Byron laughed out loud and raised his hand to point at Jasper's nose. "Take a look at yourself first before you talk and act out, young man. There are things beyond your control.

"Be careful, or you'll end up getting yourself in trouble too instead of solving what you set out to do."

"How do you plan to get me in trouble, Mr. Woolery?" Jasper asked Byron with a smile.

"You really aren't afraid of dying, are you?" Byron narrowed his eyes and sneered at Jasper.

"Go ahead, then. Tell me your name and what your family does. I'd like to see what family brought up such an insolent child as you."

Jasper was a man in his early twenties. As far as Byron was concerned, this young man was only acting arrogant because his family had power.

Not that Byron cared though. Sure, there were certain people this man could not afford to offend in Nauritus City, but this young man could not be one of them.

“My family are all normal people. I have no need to hide my name either, I’m Jasper Laine,” He introduced himself.

“Jasper Laine?”

Byron chuckled. Only to suddenly remember something as his expression instantly froze.

He looked Jasper over again.

There was a Jasper Laine among the people he could not afford to offend in Nauritus City. That man was young, and also in his early twenties.

Jasper was a renowned figure, known for his entrepreneurship and countless companies that were all formidable competitors in their respective industries.

Ordinary people might not know of Jasper, but Byron was technically a wealthy businessman and part of Nauritus City’s upper-class. Byron might not have met Jasper before, but he had certainly heard of the young man’s name.

Life at the Top Chapter 1005

Dawson's future son-in-law, the owner of JW Company, and the majority shareholder of the Southface River project.

Any one of the three identities was enough to terrify Byron.

"You said your name was Jasper Laine?" Byron narrowed his eyes and asked.

He could not believe that this insolent brat he happened to meet was actually someone so formidable.

This was too coincidental.

"I'm honored to know that you've heard of me, Mr. Woolery," Jasper said calmly.

Jasper's words confirmed Byron's guess.

The man's expression turned conflicted.

The situation was more complicated now.

A flurry of emotions crossed Byron's mind as he began to come up with a counter-strategy.

At that moment, Mr. Kain spoke with little idea of what was going on.

"Who cares if your name is Jasper or Jabber? So what if you're Jasper Laine? I've never heard of your name in Nauritus City before!

“Don’t waste time talking nonsense to nobodies like him, Mr. Woolery. Just beat them up and throw them out the door.”

Mr. Kain pointed at Henry next and spoke resentfully, “And this f*cker too! He kicked me just now! Mr. Woolery, you’ve got to do me justice! This matter can’t just end so simply!”

Henry sneered at Mr. Kain. If Jill was not here, Henry would have already slapped Mr. Kain in retaliation considering his temper.

“And who are you?” Byron looked at Henry and asked solemnly.

“Me? I’m from a family of Laws,” Henry grinned and told Byron.

Byron’s expression soured further.

Law was an uncommon surname in Nauritus City. Even then, only one Law family had any relations to Jasper—the same Law family that no one in Somerland could afford to offend.

Everyone in Nauritus City knew that Jasper was close with the third heir of the Law family, Henry. The two were essentially joined at the hip.

Hence, Byron did not even have to ask Henry to confirm his identity.

He was truly screwed now.

The last thing he expected when he sought out a woman for Mr. Welch was to end up offending Nauritus City’s most talked-about and powerful Jasper Laine, as well as Henry Law, the notorious trust-fund child.

Cold sweat beaded over Byron’s forehead as he sucked in a cold breath. Then, he turned around suddenly to slap Mr. Kain while the man continued to shout.

“You stupid b*stard! Would it kill you to f*cking shut up?!”

Mr. Kain was stunned by Byron’s slap and the scoldings that followed.

He was still dreaming about Mr. Woolery supporting him as he harshly humiliated the two insolent young men mere moments ago. Yet, here he was getting slapped and scolded in the next second.

“Mr... Mr. Woolery?” Mr. Kain cupped his burning cheek and shouted in disbelief as his lips quivered.

Byron glared at Mr. Kain before he turned around. Mr. Kain then watched in utter disbelief as Byron walked to Jasper with a polite and pleasant smile.

“My apologies, Mr. Laine. It didn’t occur to me that I’d meet the president of JW Company here. I’m sorry for my prior offense, please forgive me.”

Life at the Top Chapter 1006

Glancing at Byron's outstretched hands, Jasper did not move.

"How could a nobody like me be qualified to shake the majestic Mr. Woolery's hand?"

Byron's smile froze but he forced himself to continue as he spoke, "Mr. Laine, I already told you that it was a misunderstanding earlier. I didn't know who you were then."

"Mr. Woolery, what do the vile things you've done have anything to do with who I am?"

"Or perhaps you're telling me, that you'd have someone beat me up and throw me outside if not for my current identity."

Jasper stated.

Byron's smile slowly faded and he looked at Jasper calmly. "We're all just trying to make money here in Nauritus City, Mr. Laine. A mere woman isn't worth straining our relationship over."

"People say that Mr. Laine is an understanding and attentive young talent. I'm sure he wouldn't make such a stupid mistake, right?"

