derisively after listening to what Jasper had said. "Are you crazy? What do you take us for? Do you think that we're your followers like Henry Law? Why should we follow you while you greet your guests? Do you think that you're that important?" He questioned.

"In any case, I've already told you what I wanted to say. It's alright if you don't wish to come along," Jasper said. He then led Julian toward the entrance of the building.

Zane stared at Jasper's silhouette suspiciously. "Mr. Langdon, what is he playing at?"

Mitch shook his head slowly and said, "I'm not sure. Let's see what's going on."

Henry sneered as he glanced at the two of them. Based on his understanding of Jasper, he knew that there had to be some kind of trap awaiting them.

Jasper had just walked back to the entrance when a few luxurious cars arrived and came to a stop in front of the entrance.

Initially, the arrival of these few cars did not attract anyone's attention. After all, apart from the reporters, everyone attending the event was of a noble and wealthy background. The event was packed with people, and there were plenty of rich and reputable bosses amongst the guests.

No matter how wealthy they were, could they compare with the Laws?

No matter how much authority they possessed, could they compare with the official from the provincial government?

Therefore, those who noticed the cars simply disregarded it after sparing it a brief glance.

However, everyone's hearts began to race once they caught sight of the person that stepped out of the car.

Life at the Top Chapter 873

Kennedy, of Harbor City's Langdon family.

Kayden, of Harbor City's Langdon family.

Bob Lancaster, one of Harbor City's bigshots.

While Bob did not hold a candle to the four richest families in Harbor City, the man's wealth and status were definitely that of an elite in venues where the four main families were not present.

No one had expected Jasper to be able to invite three of Harbor City's richest families for his topping-out ceremony.

The reporters felt lightheaded and were moments away from going crazy. They were all too excited and could barely contain the urge to step forward and interview the newly-arrived guest, but the stern-looking bodyguards in black suits were very effective in deterring them.

Both Zane and Mitch were stunned when they saw their fathers.

They had not expected their fathers, who had remained impartial all this while, to suddenly rush over for this.

Even so, they dared not hesitate and quickly went to greet them.

"You've done well, Jasper." Kayden smiled at him after observing the surroundings.

Jasper shook Kayden's hands and smiled. "Quite a bit of hard work and ideas were pitched during the designing process back then, and we've taken inspiration from quite a few of Harbor City's design concepts in order to have Southface River look the way it does today. I could bring you around for a tour later."

Kayden nodded. "Sure, I've got to get a good look at it. If I could, I was hoping to buy a few businesses here, and wait for its value to rise."

"You're very welcome to do so."

Jasper then turned to extend his hand toward Kennedy. "Thank you for coming, Mr. Kennedy."

Kennedy chuckled and shook Jasper's hand while replying, "Not bad, it looks much better than I imagined. It seems like we elders need to learn more from youths like you, or we'll only get left behind and forgotten."

Jasper smiled. "Your experience and knowledge is something we youths can only dream of having. We're still young and there are many places where we'll need guidance from elders like you."

Kennedy shook Jasper's hand and turned to smile at Bob as he spoke, "See? I told you Jasper's the best wordsmith amongst all the youth in Harbor City. The way he speaks makes you feel good, doesn't it?"

Bob smiled humorlessly and replied, "That's not right. Jasper isn't from Harbor City, he doesn't count as one of Harbor City's youths."

"Harbor City's part of Somerland now, it means the same thing," Jasper replied calmly.

Scoffing, Bob spoke rather emotionlessly, "Don't think that you can butter me up with your honeyed words. I've got miles more experience than you; have you no shame trying to show off?"

Just then, Zane and Mitch rushed over as well.

“Dad.”

The two greeted their respective fathers.

“What are you two doing here?” Bob frowned at his son and asked solemnly.

“I, I...”

Zane stammered and kept glancing at Mitch.

Mitch frowned. He could not help but think that Zane was an utterly stupid motherf*cker.

“We came over to the Mainland to scout the market, but we couldn’t find anything worth investing in. We were passing by the Southeast Province when he heard the news, so we came over to take a look as well.”

Mitch’s excuse was completely unconvincing.

However, in an event as grand as this one, no one truly cared whether your reason to attend was believable or not. As long as you had a reason, that was good enough.

Kennedy glanced at his son and turned to Jasper. “Jasper, the Boyle family wanted me to help extend their apologies. He’s on a business trip right now and his children are preoccupied with their previous arrangements, so he could not come this time.”

Jasper narrowed his eyes slightly at Kennedy’s words.

He had sent the Boyle family their invitation alongside the Law family.

Despite this, the Boyle family had yet to inform them whether or not they would be attending.

Logically speaking, guests tended to inform the host if they could not attend the event due to specific reasons, or if they could attend, what time they would arrive.

It was unusual for someone else to pass the message.

Zachary had unintentionally mentioned to Jasper before that the Boyle family was the most fickle out of the four richest families. The man followed went wherever there were benefits to be found, which was also why the Boyle family had the most shallow roots compared to the other three richest families.

If he could not afford to offend anyone, then he would just steer clear of the event altogether.

Jasper's relationship with the Boyle family was rather amicable thanks to the Law family. They had worked together a couple of times and their cooperation was always all mutually beneficial.

In any case, Jasper had personally invited the four richest families for this event.

The Law family's attendance was a given, but even Kennedy, who was not on good terms with Jasper had come as well. Yet, the Boyle family was nowhere to be seen.

Kennedy was the one who brought word of this as well.

Not to mention, his message was rather intriguing.

Chuckling, Kennedy spoke, "Why, do you not believe me?"

Jasper smiled and replied, “Why would Mr. Kennedy lie to me? If Mr. Boyle can’t come, then we could always meet again in the future. Shall we go inside? Uncle Law and the officials from the Provincial and City Government are already inside.”

“Sure, let’s.” Kennedy smiled meaningfully as he followed Bob and Kayden, who were smiling silently the entire time, inside.

Zane glared at Jasper, who was walking away alongside the other bigshots, and spoke enviously, “What the f*ck. We’re around the same age. Hell, that b*stard’s even two years younger than me! Who gave him the right to be on equal footing as my dad’s generation?”

“How the f*ck did you consider that equal footing?” Mitch glared at Zane and said irritably.

“Who does he think he is? He’s nothing more than an entertainer for the important guests here, okay? He’s nothing more than a clown in my dad’s eyes.

“Don’t worry, he’ll be nothing more than a stray dog on the street very soon,” Mitch murmured as he stared at Jasper’s retreating figure in disgust.

A content smile hung at the corner of both Mitch and Zane’s lips as they imagined Jasper’s despondent look in the future.

...

Now that all the bigshots had arrived, the ceremony could officially begin.

With so many impressive guests in attendance, Jasper and Dawson had a quick discussion and decided to change the ribbon-cutting ceremony at the last minute.

Ribbon-cutting was the most important part of the topping-out ceremony. The person in charge of cutting, as well as the placement of the guests were very important details.

“You can rearrange them then. Oh, and remember not to add me into the mix. I’ll just watch the ceremony.”

Dawson patted Jasper’s shoulder as he walked into the crowd and spoke with a smile.

Life at the Top Chapter 874

Jasper was momentarily stunned before he quickly spoke, “What? No way, you worked even harder than I did for the project. How can you not be here for the ribbon-cutting ceremony?”

Dawson pointed at the representatives of Harbor City’s richest families as well as the officials from the Provincial and City Government, then said with a smile, “You’re more suited for this kind of event than I am.”

Seeing how Jasper was about to protest, Dawson spoke meaningfully, “I’m growing old, Jasper, but you’re still young. The stage will be yours in the future, and you’re meant to reach further heights than I have!

“That’s why I’m going to help you as much as possible while I still can. I’m an old man about to retire, what’s the point in me joining this kind of event?”

“I have no intention of growing the Schuler Group anymore, it’s enough for me to have managed to obtain the majority market share of the supermarket industry. This is already way past what I ever imagined achieving, but I don’t have the energy to manage nor to fight in business anymore.

“However, it’s different for you. You need this event, so let the Southface River project become a halo over your head. This halo will help you find your footing among those people quicker and easier!

“So go!”

When he heard Dawson’s moving speech, Jasper stopped protesting and nodded solemnly.

He knew that Dawson was letting him take all the glory.

If both of them went up there, then the world would remember that this project that had shaken the entire country had been completed by two people.

However, if Jasper went up there himself, then Jasper would become the mastermind while Dawson would merely be the man that worked in the shadows.

The world was cruel in that it doomed its people with a horrible memory. Thus, people would only remember the first to achieve something, but never the second.

Dawson was too well aware of such a concept, so he decided that he would let Jasper enjoy all the glory.

Jasper then officially rearranged the ribbon-cutting ceremony.

Zachary stood on the left with the Provincial official on the right. Following that was Jasper and Kennedy, who were located behind the former two individuals.

Kayden had declined the invitation to cut the ribbon, which was in line with the Langdon family’s low-profile style.

Jasper had also asked Bob out of respect if he wanted to join, but Bob had merely glanced at the position at the back of the stage before rejecting him darkly.

Under countless camera flashes from the reporters and the enthusiastic voice of the prettiest female host in the television station, the bigshots stepped onto the stage together.

Everyone, including celebrities, reporters, staff, and guests invited to the topping-out ceremony, all looked up at the decadent stage.

Everyone understood that only powerful people and those with extremely distinguished statuses could step up onto the stage.

Most of the people there were destined to never be able to step onto that stage.

Suddenly, the guest in attendance realized something strange.

Among the bigshots, Kennedy was considered one of the younger ones. This was despite the fact that the man was in his forties, and was almost halfway to his fifties.

Next was Zachary who was forty-nine.

The Provincial official was the oldest, at the age of fifty-two.

Even so, he was considered young for someone who held the position he did.

However, when they came to the topic of youth, everyone's gaze fell on Jasper.

This man, that stood behind Zachary and had stunned countless people in one year as he shot up to become one of Southeast Province's richest men, was unexpectedly young.

Everyone then realized that Jasper had achieved far too much.

To the point that everyone seemed to have forgotten that he was just a young man.

Only then did everyone remember that Jasper was only turning twenty-three that year!

Such a young man should not have been able to achieve such success and recognition, yet reality had proven them wrong right before their very eyes.

Wendy stared at Jasper excitedly among the crowd, happier for him than she would have been if she herself were standing on that stage.

Dawson sat beside her, finally taking a break after an entire day of work. He lit a cigarette and looked at Jasper happily, before turning to his daughter and asking, "Wendy, do you know why I agreed to the two of you being together?"

"Because he's outstanding, I guess."

Wendy did not even turn around as her eyes remained glued on Jasper. It was as if this man had become the center of her world right now.

Dawson chuckled at Wendy's reply and asked, "Outstanding? There are plenty outstanding people in this world and, and while Jasper certainly take them pound-for-pound, the reason why I admire him is not the same reason why I support your relationship.

"The former is an opinion I have on him as his senior, in that I hope that the business world will shine even brighter in the future. However, the latter is a consideration I have as a father. I have very different thoughts when looking at the same man but from a different perspective."

Wendy continued to stare at Jasper as she asked mindlessly, "So what's the reason then?"

“Because this young man remembers which woman means the most to him no matter the time or place.”

Wendy’s expression changed when she heard this, and she turned to look at her dad guiltily.

“What’s with that guilty expression? You’re not the one having external flings, he is,” Dawson spoke exasperatedly.

There was no hope for this daughter of his anymore. She was completely devoted to Jasper now, and even in times like this, her first thought was to defend Jasper in case Dawson were to reprimand him.

“Zachary’s daughter is called Anna, right?” Dawson asked calmly.

Wendy cleared her throat and said with a forced calmness, “I think so? We’re not too close.”

“Forget it, then. I don’t want to intrude into the relationship of you youngsters. I’ve thought about it, and considering his wealth and status at such a young age, I’d prefer that he finds someone with class to act as your competitor, rather than arbitrarily have relations with shady women in the future.”

“Dad! What are you talking about?!” Wendy was rather unhappy.

‘What do you mean have relations with shady women? Jasp is not that kind of person!’

Life at the Top Chapter 875

“Do you think I’m blind? Your dad is a man, I’ve been through this and I know it better than you do.

“There’s nothing wrong with men having flings outside, as the worst thing would actually be the inability to attract flings. Jasper at least has the capital and qualifications to do so.”

“But you are my daughter so I’ve hesitated for a long time over this. I don’t want you to end up suffering from this relationship in the future.

“I’ve watched him for a while, and I can say that Jasper still knows his limits. He knows that you’re the most important one and I can be certain that no matter how much JW Capital grows, no other woman will be able to tamper with its core!

“You’re the only exception in all of this. Didn’t you realize that he gave you have one of the main powers at the very beginning, and has slowly shifted the resources and authority over internal affairs over to you?”

Wendy was stunned for a moment before responding dumbfoundedly, “No? All I know is that I do my work every day. It is true that I’m getting busier though.”

“Silly girl, had it not been for Jasper, you’d be helping whoever scammed you now!” Dawson said in disappointment.

“Look at all those heads of the families onstage. Tell me who among them doesn’t have at least a few secret wives?

“Jasper’s only just started, but considering his growth and speed of development, it won’t be long before a whole new Laine family makes a name for itself. With an enterprise as huge as JW Capital and its subsidiaries, no one could possibly ignore its existence.

“While Jasper will spend the first twenty years trying to grow his enterprise, he’ll be spending the next twenty on how to continue the business and ensure that someone inherits it after him.

“You two will have children, and with children comes the issue of inheritance. Fights for authority and control will arise the moment the family grows bigger.

“These are all problems that you two will have to worry about in the future, but it’s obvious now that Jasper’s already made his choice. When it comes to his official wife, he chose you.”

Wendy waved him off and spoke nonchalantly, “You think too much, Dad!

“Jasp told me that he doesn’t like the family business idea, nor does he plan to hand his business to his children unless they’re outstanding enough and have won his approval. Otherwise, he’d much prefer the western model with plenty of professional managers, whereby he can spread out the authority and managerial rights... basically it’s not what you think.”

“Silly girl.” Dawson shook his head.

He was about to say something else when he was interrupted by the celebratory pop of confetti. He looked up to see Jasper, standing at the center of everyone’s gaze with a mature and confident smile. The man oozed an indescribable charm.

Dawson suddenly smiled and muttered to himself, “Perhaps. Maybe he trusts you with this because you’re so innocent and pure that you’ve never thought of such things.”

Meanwhile, among the crowd stood two pairs of eyes that reddened with envy as they glared at Jasper.

“What the f*ck! Why! Why!” Zane held his heart gnaw maddeningly as if there were seven to eight crabs trampling over it with their pointy feet. It itched and it hurt, but as a whole, he felt sour.

“What the f*ck does he think he is? He’s just a country bumpkin, a dog from the farms! How dare he walk all the way up there while all I can do is stand here and watch?”

Mitch’s gaze was stormy and his slightly shaking balled fist betrayed the unease within him.

Just then, Jasper's gaze swept over the crowd. It fell on Mitch and Zane for a short moment before he averted his gaze.

Zane could barely hold back their anger when they spotted this.

"What the f*ck was that look from that son of a b*tch? Is he looking down on us?"

"Or is he mocking uh, huh? Is he mocking us because we can only stand down here and watch him show off onstage?"

Mitch harrumphed and spoke sinisterly, "What's he even being so proud for? So what if he is up there? He's still standing behind someone isn't he? Does he think that he can somehow stand on equal footing with my dad and the rest now?"

"F*cking naive! He's just a piece of trash that's joining in on the fun."

Right after Mitch said this, the ribbon-cutting ceremony was about to begin. Suddenly, Zachary turned around to speak to Jasper.

Under everyone's surprised gaze, they watched as Zachary swapped places with Jasper as the latter tried to refuse him.

"Motherf*cker! What the hell does this mean?!" Zane was in disbelief.

'Jasper was standing in front of Zachary?

'What did that mean?

'The Head of Harbor City's richest family, the Law family, was acting as Jasper's second?!

'Has the world gone mad?'

“You’re the host today, Jasper. You should be the one to stand here,” Zachary told Jasper.

There was no way Jasper would let Zachary stand behind him, so he immediately declined, “No way, Uncle Law. You’ve helped me so much all this while. Moreover, because of your experience and everything else, there’s just no way I can stand in front of you.”

Zachary smiled widely and spoke, “This is where you’re wrong. Standing behind someone doesn’t indicate anything except who the guest and the host are. Now, this is something we can’t afford to mess up.

“Listen to me! Come on, stand here!”

With that, Zachary pulled Jasper to stand in front of him while he moved to occupy Jasper’s previous position.

This turn of events had stunned everyone offstage, and even Kennedy’s face darkened as he stood beside the Provincial official.

‘What is Zachary doing? Is he forcefully dragging Jasper up and letting him step over him?’

Kenney felt the urge to turn and leave, but he held back only because it would make him look back.

He thought back to the conversation his father and Rogers from Quantum Funds had with him and forced himself to accept the current situation. He continued to wear a smile on his face, but his gaze was frighteningly sinister.

“Here, Mr. Laine. Let’s cut the ribbon.”

On the other hand, the [rovincial official did not seem to care too much about this and invited Jasper gleefully.

Jasper turned around and took a pair of golden scissors from the tray held up by the hands of the province's number one female television host—hands that countless men in Southeast Province had dreamed about, and lifted it with the provincial official. He said with a smile, "Let's cut the ribbon then."

The long red ribbon was then cut in three places, in one spot by Jasper and the man from the provincial government, as well as Zachary and Kennedy, who each held a pair of scissors of their own.

The moment the ribbon was cut, countless fireworks shot into the air, lighting up the night sky over the Southface River. Half of Nauritius City's city folk looked up to see the blindingly bright firework show.

It was a sensational sight.

Life at the Top Chapter 876

Fireworks shot into the sky once the ribbon was cut. The night lit up, and everyone applauded in celebration.

Jasper was in a great mood.

After all, the Southface River project was the first big project he had completed since he had arrived at Nauritus City.

As that moment, with the exception of the skyscraper in Waterhoof City, the Southface River project was the biggest, most expensive, and most effective real estate project in the province.

Jasper was very pleased now that all his hard work had borne fruit, and everything had ended well.

Walking off the stage, Jasper bumped into Lance, who had an elated expression on his face.

“How’s the situation today, Lance?”

As the new General Manager of the real estate company after Sean was promoted, Lance was only in charge of one thing today, and that was to sign contracts with clients who showed interest in shop or building lots in the Southface River project.

“It went very well, Mr. Laine! We’ve signed around 500 million worth of contracts today, with 300 million worth of contracts of intent that we’ll be able to solidify after following up on them later. 70% of the properties in the project have already been rented out as well.

“Things were especially busy when it came to the few promotional living districts we completed. The sales were downright terrifying today, and someone managed to buy almost all of them. The houses in those districts have already been sold out.”

Jasper nodded in satisfaction and replied, “Not bad. We’ll be able to sell them all at this pace.”

“Remember, we can sell residential properties, but when it comes to shops and commercial buildings, those can only be leased out. If you don’t know how to handle some of them, then turn to Sean, alright?”

Lance nodded. “Alright, Mr. Laine. I actually came to look for you because I wanted to report something else as well, something that I don’t think Mr. Tucker will be able to handle himself.”

“What is it?”

Jasper brought Lance backstage. Jasper made small talk with people on the way there as everyone greeted him, regardless of whether they knew him or not. Jasper replied to every single one of these individuals with a smile and a nod.

“Mr. Kayden’s assistant came to me with the intention of buying the three commercial buildings on the left of the Southface River Tower, beside the river.”

“These three buildings are high-quality and represent the primary assets in this project. They’re also the most valuable pieces of property after the tower itself. However, Mr. Kayden asked for them, and I didn’t dare make a decision, so I came to ask you instead, Mr. Laine.”

Jasper smiled and replied, “And here I was worried about what was wrong. If he wants it, then sell it to him!”

“But remember to give him a run for his money. The Langdon family is very rich, and the father-son duo are rumored to be able to buy out half of Harbor City. After all, that’s why they’re called Half-the-Harbor Langdons.”

“The fact that he wants to buy into the Southface River projects means that he’s acknowledged the value of the property. There’s no reason for us to keep all the benefits to ourselves—it’s only fair that we share. Having said that, it doesn’t mean we can’t wring his wallet a little.

“Price is no obstacle for people like him when it comes to something they’re interested in, understand?”

After hearing Jasper say this, Lance nodded in enlightenment and chuckled, “You’re so smart, Mr. Laine. I know what to do now.”

“Stop your flattery.”

Jasper chided with a smile. Seeing Ted, the man in charge of Easy Media, jog over, he continued, “Alright then, go ahead.”

After Lance left. Ted stopped before Jasper with a large smile on his face. “So, Mr. Laine, how’s the Gala tonight?”

Jasper nodded. “Not bad.”

Seeing Ted’s prideful expression, Jasper had no choice but to rain on his parade, “The fireworks show was a rip-off of Advent Entertainment Group’s idea during the Olympic Banquet in Swallow Capital. Can’t you guys come up with something new?”

Ted smiled awkwardly and spoke, “We were short on time and we didn’t have that many good ideas...”

“So, why did you seek me out? I still have a bunch of other people to entertain. Tell me quickly so I can deal with it now,” Jasper said this as he entered a small room and took off his suit jacket in exchange for a looser top.

Ted went straight to the point and replied, “Mr. Laine, do you still remember the woman who goes by the name Scarlet Yates?”

Life at the Top Chapter 877

Jasper thought back to the pretty actress he had met when he first took over Michael’s Gladness Movies before it became Advent Entertainment Group.

‘She’s looking for me through Ted?’

‘Does she want fame?’

‘More resources?’

These were nothing new in the entertainment industry.

Jasper furrowed his brows as this was not good news.

“I do.” Jasper nodded.

Ted was a smart man, and from the slight change in Jasper’s face, he could tell that Jasper was unhappy about this. Ted’s eyes shifted as he silently regretted agreeing to help Scarlet and began thinking about how best to frame the issue.

“Just tell me, what is it?” Jasper looked at Ted and sighed.

Ted smiled wryly and replied, “It’s just that Scarlet came to look for me because she wanted to introduce a friend to you, Mr. Laine. It’s the talented Stephen Cole. You’ve heard of him right, Mr. Laine?”

‘Stephen Cole?’

It was rare for people not to recognize this top-notch master of comedy.

At the height of his career, it was said that every citizen owed that man a movie ticket since they were all pirating it online instead of watching it in cinemas.

Jasper liked Stephen Cole’s movies as well, but he could not fanboy over celebrities considering his current status. Not to mention, he was well aware that celebrities were often completely different on and off-screen.

Stephen Cole, for example, was a hilarious man in his movies, yet he was a stern and unsmiling man in private.

‘Don’t believe me?’

‘Yet that was the truth.’

‘In any case, what is Scarlet trying to do by introducing Stephen Cole to me?’

“I’ve heard of him. Bring him over quickly if she wants to introduce him, then. I have around fifteen minutes.” Jasper gave it some thought and decided that he would give this master of comedy some of his time.

After all, he had watched quite a few of Stephen Cole’s movies in both his past and present life, and, to put it kindly, he had never done watched him in a cinema.

Not to mention, this man was sort of like Jasper’s idol in his past life, and Jasper was curious about him.

There was no harm in meeting the man.

Ted joyfully acknowledged Jasper's agreement and quickly jogged out.

In no time at all, Ted managed to find Scarlet and Stephen, who were waiting anxiously in another room.

"How'd it go, Mr. Swanson?"

Scarlet asked excitedly as Ted entered through the door.

While she had seen Jasper before, Scarlet knew that her seemingly high status, countless fans, and plethora of suitors, were nothing as compared to Jasper, who was stood at the peak of the business world.

Celebrities were nothing more than playthings for bigshots like him.

Therefore, Scarlet was not confident about meeting him for the first time.

Despite this, Ted chuckled and replied, "Don't worry, there's nothing I can't do once I give you my word. Mr. Laine's agreed to meet you two, but he's busy and can only spare fifteen minutes. So come with me quickly."

Life at the Top Chapter 878

Ted spoke to Scarlet as he walked ahead, "Don't forget what you promised me either. Please introduce my artists to others in the industry so they can advance their careers."

"Of course, Mr. Swanson. Don't worry, I'll definitely do so," Scarlet whispered.

She turned to look at Stephen, who seemed rather nervous, and comforted him, “Mr. Laine agreed to meet us, which means we’re already halfway there. Don’t worry too much about it.”

Stephen forced a smile and replied, “Yeah, I hope so. Thank you.”

“We’re friends, aren’t we?” Scarlet smiled brightly.

Stephen felt his heart skip a beat at Scarlet’s beautiful smile.

There had been countless people surrounding him, calling him Steph and buddy, back when he was famous. Yet, they had all run away now that he needed help. The only one willing to forgo her image to help him was Scarlet, who he did not even talk to much.

This was a favor he would never forget.

Shortly after, Ted brought the two before Jasper.

“Mr. Laine,” Scarlet greeted cautiously.

“Hello, Mr. Laine,” Stephen greeted as well.

“Hi.” Jasper smiled and nodded. His gaze fell on Stephen first. It was a rather interesting feeling to see someone he was so familiar with in films appear before him in real life whilst acting so courteous.

In all honesty, this did wonders for his ego.

“Well, you can probably already tell that I’m a bit busy today. I don’t have much time—maybe around fifteen minutes? So let’s talk as we walk and try to be as concise as possible. Is that okay?” Jasper suggested.

Scarlet looked at Stephen.

Stephen hastily replied, "Of course, Mr. Laine. We won't waste your time."

Jasper walked toward the door as Ted quickly ran over to open the door for him like an attendant. This was hardly befitting of the president of the largest entertainment company in half of the Mainlands, but he seemed rather happy and proud to do it.

Jasper walked out first, with Scarlet following half a step behind. Stephen stood on his right as they walked.

"It's like this, Mr. Laine. I wanted to meet you, and Scar helped because I was hoping that you could invest in my company, Mr. Laine."

Stephen's first sentence told Jasper a lot.

Scar.

Invest.

Jasper remembered how some rumors surrounding Stephen and Scar had surfaced back when the two had filmed A Somer Odyssey in his past life. Jasper was still a normal civilian then, so he did not know whether the rumors were true, nor did he have any understanding of the lives of such high-class celebrities.

Jasper also remembered that Stephen had opened his own film company in the year 2000. However, while the films involving Stephen himself made plenty of money, the company as a whole ended up making terrible losses the first two years.

Unfortunately, there was no way a film company could survive from the revenue of just one person.

Thus, Stephen found himself in a very troublesome financial crisis back then.

This was further worsened by the fact that Stephen did not have many friends in the entertainment industry, which placed him in a difficult position. This had also been one of the reasons why Stephen had become more withdrawn.

However, after a few more years of financial difficulty, Stephen's film company began to find its footing again after the release of blockbusters like Monastery Soccer and JC7. While these films did not make immense profits, they still brought in quite a bit of revenue.

"I heard that you recently opened a film company, but it's not going very well for you," Jasper spoke.

Stephen nodded and admitted curtly, "You're right. The company is barely making ends meet."

"I've produced a few films, but they all ended up losing money. I couldn't even earn back a tenth of what making the films cost me, and I'm surviving purely on my own savings. I even got a loan from the bank with my home as collateral, but I don't know how long that'll last me."

"Why didn't you ask other entertainment companies in Harbor City to invest in yours? Why run all the way here to ask me?" Jasper asked with a smile.

As they spoke, the group of people made their way out the room and to the backstage area. More than half the people present were celebrities changing their attire before they got on stage to perform. In a space like that, one would bump shoulders with a celebrity or manager and every turn.

All the celebrities recognized Jasper as he walked over, and they all wanted to approach him.

Life at the Top Chapter 879

Some were celebrities from Harbor City, and their expressions turned curious when they saw Jasper and Stephen talking.

The entire Harbor City entertainment industry knew of Stephen's situation, but no one had expected him to ask Jasper for help.

"Frankly speaking, I've sought them out before. Most of them just rejected me on the spot in hopes that I would star in their films instead. But I want to make my own films," Stephen spoke sincerely.

"How much do you want?" Jasper asked.

"Huh?"

The question caught Stephen off guard and he was stunned speechless. He looked at Jasper in confusion.

Jasper repeated himself, "You wanted my investment, did you not? How much?"

"I... I'll need at least 10 million US Dollars, but I can give you half of my company's shares in return," Stephen mustered the courage to speak.

"Deal."

That single word shocked both Scarlet and Ted, let alone Stephen.

'Is this how rich people acted nowadays?

'They'll drop 10 million US Dollars the way ordinary people spend 1 buck?'

“Let’s do it this way. Ted, you’ll be in charge of this transaction. Easy Media will pay the money and the shares will fall under Easy Media.

“Stephen’s company will be Easy Media’s first foothold in Harbor City’s film industry to test the waters. However, keep the priority on the Mainland’s film industry. After all, the Mainland’s the bigger market—Harbor City’s is too small.” Jasper turned to Ted.

“Alright, Mr. Laine,” Ted quickly nodded.

He knew that Jasper was giving him a chance.

“Alright, then you’ll be in contact with Ted from now on,” Jasper shook Stephen’s hand and said with a smile.

“Thank you, Mr. Laine. But I have to ask Mr. Laine, aren’t you going to review my company first? What if I’m... scamming you?” Stephen asked unable to hide the curiosity bubbling within him.

He had not hoped to get anything out of a fifteen-minute talk, much less expect a deal to be completed in less than five minutes.

All that had transpired was a quick conversation with Stephen answering a handful of Jasper’s question. Yet, that was all it took to receive a 10 million US Dollar investment. Stephen wondered if this was reality or if he was merely dreaming.

“You wouldn’t.” Jasper smiled meaningfully.

“Nor do you dare.”

Stephen understood. ‘Indeed, who didn’t know about Jasper in Harbor City?’

‘So what if Jasper was a Mainlander? No one in Harbor City dared to claim that they could afford offending Jasper.

‘One would first have to look toward the Law family name and determine if they were strong enough to overpower them.’

‘Even the entertainment industry that is very discriminative to Mainlanders has no choice but to accept the new reality in Jasper entering the industry and taking a large portion of the market share. In a world like this, what can small fries like us even hope to achieve?’

“Alright, I’ll have to get going now. Please enjoy yourselves,” Jasper spoke.

He turned and coincidentally came face to face with a few celebrities from Harbor City, including A-line superstars like Superstars Kong and Lynch.

“Hello, Mr. Laine.”

Superstars stood on both sides of the aisle as they greeted him politely.

“Hello,” Jasper returned the greeting with a smile.

“Now that’s how a successful man looks,” Scarlet murmured as she stared at Jasper’s glowing figure.

“Yeah. How can an ordinary person compare with that?” Stephen smiled wryly.

Life at the Top Chapter 880

Scarlet felt rather disappointed, for she thought that Jasper would speak to her more. She had not expected that their interaction to be limited to a brief greeting at the very start, as the man seemed to have forgotten her existence altogether just a moment later.

“Oh, right.” Jasper suddenly turned around after walking quite a distance away.

“There’s another gala tonight. Scarlet, would you be interested in coming with me as my plus one?”

When he said this, the large group of superstars and A-line celebrities all looked at Scarlet enviously.

There was indeed a ceremonial banquet happening that night, and only top-notch bigshots like the Law family would be attending. This was the type of banquet that the celebrities could only dream of joining.

While some famous celebrities had already received an invitation, it was very different going by themselves, and going as Jasper’s companion.

A few specific female celebrities set their sights on Scarlet, their gazes boring a hole into her.

“Yes, of course!”

Scarlet was temporarily stunned, feeling as if she had just won the lottery, but replied ecstatically.

“Alright, I’ll have someone pick you up later, then.” Jasper smiled and left coolly.

After he left, all the celebrities, famous and not, came over to them. A small portion of them wanted to know what Stephen and Jasper had been talking about, while the majority stepped forward to make friends with Scarlet.

This was the charm of power and wealth.

Scarlet felt her mind blur as celebrities much more famous than her who would never have previously given her the time of day now surrounded her. One single thought surfaced in her mind.

'It must be nice being rich and powerful.'

...

Thanks to the press, the already-famous project now became a household name. Following that, the ceremonial banquet involving most of Harbor City's and the Mainland's rich and famous only further spread the name of the Southface River.

More than half of the South were now aware of this place known as the Southface River.

They also came to know of a company that went by the name JW Real Estates.

Under the gaze of countless pairs of eyes, the topping-out ceremony finally came to an end.

More than sixteen television stations had come to cover it, and both Nauritus Television and Southeast Television had live-streamed the entire event. Twenty-three newspaper representatives had also come to the scene to get some questions in during the Q&A session.

Thus, a series of powerful publicity was in place to roll out that night as they planned to spread the news all over the country.

This was a decision Jasper had made with Dawson.

If JW Real Estates wanted to make a name for itself throughout the nation in the shortest possible time, then it had to have a signature project. The Southface River project was their only choice.

The Southface River project managed to meet two key criteria at once, in that it was a good fit for the country's current economical climate, and was also the type of development that modern society currently desired. Thus, it met those needs at precisely the right time and place.

Jasper had to use this project to publicize JW Real Estates, for the next opportunity would be the topping-out ceremony for the skyscraper in Waterhoof City. This would take at least another year.

Jasper could not afford to wait, as the real estate industry was beginning to develop and he did not have much time.

Wendy and Dawson were exhausted, for the two had essentially been ensuring that the ceremony ran smoothly the entire time.

Jasper, on the other hand, had been lazy as he spoke to Zachary for a few hours and then chatted a bit when the senior officials from the city and provincial government had arrived.

After the ceremony was complete, the banquet began. The father-daughter duo was exhausted so they decided to head back first, no longer bothering to entertain the guests.

Jasper was now left to host the entire event by himself.

The banquet was held in the newly constructed hotel in the Southface River Center. It had a huge banquet hall, and could easily fit hundreds of people.

With Jasper's individual attention, the banquet turned out to be extremely classy.

They got the most experienced servers from Nauritus City's largest five-star Hilton Hotel while even the team of chefs was the best that the Southeast Province had to offer.

Expenses for this alone had cost Jasper at least seven figures.

Life at the Top Chapter 881

Money poured out like a steady stream of water. Even so, Jasper had never been frugal when it came to events like these.

If morning was said to be the time for financial and daily reports to shine, then nighttime events were heaven on earth for entertainment news reporters.

There were celebrities everywhere. Three out of Harbor City's four richest families led the way, accompanied by many important and powerful people from the Southeast Province's and its surroundings. Furthermore, eight bigshots out of the dozen or so state-owned real estate enterprises within the country were also present.

Superstars were aplenty as well. Beautiful ladies, all of Harbor City's four main Superstars, and multiple Miss Harbor City's fighting over who got to appear first. The gala had gathered almost all of Harbor City's and the Mainland's top-notch celebrities.

A simple thank you banquet had now turned into an extremely classy gala.

Female stars were dolled up and looking beautiful as they walked the red carpet into the hotel.

Reporters could take a photo at random here and they would probably have a shot of rich sons with beautiful celebrities or models in tow. An abundance of people who tended to be the center of scandalous rumors were present, and the reporters grinned so wide that their smiles stretched from ear to ear.

Wendy did not like such events, and the past two days had indeed tired her out, so she opted to stay home that day.

However, Jasper felt that it would be rather embarrassing to appear alone in such situations, so he asked Scarlet to join him.

This action alone did not mean much, but then rumors started to circulate about Jasper waiting for Scarlet to arrive by the entrance.

Goddess Scarlet Seemingly Dating the New Billionaire Jasper Laine!

Scarlet Blooms into a Smile with the Youngest Billionaire by Her Side!

Harbor City's Goddess Stolen by Mainland Billionaire!

Similar headlines instantly began to appear in the reporters' minds.

Just as Scarlet reached out to take Jasper's arm, the dark night lit up like the afternoon sun with camera flashes.

The group of reporters no longer held back as they rushed over to interview them, but a group of bodyguards quickly held them back.

Jasper ignored them as he ushered Scarlet into the hotel.

"There's a lot of people," Scarlet commented with her arm looped around Jasper's.

"I didn't know celebrities feared crowds," Jasper spoke with a smile.

"But these aren't normal people," Scarlet replied.

"How are they not normal? All of them have a head resting on their shoulders. There's nothing special about them."

Scarlet pursed her lips and smiled, her gaze sparkling with a certain allure as she turned to Jasper. "You're the most special one out of them all."

Jasper turned to look at Scarlet and chuckled, "You know, I'm sort of a fan of your films."

"Oh?" Scarlet looked at Jasper in shock, then she pouted, "Isn't this the line that rich playboys use to deceive female celebrities?"

"I've watched A Somer Odyssey at least ten times," Jasper exclaimed softly.

He was technically speaking the truth, but he had watched it during his past life.

No one could stay back from Purple Fairy.

"Tell me just one of my lines and I'll believe you." Scarlet realized that Jasper was a down-to-earth person that did not seem to keep his nose in the air, so she mustered up the courage to joke with him.

"Do you see that man? He looks like a dog," Jasper softly recited a classic line from Scarlet's film.

Coincidentally, at that moment, Zane had turned around and spotted Scarlet, so he and was running over in surprise when Jasper said this. Hence, he happened to hear the quote as well.

"Who the f*ck are you calling a dog?!" Zane roared.

Jasper turned to look at Zane and frowned. "I never realized that there were people so proud to be called a dog that they'd run all the way over to accept the title."

When he said this, Scarlet could not hold back and immediately burst into a melodic laugh, causing her body to shudder slightly.

Life at the Top Chapter 882

Zane felt his dignity crumble when he saw how happy Scarlet was while laughing.

He had always liked Scarlet.

He liked her differently from how he liked the other female celebrities that he had by now tired of fooling around with.

Those female stars were willing to sleep with anyone for the sake of a bit of money and status.

Scarlet was not like that.

Scarlet was the kind who would rather die than let anyone force themselves onto her.

Such purity and will were extremely rare in such a day and age.

Despite this, Scarlet was precisely that.

Zane had been trying all sorts of tactics to get close to her, but he was never given the chance.

Now that he finally had the chance to see Scarlet tonight, he was just about to seize the opportunity to get close to her when he suddenly earned himself the title of a dog.

Not to mention, Scarlet had watched the scene unfurl. This was not something Zane could accept.

“What did you say, you country bumpkin!” Zane grit his teeth.

Already harboring a deep hatred for Jasper, this incident only added to the resentment. Now that Mitch was not here to hold him back, Zane was about to lose his mind.

“Ridiculous.”

Jasper pulled Scarlet away after coldly commenting on Zane’s behavior.

He was the host tonight, and he could not lower himself by causing a commotion with Zane. This would only make Jasper look bad in front of everyone.

“Wait!”

Zane called out to stop them.

He stared at Scarlet’s hand that was wrapped around Jasper’s with envy and resentment. Zane’s anger skyrocketed as he could acutely see how Jasper’s arm would subtly brush past Scarlet’s chest while he walked.

“Scarlet is mine! You better watch yourself!” Zane spoke coldly.

“Does she look like some property you can own?” Jasper asked.

Zane scoffed and replied, “Stop acting like you’re some f*cking sh*t. She’s just a woman! I’ll get whoever I want, property or not!”

“See? This is the difference between us.”

Jasper shook his head disappointedly. ‘Zane’s got to be one of the most moronic trust-fund children around.

‘Scarlet’s paled expression clearly shows what she thinks of his statement.

'Yet, he's trying to flirt with girls like that?

'What woman's going to love him if not for the power and money his family provides?

'Truly father like son.'

As he brought Scarlet away, Jasper asked, "Do you know him?"

Scarlet seemed terrified that Jasper would misunderstand, so she quickly replied, "It's not like that, he just won't leave me alone."

Jasper nodded and spoke calmly, "I'll put in a word to the group later. Try to angle your work toward the Mainland in the future. People like him will do just about anything to get what they want."

Scarlet asked softly, "Won't that be too much trouble?"

"Trouble? All I have to do is say a single word," Jasper replied with a smile.

"Don't worry about losing out. Harbor City's entertainment industry might be more developed than the Mainland's right now, but the Mainland is the future. All of Harbor City's celebrities will come over to start competing for stardom when that happens, so it'll be good for you if you come now and make a name for yourself."

"Okay, I'll listen to you then," Scarlet replied gently.

Jasper's brow twitched slightly. 'Did she misunderstand?'

Jasper was thinking about how to explain himself when Henry suddenly walked over with a bounce in his steps.

“Good, I’ve finally found you. My dad wants you to come over, the main table’s waiting for you. You better get there, you host, before I become a f*cking microphone,” Henry spoke in irritation.

“Alright, I’m going. Help me watch over her; don’t let Zane harass her,” Jasper told Henry.

Life at the Top Chapter 883

Henry glanced at Scarlet and chuckled. “Yo, if it isn’t Scarlet.”

“Hello, Mr. Law,” Scarlet greeted softly, slightly afraid in the face of Harbor City’s most formidable Young Master.

“I didn’t know you liked such soft and gentle women. Then why would you fancy someone as terrifying as my younger sister?” Henry grinned at Jasper evilly.

“Cut the nonsense,” Jasper glared at Henry.

Bidding Scarlet goodbye, Jasper made a beeline for the main table.

Scarlet watched Jasper walk toward the main table that was filled with extremely distinguished people and sighed. ‘I’ll never be qualified to stand there, will I?’

“Stop looking there. Where’s that stupid f*cker? Where’s Zane?” Henry’s voice jolted Scarlet out of her thoughts.

“Ah, he was there just now.” Scarlet pointed in the general direction behind her. “Are you going over?”

“Your boss asked me to take care of you and not let that f*cker harass you, no?”

Henry grinned evilly.

“The best way to protect someone is to get rid of their enemies first.”

Henry then happily went over to screw with Zane.

Unfortunately, Henry was doomed for disappointment.

This was because Bob had gotten to Zane first.

“Did you start something with Jasper again just now?” Bob asked angrily.

Zane replied irritably, “Motherf*cker. That country bumpkin stole my woman! I’m going to kill him!”

Slap!

Bob smacked Zane across the face in front of everyone.

“Dad! What the hell, why are you hitting me?!” Zane shouted as he cupped his cheek.

“F*cking Hell, you’d have gone and gotten yourself killed if I didn’t slap you!”

Bob growled and glanced at the main table where Jasper and Kennedy were engaged in a very happy conversation at that moment. The two did not look like enemies at all.

“Look at Jasper. He and your Uncle Kennedy want nothing more than to rip each other apart, yet here they are talking happily like friends when they meet. Look at you, f*cking useless! How’d I even give birth to something like you?”

“Look around and think about who the host tonight is before you act!”

Bob glared at Zane one more time before he continued angrily, “I have to go over there as well, so do not cause any more trouble for me! Otherwise, I’ll have you return to Harbor City immediately, and teach you a lesson when I get back!”

Zane cupped his cheek as he watched his father leave. At that moment, Jasper was currently raising his glass to toast everyone, causing Zane's eyes to drip with resentment at the sight.

"Stop looking, he won't die no matter how much you glare at him."

Mitch's voice was suddenly heard beside Zane.

Startled, Zane turned to look at Mitch and asked, "Where've you been? I almost died from an anger-derived heart attack!"

"What's there to be angry about?" Mitch sneered.

"I went to contact one of the spies I hid here. There's no way we can screw Jasper over in this kind of event."

"How'd the talk go?" Zane asked in surprise.

Zane was willing to die early if it meant that he could get rid of Jasper.

As they stood in the crowd, Mitch glared at Jasper darkly before turning to Zane, who had a similar expression on his face. "Let's not talk about this now. Come on, we're leaving!"

"Where are we going?" Zane asked.

"F*cker, we're going to look for the person that can get rid of Jasper! I won't let him step all over me! I'll let anyone do it, anybody but him!" Mitch seethed.

Zane's eyes shone in excitement. "Nice! Let's go now, then!"

The two figures vanished into the crowd while Julian, who had already received Jasper's cue long ago, secretly weaved through the crowd and followed them.

Life at the Top Chapter 884

After toasting the main table and giving them his thanks, Jasper realized that Julian had vanished, which meant that the latter had gone to work.

With a small smile, Jasper took the napkin Scarlet handed him to wipe his mouth. Then, he said, "Let's go, I still have twenty to thirty tables to toast and thank. How's your alcohol tolerance, by the way? Do you want to come with me?"

"It's not too bad," Scarlet replied softly, sneaking a glance at Jasper's expression. It was as if she was worried that Jasper would get upset upon finding out that she drank.

It was evident that Scarlet was overthinking as, instead of being upset, Jasper replied with satisfaction, "Great. Let's drink a bit and hold them off."

"..."

Half of Scarlet's gentlemanly image of Jasper immediately shattered when she heard the words 'hold them off'.

However, the man's kind and caring reputation still held firm in her mind.

The banquet lasted for at least another two hours.

Despite calling it a gala, it was essentially an event for the upper class to socialize.

Everyone seemed to understand the modus operandi as they chatted aimlessly with each other. Everyone was friends regardless of whether they were acquainted or not, almost like how men who sat at the same table in bars became sworn brothers.

Julian only rushed back when the gala was about to end. He whispered in Jasper's ear for a bit as the latter nodded before he continued to send the guests off.

It was only right that Jasper sent people like Kayden and Kennedy off in person.

After watching them get into their cars and driving away, Jasper said calmly, "Go dig a little further and find out whose villa they went to. We might find something. Who knows?"

Julian nodded understandingly.

"Let's go, Jasper." Zachary arrived a little late. His complexion was flushed, and the man seemed to have drunk a bit too much, but he was in a great mood.

Jasper definitely had to send Zachary back to the hotel himself.

"You don't need to come with me, Jul, I'll leave by myself later. Send Scarlet back to her hotel then go back and rest," Jasper instructed Julian.

Julian glanced at Scarlet, then nodded and turned to start the car.

"Go back first, see you next time," Jasper told Scarlet.

Despite her reluctance, Scarlet nodded obediently and bid him farewell, "Alright. I'll get going then."

Scarlet did not forget to bid Zachary, the extremely distinguished figure, goodbye as well.

"I'll be leaving, Mr. Law."

"Hmm."

Zachary nodded faintly.

While the tone was indifferent, Scarlet still let out a sigh of relief.

She knew that no celebrity in harbor City's entertainment industry could illicit such a response from Zachary.

For those celebrities did not even have the right to greet Zachary.

After Scarlet left, Jasper got into the car with Zachary and Henry.

"Uncle Law, what's the situation with the Boyle family?"

Now that they were finally alone, Jasper immediately asked about the situation with the Boyle family.

"What do you think?"

Zachary scoffed. "The Boyle family got into big trouble with some business over in Southeast Terra, and Kennedy just so happened to be able to help. The two families have been contacting each other very frequently lately."

Jasper nodded and chuckled. "Looks like the two families have reached an agreement."

"Ignore him. Boyle won't be able to cause any major issues," Zachary stated domineeringly.

Life at the Top Chapter 885

“Now that I think about it, you’ve done very well on the Southface River project. If possible, I think we can work together to spread it across the country.”

Zachary had been very excited throughout the drive since he had witnessed first-hand the overall effect of the Southface River project’s topping-out ceremony. Thus, he had been thinking about expanding the domestic real estate market alongside Jasper.

“It’s a great idea, Uncle Law, but it won’t be easy to execute,” Jasper smiled wryly.

While the Southface River project was completed quickly, and its effects were almost immediate, this was partly due to the fact that they were the first to accomplish such a feat. Coupled with the fact that the Southeast Province was Jasper and Dawson’s Territory, and that they had the support of the officials, the overall project was not very challenging.

It would be a different story to take on such a huge project in a foreign city. Merely coming to agreements with the official departments would be a major headache.

After all, every city has its own set of interests, and if you wanted to make money there, paying the toll was unavoidable.

Zachary naturally understood what Jasper was saying, and he smiled meaningfully, “That’s okay. Business isn’t always smooth-sailing everywhere we go.”

The car pulled up at the hotel lobby as the two spoke, and Henry was about to slip out of the car secretly when Zachary grabbed ahold of him and frowned. "Where are you going?"

"I... I'm not staying here."

"Don't worry. I checked Uncle Law into a suite, there are multiple rooms." Jasper smiled with crescent-eyes as he helped Zachary attack Henry.

"Perfect. You're coming with me tonight. There's something I need to talk to you about," Zachary spoke sternly.

"Come on, Dad, I'm not a child anymore, what's there to talk about? Moreover, I've got a room of my own on the other side of town. It'll be a waste of money if I stay here with you." Henry was in despair.

"So now you want to be frugal? I don't need you to be frugal with this sum of money. I'd buy ten hotels and it'd still be worth it if you're willing to turn your personality around and actually focus on business instead of playing all day.

"Cut the nonsense and come with me."

Jasper chuckled as Zachary dragged a wailing Henry away. He was about to ask Julian to send him back when he received a call from Celine.

"Where are you?"

Celine's voice was drawled out as usual and laced with the magnetism and charm that other women could never imitate.

"Hotel. I'm about to go back though," Jasper replied.

"Hotel? Yo, I've never heard a man tell a woman that they've just stepped out of a hotel, let alone so unashamedly," Celine teased.

“Enough, why are you calling so late at night? Did something happen?” Jasper asked.

“Don’t go back, come straight to mine.”

Jasper furrowed his brows slightly, “It’s late. Is something wrong?”

“As much as I want to tease you a little more, we’re a little short on time right now. So to prevent you from scolding me, I’ll get straight to the point. They’re going to make a move tonight.”

Jasper’s brows froze mid-furrow and he replied grimly, “I’m on my way.”

...

Celine sat in the hotel room, curled lazily over the sofa. Her laptop was on her knees and there was a glass of red wine in her left hand. On her right was a pile of snacks.

This was the scene that Jasper was met with when he hastily rushed over.

Jasper almost suspected this woman was watching a movie on her laptop instead.

Or how could she look so at ease?

Jasper had already contacted Jake on the way over, but Jake could not detect any abnormalities. Instead, he claimed that the other party was still fighting them for shares as per usual.

Coupled with Celine’s laid-back posture, Jasper immediately began to doubt her statement.

“You’re going to be in very big trouble if you tricked me into coming over,” Jasper said.

Celine harrumphed softly and pushed the laptop onto the coffee table as she spoke, “Take a look for yourself, then.”

Life at the Top Chapter 886

Jasper walked over to the coffee table. Without caring for much else, he squatted down and began to look at the Nasdaq market index that indicated that it was currently trading hours.

With Jasper active in the market and fighting for shares, Sena's share prices had already reached 240 US Dollars over the past two days.

This was an extremely high share price—one that had greatly exceeded Sena's estimated value.

Therefore, Sena's share price was now overvalued and now had a market surplus.

Many of the United States' financial media were reporting this, and some organizations had already classified Sena as a highly risky share. This had made it unaffordable for many investors.

Jasper looked at the date and realized that while Sena shares had undergone more transactions today, things were still not quite right.

After all, with investors losing trust in Sena, it was only a matter of time before the market corrected itself and got rid of the surplus of over-valued shares. That was why many investors would choose to sell the Sena shares they held.

A majority of these shares would then fall in Jasper and the other party's hands, while some fearless retail investors would also claim a small percentage of them.

"I've asked one of my subordinates, but he said he didn't detect anything abnormal. How'd you conclude that they'd attack tonight?" Jasper looked up and asked.

The only thing Jasper saw when he looked up was a pair of long slender legs in black stocking, placed casually before his eyes.

A soft couch, a plush carpet, long legs, and a beautiful woman.

This was a view that could easily excite a man.

Yet, Jasper was in no mood for that.

Celine harrumphed softly at how Jasper's gaze only lingered on her legs for a moment.

Lying on the sofa with a fair wrist supporting her temple, Celine replied as she laid sideways, "You guys are just looking at the surface. Go expand the two other sites that I opened."

Jasper did as instructed and clicked on the two websites.

These two websites belonged to New York's famous financial news platform.

The articles were dated yesterday and today.

Unsurprisingly, the articles were filled with warnings to investors that Sena's share prices were severely overvalued and extremely risky. It also persuaded investors to invest wisely.

One might have even suspected the portal of lying if they had merely compared the contents of the articles to the market board.

The articles warned that Sena's share prices were severely overvalued and consisted mainly surplus shares. Despite this, people were still making money from trading it every minute as the price continued to rise.

It seemed like the more they warned, the more Sena's share prices increased.

Jasper's clicks between the websites and market index sped up, and soon his expression became extremely solemn.

"No, you're right. Something's going to happen soon," Jasper suddenly stated.

Seeing Jasper react in this way, Celine smiled in satisfaction and replied, "There we go. I'm inclined to believe that those articles were released by this secret rival of yours.

"He's trying to brew tension in the market and lower the investor's psychological defense as much as he can," Jasper continued after Celine.

"At the most important moment, he'll sell everything, and Sena's share prices will resemble a tidal wave against the shore. Upon reaching its highest point, there will only one outcome—and that's to come crashing down."

Life at the Top Chapter 887

Celine clapped her hands together and spoke, "When that happens, the investors will lose all hope and Sena's share price will be done for."

At that moment, Jasper pulled out the trendline over the past two months since Sena went public on the Nasdaq.

"I was the one who pushed Sena's share prices when it first went public, but I estimated that it should be worth around 150 US Dollars. Normal share prices should be around 100 US Dollars, or even 80 US Dollars if the market isn't doing so well. Exceeding 130 US Dollars meant that the share was already greatly overvalued.

"Even so, I had predicted the pullback from this to occur around one to two weeks after Sena went public.

"Despite this, the pullback didn't happen as I predicted. Instead, the prices kept climbing. Sena's stock still hasn't shown any signs of a pullback yet and is still climbing."

Jasper let out a long sigh and spoke, "It's my fault for neglecting it. I should've done something to pull the share prices back down before this."

"It's not your fault. All I can say is that Western traders love Sena too much," Celine consoled.

"I know what these capitalists are thinking. They entered the market while Sena was the most profitable stock out there, and the share prices kept rising. They could only continue to profit if the price continued to rise.

“The main issue is that people are still affected by the popping of the dot-com bubble, and there are only so many companies listed on the market. Sena’s existence aligns perfectly with their interests, so they subconsciously tried to raise Sena’s share price.

“This is an immense force, and there was no way you could fight against an entire army of capitalists. You’d instantly lose—not to mention that an increase in Sena’s share price would benefit you the most.”

Jasper spoke grimly, “They, on the other hand, only care about profits. Thus, they won’t hesitate to drop Sena once the risks outweigh their benefits. Especially now, after they’ve already earned enough... Yet, I have to be the one to clean up after them.

“That’s why all your opponent has to do now is light the fuse, and Sena’s stock will immediately come crashing down,” Celine spoke.

At this moment, as Jasper waited for his opponent to sell out all his shares, he received a call.

The sound of the phone ringing almost seemed more rushed and panicked than usual.

Jasper did not hesitate to accept the call.

Jasper was surprised to find that it was a call from across the ocean.

It was a surprising call from Winston.

“It must be midnight over in Somerland, Laine. I hope my call didn’t disturb your sleep,” Winston’s gentle voice sounded over the phone.

Jasper immediately dismissed his frustrations and smiled, “Mr. Bennett. I haven’t gotten to bed yet. Is something wrong?”

Realizing that Winston Bennett was calling Jasper, Celine then wrapped her arms around Jasper's neck curiously to place her ear next to Jasper's phone. Without any concern for how they currently looked, she eavesdropped on the call.

"Basically."

Winston fell silent for a moment to think about how to start before he slowly spoke.

"You know that I've bought quite a few of Sena's shares, correct? I've been very satisfied with its movement all this while, to the point where I'm starting to feel nervous about this satisfaction.

"I've told you before that to us investors, profit isn't all we desire and aim for. In a way, we even become afraid of huge profits as they tend to hide the looming danger behind them."

Jasper's heart sank bottom as he heard Winston say this, and he replied calmly, "I agree, Mr. Bennett. You're telling me that Sena's share prices have begun to make you feel uneasy, correct?"

"Do you think that there's a risk behind Sena's extremely high share price?"

Life at the Top Chapter 888

“Haha,” Winston chuckled and spoke, “While we are friends, I still have to be responsible for my funds.

“I can tell that there’s something wrong with Sena’s share price—it’s almost as if you’re fighting an invisible opponent. But your conflict has caused the share’s risk to increase several fold, so I have to make a decision.”

Jasper replied sincerely, “I understand what you mean. I am immensely grateful for the fact that you’re calling to inform me first before you make your move.”

“We’re friends, after all,” Winston’s voice sounded from the other end of the line. “Benett Funds will make an official statement tomorrow. This is the most I can do for you. I hope you make the necessary preparations.”

As she listened to the conversation between the two, Celine could not help but feel surprised by how great Winston’s and Jasper’s friendship was. Yet, at the same time, she felt that it was a shame how Winston prioritized his identity of a businessman. He had a clear distinguishment between his business and private life; People like him would never risk their own interests due to personal relationships.

If he did this, the man would not be the stock god people regarded so highly.

Nor would so many people trust him and be willing to place their money into his funds.

Just as Celine felt like Jasper was caught between a rock and a hard place, the man arched his brow and spoke to Winston, “How about we make a trade, Mr. Benett?”

“Oh? What trade? I’d love to work with you.”

“There’s no need to publish a statement, nor do you have to wait until tomorrow. I can purchase all of Sena’s shares that you currently hold.

“To be frank with you, someone is trying to cause Sena’s share price to crash. But the market has its own defense mechanisms, and while Sena’s share prices will definitely drop, someone will also come bargain hunting once it reaches a certain price.

“There’ll be many people like that. Some people will make huge losses while others might make a hefty profit. A sizeable profit can only be made through high-risk trades like these.

“And the last thing this world lacks is someone willing to risk their lives to make a dollar.

“All my opponent can do with what the number of shares he currently holds is light the fuse. He still needs major funds or organizations like yours to recognize that the risk and act accordingly in order to topple Sena. When that happens, the other organizations will surely follow.

“When it comes to investors, you have the best reputation, and also hold the highest percentage of Sena’s shares.

“Your lack of activity will easily increase the confidence of these risk-taking investors. These people will then become my main pillar as I attempt to keep Sena’s share price afloat.

“I can buy all of Sena’s shares that you have on hand right now at the current market price, but my only request is that you only release a statement about this in three days’ time.”

Jasper did not hide his plan and told Winston everything.

This was because Jasper knew that Winston would be able to guess it even if Jasper did not say anything.

As expected, Winston fell silent for a long on the other end of the call.

He seemed to be pondering Jasper's words.

Meanwhile, Jasper was in no rush either, for he believed that Winston would agree.

After all, Winston would only profit from this trade.

Not to mention, beside the zero risk factor in the deal, Jasper would also end up owing Winston immensely if he agreed.

At this moment, Jasper was completely oblivious to the fact that Celine was looking at him as if Jasper were an alien.

Just like how Jasper did not understand how Celine could be so talented and capable when it came to the stock market, Celine also did not understand how Jasper could respond so insanely fast to a crisis and immediately react appropriately.

Any normal person who heard that Winston was about to sell out his shares would have immediately gone mad.

Their first thought might be to beg Winston and plead for him not to sell the shares.

Yet, this was not realistic.

Not to mention, that by doing so, Jasper and Winston's friendship would have ended with that phone call.

However, instead of doing this, Jasper had come up with the best solution in the blink of an eye. The idea resembled a lamp in the dark as it immediately brightened the bleak situation.