Jasper chuckled and replied, "This is more like it, Mr. Woolery. I already told you that Jill is my friend. Therefore, I'll openly interfere in this matter."

"What are you going to do about it?"

Byron scoffed. If Jasper was unwilling to give in, then he would let go of his inhibitions as well.

“Don’t act so arrogant, Jasper. You think you’re the king here in Nauritus City? It’ll be ages until that happens. Do you even know what I’m using Jill for?”

“She’s my gift to Mr. Welch! Haha, I’m afraid you aren’t even qualified enough to know who Mr. Welch is, right?”

Byron’s expression turned haughty, “In that case, let me tell you: Mr. Welch is the President of Softwin’s Somerland branch!

“Do you even know what kind of company Softwin is? It’s the biggest investment back in Sunrise Land! The JW Company you’re so proud of means nothing to them! It’s no more than an above-average ant to them!

“Offend Mr. Welch and you’ll end up suffering the rest of your career! That’s why I told you that there are things beyond your control!”

Jasper frowned slightly at Byron’s words.

He had not expected Echo to be involved in this as well.

Byron took Jasper’s frown as a show of fear and immediately laughed out loud.

“Good, you’re afraid. Word of advice, young man, the world is bigger than you think. Your JW has no more than slight local influence. You’re nothing once you leave this place!

“Be smart and I’ll be willing to go easy on you. I can treat you to a meal another day and we can still be friends.

Byron looked at Jasper and said casually, "I've already given you an option to back away, Jasper, so you better take it. You're the one that's going to suffer if you blow this out of proportion and make a fool out of everyone here. Do I make myself clear?"

"I'm familiar with Echo, he just left my office this morning," Jasper replied calmly.

Jasper ignored the change in Byron's expression and narrowed his eyes. He continued to speak, "Let me guess, Mr. Woolery. As the owner of a high-end navigation equipment enterprise, you want to do business in the Sunrise market. Correct?"

"And Softwin just so happens to be able to help you with this. Hence, you're willing to do anything to beg them, even if it means being their pimp and serving girls to him on a silver platter, yes?" Jasper questioned calmly.

Byron looked ashamed by what Jasper said. However, the latter was an experienced man, so he managed to regain his composure quickly. "Let's not talk about how your guess is complete bullsh*t yet, Jasper. In the first place, does my private life have anything to do with you?"

"You're right, Mr. Woolery. Your private life is not of my concern at all. Even so, out of everyone you could have targeted, Jill is the last person you should've set your eyes!"

Jasper's voice echoed by the staircases.

"Do you know who Jill is? She's a member of the national team! An outstanding athlete in Somerland's Sports field, a national hero!"

"How dare you even think of giving her to a Sunriser? Did you forget the painful history our ancestors suffered decades ago?"

"I wonder if you can afford the public's anger if word of your actions got out, Mr. Woolery?"

Byron was stunned. He could not refute him as he realized that Jasper had perfectly captured the harm of Byron's actions.

"Hmph! Sharp-tongued b*stard. I'll make you pay for this!"

Byron snapped as he turned to leave the scene of the crime.

He had just turned around when he saw Secretary Lee's car pull up at the entrance.

As a large entrepreneur in Nauritus City, Byron knew who Secretary Lee was.

His expression changed slightly and he looked at Jasper instinctively. He knew that Jasper was the one who had called Secretary Lee over.

Jasper looked at him meaningfully, and Byron felt his heart race frantically at the intent gaze.

Secretary Lee walked out of the car and swept his eyes over everyone present. His gaze fell on Byron for a short second before the man walked over to shake Jasper's hand. "We meet again, Mr. Laine."

Jasper smiled. "My apologies for troubling you over such a small issue, Secretary Lee."

Secretary Lee did not smile as he responded, "It pains and embarrasses me to know that something like this is happening."

Jasper pointed at a pale Mr. Kain not too far away and said, "The person in question is over there. You can question him yourself, Secretary Lee."

Secretary Lee walked over to Mr. Kain darkly and spoke, "I'm going to ask you just one question. Did you or did you not force the athletes under your management to do things they didn't want to?!"

Mr. Kain felt his legs go weak as he looked at Byron and pleaded with a wail, “Mr. Woolery, I only did it for you! Please save me!”

Byron’s expression changed as his plan to remove himself from the situation was instantly foiled. He roared, “What nonsense are you spouting? I don’t even know you!”

Mr. Kain’s paled.

He was about to argue when Jill stepped out.

“I can testify. Mr. Kain had forced me to go drinking with Byron just now. He told me that if I went, Byron would then sponsor us 500 thousand US Dollars!”

Both Mr. Kain and Byron looked devastated.

Secretary Lee glared at the two harshly before he smiled and turned to Jill. “Are you someone from their company, Miss?”

“No, I’m from the national team. Mr. Kain and I knew each other in the past, so he invited me to instruct in his company.”

The national team!

The corner of Secretary Lee’s eye twitched. At that moment, he felt the urge to slap Mr. Kain across the face. This b*stard had no limits at all.

Life at the Top Chapter 1007

“I’m sorry, I’m sorry, Jill. It’s my fault, I didn’t mean it. I was forced too!”