“You’re insane!”

Life at the Top Chapter 889

Celine muttered.

“To be honest, Laine, you really manage to surprise me...”

Winston’s voice was heard.

“But I have an idea. How about we sign a VAM for one month? I can lock Sena’s share prices that our fund hold, and we won’t buy nor sell for one month”

“During this month, I’ll follow your plan, but if Sena’s share prices drop below 150 US Dollars, you’ll have to purchase them all at 300 US Dollars.”

Jasper’s brows raised slightly at Winston’s suggestion.

At the end of the day, Winston was a capitalist, so the last thing he would forget about was making money.

Even so, this suggestion was very advantageous to Jasper.

What Jasper lacked the most now was cash, as the money he had liquidated from the stock market had gone to support the daily operations of JW Capital. He had taken half his money out to deal with Sena’s crisis, so he was also slowly running out of money.

He would have had to borrow money from the Law family should Winston agree to sell the shares. However, with this proposal, it seemed like there would be no need to turn to the Law family after all.

This plan would firstly save Jasper money in the short term.

Secondly, Winston has also made the situation easier for Jasper to handle.

The plan implied that for the following month, Jasper would have the Benett Funds' support, while Winston would also refrain from releasing any statements that were disadvantageous to Sena's market position.

This was an extremely rare tranquilizer for investors that used Winston to steer and ease the worries of the masses.

If Winston did not sell his shares, then who could challenge him in claiming that the share was done for?

This was how reputable Winston was in the United States.

This had also dramatically increased Jasper's odds of winning.

Winston had left an escape route for himself as well. Say that Jasper did not manage to control the share prices and Sena's share price ended up crashing, then Jasper would be the one to compensate for any loss Winston had suffered. In fact, Winston was asking for more than just that.

Sena's current share price was at 240 US Dollars, which was probably twice more than it should have been. If the prices fell below 150 US Dollars, then Jasper would have to buyback the shares at the astronomical price of 300 US Dollars each.

If Jasper lost this battle, he would most likely go bankrupt.

Celine looked hesitant at that moment, and she wanted to persuade Jasper to give it up.

There was just too much on the line.

Just as she was thinking about how she was going to talk to Jasper, she heard the man respond firmly, "Alright, I agree."

...

Meanwhile, as Jasper and Winston had this international phone call, Zane was currently rendered speechless by everything he saw in a villa somewhere in Nauritus City.

It was a huge study, one that took up half the area of that floor.

This was nothing much considering Zane's background; he himself had seen his fair share of luxuries and studios littered with the nude bodies of beautiful women.

However, what stunned Zane was the gigantic screen before his eyes, which was currently filled with data from the Nasdaq Exchange.

Conrad passed Zane a cigar and spoke with a crescent-eyed smile, "So, Mr. Lancaster, what do you think? Do you understand our plan?"

Zane pointed at the screen and spoke, "So you're planning to attack Sena's shares on the Nasdaq?"

Conrad and Mitch exchanged a look and chuckled, then he spoke, "That is exactly it."

Life at the Top Chapter 890

“You weren’t present during the mining partnership, Mr. Lancaster, so you might not have been aware of it. However, none of that matters now.

“Our goal is to scam Jasper under the guise of a partnership. If it succeeds, then Bob’s your uncle, but I don’t think this plan is going to work.

“After all, I’m sure you know how crafty Jasper is, Mr. Lancaster.”

Zane sneered at Conrad’s words and replied, “He’s more than just crafty. That man’s downright vile and shameless. How can such a person even exist in this world? He should be the first to die!”

“He’d take this as a compliment if he heard you,” Conrad said with a shrug.

Zane harrumphed and looked at Conrad in displeasure as he spoke, “Stop keeping me in suspense. How’s the plan progressing?”

“Calm down, Jasper has indeed seen through the partnership once before, but we predicted that. This actually benefits us because now Jasper will lower his defenses against us, under the assumption that he’s already seen through our plans.”

Conrad glanced at Mitch and smiled. “The most important part of our plan is what you see before you, Mr. Lancaster.

“He’ll definitely use a lot of funds to retaliate against our first scam attempt, so what I need to do now is control Jasper’s cash flow. That way, when Sena’s under attack, Jasper won’t have any money to defend himself.”

As he said that, Conrad's calm eyes shone with madness, elation, and anticipation.

"Even though our first plan failed, I've planned this next crucial step for over half a month. From my cautious actions in the very beginning, to slowly accumulating enough strength, it will all come to fruition tonight!"

"All my hard work will become the blade that kills Jasper tonight! I'll make him suffer a pain worse than death!"

Zane felt slightly afraid as he looked at Conrad who looked like he had gone mad. Thus, Zane took a step back from Conrad and frowned as he spoke.

"Aren't you underestimating Jasper? What is Sena to him? He's got plenty more businesses under his name."

Conrad chuckled and his expression immediately returned to normal as he replied casually, "You're in too much of a rush, Mr. Lancaster. Jasper's already made quite the name for himself, and he's no longer a sprout that needs to be protected from harm.

"His businesses are rather spread out, and there's quite a few of them too. All of them are distinguished businesses in their own industries, so we have no choice but to take it slow if we want to deal with a person like him.

"The only way to completely get rid of Jasper in one night is to send hitmen to kill him. That's the only way."

Zane sneered and replied, "I really want to f*cking kill him."

"Watch your choice of words, Zane." Mitch took a drag from his cigar. Staring at the market index on the screen before him, Mitch spoke calmly, "Jasper isn't the same nameless nobody anymore. You'll be asking for the wrath of the law if you touch him. Not to mention, the Law family won't let you get away with it."

Zane harrumphed and grumbled indignantly, "It's not like I'm actually going to kill him."

Conrad chuckled as he silently watched the two speak before cutting in, "Instead of causing slight losses to all his companies, why not completely destroy one? If we want to target Jasper, then we should first target Sena, as it is the one with the easiest loopholes to exploit."

"People like him who've only ever felt victory can't survive failure. Therefore, if he starts to fail, then he'll soon run down the path of destruction. That's why tonight will be start of his downfall."

"Haha!"

Zane patted Conrad's shoulder and turned to look at Mitch, "Where'd you find such a convenient and useful dog, Mr. Langdon? Not bad. Maybe you could lend him to be for a bit..."

A sinister and angry look flashed through Conrad's eyes at that moment, but it disappeared almost instantly. He plastered a faint smile in its place, as if nothing had happened.

He looked at Mitch only to see the man reply calmly, "We can talk about other matters after all of this is over."

"Haha, alright then. I'll stay tonight. I'd like to see how Jasper's going to die." Zane laughed aloud.

Conrad chuckled and turned to look at the screen. The man's gaze burned brightly with madness, devouring everything in its path.

...

With the details discussed, Jasper hung up the phone in satisfaction.

Turning around, he saw Celine look at him in displeasure.

“What’s wrong with you?” Jasper asked.

“What do you mean what’s wrong with me? You’re going to end up on the streets if you lose this time,” Celine spoke angrily.

Jasper replied with a smile, “I know.”

“So why did you bet with Winston? He might still be helping you now, but he’s not shouldering any risks at all. He’s pushing all his risks onto you!” Celine exclaimed.

“There’s nothing good in this world that comes without risks. People like Winston are the perfect partners, but not the perfect friend. I understand this, so as far as I’m concerned, this is a very reasonable trade where we both merely take what we need.”

Jasper explained to Celine gently, “It’s called a risk because it’s essentially just chance. If I lose, the risk becomes a genuine danger.

“But if I win?”

“If I win, then everything will belong to me!

“These risks will no longer exist for they will instead be used to tear down my opponent.”

“How? How can you be so confident that you’ll win?” Celine frowned and tilted her head in confusion.

“I have to win!” Jasper looked at Celine and spoke both calmly in a tone rich with certainty.

“I could never afford to lose ever since I first decided to walk down this path. If I lose, I lose everything.

“That’s why this doesn’t seem too different to me as compared to my previous battles. The higher the risk, the higher my possible benefits. We’ve managed to get Winston’s full support without even paying a cent, and it’ll turn out to be a really important factor in winning this battle.”

Celine sighed and swallowed the words she wanted to say. Instead, she spoke grimly, “Fine, do what you want. I’ll just work harder and make more money to support you if this fails.”

“Thanks for providing for me, Boss.”

“Go to hell.”

While the two joked around, Sena’s market data on the forgotten laptop screen suddenly spiked...

An extremely large sales order had appeared!

Life at the Top Chapter 891

A large sales order appeared without warning, which had an effect as though one were splashing a bucket of cold water on a steaming pan.

Sena's shares that were undergoing countless transactions just moments ago suddenly came to an eerie halt.

Everyone began to guess what this order meant.

No one dared to make a move—not the retail investors, day traders, or funds.

Sena's shares seemed to freeze in those few short seconds as there was no activity at all.

After a few seconds of silence, the second and the third large sales order were also thrown out.

In the blink of an eye, a hurricane seemed to have swept through all the buy-orders.

3 consecutive large orders of more than 5000 shares put Sena's market in an uproar.

"It's begun!"

Jasper sat before the computer and stared at the screen as he spoke.

Celine sat down as well and stared at the screen solemnly. She pursed her lips and said nothing.

Her crystal-clear eyes reflected the unending trading information that was continuously updating on the computer screen. It was a waterfall of data.

It was as if a large play was set into motion as the public speculation over the past week finally began to rear its ugly head.

A large number of retail investors scrambled to escape, in fear that they would be trapped inside if moved any slower.

Thanks to the bandwagon effect, the somewhat stable and rising prices immediately plummeted. The other investors could not remain calm either and they began to choose to sell their shares.

“It looks like an avalanche.”

Celine sighed deeply.

“The moment the first chunk of snow on the tip of the mountain fell, all the snow in its path will also join in as they sweep through everything in their path. There’s nothing we can do to stop it.”

Jasper replied expressionlessly, “All we can do now is wait. We’ll wait until the situation stabilizes before we make a move. All we can do now is watch the price fall. Considering its price, not even the richest man in the world can fight against this trend and save it alone.”

“It’s begun.”

Conrad’s sentence in the villa in Nauritius City greatly excited Zane and Mitch. The two stood up and walked toward Conrad as the three stared at the screen.

The screen currently showed Sena’s market index on the Nasdaq.

Conrad swirled the red wine in his glass and smiled slightly.

Valentine stood by the side. After all, he had no right to stand with the other three.

Looking at Conrad, he spoke softly, "Mr. Monty, we've already put three large sell orders out. From the looks of things, we've already met our preliminary goal."

Life at the Top Chapter 892

“Coupled with the recent public speculation, we’ve managed to perfectly ignite the investors’ panic. Any slight slip in Sena’s price will cause them to immediately flee; Considering the trend, Jasper won’t be able to stop this even if he were a God.”

Conrad narrowed his eyes and spoke softly, “There’s no point in him acting now. It doesn’t the market, the strongest people in it are never organizations or large funds, but rather retail investors. These retail investors represent at least 85% of the global share market.

“It’s just that they are too disorganized and cannot be harnessed as a single unit. This is why the retail investors who actually hold the most power are merely seen as small fries when compared to organizations and dealers, and are often used for the organizations’ and dealers’ own benefits.

“However, the moment there comes an opportunity for them to work together, for example, on a share that they collectively agree is over or undervalued, then you only need a few of them to create an immense force that neither hell nor high water can hold back.”

Zane replied in disdain, “I don’t care about these things. It’s too confusing and I don’t understand it either. My only question is, how much longer until you kill Jasper?”

Conrad glanced at Zane with disgust and distaste hidden deep within his eyes. He looked at the latter as if Zane were a lower-class animal that had not yet evolved to have brain.

By the time Zane felt Conrad's gaze and turned around, Conrad was already wearing a polite and small smile on his face. This made Zane feel comfortable and respected.

"Jasper isn't easy to deal with at all. He hasn't made a move since it started, and just like how he can't guess what we're going to do next, we won't be able to predict how he'll react either. What I can promise, though, is that Jasper will definitely make his move soon.

"Now, regarding when we will be able to completely destroy Jasper's Sena will depend entirely when Jasper makes his move. We'll have to make our next move after that. All of these are still unknown variables right now."

Zane scoffed at Conrad's words and spoke in disdain.

"So all that bullsh*t you said just now was a bluff? And here I was marveling at how impressive you were. Turns out that this is all you can do. Don't act so happy before the results come out; I can't believe you made me feel so excited for nothing."

When he heard that, even Valentine's lips twitched as he stood by the side, much less Conrad's.

All Valentine knew was that Zane and Mitch were trust-fund children from Harbor City. He had no idea who exactly these people were, but he was fully impressed by Conrad since he's been working with the latter for some time. This man was pretty much Valentine's idol.

Valentine was about to speak up when he heard how Zane insulted Conrad so brashly.

He had just opened his mouth when Conrad's fierce glare had made him swallow his words.

“You’re right, Mr. Lancaster. I shouldn’t have gotten ahead of myself,” Conrad spoke calmly.

Zane huffed and returned to sit on the sofa. Shaking his leg, Zane said, “It’s so boring just waiting here and doing nothing. Get me a few pretty ladies to pass the time with.”

Conrad sighed internally at Zane’s request...

Zane was truly on a whole new level of moronic.

Even so, he was not in the place to say anything, nor would Zane listen to him. If anything, he might only end up infuriating Zane. Thus, he turned to look at Mitch, the only person in the room who could keep Zane in line.

As expected, Mitch frowned and looked at Zane before he began to reprimand him without holding back, “Are you stupid?”

“Do you not know what we’re doing here? The last thing we need is a new problem to arise, but you want to invite women over? Run back to Harbor City if all you can think about is sex.”

Zane replied in indignation, “Mr. Langdon, we’re all the way in some remote place, so what’s wrong with inviting a few women over? I’ll bring them to the other rooms if it bothers you so much, and I’ll make sure they won’t step foot in here.”

Mitch fumed. “This is Nauritus City, Jasper’s territory. How brainless do you have to be to think that he won’t hear of even the slight movement in his territory, huh?”

Zane waved him off in irritation and replied, “Fine, fine. I was just asking. I won’t go anywhere and I won’t invite any women over. Happy?”

Life at the Top Chapter 893

Mitch scoffed and instantly began to regret ever bringing Zane, a completely useless failure, over.

However, he did not have a better option now, so he could only suppress the irritation he felt as he said, “The most important thing now is to deal with Jasper. Think of how he’s humiliated you before—don’t you want to take revenge? What pastime could possibly compete with the joy of watching Jasper lose everything?”

A cruel look flared up in Zane’s eyes and he replied harshly, “You’re right, Mr. Langdon. I’ll go f*cking vegan and start going to church if it means Jasper’s gotten rid of!”

Mitch only turned back to Conrad now that Zane finally seemed to take the matter seriously. “We’ll follow your plan. All I request is that you hit him quick and sharp. Jasper has to fall this time!”

Conrad glanced at the screen and said confidently, “Don’t worry, Mr. Langdon. I have full confidence that we’ll beat him this time.”

...

“The price is falling too quickly.”

Celine glanced at the laptop screen and frowned in worry.

“Excluding the past few global financial crises, I’ve never seen the share price of such a popular share plummet so quickly. It’s been no more than ten minutes and it’s already approaching the limit down price. According to Nasdaq’s trading rules, you have three options now.

“One, you request for a trading halt. But doing so will severely damage Sena’s credibility and damage investors’ trust. You’ll have to resume trading eventually, and there is a very high chance that the prices will plummet like a landslide when that happens.”

Jasper shook his head and replied, “I can’t choose that option. It’ll solve the issue now, but the consequences aren’t worth it. There’s no point doing that when it’ll give me more problems to deal with in the future.”

“Then the second option will be to watch it hit the limit down price,” Celine continued, knowing fully well what Jasper was considering.

Jasper replied calmly, “That’s no different from the first option.”

Celine’s eyes burned into Jasper as she stared intently and asked, “So you’re choosing option three?”

Jasper let out a light sigh and dialed Jack’s number, muttering, “Do we have any other choice?”

“The enemy’s already launched an attack, we have no other chance but to shift the battlefield to make it advantageous for us to counter.

“We either annihilate them, or we will get annihilated.”

Celine shook her head. “But what if this is what the culprit aimed for from the start? We won’t be able to retreat if we do that!”

“I can’t know for sure whether this is what they intended, but just as how it will cut off all escape for us, they will have no way out too. We don’t know what they’re thinking, so all we can do now is create as many advantages for ourselves as possible.”

With that, the call connected and Jack's voice was heard through Jasper's speakers. Jasper brought the phone to his ear and spoke to Jack, leaving Celine to shake her head speechlessly.

For how gentlemanly this man seemed, the man hid an utterly fierce character underneath. All would be well if people stayed in line, but if one were to offend him, this man would then counter with the most ruthless and bloody attacks. All without hesitation.

"What are your orders, Mr. Laine?"

Jack immediately asked after accepting the call.

Jack was currently seated in Sena's brightly lit conference room, where real-time trading data was being displayed on its big screen.

The plummeting of Sena's share price had the group of senior executives sweating profusely. They were discussing countermeasures maddeningly when Jasper called. Some had suggested applying for a trading halt, while others had suggested watching it play out first and enduring the prices hitting the limit down since it was just a 10% loss at most.

Every suggestion had its fair share of supporters, so there was no consensus.

Jasper's call had quieted everyone as they all stared at Jack. They knew that Jasper was going to make a decision.

"You've seen the situation, haven't you? Any thoughts?" Jasper asked.

Life at the Top Chapter 894

This was a question Jack dreaded the most, but since Jasper had asked it, Jack had no choice but to muster his courage and reply, “Everyone’s still discussing what to do. Some of them support the idea of applying for a trading halt, while some of them favor waiting it out and letting it hit the limit down price first before they make a decision.”

As he looked at the group of subordinates that were staring at him in anticipation, Jack’s heart softened at the fact that these people were hesitant about making a mistake. “Mr. Laine, we don’t actually have any good suggestions...”

“It’s okay, I know what you’re trying to say.”

Jasper interrupted Jack.

While he was irritated at Sena’s senior executives’ impulsiveness and irresponsible attitude toward their work, he could not blame everything on his subordinates or their superior, Jack.

“There’s no need to discuss further, I’ve already made my decision. As Sena’s President, Jack, I need you to immediately apply for us to issue additional shares with the Nasdaq Review Committee.

“JW Capital will immediately transfer 1 billion Somer Dollars to increase the number of shares on the market. This is a major asset restructuring, so for the next three days, Sena’s shares will not have any price limits.”

Jasper’s words had Jack feeling lightheaded.

“Mr... Mr. Laine, there are too many risks in doing that.”

Jasper replied calmly, "I've already considered all the risks. Jack, ever since I first invited you to be a part of JW, every decision I made was risky. But when have I ever lost?"

"Trust me."

Jack fell silent for a moment when he heard Jasper's voice echo through the speakers. Taking a deep breath, he grit his teeth and replied, "I'll get to it immediately, Mr. Laine!"

"I'll have JW Capital release a statement."

After hanging up the phone, around a dozen employees in the conference room, all of whom were financial and business talents in Sena, now blinked at Jack like obedient children waiting for their teacher to hand out their test results.

They had a premonition that Jack was about to give them an earth-shattering piece of news.

After a moment of silence, Jack spoke.

"According to Mr. Laine, Sena's holding company, JW Capital LLC, will transfer us 1 billion Somer Dollars to increase our share issuance.

"We will use the excuse of Sena undergoing a major asset restructuring to request for a review by the Nasdaq Review Committee. During this time, Sena's share price will not be restricted by any price limits."

The conference room fell pin-drop silence after he said that.

Every's eyes widened and they felt their minds ring.

As people who worked in the industry, they immediately realized something from this decision.

'Mr. Laine's planning to fight the mastermind head-on. Whoever loses will have to leave.'

Manly men do not back down.

'Screw with my company's shares and I'll destroy all your escape routes!'

Despite their rationale telling them that big boss Mr. Laine was being very impulsive with the decision, the people in the conference room felt their blood rush with excitement!

Compared to suggestions to surrender and apply for a trading halt or to watch the prices hit the limit down price, Mr. Laine's suggestion was just...

Too manly!

Life at the Top Chapter 895

Just as countless investors and funds began to feel afraid from the large drop in Sena's share price, the Nasdaq Exchange published three official statements in a row.

The first was to inform all investors that Sena's share price was currently undergoing extreme oscillations and were highly risky. Thus, investors were reminded to invest cautiously.

This was essentially an official statement of utter nonsense. It served no purpose other than to remind people of its existence.

The second statement was that Sena had already applied for a special procedure with the Review Committee due to major asset restructuring. As of that moment, the Committee was currently reviewing Sena's application to ensure that it complied with Nasdaq's trading regulations.

When they read this statement, many people let out an unsurprised smile.

Sena had indeed panicked at such a time.

There were only so many outcomes when a public company applies for a major asset restructuring with the exchange center.

There was a ninety percent chance that Sena was making preparations for a trading halt.

After all, when a public company goes through asset restructuring, it was not uncommon for it to experience a trading halt for a few trading days.

This was a reasonable request.

Considering Sena's current situation, everyone could tell that Sena was unable to endure the plummet in share price and had chosen to halt trading to prevent further loss.

The more experienced and skilled traders began to shake their heads at this. They wondered if something was wrong with Sena's decision-makers.

It was evident that investors in the market currently lacked trust in Sena, and this lack of trust was the reason for the drop in share prices. Yet, instead of releasing good news, Sena had decided to avoid the battle. This would only shatter the trust of the remaining investors who still had any faith in Sena.

Applying for a trading halt would only result in even more severe consequences, with more investors losing hope in Sena.

Moreover, a public company could not halt trading forever, and the day Sena resumes trading would be the day Sena's valuation will be completely shattered.

This was a stupid move!

After mocking Sena's decision-makers, these people then clicked on the third official statement.

With a few lines, the third statement had everyone swallowing their words.

It stated that after review from Nasdaq's Review Committee, Somerland's JW Capital Ltd. Co. had invested 1 billion Somer Dollars into Sena as its majority shareholder to increase the issues of shares.

Sena's request for their major asset restructuring situation was proven true, and so, special procedures had been approved.

Sena's share prices would undergo special procedures, effective immediately, and Sena's shares would not be restricted to any pricing limits for the next three days.

This third official statement served as a harsh awakening to the people who had previously made assumptions after reading the second statement.

Instead of applying for a trading halt, Sena had applied to cancel all price limits due to the increase in issues of shares.

‘This means a f*cking huge event is about to occur!’

Analysts and investors did not have time to regret their words as they became all fired up.

Canceling rising and limit down restrictions meant that Sena was initiating battle. This was a matter of life and death!

These were rare battles.

After all, the shifting of price limits usually led to the oscillation of tens of millions in market value. A person’s wealth could either skyrocket or vanish in the blink of an eye, and people were usually never impulsive enough to make such a decision.

Despite this, Sena had shown the world that even if others did not dare to face such a challenge, they would!

Life at the Top Chapter 896

...

“Jasper really is Jasper. He doesn’t disappoint, does he?”

Conrad smiled’s smiled grew more carefree at the sight of the third official statement displayed on the screen.

Mitch’s eyes flickered beside him as he stared at Conrad with a complicated gaze.

He had claimed that Jasper would have Sena apply for a trading halt when he saw the second official statement, but Conrad dismissed this and replied that Jasper would instead fight back guns blazing.

Mitch did not believe Conrad at all, but following the third statement, Mitch could not help but be impressed by Conrad’s in-depth understanding of Jasper.

The smarter Conrad was and the better he understood Jasper, the more relieved Mitch became. Conrad’s knowledge would increase their odds of beating Jasper.

“So, what do we do now?” Mitch looked at Conrad and asked.

Mitch’s tone and attitude were subconsciously much gentler now.

Noticing the change in Mitch’s attitude, Conrad replied calmly, “It’s currently two a.m. Taking into account the time difference, the trading day should be ending over in New York. We’ll have to wait for the market to open tomorrow to do anything.”

When he said that, Conrad's gaze flared with determination and decisiveness. "When that happens, our victory will be announced, and he will perish!"

...

The market immediately reacted to Sena's statement.

The most obvious reaction was that Sena's share price immediately stopped plummeting as it began to pace very closely to the limit down price. While it was very close to the value, the price never hit the limit.

The 1 billion Somer Dollars invested to increase its shares issuance also reignited a bit of hope in the market. Many investors decided that they would watch the situation play out a little longer while some bolder investors decided to buy shares around the lower limit in hopes that it would rise again.

While all sorts of speculation flew about, Jasper got up from the hotel in Nauritus City and got ready to leave.

"There are still fifteen minutes until the end of the trading day, so there won't be much change for now," Jasper exhaled softly and spoke.

"You used 1 billion Somer Dollars to prevent Sena from hitting the lower limit today." Celine was rather aggrieved by Jasper's decision.

"Tomorrow will spell another battle," Jasper added with a smile.

"Sometimes I really wish you'd lose." Celine looked at Jasper and spoke with a subtle smile, "I really want to see how you'd look if you lost."

"How do you think I'll look? I'll still eat and drink to survive; I'll still sleep and wake up. Even if Sena's share prices completely crash, I wouldn't say that it's a substantial loss. There's no way I'd let go of my shares in Sena and cash out.

“Only people who might cash out their shares in return for a large amount of money will be afraid of their company’s share price plummeting.

“As far as I’m concerned, Sena itself is a money-making machine with its own business model. Worse comes to worst, I’ll just pull out of the market and go private.”

Jasper’s tone was very calm as he was speaking the truth.

“Everyone’s overestimating how important Sena is to me. I don’t understand why they think that I can’t afford to see Sena’s share price drop.

“In fact, to a certain extent...

“The lower Sena’s share prices, the more advantageous it is to me. I’ll just privatize it and pull out of the market!

“After all, the main reason why Sena went public in the beginning was to use the market and speedily raise funds to ease JW’s tight cash flow .

“Now that the problem’s dealt with, they still think that Sena’s market on Nasdaq is a weakness they can exploit. People see going public on Nasdaq as the ultimate goal, but that’s never been my target!”

Life at the Top Chapter 897

Celine's eyes widened as she looked at Jasper and said, "Don't tell me you purposefully let the opponent beat Sena's share prices down so you can privatize it. You didn't, did you?"

The more Celine thought about it, the more she convinced she became that Jasper was very much the type to do this sort of thing.

All this while, Jasper had excelled in weaving what other people believed as impossible into the possible.

From Jasper's perspective, this might actually be a good idea.

"What are you talking about?" Jasper sighed.

"If the situation allowed it, I might have done just that. But the problem now is money."

"It would be astronomically expensive to privatize Sena now. While all of JW Capital's subsidiaries have a lot of potential, there's still a limit to how much money they can make right now. JW Capital still has to fund their operations.

"Why would I have Sena go public if not for the fact that I'm broke as hell?"

"How long do you think it's been since then? Where am I supposed to find so much money to try to reprivatize it?"

Jasper shook his head and said, "Privatization is my final plan, and that's only if I don't have any other options left. As far as I'm concerned, a small win or loss doesn't really matter that much to me. However, when I have the option to not lose, then there's no way I'm not grabbing the bull by the horns and winning it all!"

“In any case, it’s time for me to leave.”

Celine was curled up on the sofa as she smiled at Jasper crescent-eyed and said softly, “But it’s so late. Why not just spend the night here?”

Jasper glanced at the woman warily and shook his head, declining her invitation, “No thanks. I’m going home. Why would I stay here with you?”

“What, afraid that your girlfriend’s going to check up on you?” Celine chuckled and provoked Jasper further, “I’m a woman and even I’m not scared of that. Who are you to be afraid of her?”

“Trying to taunt me, are you?” Jasper smiled and grabbed his jacket as he replied, “Too bad it doesn’t work on me. Bye.”

Jasper was about to walk away when a calf hooked around his leg.

Through the stockings, a soft and shiny toe rubbed against Jasper’s thigh as Celine said coquettishly, “But I’ll be if I’m afraid all alone here.

“Don’t tell me that you’ve been asking your secretary to sleep with you all these years,” Jasper said sternly.

“You d*ckwad!” Celine let go of Jasper’s thigh and harrumphed, speaking in an upset tone, “I came to work for you for free and you’re just going to throw me away after you’re done using me? I should’ve known that all men are trash.”

“This is where you’re wrong.” Jasper shook his head.

“The true battle’s only just begun. I haven’t finished using you yet, so I’ll only throw you away later.”

After saying that, Jasper strode out of the room with a loud laugh.

“You b*stard! I’m going to buy the earliest ticket out of here and leave! I hope you lose this round you heartless b*stard!”

Celine threw a pillow at the doors that Jasper had quickly closed behind him. Staring at the closed doors, Celine suddenly chuckled in amusement.

...

The sky was already slightly brightening by the time Jasper got home after essentially burning the midnight oil. Thus, Jasper slept until noon and had only exited his room exhaustedly then.

“What time did you get back last night?”

Wendy took a look at Jasper’s exhausted appearance and immediately had a maid prepare Jasper some food as she asked in concern.

“After five I think.” Jasper sat on the sofa and said slowly, “Something happened to Sena’s share price over at the Nasdaq, but because of the time difference, I most likely won’t be getting a good night’s sleep anytime soon.”

“Is it bad?” Wendy asked as she sat down beside Jasper.

“It’s not a lost cause yet!”

Life at the Top Chapter 898

Jasper smiled and patted Wendy's hand to comfort her and asked, "Did you not go to work?"

"I'm leaving now."

Wendy got up and reminded him, "Remember to get some more rest in the afternoon after you eat then."

"Alright. I won't come into the company, but I'm sure it'll be fine with you and Malcolm there," Jasper said with a smile.

"All you know how to do is to push your responsibilities onto other people! I'm going to need a pay raise by the end of the year!" Wendy demanded.

"Sure, sure, I'll give you my being too. Is that enough for you?"

"As if I'd want that!"

After joking with Jasper, Wendy left for the company.

With JW Capital's subsidiaries gaining traction, Wendy had also gotten busier as one of the major supervisors to the projects. Jasper was rarely at the company, so she had to watch over them for him. These businesses were essentially under her charge.

Malcolm was very capable too, and he had shouldered quite a bit of her responsibilities. This solidified how great of a decision it was for Jasper and Wendy to pay such a high price to get Malcolm to work for them.

Wendy had only just left when Julian entered through the doors.

“Jasper.”

Eyes slightly closed, Jasper felt his energy return with full force when he heard Julian’s voice. Flipping himself around, Jasper asked, “Did you find anything?”

Julian reported seriously, “There are a few leads. With regards to the villa that Mitch and Zane went to yesterday, I did some checking on who the property belonged to and found out that it was bought by a Somer businessman from Nauritus City who returned from overseas four years ago.

“The most interesting part is that this Somer businessman had not returned to Somerland for decades, and the first thing he did once he returned was to buy a villa. Then, he left the country a few weeks after the villa was bought and he’s never been back since.

“As for that villa, he’s never lived in it ever since he bought it. Instead, he stayed in hotels during those two months he spent in the country.”

Jasper replied calmly. “That means he bought it for someone else. Do you know who?”

“According to the property development company, the Somer businessman had bought the villa with a offshore account. The funds were traced back to a foreign trade company under the Monty family,” Julian replied softly.

Jasper chuckled when he heard that. “So it is him. I don’t suppose that it couldn’t have been anyone else.”

“There’s no way Zane and Mitch would come after me in Nauritus City all the way from Harbor City. That would be a suicide mission.

“Therefore, they would have needed someone who’s potentially a threat to me where I currently am. Conrad’s the only one that fits the bill, be it in terms of capability or status.

“Looks like they’ve been working together for a long time now, then.”

Julian asked softly, “Jasper, do you think they could be the culprit behind the drop in Sena’s share price?”

“Unlikely if it was just Conrad, but with Mitch partnering with him and the Langdon family funds backing him up, I can’t say.”

Jasper rubbed his chin and narrowed his eyes as he said, “Only one way to find out then. Let’s test them.”

“How? By going to the villa?” Julian asked confusedly.

At that moment, impatient insults were heard outside the door, followed by Henry’s hasty footsteps. A second later, Young Master Law rushed into the room and roared with reddened eyes.

“All I did was f*cking sleep. How the f*ck did Sena’s share price drop like that? F*cking Hell even my retirement money’s in there!

“What the Hell happened, Jasper?! Who’s f*cking with Sena?

“Tell me, I’ll f*cking kill him!”

Life at the Top Chapter 899

This morning, the first thing Henry did when he awoke was push away the woman by his side and pull out his laptop to check gleefully how much Sena's share prices had risen on Nasdaq.

This was something he had done every day without fail in recent days.

Ever since he had bought his private plane, Henry finally understood what it meant to be painfully broke.

He even requested for the alcohol that he had left unfinished during previous visits whenever he frequented bars, for he was reluctant to open a new bottle. He only had a few million left in his accounts, which caused him to constantly worry. He could not help but feel like he would die due to how broke he was at any second.

In dire need to make money, Henry had an idea when he saw Sena's share price rising every day.

His heart set, Henry decided to put all his money into Sena's shares.

Indeed, the share price had shot up every day.

Soon, Henry had already gained more than 50% of what he had initially invested, and with the new influx of money, Henry's mood brightened greatly.

He felt different from other trust-fund children who only knew how to ask their family for money. He felt like he was somehow better than them now.

He bought a private plane with his own money, and he did not even need to ask his family for allowance. At that point in time, he was completely self-sufficient.

Yet, this new reality had shattered that morning.

Sena's share prices plummeted, and Henry immediately kicked out the woman he had held tightly and called 'baby' the night before. Putting on a set of clothes, Henry rushed over to Jasper's place,

Jasper was amused when he caught sight of Henry's resentful expression. "Since when did you buy Sena's shares? Why didn't you tell me?"

Henry spoke embarrassedly, "It's just a few million, I was a little embarrassed."

"..."

Julian turned his head away silently and held back the urge to hit Henry.

"So, is someone screwing with Sena?"

Henry asked in a rage, not forgetting the reason why he had come.

Jasper was shocked. "Not bad, how'd you find out?"

Henry harrumphed and replied proudly, "How could I not know about your company? The share prices has been rising all this while only to fall so rapidly without warning. What else could it be if someone was not intentionally screwing it over?"

Jasper was rendered speechless.

Henry's mind was straightforward to the point that one could claim that he was simpleminded.

Despite this, such simple thoughts had easily helped him see the truth at first glance.

Anyone with even the slightest knowledge of shares and finance might come up with explanations like pullbacks from a high price, an overestimated market price, or perhaps risk premiums, but they would never propose the idea of malicious activity.

On the other hand, Henry, who knew nothing of the industry, had managed to hit the nail on the head the moment he spoke.

“Stop dilly-dallying. Tell me, who’s the person behind it? I’ll go and kill their entire family right now! They might as well have killed my parents... Holding me back from earning my money. This b*stard wants me to die!” Henry roared.

Jasper gestured Henry to take a seat and said, “Can you calm down? There’s no point in shouting like this.”

“I’ve already found out who it is, but I can’t be certain. So, I’ll need your help today and we’ll go confirm whether or not it’s them.”

Henry’s eyes shone when he heard Jasper’s words. “You’re going to show off... Oh, wait, no. What are you planning this time?”

“Tell me what you need me to, and I’ll comply unconditionally. But just make sure you find the f*cker that’s screwing with Sena’s shares. I’ll f*cking rip his head off.”

Jasper smiled crescent-eyed and said, “Easy. Call Mitch later tonight and invite him and Zane out for dinner.”

Henry, who was still thrumming with excitement, was stunned for a moment as he looked at Jasper doubtfully.

“You suspect them? When it comes to the two f*cking imbeciles, Mitch is still alright, but Zane’s inexistent intelligence means that he can’t earn money even if it’s sitting right in front of him. There’s no way he could do this.”

“It’s not that simple,” Jasper replied, “I’m still not too certain right now, but that’s why we’re going to test them.”

Henry shrugged. “Sure, no problem. I’ve got it.”

“Good.” Jasper nodded in satisfaction.

Watching Henry make the call, Jasper did a quick time-check. According to the time difference, Somerland was around 12 hours ahead of New York, so it would be 9 p.m. in Somerland when the market opened there at 9 a.m.

After confirming this, Jasper called Conrad.

The phone rang for quite a while before it connected.

“How can I help you?” Conrad sounded very calm.

“Nothing much. It’s just that topping-out ceremony for the Southface River project ended yesterday, but I couldn’t help but think that something was missing without celebrating it with you, Mr. Monty.

“That’s why I’ve been planning to invite you to dinner tonight, Mr. Monty. Will you be free?” Jasper asked with a wide smile.

Conrad fell silent for a moment before he spoke calmly, “Stop pretending, Jasper. We’re enemies, not friends. Have fun celebrating yourself, I don’t have the time nor the mood to celebrate with you.”

“Here’s where you’re wrong, Mr. Monty. We’re both from the Southeast Province, so any conflict we have should be kept and dealt with privately. Why not bring everything to the table for us to discuss?”

“If you’re not coming, Mr. Monty, then I could easily look for you at your house and eat there,” Jasper chuckled.

“You’re just being unreasonable, Jasper!” Conrad was enraged.

“I am,” Jasper admitted immediately.

Conrad fell silent for a moment, as if stunned by Jasper’s straightforwardness.

“Oh, there’ll be two young masters from Harbor City present as well. Just take the dinner as a chance to meet new friends. Or perhaps... you’re already acquainted with them, Mr. Monty? You’ve got to agree this time, right?” Jasper smiled.

Conrad’s silence dragged on.

“When and where?” Conrad asked after a long bout of silence.

“Tonight at eight, the First Emperor’s private room at the Imperial Kitchens. I look forward to seeing you then,” Jasper replied.

“Haha, very well then. I’ll be there on time.”

Conrad hung up after saying this. Looking up, he realized that Mitch had also just hung up the phone.

“Jasper just invited me for dinner.”

“Henry just invited me for dinner.”

The two said almost the same thing at the same time.

Conrad’s brows furrowed tightly and he spoke grimly, “Jasper must know something. Or at the very least, he already knows that we’re working together.”

“No way. We’ve hidden it very well,” Mitch could not help but feel that something was off.

Zane shrugged and growled, "Look at how terrified you two are. Jasper's just a man and this is just a dinner. What can he even do to us?"

Life at the Top Chapter 900

“We have to attend this dinner,” Conrad said darkly.

Mitch nodded. He did not dare skip dinner when Henry was personally inviting him.

That night, they left the villa and made their way to the restaurant.

The restaurant was a hidden establishment by the Southface River shore, not too far from the large overbridge built last year that linked the two banks. Lights shone brightly every night, making it a stunning sight.

Serving one of Nauritus City’s best Falc cuisines, the Imperial Kitchen required ordinary folks to place a reservation at least a week in advance in order to dine there.

However, considering Jasper’s status and identity, the man did not need to make a reservation anywhere he went.

The Imperial Kitchen, for example, was considered a very distinguished restaurant. Yet, when Jasper had come here before to host guests, the owner had brought the general manager and the main chef over to greet him. The service was similar to how one would treat a king’s arrival.

Jasper alighted the car and shook the hand of a slightly chubby man by the name of Orson Reese.

“I didn’t expect to disturb you, Mr. Reese. My apologies,” Jasper said with a respectful smile.

Considering Jasper's current identity and status, Orson might be the owner of Imperial Kitchen, but he still had to tend to Jasper's whims.

Orson was rather startled in the face of Jasper's respect. He shook Jasper's hand with both of his and he bowed with a ninety-degree angle as he replied.

"It's an honor that you're willing to eat at the Imperial Kitchen, Mr. Laine. It's only right we come to greet you in person. We've already canceled all other reservations today and cleared the restaurant just to serve you well today, Mr. Laine."

Despite knowing that Orson was only saying this to please him, such treatment had greatly stroked Jasper's ego.

"I'll have to trouble you then, Mr. Reese," Jasper smiled.

"It's no trouble at all. The private room's already been prepared, so please follow me, Mr. Laine."

Thus, Orson courteously led with Jasper and Henry following them behind.

"Why're you so polite to people like this too?"

Henry was angry at everyone today after losing a considerable amount of money. He walked with an expression so dark it deterred people from engaging him in conversation. On that day, Henry only spoke in front of Jasper.

"Small characters are useful in their own ways. It's just a smile and a few polite words for us, yet it leaves a good impression and helps their reputation. It might not seem like much most of the time, but once accumulated, they can greatly benefit you."

Henry looked at Jasper as if he was a monster when he heard him say this.

“Don’t you get tired of living like this? I’m starting to believe even your farts are timed and purposeful at this point. Seriously, I don’t even know how you haven’t f*cked yourself over with how calculative you are.”

Jasper smiled. “You just don’t understand the fun in this. Or rather, you haven’t gotten to the point where you can understand the fun in this yet.”

Henry scoffed. “I hope I never understand. All I’m thinking of right now is how I can get rid of those two f*ckers.”

“Remember what I told you. Don’t act rashly. We don’t have any evidence nor are we completely certain—acting rashly will only make them go further into hiding,” Jasper exhorted.

Henry waved him off irritably and said, “Yeah, yeah, I know. You nag more than my dad does. I’ll just follow your cue, okay?”

At the same time, in a luxury car a short distance away from the Imperial Kitchen.

Zane was sneering in the car as he filed his nails casually. From time to time, he would glance at Mitch and Conrad ,who were discussing what would potentially happen during the dinner.

“Seriously, guys? It’s literally dinner and you’re already this terrified? It’s not like he’s going to eat us alive or something,” Zane commented uncaringly.

Mitch frowned slightly and said, “Watch what you say later you brainless fool. The more you talk, the more mistakes you make.”

Life at the Top Chapter 901

Zane felt displeasure wash over him, but he did not dare to retort.

“One more thing, and you better remember this: no matter what Henry does later, do not act rashly,” Mitch said grimly.

Zane grit his teeth at the name and said, “What? So I’m supposed to take it even if he disrespects me and treats me like sh*t?”

“As if he’s the first person to disrespect and treat you like sh*t. Henry’s been screwing you over every single time he meets you. Are you telling me you’re going to fight him head-on this time?” Mitch sneered.

Zane’s expression darkened, but he knew that Mitch was speaking the truth.

The only reason he dared to argue with Henry was because he had Mitch supporting him. In the past, he would have taken a detour every time he saw Henry.

Even so, this did not mean Zane was willing to put up with such an insult.

“F*cking Hell, I’m going to kill him one day,” Zane spit out venomously.

“Don’t speak so harshly when we get there. It’s likely that Jasper and Henry will try a series of methods to break us, and you’re our biggest weakness here. I’d never have brought you over if not for the fact that Henry specifically asked for you.

“You better remember that if you become the reason why this plan is foiled, forget Henry, I will be the first to rip you a new face!”

Zane clenched his jaw at Mitch's words but he knew that Mitch meant what he said. Hence, Zane harrumphed and replied, "I know."

By the time they finished this conversation, the car arrived in front of the Imperial Kitchen.

As he got out of the car, Zane glanced at the empty entrance and scoffed. "Laine sure is arrogant. He invites us over and he's just leaving us at the door to look for the private room ourselves? What the f*ck, who does he think he is?"

"Enough bullsh*t, let's go," Mitch said impatiently with a grim look on his face as he pushed open the door to step inside.

The doors to the First Emperor private room were pushed open.

Jasper and Henry looked up and met the gazes of Conrad, Mitch, and Zane.

Their gazes locked midair, each with their own intent.

Jasper turned to Conrad and greeted him with a small smile, "Looks like you are indeed a punctual man, Mr. Monty."

Conrad frowned slightly when he saw that Jasper had greeted himself first. He glanced at Mitch instinctively from the corner of his eye and, and, as expected, the man's gaze had already darkened.

Conrad sighed internally when he realized that despite all the reminders he had given during the ride over, Jasper had immediately managed to provoke Mitch the moment they met.

These young masters from Harbor City were truly idiots with untameable tempers.

Despite how Mitch had reminded Zane to be logical, the facade instantly broke when he was the one being tested.

“It’s an honor to be invited by the great Mr. Laine. How could I possibly decline?”

Conrad let go of the disappointment he felt and replied to Jasper calmly.

Jasper chuckled, then turned to look at Mitch, who had a dark expression on his face, and then at Zane, who was not even trying to hide his dissatisfaction. After this, he turned back to Conrad curiously.

“You know these two, Mr. Monty? And here I thought that you guys weren’t acquainted. That’s why I had Henry invite them. I was hoping that we could all get to know each other.”

Something flashed through Conrad’s eyes when he heard this.

Despite how methodical they had been in preparing for the dinner, they had forgotten this crucial detail.

He should not have arrived together with Mitch and Zane!

Life at the Top Chapter 902

Conrad felt a chill run down his back at the sight of Jasper's calm smile.

'How terrifying can this man be? How can he catch on to every single detail?'

Just as Conrad was thinking about how he should reply, Jasper took the initiative to change the topic.

"It's even better that we're all acquainted, then. Come in and sit, let's talk while seated."

Conrad's mind was filled with question marks as he saw Jasper turn to gesture the three of them to their seats.

'What's he doing? Why is he changing the subject?'

Countless questions filled Conrad's mind like nightmarish crows, causing the man to frown heavily as he sat on the sofa. Despite this, his expression remained unfazed and he did not say a word.

Just then, a loud chide attracted everyone's attention.

"Motherf*cker! Sit further away from me! Don't you know that stupidity's contagious? Don't sit next to me, you f*cking imbecile!"

Henry spat out coldly as he stared at Zane's purpling complexion.

Zane immediately flushed dark red, and he stared at the seat between him and Henry before speaking through gritted teeth, "Henry, I'm not even sitting next to you, nor do I want to. Aren't you being a little too obvious as you pick on me?"

“Pick on you?”

Henry snickered. “That’s exactly what I’m doing. What’re you going to do about it, then?”

Zane stood up in anger and glared at Henry. He felt a compelling desire to punch Henry across the face.

However, his long-standing fear of the man coupled with Mitch’s words from earlier caused him to hold back.

He did not dare to do so.

In the end, Zane held swallowed the humiliation that swarmed inside his chest and took a step back, finally sitting down two seats away from Henry.

Henry was unamused at how Zane retreated so easily.

He sneaked a glance at Jasper, only to see a satisfied smile on the man’s face.

This was precisely what Jasper and Henry had discussed earlier. Jasper would usher Zane to the seat around Henry so that Henry could pick on Zane.

With Zane’s temper, it was only normal for the man to spit back a sentence or two. If he did not, then the entire situation would become even more interesting.

As they carried out their plan, instead of arguing with Henry, Zane had indeed chosen to retreat straight away.

All Jasper needed to do now was to test them step by step. Be it Mitch, Zane, or Conrad, the more the three of them endured, the more tests the group would be subject to.

Soon after, the waiter brought the dishes over.

Jasper paid no heed to the dishes, for he knew that Orson would make the correct choices.

Soon, aromatic and colorful dishes filled the table, and Jasper was not disappointed.

While he and Conrad were enemies, they were both of high enough status such that their conflict was incomparable to those between gangsters in the city's shadows. Thus, considering the setting, Jasper did not stoop so low as to order cheap and disgusting dishes.

That would only damage his own dignity.

The dishes on the table cost at least seven figures in total, and it could be considered a rare top-notch feast during that era.

Jasper thoroughly enjoyed the food, but the others hardly had an appetite.

Henry was merely focused on how he would end these three b*stards who were stopping him from earning money.

Mitch's expression was heavy, and the man did not dare to speak too much.

Life at the Top Chapter 903

Conrad was deep in thought, seemingly pondering over something important.

What Zane felt was even more evident. The man did not eat a single dish as he thought back to how he had made a complete fool out of himself today. An indescribable bout of anger swarmed within him and he could barely hold back from exploding on the spot.

“Mr. Monty.”

Jasper put down his cutlery and spoke slowly after taking a few bites of food.

“Picking up from where I left off before, it’d be nice if you don’t forget to bring me along for large projects with the two young masters from Harbor City, Mr. Monty. It’s only right we all make money together.”

Conrad set his cutlery as well. He did not have much of an appetite before, but he did not even have the mood to look at the table full of dishes today.

Conrad seemed to have decided something when he heard Jasper speak and replied calmly, “Let’s not beat around the bush, Jasper. What do you want?”

“What do I want?”

Jasper smiled at Conrad’s willingness to show his hand.

“What I want isn’t important. The question here is you, what do you guys want?”

“Or maybe I should put this differently. I don’t care what you want to do as long as it doesn’t involve provoking me. Otherwise, I’m going to start attacking you too.”

When he said this, Zane’s expression changed, overwhelmed with fury.

“Stop f*cking bluffing.”

Zane spoke in disgust, “You’re just a country bumpkin from the Mainlands. Who do you think you’re threatening here?”

“Attacking us? How about you go ahead and try? Don’t think that we are willing to be your lackeys like Henry is. Piss me off and I’ll kill you before you even know it.”

Jasper looked at Zane and replied calmly, “How are you planning to kill me, then?”

“How?”

Having been infuriated for the past few days, Zane glared at Jasper and smiled wretchedly. “You’ll know very soon. Stop acting so arrogant, I’m telling you, the only outcome from this is that you’ll get trampled on!

“You think you’re better than everyone just because you got lucky and made some big bucks? There are plenty of people who can walk all over you!”

Jasper chuckled. “Seems like you really hate me, then. I suppose you’d be able to do anything if it meant getting rid of me. For example, being Mitch’s lackey... Or perhaps working with Conrad to plot against Sena?”

“How did you know?!”

The duo's conversation absolutely flew by, lasting only a few seconds. Two sentences were all it took for Jasper to successfully get Zane to confess.

"What the f*ck are you talking about!" Mitch's expression changed drastically as he roared.

Zane also realized that he had said something wrong, and the man was instantly dumbstruck. He sat simply frozen in his chair.

Before his mind could process what had just happened, Henry had already thrown his cutlery at Zane's face.

"Motherf*cker! So, you were the f*cker that plotted against Sena! F*ck you, you b*tch! I'm going to f*cking kill you right now!"

Henry was both pleased and frustrated.

Pleased by the fact that Jasper had managed to get Zane to confess.

Frustrated by the fact that he had to wait. Considering Henry's temper, a mere suspicion was enough for him to rush to their house and start getting physical. There was no need for troublesome things like gathering evidence.

In addition to the pleasure and frustration, Henry felt his heart hurt more as he thought of the money that he had lost the day before.

"F*ck you!"

The more he thought about it, the more aggrieved Henry felt. A second later, the man stood up and grabbed a chair before throwing it at Zane.

Life at the Top Chapter 904

The scene changed rapidly in a split second.

It was still a harmonious dinner a minute ago, yet it had turned into a battlefield of life and death instantly.

Zane shrieked as Henry threw the chair at him. While he had managed to escape being fatally injured, Zane did end up falling to the floor on his butt.

Looking at the shattered chair, Zane broke out in a cold sweat.

“Are you f*cking crazy, Henry?! Are you actually trying to kill me?” Zane roared.

Quarrels between trust-fund children went no further than a harsh one-sided beating. A broken bone or two were already the worst injuries that one could come out with.

After all, they all belonged to the same circle, and there the differences in the statuses between them were often minor. Not to mention, their parents were also part of the picture.

Any deaths would result in a bloody fight between the families until one of them was completely destroyed.

Be it Zane, Henry, or even Mitch, they had all held back when they quarreled in the past.

Yet, upon seeing how Henry was coming for his neck this time, Zane did not have too many inhibitions either.

“Aren’t you afraid that my dad’ll come after your entire f*cking family?”

Henry scoffed and spoke, oozing with a sinister aura, “As if Bob Lancaster, that f*cking wimp, would dare do anything to my dad.

“The only reason why your dad, some B-list figure, could make a name for himself during these last few years isn’t cus he’s good, it’s because we four richest families decide to keep a low profile! Somehow you think that makes you the sh*t?”

“Henry!”

Mitch had no choice but to step up upon seeing the situation take a turn for the worse. Staring at Henry, he clenched his jaw and spoke, “This matter is between us and Jasper. Why’re you so angry about it?”

Henry snickered and replied, “Are you f*cking stupid or do you just not have a brain to use?”

“Who do you think Jasper is? Everyone f*cking knows that Jasper belongs to the Law family! F*cking Hell, look at my sister, you think she’ll fall for anyone but Jasper?”

“My dad’s already recognized the fact that Jasper will be his son-in-law. He is my brother-in-law, and if you’re going to f*ck with him, it means you’re f*cking with me and the Law family!”

“Moreover, I put money into Sena too. When you screw with Sena’s shares, it means you’re taking my money too. You think I’ll forgive you for this?”

“So tell me, are you f*cking stupid, or do you just not have a brain to use? Huh?”

Mitch’s expression turned sour when he heard Henry’s rant.

When he and Conrad planned for the dinner, the two of them had anticipated a hundred scenarios, yet the last thing they expected Jasper being able to exploit Zane so quickly, or the fact that Henry would so whole-heartedly support Jasper.

Mitch felt lightheaded as he thought of this. There was nothing he could do now.

Looking at Zane again, Mitch seethed internally; His mind was filled with the urge to step on this imbecile.

The situation would not have progressed to this point of not for this imbecile.

“Listen to me, Henry. Killing Zane won’t put any of us at an advantage, not to mention that no one will be able to console Bob when he goes mad over this. Be rational,” Mitch stepped up to tell Henry.

Henry scoffed and replied, “You think too highly of Bob. As far as I’m concerned, this father-son duo is nothing to me!”

After saying that, Henry approached Zane, who was still shaking from the previous fright.

Zane was petrified as he watched Henry walk over menacingly.

While Henry was a trust-fund child as previously mentioned, it must have occurred to him that in case anything were to occur, he should at least be able to come out unscathed even if he could not win in future fights. Thus, he had been training persistently and even picked up a few tricks from Julian.

Because of this, Zane, a very unfit man obsessed with alcohol and sex, was no match for the man who was now striding over.

His first reaction was to crawl behind Mitch.

“Save me, Mr. Langdon! Save me, he’s gone mad! He’s really going to kill me, he’s not kidding!”

Mitch felt lightheaded at Zane’s shrieks.

He felt the urge to crush Zane under his foot, but he did not act on this urge. After all, he still had to do something, for Henry would only come after himself after he was done with Zane.

This was the first time Mitch realized that the situation had evolved completely beyond what he could control or solve.

“That’s enough.”

At the most crucial moment, Conrad spoke up.

He had not turned to Henry, but instead to Jasper, who remained silent the entire time.

“Hasn’t this gone far enough, Jasper?”

“What’s happened has happened, and there will always be a solution to solve the issue. You’ve already gotten what you wanted from this play, so why push everyone’s relationship to such extremes?”

Jasper glanced at Conrad briefly as the other spoke.

All Conrad saw in Jasper’s eyes was unaffected tranquility.

Conrad frowned slightly at the lack of expected pride. He could not help but wonder how deeply concealed Jasper’s thoughts were.

‘How does he do it? How can he hold back the excitement and pride even at such a time?’

“Henry, Mr. Monty’s right. What’s happened is in the past, but now we can look to solve it. Going too far won’t solve the problem but instead turn it into a bigger one that we will not be able to resolve.”

Jasper finally spoke.

During such a time, Henry would only listen to Jasper.

His footsteps came to a halt as he looked at Zane darkly, “So, you stupid f*cker. Do you want to resolve this or not?”

Zane did not have any other choice but nod profusely.

“Easy, let’s solve the smallest issue first. You’ve made me lose more than 5 million from Sena’s shares this time, so as long as you and Mitch pay me 5 million each, then we’ll move on from this.”

Henry finally revealed his metaphorical fangs and pierced them into Zane’s and Mitch’s necks, intending to suck them dry.

Both Mitch and Zane’s expressions changed.

Sure, they came from wealthy families. However, while Mitch was a skilled trader who had made quite a bit of money, Zane survived purely from the money his family made. 5 million was pretty much all he had.

Especially after losing most of his family’s wealth to Jasper in Harbor City in the past, 5 million was a huge amount to Zane.

Even the 100 million that they had used to scam Jasper before was an amount the two of them had needed to try their best to scrape together. Another 5 million now was an almost impossible feat.

“Aren’t you too evil asking for 10 million right off the bat? Not to mention that this has nothing to do with me,” Mitch claimed darkly.

When he heard that, Henry snickered and replied, “I’m evil? Nothing to do with you? Okay.”

A second later, Henry grabbed the second chair and lifted it.

Life at the Top Chapter 905

“Henry! You’re going too far!”

Mitch roared.

“So what if I am?”

Henry’s smile was chilling and ruthless.

“And you don’t think playing dirty tricks is going too far? Somehow it’s only too far now that I’m here to make you pay for it, huh?”

“If this is the line of logic you follow, then I’m sorry to say that I won’t be very logical with you!”

By now, Henry had already approached Zane with the chair in his hands.

Zane was hiding behind Mitch, so when Henry approached, Mitch felt as if Henry was coming for him.

As he stared at Henry walking over with a chair raised and killing intent oozing out of him, a mental image of a bloodthirsty Henry who was immune to all reason whilst slamming the chair against Zane’s head flashed through Mitch’s mind. Mitch’s brow twitched.

“Wait!”

Mitch took a step back, only to stagger when he bumped into Zane behind him. Glaring at Zane furiously, Mitch took a deep breath and turned to Henry, “I’ll pay the money.”

Henry immediately stopped moving toward them and sneered. “Don’t treat me like a kid. If you want to pay, pay now.”

Mitch glanced at Henry resentfully and reluctantly pulled out his checkbook from his coat pocket.

“This is 10 million,” Mitch spoke coldly as he ripped out the check. “Don’t worry, this isn’t a check from my personal account. It’s Langdon Enterprise’s public check. With this, you’ll be able to withdraw money from the company’s account. I wouldn’t go so far as to make a company go bankrupt just to lie to you.”

Flicking the check in his hands, Henry immediately returned to his chair and smiled widely. “It wouldn’t have gotten to this if you’d just cooperated at the very beginning.”

Mitch grit his teeth and turned toward Jasper, looking away from Henry. “Are we done with the dinner then? We can leave now, right?”

Jasper shrugged and said, “There are still a few questions we haven’t dealt with yet. What’s the rush, Young Master Langdon? Are the dishes not to your liking, or are you busy?”

“If it’s the dishes, I could always ask someone to change them so they better fit your tastes, Young Master Langdon. If it’s because you have other commitments then I’m afraid I’ll have to hold you back for a little longer.”

“What do you want, Jasper?” Mitch roared.

“That depends on what you’re doing,” Jasper spoke indifferently.

Conrad looked at Jasper and suddenly sighed.

“What do you want, Jasper?”

In face of such a question, Jasper remained calm and replied, "So can we have a frank conversation now?"

"To what extent do you plan to screw with Sena's share price?"

Conrad looked down and replied calmly, "Like many things, it's no longer in our control once it's begun."

"So you're hammering the market, then?" Jasper spoke meaningfully.

"Are you scared?" Conrad suddenly looked up and stared intently at Jasper as he spoke.

"Do I look scared to you?" Jasper asked, pointing at his nose.

Conrad chuckled. This was the first smile he had shown since he arrived.

"Looks like I attacked the right place, or at least, I've caused you a lot of trouble."

Conrad beamed with confidence when he spoke.