There was no trace of his former fierceness as Mr. Kain fell to his knees and begged.

“I was tempted, Byron promised to sponsor the provincial team 500 thousand and pay me another 200 thousand if I did as he asked. I only did it because I was tempted by money.

“Jill, please help me! Seeing as how I brought you to where you are today, help me put in a word! I don’t want to go to prison!”

Mr. Kain wailed. He saw how Jill’s expression hardened and she did not say anything, so he kneeled in front of Jasper next.

“Mr. Laine, Sir, Daddy, please! Please, I’m begging you! Please! I was blind, I was insolent! I shouldn’t have targeted your friend, but I really didn’t know any better!

“Please, please, just forgive me this once! I really don’t want to go to prison! I still have a wife and kids; I still have my parents to take care of! I can’t go to prison!”

Mr. Kain sounded pitiful as he begged, but no one sympathized with the man.

Sympathizing meant condoning his crimes and God knows how many girls had fallen victim to Mr. Kain before.

If Jill was not the first victim, then who would take justice for those girls? He simply could not be forgiven.

“Enough!”

Secretary Lee shouted and pointed at Mr. Kain, “There’s no point in begging anyone right now. You’ll face legal consequences for your actions!”

Secretary Lee then turned to Byron and spoke unkindly, “You’re one of Nauritus City’s celebrity entrepreneurs, Mr. Woolery. How could you do such a thing? Explain yourself!”

Byron’s complexion paled and he finally clenched his jaw to speak, “This has nothing to do with me. Don’t listen to Kain lie and frame me, I didn’t promise him anything. Nor did I tell him to bring girls to me.”

“Hah.” Henry could not hold back any longer. “I thought that Kain was shameless, but it did not cross my mind that you’d be even worse. That’s alright, though, because I came prepared.”

Henry then pulled out his phone and replayed an audio recording.

The contents of the recording conveyed exactly what Bryon had said earlier when he threatened Jasper.

The recording clearly indicated Byron’s role in the incident.

It also shed light on Echo Welch’s involvement.

Byron’s expression changed drastically when he heard the contents of the recording.

Secretary’s Lee’s gaze instantly darkened as well.

“Thank you for your trouble, Mr. Laine,” Secretary Lee spoke grimly.

“Quite a few people are involved in this since our victim’s a female athlete that brings pride to our country. This is a matter involving the national team and the Sunrisers.

“I just can’t bear to see our country’s future at stake. Sorry to trouble you, Secretary Lee. There’s still something I have to do, so I’ll be leaving first.”

Jasper then made a move to leave. Byron took a step forward to stop Jasper but was held back by the two men Secretary Lee had brought with him.

“Perhaps you should come back with me first, Mr. Woolery. Please cooperate as we investigate your matter,” Secretary Lee spat distastefully.

Byron raged, “What do you mean, ‘my matter’? Just because of a recording? What are you doing? Let me go!”

Ignoring Byron’s wails of protest, Jasper looked toward the sky and realized that it was getting late. He still had dinner with Wayne and Jose, so Jasper turned to ask Henry, “Where are you two going next?”

“Jill’s got to be terrified. I was thinking I’d book her into a hotel so she can get some rest for now,” Henry immediately replied.

“No!”

Jill seemed wary of Henry, but she also realized how her rejection might hurt Henry’s self-esteem and she quickly explained, “I have an aunt here in Nauritus City, so I’ll stay with her instead. I’m leaving for Swallow Capital tomorrow anyway.”

Henry sounded disappointed as he asked, “Tomorrow? Why so soon?”

“I only came to Nauritus City to pay back the favor I owed Mr. Kain, but I didn’t expect him to be like this. I should be going back now as I still have training tomorrow. I’ve got to prepare for the next competition,” Jill explained.

Henry's reluctance to let Jill go was written all over his face, but he did not have a good reason to ask her to stay either.

"Miss Cobb is going back because she has things to do. Of course, that'll take precedence. I thought you have training in Swallow Capital next week too, Henry? You'll get to meet her then."

At this moment, Jasper chimed in and gave Henry the perfect reason to look for Jill in Swallow Capital.

Henry's eyes shone and he nodded vigorously. "Yes, yes, I almost forgot! Thanks for reminding me."

"You two know each other?!" Jill asked, looking at the two suspiciously.

Henry's smile froze and frantically started thinking about how he should reply when Jasper smiled and did it for him. "I told you a friend asked me to help, right? That was Henry."

Jill tilted her head suspiciously. She was not a gullible person.

"But how did you know I was in trouble?"

"We didn't. Henry said he wanted to introduce a new friend to me, so he brought me over to look for you. We thought we'd invite you for a meal or something, but we didn't expect something like this to happen.

"Thank goodness nothing horrible happened."

There were no loopholes in Jasper's smile, tone, or statement. So while Jill did feel something was off about the excuse he offered, she could not pinpoint exactly what was wrong with it.

"Okay..." Jill nodded hesitantly as she reluctantly accepted the explanation.

“I’ll be going, then. You two have fun.” It was getting late and Jasper did not plan to disturb the duo, so he quickly waved and left.

Jill watched Jasper leave and turned to ask Henry curiously, “Is this friend of yours really rich and powerful?”

“He’s not too bad,” Henry replied casually.

“Didn’t you see how cool he was just now? You’re just a high school teacher, so how can you just say he’s ‘not too bad’? Sure, we shouldn’t look down on ourselves, but we have to admit it when other people are outstanding too, okay?” Jill said seriously.

Henry was about to reply when he suddenly thought of something. He asked warily, “You didn’t fall for him, did you?”

Jill glared at Henry and refuted, “What kind of nonsense is that?”

Jasper agreed to meet Wayne in the Imperial Kitchen.

The three were now much closer than when they had met for the first time, but there was still an invisible barrier between Jasper and the other two.

Jasper still had a smile on his face when he shook Wayne's hand. Then, he pulled out a complete set of Grimms' Fairy Tales.

"Both Volume 1 and 2. I know that you're a fan of fairytales, and that you've love Grimms' work a lot, Mr. Marlon. So I had someone find a complete set in Harbor City. I hope it's to your liking."

Wayne was surprised to receive such a gift.

"Thank you, Mr. Laine. I'll treasure this gift," Wayne put away the books happily.

The three then slipped into their seats.

Both Jasper and Wayne were well aware that this present was merely a conversation starter. No matter how valuable this gift was, it would hold no sway in their negotiation later.

Dinner began and instead of jumping straight to business negotiations, Jasper chatted aimlessly with Wayne and Jose.

Having lived five to six decades his past life and been through quite a lot in this timeline, Jasper was able to add his own two cents to any given topic. Wayne was also a talkative person, so coupled with Jose occasional comments, the atmosphere was harmonious as the three chatted.

After dinner was over, Jasper placed his cutlery down lightly.

At that moment, the two men who would one day become Somerland's most formidable figures in the dot-com industry could not help but place their cutlery down as well.

No matter what their future held, Jasper's current wealth and status were not something Wayne and Jose could compare to. Thus, it would be inappropriate if they continued to eat once Jasper stopped.

"Oh, right. Something interesting happened today."

Jasper retold the incident from that afternoon regarding Mr. Kain and Jill. After all, Echo, who was involved in the incident, was closely related to Abbylon.

Wayne frowned. The Softwin representative he was in contact with the most was, without a doubt, the President of the Somerland branch, Echo Welch.

He understood this man's character—He was extremely lecherous and had a fetish for Somer beauties.

Perhaps it had to do with his stunted height, but Echo loved long-legged beauties the most.

Wayne had received countless unreasonable requests from Echo before, and it had given him quite the few headaches. He just did not expect the man to set his eyes on Jill too.

Jasper saw Wayne and Jose's expressions change for the worse and knew that his plan had worked. Still, this story was just a conversation starter.

At the same time, it was also a catalyst to have Wayne choose him over Echo.

"Having said that, let's get straight to the main topic!"

Jasper smiled and said directly.

“I want to be Abbylon’s majority shareholder!”

Jasper finally started talking about his true goal. While Wayne and Jose had expected it, they still found it quite unbelievable.

Jasper was asking a bit too much.

He was taking this opportunity to crush Softwin’s Somerland branch’s influence and power.

“Mr. Laine, you know that they hold 41% of Abbylon’s shares. I’m afraid this is going to be very, very difficult.” Wayne smiled wryly.

Life at the Top Chapter 1009

“But 59% is still in your hands, no?” Jasper replied, having already expected such a reaction from Wayne.

Wayne and Jose exchanged a look as the latter replied, “Mr. Laine, I’m afraid forcefully suppressing Softwin with our shares will only result in an unrepairable discord between both parties. The slightest mistake and Abbylon will be over.”

Jasper got up and walked over to stand behind Wayne and Jose. He placed his hands on each of their shoulders and leaned down such that his head was between the two men.

“As long as we have the eighteen founders, as long as we have you two, Mr. Marlon and Mr. Salazar, then who cares if Abbylon falls? There can always be another company—another Abbylon. It’s a simple concept and I’m sure the both of you understand this.”

Wayne stared deeply at Jasper and asked solemnly, “What do you want, Mr. Laine?”

“Me?” Jasper chuckled and straightened himself to reply, “Hudson Moore from Terizone asked me a similar question back then. I told him that I wanted to turn Terizone into a mega-enterprise worth trillions on the market.”

“But now.” Jasper looked at Wayne. The man’s eyes shone with certainty and exceptional confidence.

“I can tell you that I plan to make Abbylon into the greatest and most respected enterprise out there. Its market value isn’t important because it’s going to be responsible for society in its entirety. It’ll soon change how society lives!”

Wayne shot to his feet when he heard Jasper.

He felt blood run hotly through his veins as his heart thumped erratically in his chest. Gushes of warm blood rushed to his brain as sweat began to bead on his forehead.

No one knew, nor had Wayne ever told anyone, that he had never founded Abbylon for the money. He just wanted to start a great enterprise that would change everyone's lives.

Making money just so happened to be an unavoidable path toward that goal.

He knew no one would believe him if he told this. In fact, doing so would only result in them mocking him.

Yet, on this day, he had finally felt it with Jasper.

The feeling of finding his soulmate who truly understood what he wanted.