"It's not the first time we've fought, Jasper. Sure, I lost before this, but after what happened back then, I dare say that no one knows you better than I do. I've at least disrupted your pace and destroyed your plan, hahaha."

"I don't even know what you're laughing about."

Jasper spoke coldly, "If that alone is enough to make you happy, then I've really overestimated you."

Life at the Top Chapter 906

Slam!

Conrad slammed the table and stood up.

“Like I said before, Jasper, you’ll lose to me one day. And something tells me that that day will come very soon.

“You think that by stopping us from leaving we won’t be able to control the market and Sena’s shares will be saved? You’re too simple-minded if that’s the case!

“I’ve never once planned to crush Sena’s share price by myself. All I needed to do is act as a catalyst, one that would trigger the market’s masses to destroy Sena. Don’t forget, you have so many enemies waiting to see your downfall.

“Let me be frank with you, Jasper. Even if you make us stay here, you still won’t be able to change what’s going to happen.

“There’s still ten minutes before the Nasdaq starts trading. If you applied for a trading halt yesterday, then fine, there’s nothing I can do. But since you applied for special procedures, then don’t blame me for what’s going to happen next.

“Your other enemies and the market’s combined power will help me achieve everything I want to do!

“All I needed to do is plant a fuse. Nothing I did mattered after that because the fuse had already been lit. Today will mark the beginning of the explosion in Sena caused that I ignited!”

Jasper remained expressionless in the face of Conrad’s hysteria as he merely rapped his fingers against the table.

Knock knock.

Two clear sounds cut through the air.

The door that had remained dormant despite the chaos Conrad and Henry had caused was suddenly pushed open.

It was Orson.

Orson kept his head down cautiously for he did not dare look at anyone in the room. Facing Jasper, he asked courteously, "How can I help you, Mr. Laine?"

"Could you bring me a laptop, Mr. Reese? I'll need to connect to the internet as well if that's alright?" Jasper asked gently.

"Yes, yes, of course. Please give me a moment, Mr. Laine."

Orson quickly fled the room after this.

Conrad, Mitch, and Zane all stared at Jasper in confusion.

Zane was still the one who cracked first and asked, "What the hell do you want to do, Laine?"

"Go online through the laptop, of course. What else do you think I'm going to do? Let you play Minesweeper on it?" Jasper asked naturally.

Zane's expression darkened and he mocked, "Go online? Looks more to me like you're going to die. Is your brain even functioning? Even in such a situation, you're still trying to go online?"

"He wants us to look at the Nasdaq market," Conrad answered Zane's question.

Jasper chuckled and spoke, "Mr. Monty is the smarter one, after all."

Zane fumed at the implications, “What are you implying here? That I’m an idiot?”

“You’re not an idiot, you’re f*cking stupid. And shut up, your voice is giving me a headache.”

Henry’s sentence caused Zane’s expression to sour immediately.

Just then, Orson also returned with a laptop in hand.

Like before, he did not look at anyone as he placed the laptop in front of Jasper.

“Here’s the laptop you asked for, Mr. Laine. It should be able to connect to the internet right away,” Orson replied courteously.

“Thank you, Mr. Reese.”

Jasper turned the laptop on and spoke with a smile.

Orson walked out courteously and closed the door behind him. Letting out a deep breath, he felt sweat drench his back from walking in and out of the room.

Life at the Top Chapter 907

Orson only recognized Jasper in the room.

He did not know who the other people were, their family backgrounds, nor their identities.

Even so, Orson was well aware that the noisy youths who seemed to have been quarreling were all formidable people who could crush him like an ant.

As the owner of a restaurant, all Orson wanted to do was to serve customers and make money.

Orson was a smart man. He knew what he was allowed to listen in on and what he could not risk overhearing.

Thus, during the few times that he had entered the room, Orson had acted like a dumb and blind man.

He had never been more relieved over his cautiousness, but he also wondered if those bigshots would suddenly remember him and come after him in the future...

Fortunately, in the private room, Zane and the rest were not in the mood to deal with Orson.

“Who’re you kidding!”

Zane looked at Jasper and spoke with a sneer.

Mitch scoffed as well. While he had not said anything, his expression remained disdainful.

“You know what I’m most impressed about when it comes to you, Jasper? The fact that your ignorant and self-righteous character will never change.

“What are you trying to prove by showing us the Nasdaq market situation? Are you telling me you think you’ll succeed in stopping the crash? Hahaha!

Mitch chortled at Jasper as he spoke, “I’ll kneel and lick your shoes if you manage to turn the tables against the entire market!”

When he said that, Jasper looked up from the screen and smiled subtly at Mitch. “Really?”

“I just said so!”

Mitch harrumphed. He was not an idiot like Zane.

Among the trust-fund children in Harbor City, he had the most extensive knowledge of shares and the financial market.

Otherwise, he would not have been given the title of the stock genius by Harbor City’s media.

From what Mitch could tell, Sena’s share prices had already shown signs of a downward crash, and he was confident in his prediction. The only way he could be proven wrong is if Jasper managed to go against all the economic and financial knowledge he accumulated over all these years!

At that moment, Jasper clicked on Sena’s index.

Henry moved over just as Nasdaq’s trading floor opened on the other side of the world.

In an instant, the frozen data quickly changed and refreshed to show the trades from the new day.

Henry's expression darkened as he watched Sena's share prices drop another few US Dollars in just a few seconds.

He was losing money.

Even though Henry had already received a form of compensation, he was still greatly displeased by the loss in accounts book.

Right then, Jasper's long-distance call with Celine connected.

"Yo, this feature your Terizone came up with sure is convenient."

Celine's gentle voice was heard through the laptop. It served to slightly ease the tense atmosphere in the private room.

"Of course. Perhaps your investment bank could consider using it?" Jasper spoke with a smile.

"The investment bank already has its own communication software. It won't be sold to others, nor will we buy other's software. You can dream on. But if you wish, Colossal is very much willing to invest in Terizone, you know." Celine chuckled.

"Dream on."

Jasper rejecter her without hesitation.

While Terizone and Sena were both companies in the internet industry under his name, Jasper placed completely different levels of importance of these two companies.

Sena was a pawn that could be given up if absolutely necessary, but Terizone was an important component in his future business strategy. There was no way he would let funds from Colossal Investment claim a portion of his benefits.

Celine harrumphed lightly as if she had anticipated Jasper's response, but quickly let the topic go.

At that moment, Zane could not endure it anymore.

"So you're just asking us to watch you flirt?"

Zane scoffed. "At least look at the people around you if you're going to flirt. Aren't you ashamed flirting with a woman that wouldn't even dare show herself in front of us?"

"I could always introduce one to you if you can't find any. I'm sure that any young model or celebrity you want will be better than the one you have here."

Zane smiled pridefully, feeling that he had won this round.

Zane believed that he was the best when it came to playing with women and that Mainland country bumpkins like Jasper naturally did not know better.

"Oh? Which celebrity? Could they be the ones under my companies?" Jasper asked calmly.

Zane's smile froze on his face when he heard Jasper's reply.

He had forgotten that Jasper was the highest authority in Harbor City's and the Mainland's entertainment industry. Countless female stars that he had and had not spent nights with were probably lining up to climb into bed with Jasper.

Thinking back to the situation with Scarlet, Zane's expression turned even sourer.

It was as if he had found a coin on the floor and went to show it off to Jasper, only for the man to pull out a bag of gold.

This greatly pissed the arrogant man off.

Just then, Celine's voice sounded from the computer.

"You're not alone?"

Jasper was just about to reply when Celine scoffed. "Which blind fool called the President of Colossal Investments' Terra regional branch a woman that wouldn't even dare show herself, huh? And even compared me to escorts and prostitutes?"

Celine may not have been present, but her voice rang clearly in everyone's ears via the laptop.

Excluding Henry, who remained unfazed, the other three's expression all changed.

Conrad frowned heavily and he looked at Jasper with a complicated glint in his eyes.

Zane's expression darkened in embarrassment and frustration.

The corner of Mitch's lips twitched furiously.

Among the three, he had the best understanding of Celine. They had met a few times before, and from asking around, he had come to know that this woman was a unique and terrifying character.

Be it her family background or her own capabilities, this was not a woman he could risk offending. She was no less dangerous than Anna Law.

He took a deep breath and spoke with a dry smile, "Hello, Miss Maynard. I don't know if you remember me, I'm Mitch Langdon, son of Kennedy Langdon. We met once during Christie's Auction last year..."

“I don’t remember. I’m also not interested in people who like using their parent’s name as a brand right off the bat.”

Celine immediately cut Mitch off and shut the man up. When this happened, Mitch’s expression became sour, almost as if he had swallowed a fly.

Henry almost chuckled out loud. ‘What an interesting woman.’

Life at the Top Chapter 908

Mitch clenched his jaw silently as Celine's words trampled on his dignity. He said, "Miss Maynard, I..."

"Miss your foot! Your entire family's made out of missuses!"

Celine was suddenly enraged.

Mitch was speechless, but he roared back, "Be grateful for the respect I'm sparing you, Celine. How powerful do you think you are, huh? Who do you think you are? You think you can step and sit all over my head?"

"I don't think I'm anyone, nor do I want to sit on your head. To avoid any misunderstandings, please stop saying something so disgusting. If I wanted to sit anywhere, I'd sit on my Jaspy's face, okay?"

Celine's words had even Conrad and Jasper feeling extremely weird, let alone Mitch and Zane.

Henry laughed aloud, only to become slightly worried after laughing.

'This woman's in a very different league compared to Wendy. Can even Anna take on such an opponent?

'This woman is a devil!'

"You could always sit on me if you don't want me sitting on you, Jaspy."

Celine chuckled.

Jasper could almost see Celine falling onto the sofa gleefully in the hotel with her black-stockings-clad legs kicking about.

Sighing slightly, Jasper ignored Henry's inquisitive expression and replied, "Focus on what's important here."

"Boring."

Celine murmured.

Right after, Celine's voice was heard from the computer again.

It had only been a few seconds, but there was an immense change in the woman's tone and words this time.

If Celine's aura before this had been that of a female devil that ignored the rules of mankind, then Celine right now was like a precise and rigid machine.

"Target share, Sena.

"Ending at 205 US Dollars the previous day, Sena's suffered a large drop in share price for two continuous days, while the trend indicates the possibility for further drops.

"The current trading days' been open for three minutes and twenty-four seconds as of this moment and it's dropped by 3 US Dollars, currently oscillating between 200 and 201 US Dollars.

"It's been three minutes since the market opened and the trading volume continues to increase in comparison to the previous trading day. Trades are frequent enough, but the rate of purchase is slowing down. Shorts are under immense pressure right now and an intense fight's begun between the shorts and longs over where the share prices is going once it reaches 200 US Dollars.

“If you’re analyzing the current situation, Sena’s share prices will definitely drop further. The question is just a matter of when it’ll break 200 US Dollars.

“The moment it drops, so will the market’s trust in Sena, thus increasing the chances of undesirable consequences arising, such as Sena’s share price plummeting at a rate faster and harsher than before.”

As the President of Colossal Investments’ Terra regional branch, Celine had been working with the financial markets ever since she became an adult. Her intuition was much sharper than ordinary people when it came to the analysis the market.

Even though she was just repeating the data that was already available, the situation had massively cleared up thanks to her vocalizing it, while the future trend also began to form before their eyes slowly.

Because of this, even Henry, who knew nothing about the stock market, frowned in worry.

As far as he was concerned, he thought that Jasper had lost this round.

This was not due to Henry’s limited abilities or lack of understanding of shares, but rather that no one had a solution considering the current situation.

As expected, Celine continued to speak.

“From how it looks now, Jasper, Sena doesn’t have any other option. The market’s made its decision.”

Celine’s semi-conclusive sentence greatly improved Zane’s and Mitch’s mood.

Even Conrad, who had been frowning the entire time, showed a small smile.

Life at the Top Chapter 909

He could tell that this Celine woman was a master when it came to stocks. She was not the kind of typical analyst or trader someone could readily employ and commission, but a true top-notch professional.

One could only acquaint themselves with such people and never request them, for every one of them were treasures of large organizations that would never be let go.

One merely had to look at Celine's position to see this: The President of Colossal Investment's Terra regional branch.

This was a title that would have someone of Conrad's background and status feeling lightheaded.

'Colossal Investments! The best investment bank in the world!

'The President of the Terra regional branch! The head of one of the five large regions in the world!

If even she claimed that Sena was doomed, then what can you do, Jasper?'

Conrad looked at Jasper, feeling exceptionally pleased. This was the first time he was truly seeing Jasper's powerlessness.

While this was a situation Sena had been doomed for since the beginning, Conrad had acted as the spark that set it all off!

This feeling of success had Conrad feeling very giddy.

Zane and Mitch shared the same glee.

“Hahaha, do you hear her, Jasper?”

Zane looked at Jasper and laughed out loud.

“Even the person you called to help says you’re doomed. What’s the point of struggling now?”

“Just accept defeat. How hard can it be to accept defeat anyway?”

“I already told you long ago that there’s a bunch of people out there who can deal with you. It’s just a question of whether they’re willing to or not. What a coincidence, your arrogance pissed us off and now we have no other choice but to get rid of you.”

With that, Zane leaned over to Jasper and smiled wretchedly. “I am the winner. Are we clear?”

“You’re blocking my screen,” Jasper spoke indifferently.

Zane harrumphed. “What’re you still pretending for? You’re actually terrified, aren’t you?”

Just as he finished speaking, Henry raised his hand and dragged Zane back by the collar, causing him to stagger and almost fall on his bottom.

“What are you doing, Henry?” Zane was angry from the humiliation.

“Did you not hear him? You’re blocking his screen. Would it kill you not to be a d*ck?” Henry asked solemnly.

“Hmph!”

Zane readjusted his top and said coldly, "Fine then. Go ahead, keep acting! I'd like to see how much longer you can keep this pitiful act up!"

Jasper ignored Zane and stared at the screen seriously before he suddenly asked Celine, "How long more do you think it can stay on 200 US Dollars?"

Celine replied immediately without hesitation, "Half an hour at most before it breaks sub-200."

Jasper's brows knitted tightly when he heard this.

The situation was worse than he had expected.

"Admit defeat, Jasper."

Mitch sighed and spoke calmly.

"On behalf of the Law family and Celine, I can promise that Sena will still survive if you admit defeat. Otherwise, I'll make sure to force you to pull Sena out of the conglomerate, at which point it will essentially spell the end for Sena."

"Admitting defeat."

Jasper looked up at Mitch deeply and replied, "Does not exist in my dictionary!"

Life at the Top Chapter 910

“Your loss is already certain and you’re still so stubborn!”

Mitch stared as Jasper sneered.

At almost the same time, Celine’s voice rang out slightly nervously.

“There’s been a change in the situation.”

Everyone in the room, harboring different thoughts, turned to look at the screen in front of Jasper simultaneously.

The sight they saw in the laptop screen was Sena’s k-line taking a harsh plummet as if it had been dragged down.

A few subsequent large sale orders entered the market and instantly pushed Sena’s share price downward where it paced around 200 US Dollars.

The share prices dropped from 202 US Dollars to 196 US Dollars instantly.

While it may seem like a slight difference of 6 US Dollars per share, an astronomical amount of funds were involved considering Sena’s huge market.

In that instant, 5 million US Dollars vanished from Jasper’s bank account.

Even Henry, the person who knew least about the share market, sucked in a cold breath at the sight. This was an attack from a large investor.

Normal retail investors did not have such power.

Even if the market had an overall bearish stance on Sena's share prices, a drop in share prices was a gradual process. These astronomical sale orders were not something normal investors could come up with.

The first thing Henry did was glare at Mitch and the other two.

Zane who was relishing in Jasper's loss immediately spoke when Henry glared darkly at them, "What're you looking at us for? The three of us are here, how could it be us?"

Henry snorted. "You could have gotten your subordinates to trade for you."

"Then we'll have to pay for their time and work. Do you think it's as easy as grocery shopping? Choosing anyone at random?" Mitch spoke grimly.

"It's not them."

Jasper spoke calmly.

"They're not skilled enough to do this."

That final comment had Mitch's expression darkening.

"The funds came from a new account I've never seen before," Celine's voices drifted over as well.

It was evident that Celine had gone to check the source of the funds during that moment of silence.

"I've already memorized the accounts those ignorant idiots with you now used. This is a new account, so it's most probably someone new."

Celine's words had Mitch and the other two's expressions darkened further.

Mitch was infuriated.

Even though they had the upper hand, Mitch could not help but feel like a slab of meat on the chopping board under Jasper and Celine's insults. There was nothing he could do to defend himself as the dastardly duo insulted him.

The drastic change in moods had ignited ire in Mitch's core.

He felt the urge to act on it, but once he glanced and realized that Henry was looking for a reason to fight, Mitch forced the embers to simmer within him.

After all, as far as he was concerned, victory was only a matter of time. All Mitch had to do was hold off until then and he would be able to force Jasper's head on the floor with his foot.

Plus, both Mitch and Conrad were curious who this helper, owner of this order, was.

Life at the Top Chapter 911

Regardless of who this person was, it was evident that the man's goal was to get rid of Jasper.

"I've got it."

Celine's voice sounded light and cheery on the other end and the sound of fingers snapping could be heard with her words.

"The funds are from Layman Investments."

Jasper's mind immediately supplied him with Morrison's rather dark expression at the mention of Layman Investments.

As the President of Layman Investment Bank's Terra regional branch and a man that held a grudge against Jasper, Morrison had the reason and ability to deal a fatal blow at such a crucial time to Jasper.

With the puzzle solved, Jasper's focus returned to the screen where Sena's share prices continued to drop.

"After breaking the 200 US Dollar mark, the market's trust has already completely broken down. Without a large number of funds to rescue the market now, Sena will end up making Nasdaq's history as the share with the largest fall in share prices."

Celine's voice continued to echo from the laptop speakers.

Just as Celine finished speaking, Sena's share prices had also fallen to 190 US Dollars with a promise for further drops.

At that moment, something strange happened to Sena's trading market.

All the orders were of people selling out while the buy-in column remained empty.

This meant that no one was choosing to buy Sena's shares now.

Not even madmen with a great deal of courage dared to speculate or bargain hunt by investing money from their bank into Sena, a share that even idiots could tell would continue to drop.

"The market's panic resembles a typhoon, taking everything in its path as it gathers all the power into itself."

Conrad spoke, looking at Jasper calmly, "Do you still have a plan, Jasper?"

Jasper ignored Conrad and spoke to Celine, "Celine, help me rescue the market. Like we discussed before, we'll follow your pace."

"Are you sure?" Celine asked.

"I'm sure," Jasper replied calmly.

Jasper's words echoed in the private room and everyone heard him clearly.

Even Henry was speechless.

He knew that attempting to rescue the market now was a suicide mission.

It was as if someone was trying to keep a falling tower from crashing down by themselves. This was no different from putting their own lives on the line for nothing.

Mitch laughed aloud and spoke, "You're crazy, Jasper. How much money can you throw in?"

“100 million? 200 million? Or perhaps 1 billion?”

“Can’t you tell that the entire market’s trying to sell out Sena’s shares now? Unless you empty the bank’s reserves and buy all the shares, there’s no way you’d be able to rescue the market!”

Just as Mitch finished speaking, Sena’s trading market on Nasdaq showed a list of large buy-in orders.

Every order was 1000 rounds.

According to Sena’s current share price of 190 US Dollars, 1 round cost 19000 US Dollars, 1000 rounds would cost 19 million US Dollars!

10 consecutive orders meant that Jasper had tossed out 190 million in a few seconds. According to the current exchange rate, that was almost 2 billion Somer Dollars.

Such a large number of funds had caused Sena’s share prices to halt mid-drop before the prices stabilized at 190 US Dollars and stopped dropping!

Life at the Top Chapter 912

While they had managed to temporarily halt the drop in share prices, everyone knew that this was merely an illusion.

2 billion Somer Dollars would still make a sound even if it was fully tossed into the sea.

The current halt was merely the market devouring the 2 billion.

As expected, after a minute or two, the 2 billion Somer Dollars Jasper had Celine buy-in had all turned into Sena's shares.

People continued to sell-out Sena's shares and no one followed Jasper in buying-in.

So the share prices continued to fall.

"Hahaha, do you see this, Jasper? I told you that your hard work would be for naught, didn't I?" Who knows how many more 2-billions you have to save Sena?"

Mitch chortled.

"Keep taking money out. You threw out 2 billion just for a short minute or two. You sure are rich, Jasper, I can't possibly compare. Hahaha."

Just then, Conrad who had learned to remain solemn after two consecutive losses began to feel excited as well.

Staring at Jasper who was frowning heavily, Conrad spoke, "You've lost, Jasper."

Jasper looked up to meet Conrad's eyes as if only snapping out of his thoughts now.

"Did you think that I was wondering how I should solve this problem you proposed?" Jasper asked.

Zane laughed aloud. "Are you not?"

"Or are you trying to tell me that you're thinking of how you'll beg us for mercy later?"

"Hahaha. Don't worry, I promise I'll be very forgiving if you're actually that self-aware. Get on your knees and crawl over, lick my shoes and call me Daddy. That's it, easy right? Hahaha."

Jasper merely shook his head at Zane's mocking tone.

As far as he was concerned, living things like Zane were very much different from people like himself. Being calculative with Zane was like arguing with a centipede, utterly stupid.

However, just because Jasper thought like that did not mean Henry did as well.

Already irked, Henry's cold glare swept over Zane and he smiled chillingly crescent-eyed as he spoke, "Would it kill you to stop barking and shut up?"

"How about I glue your f*cking mouth shut for you if you can't shut it on your own?"

"Hmm?"

The final hum at an octave higher ran a chill down Zane's spine.

He looked at Henry in terror. Zane would have merely taken it as a simple 'f*ck you' if this was anyone else. After all, there were tons of people who claimed that they wanted to f*ck him but they had never succeeded.

So he would just ignore it.

However, considering that Henry was the one who spoke it, Zane felt the need to consider the man's words. Past tragic experiences had taught him that Henry was fully capable of making his threats come true.

Still, no matter how furious Henry was, it did not change the fact that Jasper was utterly defeated.

Jasper's gaze was locked on the screen. While the 2 billion Somer Dollars that entered the market had managed to slightly slow down the fall of the share prices to some degree, that was also all it could do.

The market had completely consumed the 2 billion that Jasper tossed into the market in less than two minutes.

From how the situation looked, everything seemed calm.

"Did you guess wrongly, Jaspny?"

Life at the Top Chapter 913

Celine's causal tone hinted with a tint of schadenfreude drifted from the laptop.

"You threw your bait, but it doesn't seem like you've caught any big fishes, though. Even Morrison who surfaced above the water unprompted disappeared as well."

Jasper interlocked his fingers and placed them under his chin as he spoke after a short moment of silence, "Keep baiting."

"This time, 1 billion."

Celine snapped her fingers and concisely carried out the operation out instead of doubting Jasper's decision at such a crucial time.

Conrad frowned when he heard Jasper as well, suddenly realizing a horrifying possibility.

"You're fishing?!" Conrad gasped raspily.

Zane frowned and stared at Conrad's sudden shock distastefully. "What fishing? Jasper's the fish on the cutting board right now ready to be slaughtered. What can he even fish?"

"You don't know sh*t!" Conrad suddenly roared.

Ignoring Zane's murderous expression, Conrad turned to Jasper. "You're a cruel man, Jasper! You're willing to risk so much just to fish out all potential dangers in one go?"

Jasper replied calmly, "Why wouldn't I get rid of all of you now? Do I look like I have all the time in the world to play with people like you? It might be you three today, then two others tomorrow, and then another gang the day after. I don't have the kind of energy to play such ridiculous games with you."

Jasper turned to Conrad who was paling with fury and smiled as he continued to speak, "As for money. I have more than enough for this."

"No way! We've already checked your cash flow before, there's no way you could take so much money out!" Conrad seethed.

"You're right about that. But how much money do you think I can borrow from the bank?" Jasper chuckled.

That sentence seemed to have lifted the metaphorical mist over Conrad's eyes.

Everything that could not be explained now made sense.

Mitch reacted as well.

"You b*stard! You actually threw money you loaned from the bank into Sena's market so that everyone including us thinks that you'd risk yourself just to protect Sena, only to get rid of all of us?"

At that, Zane began to panic despite not understanding what was happening.

"What do you mean? Why don't I understand what you're talking about?"

"Wasn't Jasper screwed over?"

As of that moment, no one was in the mood to deal with an imbecile like Zane. Both Mitch and Conrad now looked at Jasper with shock and a bit of terror.

They knew that Jasper was currently hung up in the sky by a thin thread. Any large winds high above, let alone small mistakes, could easily cause Jasper to fall and shatter.

Yet Jasper had done what he did anyway.

By the time Conrad and the rest reacted, Celine had already carried out the instruction.

10 consecutive Somer Dollar buy-in orders entered the market and the act resembled throwing a slab of meat toward a famished wolf-pit. Countless hungry wolves pounced and began to tear at the large piece of meat.

Countless investors trying to escape immediately threw out their sell-out orders and let out a deep sigh of relief at the notification of a successful transaction.

Everyone thought that Sena was screwed and whoever managed to leave was the winner.

Following that, countless unfamiliar accounts suddenly appeared with large sell-out orders and instantly devoured Jasper's 1 billion buy-in order.

Jasper chuckled at the market board that no longer showed any sign of his previous order and spoke, "Time to pull in the net, Celine."

Life at the Top Chapter 914

Following Jasper's instruction, an intense ominous premonition came over Conrad and the other two.

It was a common fear that human beings tended to have for the unknown.

Conrad's expression no longer carried the victorious look from before. Instead, his brows were tightly furrowed and his expression was extremely solemn.

Up until this moment, he still had no idea what Jasper's plan was.

Indeed, Jasper had managed to shine a light on the people who were secretly attacking him. Everyone had thought that Jasper was willing to use the stupidest and most pessimistic method to protect Sena.

Despite knowing that it would be for naught, Jasper still threw his funds into the market.

The people attacking Jasper must have been filled with glee then.

Conrad looked at Jasper and remembered how he used to be the gleeful one as well.

No matter how he looked at it then, Jasper was screwed.

However, he now found out all of this had been Jasper's intention. Conrad could not help but wonder how Jasper planned to win this doomed game.

Jasper was even willing to use three billion just to lure out the enemy hiding in the dark.

Jasper had to have a 100% guarantee that it would work, or the only reason left would be that Jasper had gone mad.

Just as Conrad frowned heavily while wracking his brain to think of what Jasper would do next, the release of an official statement caused another uproar.

This was a statement from the Nasdaq Review Committee.

It was a simple statement that only consisted of one sentence.

[Sena's holding parent company, Somerland's JW Capital LLC, will begin a privatization evaluation on Sena, effective immediately!]

Privatization meant that a company would buy out all outstanding shares in the market and become a 100% shareholder, pulling the company out of the market.

Sena was pulling out of the market!

No one suspected the truth of the statement and no one doubted JW Capital's ability to do such a thing.

JW Capital already held 67% of Sena's shares in the beginning and was a major shareholder. Not to mention that one billion Somer Dollars had been used to issue more shares and three billion Somer Dollars worth of buy-in orders had also entered the market.

JW Capital now owned at least 93% of Sena's shares!

While a majority of the shares had been devoured by premium shares, JW Capital did not seem to care.

The sinister and gleeful smile on Morrison's face froze when he saw the statement. He was sitting in the president's office of Layman Investments' Terra regional branch.

A loud bang rang out in the room.

It was the sound of him slamming his fist on the office table.

“That damned Somer descent! You’re sly and vile!

“Privatization? What a large cost you’re willing to pay!”

Morrison ground his teeth and spoke.

Just then, a young man looked up from a side table in the office and reported to Morrison, “Mr. Morrison, Sena’s share prices have begun to rise!”

Morrison harrumphed and clicked on his computer to pull out the line chart that represented Sena’s share prices.

It had only been a few minutes since the statement was released and Sena’s share prices had already risen from the lowest 185 US dollars to 193 US dollars. There was also a trend for future increases.

“Jasper used this chance to buy a large number of shares on the market with that three billion Somer Dollars. There aren’t many outstanding shares left so the news managed to get the investors to crazily start buying them.”

Morrison’s expression turned unpleasant.

“How many of Sena’s shares do we currently have?”

Life at the Top Chapter 915

The young man replied awkwardly, “We’ve already liquidated our account... Should we buy in, Mr. Morrison?”

“Forget it!”

Morrison shook his head and exhaled. “This was an opportunity we came across by accident. Best case scenario, we inflict a bit of suffering upon Jasper. But if we don’t succeed, we won’t lose anything either. Leave it be.”

“But Mr. Morrison, we’ve just lost more than 20 million US dollars. I...” The young man spoke, feeling conflicted.

“I can afford to compensate for that.”

Morrison scoffed and suppressed his anger as he spoke, “Let this 20 million act as a greeting for Jasper. Let it tell him that we’re here.

“Exit the market. No matter who it is attacking Sena this time, think of a way to contact them. They’ve failed this time so there’s no way they’ll give up just like that. An enemy of our enemy is a friend.”

“Yes, Mr. Morrison.”

...

In an office in New York, United States.

A bright and clean office sat amid the unparalleled city scenery of the international financial center that was New York.

Winston sat behind the computer. Watching the market for at least three hours each day was something he had made into a habit.

As of today, he was only focused on one stock, Sena.

Winston watched everything occur before his eyes and chuckled when the statement was released.

“You really do surprise me, Laine. Full privatization, huh? Is that your trump card?”

“I have to say, it’s a good move.”

While muttering to himself, Winston took his phone and dialed the number of his administrative secretary.

“Have the fund company release an official statement saying that we don’t plan to sell Sena’s shares as of now nor do we plan to cash them out.

“We continue to insist that Sena is a company with long-lasting blue-chip stocks. If JW Capital still decides to carry out full privatization, we welcome them to form a partnership with us.”

With Winston’s statement, investors who went through a drastic emotional rollercoaster thanks to Sena’s share prices immediately realized their mistake.

Up until now, stock god Winston had not sold any of his shares no matter the increase or decrease in Sena’s share prices.

Now that Sena was about to go private, Winston had instead released an official statement.

The message was clear. Winston took a bullish stance on Sena and did not plan to sell his shares to the market.

With that, investors who were planning to use this chance of Sena going private to buy its shares and make a lot of money were thrilled. They increased their orders.

Investors who had sold their shares earlier on now regretted it deeply. They felt the urge to cut their own hands for selling their shares and returned to the market exasperatedly, not wishing to lose out on such a great opportunity.

There were not many outstanding shares left, so with huge capitals entering, Sena's share prices began to quickly rise.

193 US dollars!

198 US dollars!

200 US dollars!

Once the market hit the high price of 200 US dollars, a scene that should only appear in fiction became reality.

The buy-in column was packed with orders to purchase shares, while the sell-out column remained empty with no sell-out orders.

A similar scene had happened merely half an hour ago. The only difference was that the sell-out column was filled while the buy-in column was empty.

In 30 minutes, the entire market's demand had turned a whole 180.

"The epitome of the fickle finger of fate!"

Conrad looked at Jasper dazedly, the latter's expression calm as he sat behind the laptop. Conrad felt a storm wreak havoc in his chest and his mind was buzzing, leaving that sentence the only coherent thought in his mind.

Life at the Top Chapter 916

Up until now, Sena's share prices had rebounded unimaginably.

This was a strong rebound, and Sena had changed from a stock that everyone avoided to a treasure everyone wanted and desired. It was now something not even money could guarantee.

The eyes of Conrad, Mitch, and Zane widened as they gaped in shock at how everything was unfolding before their eyes.

They had predicted thousands of possibilities and concluded that Jasper did not have any chance of turning the tables around unless Nasdaq exploded.

Yet...

"What's going on? What the hell is happening? Sena's share prices were dropping just now, so why are they rising once Sena stated they're going private? Are the investors stupid?"

Zane roared, going crazy. His wretched expression was filled with resentment and indignation.

With his intellect, Zane could not understand how Jasper managed to do it, nor did he understand how those millions of investors across the Pacific Ocean managed to be played to Jasper's whims.

"Privatization was a final backup plan you came up with a long time ago, right? You were certain that with Sena's business results and profitability, news of privatization would cause the share prices to leap greatly. And you were planning to use that to write off the damage we caused, correct?"

Conrad asked, staring intently at Jasper's face.

This question answered Zane's confusion.

"That's not right. Isn't he afraid that Sena's share prices would continue to fall?"

"I heard that many companies' share prices start dropping the moment they release a statement about going private. The investors are scared that shares of a business that's no longer on the market would become null, so they sell them," Zane muttered to himself.

"That's because this is Sena we're talking about! The investors won't earn anything out of those stupid companies and their rubbish shares once they go private, so of course, investors will think of ways to sell their shares.

"But Sena is different. Sena's business performance is too strong and the amount of money it can make each day is enough to trigger people's greed. You don't even need to advertise this because the investors would go and search it up first hand."

Conrad spoke, his jaw set.

"But the main problem here is that there are still people trying to screw with Sena's share prices in secret. So they'll try and use this chance to pull Sena's market price down. If Sena's share prices continue to drop after news of privatization, then Sena will truly be over.

"You're a brave man, Jasper! Aren't you afraid that you'd make a mistake and end up losing everything?"

Jasper replied to Conrad's interrogative questions calmly, "You've correctly guessed it all. But it's also not a possibility. Those people couldn't hold on in the end, could they?"

Conrad shook slightly, and his phone continued to vibrate. He knew that those were phone calls from Valentine and the traders he employed in the United States asking him for help.

However, there was nothing he could do.

Now that they had arrived at this point, even though Conrad did not want to admit it, he was well aware that his plan had completely failed.

“Plus, so what if I fail? I could always just privatize it for real. It’s a loss I can afford.”

Jasper’s words had Conrad widening his eyes, pulling him out of his previous despair. Conrad shouted raspily, “Privatize for real? You never intended to privatize?”

“No sh*t. I need money to go private.”

Jasper glanced at Conrad as if the latter was an idiot. “Didn’t I just tell you guys that the money I used is the money I got from a loan? I have to pay it back! Understood?”

Jasper had signed a commercial loan credit of eight billion from ICBS’ Waterhoof City branch. During the validity period, the bank could transfer eight billion in funds into Jasper’s specified account if necessary.

Life at the Top Chapter 917

The three billion he used today had come from the commercial loan.

If not for the commercial loan, Jasper would not have been able to come up with another three billion after spending one billion to issue an increase of Sena's shares due to his tight cash flow.

"Tomorrow or perhaps another day, JW Capital will release a statement claiming that after a considerable amount of evaluation, we realized that it's not time for Sena to go private just yet and JW Capital will postpone privatization indefinitely."

Jasper's words had Conrad paling further.

Mitch glared at Jasper with a harsh gaze and ground his teeth together as he spoke, "You b*stard! You're intentionally lying to Nasdaq and your investors! Aren't you afraid of the consequences?"

"Consequences? Privatizing a public company is not some small decision. After a thorough evaluation, I realized that it's not possible, so I decided not to do it in the end. That's it. What consequences do I have to bear?"

"JW Capital didn't buy one single share of Sena's from the stock market, so there won't be suspicion of malicious manipulation of Sena's shares prices. God can come over and trial me and I still won't have to face any consequences. Everything I did was legal and lawful."

Jasper's words had Mitch's face slowly paling.

Jasper took a look at the trio's expressions and shook his head in slight disappointment.

There were many unspecified details. For example, Benett's help and Morrison's decision to retreat.

Jasper had decided to go big this time so that he could get rid of Conrad and the other two, as well as lurking enemies like Morrison. Even if Jasper could not fully get rid of Morrison, he refused to back down without dealing a huge hit.

However, Morrison was too crafty, or perhaps there was more to his retreat than Jasper knew.

Still, Morrison had retreated without hesitation once he realized his plan could not go through. Jasper estimated that Morrison had lost a dozen million or so, but he had no idea what the exact amount was.

Still, Morrison's retreat was a very decisive one.

This only made Jasper think that Morrison was a much more dangerous man than he previously thought.

"Only the people who trust you will fall for a beginner's lie.

"The people who know you will fall for an intermediate lie.

"The liars themselves will fall for an advanced lie.

"The entire world fell for your lie, Jasper. So which does it fall under?"

Conrad looked at Jasper and asked despondently.

"I don't like thinking about things like this."

Jasper shook his head. He did not have the time nor effort to spare to feel proud about his plan—not when there were more important things he had to do next.

“I think my gift to you should be arriving soon.”

At almost the same moment Jasper finished speaking, someone knocked on the door.

The knock was evidently out of respect, for a group of officers pushed open the door the next moment and entered the room before anyone inside could reply.

A stern-looking middle-aged man swept his eyes around the room before marching over to Conrad and spoke coldly, “Conrad Monty, we have evidence that you’re involved in loan fraud. Please come with us to the station.”

Life at the Top Chapter 918

Conrad's expression changed drastically as he shouted, "What loan fraud?! I want to see your warrant!"

The middle-aged man pulled out a document with a red seal and handed it to Conrad, speaking indifferently, "Agricultural Bank's Southeast Province branch has reported to us that you were involved in deliberately defrauding a ten-figure loan."

Conrad's eyes burned into the black and white document with a red seal. Its contents were no different from the words the middle-aged man said.

"Hasn't the situation been solved already? The bank didn't lose anything and the loan was never moved from the company's account at all. Why are you only investigating this now? What were you doing then?"

"Are you implying that you wanted us to arrest you earlier?" The middle-aged man scoffed.

"Are you aware of the concept of investigation? Any simple case requires an in-depth investigation. We can only make a move once we have concrete evidence in hand, or we'd end up arresting someone innocent and letting the culprit go!

"Now that we're here to arrest you, it means we have solid evidence!"

Conrad abruptly turned his head to stare at Jasper intently, roaring, "You're behind this, aren't you, Jasper?!"

“Now, now, watch your choice of words. You were the one who broke the law, so how can you blame me? Now these words come with consequences,” Jasper spoke calmly.

Conrad shot forward and slammed on the table in front of Jasper. With red eyes, the man shouted, having gone crazy due to anger.

“No one would’ve investigated this at all if you hadn’t done anything! Not when I didn’t cause a single cent’s loss! The loan was done with your company’s name, so how could they have traced it back to me?”

“You were the one who did all this in secret! Admit it if you had the guts to do it!”

“I would admit it if I were you, Jasper. At least then I’ll still look at you with respect. Otherwise, I’ll look down on you for the rest of my life even if I end up losing everything!”

Conrad’s words were strong as he drilled his eyes into Jasper, unwilling to miss out on any slight change in the other’s expression.

However, he was only disappointed in the end for there was not the slightest ripple in Jasper’s expression. There was not even a shine in his eyes as the man locked gazes with him expressionlessly.

“To be honest, Conrad, as far as I’m concerned, those two are idiots.”

Jasper pointed at Mitch and Zane as he spoke. He did not even wait for the two to explode over his insult before continuing, “Those two idiots can hardly amount to the threat you pose to me. You’re much smarter than the two of them.

“This opportunity you found, be it timing or point of attack, was perfect. If not for chance, I’d have lost much more than I have. At least from this ripple in Sena’s share prices, you’ve made me lose 500 million.”

Instead of elation, Conrad looked like he was in extreme pain when he heard Jasper's words.

"But I lost two billion! All of it! Gone!"

"You did that to yourself," Jasper spoke calmly.

"Not to mention that even now, you continue to set me up with words. But let's be honest, do you think that'll work on me?"

"You're right, the loan was signed under the company's name. But you were the one who participated in the entire loan process and reviewed the follow-up procedures."

Life at the Top Chapter 919

“Not to mention that you tried to secretly skip half of the loan process before the company was even substantively established. I’m sure there’s no need for me to specify how you planned to use the loan and how you planned to set me up, right?”

Jasper smiled and pointed at the group of stern-looking officers, saying, “I trust them. They wouldn’t take action without concrete evidence, which implies that they’ve done a very extensive and detailed investigation. After all, the head of the Monty family is a prominent figure in Southeast Province. It wouldn’t be right if they were to arrest falsely.”

There was not a shred of emotion in the stern middle-aged man’s face as he spoke, “Since we’ve already decided to take action, then we wouldn’t be arresting the wrong person. Conrad Monty, would you like to come with us yourself or should we bring you away by force?”

This was as rude as they could be.

Conrad’s superior status was the only reason he was being given such special treatment by these people working in special departments like this. Anyone else would have been arrested and dragged to the station without the chance to do so much blabbering.

Still, since they were taking action, it was without a doubt that they would be leaving with Conrad in tow.

Conrad’s eyes flared with anger and fear. He was overwhelmed with conflicting emotions. He never thought that after all he had done, he would land himself behind bars in the end.

This explained why Jasper did not have a reaction when the incident regarding the partnered company came to light. Jasper's lack of activity was not in line with Conrad's understanding of Jasper.

It had not made sense to Conrad then, but he did not dwell on the matter as the follow-up plan to attack Sena's share prices was much more important.

Jasper's counter-attack finally appeared now.

"You never once gave up taking revenge on me, Jasper! You've been preparing in secret all this while! Fine, you win!" Conrad ground his teeth and growled.

Jasper stood from the chair and looked Conrad straight in the eye, speaking calmly, "Just like how you never gave up on attacking me. Think about it, since when have I ever taken the initiative to offend you?"

"Every incident stemmed from you thinking that my existence is standing between you and your interests. Or perhaps you think my existence is a threat to your title of being Southeast Province's first genius in 50 years.

"You act as though only by completely defeating me can you secure your beautiful title as the first genius in 50 years.

"But has it ever crossed your mind that I was never interested in something like that?"

"All I'm interested in is the benefits I have in hand and the benefits I'm about to have in hand. Just these two, that's it. What people think and say is up to them, I don't care. So why are you going so far and running yourself down just to get rid of me?"

Jasper sighed lightly and looked at Conrad before speaking calmly, "Don't even think about getting a cent back from the two billion you threw into Sena. I can promise you, it's not happening."

Conrad's eyes widened as he glared at Jasper, roaring, "You wouldn't dare, Jasper!"

Jasper did not speak anymore.

The middle-aged man walked over to stand in front of Conrad and spoke expressionlessly, "I'll ask you one more time, Conrad Monty. Are you coming with us yourself or do we have to bring you away forcefully?"

Conrad trembled, and his complexion changed abnormally before it flushed red like he was drunk. With a roar, he opened his mouth and spat out a mouthful of blood that held what little strength he had left in his body.

Everyone watched as Conrad's eyes rolled back before the man fell limply onto the floor.

Life at the Top Chapter 920

Conrad suddenly fainting was the last thing anyone had anticipated.

Zane was misfortunate enough to be standing opposite Conrad, so the blood Conrad spat out before he fainted ended up splashing all over Zane's face.

Warm and fresh blood with a heavy metallic scent covered his entire face.

Taken aback, Zane began to wipe his face and scream crazily as though there was fire under his feet.

On the other end of the room, the middle-aged man's expression changed and he immediately caught Conrad. Carrying him in his arms, the middle-aged man turned to shout at his subordinates, "Quick, we're sending him to the closest hospital now!"

Conrad may be a suspect, but he had yet to be charged by the judge. Not to mention that Conrad was the head of the Monty family. The middle-aged man would be screwed if anything happened to Conrad.

The group frantically brought Conrad away but the embarrassing scene had yet to end.

Ignoring Zane who continued to shout, Jasper looked straight at Mitch.

For some inexplicable reason, Jasper's gaze sent a harsh shiver wracking through Mitch.

He saw with his own eyes how Jasper infuriated Conrad to the point of actually spitting blood out and fainting.

Under Jasper's calm gaze, indescribable fright spread all over Mitch's body.

"What do you want?"

Mitch growled fiercely. His expression was defensive as if he was trying to scare Jasper away by shouting.

"Are you afraid of me?" Jasper asked with some intrigue.

Mitch scoffed and suppressed the unease within him, replying, "Afraid of you? What kind of joke is that? Don't think that just because we're in the Mainland it suddenly means you're above the law, Jasper. You wouldn't dare hit me."

"Hit you?"

Jasper shook his head and spoke, "Your intellect only goes so far. Why would I hit you?"

Mitch gave it some thought and realized that Jasper was right.

'Jasper would never dare hurt me.

'Unless he's suicidal.'

At that, Mitch's mood immediately brightened as he spoke, "At least you're not stupid, Jasper. You win this time but just wait. It'll only be a matter of time before your consequences catch up to you. Don't you dare let me find an opening to attack, or I'll make sure you die a tragic death!

"Everything you have now, be it women, wealth, or status, will all belong to me by then. You're destined to be nothing more than a pitiful pest."

Jasper spoke calmly, "I wasn't done. I definitely won't hit you, because the world is filled with too many solutions that are much more terrifying than getting beaten up to the point of being crippled."

Mitch's proud smile froze on his face and he took an instinctive step back. After gulping, he scoffed in an attempt to muster confidence. "Stop f*cking bluffing. What can you even do to me, huh?"

Just then, Zane had finally calmed down a little. The traces of blood on his face made him look wretched and horrifying. Glaring at Jasper, Zane ground his teeth together and spoke, "This is all your fault, Jasper!"

"How is it my fault when you came all the way from Harbor City to get rid of me, only to end up like this in the end?"

Jasper fired back calmly.

Zane replied in a dark tone, "If I said it's your f*cking fault, then it's your f*cking fault! What's with all this bullsh*t?"

"I'm telling you, Jasper. All you did was get rid of a stray dog of ours, okay? I have plenty of stray dogs like this. All I have to do is call for them and they'll pounce on you like mad! I'd like to see how long you can keep up this proud act!"

Zane had just finished speaking when a whole roast chicken was slammed into his face.

It was a delicious roast chicken, yet it was treated as a weapon now. A weapon that brought out a pitiful cry from Zane and gave him a nosebleed.

Life at the Top Chapter 921

Coupled with the traces of the blood Conrad spat out earlier, Zane looked even more embarrassing now.

“What the f*ck?! Does this look like a place for you to talk, you stupid f*cker? Do you think you’re some sh*t?” Henry glared at Zane sinisterly and spoke.

He had held back for a very long time and there was no way he would back down from a chance to show off.

Striding over, Henry grabbed Zane by the collar and snickered. “I’ve never met stupid f*ckers with memories as bad as yours. How are there people in this world who only remember having fun but not the times they got beat up, hmm?”

Zane’s cheek burned, either from the roast chicken or the slap Henry gave him. He looked at Henry with terror and forced his anger aside to speak, “Have you gone mad, Henry?!”

“I’m mad?” Henry laughed aloud. “You’ll be the first one I kill if I go mad.”

“Henry, stop,” Jasper called out softly.

He wanted to get rid of Zane and Mitch, but it definitely would not be through violence.

Otherwise, he would have asked Julian to deal with them instead.

However, while Mitch and Zane were indeed small fries, the true trouble was the people supporting them.

“Violence will solve many problems, but those that violence cannot solve are the actual big messes.”

Jasper then pulled out his phone to call Jake after he finished speaking.

The call connected in no time.

“Mr. Laine.” Jake’s polite voice sounded from the other end.

“How’s progress on the matter I asked you to look into?” Jasper asked.

Jake chuckled evilly and replied, “It was really easy. As long as you’re willing to pay, there’s nothing you can’t do in Harbor City. This person Zane has quite a few issues. I found out from his driver that Zane actually has syphilis.

“And the woman who gave Zane syphilis apparently used to be Bob’s lover for a while. This is huge news and not many people know about it, but I’m certain it’s true. According to your requests, I’ve already leaked the news to the entertainment and gossip media outlets.”

Jasper raised his eyebrows.

He had only planned to expose some of Zane’s dirty secrets to Harbor City but he did not expect to dig out such a huge scandal.

Things were getting interesting.

Jasper looked at Zane pitifully.

This imbecile had just gotten into a lot of trouble.

The gossip reporters would not let him live this down, and it was likely that his father Bob would not let such a disobedient child run free either.

Jasper's brows furrowed when he looked over only to see that Henry was still grabbing Zane's collar tightly and blood from Zane's bleeding nose was about to get on Henry's hand. He quickly spoke, "Henry, let him go."

Henry was stunned and turned his head to ask why. "I've been wanting to beat this stupid f*cker for a long time already! I only got to slap him once."

Henry evidently did not want to let go of this punching bag.

However, the next thing Jasper said had Henry immediately letting go as if he had been electrocuted.

"He has syphilis."

"Holy f*ck! Why didn't you say that earlier?"

Henry immediately jumped a few meters back as expletives continued to come out of his mouth.

Life at the Top Chapter 922

Henry was not the only one shocked as Jasper's words had Mitch's expression changing drastically!

To get rid of Jasper, the two of them had been in close contact recently. Mitch only knew that syphilis could be transmitted but he did not know in what ways!

Even if he knew that his relationship with Zane was not intimate enough for syphilis to be transmitted, the fact that Zane, whom he had spent every day side by side with, had syphilis made Mitch want to barf and vomit.

Zane, the person in question, went completely pale.

It was ingrained fear and shock that seeped from his bones.

Not even Conrad's blood and his own nosebleed over his face could cover up his pale complexion.

He looked at Jasper with pure fear, his eyes swirling with craze and disbelief as he roared, "Bullsh*t! What are you talking about? Who the f*ck has syphilis? I'll kill you!"

Zane resembled a little child who had been exposed for taking a dump in his pants. He defended himself and threatened Jasper maddeningly in an attempt to hide the fact that Jasper was speaking the truth.

He did indeed have syphilis and it was not a glory story. If anything, the news of it should never see the light of day.

"Oh? So it's fake news?"

Jasper's tone was light.

"So the fact that you slept with your dad's ex-girlfriend is fake too?"

Jasper directly pressed the loudspeaker button on his phone as he spoke. He did not look at Zane who was trembling, nor Henry who was excited for gossip, or even Mitch who had an inexplicable weird expression on his face.

"Repeat the news you told me," Jasper requested calmly.

Jake's voice quickly echoed through the speakers.

"Zane does indeed have syphilis. To confirm the news, we went to his private doctor and found his entire medical record that included his diagnosis and treatment.

"We also found out from his private doctor that a woman called Tina Gross had also joined him for syphilis treatment.

"This Tina is an Auman and she dated Bob half a year ago. The press found out about it, but Bob ended up dumping her three months later.

"Tina continued to stay in Harbor City after that, living in a high-end neighborhood under Zane's name. A few paparazzi took pictures of Zane and Tina kissing by the window before, but Zane paid them off in secret.

"We managed to get a few films of those pictures, though."

Jasper spoke calmly after Jake was done, "Alright. Thanks for the trouble."

"It's no trouble. It's part of my job, after all. News should be all over the press tonight, I think," Jake replied calmly.

From the call, Jake could hear that Zane knew he was the one on the other end. Not that Jake cared, though.

As far as Jake was concerned, offending Zane was no issue as long as he had Jasper to protect him.

Even idiots knew who to choose between Jasper and Zane.

Ending the call, Jasper turned to Zane who was not looking well and spoke calmly, "You heard him. I'm pretty sure the Harborers will have a nice show to watch tonight. Wonderful, I'm sure it'll be able to entertain the bored Harborers."

"That's f*cking cool, man!" Henry slapped Zane's shoulder and spoke with a shocked expression on his face, "Holy hell, I didn't know you had it in you to do something like this. What's this even considered, incest?"

Life at the Top Chapter 923

“Oh, but then again, this was just his ex-girlfriend and not your actual stepmother. Though I’d like to know, did you ask that woman if you or your father was better in bed? Hahaha.”

Henry slapped his thigh as he chortled. The louder he laughed, the more unpleasant Zane’s expression became.

Then, he suddenly pounced on Jasper, taking everyone back with this unexpected reaction.

Jasper’s brow arched. Without Julian here, he could only take a step back and find a weapon he could use as quickly as possible.

Henry made a weird sound. Terrified that Zane would do something to Jasper, he grabbed a ceramic plate and shattered it against the table, ready to hurt Zane before Zane could hurt Jasper.

Even Mitch’s brows twitched. Following that, a beautiful shine flared in his eyes as he looked at Zane who was pouncing on Jasper.

Everything would be great if Zane went mad and got rid of Jasper right now.

Zane would be doomed, but Mitch would walk out of this unscathed. Not to mention that Mitch would also have a huge problem like Jasper resolved for good.

In an instant, Zane, whom he had looked down on all this while, suddenly became a grand figure in his eyes. Mitch even felt the urge to cheer Zane on.

This was how a lackey was supposed to act.

Yet... something no one expected happened.

Zane had indeed pounced.

Although, it was not to hurt Jasper.

Instead, the man fell to his knees with a thud in front of Jasper.

He reached out to grab Jasper's thigh, beginning to sob and wail. "I'm sorry, Mr. Jasper. I'm sorry, I shouldn't have offended you and I shouldn't have caused you trouble. It's all my fault. I'm f*cking stupid! I'm the blind fool who doesn't know better."

Zane then lifted his hand to slap himself harshly.

The slaps were strong, for it immediately caused blood to seep out the corner of Zane's mouth and his cheek was already swollen red.

"But please, Mr. Jasper, please have mercy! Don't leak the news out, my dad will actually beat me to death if he finds out!

"Please, save me this once, please! I won't offend you again!"

Henry gulped with a weird look in his eyes when he took in the sight of Zane wailing and begging for mercy.

These young masters from Harbor City were all arrogant people. People like Zane only picked on Jasper for one reason.

Jasper did not come from a formidable family, so they looked down on him. People like Zane trample over people like Jasper to prove how sophisticated they were.

Among the circle of trust fund babies, their reputation and image mattered the most whenever they quarreled among themselves. They would admit defeat, but no one had truly begged another for mercy before.

While Zane's background was no match to the young masters of the four richest families, Zane was technically still a trust fund baby who had never kneeled and begged for mercy even when Henry gave him the worst beating.

After all, everyone was from a wealthy family where reputation and dignity came first. Lives would not be taken anyway, so no one would beg for mercy at the risk of being mocked by other trust fund babies.

Yet, the reality was right before Henry's eyes.

Zane, a vile, shameless, disgusting, and abominable man who was known for being stubborn had been reduced to kneeling and begging in front of Jasper! He was a mess now!

Life at the Top Chapter 924

A similar flurry of emotions was brewing within Mitch as well.

He looked at Zane in disbelief. He and Zane had the same enemy—Jasper. As such, Mitch was well aware of how much Zane hated the other.

It would not be inaccurate to say that Zane wanted to cook Jasper alive.

Yet here the man was, kneeling in front of Jasper. After watching with his own eyes how Conrad had spat out blood and fainted after getting enraged by Jasper, this was the second time Mitch felt utterly terrified.

The terror cut even deeper this time than it did with Conrad.

After all, he and Zane were, to some degree, the same kind of people.

The only difference was that his status was above Zane's. As for their identities, both of them were from wealthy families and belonged to Harbor City's circle of trust fund babies.

As such, there was not much difference between him and Zane.

'If Zane can be reduced to kneeling before Jasper while begging for mercy, who's to say that the same fate won't befall me someday?'

At that train of thought, Mitch felt a deep sense of fear engulf his heart.

He looked at Jasper in both fear and curiosity as he wondered if he had any similar weaknesses—the kind that he would do everything to ensure Jasper never found out.

At that, Mitch realized he was doomed.

It occurred to him that he was filled with weaknesses to exploit. He had done too many bad things in the past.

He would be fine if he were facing anyone else, but it was a different story when Jasper was involved as the man was unpredictable. If Jasper ended up shining light on those things, just his family finding out about it would be enough to screw him over. His dad Kennedy would be the first to beat him to death.

At that moment, Mitch understood why Zane was willing to get on his knees for Jasper.

The nature of the situation was too horrendous and severe.

“Hehe, Bob and Zane, this father and son duo sure are exquisite. Like father, like son. To them, bedding women is just like taking public buses; they get in like it’s nothing. They don’t even care if reporters write about this.

“Bob even told my dad proudly once that all men are the same, he just doesn’t like hiding it. That there’s nothing weird about a man sleeping with multiple women.”

With glee, Henry looked at Zane who was still kneeling in front of Jasper.

“I wonder what your old man is going to think when he finds out that you followed him into the same public bus?”

Already terrified, Zane paled further with Henry’s words.

“Please don’t expose the news, Jasper! Or I’ll really get beaten to death by my dad! Please, I’m begging you!” Zane wailed as he begged Jasper.

To trust fund babies like them, the only thing they feared was their own elders.

After all, they were well aware that their power and wealth, as well as respect and fear that other people showed for them, all came from their elders.

It was because they were born into a good family!

Zane knew his father, and while that man did not care much about many things, being his son would not save him from punishment when it came to things that Bob cared about.

If the news got out, then the situation would surely become something Bob cared about.

Jasper remained unfazed despite how long Zane had been begging him. This time, Zayne turned around and pounced on Henry instead, startling him.

“Mr. Henry, please! Please help me convince him! This really can’t be leaked out!”

“Mr. Henry, please! I’m sorry, I’m really sorry! I’ll never argue with you again! Whatever you say goes. I’ll never create trouble for you anymore.

“I’m sorry, Mr. Henry! Please help me!”

Life at the Top Chapter 925

Seeing how Zane was pleading for mercy wretchedly, Henry twitched his mouth and glanced at Jasper. Eventually, he said, "Crawl farther away. Do you think I don't know the type of person you are?"

"You said the same thing when I stripped you bare and hung you up on a tree when we were 13. What happened then? You immediately found a gang of men to stand in my way in school. Had I not run fast enough, I would've been beaten up by you at the time.

"Two years ago, you f*cking smacked Kayden's girlfriend's butt. Do you remember how you pleaded with Kayden? It was way worse than this.

"What happened next was that you found gangsters to assault that woman in turns and even pretended as though you had nothing to do with them. You think no one was aware of this?"

Henry, who was slightly moved with compassion earlier, grew angrier as he spoke. He turned around and said to Jasper, "End this idiot. This b*stard is extremely ungrateful. If you don't end him this time, he'll come and bite us back in the *ss later."

Jasper nodded in agreement.

He was not a fan of being merciful to his enemies.

When this incident passed, Zane's pity at the moment would be quickly replaced with viciousness.

Besides, there were simply too many incidents to prove that a person like Zane would never be grateful.

How many idiots had been killed by their idiotic kindness in historical films and novels?

Clearly, they had all the chance in the world to kill the villain, or at least cripple them, but the main character would insist on sparing them in hopes that they would turn over a new leaf.

What happened next? The main character's wife and mother would be assaulted by the villain, and his father and brothers would get slashed to death.

Idiotic storylines like that would never happen to Jasper.

Jasper had lived a lowly and humble life in his past life. He knew the ways of the world and the human heart clearer than anyone.

"Stop begging. Save some of your saliva to explain it to your father," Jasper said indifferently.

As soon as Jasper said those words, Zane immediately stopped begging.

He looked up at Jasper and climbed to his feet slowly, looking maniacal and full of bitter resentment. He squeezed a sentence between clenched teeth, "Are you trying to kill me, Jasper Laine?"

Jasper said calmly, "I never wanted you dead, but since you're so passionate about giving me trouble, I'll have to do something to return the favor, don't I?"

"Otherwise, if you keep turning up at my door and I keep solving the problem without getting rid of you, the root of the problem still exists.

"It happens to be such a coincidence that I'm a person who hates trouble and likes to solve something all at once."

“Stop your motherf*cking bullcrap!” Zane roared suddenly. “Fine, don’t blame me for your own decisions!”

Having said that, Zane snatched the ceramic plate from Henry’s hand.

Henry had smashed the plate on the table earlier so what was left of it had extremely sharp edges. Zane put on a maniacal and thrilled expression as he waved the ceramic plate and slashed it at Jasper’s neck.

Everyone was caught unprepared by his move.

Zane had pounced on Jasper just a moment ago, seemingly trying to harm him only for them to realize that Zane simply wanted to plead for mercy. As such, no one expected Zane to attack so suddenly when his pleas failed.

Like a pot of boiling water, the entire place was in chaos.

Jasper’s defensive stance and Zane’s violent wave of his arm had formed a tremendously confusing scene.

Amid the waving of limbs, a hint of blood shot out.

Someone was hurt!

Mitch, who had retreated to a corner a long time ago, felt a tingling sensation on his scalp. He had goosebumps all over his body as he gawked at the scene, trying to figure out if it was Jasper’s blood!

Life at the Top Chapter 926

Regardless of whether the trace of blood belonged to Jasper or Zane, things had gotten way out of control.

The nature of the situation had changed completely.

If the blood belonged to Zane, then Jasper had only done it out of self-defense.

If the blood belonged to Jasper, then Zane would be charged with intentional homicide. Even a slight injury would be considered deliberate harm.

No matter whose blood it was, the nature of this whole incident had been raised to a whole new level. This was no longer just an ordinary dispute. This was an intentional crime!

In the room, the sound of physical combat between men, cries of unknown men, clanging of tables and chairs, and crashing of tableware clearly traveled outside of the private room.

Julian, whose nerves were already taut to begin with in preparation to handle any situations, felt a ringing in his head. Without any hesitation, he roared angrily and broke his way in like a dragon that had gone berserk and rushed into the room.

He looked up and found Jasper at a glance. He looked at him up and down. Julian breathed a sigh of relief at what he saw. Thankfully, Jasper was fine.

Jasper stood on one side, and although his clothes were disheveled, his expression was stern with no obvious trauma on his body.

Henry stood next to him holding his arm, glaring furiously at Zane.

Zane was still holding a blood-stained porcelain plate, standing in front of Jasper and Henry as he breathed heavily. He resembled an irritable and mad bull.

When Zane snatched the plate earlier, Henry was able to react in time. Even so, Zane still caught him unprepared and managed to snatch the plate from his hand.

Henry had no time to think at all as he let out a roar and rushed up to Zane.

As soon as he rushed up, he saw Zane waving and slashing at Jasper using the plate that was as sharp as a knife like a madman.

In crucial moments like that, Henry had no time to think and pushed Jasper away. Jasper was unharmed, but there was a wound dripping with blood on his arm.

The wound was extremely deep, but thankfully, it did not cut any veins. Besides, arms were not fatal points, so even though he was bleeding profusely and was in tremendous pain, Henry knew he was okay.

“Are you okay?”

Jasper rushed over, pulled Henry’s arm toward him, and asked with concern.

He looked at the ghastly and horrendous-looking gash on Henry’s arm. From the slit in his clothes, it could be seen that his skin and flesh had been torn apart. His arm was badly mangled.

Jasper flew into a towering rage at once.

He had countless underlings and friends, not but many faithful friends.

John Jackson, Julian, and definitely Henry.

There were only three of them.

From the time he began by carefully interacting with the top-notch prodigal son to getting to know each other, Jasper knew that Henry was not naturally evil. He was different in nature compared to someone like Mitch.

Up until now, even though Jasper often teased Henry and enjoyed looking at his embarrassed expression, he was only doing so because this brat was too egotistical and unbridled. His attitude needed fixing.

However, that did not mean that Jasper did not care about Henry's life.

Jasper had lived two lifetimes and came across all kinds of people, hence he particularly treasured friendships that he had acknowledged.

To be honest, not that he was trying to look cool or anything, Jasper would rather have his arm slashed instead.

"I'm okay." Henry grinned. He felt a gush of warmth in his heart when he saw the genuine expression on Jasper's face.

As a prodigal son, he had plenty of underlings—even more than flies—but never a true friend.

Those guys were either in awe and reverent in front of him yet calling him a spoiled child behind his back, or they were hypocrites who were only with him for the benefits.

Life at the Top Chapter 927

How could someone like him have any genuine friends?

Henry had none.

However, things changed when Jasper appeared.

He knew that Jasper truly cared about him and their friendship had nothing to do with the fact that he was a Law. At most... it was a tad bit related to his gorgeous sister.

Had it not been for their true friendship, would a prodigal son who was naturally selfish take a slash for Jasper? Usually, others would take a slash for him instead.

“It’s just a gash. It looks scary but it’s just a superficial wound.”

Henry said between clenched teeth.

“Julian!”

Jasper turned around and called out to Julian.

“I want you to rip Zane’s arms apart!”

After receiving Jasper’s orders, Julian turned around and looked coldly at Zane before immediately springing into action.

Zane had no chance to even struggle in front of Julian.

He held Zane down as though he was pinching an earthworm. He could not even budge. Julian did not even need to make any exaggerated moves and Zane was already heard shrieking before his arms hung limply by his sides.

Zane was overcome by the intense pain that he slumped to the ground and passed out.

“Hey, hey, don’t kill him. Darn it, I haven’t taken my revenge yet,” Henry yelled.

“He won’t end well. You should probably treat your wound first. Even if it isn’t serious, you’re going to bleed yourself to death if you don’t do anything about it,” Jasper said.

Henry took a deep breath and sat on the chair, saying with a grin, “Ask Julian to bind up my wound. You can proceed.”

Jasper darted a glance at Julian who walked over to study Henry’s wound before saying to Jasper, “It’s just a superficial wound. I can bind it up. Once the bleeding stops, we just need to disinfect it. That’s all.”

“I’ll leave it to you, then,” Jasper said.

He turned around and looked at Mitch.

The latter shuddered under Jasper’s gaze.

When the feeling of excitement earlier had worn off, Mitch was suddenly filled with regret.

He regretted provoking Jasper.

Now that Conrad had been taken away after passing out and Zane had fainted after being driven mad, he was the only one left. Mitch could not help but sympathize with the situation they were in.

It was as if they were in a pigsty and he was watching as his friends were taken away one after another, all while feeling a sense of fear that it would soon be his turn.

Mitch was considered a hoodlum as well. Before Jasper could say anything, he took the initiative to say, "Jasper, now that things have gotten out of hand, why don't we make peace and I'll compensate you?"

"You only have one chance. If your compensation does not convince me, then it'll be the end for you," Jasper said indifferently.

Jasper's attitude made Mitch grit his teeth inwardly. The peasant he had always looked down on was actually behaving in a domineering manner. However, in the face of unfavorable conditions, Mitch had no choice but to stomach this insult.

Where there was life, there was hope.

Mitch's eyes rolled in their sockets and while gritting his teeth, he went all out, saying, "Fabian Atticus has been searching for ways to deal with you. Although I have no idea about his specific plans, I do know that he has been in contact with several domestic internet companies recently. I think he's planning to attack Terizone.

"Is this news enough compensation?"

Life at the Top Chapter 928

Jasper narrowed his eyes.

His and Fabian's enmity had begun in an extremely nonsensical manner.

They became enemies without having met each other.

This was directly related to Jonathan from Coreana.

Though no matter what, he should not let his guard down since they were now enemies.

From the way Fabian had caused Kayden to suffer tremendous losses, it was clear that he had a much higher status than someone like Mitch.

Jasper had not let his guard down and had been guarding against Fabian in preparation for his next attack.

However, Jasper had too little information in hand. He simply had no idea what Fabian would do.

Right now, Mitch had delivered the news to his doorstep.

Jasper did not question the authenticity of the news because Mitch had no reason to make up fake news like this to deceive him. Besides, it would be too easy to expose this lie.

When Mitch saw how quiet Jasper was, he gritted his teeth and continued.

“Although we’re not friends, Jasper, I’m not afraid to tell you that I’m more willing to deal with you than someone like Fabian. He’s a jackal that wouldn’t hesitate to devour himself when he becomes vicious, let alone someone like me...

“He came to me but I refused to act against my own interests. Henry isn’t entirely clueless about Fabian’s reputation. You’ll know if you ask around. There are many people in Harbor City who want him dead but no one is brave enough to offend him.

“He’s too powerful and no one is confident enough to take him down with a single attack. Besides, if you can’t end him in a single try, then you’ll only find yourself in endless trouble.

“Although I have no idea how you provoked him, this has nothing to do with me. I’m only telling you this news in hopes that you’ll let this matter drop. I’ll have nothing to do with what happens to Zane and Conrad after this. I won’t interfere at all.”

Jasper narrowed his eyes at Mitch, seemingly thinking of ways to deal with him.

Mitch gritted his teeth. He disliked the feeling of helplessness from being put to trial, especially when Jasper was the judge.

However, Mitch had no other choice but to grit his teeth and endure it.

At this moment, Henry walked over after Julian was done binding up his wound.

“Leave it to me?” Henry said to Jasper.

Jasper lifted his eyebrows and nodded when he noticed that Henry was serious about it.

Since Henry insisted on doing it himself, Jasper would show due respect for his feelings and let him deal with the situation no matter what. Even if Henry released Mitch, Jasper would not interfere either.

Honestly, a prodigal son like Henry might not be as shrewd and guileful in public, but he was great at playing dirty.

Henry was seen taking out his phone, switching to the camera application. He pointed the phone's camera lens at Mitch. After fixing the angle, he chuckled and said, "That's enough. I want you to repeat what you just said."

"F*ck, Julian, hold this for me. My arm hurts so bad. This darn Zane. Motherf*cker, I'll kill him this time!"

A smile hung at the corners of Julian's mouth at the sight of Henry's behavior. He walked over and held the phone, pointing it at Mitch.

Although the camera function of mobile phones was still terrible in this age and its visual impact was poor, it was not difficult to make out a person's face.

As soon as the lens was pointed at Mitch, he immediately lost it.

"What's the meaning of this? Don't you believe me?!" Mitch roared furiously.

How could he possibly dare to allow Henry to take videos of him like that? If he took videos and showed them to Fabian, then he would be dead for sure.

Although his father was Kennedy Langdon and his family was one of the four richest families, Mitch feared Fabian from the bottom of his heart.

"Stop all the f*cking crap. Are you filming or not? If you don't want to, then we'll do what we need to do. If you do it, then we can all get lost once we're done. This is only for insurance. If you don't play any dirty tricks, then this video will remain on my phone forever."

"However, if you play dirty, then I guarantee that Fabian will see your big face on the screen as you talk bad about him."

Having said that, Henry chuckled. "Fabian is not a person who's easy to deal with. When the time comes, you'll be the first to be fixed by him, so you'd better not play tricks on us."

Mitch's eyebrows were twitching violently. He looked at Jasper only to see that he had no intention of speaking up.

After struggling for a period of time, Mitch resigned to his fate.

He knew that doing so would give Jasper something to use against him, but so what?

If he did not do so, then he was certainly not going to live through today.

He did not have a choice, especially since Conrad and Zane had ended in such horrendous states themselves.

After taking a deep breath, Mitch looked into the phone's camera lens and repeated what he said earlier.

Once the video had been filmed, Henry admired his work and waved to Mitch without even looking up. "Get lost. I want you to go back to Harbor City without looking back. Don't let me see you in Nauritus City ever again."

Mitch was agitated by Henry's way of driving him away like he was chasing flies. Even so, he did not have a choice and could only leave while gritting his teeth and clenching his fists.

He did not even glance at Zane who was lying on the ground.

Noticing this tiny detail, Henry darted a sidelong glance at Mitch's back and sneered.

“Good job. You’ve helped me tremendously this time,” Jasper said to Henry with a smile when Mitch was gone.

Henry grinned and said, “Mitch is not like Zane. His father is Kennedy Langdon. If he messes up, then it’ll spell trouble. We have something to use against him and this is more useful than beating him up.”

“What about this guy?” Jasper asked, pointing at Zane lying on the ground.

Henry chuckled. “You’re testing me?”

“I guess so. If you pass, then I’ll give you a big gift after that,” Jasper said with a grin.

“Really?!”

Henry’s eyes lit up. “I’m not a fan of ordinary gifts.”

“Do you think I’ll use ordinary gifts to trick you? Since I said it’s a big gift, then I assure you that you’ll be satisfied.”

Henry’s pupils rolled in their sockets and he suddenly pulled out his phone to make a call. When the call was connected, he burst into tears in front of Jasper, wailing and choking with sobs. His voice carried a trace of fear and grievances.

He looked like a kid who was running home to seek help from his father after he was bullied outside.

“Dad, someone slashed me! I’m about to die!”

Life at the Top Chapter 929

Nauritus City Province General Hospital.

From the superiors to the juniors, the dean to the nurses, everyone was standing reverently in front of the corridor with their heads lowered. They were staring at the provincial and municipal officers with admiration as they walked in a uniform line to No. 1 intensive care unit for a visit.

The hospital employees gulped, exclaiming about how they had gained new knowledge and insight today.

The one responsible for receiving these bigwigs was not the person in charge.

It was the person in charge's assistant.

Despite that, these bigwigs were not unhappy about it at all and even expressed their concern. After leaving their gifts behind, they even ordered these bunch of hospital employees like they were lecturing them and giving them a task.

They must ensure that the patient in the ward recovered as soon as possible at all costs!

Hearing the bigwigs saying the words 'at all costs' turned this whole affair so serious that it was unimaginable by common people.

Unlike the hubbub outside the ward, everything was quiet inside.

There were three people in total.

Jasper and Zachary were sitting next to the bed while Henry was lying on the bed.

There was a blood bag hanging on Henry's arm. This brat was so bored that he started swaying the IV tube, and when he noticed Zachary's sullen gaze, he immediately pretended to be weak and began crying out in pain.

"Stop pretending. You're not going to die!"

Zachary roared sullenly.

Even though Zachary said so, his eyes were filled with heartache and anger.

This was, after all, his son. On top of that, he was also the Laws' only son. Any parent would panic when their child's arm was slashed. This had nothing to do with status and identity but the love of parents for their children.

Of course, his son needed to suffer a little in order to toughen up, but which idiot was so bold to slash his, Zachary Law's, son?! Did they not want their head anymore?

"I'm a patient, Dad. My arm was just slashed. The doctor said that if it was just a tad deeper or if the angle was a little off, my arm would've been crippled forever," Henry said, feeling extremely wronged.

"Uncle Law, it's my fault for being too careless," Jasper said sincerely to Zachary.

Jasper did feel a bit guilty. He was fully prepared but did not expect Zane to go berserk and go all out to fight him. Otherwise, Henry would not have blocked the attack for him either.

"This isn't your fault," Zachary turned to Jasper and said with a much calmer tone.

“This kid is finally a bit fearless and upright. If he had just stood there and watched, I’d be the first to teach him a lesson. A man should always do the right thing.”

Upon hearing a rare compliment from his father, Henry was just about to grin smugly when he quickly recalled that he was now a patient. He continued to moan and grunt to make his presence known.

At this moment, there was a knock on the door and it was followed by Julian walking into the ward.

“Jasper, Mr. Zachary, Bob Lancaster is here.”

Jasper glanced at Zachary and then exchanged glances with Henry while keeping silent in tacit agreement.

Now that the matter had gotten so serious and they had done everything they could, it was time for Zachary and Bob, both bigwigs of similar status and identity, to grapple with each other.

“Let him in,” Zachary said with a sullen expression.

Julian glanced at Jasper, saw him nod, and turned around to go out.

After Julian went out, Zachary said to Jasper, “This bunch of men is really annoying. I’ll use this opportunity today to help you get rid of one.”

Jasper was stunned. Sure enough, none of these old cunning foxes were easy to fool. He had probably seen through Henry’s clumsy act a long time ago.

Life at the Top Chapter 930

He was about to speak when Bob, with a complicated look on his face, pushed the door in. Followed closely behind him was a bruised, battered, and weak Zane.

“Zachary, I brought this brute here today to apologize to you,” Bob walked toward Zachary and said apologetically as soon as he entered the ward.

“You sure have some guts to show up, don’t you?” Zachary stood up with a sneer.

Before Zachary listened to Bob’s explanation, he raised his hand and slapped Bob across the face.

Bob had just finished apologizing when he received a hard slap on the face.

The slap froze the atmosphere immediately.

Even Jasper was stunned.

He had only seen young men in their 20s with short tempers getting into fistfights thus far. He never expected Mr. Zachary to be a grumpy middle-aged man too.

Henry nearly jumped up from the hospital bed to cheer for his father.

Indeed, people were used to seeing trust fund babies’ arrogant and domineering characters, yet they almost forgot that the fathers of these trust fund babies in the four richest families in Harbor City were also once outstanding trust fund babies and top-notch profligate sons of the rich.

After taking over the family business, they may have gotten much calmer and steadier, no longer making decisions based on their emotions. Even so, they were still top-notch young masters from 20 years ago to their cores.

Bob was dumbfounded by the slap.

He never thought that a man like him who had such status and identity would get slapped in the face.

He glared at Zachary, barely able to suppress the wave of anger that was ready to burst out.

Men who had such status and identity like them paid attention to their image more than anything else. Their level of tolerance was so great that it was simply impossible for anyone to destroy them. Therefore, at the end of the day, image and reputation were really the only things they were striving for.

Things had barely started yet Zachary was already ruining his image and trampling on his dignity.

“What’s wrong? Unsatisfied?”

Zachary asked in a sullen tone.

“You’re probably thinking that I’ve broken the rules when I slapped you, right? That men of our age should not use our fists no matter what?”

Bob suppressed his anger and said coldly, “Of course, I’m not bold enough to think that way!”

Even though he said that he was not bold enough, Bob’s towering rage was evident.

“Hehe, you’re not bold enough? Is there anything you’re not bold enough to do when your son is already bold enough to murder my son using a weapon?”

Zachary lifted his arm and pointed at Bob’s nose, nearly pushing his head to the back.

“Bob Lancaster, I, Zachary Law, will say this once only. Yes, my actions may have broken the rules, but it’s in line with the Law family’s rules!

“Motherf*cker! If you’re that bold, why don’t you challenge the Laws this instant? I’ll let you go back to Harbor City now so both of our families can fight it out. My old man is still around. I’d like to see if you’re bold enough to show an attitude in front of the Laws!”

When Zachary was done yelling, Zachary stared at Bob whose complexion started changing as he was unable to suppress his fear. Zachary sneered, “You and that group of brats must have noticed the Laws keeping a low profile these few years and thus grew bold, haven’t you?”

“Have you forgotten how Old Master Law did business in the Southeast Alexandria arms industry with a ring of grenades wrapped around his waist and several guns on his shoulders back then?”

“Old Master Law may be old but he’s not dead yet!

“With Old Master Law around, with the both of us around, it’s not your turn to bully the Laws’ son yet!”

Jasper turned to look at Henry who looked absolutely astonished and sighed.

Little Henry Law still had a long way to go to become a true and promising hedonistic son of the rich.

Life at the Top Chapter 931

Zachary had gained full control of the situation.

By setting an example, Zachary had shown Henry how a top-notch hedonistic son of the rich could use words and might to intimidate the other party, eventually achieving his goal.

Bob looked exceedingly sullen.

When Bob learned about the things Zane did today, he knew that this was going to be a tricky problem to solve.

Bob knew better than younger generations like Zane that the Laws were the ones they should never mess with.

Three other rich families were just ordinary business families who made their fortune by taking advantage of Harbor City's unique status and the rapid development of society in the early years.

Later, even as their family status grew and they embarked on the journey of business and held government positions, they were still businessmen at heart.

The Laws were different.

Old Master Law started off with minor achievements in turbulent times and carved out a niche for himself.

The four richest families knew each other through and through. Why did the three other richest families not take the initiative to provoke the Laws even when they were keeping such a low profile?

That was because they knew that they could not afford to provoke the Laws.

At least when Old Master Law was still alive, no one would lay a finger on the Laws.

Since the handover, the help that Old Master Law had extended to the Mainland had earned him supreme status today. This was something that was becoming increasingly prominent.

Seeing that Zachary had no plans of overcoming this matter, Bob gritted his teeth and decided to endure the humiliation first.

He turned around and slapped Zane hard across the face.

Zane screamed. Already battered to begin with, Zane was wounded further, which made him look extremely dreadful and miserable.

Bob did not go easy on his strike, splitting open Zane's wounds that had just recovered. Blood came flowing in torrents.

"Now that things have come to this point, Zachary, nothing I say can change anything. In any case, my unfilial son has lost his head and committed this mistake. You'll decide how you want to punish him and I'll agree to it without a single frown," Bob said in a deep voice.

He sounded extremely sincere, or at least it sounded that way.

Zachary slapped Bob, and Bob then slapped his son.

Jasper and Henry watched with fascination at the constant plot shift.

Zachary sneered and said, "You're inflicting injury on your son to gain my sympathy, huh?"

Bob let out a wry smile. "Zachary, I'm not trying to gain your sympathy. I'm offering my sincerest apology. Seriously. You can do anything to this unfilial son and I won't say a thing about it."

Bob had made plans of his own. Zachary would never kill his son, right? At least he would still be alive and this would all be over soon.

As for his reputation, Bob already knew that it was impossible to secure his reputation when he noticed Zachary's stance. He had received a slap in the face for nothing.

It did not matter anyway. There were only so few of them in the ward. When he stepped out of this door, he, Bob Lancaster, would remain as Harbor City's magnate.

However, Bob, who was busy hatching a plot, had underestimated Zachary's power.

"Sure, if that's what you say."

Life at the Top Chapter 932

Zachary pointed at the window of the ward and said, "Ask your son to jump out of there and I'll let this matter drop."

Bob and his son's expressions changed with great shock.

Jump out of there?!

Zane glanced with horror at the window that was ten stories above and then at his father Bob. Despair and pleas filled his eyes.

Bob looked beyond awkward as he was unable to back out now.

He was not going to allow his son to jump out the window no matter what.

"Motherf*cker, are you trying to play tricks with me? You're leaving the decision to me because you think that I wouldn't argue with a junior and would just scold and beat him. All would be fine since he's not going to die anyway, right? As long as he doesn't die, this will all pass, right?"

Zachary sneered, "Well, I insist on not doing things your way today. C'mon then. Didn't you say that I can punish him any way that I want? Well, I'm not going to kill or harm your son. I just want him to jump out of the window. Are you going to jump out or not?"

Bob's expression changed constantly. Ultimately, he said between clenched teeth, "Tell me what you want. Just don't cross the line. I admit that I was wrong."

Zachary let out a satisfied smile and said mildly, "I want 30% of the artificial canals in Southeast Alexandria that you're involved in developing."

Bob's expression changed abruptly as he responded subconsciously, "No way! That's my core asset. I will never allow anyone to touch it, let alone 30%!"

"It's fine if you don't want to. I'm sure you can give me a share of the natural gas contract you signed earlier, then?"

Bob looked like he had seen a ghost when he heard Zachary's words. "You're spying on me?! Only a few people know about that. The public has no knowledge about that at all!"

"Bob, you're so used to a smooth sailing life all these years that you have no idea about the dangers in the business world, huh?"

"Why do you think you were able to sign that contract so easily? I was just waiting for someone to clear the obstacles for me before I went over to pick the peaches."

Zachary's expression turned cold as he spoke, "This is my final limit. I will not touch the canals since that's so crucial to your survival, but if you refuse to give me the natural gas contract, then let's go back and fight it out."

Bob gritted his teeth hard and said with much difficulty, "Fine! But you'll let this matter drop."

"Get lost," Zachary said coldly.

After a period of time, Bob led Zane out of the ward.

When Bob saw his son staggering, looking absolutely battered, he was so furious that he raised his hand to hit him.

Zane looked absolutely miserable at the moment as he shrieked subconsciously, raising his hands to shield his head. He was shuddering constantly.

Seeing how useless Zane was, Bob put down his hands angrily and roared, "You unfilial son! Do you know how much money we've lost because of your impulsiveness?! The natural gas contract could've given us at least a billion in profits!"

Zane was too frightened to speak. Until now, the news that Jasper exposed had yet reached Bob's ears. He dared not imagine how furious Bob would be if he learned about the news.

"Please send me abroad, Dad. I'd like to go abroad to further my studies for two years," Zane muttered under his breath.

Stunned, Bob stared at Zane and said, "You didn't want to no matter how I persuaded you in the past but you've finally changed your mind now?"

Zane hastened to say, "Yes, I've thought it through. This was a huge lesson for me and I would like to go out and have some time alone to think about my future."

"That's more like it. You've finally grown up. Looks like this punishment was well worth it."

Feeling rather relieved, Bob turned around and said, "Let's go back to Harbor City immediately. I will arrange for you to go abroad as soon as possible."

Life at the Top Chapter 933

“You let them off easy, Dad.”

In the ward, Henry thought it was a pity.

It was the perfect opportunity to take down both Lancaster father and son, yet Zachary had chosen to let them off just like that?

Although they did get some benefits, Henry did not care about those benefits at all. The Laws were a big family that owned major industries. They received plenty of benefits that losing a few was not enough to starve them to death.

In Henry’s opinion, he could give up on this bit of benefit and use this opportunity to trample the Lancaster father and son to the ground.

“Know when to stop. Some things are not that simple. Do you really think Bob is that easy to deal with?”

Zachary replied, though it was clear that he had no plans of making further explanations about this as it involved the power struggle of the upper class in Harbor City. It was too complicated.

Jasper, however, took the hint and said with a smile, “When two giants fight, it’ll be difficult to bring each other down unless it involves life and death.

“The giants will not start a war so easily because of their sizes as the impact will be too great and the consequences too heavy. Hence, most of the time, both parties will take turns in suffering losses and sharing benefits.

“In the long run, after a few more wins and as one rises and another one falls, the gap between the giants will be pulled apart. When that happens, you’ll get to decide what you want to do with the other party.”

Zachary nodded and said, “Yup, that’s how it is. It’s similar to two countries engaging in a conflict. Almost all of them fight with words.

“It is extremely rare to see fights that involve weapons and firearms. After all, there are simply too many factors to consider—the country’s power, the other party’s strength, and the covetous eyes of neighboring countries. Who knows, many people would start fanning the flames, sit around, and watch the fight. When both sides are exhausted, they’ll come to reap the spoils.”

Henry was even more confused as he listened to their conversation. He waved his hands in irritation and said, “I don’t understand. Whatever it is, was I injured this time for nothing?”

“If getting an injury could earn me hundreds of millions of dollars of profit each time, then remember to invite me next time,” Jasper said with a grin.

Having said that, he turned around to look at Zachary, asking, “Can I ask you a question, Uncle Law? Is that the natural gas contract for Marina, the capital of Filopo?”

Zachary was astounded. “How did you know that?”

Jasper chuckled. How could he not know?

Following the rapid economic development of Filopo’s capital city Marina, a series of construction projects were to be carried out for the modernization of the city. Congress had made the decision for 80% of the city to have access to natural gas facilities.

At the time, everyone thought this was a great business opportunity and countless neighboring countries swarmed in.

Though surprisingly, even though this was a multi-billion dollar contract, the companies in Filopo did not seem to be interested at all.

According to Jasper's memory from his past life, the contract was eventually given to a company in Harbor City along with another natural gas company abroad.

Now it seemed that the Harbor City company that Jasper had heard of back then when he was still a commoner was probably Bob's company.

He had a deep impression of this incident because Jasper, who still had his memories after reincarnation, knew that this was a huge trap.

In the upcoming construction works, the entire construction process would be a difficult one. Then, there was the protest of the locals which caused huge problems for the contractors. Filopo thwarted their plan, using all sorts of means to rip off these two companies.

In the end, both sides completely fell out and the contract was breached. The two companies and Filopo's international lawsuit lasted for seven to eight long years. Even when Jasper was reincarnated, there was still no result.

At the thought of this, Jasper said to Zachary.

"Uncle Zachary, I received news from a friend that this is no simple contract. Filopo might change their mind. Disregarding everything else, why are there so few of Filopo's domestic companies fighting for this opportunity? You must be careful because this isn't normal at all."

Life at the Top Chapter 934

“If it’s possible, I suggest converting Bob’s benefits to cash. It’s still worth it even if it’s slightly less.”

Yes, this was a huge trap alright, but it was also important to note who was going to step into it.

In Jasper’s opinion, if Zachary stepped into it, then this would be a trap.

If Bob and the rest stepped into it, then this would be good news.

Zachary was shocked by the things Jasper said. He pondered for a moment, having no intention to ask Jasper who his friend was. Everyone would have their own channels by now and inquiring about it was obviously an unwise move to make no matter how close they were.

Therefore, Zachary did not ask but instead began considering this matter.

This saved Jasper from finding an excuse. Of course, he did not have a friend who received news from Filopo. All he had were his memories from before reincarnation. However, this was Jasper’s deepest secret—one that he must never share with anyone.

“Alright. I’ll send someone to investigate. If there’s something fishy about this, we’ll do as you say.”

Jasper breathed a sigh of relief after hearing what Zachary said. From how Zachary behaved, he knew that Zachary had taken his words seriously.

Judging from the Laws’ capabilities, whenever they noticed something amiss and began investigating, there were rarely things that could go unnoticed.

...

While Jasper and Zachary talked in the ward, somewhere in the heavily guarded part of Nauritus City.

A car was parked at the door, and a tall, sturdy man stood by it. He kept looking at the locked gate as if he was waiting for something.

Soon, there was a clanging sound of metal and the door pulled open with a creak. A battered young man staggered outside.

It was Conrad.

When he saw how dejected and soulless Conrad looked, the tall and sturdy middle-aged man frowned slightly. He stopped Conrad from trying to speak, saying, "Let's go. We'll talk when we get back."

Conrad nodded and climbed into the car with his father, Steven.

The car's engine revved up and began driving steadily on the road. Hardly any tremors could be felt.

Despite that, Conrad's heart was surging like the waves.

He was feeling regret for his blunder, sorry for his father, and hatred for Jasper.

"I've settled this matter for you, paid a price, and made some promises. No one will ask you anything about that loan again," Steven said to Conrad, his calm voice sounding in the car.

Conrad clenched his fists slowly, saying unwillingly, "This is Jasper's scheme, Dad! He colluded with those people in order to put me—"

"Watch what you say!"

Steven hissed, staring at Conrad and saying, "Don't you know what you can say and what you can't say?"

"Who do you think Jasper is? Do you not know where you just walked out from? How could they have possibly colluded with Jasper?"

"How could they have arrested you if you didn't leave traces behind? Everything was done according to the law. You're the one who's confused here!"

Life at the Top Chapter 935

Realizing that he had said the wrong thing, Conrad sighed deeply and leaned back in the soft car seat with his eyes closed. He muttered under his breath, "I said the wrong thing. I'm sorry."

"You're my son. You don't need to apologize to me."

Steven sighed as well.

"I thought you were mature enough to step in and handle the family business for me, but now it seems you're still a little too inexperienced. You're too obsessed when it comes to dealing with Jasper."

Conrad opened his eyes and asked, "What do you mean? Are you saying that I shouldn't go against him, Dad?"

Steven put his hands behind his back and said in a deep voice, "Think about it. Would you have had a conflict with Jasper if the guys from Harbor City hadn't persuaded you to form an ally with them for some benefits?"

"You wouldn't have! Now, the Lancasters and Langdons are gone, leaving this mess behind. They've returned to Harbor City while you continue to suffer crushing defeats over and over again. Can you even calculate the losses you've suffered?"

After hearing what Steven said, Conrad said unwillingly, "I can't afford to lose to Jasper!"

"That's why I said you're obsessed."

Steven shook his head, looking even more disappointed.

“You must know that the Monty family does business. We’re businessmen and so is Jasper. The greatest taboo in the business field is letting your emotions affect your decision.

“When you can finally talk and laugh with Jasper, perhaps even sit down and discuss a business partnership with him, that’s when you have truly matured.”

Conrad said angrily, “No way! I will trample Jasper to the ground!”

“I’m not saying that you’re wrong to think that way. There are no absolute friends or absolute enemies in the business field. Wherever profit is involved, partnerships and enemies can be formed. You, however, have failed in this respect.

“If there’s a partnership right now that you and Jasper can do together that’ll potentially earn you lots of benefits, then from my understanding of your character, you’d rather give up on those benefits than let Jasper have them, right?”

After hearing the question, Conrad opened his mouth to retort but eventually replied dejectedly, “Yeah.”

Conrad’s innermost thoughts would always be exposed in front of his father.

His father’s words were exactly his thoughts and also what he would do.

“That’s why I say you’re immature. Remember what Jasper did last time when you approached him with the fake partnership? He merely suspected your motives but did not reject your partnership. Instead, he went and investigated the matter. If it turned out to be genuine, he was not going to refuse.

“This is why you’ve repeatedly lost to Jasper. You’re not worse than Jasper, you were just born into the wrong family.”

Conrad said in disdain, “What do you mean by that, Dad? I’m your son. Jasper is nothing but a poor man born into an ordinary family of farmers yet you’re saying that I was born into the wrong family?”

Steven shook his head. “You’re my son, hence everything has been smooth sailing for you. You grew up having everything that you wanted. Even though you work hard unlike other hedonistic sons of wealthy families, you don’t need to grind and rarely get knocked down by society. These are all things that the Monty family can’t offer you.

“Look at Jasper. He grew up in an environment where he was surrounded by malicious people. If he wanted to rise, then he would need to understand the intentions of everyone who came knocking at his door. You never need to worry about these things.

“That’s because you know that those people won’t harm you or lie to you, hence you’ve grown accustomed to being praised and to the label of the so-called genius that only appears once every 50 years. These are all your shackles.

“Maybe it’s not usually that noticeable, but once you face someone like Jasper, he’ll be your jinx and you’ll suffer a crushing defeat.”

Life at the Top Chapter 936

Steven's words left Conrad speechless.

He had heard similar things from Jasper.

Hearing the same words from the mouths of his closest family member and his enemy, he started to wonder if this was actually his fault?

Conrad looked out the car window in a daze, looking as though his mind, body, and soul had been sucked out of him. Even his eyes had dulled.

At this moment, a broad hand was placed on his shoulder, followed by Steven's gentle voice.

"Conrad, losing isn't scary at all. No one can win forever. However, you need to know why you lost and improve yourself. Make yourself stronger and go back to find the glory that belongs to you. This is what I hope you'll do."

Listening to his father's gentle words of encouragement, Conrad felt a lump in his throat and choked out the words, "But I lost terribly for so many consecutive times. This time alone I've lost two billion and now we're having financial difficulties all because of me."

"These are all trivial things," Steven patted Conrad's shoulder and said in a soft voice, "I will solve these problems, but from now on, you need to concentrate fully on training yourself. Defeating Jasper isn't what you should be thinking about now. Instead, you should be thinking about how to arm yourself."

"You don't have to go to work from tomorrow onward. I'll handle the company's affairs and pass the role back to you once you can stand back up again."

“I’m sorry, Dad.”

“I told you, you’re my son. You don’t have to apologize.”

...

Though dangerous, Henry’s injury was just a superficial injury. In just two days, this brat was already leaping up and down, chasing Jasper down to ask about the big gift.

“F*ck, I took a knife for you. You won’t be so despicable as to lie to me, right?”

In the brightly lit ward, Henry widened his eyes and stared at Jasper, looking extremely wary.

Jasper said lazily, “Why should I lie to you? If I say there’s a gift for you, then there’ll be a gift. However, this isn’t the time yet. When you’ve recovered from your injury, then it’ll be about time.

Henry waved his arms around and said, “I recovered a long time ago. If it weren’t for those stupid doctors, I would’ve been discharged long ago.”

“They’re doing it for your own good and you’re calling them stupid? People like you deserve to be thrown to the side of the road. No one will bother you there,” Jasper said grumpily.

Henry leaned back on the hospital bed, crossed his legs casually, and twitched his mouth, saying, “They’re doing it for my own good? They’re doing it for a living and I know that better than anyone else.”

“Whatever the reason, you still have to listen to the doctors. You’ll only be discharged when they allow you to be discharged.”

Jasper glanced at Henry. "Your father took the morning flight back to Harbor City today. He has already given me this task, so you have no choice."

Henry yawned and was about to speak when Jasper's phone started ringing, interrupting his series of complaints.

Jasper took a look at the unknown local number and chose to answer the call.

"Hello, this is Jasper."

"Hey, it's Steven."

Life at the Top Chapter 937

“Oh, it’s Old Master Monty. How can I help you?”

“Let’s meet up and talk! You won’t refuse, will you, Jasper?”

“Sure!”

...

In front of a coffee shop without a signboard. Jasper raised his head and looked suspiciously at this oddly quiet place that was even a little deserted despite being located in a busy area.

If Steven had not told him about this place, he would not have known that an elegant and quiet coffee shop like this existed in the most bustling area of Nauritus City.

Who the hell would run a business without hanging up a signboard?

Just as Jasper pondered about whether to give Steven a call, the courtyard door creaked open.

An old man with gray hair walked out.

The old man was dressed in plain clothes and had an extremely kind face that could put anyone at ease. He looked just like a neighborhood grandpa.

“Mr. Laine?” the old man called out in a soft voice, sounding extremely polite.

“Yes. Mr. Monty invited me and I’m here for the appointment,” Jasper replied politely.

The old man let out a slight smile. He spared Jasper a second glance due to his refined bearing, stepped aside, and raised his hand to lead him into the courtyard, saying, “Old Master Monty has been waiting for a long time. Please come in with me, Mr. Laine.”

“Please lead the way, Mister,” Jasper said with a smile.

The old man nodded and led the way with a smile on his face. Jasper followed him into the courtyard.

As soon as he entered the courtyard, he felt as though he had stepped into a new world. The courtyard was filled with flowers and shaded by trees. As he walked along the ancient-looking corridor, he could hear the sound of clear streams gurgling under his feet.

Isolated from the hustle and bustle of the outside world, they had stepped in from a concrete jungle into paradise with green hills and clear streams.

After walking for two to three minutes, Jasper saw a tall and sturdy middle-aged man in a courtyard pavilion.

This man was dressed in casual clothes and looked at him with a smile.

That man was none other than Steven Monty, the true backbone of the Monty family and the previous head of the Monty family that had Dawson sighing in admiration at the mere mention of his name.

“Jasper Laine?”

“Mr. Steven Monty.”

They exchanged glances with a smile and could spot a trace of admiration on their faces for each other.

“Come, have a seat,” Steven invited Jasper to take a seat.

“This is a place that I designed and built privately. It’s a quiet place to relax when I’m busy. It isn’t open to the public, and you’re considered the first outsider to have visited this place. What do you think?”

After both of them sat down, Steven said to Jasper with a smile.

“This is a very unique place,” Jasper praised while looking at his surroundings.

It was no wonder this so-called coffee shop did not have a signboard. This was a place that the owner opened purely for his own enjoyment.

On the topic of extravagance, the older generations were much better at it.

Ordinary rich kids would buy a bunch of luxurious goods, a villa, a luxury car, or a yacht.

Steven, on the other hand, bought an entire courtyard downtown. As soon as the main doors closed, this place immediately transformed into a mini-secret garden.

Steven chuckled and said, “Humans often fight for money, career, and status in the beginning, and when they’ve attained a certain level of achievement, they’d use what they’ve gained to enjoy life. What’s the point of earning so much money and getting to a high position otherwise?”

“That’s truly wise, Mr. Monty. My sentiments exactly,” Jasper said with a grin.

At that moment, the old man who brought Jasper to Steven returned with a coffee set. After lighting up a scented candle, he started brewing coffee without a word.

“Oh, the way of coffee. There’s a reason why coffee is called the way of life.

“Coffee beans make coffee, and coffee will lead you to the truth. Jasper, try this cup of coffee.”

As Steven said those words, he suddenly picked up a cup of coffee and handed it to Jasper.

His actions raised the eyes of the old man who was brewing coffee. He glanced in astonishment at Steven, perhaps it was because of his astonishment that his calm and steady hands trembled a little.

He had worked with Steven for 30 years and even watched Conrad grow. His last name was Whitlock, and even Conrad addressed him as Grandpa Whitlock.

He had never seen Steven treat a person like that even after working for him for so long.

It was a young man in his early 20s too.

Jasper, however, did not know much about the inside story and simply thought that Steven was excessively humbling himself in front of him.

Jasper picked up the cup of coffee and took a sip. He closed his eyes slightly, feeling the strong and fragrant taste of coffee rolling in his mouth. He felt a lot more refreshed.

“This is good coffee.” Jasper opened his eyes and praised.

Steven laughed and said, “Have a few more cups if it’s good.”

When they were done drinking coffee, Steven pondered for a moment before saying slowly.

“Jasper, I’ll be in charge of Monty Group from now on. I might make a series of strategic adjustments, perhaps even bring up a few opportunities to partner up with JW. Do let me have the honor to partner up with you when the time comes.”

Jasper looked at Steven.

He knew that the highlight of today’s meeting was starting.

“What about Conrad?” Jasper asked.

“He’s too tired and needs a good rest.”

Steven said to Jasper with a smile, “He made some directional errors which resulted in tremendous losses. It’s okay, though. This can be made up and salvaged. Therefore, I decided to let him rest while I manage Monty Group in the meantime.”

Jasper said meaningfully, “I wonder how you’re planning to make up for and salvage the losses?”

Life at the Top Chapter 938

Steven laughed upon hearing Jasper's words. He pointed at the courtyard and asked, "What do you think about this courtyard? If you like it, I'll give it to you as a gift."

"This gift is worth at least ten million. You're too generous, Mr. Monty," Jasper said.

Although he said that the courtyard was worth a lot, he was actually expressing his veiled refusal.

Was this man trying to dispel enmity with a single courtyard? How could Jasper possibly allow that to happen?

Steven took the hint and said, "This is just a gift. Monty Group took some wrong turns when Conrad took over. It will now return to its right path.

"Diversification is not entirely impossible, but we can't give up on Monty Group's fundamentals in pursuit of diversification. Monty Group will only be involved in the mineral industry and will not venture into other fields anymore."

If the courtyard was only the lead-in that no one cared about, then what Steven just said was invaluable.

Monty Group would not venture into other industries for at least three years.

In Southeast Province today, there were only two and a half local companies that were capable of contending.

Jasper's JW Consortium counted as one.

Monty Group counted as one.

Schuler Group counted as half.

The Southeast Province market was huge, covering an area of 110,000 square kilometers with nine prefecture-level cities, 20 administrative counties, and 60 million people.

At the same time, it was quite small too. After all, there were only so few that could catch JW and Monty Group's eye. Moreover, only one leader was allowed in each industry.

Jasper laughed. "You understand the principles of right and wrong so well. It would be disrespectful of me as a junior if I continue to shilly-shally."

Hearing Jasper addressing himself as the junior now made Steven chuckle inwardly.

Steven stood up and stretched out his hand toward Jasper, saying, "Congratulations to the two of us, then."

"Congratulations on what?" Jasper took Steven's hand and asked curiously.

"On having a new friend and one less enemy."

Steven watched as Jasper entered the car and left. Standing at the door, Steven's smile faded gradually.

"He's not arrogant from success nor dismayed by failure. He looks unconcerned and casual yet can take up huge responsibilities. At the same time, he knows when to advance and retreat. This kid is extremely unpredictable... Conrad has indeed lost to a worthy competitor."

Standing beside Steven, Mr. Whitlock asked, "Are you really going to give this courtyard to Jasper, Mr. Steven? This is your favorite place."

Waving his hands, Steven said, "I've given what I've given. These are all materialistic things. What's wrong? Do you think it's a pity to leave this place, Mr. Whitlock?"

Mr. Whitlock chuckled and said, "If this is what you want, Mr. Steven, then I have nothing to feel pity about."

"You can't make an omelet without breaking eggs. I don't know if I've made the right decision today, but I'm buying three years' time for Conrad. Hopefully, he understands," Steven said calmly.

"Don't worry, Mr. Steven. Mr. Conrad is wise. Even though his confidence has taken a huge hit after going through several failures, he's showing progress. I believe that he'll not let you down," Mr. Whitlock said to console him.

Steven laughed and said, "Thanks for the kind words. Let's go. We should head back and inform the servants to clean up this place before transferring the ownership to Jasper. We're not coming back here anymore."

...

Southface River Tower. In JW Investment Company's office.

Wendy was assigning work to her subordinates.

"Mr. Ardolf, this is an extremely important case so you must follow closely with your team. Investigate the other party's background, and other relevant works must also be done without fail. Besides, we're tight on time, so I can only give you one week at most."

The middle-aged man who was called Mr. Ardolf let out a wry smile. "Ms. Schuler, that's a huge challenge for me. I can finish the job because that's my responsibility, but one week is simply too short. I need at least half a month to get some results.”

Wendy, who was sitting behind the desk, frowned. She closed the folder and looked up at Mr. Ardolf. “Half a month to get some results? If it’s going to take such a long time, don’t you think it’s better if I get someone else to do this job?”

Mr. Ardolf could tell that Wendy was displeased and dared not say anything else.

Everyone in the company knew that the boss would not normally interfere. If anything happened, they would only discuss it with the CFO, Chief Financial Officer Wendy Schuler, and the COO, Chief Operating Officer Malcolm Malibu. Between them, Wendy was the lady boss, so she would have the final say in the company.

The lady boss was usually easy to talk to and unbelievably gentle. Though when work was involved, she would not show due respect for anyone’s feelings. During this period of time, there had been senior executives who cried after getting criticized by her. There were some who even got dismissed.

“The company spent so much money to hire you because we acknowledge your ability. If you can’t complete the tasks that the company requires you to do in time, then that means that the company has made a mistake in hiring you. We’ve overestimated you.

“For employees who fail to meet the expectations for their position and the money they’re earning, the company will have no choice but to act in accordance with the rules and regulations. Do you understand what I’m saying?”

Upon hearing what Wendy said, Mr. Ardolf responded loudly, “I understand! Don’t worry, Ms. Schuler, I’ll get it done within a week even if it means that I have to work overtime. One week from now, I’ll send all the information to you so you can have a look.”

“Go on then,” Wendy said indifferently.

Mr. Ardolf breathed a sigh of relief and turned around to leave when he saw the big boss Jasper standing at the door with a grin.

Of course, the big boss was not smiling at him. Even so, Mr. Ardolf still had chills as he greeted him carefully and with infinite admiration, "Hello, Mr. Laine."

"Mm. Hello." Jasper waved his hand. "You can go out now."

When Mr. Adolf left, Wendy stood up from behind the desk with a look of surprise and greeted Jasper, "What brings you here?"

Jasper took Wendy's hands with a smile, saying, "If I hadn't come, I wouldn't have known that we have an iron-fisted queen in the company."

Life at the Top Chapter 939

Wendy was a little embarrassed by Jasper's words.

Though in no time at all, she scrunched up her nose and said, "If it weren't for you, the boss who's always absent and does nothing, I wouldn't have to be like this either."

"Now that the company is growing and we're getting more business, our employees are growing in numbers as well. If I don't put on an attitude and use some means, I'll get bullied by those old birds at work instead."

Wendy sat on the couch looking slightly exhausted and said, "Now I understand why it was so hard to meet my dad when I was young. It's too tiring to manage a company."

"This is after we've implemented structural optimization in the company. If it isn't for the fact that the company's branches handle the majority of the businesses themselves, I think I'd really need to clone myself to finish so many tasks."

Hearing Wendy prattling on, which was rare, Jasper poured her a glass of water and said, "If you're really that tired, take a few days off to relax. The company is so big and there are always people to take care of the company. Let Malcolm share your burdens, and if that's not enough, hire a few more people who can do it. Work is never-ending. It won't be worth it if you suffer from burnout."

Wendy held the glass of water Jasper gave her and took a sip. "I don't feel comfortable leaving so many tasks to others."

After saying that, she blinked and looked at Jasper. "Why are you so early today?"

Jasper played with Wendy's fingers and said nonchalantly, "I went to talk to Steven."

"Steven? Conrad's father? The previous head of the Monty family? What did you guys talk about?"

The woman's curiosity was completely aroused. Wendy turned around and sat on the couch, facing Jasper while asking excitedly.

"What else could we have talked about? If he planned to stand up for his son, then he wouldn't have anything to discuss with me. Since he wanted to talk, then it's definitely a compromise.

"We each took a step back. I let the matter drop, whereas Conrad returned the position of authority in the family to his father. Also, the Monty family will not get involved in industries other than minerals for three years.

"This will give JW a chance to develop at ease for three years. Three years later, JW will not be afraid of anyone anymore."

Jasper was overflowing with confidence as he said with certainty.

"That's it?" Wendy was obviously a little disappointed.

"I also received a secluded courtyard downtown. I think your father will love that place. I'll transfer it to his name so we can go over and get some rest whenever we're free," Jasper said with a smile.

"Transfer? Don't bother. It's the same either way," Wendy said.

While they were speaking, Jasper's phone rang once again.

The caller was Darrel who was currently working on a business project.

On the phone, Darrel's voice sounded more mature than before.

"Jasper, it's me, Darrel."

Jasper asked, "I know. What's up?"

"Jasper, our first Hello Hotpot restaurant is opening tonight. Do you want to come over and try the food?" Darrel asked apprehensively.

Meanwhile, inside a newly renovated hotpot restaurant in the bustling downtown of Nauritus City, lights and colored banners were all over the place. Standing next to Darrel who was currently talking to Jasper on the phone was a young and stocky man. The man looked expectantly at Darrel as he waited for the result.

After some time, Darrel put down the phone and said to the man in delight, "It's done! Jasper said he'll come over with Wendy!"

"Really?!" the man exclaimed in surprise. He then waved his fist hard, saying, "That's awesome!"

This man was Jonas Yale, the founder of Hello Hotpot.

Life at the Top Chapter 940

Compared to Darrel's naivety, Jonas was a man with deeper thoughts.

In fact, after learning that Jasper was Darrel's cousin and Jasper's power from several friends, Jonas vowed to hold on tight to the precious treasure that was Darrel even if it meant risking everything he had.

It was not because of anything else but simply because Darrel had a great cousin.

Jonas was an extremely ambitious and cunning person. Although business in the several other Hello Hotpot restaurants he ran was good and his daily profits were as much as an average person's salary for half a year, Jonas was still not satisfied.

He knew that the true rich big bosses in this world would turn their noses up at his small business.

Unfortunately, he did not know how nor did he have the chance to venture into something else. Moreover, Darrel was the fastest and best opportunity for him to rise rapidly.

Equipped with a keen sense, Jonas realized that as long as he could hold onto this big ship that was Jasper, even if it was only a tiny position in a corner, it would still be a great opportunity for him to soar.

Perhaps Hello Hotpot could use this opportunity to skip the difficult stage of traditional accumulation of capital and head straight for nationwide expansion!

Driven by these interests, Jonas was more concerned than Darrel about whether Jasper would show up today.

“I told you your cousin would definitely come, didn’t I? You were so embarrassed to invite him earlier. There’s nothing to be embarrassed about. Honestly, he’s the actual big boss because he owns 60% of the shares!

“How could he not come to the opening of our first Nauritus City branch today? Besides, he’s your cousin, not a stranger,” Jonas said excitedly to Darrel.

Darrel scratched his head simple-mindedly. After months of working hard, his complexion was now darker and he was glowing with vitality. He was no longer the same white-collar worker just sitting around waiting for his doom.

“Yeah, it’s all thanks to you,” Darrel said from the bottom of his heart.

Staring at Darrel who had been taken advantage of by him, Jonas let out a pleased smile and said, “Let’s go. What does your cousin like to eat? We can make some preparations. We must not let him down tonight.”

Shoulder to shoulder, arm in arm, both of them discussed excitedly on their way to the office amid the greetings of the waiters.

At the corner of the crowd, a 16 to 17-year-old girl who was still very young but who had grown up to be a beautiful girl stood out among a group of pretty-looking waitresses as she stood shyly on one side.

She looked enviously at the bosses as they walked farther away, thinking about how she could pay for her little brother’s tuition fees after getting this month’s salary. At the thought of this, the smile on her face grew a lot brighter.

Even when she was clad in an ordinary waitress uniform, her beauty could not be concealed.

...

In the evening, in front of Nauritus City's first Hello Hotpot branch that was brightly lit, decorated with colorful banners, and bustling with activity, a Bentley slowly pulled up across the road.

"Okay, Julian. Find a place to park the car and come and have something to eat when you're done," Jasper said to Julian before getting out of the car.

Julian nodded with a smile to indicate that he understood.

He turned around and took Wendy's hand. While leading her to Hello Hotpot, Jasper said, "Hey, you can't say that I don't bring you out for dinner in the future. We'll have hotpot tonight. You can order whatever you want and I guarantee that you won't be disappointed."

"You're really sneaky!" Wendy chuckled.

At the entrance of Hello Hotpot, Jonas and Darrel greeted them while dressed in suits. Jasper was about to walk over when his eyes were drawn to a timid and delicate figure in the corner of the crowd.

It was her!

Jasper had not felt ripples in his heart for a very long time. Now, this thin and weak figure had stirred his heart once again.

Life at the Top Chapter 941

In his past life when he wasted more than 40 years of his life, only two and a half women actually stepped into Jasper's life.

One was Wendy, the woman who was unattainable and eventually forgotten, yet whose hand he was currently holding.

The other one was Penelope Hunt, whom he had more resentment for than grace. Even so, both of them had completely cut off contact, leaving each other to lead their own lives.

The remaining half was this thin and delicate figure in front of him.

Jasper remembered very clearly that this girl's name was Tiffany. In his past life, the first time they met each other was in the company where Jasper worked. Tiffany was assigned a mentor on her first day as a trainee and that mentor was Jasper.

The naive and innocent Tiffany was clumsy in her work and was often scolded by Jasper, yet even so, the girl remained optimistic and confident.

Tiffany was the only one who would send Jasper a bowl of hangover stew after he was drunk from socializing.

Like an alarm clock, she was the only one who would remind Jasper to take his medicine on time when he was sick.

It was something that his own wife Penelope Hunt never did.

Tiffany was born into a poor family. Her mother died at childbirth while her father was an alcoholic, hence she and her little brother could only depend on each other.

Not only did she need to support herself, but she also needed to raise her little brother. She had been doing odd jobs since high school and gave up the opportunity to study in university after she graduated. She joined the workforce at an early age just so her little brother could continue his studies.

Unfortunately, the kind-hearted girl did not get the good ending she deserved.

Jasper remembered that Tiffany, who had been working diligently in the company for several years, could not stand the shady practices of the company and went to the big boss to make a complaint even after Jasper tried to stop her. In the end, Tiffany resigned.

When the silly girl left, she hugged him and told him that she liked him.

However, Jasper was married then and they had a seven to eight-year gap in age, hence Jasper had always just treated her like a sister. How could they possibly end up together?

After separating on that rainy night, Tiffany dragged her luggage and left, never appearing in Jasper's life ever again.

At this moment, the lights were dim, yet he could see clearly the girl who looked so much younger and more youthful than what he remembered her to be. She was timidly hiding in a corner just like the first time he met her, too afraid to say a word.

He motioned to Darrel and the rest to wait for a moment while he walked through the crowd straight to Tiffany.

The hearts of the group of waitresses who had been assigned by their boss to stand at the entrance to welcome the guests started pounding when they saw

Jasper walking over. They were fantasizing that Jasper was approaching them and wondering if this was their opportunity to be Cinderella.

All the young women raised their heads and stood straight, looking expectantly at Jasper in hopes that he would walk up to them.

Tiffany, however, was the only one who tried to dodge to one side when she noticed Jasper heading straight for her.

Jasper stood in Tiffany's way and stared straight at her.

At the sight of her flustered and helpless face, her casual attire, and refined elegance, Jasper blurted out, "We meet again."

Again.

Those words left many people stunned, and even Tiffany was a bit confused.

This was her first time in Nauritus City and it was only a few days into her job. Before this, she had been living in the countryside with her brother. With her tiny social circle, she was certain that she had not met Jasper before.

"Do we know each other?" Tiffany asked in a soft voice.

Tiffany's innocence had other waitresses snickering.

If it were them, they would admit it regardless of whether they actually knew him or not. It was a rare opportunity for them to get involved with big shots. This village girl knew nothing and had no idea what she just missed out on.

"Yes and no." Jasper sighed.

He remembered just then that he had reincarnated.

He carried those memories with him, but Tiffany, who was standing right before his eyes, saw him as a complete stranger. She did not know him at all, so how could she talk about their past?

“Are you a waitress here?” Jasper asked.

Tiffany nodded shyly and replied, “Yes, I joined two days ago. I don’t know anything yet but I’ll do my best!”

At the sight of the energetic young lady, Jasper chuckled and said, “Good. I believe you’ll do a good job.”

At this moment, Darrel and the rest had walked over. Darrel looked at Tiffany curiously and then at Jasper, hesitating to speak.

“She looks like an old friend I know. It’s nothing. Let’s go in,” Jasper said.

Having said that, Jasper smiled apologetically at Wendy and the latter responded with a smile.

Wendy had many questions as well. From her woman’s intuition, she could tell that Jasper treated this young girl differently. He had a very different kind of affection for her.

However, Wendy was sure that this affection was not the kind a man would have when he saw a beautiful woman.

Despite her many doubts, she did not ask. She knew that Jasper would let her know about it if necessary. If he did not explain, then he must have his reasons for doing so.

Moreover, Jasper was not the kind of man who would fall head over heels for beautiful women. Therefore, Wendy was extremely relieved and trusted Jasper very much.

They walked into the restaurant hand in hand. Darrel rushed forward to catch up to them while Jonas was one step behind.

He glanced at the slightly fearful Tiffany curiously, and with a twinkle in his eyes, he asked, "Are you a regular waitress here?"

As the first branch in Nauritus City, Jonas was ambitious and determined to shoot to fame. As such, positions in the restaurant like the supervisor and manager were all filled by well-trained confidants he had brought from his hometown. Only some ordinary waiters were recruited locally.

"Yes, Mr. Jonas," Tiffany replied in a restrained manner.

"From now onward, you'll be the assistant manager," Jonas said, hinting at the manager who was also his confidant with his eyes. "She's the manager. You probably know her... Learn how to manage the restaurant from her. Work hard."

After saying those words, Jonas rushed to catch up with Jasper.

Tiffany, who suddenly got lucky, had yet to return to her senses when she was surrounded by her envious and ingratiating colleagues.

The manager looked at the foolish and innocent girl in front of her and sighed. This was power, right?

That man had merely greeted her and said that she looked like an old friend he knew, but his words were enough to turn this silly little girl who had just come from the countryside and whom she had recruited herself into the assistant manager.

If it were not for her lack of experience, perhaps she would even take over the position as manager.

Life at the Top Chapter 942

”Mr. Laine, the entire restaurant was renovated based on the standardized requirements for all Hello Hotpot branches. Everything has been designed to create a comfortable dining environment for the customers. Also, Hello Hotpot focuses on customer service.

“I think that as one of the most popular industries in the service domain, the food and beverage industry is well worth doing. But domestic businesses have yet to realize that customers don’t only need food that smells, looks, and tastes great; they also need to be meticulously taken care of when dining in.

“We need to make them feel a sense of enjoyment from being treated like superiors and let them enjoy the service provided by the waiters and waitresses. This is the biggest distinguishing point that sets Hello Hotpot apart from other hotpot restaurants and even other businesses in the food and beverage industry.”