Jasper looked at Wayne and continued grimly, "Mr. Marlon. Be it Softwin or any other capitalist investor, they'll only invest in Abbylon because they see your potential to make great profits in the future.

"But I'm different from them. What I see is a whole new world, one that we can create together!"

Blood rushed to his head and Wayne had almost instantly agreed out of sheer excitement. At that crucial moment, Jose's words poured over him like a bucket of cold water.

"Mr. Laine, Softwin has already invested more than 25 million US Dollars in Abbylon. Moreover, Myles has told us that he's willing to invest more as long as Abbylon requires it.

“If we were to kick Softwin out now, it won’t matter how exciting this future you speak of is. You’re still going to have to face Softwin, a formidable opponent.”

Jose’s words reeled Wayne back from his wishful thoughts. The man’s mind immediately steadied and cleared up.

Meanwhile, Jasper frowned slightly.

In all honesty, Jasper really wanted to have Julian come in and seal Jose’s mouth shut if he could.

Jasper’s partnership with Wayne would already have succeeded if not for Jose.

However, the man’s behavior showed how uniquely pragmatic he was. It was pointless trying to build a vision with him, for he only believed what he saw.

“Is 25 million a lot?”

Jasper answered calmly.

Life at the Top Chapter 1010

Jasper raised a hand to stop Jose as the latter tried to say something, and continued grandly, "In terms of investment, I won't give you any less than Softwin!

"At the same time, all I need is full support from Abbylon's shareholders to fight against Softwin. I'll do everything else. I'll invest in you and I'll do the legwork, while all you need to do is vote for me when the time comes."

Wayne and Jose exchanged a look before the latter told Jasper, "Mr. Laine, I hope you can give us sufficient reason to trust you by then.

"Otherwise, forgive us for choosing Softwin, who helped us in our time of need, instead of you."

Jasper smiled. "It's good to repay kindness with kindness. But if you know that the other party harbored bad intentions, then why repay evil with kindness?"

Jose frowned slightly. He rather disliked Jasper's forcefulness and had no recollection of Softwin's so-called bad intentions.

"Mr. Laine, please allow us to discuss this for another two days."

Jose then pulled Wayne away.

Jasper narrowed his gaze as he watched the duo leave intently...

In a hotel in Nauritus City.

Echo was currently pacing about in frustration.

Beside him, Yona looked pitiful and quite funny with bandages covering his nose.

“Is there still no news?” Echo stopped walking about to ask Yona.

Yona replied with a heavy grunt, “Not yet.”

“B*stard!” Echo cursed and said darkly, “First it was Abbylon Inc, with that Jasper jumping out to cause trouble, now we can’t even contact Byron! What is this Somer dog doing?”

“Does he not know I like that woman a lot? How dare he vanish on me now?”

Just then, Echo’s laptop on the table lit up.

Yona immediately went to check it and he told Echo, “Mr. Welch, Mr. Shon’s requesting for a video call.”

“Connect it.” Echo sat before the laptop solemnly while straightening his clothes. After this, a skinny and short old man appeared on the laptop’s screen.

“Mr. Shon,” Echo greeted Myles courteously.

Myles looked at Echo calmly through the laptop and said, “Echo, I heard that something happened to Abbylon? Why didn’t you report it to me?”

Echo’s palm shook slightly from where it hid under the camera as he internally cursed this old man for not trusting him; There had to be countless spies hidden by Echo’s side. Even so, the man replied politely.

“Mr. Shon, something did happen. Someone wants to invest in Abbylon and they’re asking for a very high percentage of the shares. Their investment will threaten our position in Abbylon.”

“Have you dealt with it yet?” Myles asked expressionlessly.

“I’m dealing with it now,” Echo replied with his head down.

“Incompetent!” Myles shouted and scolded.

“Yes, Mr. Shon! I’m sorry! I’m incompetent!” Echo replied frantically, not daring to argue at all.

“You know that I have an extremely bullish view on Abbylon’s future. There is no room for mistakes on this. Put every other task aside and focus on dealing with Abbylon.”

“Otherwise I’ll transfer you back into the country even if the Trider family begs me not to. Understood?”

“I understand, Mr. Shon. I’ll definitely give you satisfactory news as soon as I can.” Echo responded loudly.

Then, he spoke in a light tone, “Echo, I know that you have a liking for Somer women. But this is a forgivable issue, so I will not interfere in this.

“However, you must understand that Softwin has their own interests to protect. I’m sure you know what will happen if I hear that you’ve interfered with Softwin’s interests because of something like that.”

Echo’s pupils contracted slightly as he tilted his head down to reply, “I know my limits, Mr. Shon.”

Myles gave Echo one last look before ending the call.

Echo let out a deep sigh once the screen turned black. At that moment, he touched his back only to realize that it had become completely drenched without his knowledge.

“Idiot!” Echo ground his teeth and scolded, “Myles has to have spies in the company. He knows everything we’ve done.”

Yona leaned over to Echo and asked, “Should I investigate, Mr. Welch?”

“Yes, but not now.” Echo’s gaze was horrifyingly dark.