Jones introduced Hello Hotpot’s distinguishing points and advantages to Jasper, looking as though he was itching to pour out all the contents from his brain and lay them out in front of him.

Jasper looked around as he walked, nodding from time to time.

Jasper knew Hello Hotpot’s distinguishing points better than Jonas himself.

Was Hello Hotpot really that tasty?

To be honest, the food was only average.

Though what made it successful was its extremely meticulous service.

As other businesses in the food and beverage industry were racking their brains to cook better food, Jonas was keenly aware of the fact that it was difficult to cater to everyone's tastes. Even the best chef could not cook a dish that everyone liked. Therefore, he took a different approach and started from the service.

Then, Hello Hotpot succeeded.

At its peak, the Hello Hotpot brand was worth hundreds of billions, and with Hello Hotpot's glorious reputation, Jonas was also listed among the top 50 most influential businessmen in the country.

Making it to a ranking list like that did not mean anything substantive, but at least it proved that Jonas was, at the time, already standing on higher ground in the business world where he could smile at the passing scene before his eyes.

In fact, only a few knew that Jonas' personality was problematic.

However, this had nothing to do with Jasper.

No matter how arrogant he was, Jasper did not think that Jonas could ride roughshod over him after his reincarnation.

As for his cousin... Jasper looked meaningfully at Darrel. He was in danger.

How could a fresh graduate who started his own business with less than two years of working experience contend with an old bird like Jonas?

He knew just by seeing how Jonas was talking incessantly the whole time without leaving a chance for Darrel to speak at all that Darrel was no match for Jonas.

However, Jasper had nothing to say about this either.

Whether it was his cousin or his younger brother, they had their own paths to take. There was no way that Jasper could help them for life.

Their ability to comprehend and grow was up to their luck.

If Darrel failed to comprehend and grow, was Jasper supposed to press Jonas' head down and make Darrel the boss?

"It's pretty good." Jasper nodded, finally giving his comment.

"I think you have really innovative ideas and it's completely doable. The food and beverage industry is different from other industries. Catering to all tastes is a problem that has existed a very long time ago, not to mention with a large-scale restaurant chain.

"If we just focus on food, we won't satisfy everyone, but if we manage our service well and as long as the food is decent, then we can always win the majority's favor."

Jasper's words had hit the nail on the head.

Although Jasper was much younger than him, Jonas admired Jasper very much at this moment.

Sure enough, he was worthy of the reputation for venturing into a major industry at a very young age. He needed only to say a few words and Jasper could already tell what he was thinking about.

"I feel much more confident after gaining your recognition, Mr. Laine," Jonas said excitedly.

After a chuckle, Jasper said, "As I said, I don't know much about the food and beverage industry."

“I only invested this time because Darrel wants to start his own business. I listened to his idea and thought it was really good. I also agree with your concept, Mr. Jonas, that’s why I invested some money. However, I will not interfere with the specific operations of the restaurant. You guys do what you need to do.

“This cousin of mine is inexperienced and can be immature at handling certain things. Experience can always be accumulated from the process of suffering losses. These are all trivial matters.

“You’re experienced in this, Mr. Jonas. Can you give him a hand?”

Upon hearing Jasper’s reminder, Jonas hastened to say, “Don’t worry, Mr. Laine. I’ll treat Darrel like my own brother.”

“I’m glad to hear that,” Jasper chuckled and said, “As for Hello Hotpot, apart from everything else, you don’t have to worry about its early-stage development in Southeast Province. If you need capital, then I’ll give you capital. If you need prestige, then I’ll get you prestige.

“The only thing I ask of you is to stick to what you intended to do in the first place and do your very best.”

Perhaps Jasper was the only one who could say such bold and lofty words in Southeast Province and actually stay true to his words.

Jonas was so excited that his face was flushed. He felt as though he had seen a golden and dazzling path revealing itself in front of him. He said excitedly, “Don’t worry, Mr. Laine, I definitely won’t let you down.”

“You mean ‘we’,” Jasper pointed at Darrel and said meaningfully.

“Haha.” Jonas laughed dryly to conceal his awkwardness. “Yes, we.”

After taking a tour around the place, Wendy interrupted their conversation.

“Are you done? I’m starving to death,” Wendy said to Jasper with displeasure.

Jasper smacked his forehead. “I was too focused on talking that I forgot. My baby must be starving. Let’s go, then. Prepare a hotpot for us. I haven’t eaten this for a very long time and I really miss it.”

Both bosses Jonas and Darrel took on the role of waiters, personally setting up a hotpot and preparing the dishes for Jasper. However, Jasper was displeased with their exaggerated attitude.

“It’s your opening today. There are many things that you need to handle, so don’t linger around us. We’ll manage. Just treat us as ordinary customers.”

After chasing the duo away, Jasper took Wendy to the sauces area and said with a smile.

“Try these sauces. The seafood and hot sauces are secret recipes from Jonas’ hometown. I heard that Jonas spent a lot of money to get these recipes. Let’s see how different it is from the hotpots in Nauritus City.”

Just as Jasper and Wendy were choosing the sauces, loud cursing was heard coming from the next table. Then, Jasper heard a soft and tender female voice crying out in a panic, followed by the sound of tableware crashing to the ground.

Tiffany!

Jasper immediately turned around to look.

Life at the Top Chapter 943

There was a lot of publicity done in the early stages before Hello Hotpot's opening today. Coupled with the fact that Hello Hotpot was located in the downtown center of the most bustling and liveliest area, as well as the promotion offered this day, many customers came to join in on the fun.

They had just opened for business not long ago but the hotpot restaurant with more than 150 tables was already 70% to 80% full. Even so, there were still customers pouring in.

There was bound to be chaos when customer volume rose.

Clearly, Tiffany was still not used to the assistant manager position, hence when she noticed that the place was short-handed, she immediately rushed over to help.

As a result, problems cropped up as soon as she served the first table of customers.

"Wow, how awesome is this hotpot restaurant? Even a random waitress is so gorgeous," the man teased Tiffany with a grin.

"F*ck me, she really is quite gorgeous." Another man was amazed when he saw Tiffany.

"Hey, gorgeous. What's your monthly salary for being a waitress here?"

Tiffany was a little overwhelmed by the question.

She had just been promoted as the assistant manager and was most happy about her pay raise, though no one had told her how much of an increase she would get.

Therefore, Tiffany could only respond honestly, "My initial pay was 800 dollars, but the boss just made me the assistant manager. I don't know how much of a raise I'll get yet."

"Assistant manager?" The man chuckled, saying, "You were promoted to assistant manager when you were just a waitress on your first day of work? Did you sleep with your boss?"

Although Tiffany was naive, that did not mean she was intellectually challenged. After hearing the malice in the question, Tiffany quickly responded in anger, "No! You're talking nonsense!"

"No? Hehe." Magnus Canne let out a strange laugh as he stared at Tiffany who was flustered and whose face was flushed from anger. The malicious desires in his heart swelled up infinitely.

"Who will ever know? However, your original salary is just 800 dollars. Now that you're the assistant manager, you'll be given 2,000 dollars at most. This is less than the money I spend to raise my pet dog.

"Why don't you... quit your assistant manager job and follow me? I'll provide for you and give you 3,000 dollars a month. How's that?"

Tiffany pulled a long face and said, "No, I like my current job."

Magnus snickered. "That's because you haven't seen how cool the life of a rich person is. What can you do with these few thousand dollars? Even if you throw that money to the ground, I won't bother bending down to pick the bills up.

“You might as well follow me. You don’t have to do anything, just let me screw you every night. And if I’m happy screwing you, I’ll give you some cash. That’ll be more than enough for you to live a wealthy life.

“Hehe, other women can’t get this chance no matter how hard they try. What are you waiting for?”

As he said those words, Magnus reached out to touch Tiffany’s hand.

However, Tiffany pulled back her hand immediately, and unfortunately, Magnus’ dirty hand ended up pressing on the edge of the bottom of the pot.

The bottom edge of the heated and boiling pot was made of metal, and cooking a piece of meat would only take a few minutes. As soon as his hand brushed over the edge, he immediately felt as though a branding iron had touched his hand. He drew back his hand after letting out a shriek.

As Magnus frantically waved his hand, he glared maliciously at Tiffany. “F*cking b*tch, how dare you hurt me?!”

Tiffany was struck dumb by the plot twist and explained in a hurry, “No, I didn’t do it on purpose. You were the one who pressed your hand on it. I... I... What should I do?”

Magnus flew into a rage and roared, “What should you do? A thot like you can’t even afford to pay for a single strand of my hair. This will be your end—f*ck!”

Having said that, Magnus raised his hand to slap Tiffany.

Even though his hand was raised high, it never fell.

It was because Jasper had grabbed his wrist.

Magnus turned around to look and saw Jasper who had a blank expression on his face. Magnus cursed, "Darn it, which idiot is this? How dare you stop me when I'm teaching this that a lesson?"

At this moment, Wendy had pulled Tiffany back after witnessing the whole process and was beyond infuriated.

Fights like that should be left to the men.

"You must have gotten a fright, haven't you?" Wendy asked Tiffany.

Tiffany, who was on the verge of crying, quickly shook her head as though she had met her savior. She said, "N-No. I didn't do it on purpose. I didn't know things would turn out this way. What should I do? The boss will sack me for sure."

Wendy consoled her and said, "Don't worry, it's okay. Your boss won't sack you.

"Listen, you'll meet a lot of sickening people like that out there. You must learn how to protect yourself. It's obvious that he had bad intentions from the start. You don't have to go easy on someone like that at all."

Tiffany felt a great sense of relief after hearing Wendy's words. She nodded her head hard but was still so filled with panic that she was unable to say a word.

Her biggest worry at the moment was that she had offended a customer. Her boss told her that even if the customers scolded her, she was supposed to take it with a smile and must not start a conflict with the customer or she would be sacked.

She treasured her job very much and did not want to be sacked.

"As a man, not only did you try to take liberties with a woman, but you also tried to hit her after you failed to touch her. You have no regard for the law, do you?" Jasper said blandly.

Magnus broke away from Jasper's grip and sneered, "Which idiot is this? I don't need you to teach me how to do things. Get lost or I'll bash you up!"

"Bash me up?"

Jasper chuckled, his expression gradually turning cold. "There are many people who are interested in doing so but none have succeeded, to say the least. Why don't you try me?"

Magnus' gaze fell on Tiffany and then on Wendy. He was instantly amazed.

Yes, Tiffany was gorgeous, but she was not a fully grown woman yet, hence she was slightly inferior in terms of womanly charm. Like a budding flower, it was not time for her to bloom yet.

Wendy was different.

As the number one beauty in Southeast Province today, how could a man like Magnus ever resist her beauty?

"Hey, here's an even prettier one. Wow, kid, you're trying to play the hero in front of these women? Be careful because I'll beat you up so hard that you won't even know how you died!"

"Now get lost and I won't make a fuss over this with you. But these two women will stay, do you hear me?"

Life at the Top Chapter 944

It was Hello Hotpot's first branch opening today, so there were many customers around.

The commotion had long attracted the attention of many people—most of whom were fanning the flames and watching the scene unfold. Some were even jeering rowdily.

Jasper's expression turned to ice after hearing Magnus' words.

At this moment, Darrel and Jonas had anxiously rushed over as well. Coincidentally, they overheard what Magnus had said.

Darrel was, after all, a young man. He admired his cousin Jasper tremendously and treated him as his idol. When he heard those words, he felt his blood boil and rushed up to punch Magnus to the ground.

When Darrel, the boss of the restaurant, hurled a few punches himself, the whole place slid into chaos.

Jonas' expression fell as he grabbed the startled and astonished manager, ordering, "Quick, arrange for all staff members to pacify the customers and try your best not to let news of this get out. Otherwise, our restaurant will close down in just a day."

Having said that, Jonas rushed toward the chaotic scene.

At this time, Darrel and Magnus had become entangled with each other. Magnus had brought a friend with him, and just as Darrel was about to lose the fight, Julian arrived.

Julian's moves were straightforward and clean-cut.

When Jonas squeezed his way in, Julian already had the entire situation under control.

"Are you okay?" Jasper asked Darrel.

Darrel huffed and puffed, saying, "I'm okay. Men like him are simply despicable. They deserve to be beaten up!"

"You're not wrong, but this is your restaurant and your first day of business. Aren't you worried about bad publicity?" Jasper asked.

"What bad publicity? If Hello Hotpot is good enough, then even if this affects our customer base now, we can still make up for the loss sooner or later. If Hello Hotpot is terrible, then things will remain the same regardless of what happens today."

Jasper thought highly of Darrel after hearing what he said.

Even though Darrel was still young and inexperienced, he had the potential to become a successful businessman.

"That's a good point," Jasper praised him and walked up to Magnus.

At this moment, Julian had clasped onto Magnus and his friend as though he was carrying a chick in each hand.

"F*ck. Ask your dog to let go of me, do you hear me?!"

When he saw Jasper walking over, Magnus clamored frantically and viciously.

"How dare you hit me? Do you know who I am? My father is the chairman of the self-regulatory council of the food and beverage industry!"

“He can shut down this stupid hotpot restaurant of yours anytime! Listen up, this isn’t over! If this stupid hotpot restaurant doesn’t close down, I won’t call myself Magnus!”

“The self-regulatory council of the food and beverage industry? It sounds really dope,” Jasper replied blandly.

Many industries in the country advocated market dominance and the government’s complete withdrawal from administrating industries.

Therefore, apart from some necessary administrative approvals and tax audits, service industries like the food and beverage industry were mostly managed by self-regulatory councils set up by the industry itself.

Although self-regulatory councils did not belong to any government organization, they had a considerable amount of authority. They could conduct checks on stores under their jurisdiction at any time. If they discovered any problems, they could give orders for owners to rectify the problems.

If the stores ignored it or if problems were serious enough, then self-regulatory councils would report this to the government, leaving it to the officials to solve the problem.

Therefore, under normal circumstances, the title of chairman of a self-regulatory council was indeed intimidating.

After all, the officials sitting in the county seat could not order people around like the council. What was more, this was a superior who happened to be in charge of their business!

Though in Jasper’s opinion... this was utterly useless.

He had no idea who the chairman of the self-regulatory council of the food and beverage industry was because this man was not qualified enough to know him.

“Are you scared now?” Magnus could not detect the hidden meaning behind Jasper’s words. He sneered, thinking that like everyone else who had offended him in the past, Jasper would pee his pants as soon as he mentioned his father’s identity.

“It’s too late now! Darn it. You think you can offend anyone? Aren’t you really arrogant? You finally realized that you’ve offended the wrong guy, haven’t you?”

“Let me tell you, then. There’s no use regretting it now. I will definitely get to the bottom of this!”

“Hehe, you must have spent a lot of money to open up a hotpot business here, huh? It’s such a pity that it has to close down on its first day of operation. This is what you get for messing with me!”

Jasper asked Magnus, “Are you saying that my apology is useless now? That you’ll definitely get your father who’s a chairman to close down our hotpot business?”

“Apology?”

Magnus laughed hysterically.

“Apology my *ss. If apologies worked, the world would be at peace by now! You idiot. You finally realized that you’ve messed with the wrong person, huh? I love to see this look on your face. Hit me, then! Keep hitting! If you’re that capable, why don’t you keep hitting me, then?!”

“Sure, if that’s what you want.”

Jasper’s words left Magnus dumbfounded.

If they went according to the normal script, Jasper should be thinking of ways to plead him for mercy right now, offering him benefits and women in hopes of obtaining his forgiveness, no?

What did he mean by 'if that's what you want'?

Soon, Magnus knew what it meant.

He heard Jasper saying to Julian, "Did you hear his request? I've never heard such a ridiculous request before. He wants someone to hit him.

"If that's the case, we'll satisfy him. Hit him. Make him shut up and throw him out. I can't believe I ran into someone like that when I'm just trying to have a meal. It's ruined my appetite."

Magnus widened his eyes abruptly, almost thinking that he had heard wrongly. He shrieked, "Are you f*cking out of your mind? You're still bold enough to hit me? Aren't you afraid that I'll destroy you?"

"Yes, I'm afraid."

Jasper shrugged. "Therefore, I can only do my best to fulfill your request and please you. Perhaps that way, you'll be in a good mood and let me off the hook."

The bystanders nearly laughed out loud.

On the other hand, Darrel and Jonas wore thrilled looks on their faces as they stared at Magnus.

They were not the least bit worried about the consequences because they knew that Magnus was the one who had messed with the wrong person, not Jasper.

Magnus tried to speak but Julian stuffed his mouth with a towel.

After all, Jasper had said to make him shut up.

Julian pinched both Magnus and his friend's jaws with his fingers, dislocating them immediately.

Julian then dragged both Magnus and his friend out of the hotpot restaurant while they let out incomprehensible cries.

At this moment, Jasper had already walked up to Tiffany. He said, "Alright, it's all settled now. You don't have to be afraid."

Tiffany was on the verge of tears.

How could she not be afraid?

Even the boss had personally stepped in to fight because of her. She figured that this was the end of her. She was bound to be sacked.

Life at the Top Chapter 945

Nobody took Magnus and the others seriously.

After asking Julian to kick them out, Julian brought Wendy and Tiffany back to the room where he was having his meal.

Meanwhile, Darrel Laine and Jonas Yale continued greeting the new customers without taking a break.

After all, the previous incident had scared off some cowardly customers. As the bosses of the restaurant, it was their obligation to handle this situation on their own.

In the room, Tiffany told them about her personal experience without any reservations after Wendy asked her about it.

Wendy, who had never experienced a lack of food, clothing, or fatherly love since young, was shocked when she knew that Tiffany was born into such a family.

“I used to read news about how miserable the children of poor families are. Such stories always felt extremely distant to me. Today, I’ve realized that these things are happening all around me. How could there be such a father? On top of that, you actually need to work to earn money for your brother’s tuition fees. Don’t you find it hard?”

Wendy was inherently kind and gentle. After knowing about Tiffany’s life experience, she immediately felt a sense of compassion toward her.

“It’s not hard.”

However, Tiffany thought that it was normal.

“We’ve always lived that way. Although I was often famished when I was young, I have the ability to earn money now. I can feed myself now. Furthermore, the old people in the village and the teachers from the school all treated me very well.”

Wendy was overcome with discomfort once she heard what Tiffany said.

Perhaps, in Tiffany’s view, it was a good day as long as she did not have to starve. If she could afford her school fees and was able to go to school, life would be close to perfect for her.

However, these were all the basic needs of an ordinary human living in this world.

“Big Sis Schuler, will I get fired by my boss?”

She was still thinking of her job even now.

“I got this job after going through a lot of hardships and struggles. My boss even appointed me as the assistant manager. However, I caused trouble on the first day of work. What if he doesn’t allow me to continue working here anymore?”

Tiffany said with a worried expression on her face.

Wendy glanced at Jasper and said softly, “Don’t worry, I’ll talk to your boss later. He won’t blame you.”

“Let’s eat first.”

Jasper said as he placed a plate of earl grey cake, which he recalled was Tiffany’s favorite dessert, in front of her.

Tiffany blinked at him. She seemed to have suddenly thought of something. She immediately got up and said, “Ah, I’m a waiter here. How could I sit here and eat with you? I should stand up.”

Wendy was amused by Tiffany's reaction. She immediately pulled her back down to her seat and said, "Your boss just told us that you're here to accompany us. I want you to sit down and eat with us."

"Is this appropriate?" Tiffany asked in an abashed manner.

"There's nothing inappropriate about this."

Wendy handed a fork and spoon over to Tiffany and told her in a gentle voice, "Eat whatever you want to. Don't be embarrassed. Otherwise, I'll get angry."

With Wendy's gentle reassurance, Tiffany's panic and nervousness gradually waned.

She glanced at Jasper who had not said much with a cautious look. She then took a slice of earl grey cake once he gestured for her to eat.

"Wow, this is delicious."

After taking a bite of the cake, she was instantly amazed by its soft texture and sweet aroma.

"Have you not eaten this before?" Jasper asked.

Tiffany shook her head and said, "Nope, this is the first time I've ever had such good food."

Jasper sighed lightly. Tiffany's fate had not changed much.

He remembered that she had also told him she never had any desserts before in his past life. Earl grey cake was the first dessert that she tried after coming to the city. After that, she fell in love with the sweet, fragrant, and unforgettable taste of this cake.

In this life, it was her first time having earl grey cake as well. From the expression on her face, she probably would never forget its taste all the same.

Wendy tried to place some of the dishes on Tiffany's plate and kept asking her to eat more throughout the meal. Meanwhile, Tiffany continued to become less reserved as well. She gradually fell into conversation with Wendy.

The more they chatted, the more Wendy pitied and liked this determined, kind, and optimistic young girl.

Most of the people her age were still studying in high school.

Tiffany seemed to be enamored by Wendy's gentle and kind aura. She quickly let go of her guard and naturally began to address her as 'Big Sis Schuler'.

Not long after they began eating, a commotion started outside the door.

Darrel ran into the room in a state of panic. He told Jasper, "Cousin, Magnus brought a bunch of people over. His father is here as well. He brought some people from the self-regulatory council as well. They said that they'll close down our hotpot restaurant for rectification."

Jasper huffed in annoyance and said, "Those people from the self-regulatory council are a bunch of rats. Come on, let's take a look."

When Jasper arrived at the door, a large group of people was driving off the customers who wanted to enter the restaurant. They grumbled about the restaurant being dirty and told them that they would have food poisoning if they ate here.

Those customers immediately left regardless of the truth behind their words.

Jonas was in the midst of talking things out with a few people. A few waiters were staring angrily at Magnus who was standing in the middle of the crowd with a proud expression etched across his face.

Noticing that Jasper had walked out, Magnus' eyes lit up. It was as if the master whom he had been waiting for had finally arrived.

“Grandson, I told you that nothing will go well if you go against me! I want to close down this hotpot restaurant right now! What can you do about it?!”

“It's useless even if you get down on your knees to beg before me. Hmph, you've offended me. Let's not even talk about this hotpot restaurant, I'll close down every single restaurant you open in Nauritus City. How much money do you have to spare?”

Jasper looked at Magnus who was acting beyond arrogant and the crowd of people that had started to gather around them. The situation was getting worse. Not only were the new customers being driven off by Magnus' people, but some of the customers who were eating in the restaurant were also quickly leaving after seeing the commotion.

The waiters could not stop them from leaving. They glanced at their boss worriedly. At the same time, they also glared at Magnus' smug face.

“Cousin, if this continues, our restaurant will be doomed,” Darrel told Jasper in a panicked tone.

“Don't worry, it won't be doomed.”

Jasper walked toward Magnus after reassuring Darrel.

Life at the Top Chapter 946

“Grandson, even if you beg in front of me now, everything will still depend on my mood!”

Magnus said smugly as Jasper approached him.

“I’ve taken all the legal procedures and everything is compliant with the regulations for my restaurant. Furthermore, it has always been properly operated. What right do you have to close down my restaurant?”

Jasper said calmly as he glanced at the people from the self-regulatory council standing around Magnus.

Magnus stared at Jasper like he was looking like an idiot. “Are you a fool?” he asked, bursting out into laughter.

“You’re asking me what right I have to do so?”

“Alright, I’ll tell you, then. I can do so because my father is the chairman of the self-regulatory committee of the food and beverage industry in Nauritus City! If he says that your restaurant has a problem, that’s it for your business!”

Magnus guffawed maniacally. The people surrounding him sneered as well. They all looked at Jasper with ridicule in their gazes.

“Young man, were you the one who hit my son?”

Right then, a plump, middle-aged man showed himself. He sneered at Jasper while he pinned an icy gaze on him.

As the chairman of the self-regulatory committee of the food and beverage industry in Nauritus City, Jerome Canne was one of the first restaurant bosses to have made a fortune in Nauritus City.

As of now, Jerome currently ran eight hotpot chain restaurants that were distributed throughout various parts of Nauritus City. Due to these hotpot restaurants, he earned a lot of money every day, which allowed him to hold onto the position as chairman.

However, he was extremely sensitive toward new hotpot restaurants as his main income came from operating a hotpot restaurant chain.

He treated those within the same industry as enemies. Furthermore, Hello Hotpot was a hotpot restaurant as well.

However, Jerome could not find a suitable excuse to attack them.

When Jerome found out that his son had gotten beaten up by someone from Hello Hotpot tonight, he was beyond overjoyed.

He immediately sent people to head over to the restaurant. He was determined to take advantage of this opportunity to exterminate this competitor that posed a potential threat to his hotpot chain's business.

Jasper looked at Jerome and said, "Since you're not doing a good job at educating your son, I have no choice but to help you do so.

"However, now it seems like the apple doesn't fall far from the tree. It seems like you intend to support your son by using your power for personal gain."

Jerome sneered. He should have obliterated Hello Hotpot a long time ago.

If he went against another restaurant without any reason, the other members of the council would think that he was getting rid of everyone in the same industry as him. In that case, he would lose his position as chairman in the next election.

However, if the other council members found it reasonable for him to do so, they could not say much about it. As a father, he could not sit back and do nothing when his son had gotten beaten up, right?

“Young man, didn’t your parents teach you not to mess with the wrong people before you left your house?”

“If you want to blame someone, blame it on them for not teaching you well. Consider this loss as some tuition fees.”

Jerome said coldly. He then told the people around him, “Jot this down now. Hello Hotpot’s hygiene is unsatisfactory. The ingredients they’re using have all gone past the expiry dates and are of subpar quality. Furthermore, they’ve added prohibited chemical flavorings into their sauces. Everything is illegal.

“In accordance with the rules and regulations, the self-regulatory council will now officially issue a notice of cessation of business for rectification. When the rectification is complete, you can resume business again.”

The people around him showed understanding smiles.

Everyone knew that rectification was equivalent to an indefinite suspension of one’s business. No matter how much the hotpot restaurant changed, it would be impossible to meet their requirements.

After giving his orders, Jerome received a rectification notice of closure from one of the people around him. He flung it toward Jasper and sneered, “Close down your restaurant now. Do it immediately!” he shouted.

Jasper glanced at the notice by his feet and chuckled. “The self-regulatory council is just an unofficial organization managed by the industry. The notice you issue has no legal effect on me. I can make an appeal to the official department any time to request for the removal of any of your notices,” he said.

“Oh, it seems like you know a little of the law,” Magnus drawled sarcastically. He then continued smugly, “In that case, go on and lodge an official complaint. Go right now. I’m begging you to file a complaint. Let’s see if anyone will bother to deal with you?” he added.

“Do you really think that you’re someone important? If a fool like you lodges an official complaint, they’ll just treat you like an idiot! Darned fools!”

The expressions on Darrel and Jonas’ faces were extremely unpleasant.

Darrel was poor and did not come from a prominent family background. He did not have many connections either.

Although Jonas was slightly more active in the industry, he was from a foreign country. He did not fare any better than Darrel in Nauritus City.

They both panicked due to the evident oppression they were being subject to because of Jerome and his son’s power. Other than closing down the restaurant, there was no other way for them to resolve this problem.

Both of them turned around to look at Jasper at the same time. They hoped that Jasper could resolve this huge problem.

Meanwhile, Jasper did not say anything. He took out his phone, went through his contact list, and dialed one of the numbers.

The call went through immediately.

“Secretary Lee, it’s me. Jasper Laine.”

Life at the Top Chapter 947

Secretary Lee, the first secretary of the Nauritus City Government, was shocked to be receiving a call from Jasper Laine.

After receiving the call from Jasper, he walked to an isolated corner and picked up the call. “Mr. Laine? Haha, you’re a busy man. Why did you call me?” he asked politely.

“Don’t worry, I’ll definitely help you out as long as it doesn’t violate the law.”

Despite Secretary Lee’s status and position, it was evident how much he valued Jasper’s call from the courteous way he spoke to him.

Jasper was now extremely popular among the provincial officials. Secretary Lee had heard that one of the middle-ranking executives from ICBS had gotten scouted by Agricultural Bank just because he was close to Jasper. He had even gotten appointed as the vice president of the provincial branch.

Something like this was the envy of everyone working in the Nauritus City Government.

Jasper could sense Secretary Lee’s well-concealed diligence. He chuckled and said, “It’s actually nothing much. I invested in a hotpot restaurant started by my cousin and his friend.

“Today is the opening day of the restaurant. I wanted to invite you over for a meal, but just as I was about to do so, a bunch of people from the self-regulatory council from the food and beverage industry ordered my restaurant to close down for rectification without a valid reason. I’m flabbergasted by their actions.

“Let’s not talk about how excellent the restaurant is, but I wouldn’t invest in a restaurant that violates the law in the first place. All the approval procedures are legal as well.

“The government has given me a business license that allows me to do business, but this self-regulatory council is capable of closing it down just like that?”

Jasper’s words were not harsh in nature, but Secretary Lee was alarmed after he registered his words.

A stern expression formed on his face as he said, “Mr. Laine, the self-regulatory councils of each respective industry have the authority to supervise and manage businesses within the industry, but the government still has authority over the final review of their decision.

“Also, if their judgment is wrong, any business is allowed to file a complaint to the government. After all, they’re a non-governmental organization... What about this? Tell me your current location. I’ll head over to take a look at the situation. How about that?”

“Alright, I’m at the intersection of Manhattan Road and Avenue Road. You’ll see when you get there.”

“Alright, it’s not far from the city hall. I’ll be there in a few minutes.”

After ending the call, Secretary Lee made another call with a heavy expression on his face.

He no longer sounded as polite and courteous as he did when he was talking to Jasper just now. Conversely, he started reprimanding the person on the other end of the call once it went through.

“Director Sund, what the hell are you doing?!”

“During the past few meetings with the municipal senior officials, we have repeatedly stressed the fact that as the direct supervisors of the self-regulatory council, you must manage the behaviors of the councils in each respective industry. They shouldn’t be bullying others just because of the little authority they have. How have you been doing your work?!”

“What’s wrong?! Why are you still asking me that? I’m not taking out my anger on you right now. You’re lucky that Mr. Laine called me to notify me about this incident today. It seems like he doesn’t intend to cause a ruckus.

“If he had called the higher-ups of the municipal government, you’d be called in for a review and dismissed from your position tomorrow!”

“Which Mr. Laine? There’s only one Mr. Laine in Nauritus City!”

“Head over to the intersection of Manhattan Road and Avenue Road and look for a restaurant called Hello Hotpot right now. A bunch of people from the self-regulatory council of the food and beverage industry has issued a notice to Mr. Laine and ordered the closure of his restaurant! If we don’t handle this issue well, we’ll both be in trouble!”

...

Meanwhile, at the entrance of Hello Hotpot.

Jonas walked over to Jasper’s side cautiously after noticing that he had ended his phone call. “Mr. Laine, is the person you called reliable?” he asked.

Jasper laughed and said, “I just asked one of my friends to come over to celebrate the opening of your restaurant. We’re a legal business that has done nothing to violate the law. As long as we’ve done nothing wrong, we can do anything.

“Do you think that our restaurant will close down just because of these clowns? Does that even make sense?”

If Darrel was the one who said these words, Jonas would not be surprised at all.

After all, Darrel did not have much practical experience. He was still extremely naive and thought that everything would be alright as long as he did his own part well.

However, Jonas found it extremely odd for Jasper to say something like that.

“That’s what you think, but there are some unreasonable people out there, Mr. Laine. If you don’t look for someone with a high level of authority to support us, I’m afraid that we’ll be in great trouble this time around,” Jonas said despondently.

Jasper cast a brief glance at Jonas and asked, “Are all the procedures operated by the restaurant legal? Are there any problems with the ingredients that we use?”

Jonas immediately thumped his chest and said, “I’m a man with a conscience. I would never do anything like that!”

“That’s great. Let them struggle. Let’s see what they can come up with,” Jasper told him.

“Hahaha, did I hear wrongly? Do such fools exist in the world?” Magnus guffawed loudly.

Jerome scoffed and shook his head. He must have overestimated how much of a threat Jasper would be.

It seemed like Jasper Laine was an idiot. Conversely, Jonas looked like he had some brains.

Just as Jerome was about to say something, two cars came to an emergency brake in front of the road. Three to five people got down from the cars.

The person in the lead was the first secretary of the Nauritus City Government, Secretary Lee!

It had been less than ten minutes after his call with Jasper ended.

Life at the Top Chapter 948

Given Jerome's status and position, he was still not qualified to know Secretary Lee personally.

However, he knew Director Sund, who was following Secretary Lee's lead from behind, very well. After all, he was the direct supervisor of the self-regulatory council. He was in charge of managing Jerome's council.

Jerome headed over to greet Director Sund instinctively when he caught sight of him.

However, once he noticed Director Sund, who was usually friendly toward him although they were not particularly close, sending him a harsh glare, he immediately stopped walking toward him.

At the same time, a sense of uneasiness arose within him.

"My apologies for coming late, Mr. Laine."

Secretary Lee made his way in front of Jasper in a hurry. He extended his hand toward him from a distance away and shook Jasper's hand politely, speaking to him with a sincere expression on his face.

Jasper chuckled and said, "You're not late. It's the opening of my restaurant today, but Mr. Canne from the self-regulatory council claims that our restaurant has violated the law. He's ordering us to close down the restaurant for further rectification, so our opening is being delayed."

Secretary Lee smiled awkwardly after detecting the dissatisfaction in Jasper's tone. He turned around and dragged Director Sund in front of him. "Mr. Laine, this is Director Sund. He's the office head who's in charge of managing the office directors from the self-regulatory councils of various industries within the city,” he said.

Director Sund extended his hand at once. “Mr. Laine, it’s nice to meet you,” he said courteously.

After shaking hands with Director Sund, Jasper said, “It’s great that you’re here. Please check if my restaurant has violated the law in any way,

“If my restaurant has really violated the law, I’ll close it down at once and never get involved in the food and beverage industry ever again without any complaints. However, if nothing’s wrong with my restaurant, we will need to have a long talk about it.”

Director Sund looked at the rectification notice thrown onto the ground by his feet while he registered Jasper’s words. A look of distress formed on his face.

To be honest, he did not have to carry out an investigation to know what the results would be!

Director Sund was not favoring Jasper by using his power for personal gain. There was an extremely simple question instead.

What was Jasper Laine’s current position and social status?

He had invested in one of his cousin’s hotpot restaurants. Would he bother to use low-quality ingredients or artificial additives just to save on some costs?

If news about this broke out, everyone would laugh at it.

Director Sund felt his face heat up. It was as if someone had slapped him right across the face.

He turned around and glared at Jerome. “Mr. Canne, were you the one who issued this rectification notice?!”

While he spoke, Director Sund bent down to pick up the rectification notice and threw it at Jerome’s face.

Even if Jerome was a fool, he knew that things had escalated greatly.

He looked at Jasper and then at Secretary Lee, whose identity was still unknown to him. Finally, he looked at Director Sund while he stuttered. He could not bring himself to say anything.

“I’m asking you a question. Did you issue this notice?!” Director Sund roared in anger.

His yell shocked Jerome, causing him to tremble in fear.

Right then, Magnus, who was yet to get a grasp of the situation, joined in the exchange. “My father was the one who issued it. Is there a problem with that? My father is the chairman of the self-regulatory council. He has the authority to close down any shop he wants to!” he exclaimed.

Director Sund sneered and said, “Hah, it seems like you have an immense amount of authority!”

He pointed a finger at Jerome, who was as pale as a sheet, while he spoke. “Mr. Canne, you were elected as the chairman by the council members. Is this how you intend to use your authority? Huh?!” he questioned him.

The situation seemed to be worsening. Jerome was just about to put in a nice word when Magus interjected their conversation. He could not resist it anymore. “What do you mean by that? How dare you speak to my father like that, you b*stard? Do you know that I can put your life to an end?” he blurted out.

As soon as Magnus finished speaking, Jerome raised his hand and slapped him across the face harshly. Magnus cried out in pain and fell to the ground.

“Shut up, you unfilial son!”

Jerome shouted out loud.

He did not spare Magnus, who was completely stunned, another glance after that. He turned around and smiled at Director Sund. “Director Sund, there must be a misunderstanding. It’s all a misunderstanding!” he exclaimed.

“A misunderstanding?” Director Sund questioned with an impassive expression on his face. “However, from your son’s attitude and the notice you issued, I don’t think it’s as simple as a misunderstanding,” he added.

Jerome felt like bursting out into tears. He knew now that Jasper was leading the entire situation. He rushed in front of Jasper and begged him. “Mr. Laine, Mr. Laine, I was wrong to do so!” he pleaded.

“I shouldn’t have offended you. I was being thoughtless. Please be generous and let me go just this once. I assure you that this will never happen ever again.”

A moment ago, Jerome had been trampling all over Jasper in a haughty manner. Right now, he was begging for mercy in front of him like a pitiful loser. Everyone was dumbfounded by the theatrical scene unfolding before their eyes.

Jonas was especially stunned. He looked at Jasper like he was a deity.

Not long ago, he was still wondering if Jasper was in his right mind. He now knew the difference between Jasper and himself.

Jasper could easily crush someone like Jerome Canne by making use of some of his connections.

He had gotten worried for nothing.

Of course, Jasper did not know about the change in thoughts in Jonas' mind.

“Don't say that. As the chairman of the self-regulatory council of the food and beverage industry, you have so much power and authority, Mr. Canne. I'm an ordinary businessman. I would never dare to misunderstand you,” he said calmly.

“Since you claim that my hotpot restaurant has violated the law, let's do this instead. Director Sund, please inform the relevant departments and ask them to carry out a thorough investigation of the restaurant. How's that?”

Director Sund smiled bitterly. He would never dare to agree to a request like that. He cast a pleading glance at Secretary Lee.

Secretary Lee broke out into cold sweat as he pondered upon it. After a while, he said, “Why don't we do this, Director Sund? Let your men carry out a thorough investigation of the restaurant in accordance with the regular procedures and see if there are any problems. Let's continue talking after the investigation. How about that?”

“That sounds like a good idea,” Jasper said in an even tone.

Life at the Top Chapter 949

“No, no, no. There’s no need to do so. There’s really no need to do that.”

Jerome was the most anxious person among everyone right now. He rushed forward and pleaded with all his might, “There isn’t a problem with this restaurant. I didn’t carry out an investigation just now. I made a mistake by issuing this notice. You don’t have to carry out an investigation!” he begged.

Jasper looked at Jerome and said in a calm tone, “Oh? Mr. Canne, you were the one who claimed that there’s a problem with my restaurant just a moment ago. Now, you’re the one who’s saying that there’s no problem as well. Can you tell me if there’s a problem with my restaurant or not?”

“No! I guarantee that there isn’t a problem with it!” Jerome cried out in a state of panic. He was so desperate that he was close to bursting out into tears.

Jasper’s expression hardened. “Since there isn’t a problem, how do you explain this notice?” he questioned.

Jerome stared at the notice in regret. “It’s all a misunderstanding...” he said listlessly.

“Secretary Lee and Director Sund, do as you wish,” Jasper said coldly.

His words wielded the power to determine Jerome Canne’s fate.

After determining Jerome’s fate, Jasper did not bother to spare him another glance. He invited Secretary Lee into the restaurant for a meal.

As for Director Sund... He would be staying behind to deal with the aftermath of the incident. Besides, he was not qualified to have a meal at the same table as Jasper.

Director Sund stared at Jerome, who was as pale as a sheet, with a cold look. "Jerome Canne, submit a resignation letter to me when you're back. I'll organize an election for the new chairman of the self-regulatory council of the food and beverage industry tomorrow," he said in a stiff tone.

After speaking, Director Sund turned around and left without sparing another glance at Jerome and Magnus whose expressions were full of despondence and disbelief.

Through this incident, Director Sund realized that there were many internal problems within the self-regulatory councils. Furthermore, the self-regulatory council of the food and beverage industry was not the only council in Nauritus City. There were plenty of different councils in each industry.

Therefore, Director Sund intended to think carefully and devise a plan to increase the positive impacts brought about by these self-regulatory councils in order to reduce the mess caused by idiots like Jerome and Magnus Canne.

...

The farce ended just like that. After that, Jasper and Secretary Lee did not mention this incident again.

After all, in the eyes of both Jasper and Secretary Lee, Jerome and Magnus were nobodies who did not deserve to be mentioned. There was no need to bring them up again.

They knew that it was unlikely for Jerome and Magnus to appear before them ever again.

“Mr. Laine, this hotpot restaurant of yours is rather exquisite,” Secretary Lee remarked as he admired the interior furnishing of Hello Hotpot. Besides, the waiters spoke to the customers passionately and provided extremely meticulous service.

Jasper chuckled and said, “This is one of the reasons why I decided to invest in this restaurant. Come on, Secretary Lee. Let’s make a toast. Make sure to frequent this restaurant in the future. I won’t let you eat for free, but I’ll give you a discount since we’re friends.”

Secretary Lee guffawed loudly as he made a toast with Jasper. They both downed the contents of their glasses in one go.

...

It was ten o’clock at night after they finished their meal.

Secretary Lee repeatedly told Jasper he did not need to send him off at the entrance of the restaurant. He then turned around and left.

Darrel and Jonas made their way toward Jasper excitedly.

“How is it? How’s the turnover today?” Jasper asked.

“Although the customers declined in between due to the commotion caused by Magnus and the others, we still did pretty well today,” Darrel said happily.

“We had a turnover of more than 80,000 dollars tonight. It has exceeded our expectations by quite a lot. This was mainly due to the good feedback from customers. Some of the customers also suggested their recommendations for areas of improvement. We’ve collected all of their feedback and we can review them later on.”

Jasper nodded and said, “Not bad. This is a very good start. Let’s continue to work hard.”

As Jasper spoke, he turned around to look at Tiffany who was standing anxiously beside him. She seemed like she was at a loss of what to do. He chuckled and asked her, "Where do you live? Do you need me to send you home?"

Tiffany blushed and hid behind Wendy instinctively. Wendy was the person she trusted the most right now. Conversely, she felt slightly aversive toward Jasper for reasons that were unclear to her as well.

"I... I'm not off work yet."

"You're off work now! You can go home right now! You're free to go now, Tiffany!" Jonas exclaimed immediately. He was a natural prankster.

Tiffany gasped and stared at her boss in a stunned manner. "But, didn't you say that we're supposed to operate the restaurant till half-past two in the early morning?" she asked in a daze.

The corners of Jonas' lips twitched. He was at a loss for words.

How could there be such a silly girl in the world?

Wendy could not help but chuckle. "Your boss is giving you a special holiday today. You can get off work in advance," she told her.

"Will... Will my salary be deducted?" Tiffany asked in confusion.

Jonas turned his head around silently. He was afraid he would not be able to resist cursing in front of her.

Every word that came out of this young girl's mouth made him look at this young, sweet, and silly girl in a different light.

"No, it won't," Wendy said patiently.

“Tell me. Where do you live? We’ll send you back. Otherwise, I’d worry if you went home alone,” Wendy said.

“I don’t have a place to live in. Before coming over to work, the shop owner told me that I can sleep in the extra space in the storeroom. I brought my sheets over as well,” Tiffany said embarrassedly.

As soon as she finished speaking, everyone was overcome with a sense of pity.

Jonas was stunned as well. He then started to consider if they should rent a dormitory for their employees.

However, Jasper suggested it first, “Darrel and Jonas, rent out an apartment unit nearby so that employees who don’t have a place to live can reside there. Include the fees in the operating costs of the store. We can cut our costs in terms of other aspects, but we cannot mistreat our employees,” he said.

Both of them nodded in response. Jasper was about to suggest that Wendy could bring Tiffany home so that she could spend the night at her place when Wendy said, “Tiff, do you want to follow me home tonight? You can sleep in my room.”

Life at the Top Chapter 950

“Bis Sis Schuler, that wouldn’t be appropriate. I can stay at the dormitory...”
Tiffany said in a flustered tone.

“It’s alright. Don’t be afraid. I’m lonely when I’m home alone. You can keep me company at home.”

A sincere smile flashed across Wendy’s face.

Jasper and Dawson were way too busy nowadays. She had nobody to keep her company when she arrived home. She had nobody to rant to.

After all, she was a woman. Furthermore, she had such a heavy workload. She wished to have a true friend who could accompany her as well. She hoped that she had someone to talk to whenever she was tired.

Tiffany had left a pretty good first impression on her. She had already begun to treat her as her own younger sister.

“Tiff, listen to Wendy! It isn’t easy for you to live outside on your own,” Jasper said.

“In that case...”

“It’s decided, then. You can stay with us. It wouldn’t be safe for a young girl like you to live outside on your own.”

Tiffany nodded in a daze due to Jasper and Wendy’s persistent persuasion.

Tiffany followed Jasper and Wendy back home after they left Hello Hotpot.

She was beyond shocked the moment she arrived at Wendy's house.

"Oh my God! Big Sis Schuler, you have such a big house!"

Standing at the door, Tiffany looked at the wide central living room. The magnificent house was a villa that consisted of two separate floors.

A huge crystal chandelier that shone brighter than the shiniest treasure from Tiffany's dreams hung from the ceiling in the center of the room. Everything was beyond her imagination.

"Why are you standing at the door? Come in," Wendy told her with a cheery smile on her face.

"I... I've never seen such a big house in my life. Everything is way too pretty. I'm afraid that I'll dirty the furniture," Tiffany said in embarrassment, her cheeks beginning to blush.

"The cleaners will tidy up and clean the place every day."

Immediately, Wendy pulled Tiffany into the house.

Although Wendy wanted to treat Tiffany well, she knew how to take care of a young girl's self-esteem as well. Wendy was a wise woman.

"You don't have to worry about anything when you're staying here. However, you'll be staying in one of the guest rooms and you'll have to clean up the room yourself."

Tiffany nodded heavily and said, "Alright, Big Sis Schuler. I'll make sure to pay attention to the cleanliness of the room."

Wendy chuckled and said, "Come on, I'll bring you to your room."

Jasper's mood was lifted when he saw both of them walking upstairs while happily chatting.

Putting aside the complicated fate of Tiffany's past and present lives, Wendy really needed someone she could talk to.

Wendy's life usually revolved around her home and the office. In the office, she would be swamped with work.

Back at home, Dawson was getting busier and busier with his own work, so he was rarely at home. Wendy did not have anyone to talk to except for her unreliable bodyguard, Fallon Murray.

Now with Tiffany at home, it would be a good thing for Wendy.

After taking a shower upstairs, Jasper sat down in his study. He was just about to handle some business matters when he received a phone call from Brac County.

"Mr. Laine, this is Lucas Wadler."

"Lucas? Why are you calling me so late at night? Did anything happen?" Jasper asked with a slight frown.

Lucas was a talented senior manager in the shipbuilding industry whom Jasper had hired from Harbor City through his connections with the Laws.

His parents did not know how to operate and manage the shipyard in Brac County, which was the reason why he hired Lucas to lead the team working in the shipyard.

"Mr. Laine, I'm calling you because a situation has arisen over here. I thought about it for some time and I think that I should report it to you."

Life at the Top Chapter 951

“Half a month ago, didn’t you obtain a manufacturing order for three 5,000-tonne cargo ships through your connections in Harbor City? This was originally a good thing. The entire shipyard has been working together to complete this order.

“However, a few days ago, the buyer suddenly came to the shipyard for an inspection. He found out that we were using a batch of imported steel plates of subpar quality. He was furious about it and he proceeded to sign a new contract with another shipyard.

“I received news that the other shipyard had secretly contacted the buyer a long time ago. They offered him a price that was nearly 20% lower than ours.

“Therefore, this deal was determined to be done for. The old mister and madam have been so troubled over this lately that they can’t focus on anything else.”

After listening to what Lucas said, Jasper frowned. “I obtained this order through a special connection of mine. However, one always has to consider their own interests in business,” he said in a heavy tone.

“I know about these three ships. The value of each ship is around seven million dollars. It makes up a total of 21 million dollars, which isn’t a small number. The buyer will definitely be careful about it.

“Why are we using a batch of imported steel plates of subpar quality?”

“That’s the odd thing,” Lucas replied immediately.

“Mr. Laine, you’ve told us time and time again that we must only use genuine materials. The old mister and madam have never violated this rule. We would never dare order a batch of defective steel plates.

“I checked this batch of steel plates. There’s no inventory record and no purchasing record. It was as if the steel plates had suddenly appeared out of thin air.

“Someone must have been in the factory the night before without anyone knowing. The next day, the buyer came in for a surprise inspection as soon as the factory opened.

“Of course, we could not come up with any excuses when the buyer saw the batch of defective steel plates in the factory. The buyer was reluctant to listen to our explanation as well. He left after throwing a tantrum.”

Jasper’s expression darkened as he gently rapped his knuckles against the table.

“That means that the order was already leaked when the shipyard just received it. When the buyer was here for an inspection, a batch of defective steel plates from an unknown source suddenly appeared in the factory and the buyer just so happened to see it.

“Therefore, you didn’t have the chance to clarify things as the buyer left in a fit of rage. Not long after, another shipyard offered the buyer a lower price for the same order and snatched this deal from us?

“That’s what happened. The entire incident is suspicious. After thinking about it for a while, I thought that I should report it to you,” Lucas said with a firm voice.

“You made the right decision. Someone is plotting against our shipyard.”

Jasper sneered and said, “This is a big buyer. His orders exceed two billion dollars in value annually. Most importantly, we could quickly expand the shipyard’s market in Harbor City and Auma City through this. That’s why I put in a lot of effort and asked someone for a favor to get my hands on this order.

“It seems like someone is after our accomplishments.

“A single order is nothing much, but I won’t allow others to fool and belittle my parents’ shipyard like that. Furthermore, this is such an important buyer.

“I’ll make a trip to Brac County tomorrow. Let’s talk then.”

“Alright, Mr. Laine,” Lucas said excitedly as he breathed out a sigh of relief.

After putting down the phone, Jasper raised his head and caught sight of Wendy who had walked into his study.

“Has Tiffany gone to bed?” Jasper asked.

“She’s resting,” Wendy said. She sat down in front of his study table and supported her chin with a hand.

“Do you want to tell me anything?” Jasper asked with a chuckle.

Wendy was slightly hesitant, but she still voiced her opinion, “I don’t think it’s suitable for Tiffany to be working outside due to her personality. She has too little experience,” she said.

“What are your plans?” Jasper asked with interest.

“I think that we should let her stay at home as our nanny. How’s that?” Wendy suggested.

Jasper was slightly stunned. He smiled bitterly and said, “That doesn’t sound appropriate. She’s still so young. She just came of age this year.”

“Just let her help us out at home. Let’s pay her a salary every month. We can reduce her burden by doing so.

“I pity her way too much. Furthermore, her innocence and kindness give me a good feeling about her. If I didn’t know her, I wouldn’t bother to do anything.

However, since I know about what she's going through, I want to help her if I have the ability to do so."

"You can decide for yourself. I'll support you," Jasper said gently.

"Alright," Wendy said as she smiled radiantly.

Life at the Top Chapter 952

Wendy and Tiffany got along with each other exceptionally well. Jasper was extremely relieved to see this.

He wanted to make up for the regrets from his past life. Anyways, since fate had arranged for Jasper and Tiffany to meet again, he could not bear to watch Tiffany continue to live as miserably as she did in her past life.

Jasper was not one who did many good deeds, but he did not mind putting in some effort to provide a pitiful girl like Tiffany with a better future.

The next day, Jasper woke up early as he had to head over to Brac County. As soon as he stepped out of his room, he noticed that the door of the room at the end of the corridor was open. Tiffany, who had finished washing up, walked out of the room with her luggage.

Jasper was stunned. "Where are you going with all your luggage?" he asked.

Tiffany seemed to be shocked by Jasper's sudden appearance. After a momentary daze, she said in a soft voice, "I'm going to work."

"Didn't Wendy tell you that you don't need to work anymore?" Jasper asked.

"Huh?!"

Tiffany was evidently shocked by the news. The next moment, tears began to well up in her widened eyes and a look of distress flashed across her face.

"Did I really get fired?"

Jasper was amused when he heard the teary tone of her voice. “What are you thinking? We just don’t think that you should be working as a waitress in the hotpot restaurant because you’re way too soft-hearted. Also, you have too little experience, and you’re so pretty,” he said.

“Even if you were appointed as the assistant manager, what do you know about the responsibilities of an assistant manager? An assistant manager’s main responsibility consists of assisting the manager to manage the other waiters and staff of the hotpot restaurant.”

“This is a managerial position. Do you think that you’ll be able to do well?”

Tiffany shook her head as a sense of inferiority overcame her upon registering Jasper’s words. “No, I don’t know how to do any of that,” she said.

“Exactly. Therefore, we intend to let you help us out at home. You can start from being a nanny. You will have a salary of 5,000 dollars per month.

“Your main responsibilities include cleaning, tidying up the house, and tending to the plants in the garden.

“We actually have special maids to tend to these chores, but you can learn from them. If you find it hard to learn from them, you can cook for us. The cook who used to be in charge of cooking for us has resigned to take care of her grandson at home.

“You should know how to cook, right?”

Actually, Jasper could pay for all of Tiffany’s living costs, but it would be inappropriate for him to do so. After all, she was a young and pretty lady. It would be odd for him to take care of her at home.

Besides, he was taking Tiffany’s self-esteem into consideration as well.

He knew that Tiffany was actually extremely determined and sensitive despite her weak appearance. She would reject the charity of others as she hoped that she could change her life through her own efforts.

“I know how to cook!” Tiffany nodded in enthusiasm.

She had raised her brother since young, so there was no way she did not know how to cook. Her cooking skills were pretty good too.

Tiffany’s eyes shone once she heard that she would be getting a salary of 5,000 dollars per month.

“Alright, Wendy will explain everything to you after she wakes up. Don’t worry about anything and just stay here. It’s an easy and carefree job. You can just tell us if you need anything. If you have nothing to do, you can just stay at home or go out for a walk.

“I have work to do, so I need to leave now.”

Jasper said before walking downstairs.

“Brother... Brother Laine.”

Tiffany’s conflicted voice rang out from the stairwell. Jasper stopped walking and turned around to look at her.

Tiffany’s small face was flushed bright red, and she fidgeted awkwardly. It seemed like she wanted to tell him something but was embarrassed to say it aloud.

Jasper did not urge her to say anything. He simply smiled as he looked at her.

Life at the Top Chapter 953

“There’s something else... Brother Laine, could you lend me 1,000 dollars?”

Tiffany sounded like she was about to cry. “I know that it’s wrong for me to do this, but my brother’s school fees have been in arrears for almost a week now. I...I don’t want the others to look down on him in school,” she said.

Jasper sighed lightly as he looked at Tiffany’s conflicted expression.

1,000 dollars was nothing to him.

The profits that he had earned effortlessly from the companies under his name exceeded this amount by a lot. However, this sum of money was enough to cause Tiffany to feel conflicted and awkward.

He took out 2,000 dollars in cash from his wallet and stuffed it into Tiffany’s hands. He then spoke to Tiffany who was desperately searching for the right words to say to him in a kind tone.

“Here’s 2,000 dollars. 1,000 dollars is for your brother’s school fees, and the remaining 1,000 dollars is for your brother’s living expenses. You need to take care of the remaining expenses on your own. However, this money is part of your salary. I’m just giving it to you in advance. When you get your salary, it’ll be deducted from the total.”

Tiffany nodded nervously as a bright expression flashed across her face.

Jasper’s words made her feel extremely at ease. She felt like the 2,000 dollars he had given her was her salary and not a form of charity.

“Thank you, Brother Laine! I will work hard!” Tiffany exclaimed in a determined tone.

Jasper chuckled and waved at her. He then turned around and headed downstairs.

Julian had driven over to the villa after receiving Jasper’s call and was waiting for him outside in his Bentley.

“Let’s head over to Brac County. I think we’ll be staying there for about two days.”

Jasper said as he got into the car and accepted the breakfast sandwich handed over to him by Julian.

The Bentley zoomed along the road, catching the attention of passersby on the street. It then entered the highway and dashed toward Brac County.

They arrived at Brac County in the afternoon, and Jasper headed over to the shipyard straight away.

Charlie and Sally were shocked to see Jasper.

“Why are you here, Jasp?” Sally asked while she turned her head to look behind his back. The expression on her face dimmed when she did not see the person she wanted to see. “Where’s Wendy?” she asked.

“She’s busy in the office. I came here alone this time. If you want to see her, call her and ask her to visit when she’s free,” Jasper said in amusement.

“That’s such a hassle,” Sally said as she shook her head.

“Dad, Mom, has anything special happened at the shipyard lately?” Jasper asked.

Charlie frowned, obviously not in a good mood. "You haven't eaten, right? Come on, let's eat at the canteen. We'll talk while we eat," he said.

"Alright," Jasper said. He did not want to expose them either. He followed both of them out of the office as they walked toward the shipyard.

The shipyard, which had still been deserted not too long ago, was now bursting with liveliness after a period of operation. The sound of machines whirring added to the bustling atmosphere.

The workers gradually gathered at the canteen when it was time for lunch.

It was evident that Charlie and Sally had a good reputation in the shipyard. Ordinary workers and managers of every position would take the initiative to greet them when they passed by. It seemed like they really liked these two bosses. They did not look like they were faking it.

However, not many people knew who Jasper was.

Charlie and Sally greeted workers throughout their journey to the canteen. They did not receive any special treatment either. They queued up after grabbing a tray each and joked with some of the workers every now and then.

Jasper followed his parents. He took a tray and stood behind them. The factory's canteen, which had dozens of workers, took its food seriously. More than 20 dishes had been prepared, and the portion of meat and vegetables was extremely reasonable. His parents had obviously put in a lot of effort and consideration on this aspect.

After taking their food, the three of them sat down at an empty table. Charlie started talking, "Not too long ago, the order you obtained for us got snatched away by someone else!"

Life at the Top Chapter 954

Everything that Charlie told him was roughly the same as what Jasper already knew.

However, he discovered something new from his father's account of the incident.

There were surveillance cameras in the factory. Although there were not many cameras, they covered most of the important areas.

However, none of the cameras had captured the scene of the batch of defective steel plates being moved into the factory.

"I've checked before. There are at least three surveillance cameras along the way to the factory. There's one at the main entrance, another one at the entrance of the production area, and one at the entrance of the warehouse. These are all important pathways, but none of these cameras managed to catch anything on footage.

"Therefore, there can only be two explanations for this. It was either a supernatural event where everything was the work of a ghost or the perpetrator is someone familiar with the environment of the factory and acted as a snitch."

Lucas brought two executives over in a hurry when Charlie mentioned this.

"Mr. Laine, you didn't notify us when you arrived. We should have come outside to greet you," Lucas told Jasper.

Jasper waved his hand while he continued to eat. "You don't have to be so courteous around me. I don't like such behavior. Have you guys eaten? Let's eat together if you haven't," he said.

Lucas flashed a meaningful gaze at one of the executives. The executive rushed off to take food for them at once.

Not long after, the three of them sat down. The small table was occupied by six people. The atmosphere was rather lively as everyone huddled together.

“My father told me about the surveillance cameras. Do all of you know about it?” Jasper asked.

Lucas nodded and said, “Yes, Chairman Laine was the one who proposed this idea to us. After investigating and drawing comparisons between the footage, we didn’t find anything suspicious.”

“If it wasn’t a supernatural event, I’m sure that there’s a snitch among us,” Jasper said in a steady tone.

“I’ve never believed in ghosts. Our investigation will begin with the internal staff of the factory.”

Jasper glanced at Lucas as he spoke, “You’re more familiar with the workers here. List down some suspects and carry out the investigation slowly. As long as that person has done it, some evidence will be left behind.

“Look into the people who were in the factory and those who weren’t there on the night of the incident. Anyone could be the culprit. Don’t spare anyone.”

“However, remember that you shouldn’t cause panic. The factory has already lost a huge order, so everyone is feeling uneasy. Therefore, you need to carry out the investigation without anyone knowing.”

Lucas nodded sternly after listening to what he said. “Alright, I understand, Mr. Laine,” he said.

Jasper looked at Charlie and chuckled. "Relax, Dad. This isn't a big issue. Everything will be in the clear soon. It'll be alright as long as we avoid similar incidents from happening in the future," he said.

"Why are these people so mean? Don't they feel guilty for using such shady methods to plot against us?" Charlie questioned in distaste.

"Guilt is nothing compared to the benefits that come with riches. Plenty of people have thrown their conscience away a long time ago," Jasper said.

"Mr. Laine, Chairman Laine and Madam Laine have been monitoring the production line for days on end lately just because of that order. They've put in a lot of effort. We're all angry now that something like this has happened. We must find the true culprit!" Lucas exclaimed right then.

"Dad, Mom, although your work at the shipyard is important, your health should be your main priority. Don't wear yourselves out over a small issue like this. That would be real trouble," Jasper said in a concerned tone.

Sally laughed and said, "Your father and I have been spending time in a fulfilling manner lately. Now that we have something to do, we feel much more energized than before. We don't find it hard to fall asleep at night anymore. It's a good thing that we're busy now. Don't worry."

Jasper smiled as he nodded.

Although Jasper continued chatting about some casual topics with them, he still felt extremely uneasy.

Life at the Top Chapter 955

Jasper did not really care about the shipyard. It was not worth it to allocate so much of his efforts into this business.

He only came over personally to handle this issue because he did not want it to affect his parents' emotions.

However, from the way his parents were behaving right now, it seemed he had to resolve this problem as best as he could. Otherwise, they would be sick with worry.

After lunch, Charlie and Sally headed back to rest. Meanwhile, Jasper and Lucas discussed the investigation procedures to be carried out in order to find out who the snitch was.

Once that was done, Lucas left to continue with his work whereas Jasper and Julian left the shipyard together.

"They plotted against us when we least expected it. We don't even know what exactly happened. It won't be easy to find out the truth in just a few days."

Jasper massaged his temples in the car. He had a headache.

"You can slowly investigate if you don't manage to find out anything within a few days, Jasper. There's no need to pressure yourself," Julian said while he drove the car.

Jasper sighed and said, "I don't have that much time here."

While he spoke to Julian, Jasper noticed a figure outside the window of the car that moved swiftly along the road. "Julian, stop the car!" he shouted at once.

The Bentley came to an emergency stop by the side of the road.

A short distance away from the car, a huge scene was taking place at the entrance of a high-end residential area.

A man who was pushing a baby stroller and carrying a lot of vegetables with an apron wrapped around his waist was being slapped by an extravagantly-dressed woman in public.

“Greg Costa, what did I tell you yesterday night? I want to drink sweetened milk, but you bought me pure milk. Did you do it on purpose so I won’t feel like drinking anything?! Did you?!”

The woman scolded Greg in a shrill voice as she slapped him.

Greg raised his arm to block the woman’s hand. However, he did not dare to retort against her. He simply explained to her in a stiff voice.

“I was too tired last night. Our child hasn’t been feeling well these few days. He wakes up a few times every night. I haven’t been sleeping well for almost an entire week. You’ve misunderstood me. Don’t hit me anymore. There are many people watching...”

“There are so many people watching?!” the woman yelled in a shrill voice. She sneered and said, “Good, then. I want everyone to see how useless you are. You’re just a piece of garbage who relies on women for money. I’m paying for your living expenses and you’re living in my house. Can’t I hit you a few times, huh?”

Greg seemed to be used to the mocking and derisive gazes being directed at him. “I’ll buy some sweetened milk for you right now,” he said with a dark expression on his face.

“You don’t need to go anywhere now!” the woman yelled, raising her hand and slapping him across the face once again. “I’m going out now, and you’re telling me that you're going to buy it now? Are you causing trouble on purpose?" she questioned.

"Why are you standing there in a daze? Go home and do the chores at once. Remember that you need to hand wash my clothes. If I find out that you ruined any of my clothes, I'll beat you to death! You're just garbage who lives off his woman's money! Scram!"

After the pretty woman finished yelling at him, she walked toward a red sports car.

Meanwhile, Greg, whose face was streaked with marks from being slapped repeatedly, sighed heavily. He coaxed the baby in the stroller who was crying as he had been frightened by all the commotion. Greg then made his way back into the residential area silently.

"Greg!"

Right then, a man's voice rang out from behind him. His voice was tinged with disbelief.

Greg was stunned the moment he heard his voice. He turned around in shock to look at Jasper who was standing a short distance away from him. He shouted out loud, "Jasp?!"

Life at the Top Chapter 956

Greg Costa and Jasper were from the same hometown.

They were childhood friends who had grown up together. They had been playmates when they were young.

Both of them graduated from the same high school in the town in their past and current lives. Jasper went on to study in university whereas Greg, who lost his father at a young age, gave up on his opportunity to attend university and started working. After that, they lost contact.

In Jasper's past life, he had met Greg once after a long time.

At the time, he was dressed extravagantly and had a posh car. In the eyes of the people from their hometown, he was the epitome of success for those from their generation. However, Greg had told Jasper not to envy him back then as his life was worse than that of a dog.

Jasper, who had been buried in debt back then, did not understand what he meant. He was dressed in clothes worth tens of thousands of dollars and had a car that cost a few hundred thousand dollars. Nothing was bad about all of that.

What kind of dog could live a life like this?

However, Greg did not explain much, and Jasper did not ask him any questions either.

They had not seen each other since then, which was to say that their last meeting was a lifetime ago.

Jasper did not expect to bump into Greg in Brac County.

“Who was that just now?” Jasper asked.

Greg’s expression changed. “You saw everything?” he asked bitterly.

Jasper frowned as he looked at his childhood friend. “I heard that you got married. That woman is your wife, right?” he asked.

“Wife? Haha.” Greg chuckled. “Have you ever seen a wife who treats her husband like a dog? Have you ever seen a wife who scolds and hits her husband however she wishes? Well, that’s my wife,” he said.

Greg then carried the baby in the stroller in his arms. “Look, this is my son,” he told Jasper.

Right then, a genuine smile finally appeared on Greg’s face. This was a sight that was familiar to Jasper.

Jasper cooed at the cute child. However, the child was still frightened from the argument just now. He kept crying non-stop.

“He looks like you. What’s his name?” Jasper asked.

“His name is Terrius Wellington,” Greg said.

“His last name is Wellington?” Jasper asked with a stunned expression on his face.

“You’ve already seen what happened just now, so I’m no longer afraid that you’ll mock me. I married into the Wellington family, so our child has to take their last name,” Greg said bitterly.

Jasper was shocked. “Does your mother know about this?” he asked.

It seemed like everything that Greg had told him in his past life was genuine.

He married into his wife's family, and this was not something to be proud of. Furthermore, from the way his wife treated him, it seemed like his life was indeed worse than that of a dog.

"Back then, I agreed to this condition to get money so that my mother could treat her illness," Greg said emotionlessly.

"However, my mother passed away not long after."

"Brother, you've been through so many things. Why didn't you tell me about any of it?" Jasper asked with a sigh.

"It'd be useless even if I told you all of this," Greg said with a bitter smile, "I know that Penelope Hunt is quite a hassle. You must be having a hard time as well. If I ranted about my struggles to you, wouldn't I be adding to your troubles?" he asked.

Jasper was at a loss for words. His relationship with Penelope Hunt had ended in what felt like eons ago.

Life at the Top Chapter 957

Just as he was about to say something, Greg said, "Wait for me. We rarely see each other. I'll send my son home so that someone can look after him. I'll be back soon. Let's have a drink together."

Greg then turned around and ran off.

Jasper shook his head as he looked at Greg who was carrying his son in one arm while pushing the stroller with another. He was also carrying bags of groceries with an apron wrapped around his waist.

In his memory, Greg had always been a strong, independent, and capable man. He did not expect him to choose a path like this. A moment later, Greg appeared in front of Jasper after changing his clothes.

Greg was quite handsome, tall and dashing too. During their high school days, he was the school's most popular hunk. He was pursued by many girls back then, and he was way more popular than Jasper.

Otherwise, that woman from the Wellington family would not have fallen for him.

"Let's go! I know a restaurant nearby. It serves pretty good food," Greg told Jasper with a smile as he pulled him toward the entrance of the residential area.

Jasper instinctively walked toward his Bentley, which was parked a short distance away. However, Greg stopped him.

"Where are you going? Let's go this way. My car is parked here."

Greg pulled Jasper and veered him toward an Audi. He laughed and said, "Did you want to take a look at that Bentley? Haha, don't look at it. Only prominent figures deserve to sit inside a car like that. If we offend such people, we'll be in big trouble. My Audi isn't that bad either."

Jasper was amused, but he did not say anything. After all, he could write a whole novel if he were to tell him about his entire experience up till this point in life.

Right now, he was more curious about what had happened to Greg throughout the years.

Jasper opened the door of the Audi and sat down in the passenger's seat. Greg turned on the engine and started driving. He tapped the steering wheel and struck up a conversation.

"We bought this car at the full price of 600,000 dollars. Of course, the Wellingtons paid for it. The price of this car alone is enough for me to buy three commercial houses in our town, but it's nothing to the Wellingtons. It was just their 'betrothal gift' to me.

"Sometimes, I think that living like this isn't all that bad. After all, if I were to work hard on my own, how long would it take for me to be able to afford a car like this? It'd be impossible."

Greg chuckled at himself as he continued speaking, "I know that a lot of people scold me for being a weak and useless scumbag who lives off my wife's money. Jasp, do you think of me that way too?" he asked.

Jasper responded in a stern voice, "Greg, I know that you aren't someone like that. You have your own hardships as well."

"Yes, I have my own hardships."

Greg chuckled lightly and said, "If my mother hadn't been lying in the ICU while waiting for the surgery fees to be paid, I wouldn't have done this. I caved in at the offer after that.

“I don’t think there’s a need for me to be upset. So what if people look down on me? So what if I get beaten up, scolded, and my son doesn’t share the same last name as me? He’s still my son. I live in a better house and drive a better car than other people. That’s enough.”

“Greg, you’ve changed,” Jasper said.

“Jasp, you’re still too naive. Society isn’t the same as school. Reality is way too harsh and cruel. Aspirations and determination mean nothing in society. Without money, authority, or an affluent background, you’re nothing but a dog to others! In fact, your life will be worse than that of a dog!

“People change. I don’t have a choice. I want to live a better life as well.”

The car suddenly came to an emergency brake in the middle of the road while Greg was talking.

Jasper’s head was almost slammed into the dashboard due to the sudden emergency brake. He raised his head and was about to say something when he saw Greg staring outside the window with a pointed gaze. A livid expression gradually formed on his face.

Jasper turned toward the direction of his gaze and caught sight of the pretty woman who had scolded Greg like he was a dog in front of the entrance of the residential area earlier. She was wrapped up in the embrace of a plump and greasy middle-aged man with a flirtatious expression on her face.

She even let the middle-aged man reach his hand under her shirt and roam it freely on her body.

This... They were doing this on the streets in broad daylight!

Life at the Top Chapter 958

The most unbearable thing for a man was seeing his woman with another man.

The scene unfolding before their eyes evidently left a great impact on Greg.

He gripped the steering wheel tightly as if he wanted to crush it with his bare hands.

The corners of Jasper's eyes twitched as he watched the woman fool around with the man.

This woman was being way too reckless.

Just when Jasper thought that Greg would get out of the car and do something about it in a fit of rage, he suddenly spoke up.

"Let's go."

Greg's voice was terrifyingly calm.

It was as if the woman outside the car was not his wife.

Jasper stared at him in shock.

"Aren't you going down to take a look?"

Greg gritted his teeth and said, "There's nothing much to see. It isn't the first time."

Jasper was rendered speechless by the calm and icy tone of Greg's voice.

Was it worth it?

Living like this just for a posh car, a luxurious house, and a life without having to worry about basic necessities?

Was he willing to tolerate his wife cheating on him just like that?

Jasper felt like Greg was not the passionate young man he once knew anymore. He was no longer a daring man who was willing to fight for his dreams.

Greg started up the car again, and he drove away.

Both of them did not utter a single word throughout the entire ten-minute journey.

They finally arrived at their destination. Greg had brought them to a Criucian restaurant. His preferences for food still remained the same. He loved spicy food.

Greg ordered a whole table of dishes after arriving at the restaurant. He also ordered two bottles of Criucian wine, which the restaurant had limited stock of.

“That’s enough. We can’t finish eating so much food,” Jasper told Greg who still intended to order some more food.

“Eat whatever you want and order anything you like. If you can’t finish the food, we’ll just throw it away. It doesn’t cost much,” Greg said. It seemed like he was venting his anger.

Jasper raised his brows. “Greg Costa, I know that you have a lot of money now, but is it fun for you to splurge your money and waste food like this just to show off?” he questioned him.

“F*ck this! You’re looking down on me as well, Jasper Laine. You’re mocking me for using my wife’s money, right?!” Greg roared at Jasper, suddenly bursting into a fit of rage.

“I’m not looking down on you. You’re the one who’s giving up on yourself instead! You’re sabotaging yourself!” Jasper retorted.

Greg gritted his teeth as he remained seated without saying anything.

He opened the bottle of Criucian wine after the dishes were served. He raised his head and downed a whole glass of wine in a single gulp.

“Greg, you were bold enough to pick a fight with more than ten gangsters in the past because of me. You also told the teacher that everything was your fault so that I wouldn’t be expelled back then.

“When I got together with Penelope Hunt, you told me that she wasn’t a good person. You threatened to end our friendship so that I would end things with her. Why have you become like this now?” Jasper quizzed as he stared at Greg.

Greg closed his eyes slowly. He seemed to be recalling the past incidents that Jasper had mentioned. A carefree smile formed across his lips.

“Now that I think about it, we were really fools in the past, haha.” Greg chuckled.

“Let’s not talk about me anymore. How about you? Are you still with Penelope Hunt?” Greg asked.

“We broke up,” Jasper said in a steady tone.

“You guys broke up? An infatuated man like you actually broke up with her? Who was the one who initiated it?” Greg grinned as he asked Jasper.

“It was a mutual decision. We weren’t right for each other anymore, so it was meaningless to continue being together. You were right. We don’t suit each other. I must have been blinded in the past. After calming down and returning to my senses, I finally understood everything,” Jasper said. He filled his glass with wine and clinked his glass against Greg’s.

“Everyone has their own hardships when they choose to make a certain decision. I won’t ask you about it, and I respect your choice as well. Come on, let’s not mention anything today. Let’s just talk about the old times. Let’s drink!”

Greg burst out into laughter and said, “That’s right, that’s my brother. Come on, let’s drink!”

Greg was trying to numb himself by getting drunk whereas Jasper had no choice but to accompany him. Both of them continued to drink and eventually finished the two bottles of Criucian wine.

Just as Greg began feeling tipsy, the door of the private dining room suddenly got pushed open aggressively.

Greg’s wife, Mary Wellington, stood at the door. She pointed a finger at Greg and began to scold him, “Greg Costa, I asked you to take care of our son and do the chores at home, but you’re out here drinking? You’re drinking so much in the morning, why aren’t you dead yet?!” she shouted.

“How dare you tell me that you’re busy and tired from doing housework everyday?! If I hadn’t walked by and seen your car parked at the entrance, I would’ve been fooled by you!

“How dare you drive out the car I bought for you and spend my money on alcohol?!”

Mary’s sudden appearance shocked Jasper and Greg.

Greg stood up. There was an unpleasant expression on his face. “My childhood friend is here. I was just greeting him. Don’t be so angry...” he stuttered.

Before Greg could finish speaking, Mary walked up to him and slapped him right across the face.

“Have you learned how to talk back to me? Childhood friend? What childhood friend? What kind of childhood friend would a useless piece of garbage like you have?”

As Mary continued rambling on, she glanced at Jasper in disgust. After noticing that Jasper was dressed plainly in clothes that did not seem to be worth more than 200 dollars, the disgust in her gaze grew more evident.

“Where’s this poor thing from? Do you want to borrow money from this useless man? I’ve seen plenty of people like you. Many of his poor relatives came over just to borrow money from him. Last time, his uncle came and told us how difficult his life was while crying out loud. How disgusting.

“Let me tell you this. I don’t care if you’re childhood friends or whatnot. Greg Costa doesn’t own a single penny. Everything that he owns, including his underwear, was bought with my money. Don’t even dream of taking a single penny from me!”

A slight frown formed on Jasper’s face. “You’re mistaken. We’re actually childhood friends. I just came over to reminisce upon the old times with him. I don’t intend to borrow any money,” he said in a frigid tone.

“Haha, you have no intentions to borrow money?” Mary said with a sneer, “A free meal and free drinks are a bargain as well, right?” she asked.

“Mary, things aren’t like that. Jasp isn’t that type of person,” Greg said while he resisted the pain flaring across his cheek.

“What type of person? What kind of friends can a useless piece of garbage like you have?” Mary said sarcastically.

“Don’t think I’m clueless about your intentions. Did you want to act like you were rich in front of your friend? Please get a grasp of reality. All of your money belongs to me. How dare a man like you who lives off his wife’s money act like you’re a big shot in front of your friend?”

Greg gritted his teeth and said in a heavy tone, "Yes, my relatives and friends are poor. They aren't as rich as those men of yours who are all allowed to hug you and touch you to their heart's content!"

As soon as he finished speaking, Mary's eyes widened as she stared at Greg in disbelief. The atmosphere within the room instantly grew heavier.

The next moment, the shrill scream of a woman rang out in the private dining room. The entire room was thrown into a state of frenzy.

Mary had exploded in a fit of rage.

Life at the Top Chapter 959

“Greg Costa, what do you mean?”

“What nonsense are you talking about? Are you saying that I’m fooling around with other men outside? Are you still a f*cking man? How dare you say that about me?!”

Mary Wellington’s high-pitched screams almost shattered the glass panels of the private room.

She panted heavily, her shapely chest rising and falling rapidly. She pointed a finger at Greg with her eyes rounded in anger. Her expression was so hideous it was almost distorted.

“Just look at you! You’re nothing but a wastrel of a kept man, eating and living off me! Even your pocket money is given to you by me! You’re only worthy of washing my underwear at home, cleaning the floor, and cooking. What else can you do?”

“You don’t have any capabilities but now you want to throw me under the bus, huh?”

“You wretched ingrate! Are you even worthy of being called a man?”

Mary’s finger almost poked Greg on the nose.

It was not apparent if it was because of the effects of alcohol or because of the long-suppressed anger that had reached the point of exploding, but Greg let out a furious roar.

“That’s enough!”

After all, Greg was a tall man of 1.8 meters with a burly figure, so his roar was enough of a deterrent.

Mary was taken aback by that yell, her screams and curses coming to an abrupt halt.

“I’m a f*cking kept man of yours, but so what? All these years, you’ve just been raising a dog. Even if I only wag my tail in front of you every day, I should still get some benefits, right? I deserve all of that!

“I’m a man. Don’t you think I want to go out and work? It’s you who looks down on me and refuses to let me out, incessantly saying that I’m your kept man. Your Wellington family is rich, the shipyard you established is very influential, and you have assets worth tens of millions. I’m not worthy of you, but does that give you the right to insult me like this?”

Hearing this, Jasper raised his eyebrows.

A shipyard?

There were only two shipyards in Brac County.

One belonged to him, while the other one was called Eastwind Shipyard. It would seem that it belonged to this Mary Wellington’s family.

As for the problems faced by his shipyard, the order was taken away by this Eastwind Shipyard. Right now, Lucas and the others were suspecting that Eastwind Shipyard had bought off some of their internal people which led to this mess.

It would seem that the waters ran deep here.

While Jasper was thinking about this, Greg was still talking.

“All these years, I’ve been working my *ss off for you. If you wanted to wash your feet, I’d carry a basin of water and wash them for you. I cut your toenails, I wash your underwear, and I’ve done all sorts of dirty things for you. I’m even more of a mother to you than your own mother, but how do you treat me?”

“Even if you yell at me the whole time, I can put up with it. Who told me to choose this path in the first place?”

“But how many men do you have outside? Do you really think I don’t know? I’ve seen six of them with my own eyes! Six!”

“There was that bald old man from three months ago. When you thought I was asleep, you took him to our wedding room for the night and I listened to it next door all night! That bald old man even took pills for it! You really aren’t picky at all, are you?”

“And that guy with a fat head and big ears just now. He’s old enough to be your father and the grease on his face can be used as cooking oil. He’s the big boss from Harbor City who you’ve been accompanying the past few days, right? He gave the Wellington family a big order and just look at you... You can’t wait to kneel at his feet and lick his toes. You slept with him too, didn’t you?”

“Now, I can even encounter a man who has slept with you before even if I just go out to buy a pack of cigarettes. Mary Wellington, don’t you find yourself dirty?”

A series of shouts from Greg made Mary turn pale.

It could be from shock or anger.

However, looking at her appearance, the latter was more likely.

At this time, Mary did not display any shame of being caught cheating at all. Instead, she cursed more vigorously, “Fine, I’ll go out on a limb today and just admit it to you. I’ve slept with many men, so what? Who told you to be so useless?”

“A capable man can find a wife and also keep a few outside. You’re not capable, so you can only watch your wife go out and find a new man every day!

“If you have the ability, why don’t you divorce me? I can kick you out of the house immediately. At that time, you’ll end up begging on the streets! I’ll see what you can do then!”

Mary’s words were like a knife that stabbed through what remained of Greg’s little self-esteem.

He gritted his teeth and stared at Mary with bloodshot eyes, wishing he could swallow this woman alive.

The anger made Greg’s body tremble, and he seemed to be trying desperately to restrain his impulse to explode completely.

Seeing Greg’s appearance, Mary sneered and crossed her arms while saying coldly, “You don’t dare to, right? I’ve already said you’re a man with no balls. You have the anatomy of a man but not the ambitions and abilities of a man. You’re already scared to death when you hear that I’ll kick you out of the house.

“Are you willing to give up that big house? Are you willing to give up that Audi? You’re not. I gave you all that. I can reward these things to a dog and I can take them back just as easily!

“So, you should just do your part properly. If you piss me off again, you can pack your bags immediately and f*ck off!

“Now, get your *ss back to your chores right now and don’t let me see you out and about with lowlifes again, do you hear me? Get the hell home now!”

Greg’s body trembled more and more severely, and he almost broke a tooth gritting his teeth so hard.

At this moment, he was in an unprecedented struggle.

He wished he could punch Mary on the cheek, spit in her face, and tell her that she was the one who should get lost.

However, he did not have the courage to do so.

Even so, for him to just give in like this, Greg was afraid he would die from anger.

Especially since all this was happening in front of Jasper, the childhood friend he cared about the most. Greg was not willing to let Jasper see his state now that was even more miserable than a dog's!

“Why are you still here? Have you drunk yourself silly? What a wuss!” Mary said coldly.

Amid Greg's rapid breathing, Jasper stood up.

“Greg, have a seat. We haven't finished drinking yet.”

Life at the Top Chapter 960

Initially, Jasper had no intentions to interfere in this matter.

That was because no matter how excessive Mary was, or how much Greg was suffering due to his weaknesses, this was the couple's domestic affairs.

As a bystander, it was hardly appropriate for him to say anything. No matter how close they were as friends, it was most taboo to intervene in the matters of other families.

Not to mention the relationship between Jasper and Greg. Although they practically grew up together, that was in the past, after all.

Although they were not as unfamiliar as strangers, they had each experienced different growth and changes. It would take some time before they could be as close as during their teenage years.

However, Mary's words and actions, combined with Greg's response, made Jasper unable to bear it any longer.

Regardless of anything else, just because he was suspecting that Mary Wellington was involved with the matter of his shipyard, made Jasper determined to get to the bottom of this.

As soon as Jasper spoke, Mary immediately gave him a sideways glance.

"Who are you? What gives you the right to speak here?" Mary sneered.

"I'm Greg's best friend. We're sitting here drinking and talking, but you started yelling the minute you stepped in. Have you never been properly educated since you were young?" Jasper responded.

Mary was furious and screamed, “Are you saying that I’m uneducated?!”

“It shows in your actions. Do I need to say it out loud? Or don’t you realize it at all?”

Hearing Jasper’s words, Mary was so angry that she could only say ‘well’ three times in a row.

She continued, “As expected of this lowlife you call your friend. Greg Costa, just look at the attitude of your friend. By hanging out with such a person, what else do you hope to achieve?”

“Are the clothes he’s wearing even worth more than 200 bucks? You can only find a little comfort in such poor people at the bottom of society, right?”

Greg’s face paled as he said, “I don’t need you to point fingers at my friend.”

Mary did not expect that Greg would dare to retort her, so she said angrily, “Well, you’ve learned to talk back now, haven’t you? I’ll show you!”

With that said, Mary raised her hand to hit Greg’s mouth, but this time, her raised hand was blocked by Greg.

“After all these years, haven’t you beaten me enough?” Greg stared at Mary as though he wanted to swallow her whole and said with ragged breathing.

Mary was frightened by Greg’s gaze.

She was a woman, after all, and Greg was a tall man. There was an innate difference in their physical sizes alone.

“You’ve grown some balls now, haven’t you, Greg Costa?”

Mary screamed as she acted like a shrew, frantically scratching Greg with her nails. "Do you want to hit me? If you have the guts, just try and touch me! I'll call my father and brother over to kill you right now!"

Greg stood on the spot like a puppet. Although furious, he had to suppress his impulse and allowed Mary to tear his clothes apart. Even his face was marked by scratches.

When Mary finally got tired of venting, a knock sounded on the door of the quiet private room from outside. It was followed by a man's voice that had a thick foreign accent.

"Mary, are you done with your business yet? We should return to the room."

When Mary and Greg heard this voice, both their faces changed.

Mary's expression was nervous but pleased at the same time, while Greg was absolutely livid.

It turned out that the fat middle-aged man with his arms around Mary earlier had been at the door all along, and Mary had come here with her lover!

Greg felt the utmost humiliation.

This matter hurt him more than ten slaps.

Life at the Top Chapter 961

“Coming,” Mary shouted at the door, her coquettish voice a stark contrast to the dominant attitude she normally used with Greg.

“Hehe, is your husband inside too? Let me meet him.”

The man outside spoke before directly opening the door himself.

Jasper and Greg watched as a chubby middle-aged man walked into the private room pridefully.

The man showed no reserve when he entered the room and directly reached out to pull Mary into his arms. Then he turned to Greg and Jasper, the former looking very embarrassed, and grinned playfully. “Which one’s your husband?”

Mary leaned against the man’s chest without protest and pouted before pointing at Greg. “This useless piece of trash over here.”

The man laughed out loud and stretched out a pudgy hand as he spoke to Greg, “So you’re Mary’s husband? Hello, I’m Baxter Daniels, from Harbor City. I assure you that your wife’s been very well entertained during her stay the past few days. I envy you, you know? Hahaha.”

With the way Baxter was acting, it was obvious that he had come here with the intention to humiliate Greg.

Baxter had his arm around Greg’s wife, yet he still took the initiative to shake Greg’s hand. Had it not been for Baxter’s shocking words, anyone who saw the scene would believe that Mary was actually Baxter’s wife instead of Greg’s.

A vein bulged on Greg's forehead as the man drilled his gaze into Baxter's suspended hand. Jaw clenched, Greg's stubbornness and dignity refused to let him shake the hand.

The urge to beat the adulterous swine before his eyes to death overwhelmed him.

Mary glared at Greg and shouted ferociously, "Don't you dare offend Mr. Daniels, useless trash! I'll divorce you right away if he ends up blaming me! I'll make sure you leave with nothing to your name!"

Mary then continued to speak without regard for anyone else in the room, "It's not like this is the first time I've cheated on you anyway. Just humor Mr. Daniels and shake his hand so we can all move on from this."

Anyone with morals or ethics should not have been able to say such a thing.

Yet, here Mary was, speaking as if she had done nothing wrong.

Baxter's hand remained suspended in midair. The man was not angry as he laughed out loud, "Exactly. We're in the same 'field' aren't we? My hands have spent a long time in your wife's arms; Shake it and you're indirectly touching her too. As men, we should always be more generous and open-minded."

'Gnarl gnarl...' This was the sound of Greg grounding his molars together.

His eyes were bloodshot and the man was shaking slightly. Greg balled his fists, feeling as if he were moments away from breaking down.

"I'm giving you one last chance, Greg. Shake his hand if you don't want me to chase you out of our home!" Mary shouted frantically and fiercely at Greg when she noticed Baxter's smile beginning to fade.

Greg's hand shook and it began to rise slowly. It seemed like Greg had caved in to his wife's demands.

“Greg, don’t make me lose respect for you.”

Jasper’s icy tone was heard from the side.

Greg’s hand froze midair as he turned to look at Jasper.

Greg’s eyes were a sight to behold.

Reddened with extreme anger and humiliation, the man’s eyes were teary as if he was forced to his limits, moments away from breaking down.

Mary’s expression grew cold and she shrieked at Jasper. “You have no right to join this conversation! You’d get lost if you know what’s good for you, or I’ll make sure you never leave Brac County alive! My mother’s family can get rid of you in Brac County at any moment, and no one will be able to find you!”

“Someone from the Zion family told me the same thing before, then the entire family ended up fleeing across the ocean.”

Jasper spoke indifferently before he walked over to Baxter.

Jasper pulled out his name card and placed it into Baxter’s hand, the same one that was suspended in midair waiting for Greg to shake it.

“Let me introduce myself. The name’s Laine, Jasper Laine.”

Life at the Top Chapter 962

“Jasper Laine? I can already tell that you’re a poor man from your name.”

Mary mocked him, “I can’t believe you made yourself a name card just because you saw other people doing it. Look at yourself in the mirror first. Who’d want your name card anyway? Save the money and use it to buy some proper clothes, would you?”

However, Mary had not noticed that next to her, Baxter froze upon hearing the name Jasper Laine.

While Jasper’s current status had yet to reach the point of being a household name, his name was no stranger among those of a high enough rank and influence.

This was no different for Baxter, the face of a large company in Harbor City’s transportation sector. Baxter was well aware that the Law family’s request was why his superior had even made an order with the shipyard all the way in Brac County.

As for who the Law family had made the request for...

It was none other than Jasper Laine.

As a mere representative, Baxter’s status had yet to reach the same heights as his superior, the Law family, or Jasper. Thus, he had no idea what Jasper’s identity implied.

However, Baxter understood that Jasper’s status put him on at least equal footing with his own superior, which meant that this was a formidable bigshot Baxter that could not afford to offend.

Sweat instantly began to bead over Baxter's forehead.

Internally, the man screamed, 'F*ck! Off all the people in the world, it had to be him!'

He shifted his gaze onto the name card in his hand.

It was a simple name card, one without dazzling decorations that covered every corner.

Jasper Laine, President of JW Capital LLC.

Below it was a personal contact number and a landline for his office telephone.

It was all written in simple Somerish, without any English translations that were prevalent in those days.

In an instant, the color drained from Baxter's face.

There were many Jaspers all over the world, yet there was only one JW Capital.

A metaphorical hand clasped over Baxter's throat as he wondered who had turned off the air conditioning in the private room. He started to feel short of breath.

"There's nothing wrong with being poor. What I'm looking down on is people like you who continue to act like you're dignified when you're broke as balls. Just like Greg, that useless filth. Take a good hard look at yourself before you start following other people and handing out name cards. Ridiculous."

Mary continued to mock Jasper.

However, in the next moment, Baxter removed his carefree hand from around her as though he had been electrocuted.

It was as if Mary, who was still prized goods moments ago, had turned into a disgusting pest.

Mary turned around to look at Baxter confusedly, only to be met with a chubby face frozen and devoid of color.

“What’s with all that sweat, Mr. Daniels? Are you feeling hot?” Mary asked curiously.

Baxter ignored her and smiled at Jasper dryly as he spoke, “I, Mr. Laine...”

Jasper interrupted Baxter indifferently, “Mr. Daniels, the owner was it?”

“No, no, I’m just an employee. There’s no need for such a title.”

Baxter was close to tears with how afraid he was. He was screwed to death of what would happen if Jasper discovered that he had told everyone he was the owner of the company just so he could look cool in the Mainlands and suck Mary and her family dry.

“Makes sense. After all, I don’t remember a Mr. Daniels owning Open Sea Shipping Transportations. Your superior should be Mr. Heath, right? How’s the old man doing?” Jasper asked with a small smile.

“He’s doing great, still strong and healthy,” Baxter wiped the sweat off his forehead and spoke.

“Mr. Heath’s growing old, and there are many responsibilities that he might have his subordinates take over. But I’m sure Mr. Heath only trusts intelligent people, wouldn’t you say so, Mr. Daniels?”

Baxter gulped and instinctively averted his gaze. He did not dare to meet Jasper’s sharp gaze as he replied, mouth dry, “Yes, yes, of course.”

“There’s something my friend and I need to talk about. If there’s nothing else, could you please bring this woman away while my friend and I converse with you, Mr. Daniels?”

Life at the Top Chapter 963

Mary almost laughed out loud at Jasper's words.

"Who do you think you are? You think that just because Mr. Daniels was polite to you that it means you can take advantage of him? 'Bring this woman away'? You really don't know when to stop, do you..."

"I don't know this woman!"

Baxter's voice rang out, cutting Mary off.

Mary was stunned.

For some unknown reason, she could not help but feel that Baxter was terrified of Jasper.

'That would be utterly impossible.

'Baxter owns of Harbor City's best transportation companies, Open Sea Shipping Transportations!

'But who is Jasper?'

Mary did not know the answer to that, but she was certain that Greg did not have any outstanding friends.

"I'll be leaving now, right now."

Baxter did not care too much, for all he wanted to do now was escape. He felt that the longer he looked at Jasper, the more danger he was in.

He knew that his life would be over if the news surrounding his solicitation with the Wellington family was brought into the public limelight.

Terrified, Baxter turned and ran.

Mary shouted and frantically followed after him, paying Greg and Jasper no attention.

The more she chased him, the faster Baxter ran in fear of Jasper realizing something.

Jasper's gaze in the direction of their retreating figures turned icy until the duo was nowhere to be seen.

Turning around, Jasper looked at an embarrassed Greg with renewed calmness and said, "Get a divorce, Greg."

Greg kept his head down but did not reply.

His mind was a mess and he did not realize many of the details earlier. Even if he did realize those details, he did not have the mental capacity to dwell on them.

Jasper pulled out a chair and sat down before he spoke, "You told me the same thing when I was still with Penelope. All I'm doing is repeating your word of advice. The two of you aren't the same type of people. She's not the one for you."

Greg let out a deep sigh and covered his face with both his hands. His dry voice drifted out from the gaps between his fingers.

"But what do I do now?"

"You f*cker."

Jasper was enraged by Greg's useless behavior.

Jasper grabbed Greg's hand and roared at him, "You have hands and legs, don't you? You're a man—there's no way you won't be able to make a living!

"Start from scratch if you have to, work for people, earn buck by buck. What is housing and cars for anyway? You are a man and if you can't move on from this, then I don't know how I'm supposed to f*cking respect you anymore!

"One word, Greg, one word is all you need. Tell me you're willing to walk out of this and I'll give you a new start in life!"

Jasper stared intently at Greg and spoke heavily.

At that moment, Greg had absolutely no idea what the implication of Jasper's words were. If word of this got out, it would surely cause an uproar.

Jasper did not offer this option because he was a saint, but rather that he was aware that Greg was a capable man. Greg had a lot of talent and courage when it came to managing an enterprise, and all he needed was an opportunity.

Jasper could not even save himself in his past life, so there was nothing he could do then. However, now he was capable of giving Greg the chance he needed.

"But if you can't move on, then forget it. You can continue wallowing in self-pity and not getting anything done. If that's the case, then I won't with you anymore either."

Greg looked like he was in pain after hearing Jasper's words.

Life at the Top Chapter 964

“Think about your son. Do you want your son to grow up and find out what kind of dad he has? A father that’s reduced to nothing but his mother’s dog, forced to take humiliation and to live in the shadows?”

Jasper’s words struck Greg like a bolt of lightning.

Greg’s head shot up and he stared at Jasper while replying, “No. I can’t let that happen.”

“Then make your decision now,” Jasper said.

Greg clenched his jaw and replied firmly, “Yeah, you’re right. Even if not for myself, I have to think of my son.

“I can’t let him learn that he has such a useless dad when he grows up. I’d rather tell him his mother died than let him know what kind of woman his mom actually is.”

“So make your decision.” Jasper clasped Greg’s shoulder.

“I’ll divorce her!”

...

At the same time, Mary was frantically trying to get Baxter to stay.

“Didn’t you say that you were staying for a few more days, Mr. Daniels? Why’re you in such a rush to return to Harbor City?”

Baxter was not in the mood for anything involving the alluring woman before his eyes, and he barked out irritably, "Don't think that I don't know what you and your family's intentions are. You just want me to sign the papers and give the order to you, right?"

"But I don't get to decide things like that. The company hasn't told me anything yet, and I don't want to stay here."

Mary's expression changed and she immediately replied, "You can't do that, Mr. Daniels. My family and I are already happy and ready to sign the contract. Not to mention that we've already done so much prep work for the order already. This is the last step. Didn't you say that it'd be fine?"

Baxter scoffed and replied, "It used to be fine, but at least take a look at who just arrived. There's no way I would dare to stick around while he's here—I'll be screwed if he found out about this."

"What person? There's no special person here." Mary was confused.

Baxter felt irritated as he saw the look of confusion on Mary's face.

He could not believe that he had slept with a woman that only had looks and no brains.

Had it not been for the fact that Mary was good in bed, Baxter would have cast her aside and left long ago.

"Good luck."

Then Baxter turned and left without looking back.

Mary grit her teeth in frustration as she watched Baxter leave.

The benefits, including her body, she had given him over the past few days were for naught!

“Baxter Daniels!” Mary shouted indignantly.

“I’ll report the things you did to your company immediately if you leave now! Worse comes to worst, we’ll go our separate ways! My family might not get your order, but you’ll be fired by your superior! Think carefully before you decide!”

Baxter’s expression changed drastically once he heard Mary say this, and he turned to glare at Mary. “Are you threatening me? How dare you threaten me, you b*tch!”

Mary spoke with a forced calmness, “I’ll stay with you if you’re willing to work with us and sign the contract. I’ll give you whatever you want, including the 500 thousand I promised.

“But if you leave now, then all the effort my family put into this will be for naught. Hence, you can’t blame me for threatening you. If anything, blame your own greed.

“Our plan would not have worked so smoothly if you didn’t agree to it.

“The company’s already requested for us to end the contract with that old Laine’s shipyard, and you’re about to sign the contract with us. Yet, here you are leaving. Tell me, how are we supposed to let you go just like that, hmm?”

Life at the Top Chapter 965

Baxter cursed in a rage, but he did not have any other choice.

He knew that the Wellington family would come after him if he left now.

The moment the company in Harbor City came to know of such news, he would be screwed.

Despite this, when he thought of Jasper, Baxter did not dare to stay either.

Caught between a rock and a hard place, Baxter truly understood what it meant to dig one's own grave.

Mulling over the thought, he replied darkly, "I'll go back to the company to speed up the process. With the company's agreement, I'll return to sign the contract immediately. We shouldn't see each other until then, so I'll be returning to the hotel now. Please wait for my message."

With that, Baxter left in a hurry.

Mary harrumphed as she watched Baxter leave and cursed him quietly, "Damn pig. I'd like to see how much longer you can keep this arrogant act up!"

Just then, Mary's phone rang.

Seeing that it was her mom, Mary accepted the call without further thought.

Before Mary could speak, a middle-aged woman's scream rang out from the speakers.

“Has Greg gone mad, Mary? That has to be it! Find a chain and tie him up if that’s the case, don’t let him hurt my grandson!”

Mary was shocked by what she heard and quickly asked, “What happened, Mom? Calm down and tell me slowly. Useless trash like Greg would never dare to offend you! What happened?”

“Never dare to offend me? He almost hit me just now! I was walking by your house and I decided to check in on my grandson, but who’d have thought that Greg, this mad dog said he wanted a divorce and was going to bring the child away... Come home now, I’ll call your brother. Greg’s got no respect for anyone now!”

The call ended immediately after this.

Mary was both shocked and angry at the contents of the phone call.

She was shocked that Greg dared to suggest a divorce and take the child, but angry about how ungrateful Greg was acting.

Even so, there was no point in saying anything now, so Mary immediately got into her car and made her way home without another word.

...

At the same time, in Greg’s home, Jasper was currently standing by the side with a cold look in his eyes while a woman in her fifties, with a bloated figure and covered with jewelry, pointed at Greg and scolded him.

“Who do you think you are, Greg? Ter is my grandson; He’s a Wellington! He has nothing to do with you, Greg Costa! You want to leave? Fine, get lost then! But there’s no way I’ll let you take Ter with you! I’ll kill you if you do!”

“You ungrateful b*stard! You’ve been living under our roof for so long, using our appliances, and eating our food, and here you are suggesting a divorce? Who gave you the right to ask for that? Huh? Even if you get a divorce it'd still be Mary divorcing you, not the other way around! Who do you think you are?"

Greg carried the wailing child in his arms and stared coldly at his mother-in-law that continued to shout and berate him.

At that moment, he suddenly realized how he had made the correct decision by listening to Jasper.

This divorce was long overdue.

He had spent the past few years enduring endless accusations and humiliation in this household.

Now, he was finally deciding that he would not endure such mistreatment ever again.

"I am Terrius' dad. Why can't I bring him with me? I don't care what you think, nor do I care who divorces who. It's not going to stop me from bringing my son with me, and I'm going to change his surname as well! He'll be a Costa, like me!"

Greg finally voiced out the words he had hid within him for years. Now that they were finally out in the open, he felt extremely relieved and relaxed.

Life at the Top Chapter 966

Greg was the only relaxed person in the room.

His mother-in-law standing in front of him was absolutely infuriated.

She was about to combust as the man she used to order around like a dog all these years shouted at her.

“Wow, what an ungrateful b*stard you are! You’re getting brave now, huh? After spending your days leeching off my family, now you’re even daring to talk back to me!”

She slapped Greg across the face as she spoke.

Greg did not hide nor protest as the loud slap echoed through the room upon contact with his face.

The silhouette of a palm was visible on his cheek, but despite this, Greg’s eyes were horrifyingly cold.

“I don’t even know how many of these slaps I’ve endured from you and your daughter over the years.

“Your family eats together, yet I have no right to eat at the table with you and can only eat in the kitchen with the maids. When you chat and laugh with each other, I also have no right to join in. All I can do is clean and do chores by the side.

“Even those maids get to clock out and rest, while I have to be ordered around for twenty-four hours a day!

“You hit and scold me regardless of the mood you’re in!

“I have endured all of this for years.

“But I am not going to anymore!”

Greg’s last sentence was essentially a roar.

One that stunned his mother-in-law.

As Greg had said, he had received all the mistreatment with quiet resignation. Even the Wellington family had gotten used to having someone they could order around endlessly.

However, Greg had argued with them today. He was fighting back.

This was something she could not accept.

Neither could Mary and the young man that entered the house.

“What the f*ck are you saying, Greg?! What’s with your attitude toward my mom?!”

Mary screamed at Greg.

The young man that entered the room with her also had a dark expression on his face. He glared coldly at Greg and said, “You have a death wish, don’t you Greg!”

“You two are finally here,” The woman shouted when she saw the duo, as if they were her saviors. “Come help me, Shaun. This b*stard almost hit me before you arrived!”

Shaun was enraged and he raised his hand to slap Greg.

“F*cking useless trash! How dare you hit my mom?!”

However, Greg grabbed Shaun’s wrist before the latter could slap him. He held the hand in the air and refused to let go of it.

“That slap your mom gave me is the last slap I’m ever going to endure. I will not let anyone slap me anymore!” Greg seethed.

Shaun struggled but realized that he could not pull his hand out of Greg’s grasp. Fear crept up within him and he spoke frantically, “Let go! Do you f*cking hear me?”

At that moment, Mary pounced over as well and began to grab and pull at Greg. “Let go of my brother! You’ve got no respect for any one of us now, do you?”

Greg scoffed and tossed Shaun’s hand aside before he turned to Mary coldly, “Keep pulling and I’ll hit you too!”

Mary stared at him in disbelief. “You wouldn’t dare! Go on, try it!”

Shaun roared fiercely, “Who the f*ck do you think you are? Go ahead and try it then!”

Slap!

A slap.

A loud resounding slap.

Sounds of slaps were common in this family.

Albeit all of them were given to Greg by the Wellington family.

This was the only slap Greg had given someone from the Wellington family.

Mary cupped her cheek and stared at Greg frightfully as if she did not recognize the man in front of her.

“You hit me! You actually hit me! How dare you hit me, you piece of trash?”

Mary shrieked crazily.

Both Shaun and his mother were stunned.

No one had expected Greg to hit her.

Greg stared at the family coldly and spoke, “I must’ve been crazy to endure this torture from your family for so long. I’ve decided that I’m not going to endure it anymore, so it’d be nice if you were more polite with me!

“Then again, I don’t care if you’re polite or not. It doesn’t matter to me anymore because I want a divorce, Mary! Right now!

“Like you guys said, everything here belongs to you. However, I don’t care about getting anything. All I’m bringing is my son Terrius!”

Mary looked at Greg in disbelief and shrieked, “You’ll be nothing but a lowly dog if you leave the Wellington family! You don’t even have a spot to beg at! You wouldn’t dare ask for a divorce!”

Mary was not reluctant about Greg leaving at all. She just felt embarrassed about the fact that Greg had suggested it first.

Her image would be ruined if word got out that Greg was the one who wanted to leave her.

Shaun looked at Greg coldly and sneered, “You really think you’re some sh*t, don’t you, Greg? The only divorce you’re getting is if Mary divorces you, not the other way around. You can dream on if you think I'll let you bring the child with you!

"You know exactly what the Wellington family is capable of here in Brac County! I'll make sure you don't get to see the sunrise tomorrow if you p*ss me off!"

"You think the Wellington family is above the law?"

Jasper's voice sounded out from the corner of the room.

Jasper walked over to stand beside Greg. Peering casually at the three members of the Wellington family, Jasper spoke in a calm tone.

"If you ask me, Greg should've divorced you long ago. Even I think a divorce is long overdue. All you people do is call him trash and threaten his life, aren't you... thinking a little too highly of yourselves?"

Mary glared at Jasper and screamed, "It's you! You're the guy! I don't know what you did, but Greg's been acting completely different since you arrived!"

"I don't care who you are, but I'm warning you: You'll die a tragic death if you poke your nose into the Wellington family's business!"

Shaun glared at Jasper darkly and spoke.

"I'm not interested in the Wellington family's business. However, if it involves my friend, there's no way I'm going to stand by and watch you trample all over him."

Life at the Top Chapter 967

Shaun and his family chortled at Jasper's claim.

"Where'd you come from, you weirdo? Acting like you're some bigshot. Who do you think you are?"

Shaun sneered at Jasper from the corner of his eye, his expression mocking.

"I really don't understand how there'd be people stupid enough to talk big when they can't even read the room."

Shaun continued to speak proudly, "I suggest you look at who you're talking to before you start acting like you're the sh*t. No one dares to talk to the Wellington family like that in Brac County!"

At the same time, Mary glared at Greg and said, "You better think carefully, Greg. Walk out this door now and I'll never let you back in even if you kneel and beg me.

"How stupid can you be? He just said a few things and you're already getting ready to leave. Have you ever thought about what you'd have left without the Wellington family? You'll have nothing without us! They wouldn't even employ you for construction labor because you'll cost them more to feed than you can give back!

"What can you even do, huh? Nothing! I'm telling you, without me keeping you alive, you'd die of hunger on the streets in one day!"

Greg looked at Mary coldly and snapped back, "I rather starve and die then!"

Mary did not expect Greg to be so firm in his decision. Having gotten used to Greg bending to her whims all the time, his stubbornness now had her grinding her teeth.

“No! You can’t get divorced!”

Mary’s mom suddenly spoke up.

“The Wellington family is prominent here in Brac County. We’ve already suffered enough shame when Mary got married to you back then. You’re telling me you want a divorce now that people have finally stopped mocking us? The Wellington family will be a laughing stock for the rest of our lives if news of this gets out!”

“People will end up speculating that the Mary Wellington got dumped because you grew tired of her! The Wellington family cannot afford to lose our reputation!”

Greg laughed out loud, his expression filled with disdain. “What reputation does the Wellington family still have anyway?”

“Everyone in Brac County knows that the Wellington family sells their women for business. You think I don’t know how you and Mary are the same? Like mother like daughter.

“The two of you gave yourselves to the Zions, the father and son duo, when they were still here just so you could continue to do business. Everyone in Brac County knows about this.”

Mary and her mother’s expressions changed at Greg’s words.

“You b*stard! Who let you say such things?” Mary screamed.

Greg sneered. “You had no qualms doing it, so why have qualms with me pointing it out?”

“I don’t care what you think, but this divorce is non-negotiable.”

Greg then lifted his son and motioned to leave.

However, Shaun stepped in front of Greg and spoke coldly, “Where do you think you are? You think you can cause a ruckus and leave just like that?”

“What do you want?” Greg demanded coldly.

With a chuckle, Shaun looked at Jasper and narrowed his eyes. “Weren’t you talking big just now, you brat? If you dare walk out of this door today, I can promise you that there’ll be two bodies floating in Brac County’s seaside tomorrow morning.”

“You’d go so far as to murder people?” Jasper chuckled.

Shaun laughed out loud and replied wretchedly, “Of course not. Murder comes with consequences. How could I possibly murder anyone?”

“But accidents are really prevalent these years. Who’s to say that we’re all safe from tragic accidents, hmm?”

At that moment, Jasper’s phone rang.

Jasper glanced at Shaun and accepted the call.

“Mr. Laine, it’s me, Lucas. We found the mole!”

“I’m listening,” Jasper replied.

“It’s an old employee who’s been working for decades in the Zion family’s shipyard. He’s a local and has been working in the shipyard for years, so he knows the place like the back of his hand.

“According to him, a Wellington family from Brac County sent someone to look for him. They had him work together with a group of other people to smuggle inferior-grade steel plates into the shipyard. They told him that the Wellington family would kill him if he didn’t cooperate.

“I’ve also dug up some info on this Wellington family, Mr. Laine, and it seems like they have a shipyard in Brac County too. These two had completely monopolized the shipbuilding industry in Brac County when the Zion family was still there.

“When you got rid of the Zion family, there was a void in Brac County’s shipbuilding market, Mr. Laine. The Wellington family decided to take the opportunity to develop further, and their ambitions grew.

“The main thing is that their reputation in Brac County...”

“I already know about that,” Jasper looked at Shaun as he spoke to Lucas calmly, “I’m well aware of what kind of people the Wellington family is.

“I’m at Pioneer Era Garden, Block A, Apartment 403. Bring him over.”

With that, Jasper hung up the phone.

“What are you doing this time? Who are you bringing over?” Shaun glared at Jasper and demanded darkly.

“You’ll find out very soon.”

Jasper glanced at Shaun before he turned to talk to Greg.

“Don’t leave yet. We won’t solve any problems if we leave now. Since the opportunity arose today, we might as well settle everything all at once.”

Jasper did not wait for Greg to reply before he pulled his phone out and made another call.

A moment later, the call connected.

“Mr. Heath, it’s me, Jasper.

“Haha, hello to you too. How’re you doing, Mr. Heath? Still healthy and strong?

“Yes, yes. About what happened that time, there’s been a misunderstanding. I would never lie to a friend.

“I must say, Mr. Heath, the person you sent over to Brac County is quite the character.

“What did he do? He colluded with someone and plotted against me. He lied to me and you, Mr. Heath.

“Sure, I’m in Brac County now. I’ll wait for him—he’ll know where I am.”

Jasper then ended the call and looked at Shaun. The latter seemed uneasy as Jasper said calmly, “You wanted to know who I was, didn’t you?”

“I can tell you now if you want. I was the one who sent the Zions packing. The Zion family’s shipyard is something I gave my parents so they could kill time. The order for the shipyard was something I got after I put in my name in Harbor City.

“In other words, you plotted with someone to frame my parents, then worked together with Baxter to create the perfect reason to reject the contract with my shipyard. You went through all that so the Wellington family would get the contract instead.

“It’s a good move, I have to admit. But did you ask for my approval first?”

Life at the Top Chapter 968

Jasper's words struck Shuan like a bolt of lightning.

The man looked at Jasper with eyes widened in disbelief. There was too much information contained in those few sentences.

"You crushed the Zion family?!"

"The Zion family's shipyard is yours?!"

"Who are you?!"

Shaun roared in both fear and anger.

At this moment, Mary also realized that something was wrong.

Not that she was willing to believe her gut, though.

"Don't listen to him, Shaun, he's just Greg's friend. Think about it, what kind of outstanding friends can Greg have? We'd have heard of him if he's as powerful as he claims, but we didn't. Moreover, why didn't Greg say anything about it before?"

"You know what kind of person Greg is. He's willing and happy to be ordered around as long as it means he'll have a roof over his head and food to eat."

Jasper glanced at Mary indifferently. He did not even have the mood to explain anything when it comes to women like this.

Despite this, Shuan was evidently panicking.

Unlike Mary, Shaun was the person in charge of the Wellington family's business. He knew the inner workings of the industry like the back of his hand.

Take the large company in Harbor City, for example. While Shaun had yet reached the level of importance to directly contact the owner of the company, he at least knew that the owner's surname was Heath!

This was something only people familiar with the industry knew.

Shaun was certain that Jasper had spoken the truth.

When he thought of this, Shaun began to tremble.

He was not the only one, for even Greg looked at Jasper in disbelief.

Greg had always seen Jasper as a rather introverted child from a poor family who did not know how to talk to strangers.

Greg liked to consider himself someone who used to have dreams and ambitions. He wanted to be a multimillionaire at a young age, but he did not remember Jasper ever having such dreams or passion. If anything, Jasper seemed the kind to be content with a peaceful and simple life.

Greg thought that people like Jasper were most suited for set office hours with a fixed salary. It was not a luxurious lifestyle, but at least it was straightforward, and he would not die of hunger.

The sudden turn of events suddenly reestablished Greg's understanding of the man. Ever since they had reunited, he had realized that Jasper's behavior was drastically different from how it had been in the past.

This confident and energetic man was glowing brightly from the inside out.

This was no longer the same Jasper he recognized back then; no longer the introverted boy that could not hold a conversation with girls and was too broke to fit in.

Soon enough, Lucas arrived with a large group of people in tow as he escorted a man past his fifties into the room.

Realizing that Shaun's family was also in the house when he arrived, Lucas was shocked for a moment before he chuckled coldly. Then, he walked over to Jasper and greeted the man courteously, "I've brought him over, Mr. Laine."

Shaun's expression sank completely at the greeting.

As his biggest competitor in Brac County, Shaun and Lucas had met multiple times. He also knew that Lucas was the actual manager of what used to be the Zion family's shipyard.

The old couple overseeing it were outsiders who knew nothing.

Lucas's courteous behavior toward Jasper instantly confirmed all of Jasper claims from before.

Jasper glanced at the man Lucas had brought over.

Life at the Top Chapter 969

Old and slouching, the man's expression was filled with fear and unease. It was a rather pitiful sight.

"What's your name?"

The man shivered and replied with a sorrowful expression and a heavy Brac County accent, "Dwight Hewitt."

"I won't waste time on unnecessary nonsense, and I'm sure you are well aware of what you've done. Take a look around the room, is there anyone here you conspired with?"

Shaun's expression darkened immediately at Jasper's words.

He glared at Dwight fiercely.

Just as the man looked at Shaun with hesitation.

"What're you looking at me for, old man? Watch your words, no one in Brac City would dare to frame me for something I didn't do," Shaun stated biting.

"Did I ask you?" Jasper looked at Shaun.

"Or is this the guilty talking?"

Shaun was enraged. "Who do you think you are? What does me talking have to do with you?"

"You'll know who I am soon enough," Jasper replied indifferently.

With that, he turned to Dwight and spoke, “The situation’s still classified as the shipyard’s internal affairs. You’re growing old and I’d like to believe you were coerced and didn’t have any other option. So, I’ll make you two promises.

“Promise number one, no one will be able to threaten you or your family’s safety after this is over.

“Promise number two, as long as you’re honest and willing to point out who the person is, as well as tell me the details of your conspiracy, then I will not investigate further nor hold you accountable.”

Holding Dwight captive had never been part of Jasper’s plan.

People like Dwight were too much of a small fry to be Jasper’s pawn, so there was no point targeting the man.

All he needed was to use this mole as a turn state’s evidence and expose the true culprit behind it all.

As expected, Dwight clenched his jaw after he heard Jasper, then pointed at Shaun. “It’s him, the general manager of the Wellington family’s shipyard. He was the one who found me and told me to cooperate with him. He said he’d give me 50 thousand if I brought his men to place a batch of materials in the shipyard’s warehouse area.

“Either I cooperate and take the 50 thousand, or I decline and he hurts my children!

“Mr. Laine, Mr. Wadler, I really didn’t mean to cause harm to the shipyard! I’ve been working at the shipyard for decades, I love that place. I... I’m a horrible excuse for a human being!”

Dwight began to slap himself harshly as he spoke, like he had found an outlet to vent his terror.

Shaun was utterly frustrated when he heard Dwight's accusation. He roared with fear and anger, "What kind of nonsense is that, old man? Do you want to f*cking die? I'll f*cking kill you the moment you walk out these doors, I'm telling you!"

"Who can you kill?" Jasper spoke unaffectedly.

"His confession was very clear, Shaun. What more do you have to say for yourself?"

Shaun seethed in place. Fright filled his eyes but he did not dare to say anything, for he was busy thinking of a solution.

At that moment, Mary stepped forward and pointed at Jasper's nose as she screamed.

"Who do you think you are? So what if you're the owner of some stupid shipyard? What can you do to the Wellington family anyway? Scams and lies are prevalent in all businesses. You have no one to blame when it's your incompetence that led to us getting the order instead!"

Jasper smiled. "So, following this line of logic, as long as your capable enough, anything you do is right?"

"Very well, then. Remember your words and don't regret it.

"I love showing people like you how capable I can be."

Life at the Top Chapter 970

As they were talking, a rather chubby figure rushed into the room.

This person was Baxter, who had sped over from the hotel.

His expression changed drastically when he realized that Jasper was there as well.

Shaun and Mary's eyes shone when they saw him. They were about to approach Baxter, only for the man to ignore them and make a beeline for Jasper.

Bowing courteously to the point that his head might as well be between his legs, Baxter spoke with a tremble in his voice and cold sweat drenching his brow, "Mr. Laine, please have mercy."

God only knew what Baxter had experienced.

Baxter was already frantic when he found out that Jasper had come over personally to deal with the issue. However, Mary had threatened him and forced him to stay in Brac County. Thus, Baxter had planned to wrap this up as fast as possible so that he could return to Harbor City, resign, and flee.