“First we need to find out what happened with Byron. Then, we need the company to do everything it can to attack Jasper’s businesses. We don’t have time for investigations now.

“We can investigate we’re done with those two. I just need to find out who sold me out—getting rid of him will only evoke Myles’ suspicion.”

“You’re wise, Mr. Welch,” Yona praised impressively.

With a harrumph, Echo walked to the window. Looking down from where he stood, Echo could see the bright and bustling Southface River.

“Jasper truly is a talented man. This Southface Project would be an outstanding and advanced city-modernizing project even if it was built in Sunrise Land!

“Immediately redirect all of the investment bank’s powers in Somerland to launch a comprehensive attack on Jasper’s properties. Focus on his real estate projects. I want him to learn that he’ll only get one thing out of angering me.

“Death!”

Echo’s order was immediately relayed to Softwin Investments’ Somerland branch headquarters in Waterhoof City.

Life at the Top Chapter 1011

Today was an ordinary day for most people.

However, to Southeast Province's real estate industry, today was extremely happening.

This was because three of Southeast province's top five real estate companies had suddenly released statements right after the workday began, stating that they had initiated a partnership with Softwin.

Softwin had invested a total of 6 billion Somer Dollars into those three enterprises so they could develop Southeast Province's real estate industry.

The officially number one ranked real estate company in the Southeast Province was JW Real Estates.

With the Southface River project as their golden brand image, and a total of forty-six profitable construction projects within the province, JW Real Estates had proven their strength and position as the number one enterprise despite being founded less than a year ago.

Even so, Softwin had suddenly invested in the number two, three, and four real estate enterprises, avoiding JW altogether.

Everyone could tell what Softwin's goal was.

It was trying to use the strength of the three subsequent real estate companies to overturn JW Real Estates.

The news had sent shockwaves through Southeast Province's real estate industry.

Now, everyone was looking at JW Real Estates, waiting for them to react.

In Southface River Tower's office sat Jasper, who had immediately rushed over to the company once he heard the news. The man took a sip of scalding hot tea and closed his eyes.

He had spent most of the night awake, so he took what little time he had now to rest his eyes.

Dawson was also in the office, smoking a cigarette with a dark look on his face.

He glanced at Jasper and said, "How about you take a break and rest for a few hours? You won't be able to work peacefully even if you push on after staying awake for so long."

Jasper smiled. "How can I sleep when the enemy's already at our door?"

Sean, the President of the real estate group, was also in the office. The man's brows were tightly knitted together and he looked very concerned.

"Mr. Schuler, Mr. Laine, what do we do now?"

"This news puts us at a great disadvantage. Not to mention that the people from the company are feeling uneasy as well. I've received multiple calls from senior executives asking if JW Capital has any countermeasures in place."

Dawson frowned slightly and replied, "The other three real estate enterprises are long-standing businesses here in the Southeast Province. They're very strong.

"Our Southface River project may have caught them off guard, but their business hasn't been too affected, nor have they suffered too much thanks to the hype in the real estate industry.

“Softwin’s huge investment will turn out to be horrible news for us if Softwin suddenly instructs them to attack JW in the Southeast Province.”

Sean sighed and seemed to age a few years as he exhaled.

“The sudden rise of JW has already changed the face of Southeast Province’s entire real estate industry. Most long-standing enterprises before us were enraged by us, but they just did not say anything. We rose too quickly, and before they realized it, we accumulated strength on par with them.

“All they needed was an opportunity to deal with us and they would seize the opportunity. So, now that this investment bank Softwin has passed them a knife, they’re coming for us with or without Softwin’s instructions.”

Jasper opened his eyes and smiled. “You’re already stunted by this? I dare say that there will be more news coming soon. Softwin won’t stop at this if they’re trying to make a move.”

Dawson and Sean exchanged a look before turning to Jasper.

They were about to ask what he meant when the office doors were flung open. Wendy entered the room as if to prove Jasper’s claim.

“Fortress Iron and Steel Co., Ltd. just released a statement. Due to the influence of international markets, they’re going to initiate restricted sales for construction steel to the Southeast Province. Unless your company is whitelisted, you’ll have to line up with the rest to buy their materials.

“Our JW isn’t in their company’s released whitelist, but the other three real estate companies are.”

Sean was furious when he heard this. “They’re attacking our roots! This Softwin is just too vile! What benefits did Fortress Iron and Steel Co., Ltd. and Stellar Company even get from Softwin to oppress us so blatantly?

“We won’t be able to get our hands on high-grade steel like this, and our cost will increase greatly if we ship them in from outside. They’re rubbing salt into our wounds.”

Jasper spoke calmly, “If I’m right, raw material suppliers of all cement, piping, construction, silt, and the like would have also received the same instructions from Softwin.

“Either take benefits from Softwin and stop all partnerships with JW, or become Softwin’s enemy and be besieged by the industry.”

Even Dawson’s expression changed slightly when he heard that.

Even someone outside the industry knew that a real estate company would be destroyed instantly if they were cut off from their raw construction materials while staring down competitors.

“What do we do, Jasp?” Wendy asked worriedly.

Jasper lifted his head to rub his face and the drowsiness away. Now slightly more awake, he turned to Sean and asked, “What did you say just now?”