Despite this, about ten minutes ago, he received a call from his superior.

His superior, a man who liked to throw people that offended him into the ocean to feed the sharks, only said one thing.

"You cannot afford to offend Jasper, nor do I want to piss him off. If there's some kind of conspiracy behind this, then you better smooth it out yourself. Don't even think about coming back if you can't smoothen it out. Save me the effort, jump into Brac County's waters and kill yourself."

Because of this, Baxter knew his superior was irked.

He did not overthink it as Mary's threat was no longer important. With that, Baxter dashed over just so he could beg for Jasper's forgiveness as fast as he could.

Baxter had no idea what psychological trauma his actions had caused Mary and her brother.

From Baxter's current attitude, even an idiot could tell that Jasper was a formidable figure and someone that even Baxter, a man from a big company in Harbor City, did not dare to offend.

Let alone the Wellington family... Shaun and Mary exchanged a frightened look.

Jasper looked at Baxter and asked calmly, "Forgiveness? What did you do wrong that would require my forgiveness?"

Baxter wiped the sweat from his forehead. Understanding the meaning behind Jasper's words, he spoke with a sorrowful expression, "I'll tell you, I'll tell you everything.

"My mission was simple when I first arrived from Harbor City. The partnership was something my superior had already confirmed, so all I had to do was sign the contract on behalf of the company. It was just a formality.

"But Mary and Shaun suddenly found me at that time and they told me that they were willing to secretly pay me twenty percent of the value of the deal if I gave up the partnership with your shipyard and partnered with them instead.

"Then Mary stayed with me that night and I couldn't resist the temptation."

Baxter did not even look at the Wellington sibling's pale complexions as he continued to speak.

“However, since Mr. Heath was the one who decided on the partnership, I was in no position to change anything. So they came up with a plan. They said that they’d send a batch of inferior-grade steel plates over, and all I need to do is check the shipyard and point it out at the agreed time.

“I did as they requested and found the inferior-grade steel plates as promised. After this, everything else just fell into place.

“I told my superior about the situation and he decided to give up on the partnership. After all, it’s three shipments of 5000 tonnes—a contract involving tens of millions. My superior would be put in a tough spot if anything happened to those ships.”

Baxter watched Jasper’s expression carefully, but he could not read him at all.

Jasper’s expression was exceptionally calm, devoid of anger, shock, or surprise. It was as if he already knew everything from the start.

Life at the Top Chapter 971

“You have to believe me, Mr. Laine! This only happened because I gave in to temptations once, that’s it. I’d never dare scheme against your shipyard if not for this, Mr. Laine. This was all the Wellington family’s plan. They were the ones who tempted me to join them. This was all their idea!”

Baxter had completely sold the Wellington family out.

“Bullsh*t!”

Shaun’s mother shrieked, her expression harsh and sinister. “The Wellington family is a prominent entity here in Brac County, we would never do something so shameful! And what do you mean Mary stayed the night with you? You’ll pay for defaming my daughter’s name with your nonsense!”

Baxter let go of his inhibitions as well and spared her a glance before sneering.

“Where’d you even come from, old woman? Your daughter knows very well whether she stayed the night with me or not. And your son, her brother Shaun, sent her to my room himself. Why would I lie about that?”

“How about this, then? Your daughter has a red birthmark on her left buttock, correct?”

Mary was mortified and Shaun’s complexion paled. Meanwhile, their mother’s eyes grew wide and the blood drained from her face.

“Looks like it’s very clear now, then,” Jasper’s calm words cut through the silence like a hot knife through butter.

“Lucas,” Jasper called out.

Lucas immediately stepped forward and replied courteously, “Yes, Mr. Laine.”

“Have the shipyard inform all of the Wellington family’s raw material suppliers that no matter what price the Wellington family are offering, our shipyard is willing to pay 20% more to buy their raw materials; machine tools, steel, and the like.

“The only condition is that they are not allowed to supply the Wellington family a single gram of material. Contact Eastwind Shipyard’s employees and offer to hire with higher salaries. If they’re willing to join us, we’ll pay them an extra 30%.

“I’ll talk to other companies like Open Sea Shipping. From today onwards, the Wellington family will not be able to buy any raw materials or receive any orders.”

Jasper looked at the three despondent Wellingtons and spoke calmly, “This is what I’m capable of.”

Shaun felt a full-body shiver course through him and he roared at Jasper with reddened eyes. “Why?! Why did you have to destroy us?”

“Because you need to be taught a lesson,” Jasper replied.

Mary blinked in realization, as if waking up from a dream, and she pounced on Greg who had remained silent the entire time. She wailed.

“Greg, Greg, he’s your childhood friend, isn’t he? Aren’t the two of you best friends? Please, help me beg him! The Wellington family cannot end like this! Please! Think about the years we’ve spent as husband and wife.

“I’m sorry, I should’ve been better ever since the beginning. Give me a chance to make it up to you. I’ll be good to you in the future, I’ll listen to whatever you say. I won’t go out and cause trouble anymore. Please help me just this once, help me beg your friend for mercy.”

Greg stared coldly at the wailing and sobbing woman with makeup running down her face. Even so, his heart remained unfazed.

He thought that he would be thrilled at the prospect of taking revenge.

Yet, here he was, completely unfazed.

If anything, he felt tired, exhausted.

“Your family did this to yourselves, Mary. This has nothing to do with me, nor can I help you with it. I’m sorry.”

Life at the Top Chapter 972

Mary was in despair when she heard Greg's words.

"Do you have to be so heartless, Greg?"

Mary pointed at Greg, the pleading look on her face had now turned into one of disgust and resentment.

"You really are an ungrateful b*stard. I've kept you alive and well in my house all these years, I gave you a roof over your head and clothes to wear. But now you're just going to leave with someone just because they're stronger and more powerful?"

"No wonder you're so determined to sever ties with my family. You're a horrible excuse for a human being!"

The more Mary spoke, the angrier she became. "You really are a dog! Calling whoever gives you better sh*t your master!"

Greg sneered at Mary and replied expressionlessly, "So you admit that you've been giving me sh*t, huh? How long have you forced me to smell it?"

Mary's expression froze and she shrieked, "What are you saying, Greg?!"

"Those were your words, not mine. All I did was agree. That's what you wanted all this while, no? So why? What's so different today?" Greg spoke icily.

"Forget it, what's the use of all this noise? The Wellington family has no one to blame but your own misconduct. You think that just because you're somewhat rich and powerful that you get to stand above everyone? There'll only be richer and more powerful people in the outside world. A few calls were all it took for Jasper to crush you. What use is regretting it now?"

Mary's mom suddenly wailed, "God has forsaken us! What is this karma, why does something like this have to happen to us?"

Shaun asked sourly, "Is there no room for negotiation?"

"Did you give me room to negotiate back then?" Greg sneered.

Then, he turned to Jasper and said, "Let's go, Jasper.

"There's nothing worth staying for anymore."

Jasper nodded and prepared to leave.

Jasper's eyes fell on Mary and her despondent expression, and he suddenly halted.

"Do you agree to the divorce?"

Mary was stunned for a moment after hearing Jasper's question. She was about to say something instinctively but Shaun cut her off. "We agree!"

Shaun walked in front of Mary and spoke to Jasper politely and flatteringly, "They'll get divorced right now. No matter the conditions, as long as Greg asks for it, we'll agree to the terms."

"What if I want to change my son's surname to Costa?" Greg suddenly asked.

Shaun clenched his jaw and nodded. "Of course. You're his father, it's only right the child takes your surname."

“Are... are you crazy, Shaun? This ungrateful b*stard’s caused us so much grief and you’re still agreeing to his conditions?” Mary shouted.

Shaun glared at Mary and snapped frostily, “Shut up! Don’t talk if you don’t know what’s going on!”

“Disagree? What do you think is going to happen if we disagree? Did you forget what happened to the Zion family? They were much more powerful than our Wellington family when they were still in Brac County, but what about now? Do you see the Zions anywhere?”

Mary suddenly came to this realization, and she looked at Jasper in fear. She no longer dared to make a sound.

Looking at Greg, who was Jasper’s best friend, Mary felt true regret for the first time in her life.

Had she treated Greg better over the past few years, or at least treated him with basic respect, the sentimental man might never have suggested a divorce. With a best friend like Jasper, Mary would have been able to make a fortune as Greg’s wife.

The thought of this agonized Mary.

Jasper gave Lucas a look that signaled for the latter to wrap things up as he left the house alongside Greg.

Walking out of the estate, Greg suddenly stood in place blankly.

Jasper did not rush him either, as he waited silently by the side.

Life at the Top Chapter 973

Greg carried his son in one hand while he pulled out a box of cigarettes and passed a stick to Jasper.

With that, the two grown men smoked by the entrance of the estate while one of them carried a child in their arms. It was a weird sight.

“So, what’s next?” Jasper asked.

Greg smiled wryly and replied, “I haven’t thought about that much yet. All I want to do now is say goodbye to the past now that it’s finally over.

“As for what comes next... I’m not sure yet.”

Jasper glanced at the heavily asleep child in Greg’s arms and replied, “Pull yourself together, do it for you or the child in your arms.”

“Don’t worry, I won’t keep wallowing about,” Greg looked at the child in his arms adoringly. “He’s my source of hope now. For him, I’m going to work hard and live my best life.”

“That’s good.” Jasper nodded.

He could very well give Greg millions of Somer Dollars and promise the man a comfortable life until he died.

However, this was not how Jasper liked to do things.

More often than not, the path to self-destruction began when someone suddenly received a large sum of money.

Greg had just come out into the light after several years living in the shadows; Now, he needed some time to get used to it.

“You’re rich, aren’t you? Greg turned to look at Jasper.

Jasper smiled and replied, “I’m comfortable.”

“Now that I look at it, that’s your car, no?” Greg pointed at the Bentley Julian drove over that was now parked not too far away.

“I remember laughing at you for looking at luxury cars.”

Jasper smiled. “That is my car.”

Despite his prior suspicion, Greg still gasped when Jasper admitted it.

The Wellington family was considered the wealthiest family Greg knew. Yet, not even they could afford a Bentley.

Perhaps they could afford one, but they might have had to sell two houses to fund it, and their cash flow would be tight after the purchase.

Luxury cars that ordinary people dare not dream about and the Wellington family could not even afford seemed like nothing to Jasper.

“I want an opportunity, Jasper.”

Jasper replied when he caught sight of the burning passion in Greg’s eyes, “I’ve been waiting for that. So, how can I help you?”

“I don’t need cash, nor do I need any high-ranking position. Let me work my way up from the most basic ranks in your company.

“Be it door-to-door advertising or sales, I’ll do anything there is. All I want is a platform, an opportunity! You know how difficult it is for people with a high-school diploma like me to seek out work in big companies.”

Jasper frowned slightly and said, “It’s not easy in the sales industry, though. There’s a lot of pressure and it’s tough work.”

Greg chuckled and replied, “What I’ve been through over the past few years was tough. Everything else pales in comparison.”

Jasper nodded. He was pleased by Greg’s clear cognition of reality and himself.

“Alright, then. You can seek me out at anytime in Nauritus City, and I’ll find you a job. I’ll say it now, I can lend you money if you ask, but everyone is equal when it comes to work. I’m not going to treat you differently just because you’re my friend.”

Greg laughed out loud. “Don’t worry. I’m not going to tell other people that my boss is my best friend even if I end up working at your company. I’ll prove my own capabilities!”

Greg’s smile was lighthearted and refreshing, like a rainbow after the storm. It was a touching sight.

Life at the Top Chapter 974

Jasper pulled Greg, now free from his emotional turmoil, into the Bentley.

“I’ll be leaving for Nauritus tomorrow. Are you coming with me?” Jasper asked.

Greg gave it some thought and said, “I still have a few things to deal with, so you can go back first. I’m not planning to go straight to Nauritus either, but instead head back home for a bit. Thought I’d go pay my parent’s graves my respect, you know?”

“I’m ashamed now that I think about it. It’s only a few hundred kilometers away, but I’ve never gone back ever since I came to Brac County.

“I’ll start anew in Nauritus City once I’ve wrapped everything up here.”

“Alright. Contact me when you arrive, then.” Jasper pushed his name card into Greg’s hand.

“I will. Where are we going now?” Greg asked curiously.

“To visit my parents,” Jasper said with a smile.

Once they returned to the shipyard, Charlie and Sally chatted with Greg when they saw him.

The two were childhood friends, after all, and the Laines was close with the Costas. Not to mention that Charlie and Sally sympathized with Greg after he had lost his father at a young age.

Thus, it was only natural that they engaged in small talk when they met again. Sally soon asked Greg how he had been lately.

Greg did not say much, but he explained that he had gotten married and divorced when he realized that the relationship was not working out. Therefore, it was just him and his son now.

The topic once again evoked Sally's sympathy.

However, Jasper was acutely aware that his parents especially loved Greg's son.

"Oh, look at his little face. He looks just like Greg when he was a child. Look at his small hand and his soft cheeks. So adorable."

"He even smiled at me." A rare smile appeared on Charlie's face where he stood by the side.

Greg smiled. "Have Jasper give you a chubby little grandchild while it's still early, then."

"Exactly my thoughts. Wouldn't it be great if he let me take care of his children now while I can still move about? But you know what he told me? He told me he's still young and he doesn't want kids yet."

Sally must have been bottling this up for some time as she began to vent the instant Greg brought up the topic.

At that moment, Sally looked at Jasper, who had an awkward expression on his face. "You're not so young anymore, you can't possibly make Wendy follow you around aimlessly like this. Think of her, at least. I've talked to your dad about this, so if you two are ready, just confirm your relationship and get it over with.

"Wendy's dad's an understanding man so I'm sure he'll get it. You can have a child first if you don't plan to get married so soon. That's what's popular among you youths nowadays, is it not?"

Jasper felt extremely lightheaded.

He had not even thought about marriage yet, let alone having children.

Considering the current situation, Jasper was not planning to have children anytime soon.

His business was still fresh and there was no strict schedule for when he had to fly internationally. He would have to leave the country a lot in the future, and if he had a child, it would feel like he was torn between two worlds.

“How old do you think I am, Mom? Moreover, the two of you are still young, so it’s far too early to have those kinds of thoughts. Give it at least another two years,” Jasper said exasperatedly.

“What do you mean how old? You’re in your twenties! I won’t compare you to random strangers, but look at Greg! He’s the same age as you and his child is already this big! You’re telling me you’re not in a rush?” Sally said impatiently.

“Okay, okay, fine. But this isn’t just about me, I’ll talk to Wendy about it when I get back, okay?” Jasper decided to placate them for the time being.

Life at the Top Chapter 975

Sally's expression brightened at Jasper's reply. "That's more like it."

With that, Sally then looked down and continue to play with the child in Greg's arms. A smile immediately bloomed on her face. "Oh, the more I look at his small face the more I like him. Come on, smile for grandma."

"Stay for dinner, Greg. Sally and I are going out to get groceries later, and we three men can have a few drinks tonight," Charlie told Greg.

Greg replied happily, "Sure, sounds good."

As the older couple entertained the child, Greg walked over to speak to Jasper.

"When they said Wendy... it couldn't have been the Wendy Schuler, right?! The Queen Bee from high school, the prettiest student in our county's number one senior high?" Greg asked Jasper impatiently.

"Hehe," Was all Jasper replied with.

"That's so cool, dude!" Greg nudged Jasper. "You've succeeded in both love and business. Not bad to have succeeded in convincing Wendy to be your girlfriend. Our ex-classmates jaws would drop if they found out about this."

"We can all get together for a reunion after you arrive in Nauritus, then," Jasper said gleefully.

"Sure. I don't know her too well, but she's left quite a good impression on me.

“I was the only one in the entire school who talked to you back then, but she treated everyone the same. She didn’t look down on you because you were poor and that alone is enough for me to support your relationship,” Greg spoke.

“On the topic of Wendy, I think she’s told me once that she hates people like you the most,” Jasper taunted gleefully when he was reminded of the funny incident.

“Hate me? Why? I didn’t even talk to her throughout the three years in senior high. How can she hate me?” Greg was speechless.

“Probably because you’re handsome and there were tons of girls following you every day. She said playboys like you aren’t serious with anyone.” Jasper laughed out loud.

“She was right about the handsome part, though.” Greg touched his nose. Seeing Jasper laugh out loud, he suddenly joined in.

Having a handsome face paid off when they were young and dumb, but now that everyone had grown up and experienced the ruthlessness and tribulations of society, they understood that a man’s appearance did not matter.

Jasper was relatively handsome, with an introverted and gentlemanly character that gave him a unique charm.

Coupled with his successful career, he walked with the air of confidence and maturity that gorgeous but unsuccessful men could not hold a candle to.

If a woman had to choose between Greg and Jasper, they would most likely opt for the latter.

“There are wonderful girls all over the world. You can always slowly reenter the market once you’ve moved past this experience. Your son will need a motherly figure, and there’s no reason for you to spend the rest of your life alone,” Jasper spoke seriously.

“Maybe another time. I don’t think I can consider dating for the time being.” Having just walked out from Mary’s shadow, Greg did not want anything to do with relationships at that moment.

Charlie and his wife filled the table with food that night. Sally truly loved the child, so she only had a few bites of food before she went off to spend time and take care of him. This left Charlie, Jasper, and Greg to drink and chat about the past. It lasted late until around eleven o’clock.

After sending a tipsy Greg to the lobby of a nearby hotel, Jasper decided that he would return to spend the night with his parents and leave the day after. However, he received a call and was forced to return to Nauritus City overnight.

It was a call from Wendy.

She said that an average-looking man had come to the company for investment because he wanted to create the largest sourcing website in the world.

A website that would allow all the enterprises in the world to source goods directly through the website instead of commissioning salesmen. The website would also allow enterprises to contact their suppliers directly and thus completely change the way people did business.

Wendy first wondered if she was speaking to a madman, but then she realized the potential in the man’s plan. Not to mention, Jasper had once told her to contact him right away if a rather ugly man with such an idea and the surname Marlon ever came knocking at their doors.

That night, Jasper’s wait, both for this phone call and man in question, finally paid off.

Life at the Top Chapter 976

Twenty years into the future.

There would be three familiar Somer billionaires.

The country's grandfather, who started with the small goal of one hundred million.

Wayne Marlon, who was disinterested in money.

Hudson Moore, who preached that the way to grow stronger was by topping up money.

The latter two were known as the country's dads, and both their surnames started with the letter M.

Among the three, the country's grandpa was a truly grandiose man.

Hudson was the most low-profile and vigorous.

While Wayne was a true miracle.

Wayne was a mere teacher who graduated from the teaching academy, yet he had managed to persuade 18 others to found a company with him.

The company was first founded in an apartment in a normal suburban district.

No one had expected that this 19-employee company with no money would one day prove Wayne's predictions right, as it changed his countrymen's lives.

Now that one thought about it, perhaps not even Wayne believed his prediction would come true.

Among all the billionaires, Wayne was certainly not the most capable person nor was he exceptional when it came to doing business. Even so, this man had a mouth that could obtain the impossible and a top-notch strategic vision that ordinary people could never hope to possess.

While Jasper was still trading mung bean futures and gathering his first bucket of cash, he had come up with a structure for his future business.

Once he was certain that he would rely on investing and holding companies instead of day-to-day trading, he established Hudson and Wayne as his main pillars of business and wealth.

Hudson fell under his influence a long while back, but he had been waiting for Wayne all this while.

Wayne and Hudson were completely different people, so Jasper had to deal with them differently.

He could take the initiative with Hudson since the man was rather introverted and passive, but Wayne was completely different. Jasper could not make the first with Wayne, so the only option was to wait for Wayne's arrival.

Otherwise, Jasper would lose the initiative, which something extremely important in a business negotiation.

Thus, Jasper waited, like a patient hunter, up until that day.

Rushing back to Nauritus City under the glimmer of countless stars, Jasper arrived home at close to two a.m.

The two seemed to have a tacit understanding, for they knew they would meet the other tonight even without any prior contact.

With that, Jasper and Wayne met at the entrance to the pitch dark office.

“My apologies for making you wait, Mr. Marlon. I was still in Brac County when I was informed of your arrival. It took some time to rush over.”

Wayne was pleased with Jasper’s politeness.

“No, it’s my fault for coming unannounced. I’m sorry to bother you so late at night, Mr. Laine.”

The two shook hands. Jasper glanced at Wayne and suddenly laughed, realizing how the term ‘average-looking’ was a compliment to the man’s appearance.

For Jasper remembered how he used to be Wayne’s website’s diamond VIP his past life, and how he had spent a lot of money on it every year buying outfits for Penelope.

This was especially true during Valentine’s day, when he and the rest of the men around the country would curse Wayne out, only to weep silently as they checked out their wife’s shopping cart.

“Are you laughing at how ugly I am, Mr. Laine?”

Wayne was a man who knew how to read people, and the room. He could tell from Jasper’s age and attitude that Jasper was not one of those stern man that did not smile. Thus, Wayne immediately cracked a joke to get close to him.

Life at the Top Chapter 977

“You kid, Mr. Marlon. Who is this?” Jasper waved him off and turned to look at the young man standing silently beside Wayne.

“Jose Salazar, Abbylon Inc.’s current CFO,” Jose introduced himself to Jasper politely, oozing with an air of intellect and strength.

Jasper smiled and shook hands with the Abbylon Group’s greatest hero and said, “It’s nice to meet you.”

If one were to mention Abbylon Inc in the future, one would immediately think of two people. Wayne Marlon, and Myles Shon.

Wayne was the founder of Abbylon, while Myles was the President of Softwin Investments who invested the first large sum to kickstart Abbylon.

This was a relationship between an investor with a keen eye and a promising entrepreneur.

However, everyone seemed to have forgotten that Jose also played an important role in developing Abbylon. Hailing from a family of lawyers in Nawait, Jose graduated from one of the top ten universities in the world and obtained a bar license in New York.

It could be said that Abbylon had it only grown to be as successful as it was because of Wayne and Jose.

This was why Wayne entrusted Jose with the position of Abbylon’s first chief financial officer, CFO. JW Capital’s own CFO was Wendy, which was a testament to how important the financial officer was to a company.

Jose was also the reason behind Abbylon adopting the framework of a more modern enterprise at the very beginning.

“I’ve heard of you, Mr. Salazar. I heard how you gave up the annual pay of 700 thousand US Dollars for Abbylon’s monthly salary of 500 Somer Dollars,” Jasper said with a smile.

Jose and Wayne were shocked that Jasper knew of such a thing.

“I’m impressed by Mr. Marlon’s charisma,” Jose nodded with a small smile.

Jasper immediately gave up on the idea of pulling an outstanding man like Jose over to his company when he saw the latter’s expression.

Some people and things were meant to be. Jose and Wayne, for example, were fated to be partners which no one could pull apart.

Not that it mattered though. With Wayne under JW Capital, Jose would technically be working for Jasper too.

“It’s the middle of the night, so let’s not stand by the doors. Come on, we’ll talk inside,” Jasper invited the two into the office.

Instead of using the company lobby, Jasper made a beeline for his own office.

There was no way any employee was still working at this hour, so Jasper made the two tea himself.

After sitting down, Jasper did not waste any time as he began to read the investment report that Wayne had handed in in advance and which Wendy had placed right in the middle of his office desk.

“You require a financing of 500 million, right, Mr. Marlon?”

Jasper raised an eyebrow and glanced at Wayne when he read the financing request on the first page. He asked this with a subtle smile.

Wayne immediately replied with confidence, "Mr. Laine, you'll earn at least ten times this amount."

"Should we do a VAM then?" Jasper asked.

Wayne was instantly embarrassed.

He had persuaded countless people before, and even Softwin's Myles Shon had ended up investing 20 million US Dollars after his sales pitch. However, Wayne had never met someone like Jasper, who acted so unexpectedly.

Everyone could tell that he was bluffing, but there was no way a founder would first trash-talk his own company when he was asking for investments.

When Jasper suggested a VAM, Wayne realized that there was nothing he could respond with despite his arsenal of speeches that he had prepared beforehand.

"Mr. Laine, I believe you can take a look at our company's situation first before we discuss further," Jose chimed in understandingly.

"With Abbylon Inc.'s current situation, we fulfill the legal conditions for a VAM."

Jasper chuckled and said, "As expected, Mr. Salazar. Being brought up in a family of lawyers makes you rather different. Going straight to legal terms, I see. Alright then, let me take a closer look."

This was a small win for Jasper in his first clash with Wayne.

Life at the Top Chapter 978

A business negotiation, especially those involving equity, was a harsh battle between decision-makers of both parties from the moment they locked gazes.

After all, any change in percentages of shares held or investment quota during follow-up negotiations would involve astronomical prices. This was not a business transaction involving a few dozen or hundred bucks, but rather tens of millions.

Especially in large mergers and acquisitions cases, in which tens of billions of US Dollars were involved.

Such affairs could not be treated carelessly.

It was a good sign if Jasper had managed to suppress Wayne's overwhelming aura right at the start.

Upon reading the entire company evaluation report, Jasper also realized that history had not changed too much. Not when it came to Wayne or Abbylon, at least.

Wayne was still catering to small and mid-sized enterprises, trying to make his dreams of a global sourcing website a reality.

"The main idea of my 8861 website is to create a platform for wholesalers on the internet. Here, suppliers from all over the world can showcase their products, and other enterprises or customers can purchase straight from the source, or sell their own goods according to their needs!

“This project will solve the issue all SMEs have with sourcing and selling goods, and this function will have the platform widely welcomed by all enterprises of all sizes.

“To tell you the truth, we already have 800 thousand members on our website and I’m sure we’ll reach 1 million by the end of the year.”

Jasper nodded as Wayne spoke.

‘Indeed. According to history, 8861 will gain 1 million members a little later in the year.

‘But so what?’

‘History will also prove that 8861 is at an innate disadvantage.’

“So, you’re telling me that since large enterprises have their own branding and specific sales channels, they won’t share this issue that SMEs are actually suffering from. Therefore, you want to create an information platform whereby everyone can share their data and people can simply take what they need.”

Wayne replied excitedly, “Yes, exactly. You’re as smart as I thought, Mr. Laine. You immediately understood what I meant.”

Giving a short laugh, Jasper put down the document and sipped his tea before he spoke, “Let’s not talk about the problems your website has yet, Mr. Marlon. Let me ask you instead, do you know that I own the country’s largest internet companies, Sena and Terizone?”

Wayne nodded. “I do. You’re the most capable man when it comes to the country’s dot-com enterprise, Mr. Laine. That’s why we came to look for you.”

“You’re too kind, Mr. Marlon, but the country is filled with promising talents, and I wouldn’t dare call myself this so-called ‘most capable man’.”

Jasper smiled and continued, “What I’m trying to say, Mr. Marlon, is if I have either Sena or Terizone create a similar website tomorrow, how long do you think it’ll take before 8861 starts losing money?”

When they heard that, both Wayne and Jose’s expressions changed dramatically.

Sena had full market control of the country’s online games and web portal, while Terizone had millions of email subscribers and tens of millions of subscribers.

Even Wayne and Jose were subscribers to Terizone’s KK.

If those two companies were to replicate 8861’s business model, then 8861 would certainly fall in less than three months.

After all, there was just too big a difference between them. 8861 could not even hope to compete.

Life at the Top Chapter 979

“Mr. Laine, 8861 caters to SMEs. When it comes to Sena or Terizone, their users are ordinary netizens. They are simply not the same target audience,” Wayne spoke.

Jasper chuckled and targeted Wayne’s straw man without hesitation.

“If your members know of 8861 and have gone online to use your website for business, Mr. Wayne, then who’s to say that these enterprise owners or senior executives are not also Terizone’s email subscribers, KK users, or Sena’s gamers?”

Wayne’s expression turned stern and he gestured as he spoke, “8861 is advantageous because it is irreplaceable.

“That is merely the result of being early movers in a market in which you are still gathering users. In reality, these so-called advantages are merely a facade.”

Jasper leaned back against his chair and looked at Wayne. “I heard that you’re a fan of fairytales, and that you like referring to each other as sirs and knights within the company.”

“Therefore, I’m sure that you’re no stranger to the battles between knights and dragons. It’s only a battle of skills when its a fight between people of similar strengths. Am I wrong?”

“Mr. Laine,” Jose cut Wayne off and spoke, looking at Jasper seriously. “You also said that there’s problem with 8861. Could I ask what this might be, other than the fact that it’s easily replaceable?”

“Its business model,” Jasper replied straightforwardly.

“Enterprise to enterprise, or the b2b model in e-commerce terms. This model isn’t horrible, but there’s an innate problem with it. This model makes your website a platform instead of a channel, in which there’s no clear boundaries for the suppliers and their customers.

“Say, for example, that my enterprise is focused on selling lathes, and I paid your company’s membership fee so that I can partner with a machining company. Two years later, that company and I will already have experience partnering together, yes? So pray tell, why I would want to continue paying for my membership?

“At the moment, your only source of income comes for membership fees. But after paying you once, your members will be able to find their own groups of suppliers or customers. Your members won’t need your website anymore once they’ve used it to source their own channels.”

Wayne smiled wryly.

He did not expect a script that took him only 15 minutes to persuade Myles crumble completely in front of Jasper.

Wayne thought about how he had dragged Jose to wait with him at the entrance for five to six hours just for this opportunity. They had waited for Jasper until the early morning only to come out empty-handed. Because of this, Wayne suddenly felt the urge to leave.

“I take it that you’re not willing to invest then, Mr. Laine?” Wayne asked in disappointment.

“I’m willing.”

Jasper caught them off guard and reignited Wayne and Jose’s embers of hope.

Jasper smiled at how his words controlled the duo’s emotions. “Instead of investing in 8861, I’d like to invest in Abbylon Inc.”

Jose frowned at Jasper's request.

While Wayne stared intently at Jasper, as if he wanted to pierce through the latter and stare straight into his soul.

"I don't understand, Mr. Laine. 8861 website is the only business Abbylon Inc. has right now," Jose spoke curiously.

"Change your business model. Make it B2C instead of B2B so it's direct-to-consumers. This will significantly change the way people carry out lifestyle shopping in this country, and even the entire world." Jasper stood up and spoke excitedly.

Wayne looked at Jasper as if the latter was a ghost.

Life at the Top Chapter 980

Strictly speaking, Wayne's road to success was not a smooth-sailing one.

He had tried his hand at entrepreneurship thrice before Abbylon Inc., making the latest company his fourth try at being an entrepreneur.

While the previous three tries were not complete failures, he had not made much money either.

Even his fourth enterprise, Abbylon Inc, had first gone through a failed project—8861. Only after this did they dabble in online shopping for individuals.

From this came the renowned TH website.

In truth, Wayne had also spotted the problems Jasper had brought up beforehand thanks to his strategic vision.

However, 8861 was the only mature and operating platform Abbylon Inc had at that moment. If he wanted to get rid of that to focus on a shopping platform for individuals, the market might not be ready to accept his idea, and all the hard work and effort his company's employees had put in thus far would all be for naught.

Not to mention, this shopping platform for individuals was still a muddled concept in Wayne's head. He had yet to perfect its structure or refine the details.

Hence, when Jasper spoke about it, Wayne was overcome with excitement, as if he had met his other half.

'So I'm not crazy. He also thought of it.

‘At the very least, I’m not the only crazy person here.’

“You really think that’ll work?” Wayne asked excitedly.

Jasper nodded and replied with certainty, “It will!”

“I’ve thought of it before, but the costs to shift to this business model are too high,” Wayne frowned as he spoke.

“Mr. Marlon, success doesn’t come without good reason. You’re going to have to pay the price if you want to succeed in this world,” Jasper spoke calmly.

“Perhaps you’re right.” Wayne looked deep in thought.

Jose looked at the other two in disbelief and rasped out, “Have the both of you gone mad? We were just talking about investments. How’d we even get to the topic of changing the entire company’s operational strategy? Mr. Marlon, Softwin will never agree to this.”

Wayne immediately frowned.

Softwin currently held more than 40% of Abbylon Inc’s shares. Without their approval, Abbylon could not execute their ideas.

“On that topic, there’s something else I’d like to talk to the both of you about,” Jasper began with a subtle smile.

The main reason Abbylon would fall prey to criticism in the future was the fact that Softwin, a Sunriser investment bank, was a major stakeholder. This angered their countrymen, as they felt that a Sunriser’s involvement made Abbylon less of a Somer enterprise.

However, Jasper was well aware that this was normal financing In the business world. It was not as big a deal as certain people made it out to be.

Still, now that the opportunity had presented itself, Jasper refused to yield such a huge source of income to a Sunriser.

Abbylon would end up larger than Terizone in the future. More importantly, Abbylon's business would be directly linked to the daily lives of civilians and completely integrated with how society's day-to-day functioning.

Terizone was just a social networking and gaming company. It was incomparable to Abbylon in terms of their importance to society.

Softwin's investment in Abbylon was the primary reason why they had been able to survive the future financial crisis, which ended up making Abbylon Inc a company that investors all around the world desired.

Because of this, Jasper had to kick Softwin out of the picture no matter what.

"I can invest as much as you wish, without limit. But my only request is that you remove Softwin from your list of shareholders."

Jasper's words had Jose immediately wondering if the man was crazy.

Meanwhile, Wayne's brows were tightly knitted.

Life at the Top Chapter 981

Regardless of what the two wished, Jasper's request was extremely difficult to fulfill.

"Mr. Laine, we've accepted 20 million US Dollars worth of investment from Softwin. They've financed us three times in total, and they hold 41% of Abbylon's shares. I'm afraid that your request is unrealistic," Jose said.

"You'll only know if it's realistic once you try. Moreover, wouldn't it be more trustworthy to work with a fellow Somer descent as compared to a Sunriser?" Jasper asked.

Jose frowned and said briskly, "Mr. Laine, nationality doesn't matter in the business world, and capital is international."

"I understand where you're coming from, Mr. Salazar. After all, you were born in Nawait and you grew up overseas. It's only normal that you are more progressive."

"But you must understand that while capital is international, capitalists are not. Especially not with Somerland. There are some things we should not forget. If everyone was equal, then how do you explain the capital and technological blockade other countries have imposed on Somerland?"

Jose was about to argue when Wayne pulled him back.

"Jose, you might not know about the situation in the country since you grew up overseas, but Mr. Laine is right about this."

Jose shook his head after listening to Wayne and replied, "Alright. But even then, how are we supposed to remove Softwin as a shareholder? It's impossible."

Wayne looked at Jasper and said, "It's getting late, Mr. Laine, so we won't delay your rest any longer. We need to give this some thought and discuss it with everyone else as well. Perhaps we could talk another time."

Jasper got up and replied, "Then we'll stay in contact. I await your good news."

Wayne nodded. He shook Jasper's hand and left with Jose in tow.

Jasper stood by the office's entrance and watched as Wayne and Jose's figures vanished into the night. His brows remained furrowed the entire time.

"Should we return as well, Jasper?" Julian's voice broke Jasper out of his stupor.

Jasper glanced at the time in surprise, "It's four already? Let's go home, then. It's going to be daybreak soon."

Julian glanced at Jasper through the rearview mirror as he drove. Seeing how the latter remained deep in thought, he could not help but ask, "What did the two of them say, Jasper? You seem frustrated and you haven't smiled once the entire ride."

"I'm not frustrated."

Jasper smiled and replied, "It just hit me how talented some people can be."

He was referring to Wayne.

Jasper replayed the entire process in his mind after the negotiation ended and realized that the suggestion for TH's concept was the only time Wayne seemed stunned. Excluding this momentary lapse, the man had kept his true emotions concealed the entire time.

In comparison, Jose, who seemed more experienced, had lost his composure several times.

The ability to control one's emotions was a necessity every successful top-notch businessman needed to have. Sure, this could be learned, but the nature of this trait was more innate than learned.

As for the promises Wayne had made during the discussion...

There were none.

Which meant the three of them had spoken for hours only to come out empty-handed.

"Wayne Marlon will always be Wayne Marlon," Jasper murmured to himself.

The car whizzed down the roads and time ticked on as they headed home. Jasper suddenly smiled when he realized that the lights in Wendy's room upstairs were still switched on.

"Oh well. There's no use worrying about it. The smarter he is the better; Only smart men make the correct decisions."

As things took a turn for the better, the first ray of sunlight broke across the horizon.

Life at the Top Chapter 982

They alighted the car and Julian immediately returned to his room to rest after staying up the entire night with Jasper while the latter quietly climbed the stairs.

Jasper twisted open the handle of the door carefully. Thanks to the lit table lamp, Jasper was met with the sight of Wendy lying on the bed and staring at him with a bright pair of eyes.

“Did I wake you up?” Jasper chuckled, pushing the door open and walking in.

Wendy flipped on her side and said, “Mhmm. Why’re you back so late?”

“It was already past two when I arrived in Nauritus. Then I had to rush over to talk to Wayne and Jose. It was four, almost five, by the time we were done,” Jasper explained.

Glancing at the time, Jasper realized that it was precisely five-thirty-five in the morning.

Wendy groaned at Jasper, “What’s so important that you’ve got to rush over and meet them in the middle of the night. Couldn’t you do it tomorrow?”

Jasper chuckled. “This is my show of respect for them. Them willing to wait is a show of their sincerity. You have to give people like Wayne enough respect if you want to partner with them, or they won’t ever be sincere with you either.”

Wendy asked curiously, “I’ve never seen you so attentive even with Terizone back in the beginning. Is this Wayne from Abbylon Inc that powerful?”

“He’s more than just powerful.” Jasper pinched Wendy’s nose with a smile, feeling the soft and warm skin under his fingertips as he spoke, “If all goes to plan, he’ll surpass everyone’s imagination in the future.”

“Sure, keep bluffing then. You sound like a con artist.”

Wendy pushed Jasper away. “Go take a shower and get some sleep. It’s not good for your body if you stay up so late. You need to rest.”

“I already took a shower at my mom’s over in Brac County before I came back,” Jasper replied, shuffling into Wendy’s bed and lying down.

Wendy gasped softly, “What’re you doing? Go sleep in your own room!”

The two were very intimate, having done everything but the last step. Even so, they still slept in two separate rooms.

Although this was not the first time Jasper was pushing his luck.

“I’m exhausted and the bed there is cold. It’s warm here, so just let me lie down for a little bit.”

Jasper laid next to Wendy so she could half-hug him close to her. He closed his eyes and took in the warmth and homey scent that engulfed him as he murmured, “Just a little bit, a little bit and I’ll go back.”

Wendy was extremely embarrassed and she wanted to push Jasper away, but she felt her heart tighten as she took in the baby-like features on Jasper’s face when he closed his eyes.

Others might not know how busy Jasper was, but she certainly did.

Excluding the two days during Christmas where he was considerably freer, Jasper had spent every other day dealing with all sorts of issues. Not to mention, problems that required his personal attention kept arising.

Jasper had kick-started his business last year and developed it exponentially, but he had also spent that year extremely busy without having any chances to take a breather.

God was fair to everyone. Jasper, for example, had wealth ordinary people could never imagine obtaining throughout their entire lives, but he lost all his personal time in return.

Caressing Jasper's face gently, Wendy felt her heart melt.

"It's okay, go to sleep."

Wendy comforted an exhausted Jasper with gentleness and softness.

Encased in this heavenly embrace, Jasper's lips tugged slightly upward, and snores slowly began to fill the room.

A little more than two hours later, the sky was completely bright.

Wendy had laid down, holding Jasper in her arms for more than two hours such that it was now almost time to get to work. With no other choice, Wendy pushed her numb body out of bed and carefully walked out of the room.

She had just made it to the door when she saw her father walk down the stairs.

Life at the Top Chapter 983

“Jasper’s back?” Dawson asked as he watched his daughter snoop around.

Wendy immediately tried to act natural and nodded, “Yeah. It was dawn when he returned, though.”

“This little brat. I’ll talk to him later, it’s no good screwing your body over just for work,” Dawson said.

“Weren’t you the same when you were young?” Wendy shot back.

Long used to his daughter taking Jasper’s side, Dawson stretched his neck to look at the room door behind Wendy and asked, “Did Jasper sleep in your room last night?”

Wendy immediately flushed and said embarrassedly, “Stop. What’s with all these questions? I told you he only got back at daybreak. He fell asleep the moment he came back, so what was I supposed to do? Pull him to his room?”

“Fair point. You’d never have the heart to do that,” Dawson teased with a playful chuckle.

“You are so annoying—I’m going to work!” Wendy quickly fled with her purse swinging behind her.

“Hehe, this little brat. He’s finally stopped being so stubborn.”

Dawson was elated when he looked at the closed door.

“My chubby grandchild’s on the way.”

Just then, Tiffany's voice rang out from downstairs.

"Oh, Big Sis Schuler, you haven't had breakfast yet."

"I'm not eating! Oh, and could you please prepare a bowl of hot porridge? Jasp's back and he's still sleeping, but he likes to have a bowl of porridge when he awakes, and he only eats it with the Black River pickles; He'll throw a tantrum if it's anything else. We have it on the second shelf in the fridge. Bye!"

Dawson was speechless when he heard her.

"This girl, she's probably forgotten what her dad likes to eat at this point!"

While Jasper snored away in Wendy's room, Wayne and Jose stayed up.

Wayne laid on the bed in the hotel as he watched Jose pace frustratedly in front of him. Jose would reprimand him from time to time as he paced, and Wayne found himself both irked and humored by the situation.

"What are you laughing at, Mr. Marlon? I'm not kidding here. We're going to be in a lot of trouble if Softwin gets wind of what went on during tonight's meeting."

Jose pulled over a chair and sat by the bed before he said to Wayne sternly.

"And that B2C Jasper proposed. I admit that his understanding of e-commerce is beyond our imagination, but he's too naive. There's no way the plan can be that simple."

"C2C and B2C might both be e-commerce strategies, but they're extremely different. Even we ourselves are going in completely blind, so how can he be so confident that it'll work?"

Wayne's hands pillowed his head as he asked Jose, "So you don't support it?"

Jose was about to speak when he seemed to have realized something. He looked at Wayne in disbelief as he asked, "You can't possibly share Jasper's idea, can you?"

Wayne sighed and replied, "I used to think that out of everyone in the country, I knew the most about e-commerce. But now that I think about it, perhaps I was being too arrogant. There's still capable people in the country."

"Take Jasper for example. There's a reason he's managed to successfully invest in Sena and Terizone, and even got Sena listed on the Nasdaq."

"You're crazy. Both of you are crazy," Jose stated.

Wayne spoke seriously, "Think about it, Jose. The problems Jasper told us about 8861... Aren't they the exact same problems we've been worrying about all this while?"

"It's just the two of us here, so let's be honest and admit it. Yes, there are problems and they're unsolvable."

Life at the Top Chapter 984

“So what do you have in mind?”

Jose looked at Wayne and asked sternly, “Are you planning on partnering with Jasper and removing Softwin from the list of shareholders? Then working with Jasper to create an online shopping platform for individuals?”

“I’m going to be blunt with you, Mr. Marlon, if you want Abbylon to make it big, then you need to watch out for the enterprise’s reputation at the very beginning.

“We’ve just got Softwin’s investment and now we’re suddenly changing our mind and working with Jasper against Softwin. If news of this gets out, no one is going to want to partner with Abbylon anymore.”

Waynes smiled softly and said, “Both Softwin and Jasper’s JW are huge figures to Abbylon. We can’t afford to offend either of them, nor can we carelessly choose one party to side with.

“I’ve thought about it, and the best thing to do now is to let them fight amongst themselves.

“Abbylon being so weak puts us at a great disadvantage, such that we’re completely defenseless against titans like Softwin or JW.

“But our advantage lie in the fact that both of these companies want us. Look at Jasper, why do you think he wants to remove Softwin? Because Softwin’s a Sunriser investment bank?”

“Don’t be naive. I dare say that even if one of Somerland’s wealthiest investors had invested in us instead of them, Jasper would still have come up with a plan to get rid of them because his interests require it. That's just the kind of person he is.

"Therefore, the situation here is that both Jasper and Softwin want to own Abbylon completely. This works for us, so we're going to secretly leak information to both parties. Let them fight amongst themselves, and we'll partner with whoever wins."

Jose looked contemplative after hearing Wayne speak.

After a long while, he slowly said, "You're treading a fine line here, Mr. Marlon. The slightest mistake and we'll end up offending both huge companies. By then, we'll truly be screwed."

"That won't happen," Wayne said confidently, "There are no personal feelings in business, only benefits. The same rule applies to Myles and Jasper."

"But what about you?" Jose asked.

"Me?"

Wayne rubbed his neck and replied slowly, "I only want Abbylon to grow, but before that, we've got to think about how to keep it afloat. Nothing else even crossed my mind."

Jose stared intently at an average-looking Wayne. Suddenly, it dawned on him that this person he admired and was willing to follow was not just a charismatic entrepreneur, but a crafty businessman as well.

Perhaps this characteristic was what kept him alive and kicking in this society where only the strong survive.

...

It was already afternoon when Jasper awoke.

It had been a long time since Jasper had slept so comfortably and soundlessly. Getting out of bed, Jasper took a bath and walked downstairs energetically.

“Mr. Laine,” Tiffany greeted Jasper obediently.

Jasper smiled when he saw Tiffany wearing an apron around her waist and gloves on her hands as she did the chores. “You don’t have to do this. All you need to do is cook. You don’t need to wash the dishes either, as we have specific people for that.”

Tiffany replied while blushing, “But I have nothing to do all day if I don’t do this, and I feel bad. It’s like I’m getting a place to live, food to eat, and paid for doing nothing. I’d feel better if I helped out like this.”

“Do you want to study something?” Jasper asked.

Tiffany was stunned and she tilted her head confusedly. “Study? Is there something I’m not doing right?”

“That’s not what I meant,” Jasper waved her off. “What I wanted to ask, is do you want to go back to school and study?”

Life at the Top Chapter 985

For a split second, Jasper saw a clear flash of excitement flash through Tiffany's eyes only for them to dim immediately after.

She tilted her head down slightly and shook it, but she did not say anything.

"Think about it. If you want to study, then I can send you to university. Your choice of national universities.

"I have methods to get you in, and I'll pay for your tuition and life there. Don't worry about your brother, I'll have someone pay for his education as well. I'll also send someone over to take care of him.

"Treat it as me lending you money. You can pay me back by working for me after graduation," Jasper spoke gently.

Tiffany replied softly, "Thank you, Mr. Laine."

"Call me Jasper," Jasper walked to the kitchen, "Is there anything to eat?"

"Right, Big Sis Schuler had me make a bowl of porridge for you. It's still hot, so let me take it out for you."

"Thank you, that's exactly what I wanted to eat. Yo, you've got my favorite brand of pickles too."

"Big Sis Schuler specified it. She said you'd throw a tantrum if it was any other brand."

"Don't listen to her, I'm not that particular."

...

In the Presidential Office of Softwin's Somerland Branch, while Jasper chatted with Tiffany over porridge.

Echo Welch was currently listening to his subordinate's report.

"Mr. Welch, this is what we know of the current situation. Our sources are extremely reliable, as I heard it directly from one of Abbylon's senior executives."

Echo sneered and replied, "Abbylon Inc is still a small company, but President Shon from the headquarters believes that they have a very promising future. He told me to build a good relationship with Wayne before I came to assume my position here in the Somerland branch.

"I haven't even been here for long and this Jasper Laine wants to become one of Abbylon's shareholders? Does he not know that Softwin is Abbylon's majority shareholder? He thinks he can steal our assets without our approval?"

The subordinate hesitated for a moment before he replied, "Mr. Welch, I've done some digging on this JW Capital and I don't think it's going to be easy dealing with them.

"Jasper the most capable person in Somerland's dot-com industry. Both Sena and Terizone belong to him.

"In addition to this, JW Capital has also invested in other industries. JW Electronics, for example, has partnered with Coreana's Sentel Corporation. The company purchased Sentel's MP3 patented technology and has succeeded in upgrading it, thus becoming the only MP4-producing company in the world.

"JW Capital's also involved in the real estate industry. Their strength in the Southeast province is immeasurable.

“According to the evaluation carried out by our professionals, JW Capital and its subsidiaries can unite to form a comprehensive and strong modernized group.

“I fear that rashly starting a conflict with them will threaten Softwin’s plans to find its footing here in Somerland.”

Echo grabbed a dart and suddenly threw it at the target hanging on the wall.

With a ‘woosh’, the dart accurately pierced through the heart of the target six-to-seven meters away.

Echo smiled confidently and spoke in a cold tone, “You think too much, Yona. You must understand that Somer descents are born cowards who only bully those weaker than them. They may fight vigorously among themselves, but they will never be an opponent to us great Sunrisers.

“Go give that Jasper a call. Have him come to Waterhoof City immediately. Tell him I wish to see him.”

Life at the Top Chapter 986

Jasper had just arrived at his office and sat down on his chair when Malcolm rushed in.

“Why’re you so nervous, Malcolm?” Jasper looked up at Malcolm curiously.

Malcolm sat down in front of Jasper and frowned. The man seemed rather tense.

“I received a call from Softwin ten minutes before you arrived,” Malcolm spoke.

“Softwin? Sunrise Land called?” Jasper chuckled.

Softwin’s reaction was far beyond what he had expected. He thought he would have to wait at least a few more days before they found out.

He had not expected Softwin to call this afternoon, right after his conversation with Wayne and Jose late the previous night.

Without having to even think about it, Jasper knew that Wayne had taken the initiative to inform Softwin.

This was a reasonable move.

If a businessman did not understand the concept of selling to the highest bidder, then they might as well give up on doing business.

Jasper wanted Softwin out of the equation, but there was no way Softwin would give up on Abbylon after their 20 million US Dollar investment. Their conflict was fate, and it was only a matter of time before he had to fight Softwin.

“No, it was a call from their Somerland branch’s presidential office. Their president’s name is Echo Welch, a capable young man that assumed the position in his thirties. He’s not going to be an easy opponent,” Malcolm spoke.

“What did he say?” Jasper asked.

“He wants you to make your way to Waterhoof City as fast as you can as he says he wants to meet you.”

Jasper looked up at Malcolm and pointed at his own nose as he spoke, “Who do I look like? Can any Tom, Dick, or Harry just order me around?”

Malcolm asked, “So you’re not going?”

Jasper chuckled and leaned back against his chair. “We can meet, but he’s going to have to come to Nauritus City. He can keep dreaming he if thinks I’ll run all over to meet him in Waterhoof City just because he called.”

Malcolm replied rather awkwardly, “I think we should avoid clashing with Softwin right now. Or at least, try to leave both of us room to retreat. It won’t be advantageous to us if our relationship with them becomes too strained.”

“Malcolm, you think that because we’re no match for Softwin now, we should opt to give in to their demands on many things, yes?” Jasper asked.

Malcolm nodded. “I stand by my decision.”

“You’re right. Technically speaking, your idea is completely sound. But you have to understand that when it comes to business, only the weak give in.

“The rules of business are like the laws of the jungle. When two leopards have their eyes on the same slab of meat, one of them will surrender because they’re weaker. In the end, that weak leopard ends up starving while the other gets to eat its fill and grow stronger.

“With that, the starving leopard will have no other choice but to surrender again the next time.

“The small difference in both parties’ strength will only continue to grow with each surrender until that strong leopard bites and kills the other once it runs out of compromises.”

Malcolm shrugged. “I suppose this is the difference between professional managers and entrepreneurs.

“I took into consideration JW Capita’s current palette of problems. The most obvious one is our tight cash flow. Sena’s contribution to this is only enough to relieve the company from a break in cash flow, and we’re very far from operating comfortably.

“But as Sunrise Land’s largest investment back, the last thing Softwin lacks is cash.”

“If we were to head into full-out war now, we’ll most likely be bitten to death just like you said.”

Jasper stood up and patted Malcolm’s shoulder as he smiled. “I know that you’re worried, Malcolm. I know it’s not easy being extremely frugal as an operations officer.

“A few more months. Hold on for a few more months and I’ll bring you a large influx of cash. Then we’ll completely solve the company’s tight cash flow.”

Malcolm’s eyes shone. “Really?”

“When have I ever lied to you?” Jasper laughed out loud.

“Alright, then. I’ll await your good news.”

As he watched Malcolm return to his own office happily, Jasper piped up again, “Oh, and if Softwin calls again, tell them what I said. If they don’t call, then just leave it.

“I’m not opposed to meeting them, but they’ll have to come to Nauritus City. This is a question of principle so it’s non-negotiable. I am not offering myself to them on a silver platter.”

“You’re the boss, whatever you say goes.”

...

When Jasper’s response reached Echo, this arrogant President of Softwin’s Somerland Branch was enraged as expected.

“Absolutely insolent! That’s what he said?! He wants me to meet him in Nauritus City?” Echo snarled out icily.

“Yes, Mr. Welch,” Yona replied courteously.

“Hmph. Fine, then. If he doesn’t want to come over, then we’ll go to him. Prepare for a trip, I’m going over to Nauritus City,” Echo stated coldly.

“Mr. Welch, won’t us complying only stroke his ego?” Yona asked curiously.

“Ego? He knows that we’re more impatient to meet him than the other way around. He has nothing to worry about because Wayne is right there in Nauritus City. Further contact between the two is hardly beneficial to us, so we need to join in their negotiations as quickly as possible.

“This Jasper is a crafty man. He knows that we can’t sit here and watch as he continues to negotiate terms with Wayne in Nauritus City, so we’ll have no other choice but to go to him.

“However, we’re going to bring a present with us as well.”

Echo spoke coldly, “That MP4 his electronics company manufactures, is it popular back in Sunrise Land?”

“It is. JW Electronic’s MP4 has already become the best-selling imported goods of its kind in Sunrise Land in just two months. It’s even causing Rony and Tochiba, the best Sunrise electronic production companies worldwide, a headache.

“Easy. Sunrise Land’s largest electronics import company is Kobe Trading Co., Ltd, right? And we just so happen to be their parent company.

“Inform the people back home that from today onward, no MP4s from JW Electronics are allowed to enter Sunrise Land’s market.

With that, Echo chuckled coldly. “Now, not only will we teach Jasper a lesson, but we’ve gotten the favors of our electronics companies back home. Two birds with one stone.

“I’m sure Jasper will love the present we bring him.”

Life at the Top Chapter 987

A modernized company did business and relayed information faster than outsiders could ever imagine.

One hour was all it took for any information or decision sent out from Softwin's Somerland branch to be implemented and executed in Softwin's headquarters back in Sunrise Land.

After all, this was good news to a majority of Sunrise electronics companies.

JW Electronics currently held full licensing to the patented MP4 technology. They had also implemented a technical blockade, so there was no way they would share this patent.

Even Rony, which had the most skilled technicians in the country, needed a long time and capital if they wanted to bypass JW's technical blockade and succeed.

As a result, Sunrise companies could only watch as JW Electronics slowly dominated Sunrise's music-player market.

As a country known for producing advanced technological goods, they had to watch as a company from an underdeveloped country slowly consumed their market share.

This was greatly humiliating for arrogant Sunrisers.

Thus, Softwin's decision garnered the majority of their countrymen's support.

That night, a cargo ship filled with JW Electronics' MP4s from Somerland was about to enter Sunrise Land's Customs as per normal sales distribution procedure when it was rejected.

The excuse was that Kobe Tradings Co., Ltd, who had been in an amicable partnership with JW Electronics all this while, had unilaterally ended the partnership and did not want the goods anymore.

Lance, who had already clocked off and was on the way home, immediately received the news.

Lance did not dare to wait until the next morning. Upon realizing that a huge problem had arisen, he followed protocol and immediately reported it to his superior, the President of JW Capital's electronic group, as well as JW Capital's Director of Human Resources, Chad Wright.

Chad was currently in a meeting with Jasper when he was notified of this. He immediately requested to interrupt the meeting so he could report the issue to Jasper.

The conference room was filled with JW Capital's senior executives in Nauritus City, and they were infuriated when they heard the news.

"Those Sunrisers. They're blatantly mocking the spirit of the contract!"

"The partnership was going great, but they didn't even inform us before they decided to end the contract! Who do they take us for?!"

"What is he doing? Does he not fear deterring others from further partnerships?"

Malcolm's furious tone echoed through the conference room.

Wendy frowned as well. She was displeased with the Sunrisers' inability to uphold their word, but she had never participated in the company's major external decisions, instead leaving the decision-making to Jasper. She also knew that considering her special status, there were many things she could not give her opinion on.

Her opinion would represent Jasper's opinion, and as the owner of the entire enterprise, Jasper could not make decisions lightly.

Jasper had a solemn expression on his face as he tapped his finger on the conference desk slowly. Then, he turned to Chad and asked, "How're the international sales of the MP4 doing?"

"Sales are going great. We sell up to 2 million devices each month to European countries and the United States, around 1 million devices to the Southeast Terra region, as well as another 300 thousand to Coreana.

"Among them, our biggest market in the entire Terra region, excluding the country, is Sunrise Land. Their citizens really adore the latest advanced gadgets, and they amount to more than 1.8 million sales a month.

"In other words, excluding our own country, Sunrise Land is our largest source of revenue in the entire Terra region."

Life at the Top Chapter 988

“This is to say, the Sunrise market make up to one-third of our global sales,” Jasper concluded with a slight frown.

Chad nodded and replied solemnly, “This will badly hurt us if it gets out of hand, Mr. Laine. We have to solve the issue seriously and quickly.”

“There’s nothing to solve.” Jasper shook his head and spoke decisively, “We’ll give up on the Sunrise market temporarily.”

Jasper’s words stunned everyone in the room.

“Mr. Laine, the Sunrise market’s sales and profits are very important to us. We’ll make a huge loss if we give it up now,” Chad spoke frantically.

Jasper replied, “This is a calculated business attack. Sunrise Land is the opponent’s territory, and their power can be seen everywhere. Without getting rid of this mastermind, JW alone isn’t strong enough to fight against them in Sunrise Land. It’s simply not realistic.

“Not to mention, Kobe Trading Co., Ltd was the one that breached the contract. They’ll have to pay compensation, and we’ll wring them of every cent we can according to the contract. That’s quite a sum of money in and of itself.”

A smart businessman should be able to discern what was worth fighting for and what was not.

Softwin was the only possible reason why JW Electronics would suddenly be rejected from the Sunrise market.

Jasper had been prepared to receive Softwin's retaliation when he rejected their arrogant 'order' this morning.

Jasper had merely given them a reason to act sooner.

Sooner or later, he would have to reject Softwin's request to give Abbylon up.

Victory would still depend on JW and Softwin's battle over Abbylon Inc. JW Electronics was merely a temporary sacrifice.

"So we're just going to accept it and move on?" Chad asked indignantly.

Jasper smiled and replied, "Of course, not. Since Sunrise Land's market has decided to reject us, then we'll find our own weapon and attack.

"Sunrise Land's Rony and Tochiba have their own enemies. The Lang family of Sentel Corporation still remembers how Sunrise Land had used their CD players to devour Conerana's CD records market."

Then Jasper turned to Chad and instructed, "Both you and Lance should start packing. You'll be going to Coreana in two days to sign a partnership with Sentel Corporation."

"We'll give Sentel Corporation exclusive the license to our patented MP4 technology, allowing them to use our technology to produce and sell the MP4 in Coreana and Sunrise Land. We'll share our research of the MP5 with them as well.

"I'll talk to Sentel and agree on the specifics of the partnership and the profit distribution. So just wait for my green light."