Sean was stunned for a moment before he replied instinctively, “I said Softwin was just too vile.”

“No, you said they’re attacking our roots.”

Jasper got up to fill his half-empty cup of tea with hot water and chuckled. “What we’ll do next can truly be considered as attacking their roots!

“Take a trip to Waterhoof City immediately, Sean. You have my authorization as the company representative to negotiate with Stellar Company. If they’re willing to partner with us, we’re willing to buy their materials at the best price. We’ll also promise a 40% increase in yearly purchase volume.

“As for the other suppliers we partner with, send each of them a notice under JW’s name to sign a three-year supply contract.

“Using the original contract as a baseline, tell them that JW promises a 30% increase from the previous year in purchase volume throughout the length of the contract. If they disagree, look for another supplier immediately.

“Businessmen throughout the world all share a common love of money. It won’t matter how strong Softwin is, because there’s no way they can monopolize all the raw material suppliers out there. If they do, anti-trust laws will go straight after them instead of us.”

Sean was unsettled by what he heard and could not help but ask, “Mr. Laine, will we be able to use up the materials in time?”

“I have faith in the country’s real estate industry. If anything, I’m afraid that what we’re promising now won’t be enough,” Jasper replied calmly, “Go, I don’t have time to answer your questions now.”

Sean shivered and stood to attention. “Yes, Mr. Laine.”

Then, he immediately left the room.

Jasper walked over to the floor-to-ceiling windows in the office after Sean left. Watching the calm flow of the Southface River, he fell silent.

Wendy was about to speak when she saw Dawson shake his head slightly at her.

“He’s thinking. Leave him alone for a moment.”

Wendy nodded and looked at Jasper worriedly.

She knew that Jasper was the person under the most pressure within the company.

Sean, herself, and even her father were used to relying on Jasper and placing their hope in him most of the time. It was as if every problem could be easily solved Jasper was around.

However, as someone who was always by Jasper’s side, Wendy knew better than anyone that it was because Jasper spent countless nights thinking, weighing the potential outcomes, and revising the entire situation, that everything was ‘easily’ solved.

No one succeeded without putting in any effort.

After more than ten minutes of thought, Jasper suddenly spoke, “I can’t keep waiting.”

Dawson shared a look with his daughter, Wendy. They did not know what Jasper meant by this.

A moment later, Jasper had dialed a number.

“Mr. Marlon, it’s me, Jasper.”

“Mr. Laine, we were waiting for your news,” Wayne’s voice sounded from the other end of the line.

“How are your discussions going?” Jasper asked.

Wayne replied, “I need a promise from you, Mr. Laine.”

“I’ll make the promises I should, but I don’t have the time to let you discuss endlessly. Time is of the essence, and I’m sure both Abbylon and I are racing against it.

“I suggest you hold a shareholder meeting immediately. If you agree to vote for me, Mr. Marlon, then I will do everything I can to support Abbylon’s rise. But if you don’t agree...”

Jasper stopped speaking there, but they both understood what the consequences would be.

Wayne knew that with Jasper’s current status in the dot-com industry, either Sena or Terizone could easily replicate Abbylon’s model and surpass the latter.

The most tragic part of such an outcome was that Abbylon would be too weak to defend itself against them.

This was essentially Jasper’s ultimatum to them.

Wayne frowned slightly, but not because he was displeased by Jasper’s oppression.

No businessman could be polite forever. When necessary, they had to be daring and resolute in their negotiations.

In the future, Abbylon's development would similarly prove that Wayne was not a pushover or a cowardly businessman either.

On the contrary, Wayne was conflicted as to why Jasper was in such a rush.

After a moment of silence, Wayne asked, "Mr. Laine, I've also received news of Softwin targeting you. Are these two matters related?"

"Yes," Jasper affirmed calmly.

They were all intelligent people and Jasper did not need to deny such a thing. Doing so would only be disrespectful to Wayne and himself.

It was possible that Jasper's frankness had moved Wayne, or perhaps Wayne had another idea in mind. In any case, Wayne did not hesitate this time.

"Alright, we'll hold a meeting."

Jasper let out a long sigh at Wayne's words as his mood brightened as well.

He was willing to greatly offend Softwin for Abbylon's sake, and now that he had paid the price, Jasper was facing the risk of losing everything if he did not force Wayne to declare his stance.

This did not tally up with Jasper's traditional way of doing business.

Wayne was well aware that Softwin and JW were already attacking each other head-on, and he could not afford to be an undecided fence-sitter anymore. Now, Wayne had to make a choice.

His final choice was to bend to Jasper's will.

After all, Abbylon was a Somer business and Softwin was a Sunrise investment bank. However, even he could tell that no one dared to offend Jasper in Somerland's dot-com industry.

"Two-thirty this afternoon, Shangri-La Hotel's Conference Hall. I'll send someone over to book the place, so just arrive by then, Mr. Marlon."

"Alright," Wayne replied.

"But according to the regulations, I have to notify and invite Softwin's representatives as well They're a major shareholder, after all."

"Of course."

Life at the Top Chapter 1013

“See you in the afternoon, then.”

With that, Jasper stretched and smiled at Dawson. “I’m going to rest for a while, Uncle Schuler. I’m dead tired.”

Dawson frowned and asked, “This won’t be the end of Softwin’s attacks. Are we not going to make more preparations?”

Jasper laughed out loud and replied, “I don’t think they’ll have the chance or time for that.”

“Mr. Welch, it’s a call from Wayne,” Yona told Echo.

Echo frowned slightly, “Why’s he calling now? Give me the phone.”

Echo took the phone and accepted it, speaking solemnly, “Echo speaking.”

“This is Wayne, Mr. Welch. We’re planning to hold a shareholder meeting this afternoon to clarify the issue of share proportions within the company.”

Echo narrowed his eyes when he heard this. A cold look flared in his eyes and he raised his voice, “Mr. Marlon, Abbylon Inc’s current shareholder structure is already very clear. I don’t think there’s any need to hold a shareholder meeting.”

Wayne replied, “This is mainly due to JW Capital wanting to invest in Abbylon.

“Whether we accept the investment, how much capital we’re accepting, and how we’re distributing the diluted shares must all be clearly discussed in a shareholder meeting. This complies with our company’s articles of association.”

“But I don’t have that kind of time now,” Echo spoke with a frown.

Wayne smiled and replied, “If you aren’t free to attend, Mr. Welch, then according to our company’s articles of association, we’ll have to accept Softwin’s absence as a choice to abstain from the vote.”

Echo harrumphed and replied, “So this is you standing on Jasper’s side, then?”

Wayne answered calmly, “My apologies, Mr. Welch. I’m just a businessman and I only have one wish, to make Abbylon stronger and bigger.

“Whoever manages to make my wish come true will be my friend.”

Echo felt extremely displeased by this.

It seemed like anyone or anything became difficult to deal with once Jasper was involved.

“Two-thirty this afternoon, in Nauritus City’s Shangri-La Hotel’s Conference Hall.”

Wayne then hung up the phone once he relayed the time and place.

Yona took in Echo’s dark expression and could not help but ask, “Mr. Welch, did something happen with Abbylon?”

“Wayne called, inviting us to attend the shareholder meeting in the afternoon,” Echo explained grimly.

Yona frowned as well. “A shareholder meeting at such a time? Not to mention that it’s so rushed too. Something feels wrong about this.”

Echo clenched his jaw and said, “Still, we have to attend no matter what. If my guess is right, Jasper will definitely be there.

“If we do not attend, the 41% of shares Softwin owns will be considered forfeit—in that case, we might as well be giving Abbylon to Jasper on a silver platter. The headquarters will not forgive us for that.”

At two p.m., in Nauritus City’s Shangri-La Hotel’s conference hall.

The large conference hall was empty except for the three people sitting inside.

Wayne, Jose, and Jasper.

“I remember that the eighteen founders each hold a percentage of the shares, yes?” Jasper asked.

Wayne nodded and replied, “They already gave me the right to vote for them before the meeting began.”

“Alright.”

Jasper nodded, unsurprised.

All of Abbylon’s shares were split into two major portions.

The 41% in Softwin’s hands, and the remaining 59% split between Wayne, the eighteen founders, and Jose.

However, both the eighteen founders and Jose listened to Wayne’s opinions, and the man held the final say in the group. Therefore, at the end of the day, the true majority shareholder was still Wayne.

As they conversed, the clock struck two-thirty.

It seemed purposeful when the doors of the conference hall were pushed open at exactly two-thirty.

Echo walked into the conference hall expressionlessly with Yona in tow.

Echo met Jasper's gaze. The two did not talk, but the air immediately grew tense.

Life at the Top Chapter 1014

“So it really is your fault, Jasper,” Echo spoke, looking at the man coldly.

Jasper sat on his seat and replied calmly, without even looking up at Echo. “I don’t think I understand what you mean, Mr. Welch.

“How am I at fault?”

Echo scoffed. He did not want to waste any more time arguing with Jasper, so he turned to Wayne with a dark look in his eyes.

“Mr. Marlon, you claimed that this is Abbylon Inc’s shareholder meeting. So what is this irrelevant person doing here?”

By irrelevant person, Echo was obviously referring to Jasper.

“Mr. Welch, the most important agenda of today’s shareholder meeting is to discuss whether we should allow JW Capital to invest in Abbylon. Therefore, it is only right that he is present,” Wayne replied unfazed.

Echo scoffed and said, “Very well. Then according to your company’s articles of association, you should’ve sent a letter of notice to your shareholders three days before the meeting. Yet, you’ve only told me today. Aren’t you being too clear with your intentions?”

Wayne found Echo’s aggressive questioning distasteful and replied indifferently, “Perhaps you did not take a proper look at our company’s articles then, Mr. Welch. Should there be any special and urgent agendas, I have the right to hold a meeting immediately.”

Echo’s eyes shone with a frigid glare.

The two previous questions might have seemed like Echo was intentionally antagonizing Jasper and Wayne, but it was actually a method he used to test Wayne's stance on the issue.

Now that he had finished asking this, he had gotten his answer.

The situation was not in his favor.

Wayne himself was completely leaning toward