Chad's eyes shone and he replied, "Sentel Corporation's extremely strong, and they'll definitely be able to force their way into Sunrise Land's market. Mr. Laine, what a great plan to shoot them in the foot!"

“We’re still too weak.”

Jasper shook his head and sighed before he replied, “If JW was already strong enough on its own, we wouldn’t even need to benefit Sentel with our technology.”

“We can make money at any moment, but technology is how we monopolize the market. Without technology, any money we make will have to come as the result of physical labor.”

Chad nodded in agreement at Jasper’s words. He already had a taste of technical monopolization and no competitors on the market to worry about, so he understood this concept well.

Life at the Top Chapter 989

After the meeting, the senior executives began to file out.

Meanwhile, Jasper remained in the conference room, deep in thought.

“Are you leaving soon?” Wendy pushed open the conference room door and asked Jasper worriedly.

Jasper smiled. “You can go back first, I still need to contact Sentel Corporation’s higher ranks in Coreana.”

“Is this a difficult opponent?” Wendy sat beside Jasper and asked gently.

Jasper chuckled. “I’ve managed to deal with both easy and difficult opponents before, haven’t I? Don’t worry, they can’t stop me.”

Wendy shook her head and spoke attentively, “Still, don’t push yourself too hard and take care of your health. Even if we close the company down, we’ve still got more than enough money to splurge for ten lifetimes.”

Jasper pinched the tip of Wendy’s nose and said gently, “I know. Don’t worry about me.”

Only then did Wendy get up. She asked, “So should I wait for you for dinner tonight?”

“Just save me something for me. I don’t know when I’ll get home.”

After Wendy left, Jasper got up to wash his face. Then he returned to his office and dialed a number he had saved a long time ago.

“Hi, have you thought about how you can use me again?”

Sylphie’s new greeting had Jasper feeling slightly embarrassed.

“Is that all you see me as? Someone who only knows how to use you?” Jasper asked.

Sylphie chuckled and replied, “As far as my brief understanding of you goes, yes.”

“Alright, I might as well come clean, then. Your understanding isn’t as brief as you think.”

Jasper’s words had Sylphie laughing out loud.

“Talking to you is always more interesting.”

“Alright then, go ahead. What is it? Though I do hope it isn’t anything big, I’m a little busy as of late.”

Jasper could tell that Sylphie was trying to distance herself from him based on the way she spoke, and he replied, “Don’t worry. It’s mutually beneficial this time.

“Sentel’s Lang family used to control 80% of Coreana’s market share for CD record devices a few years ago. However, Rony and Toshiba stole your technical research and manufactured a completely new version of CD record players.

“This resulted in Sentel’s Lang family losing 60% of the market share overnight, and the Sentel Corporation still has yet to fully recover in Coreana’s music-player market.

“I think I’ve found the perfect chance for you to carry out your revenge for such humiliation.”

Sylphie answered carefreely after hearing Jasper, “Those are the facts of the matter, but it’s pretty useless to me. Perhaps my father would like to discuss this topic with you.”

“I don’t have that kind of time, so I’d like you to pass the word to your family.”

Jasper continued sternly, “I can share all technical research for the already manufactured MP4, as well as the MP5 that’s still under research with Sentel Corporation.

“I’ll also give you exclusive licensing that allows you to produce and sell them in Coreana and Sunrise Land. My only request is that JW Electronics takes seventy percent of the net profit.”

As he spoke, Jasper did not know that Sylphie had been in Sentel Corporation’s President Kit’s —Sylphie’s grandpa, the current head of the Lang family—study since the call connected.

Sylphie also had the call on speakerphone, so Kit heard everything Jasper had said, word for word.

Life at the Top Chapter 990

Sylphie glanced at her grandpa. She watched him nod and shake his head before she spoke, "You sure are a smart man."

"You have no opponents here in Coreana's market, nor has anyone here done anything to you. However, you added Sunrise Land into your negotiations, so I take it that you've encountered trouble over there?"

"That's my issue to deal with. All Sentel needs to consider is if this contract is beneficial enough to you," Jasper spoke indifferently.

Sylphie smiled and replied, "Thirty percent isn't enough, I want at least fifty."

"I thought that you were disinterested in the family business, Princess Sylphie. This does not look like disinterest to me," Jasper commented.

Chuckling, Sylphie explained, "I'm still a member of the family. It's only right I fight for the biggest benefits for my family."

"You and I are well aware of the situation here, so let's both take a step back," Jasper spoke.

Sylphie looked at Kit again.

Kit, with his head full of white neatly combed, slowly picked up The Black Theory and nodded seamlessly.

"Deal."

"Wonderful. My people will fly to Sela tomorrow."

Hanging up the phone, Sylphie rested her chin on her palm and turned to her grandpa. "I thought you'd say no, Grandpa."

"Why would I decline something that benefits the family?"

"Be it the MP4 or the MP5, both of these products exist in small markets. It does not matter if we win or not."

"But those Sunrisers are too insolent. It would be unwise to let go of the chance to take revenge for what they've done back then. What that Somer descent, Jasper, has in mind does not concern us."

Kit's gaze fell on the book as the old man suddenly smiled, "We can invite him over for a meal should the opportunity arise in the future. If anything, he has a ruthless insight regarding things. He started with a reason we cannot reject, and that alone is worth commending."

"Opportunity? What opportunity could possibly get a Somer descent to eat with us?" Sylphie asked casually.

"When he becomes the richest man in Somerland. Then he'll have both the opportunity and the qualifications."

...

The following day, Jasper sent Chad and Lance to sign the contract in Coreana, as well as welcomed Echo and Yona from Waterhoof City.

A black Benz arrived at the entrance of Southface River Tower and Echo alighted it with Yona in tow.

Echo's expression darkened when he realized that the person welcoming him was not Jasper, but a man from the United States that was past his fifties.

Realizing the shift in his superior's attitude, Yona stepped up to talk to Malcolm.
"Where's Jasper?"

Malcolm's smile immediately faded when he heard Yona refer to Jasper by name without attaching any respectful titles, and he replied indifferently, "He's a busy man. He's waiting for you two upstairs now."

"Is this how you treat your guests?" Yona scoffed and asked, "Is this how you welcome us noble Sunrisers?"

Malcolm glanced at Yona as if the latter was an idiot and replied, "Since when were Sunrisers interchangeable with nobility? And are you discriminating against Somer descents in Somerland?"

When he said this, Yona's off-handed comment suddenly became one of great importance.

This would be a big issue if word got out.

As expected, Yona's expression instantly changed.

Life at the Top Chapter 991

As an ex-senior executive of the world's largest consumer goods company, the P&G Group, Malcolm had more than one trick up his sleeves.

He continued to speak to Yona arrogantly, "Please watch your attitude. Since when were Sunrisers like you allowed to act superior in front of a man from the United States?"

This was something the whole world, including Sunrisers, had to admit; in front of the great United States, they were nothing more than inferior subjects.

Yona's expression soured further.

"Enough."

Echo glared at Yona's show of weakness and spoke to Malcolm calmly, "You're Malcolm Malibu, JW Capital's COO, right? Please lead the way; our time is very valuable."

"That's more like it," Malcolm replied, then turned sideways and lifted his hand. "This way. Mr. Laine's been waiting for a long time."

Jasper's office doors were opened, and under Malcolm's lead, Echo and Yona entered together.

Echo and Jasper's gazes met in the air.

"Welcome, distinguished guests."

As the host, Jasper stood up unprompted and made his way around the office desk to shake Echo's hand, greeting them with a smile.

Not going to Waterhoof City or greeting them downstairs was a show of his attitude, and also stressed that both parties were of equal standing.

However, Jasper would be a horrible host if he remained seated as he greeted them.

Jasper had a very good understanding of his limits.

Echo's dark expression that he had worn the when he first walked into the room immediately vanished to make way for a bright smile. The man spoke in fluent Somerish, "Hello, Mr. Laine. I've heard much about you, and it's nice to finally meet you."

Jasper sounded shocked when he spoke, "Your Somerish is really good, Mr. Welch."

Echo smiled reservedly and replied, "Well, I'm one-fourth of Somer descent and I've studied in Somerland for three years. To understand its market, one has to first understand the people and culture behind it."

"Haha, you're very right, Mr. Welch. Here, come and take a seat."

Jasper led the two into the reception room next to his office. Once everyone was seated, Jasper then smiled crescent-eyed as he spoke to Echo, "My apologies for not being able to meet you in Waterhoof City, Mr. Welch. I was preoccupied with work and I couldn't afford to leave."

Echo gave a small smile as he replied, "Mr. Laine, us Sunrisers come from a very polite country and we always treat people with respect.

“If you don’t have the time to come over, then we shall come to meet you. There are no worries. I also brought you a gift, Mr. Laine, and you should’ve received it already. Was it to your liking?”

When he said this, the atmosphere in the reception room made a sharp turn for the worse.

The seemingly somewhat harmonious atmosphere suddenly thickened and tensed.

Jasper smiled calmly and replied, “It’s not too bad. But if this small present is all you can gift, then I must admit that I’ve overestimated you.”

“Hmph. Stop pretending.” Yona sneered. The pair had already agreed on the way over that Yona would be in charge of acting sinister and fierce while facing Jasper.

“You’re frantic now, aren’t you, Mr. Laine? After all, we’ve done some digging, and know that a large portion of your JW Electronics’ revenue comes from the Sunrise market.”

Life at the Top Chapter 992

“Losing the Sunrise market means that you’ve lost almost one-third of your revenue.

“I’m impressed at how you can still act so calm, Mr. Laine.”

Yona’s words had Jasper moving his gaze to look at him. The latter asked calmly, “And you are?”

“Yona, The Presidential Assistant of Softwin Investments’ Somerland branch,” Yona introduced himself arrogantly.

“Oh, so you’re just an assistant,” Jasper shook his head. “Sorry, but subordinates aren’t normally allowed to pipe in when I’m talking to your superior. I do remember that Sunrise Land’s rather particular with regulations in the business setting. So I have to ask, is this how you educate your subordinates, Mr. Welch?”

“What are you implying?” Yona shouted, enraged.

Jasper replied casually, “As a Sunriser, not only have you been acting like you’re better than everyone while standing on Somer soil, you’ve also come to my company and caused a ruckus. Do you perhaps think that I’m too kind to kick you out?”

Yona clenched his jaw immediately. The urge to curse Jasper out was strong, but he did not dare act rashly in fear that it would disrupt Echo’s plan.

Echo frowned slightly and interrupted them, “Let’s cut the nonsense, Mr. Laine. I think I’ve shown you this time that we can make doing business in Sunrise Land difficult for you.

“Our request is simple: give up on Abbylon if you want to continue doing business in Sunrise Land.”

Echo had a small smile as he continued, “You must know by now how powerful Softwin is in Sunrise Land. If we’re able to return all of JW’s goods overnight, then we can also fill Sunrise Land’s department store shelves with JW’s goods if we so please.

“Of course, it wouldn’t be difficult at all if we also wanted to make JW disappear completely from the Sunrise market.”

“That sounds like a terrifying threat.” Jasper looked at Echo and answered, “So if I disagree, JW’s products will never get a chance to enter Sunrise again. Is that it?”

Echo clapped once, the clear sound cutting through the air, and he replied with a large smile, “Correct. I believe there’s this Somer saying, about how a smart man can read the situation and act accordingly. I’m sure you’re a smart man, right, Mr. Laine?”

“It seems like you’ve got a very in-depth understanding of Somer culture, Mr. Welch. But I wonder if you’ve heard this other saying: amicable until attacked and ruthless in our counters.”

Jasper looked at Echo calmly and asked, “Are you so confident that you’ll manage to crush me, Mr. Welch?”

Echo chuckled and replied, “I don’t need to be confident about crushing you when it’s already a given that I will. Or are you telling me that you still have a plan to counter Softwin in Sunrise Land? Are you daydreaming?”

At that moment, Jasper’s phone rang.

Jasper glanced at the number and chuckled. “This will be an interesting call. Perhaps you’d like to listen in, Mr. Welch? Something tells me that it’ll be of your interest.”

Echo frowned despite feeling proud of himself. He watched confusedly as Jasper accepted the call; He had no idea what the man was planning to do.

A moment later, the call connected.

Chad’s excited tone echoed through the speakers.

“Mr. Laine, we’ve successfully signed the contract.

“Sentel Corporation has agreed to partner with us. They’ll construct a new branch in Coreana and Sunrise Land, and use their channels to manufacture and sell our licensed MP4s and future MP5s. All that is left for us to do is to wait for our cut of the profits to roll in.”

Jasper chuckled at these words while Echo’s expression changed dramatically.

Life at the Top Chapter 993

“Good, you’ve done well,” Jasper praised Chad.

Chad laughed and replied, “All I did was sign the contract—you’re the one who negotiated the partnership, Mr. Laine. Sentel was really kind to us too.

“They’ve been treating us with the highest standard of respect ever since we got off the plane. There wasn’t any unnecessary talk during the finalizing process either. There’s no way we can take the credit when all we did was come over to sign the contract.”

Jasper replied with a smile, “Still, you’re the ones who went all the way there and did the job.

“Since you’ve already signed the contract on the first day, then stay and have fun in Coreana for the remaining two days. The company will cover your costs as a reward.”

Chad laughed out loud and replied, “We’ve already booked the earliest flight out tomorrow morning. We might’ve already signed the contract, but there’s still quite a bit we need to prepare. Like the sharing and transferring of technical research, as well as make the specific arrangements for manufacturing. Can we postpone our vacation until everything’s done?”

“Sure. We’ll talk more when you get back, then.”

Jasper ended the call with a smile.

Jasper then turned to look at Echo. As expected, the latter’s expression had darkened.

Echo stared intently at Jasper and said coldly, "What's with this act that you and your subordinate put on for us? Aren't you afraid that I'll mock you, Mr. Laine?"

Jasper replied calmly, "You think too highly of yourself, Mr. Welch. You're not important enough for me to put on an act. This is big news, isn't it? How about you go and ask for confirmation yourself?"

Echo narrowed his eyes and his gaze burned fiercely into Jasper.

As far as he was concerned, Jasper did not have the wit nor the capability to come up with a plan to counter him within just a day.

Not to mention, he had done so by partnering with Sentel Corporation.

Sentel Corporation.

The only large industrial conglomerate that controlled Coreana's economy.

Sentel's status in Coreana was equivalent to Trider and Triton Financial Group's status in Sunrise Land.

Not every group could be considered a financial group, and not every financial group could be considered a conglomerate.

Sentel was someone not even Trider or Triton dared to provoke lightly, let alone Softwin.

Rony and Toshiba had only tried to probe Sentel back then thanks to Trider and Triton's support. The probe had then resulted in Trider and Triton arriving at a secret agreement with Sentel, and its contents were something neither Rony nor Toshiba were qualified to know.

Therefore, Echo refused to believe that this Sentel would actually form a partnership with Jasper.

At that moment, Echo and Yona's phones vibrated at the same time.

The same message lit up both their phones.

Echo and Yona pulled their phones out at the same time and looked down at the screen. Both their complexions instantly paled.

There were countless eyes on a large industrial conglomerates like Sentel Corporation at all times.

No matter when, and who signed a partnership with, news of it would still immediately reach the ears of many powerful people.

Because of this, Echo and Yona had just received the latest news of Sentel Corporation partnering with JW Electronics Manufacturing Co., Ltd.

This piece of information was immediately sent to Sunrise industrial conglomerates by their network of spies. Softwin, of course, had their own information channels to find out about this.

Life at the Top Chapter 994

Yet, Jasper's heart sunk when he watched the duo's expression change upon reading the text on their phones.

It would be unwise for him to look down on these large investment banks. It had only been a few minutes since the contract was signed and they had already been informed of it.

New businesses like JW could not possibly compare to these large investment banks when it came to gathering information.

JW had almost no intel sources at all.

At this moment, Jasper officially placed the topic of gathering information as one of the most important agendas in his mind.

He had to establish an information network for JW as fast as possible.

Otherwise JW would not be able to take the initiative in conflicts as they would be dead before they knew it.

Reading the message, Echo was certain that Jasper had not put on an act just to frighten him. Echo looked up at Jasper seriously and suddenly smiled.

"I have to admit, Mr. Laine, I've underestimated you."

Jasper replied, "If that's a compliment, then thank you."

"But you don't understand. Even if you've partnered with Sentel, I've already achieved my goal."

“You’re forced to partner with Sentel just to continue holding a stake in Sunrise’s market.

“You’re still earning fewer profits when all I had to do was make a few phone calls and send a report to Headquarters.”

Echo looked at Jasper pridefully and said, “As I said, either give Abbylon up, or Softwin will continue to attack JW.

“This will continue until you give up the partnership with Abbylon, or... until JW dies.”

Echo stared at Jasper aggressively and with overwhelming pride.

“You might be furious now, Mr. Laine, but the weak have no right to feel angry. All you can do is accept reality, Mr. Laine, so please give me your answer.”

“You’re a great negotiator, Mr. Welch,” Jasper looked at Echo calmly. “I’ve already resolved your obstacles yet you’ve somehow managed to spin it into your victory. You make it sound like you’re in the right, Mr. Welch, but you seem to have forgotten something.

“This is Somerland and both JW and Abbylon are Somer companies. So what if Softwin’s powerful? What power do you think you have over JW or Abbylon?”

Echo immediately shot to his feet at Jasper’s words and said coldly, “Then there’s no point in further negotiations.”

Jasper did not even look up at him as he spoke, “You’re free to leave if you’re busy, Mr. Welch. The door’s that way.”

“Hmph!” Echo harrumphed and suppressed the fury within him as he spat icily, “I hope you don’t regret this. Once I leave this room, I won’t back down easily even if you beg me.”

“I’ve never begged anyone before,” Jasper replied calmly.

“Fine!” Echo huffed a sharp laugh and turned to walk to the door. “Until we meet again.”

Furious, Echo walked to the door and was about to raise his hand to push open the handle when someone opened the office door from the outside.

Wendy wanted to talk to Jasper about something when she was met with the two men standing at the door. She was about to speak when Echo suddenly cursed—the fact that a woman blocked his path had only infuriated Echo further. “You idiot! F*ck off, b*tch!”

Having remained silent throughout the entire interaction in the office, Malcolm’s features twitched when he heard Echo curse.

He did not even need to look at Jasper to know that Echo, this Sunriser, was screwed today.

Life at the Top Chapter 995

Forced to suppress his anger, Echo had not taken a good look at Wendy's appearance or figure at the very beginning. It was only after cursing her out that he realized how beautiful Wendy was.

The man chuckled evilly and said, "What a pretty Somer woman, not even women back in Sunrise Land are prettier than you. What a shame that you've joined a company that's about to close down.

"How about you come back with me, beautiful? I'm a Sunriser and you Somer women love foreigners the most, right? I can move you back to Sunrise Land and arrange a nice job for you in our biggest investment bank, Softwin."

Echo was evidently trying to humiliate Jasper.

He did not know who this woman was to Jasper, but at the very least, she was still the man's employee. Hunting for an owner's employees in front of them was the biggest form of humiliation.

However, it had not crossed Echo's mind that Wendy was Jasper's girlfriend.

Therefore, Echo's efforts were for naught.

He just had no idea of it yet.

Wendy was the first to fire back at him.

Wendy stared frostily at Echo and said, "I don't see what's so good about short Sunrisers like you, nor am I interested in talking to one of you anyway. Your appearance disgusts me, now please move out of my way!"

Echo's expression changed.

Having had enough from Jasper, Echo now had to endure a scolding from a Somer woman while she pointed her finger at him.

The glee from humiliating Jasper immediately vanished and Echo roared at Yona in mortification, "Yona, teach this Somer b*tch the strength of Sunrise men!"

Yona shouted his agreement and walked toward Wendy with a wretched snicker as he growled, "You Somer women were nothing more than venting tools for us Sunrise men decades ago. I'll have you learn today that the noble Sunrisers are not people you b*tches can insult!"

After he finished speaking, Yona reached out for Wendy only for a hand to clasp his shoulder.

Following that, a large burst of energy from that hand spread through his arm such that Yona lost his balance. The man's upper body twisted and before his frightened expression could even change, a fist smashed into his face.

The bone-chilling crack of a fractured nose bridge, followed by Yona's pitiful cry, cut through the room.

Blood splattered in all directions and Yona immediately cupped his face. Blood continued to drop from the gaps between his fingers, leaving spots of blood on the floor.

Jasper moved his hand and reached out to pull Wendy behind him. Then, he glanced frigidly at Yona and an utterly shocked Echo before he said, "Looks like you two don't want to leave my company in one piece."

Echo had not expected Jasper, a successful and wealthy business owner, to start physically attacking people.

He glared at Jasper and roared, "Do you know what you're doing?! How dare you hit my subordinate!"

"Hit? Killing him would already be a light punishment considering what he said and wanted to do," Jasper spoke coldly.

Echo felt his heart race and he pointed at Jasper and shouted, "So you're choosing to go into full-out war with Softwin? You'll pay an unimaginable price!"

"Fine, we'll go to war then! I've fought my way to where I stand today with my own two hands! You think I got here by begging people?"

Jasper fired back without hesitation, "Your pitiful arrogance means dog sh*t to me!"

Echo's complexion paled further, but he also recognized that he was in Jasper's territory. Thus, he reached out to grab Yona, who was still whimpering and bleeding, and spat wretchedly, "Fine, then. Just you wait! You'll come to me begging me for mercy very soon!"

Echo then turned to leave.

However, he was greeted by a strong and expressionless man standing in his way once he turned around.

The man was at least one-eighty centimeters tall, and while he was not exceptionally buff, the man's body was toned and every curve of his body was indicative of exceptional strength.

His presence was enough to overwhelm and suffocate Echo.

This was an aura Echo had only seen in true top-notch fighters back in Sunrise Land.

Echo's heart thumped erratically as he turned back to growl at Jasper, "What is the meaning of this? Have your dog move!"

Jasper replied calmly, "You're going to leave without apologizing?"

Echo snapped, "Apologize? You were the one who hit my subordinate! Why do I have to apologize?!"

"I want you to apologize to every Somer descent in the room, including my girlfriend!" Jasper looked at icily frostily as his powerful voice stated his demands.

"For the insults both of you Sunrisers fired at Somer descents in general, and my girlfriend in particular. I'm already being very merciful by merely asking for an apology, do not force me to do something no one here wants to see."

Echo grit his teeth while his gaze burned with rage as if he wanted to engulf Jasper in fire.

This was the first time in years since he had faced such humiliation.

As a noble Sunriser, he would rather die than apologize to the people of the poor, underdeveloped, and lowly Somerland.

However, considering the situation, Echo knew that he would not be allowed to leave today without apologizing.

Greatly conflicted, Echo softened his tone. "Look, Jasper, there's no need to strain our relationship like this. We can still smooth things out. We're all businessmen, after all, and it's not worth it to go on full-out war because we were both acting rashly.

"As for the matter of you becoming Abbylon's shareholder, we can always talk about that at a later date. If I persuade the headquarters, I'm sure Mr. Shon will be willing to let you invest in them as well. You'll get to take a portion of the shares as well, okay?"

Despite what he said, Echo was internally cursing Jasper out like mad. He was going to do everything he could to get rid of Jasper the moment he walked out of here.

Like hell was he going to persuade Myles for Jasper's sake.

Jasper smiled in reaction to Echo's softened tone.

The smile seemed to have soothed the atmosphere.

Echo let out the breath he was holding as well.

He was about to speak when Jasper's smile suddenly vanished and the man barked at Echo coldly.

"I said apologize!"

Life at the Top Chapter 996

Echo's breathing paused when he heard Jasper's demand.

He felt like Jasper had played him like a fool.

'Why the f*ck did you smile if you're not planning to compromise?!

The corner of Echo's eye twitched as he stared at Jasper intently.

He was extremely unwilling to do this.

Echo personally believed his status and power were beyond what Jasper could ever achieve. There was no way a slightly wealthy Somer businessman could compare to Softwin, an international investment bank.

Echo thought that he had the ability to crush Jasper at anytime.

Yet, here he was, still in Jasper's company as the man acted like a rascal and threatened his personal safety. Because of this, Echo felt the strength leave his body.

"You're testing my patience."

Jasper looked at Echo coldly. "If you're so reluctant, then you leave me no choice but to get justice in my own way."

"Jul, teach him how to be respectful. The ancestors of Sunrise Land learned how to self-sustain from their Somer ancestors, but it seems like they've forgotten the concept of humanity."

Julian acknowledged excitedly and moved to attack. He had been holding himself back for a very long time.

Echo reacted quickly. He knew that Jasper meant what he said, especially considering the man had already hurt Yona.

Seeing that there was no more room for negotiation, Echo clenched his jaw and squeezed his eyes shut as he shouted, "Okay! I'll apologize!"

"I'm sorry! I was disrespectful, I shouldn't have insulted or discriminated against Somerland. I'm sorry! I apologize for my behavior!"

The words seemed to have used up all of Echo's strength, for the man was panting and sweating once he finished speaking. He looked at Jasper cold and resentfully as he asked, "Are you happy now?"

Jasper glanced at Echo indifferently and turned his body sideways to reveal Wendy's figure.

"Now, apologize to my girlfriend."

Wendy was shocked as she looked at Jasper worriedly.

Wendy had come to know who these two Sunrisers in front of her were thanks to the conversation they had just shared. She did not know the full story, but at the very least, she knew that they were Softwin's senior executives.

Wendy was worried that the situation would be impossible to smooth over if Jasper offended these two too badly.

However, Jasper gave her a slight nod.

Thus, Wendy immediately stopped overthinking to support Jasper's decision.

Moreover... if anything, the lone fact that Jasper kept referring to Wendy as his girlfriend was enough to fill Wendy with elation amidst the current chaos.

Echo was going mad.

“Are you done, Jasper?! Do you find joy in humiliating me?”

Jasper spoke indifferently, “Intentionally humiliating you? You were the one who was impolite to my girlfriend first. How is me demanding that you apologize humiliating to you? What does that make your earlier actions, then?”

Echo clenched his jaw and he felt the suppressed infuriation about to explode within him.

Machismo culture was greatly prevalent in Sunrise Land, and men were generally regarded much higher than women there.

Hence, Echo could not accept the fact that he had to apologize to a woman, let alone one of Somer descent.

“You don’t want to? Julian!”

Jasper’s words had Echo pushing his bottom line even lower.

The truth remained that until people were forced to a specific point, they would never know where their limits lay.

Take for example Echo at that moment.

Before arriving in Nauritus City, Echo believed that speaking to a Somer descent harmoniously was already the best gift he could bestow them. Apologizing to them was absolutely out of the question.

Life at the Top Chapter 997

Yet, here he was, compromising.

“I’m sorry! It’s my fault! Please forgive me!”

Echo closed his eyes and bowed to Wendy with his head down. Jaw set, he forced out the apology.

Wendy and Jasper shared a look—the duo having already sharing perfectly synergized thoughts.

One glance was all it took and Wendy immediately understood what Jasper wanted to say.

Wendy replied curtly, “I don’t feel a shred of sincerity in your words.”

Gnarl gnarl...

This was the sound of Echo grounding his molars.

Wendy’s voice was melodious, but Echo thought it felt more like a steal scraper as it pierced into his ears.

“You might want to be quick before your colleague over there loses too much blood and goes into a coma,” Jasper spoke indifferently.

Echo clenched his jaw and further suppressed his fury. He had already been humiliated once before, so what was one more time?

Having decided on this, he bowed to Wendy again and spoke extremely sincerely, "I'm sorry. I made a mistake just now and I'd like to sincerely ask for your forgiveness."

With a soft harrumph, Wendy did not refute it and silently accepted the apology.

"Leave," Jasper spoke coldly.

Having been taught a lesson once before, Echo did not dare to leave any harsh comments in case Jasper sized the opportunity to continue humiliating him.

Ignoring the burning hatred within him, Echo did not look back as he left the office with Yano in tow, the latter's whimpers softening as they left the area.

With a murderous expression on his face, Echo dragged Yano to Southface River Tower's exit.

He looked up to the floor of Jasper's office.

Only to see what seemed to be Jasper's blurry figure looking back at him.

"Idiot! Just you wait! I swear I'll take revenge for this humiliation as long as I'm still alive! Damn you, f*cking Somer descents!"

Echo shouted at Jasper upstairs and finally vented some of the anger he had been bottling up.

However, Jasper was too high above to hear what he was saying.

Instead, this sentence reached Henry's ears, who was looking for Jasper to kill time.

Henry had just gotten out of the car and was looking around the Tower in search of any pretty ladies. With an amused chuckle, Henry strode over and slapped the back of Echo's head.

"Motherf*cker, what kind of sh*t are you spouting out here? What's wrong with Somer descents? Your dad's of Somer descent!"

Echo had not expected the sudden attack from behind and he almost staggered and fell forward.

He cupped the stinging back of his head and roared at Henry, "Do you know who I am? How dare you hit me?"

Rattled, Echo had spoken in Sunrish.

"A Sunriser?" Henry was stunned.

"Holy sh*t, no wonder you're so short. I have no f*cking idea what you're talking about but I'm pretty sure you're scolding me."

Young Master Law never needed a reason to hit people, all he had to do was convince himself. Therefore, when Henry felt that this Sunriser was insulting him, he followed up on his previous slap with three more to Echo's cheeks. The man's face was bloated and bruised by the time Henry was done.

Henry then spat on Echo's colorless face harshly before he pointed at him and spoke, "You better respect Somer descents when you're outside next time. You Sunrisers were still f*cking apes on your island when we were becoming kings and conquering lands."

With that, Young Master Law walked away casually.

He left Echo utterly vexed.

“All of you, just you wait!”

Life at the Top Chapter 998

Jasper and Wendy were locked in conversation when Henry arrived upstairs coolly.

“Were we too rash just now, Jasp?” Now that they were alone, Wendy could not help but voice her concerns.

“They are part of Softwin, after all.”

Jasper smiled. “It’s alright. Our true conflict with Softwin is over Abbylon’s shares. Either we give up, they relent, or we become enemies. Those two only got what they deserved, it’s the consequences of their actions.

“Not to mention that the fundamental conflict between us and Softwin wouldn’t have been solved even if we treated those two well and sent them off politely.”

Wendy sighed and replied, “Everyone’s just trying to do business. Why can’t we all get along?”

“Sure, small businesses can still be nice to each other, but it’s not the same when your business reaches a certain size. There are only so many resources and everyone wants a bigger piece of the pie for themselves. How are we supposed to get along?” Jasper consoled.

At that moment, Henry walked into the room proudly.

“F*cking Hell, I met a Sunriser on crack downstairs. He kept spouting sh*t, so I beat him up,” Henry immediately boasted once he walked through the door.

“I saw,” Jasper told him, “Quite the slaps you gave him.”

Henry's eyes widened and he asked, "Those two can't possibly have come from here, could they?"

"Relax, they're enemies, not friends."

Jasper recounted the situation briefly.

Henry's eyes shone as he looked at Jasper and said, "Not bad. Your opponents are getting more and more formidable. You're even involved with Softwin's higher ranks.

"That Echo Welch or something, I've never met the man but I've heard of him."

"How do you know him?" Jasper gasped.

"Hey, I just told you I've never met him. I've only heard of his name... Do you have anything to drink? I want something cold, I'm thirsty... Wait, what's with that shocked face! You don't think I'm qualified to know people like that, right?" Henry barked out in an upset tone..

Jasper laughed out loud as he pulled out a bottle of Coca-cola from the fridge in the office for Henry. "Tell me what you know about him."

"You already know his occupation, but he's also the heir of Trider Financial Group's extended family in Sunrise Land," Henry explained after twisting the Coca-cola bottle open and taking a large gulp.

"I thought his surname was Welch?" Jasper asked with a frown.

He had not expected Echo to be related to one of Sunrise Land's four major conglomerates, the Trider Financial Group. This was hardly good news.

"Okay, so the families of Sunrise Land's four major conglomerates, Trider, Triton, Sumotomo, and Mizuha, have been around for centuries. Their familial relationships are weird and complicated, so there's nothing weird with the extended members of the family having different surnames.

"Kayden has more partnerships with Sunrise Land, so he knows them better than I do. However, I've heard him talk about how the Trider family's support played a part in Echo assuming Softwin Investment's Presidency at such a young age."

Henry held the bottle of Coca-cola in his hands and crossed his legs. Smiling crescent-eyed, he asked Jasper, who had a grim look on his face, "What happened? Worst come to worst, I can always have my dad come out and put in a word for you."

"Even if it's someone from Trider's extended family, so what if you hit him? They still respect my dad."

"Now that I think about it, Grandpa and Trider's Foster used to know each other. Then something happened and their relationship turned sour. But that was decades ago, so no one cares about it anymore."

Jasper glared at Henry and spoke, "Do I look like that kind of person? I'm just thinking about how Echo will be planning to take revenge later."

"Who cares? Didn't you say you two were fighting over some company? If that's the case, then anything they do will either be to attack you or to try to win that company over. Stop thinking so much and just act," Henry replied excitedly.

Jasper frowned slightly as he thought about it. While Henry was unreliable most of the time, Jasper realized that the man's suggestion was the best course of action right now.

No matter what Softwin or Echo did, it would not stray from the main goal attacking JW and trying to get Abbylon to choose them. If that was the case, then there was no point in overthinking.

“Help me contact Wayne and Jose. I’ll treat them to a meal in the afternoon,” Jasper turned to tell Wendy.

Wendy nodded and left the room.

“Why’d you come to see me today?” Jasper asked.

Henry sighed but remained silent.

“What’s up?” Jasper looked up in confusion. He was intrigued the moment he saw an embarrassed expression on Henry’s pinkish cheeks.

“I didn’t know there were things Young Master Law was shy about.”

Henry gasped back in horror when he heard Jasper tease him, “Can you be a bit more serious here? I’ve been thinking about it and you’re the only one who can help me.”

Jasper’s curiosity piqued as looked at Henry and asked, “Go on, then. What is it?”

Henry scratched his head. Then, as if he had suddenly decided on something, he told Jasper fiercely, “You have to promise me first that you won’t mock me for this. And you can’t hold this over me or tell anyone. Including my dad and Anna.”

Jasper replied lightheadedly, “Okay, okay, I got it. Now are you going to tell me or not?”

Jasper then twisted open a bottle of Coca-cola for himself and took a few gulps.

Henry scratched his cheek bashfully and explained, letting go of all his inhibitions, “It’s just, f*ck, if nothing goes wrong, I’m dating someone!”

Pfft!

Jasper sprayed Coca-cola all over Henry's face.

Life at the Top Chapter 999

Henry's wife would one day be the famous Queen of Diving.

This was something everyone in the country knew about.

However, Jasper was uncertain if this girl Henry seemed so reluctant and bashful to talk about now was the same Queen of Diving in his past life.

After all, even if Jasper was going off the memory from his past life, Jasper and Henry's statuses were miles apart, and he only knew what gossip articles wrote about. Jasper had no idea if Henry had any girlfriends before the Queen of Diving.

By 'girlfriends', Jasper was referring to serious relationships. As far as Jasper and Henry were concerned, women Henry had been with before this were nothing other than sex-buddies.

Still, from the way Henry was acting now, Jasper realized that Henry had truly fallen for this girl.

Jasper immediately felt a headache coming.

Zachary had made it clear that children from rich families like Henry were destined to inherit the family business, meaning the Law family would play a huge part in Henry's marriage. The man in question did not have any particular opinions of this back then.

However, this was mainly because he had not found anyone yet.

It was a different story now.

Jasper did not really know how Henry had ended up with the Queen of Diving his past life, but she was well known in the sports industry, which the Law family had coincidentally shifted their focus to and began investing more in. Therefore, their getting-together was not totally unprompted.

Even so, Jasper was intrigued by this girl that had captured Henry's heart.

"What's her name? Where is she? Do you have pictures?"

Jasper's three consecutive questions had Young Master Law feeling embarrassed.

"Can you not gossip as much as the paparazzi?" Henry asked irritably.

"Sure, I won't ask then. You deal with this yourself, I promise I won't ask at all," Jasper spoke uncaringly.

Henry suppressed his embarrassment and ignored the Coca-cola on his face when he heard Jasper. He quickly leaned over and said, "No, I can't decide on my own. I still need your help."

Jasper chuckled and replied, "Then why are you complaining about me asking these question? I've got to at least know the specifics of this girl if I'm to advise you, right? How else am I supposed to help you?"

"Help me plan. You know how difficult dating is for me, right? Considering my identity and status, I've got to at least confirm that she's not just with me because of my family," Henry stated genuinely.

"Not bad, you've actually thought this through," Jasper praised.

"Her name's Jill Cobb. She's on the National Diving Team."

Jasper's eyes widened when he heard Henry. He could not help but marvel at the habits of fate.

After everything that had happened, Henry still met the Queen of Diving in this lifetime.

This was a good thing. Their successful relationship in Jasper's past life meant that Henry was less likely have his heart broken now.

"What's with that expression? She's a first-grade diver, not some prostitute, okay?" Henry defended in displeasure.

Jasper smiled. "It's not that, I'm just very curious. How'd you even fall for someone in the Diving Team... I thought you've been Nauritus City all this while? The National Diving Team should be far away in Swallow Capital, no?"

"She just got back from a competition in Australia, and she happens to be instructing for Southeast Province Diving Team right now."

Henry looked rather embarrassed. "It was by pure chance that we met, and we've only seen each other a few times. I can't really tell why, but I like her a lot."

"Let's go look for her, then," Jasper urged.

"Should we? She might be busy..." Henry's desire to do this was written all over his face, but the man also looked hesitant.

Jasper felt emotional at Henry's behavior. 'Even the fearless Young Master Law can be sensitive.'

"Well, we won't know unless we look for her. Come on, let's go together. I'll help you take a look and see whether she's right for you or not."

Jasper got up and dragged Henry out of the office.

However, he went to look for Wendy before they left.

“I’m going out for a bit. Postpone the meeting with Wayne and Jose to later tonight—I’ll buy them dinner instead.”

Jasper then left a confused Wendy standing there while he dragged a blushing Henry out like an overgrown child.

“What the hell are those two doing?” Wendy was confused.

...

The Southeast Province Diving Team was training at the Provincial Sports Center. It was a short distance from Southface River, and took less than twenty minutes by car.

Henry was suddenly terrified when Jasper dragged him to the entrance of the Diving Center.

“F*ck maybe we shouldn’t just go in there. We’ve only just met, so this is really inappropriate,” Henry said as he fought back against Jasper and refused to let him go inside.

“Don’t tell me you haven’t confirmed your relationship with her,” Jasper gasped.

“Confirm what?” Henry tried to mask his guilt and embarrassment by acting tough. “We’ve only met twice and exchanged less than ten sentences. What the hell am I supposed to confirm?”

“Didn’t you tell me all you had to do was use money and luxury items to get women in bed?” Jasper joked.

“F*ck you, how’s that the same?” Henry glared at Jasper harshly and spoke, “You better not blow my cover. I told her I’m a high school teacher.”

“What bullsh*t teacher? With the way you act, she’s got to be crazy to believe that you’re a teacher,” Jasper was filled with joy.

“F*ck you. I’m not going to talk to you anymore if you keep laughing at me!” Henry growled angrily.

“Okay, okay, I’ll stop. Come on, we’re just going to look. It doesn’t have to mean anything,” Jasper replied, ignoring how Henry was still hesitant and unwilling as he pushed the doors open and entered the facility.

“Hi, could I ask where Jill is?” Jasper stopped a female diver who was about to go to practice and asked.

The female diver looked at Jasper weirdly before she pointed at another building and spoke, “Drinking coffee in the lounge with Mr. Kain.”

“Thank you.”

Jasper thank her and then dragged Henry over.

They arrived at the other building and realized that these secondary buildings were all offices. Most of them were occupied by proper businesses except for the ones occupied by the Sports Center and Sports Team, with just a few exceptions.

There was an office for the manager of a training team, which was an externally-sourced private company. The manager oversaw the sourcing investors to sponsor the sports team.

They arrived at the lounge and Jasper was about to knock on the door when he heard a man shouting inside.

“Jill Cobb! Don’t you dare think you’re some sh*t now just because you’ve gotten into the national team and you’ve won a few medals! Do not forget that I was the one who brought you to where you are today. So what if you’ve got a few good records? You’d still be nothing without me!

“All I did was request something small and you can’t even fulfill it. You’re getting brave now, are you? Think you can disrespect me now, huh?”

Life at the Top Chapter 1000

Henry's expression darkened when he heard the harsh scolding and he raised his arm to barge into the room.

"What are you doing?" Jasper immediately pulled Henry back.

"What else? I'm going in to punch the f*cker that scolded Jill," Henry replied.

"You won't be able to help her if you go in now. If anything, you'll end up causing her more trouble. You want her to like you, right? Then calm down so we can understand what's going on," Jasper told Henry.

Henry had no other choice but to push aside the distaste he felt as he stood by the door and listened with Jasper in silence.

Just then, a young woman's voice was heard from inside the lounge.

"Mr. Kain, you're asking too much of me. Where am I supposed to help you find a 2 million Somer Dollar sponsor?"

Jill sounded exasperated and indignant.

Mr. Kain harrumphed and said, "There are tons of methods, it just depends on whether you're sincerely willing to help me or not."

"Go on, then, Mr. Kain. How can we get our hands on a sponsor for 2 million Somer Dollars?" Jill asked.

"Haha. Oh, Jill," Mr. Kain's tone shifted into something more amorous and frivolous.

“When it comes to international diving, you’re the youngest athlete and the one with the best results. What’s even better, is that you’re also the prettiest one out of them all.

“There are many large enterprise owners who are interested in you. Say the owner of Nauritus City’s Byron Group, Byron Woolery, for example. He’s very interested in you.

“He promised that as long as you’re willing to eat dinner with him and spend the night, then he’d sponsor us for 500 thousand right away. Isn’t that simple?”

“With your fame, all we have to do is find three more owners like Byron and we’ll have 2 million. There can’t possibly be anything easier in the world.”

Henry was close to combusting from his anger outside the lounge after he heard Mr. Kain’s suggestion.

‘As if the woman I fell for is only worth 500 thousand!

‘And she has to sleep with four men for a sponsor of 2 million?!’

At that moment, Jill’s voice sounded from inside the room.

“Mr. Kain! I can’t believe how abominable you are!”

Jill’s tone was filled with shock, fury, and disappointment.

“Yes, you were the one who brought me to where I am today. But who are you to request such things from me just for sponsors? You know what kind of person I am. I might as well kill myself if I have to do these things!”

Jill’s words angered Mr. Kain, and the man fired back angrily, “So die, then!”

“Have you no understanding of the industry? There’s nothing uncommon about this—you’re the only one acting like a snowflake here! Who’re you acting so pure and innocent for? How am I supposed to take care of you athletes without sponsors, huh?”

On the other side of the door, Jasper saw how Henry was brimming with the urge to barge in and quickly held him back.

“F*cking hell, the woman I like is about to change occupations to work in public relations if I don’t go in!” Henry growled.

“You told her you’re a high school teacher. Say you go in now and beat her manager up, then what? You’re telling me a high school teacher has the guts to do that? Or are you going to tell her you lied and you’re actually the Law family’s only son?”

Jasper said to Henry sternly.

The agitated expression on Henry’s face froze, and a moment later, he asked, “So what do you have in mind?”

“Leave this to me, and try not to show yourself for now.”

Jasper continued sternly, “Since you created an alias at the very beginning, don’t expose yourself until the correct moment or you’ll end up making a stupid mistake. If that happens, then she’ll stop talking to you completely and you’ll lose everything.”

Life at the Top Chapter 1001

Henry clenched his jaw and spoke, "Fine, we'll follow your plan. But I want to give this f*cking manager a piece of my mind!"

"Don't worry."

Jasper patted Henry on the shoulder and raised his hand to push open the lounge's door.

His sudden entry interrupted Mr. Kain and Jill's argument.

The two of them looked at him at the same time.

Jasper met Jill's gaze.

Jasper was no stranger to Jill, of course.

However, this was the first time Jasper had seen her in person. In comparison to the mature and experienced Jill he had seen in media in his past life, the one before him looked rather refreshing and young.

Her features were average, but she exuded an aura not found in ordinary girls.

Perhaps Jill's unique confidence and calmness had something to do with her long-standing relationship with sports, as well as her ability to maintain her title as champion of women's diving for years.

This quality of hers might just be why Henry had fallen for her in the first place.

After all, most of Henry's sex buddies had appearances and figures much better than Jill's.

Even so, Henry married Jill, not those beautiful and alluring women.

"Who are you?"

Frowning, Mr. Kain interrupted Jasper's thoughts.

"I'm Jill's friend."

Jasper gave Jill a look to tell her not to expose him before he replied Mr. Kain calmly.

Mr. Kain frowned and looked at Jill suspiciously.

Jill had been in Swallow Capital with the National Diving Team the entire time. He did not know of any friends she had in Nauritus City.

Jill did not know what Jasper's intentions were, but his presence had at least soothed the tense atmosphere between her and Mr. Kain. Therefore, she told Mr. Kain, "He is my friend."

Mr. Kain harrumphed and replied, "Jill and I are talking about something important here. She doesn't have time for nonsense with random people like you."

Jasper smiled and replied, "But I'm not someone random. I heard you say you need a sponsor for 2 million Dollars, Mr. Kain."

Mr. Kain laughed and pointed at Jasper, "Look at the way you dress. I'm pretty sure your entire outfit costs less than 200 bucks. How am I supposed to believe that you can sponsor us that much?"

“I can.” Jasper gave Mr. Kain confirmation.

While Jasper’s wealth could not rival a country’s yet, it could certainly rival a city. The people in Jasper’s network were all extremely formidable, and he himself had grown much more sophisticated than before.

Mr. Kain muttered internally when he heard Jasper’s certain reply. ‘No way, unless I somehow met a low-profiled wealthy man with a penchant for acting weak to catch people off-guard...’

With that, Mr. Kain’s expression softened slightly. “Oh? If you’re able to sponsor that amount, then my doors will always be open to you.”

“Your doors will always be open to me? What for? Am I suppose to pick a few girls from your training team to eat and sleep with, Mr. Kain?”

“If that’s the case, then 2 million is way too much. I can have a few celebrities for that price,” Jasper spoke calmly.

Mr. Kain flushed when he heard this, and the man became enraged.

Life at the Top Chapter 1002

Mr. Kain looked at Jasper darkly and roared, "What are you implying here?!"

"I'm sure you understand what I'm implying, Mr. Kain. As a manager, you're supposed to be both the elder and shelter for your athletes.

"You should be doing everything you can to provide a safe training environment, but what are you doing now, procuring? Should I call you madam or a pimp?"

Jasper's words had Jill suppressing her laughter amidst her shock.

However, she immediately realized how inappropriate it was and covered her mouth.

Mr. Kain did not have the mind to care about Jill's reaction as he roared at Jasper in mortification.

"I don't care who you are! You're not welcome here, so get lost right now! Otherwise, I'll call security to chase you out!"

"Chase me out?" Jasper chuckled and spoke to Mr. Kain calmly, "I'm sure many people will be interested in what I heard just now. Say, Secretary Lee of the Nauritus City Government, for example?"

Mr. Kain laughed out loud and pointed at Jasper in disdain, "Who do you think you are? As if someone as important as Secretary Lee will spare you the time of day."

"Whether or not he spares me any time is for me to worry about. But are you willing to take that risk, Mr. Kain?"

Jasper's words caused Mr. Kain's expression to darken greatly.

His eyes flickered as he looked at Jasper. It seemed like he was weighing his options.

After all, Jasper's appearance had been too sudden and strange, while Mr. Kain had no leads as to who Jasper was at all.

Should the man genuinely be acquainted with Secretary Lee, then everything he had said and done earlier was enough to keep him behind bars for at least a decade.

Mr. Kain hesitated.

"What do you want?" Mr. Kain demanded in a low voice.

"I already told you. Jill is my friend, and she's also an athlete on the national team. Keep your disgusting hands to yourself," Jasper spoke calmly.

Mr. Kain scoffed and refuted, "And here I was wondering what you're going to do. In truth, you're just here to play the knight in shining armor.

"Take a look at yourself before you start trying to win girls over, brat. I might be wary of you if you're threatening me, but can you even protect Jill? You'll only get yourself killed!

"Jill's someone Mr. Byron Woolery from the Byron Group requested personally. Go fight him if you think you're so capable!"

Mr. Kain looked at Jasper with disdain and spat impolitely.

Jasper arched a brow.

He had heard of the Byron Group, which were a large company in Nauritus City.

To be considered a group during such times spoke volumes of how strong this company was.

Unlike 20 years in the future, where conglomerates and groups could be seen everywhere. By then, anybody could gather a few shell companies to form a hollow group.

Jasper had also heard of Byron Woolery. Byron was one of Dawson's main competitors for the title of richest man in the province before JW Capital was established.

However, Byron tended to be rather low-profile, and the man had a mysterious past. Not to mention that he was involved in the high-tech industry.

All this made him not an easy person to deal with.

Mr. Kain grew more prideful at Jasper's frown. "Are you afraid now? Do you even know who Mr. Woolery is? He doesn't even need to do anything to crush you! I'd get lost now if I were you!

"Or I'll call Mr. Woolery and tell him that you're standing between him and the woman he likes. By then, haha, you'll be dead before you even know it!"

Jill was terrified when she heard Mr. Kain.

She did not know who this Mr. Woolery of the Byron Group was, but Mr. Kain's prideful and fearless behavior told her that Mr. Woolery was someone she could not afford to offend.

She looked at Jasper pleadingly, "Please, bring me away. I'll go back to Swallow Capital right now."

Jasper had yet to say anything when Mr. Kain interrupted him. "As if he'd dare! He has nowhere to run to! Mr. Woolery will be able to dig his entire ancestry up and kill his family the moment he dares bring you out the doors of the Provincial Team!”

Jill’s complexion paled further.

She and Jasper were strangers. While she had no idea why Jasper had come to help her, the man would surely give her up to save himself in the face of such a strong opponent.

‘So I really have to meet with that Mr. Woolery?’

Jill bit her lip. Despair washed over her face.

“So you’re going to bully someone because you have another party’s support?” Jasper looked at Mr. Kain and asked.

Mr. Kain was enraged. “What did you say? Do you want to f*cking die?”

Jasper chuckled and turned to Jill. “Come on, I’ll bring you away. I’d like to see if this Mr. Woolery is as powerful as Mr. Kain claims.”

Jill looked at Jasper in shock and said instinctively, “But what if they take revenge on you...”

“No ‘but’s,” Jasper smiled, “Someone asked me to help, so just follow me.”

Jill wracked her brain but could not come up with anyone she knew that could ask for Jasper’s help. Even so, she bit her lip and nodded.

Jasper’s presence was mysterious, but Jill would rather trust Jasper than stay and be forced to sleep with someone she did not even know.

Mr. Kain was furious when he saw how Jasper still dared to bring Jill away.

He was also terrified.

Mr. Woolery had asked for Jill, and he had sworn and promised to bring Jill over to Mr. Woolery tonight. He would be screwed if he went back on his words now.

“Don’t move!” Mr. Kain shouted.

Jasper ignored him and brought Jill downstairs.

Once they reached the lobby downstairs, Jasper realized that the lobby doors were closed and a few bodyguards were staring him down.

Jasper frowned slightly.

At that moment, they heard Mr. Kain’s quick footsteps behind them.

He waved his phone proudly and said, “You two are dead. Mr. Woolery already knows about this and he’s on the way over. Just wait until he comes—you’re as good as dead! Hahaha!”

Mr. Kain’s arrogance and glee were interrupted by a black figure that rushed over and kicked him in the small of his back. With a pitiful shout, Mr. Kain flew a few meters away.

“Stupid f*cker!”

Henry straightened his clothes and scolded harshly.

Life at the Top Chapter 1003

Henry had almost broken Mr. Kain's back with the kick.

Placing a hand over his lower back, Mr. Kain laid on the floor and moaned in agony.

The kick would have almost cost Mr. Kain his life had he not been an athlete in his younger years and trained his body.

After catching his breath, Mr. Kain was enraged and he shouted at Henry. "Who the f*ck do you think you are? How dare you hit me! Security! Where's the security?!"

A few security guards quickly ran over but they did not dare to move rashly when they saw the fierce look on Henry's face.

Who were they kidding? The guards here were just normal people earning a monthly salary of a few hundred bucks. They did not need to risk their lives with someone troublesome like Henry.

Not to mention, Mr. Kain's reputation in the Sports Center was horrible and many people had a bone to pick with him. Therefore, not every security guard felt the need to protect him.

"The f*ck are you screaming about?" Henry was enraged and about to kick him again when he suddenly remembered that Jill was present. As far as she was concerned, he was supposed to be a middle school teacher!

A high school teacher was supposed to be gentlemanly and soft-spoken. They did not hit others so brashly!

Henry wracked his brain trying to recall the aura and speech pattern his teachers used to have. Then, he turned his head to smile brightly and harmlessly at Jill, who was extremely shocked.

“Hi, hello. We meet again.”

Jasper was close to vomiting at Henry’s bashful and childlike behavior.

This man could get an Oscar with his performance.

“Why, why are you here?” Jill gasped.

“I was in the area, so I thought I’d come and look for you,” Henry scratched his head and spoke.

Jill smiled wryly and replied, “I’m in quite a bit of trouble now, you should leave—for your sake.”

Despite already knowing the answer, Henry feigned ignorance and asked, “What trouble?”

A second later, Henry immediately continued in a serious tone, “We’re friends, aren’t we? So how can I just leave when you’re in trouble? Don’t worry, I’ll definitely help you!”

“You can’t help me with this.”

Jill sighed and spoke. ‘There’s no way you can help me when you’re just a normal high school teacher.’

Henry was close to exposing himself and telling Jill that he was the young master of Harbor City’s most formidable family. His dad, her future father-in-law, was Zachary Law, and his grandfather was Tom Law. They did not fear any other family within Somerland.

Even so, those thoughts came out as, “But I’m still willing to weather it with you.”

“...” Jasper shook his head and sighed. He felt incredibly awkward standing there.

While Jill looked at Henry confusedly. At the very least, she did not chase him off anymore.

The current situation was extremely complicated.

Seeing how Henry and Jill were busy flirting in front of him, Mr. Kain roared once he managed to get to his feet with great difficulty after being helped up by two security guards.

“Just you wait! I’ll make sure both of you die a horrible death once Mr. Woolery gets here! You b*tch and b*stard!”

Kain then snickered at Henry and taunted, “You f*cking like Jill, don’t you?”

“I might as well tell you then that Mr. Woolery already has his eyes on Jill! You’ll be dead before you know it for trying to steal his woman!”

“You’re going to have to watch as Mr. Woolery brings Jill away. I’ll make you suffer slowly when that happens! You’ll pay for kicking me, just you f*cking wait!”

Henry Law.

There was hardly a day that went by in which he did not offend others.

Therefore, when Mr. Kain pointed at Henry and shouted, every word he uttered was a test of the latter’s patience.

With his back facing Jill, Henry’s expression was exceptionally sinister.

This was an aura he had accumulated from being the most formidable trust-fund child for the past twenty years. It was ruthless and overpowering, but also effective.

Mr. Kain's smile slowly faded. Henry might not have said anything because Jill was present, but his expression was enough to have Mr. Kain suck in a cold breath. Mr. Kain felt an inexplicable sense of danger and instantly stopped provoking Henry.

'Whatever. You trash are going to die once Mr. Woolery comes anyway!'

When he thought of this, Mr. Kain suddenly felt much happier and his hip stopped hurting so badly.

Jasper took in the scene before him and pulled out his phone to send Secretary Lee a message.

Regardless of who Byron was, this Mr. Kain had already broken the law. Dealing with these people personally would only dirty Jasper's hands. However, Secretary Lee was the perfect person for the job.

Secretary Lee was currently reporting his findings in the City Government's office.

"Chief, so these are our work arrangements for the time being. It's mainly thanks to the development of the Southface River which boosted Nauritus City's notability within the country.

"The bureau's been receiving countless calls from other sister cities to come and visit," Secretary Lee spoke with unconcealable glee.

The municipal official laughed out loud and spoke. He was in a great mood too. "Very good. Nauritus City has indeed produced a highly promising project. Even the higher-ups have praised it.

“They also brought it up during the meeting I attended with the provincial official in Swallow Capital. The provincial official and I were very proud when they called it a positive example worth learning from.”

Secretary Lee was about to reply when his phone vibrated.

He frowned slightly. As a secretary, he had his phone set to silent when he was reporting to the chief. Only special incoming phone calls and messages would get through.

This meant that any notification he received was of great importance.

Hence, he did not hesitate to pull his phone out in front of Nauritus City’s Municipal Official.

Reading the contents, Secretary Lee’s expression darkened.

“What is it?” Nauritus City’s Municipal Official asked.

“Look at this, Chief.” Secretary Lee handed his phone over.

The Nauritus City municipal official took a glance at the screen and his expression immediately hardened.

“This is nonsense!”

Nauritus City’s Municipal Official slammed his hand on his desk and roared, “How could such things happen in Nauritus City? Put everything else on hold first, Secretary Lee. See that this matter is resolved!”

“These people are getting bolder by the day! I want each and every one of them investigated! Strictly!”

“Yes, Chief. I’ll get to it right away,” Secretary Lee quickly acknowledged the order, sensing the chief’s anger.

At the same time, Byron was also extremely pissed as he sped toward the Provincial Sports Center.

“F*cking hell. I’m going to catch that troublesome b*stard and teach him a lesson! Jill’s supposed to be my gift to Mr. Welch! I’m going to kill everyone that gets in my way!”

Byron muttered to himself sinisterly in the back seat of the Benz.

Life at the Top Chapter 1004

Soon after, Byron arrived at the building beside the Provincial Team's training center. The two parties were still fighting when he arrived.

Byron's arrival was akin to the messiah's for Mr. Kain.

"You're finally here, Mr. Woolery!"

Mr. Kain quickly ran to greet him and pointed at Jasper. "This is the one. I was just discussing with Jill about joining you for dinner tonight when this b*stard interrupted us, Mr. Woolery. She was about to say yes too."

Jill immediately refuted him, "You're lying! I never agreed to your request at all!"

Mr. Kain's expression darkened and he chided, "Shut up. You are in no position to speak here!"

"Haha..."

Byron had an arrogant expression on his face. Without sparing Jill a look, he made a beeline to Jasper and spoke sinisterly, "My name's Byron Woolery. You don't look familiar, so do remind me how I've offended you to the point that you have to meddle in my affairs?"

"We've never met before. There's no offense to speak of," Jasper replied calmly.

"Ah, that's fair. Now that I think about it, we really haven't met before," Byron chuckled in enlightenment.

His expression was warm and there was no sign of anger or resentment.

Yet, the moment he finished speaking, Byron seemed to have changed into a completely different person. The smile on his face vanished, leaving only ruthlessness and a sinister frost. He roared at Jasper, "Then who gave you the right to interrupt my business?!"

The roar gave everyone present a shock.

Byron drilled his gaze into Jasper as if trying to pierce through the latter with his frigid and fierce eyes.

Mr. Kain was absolutely elated by the side. He peered at Jasper pridefully and felt the urge to stomp all over Jasper at that moment.

Despite this, Jasper remained unfazed as he looked at Byron indifferently, "This matter involves Jill. Naturally, I'll have to step in."

"Hahahaha!"

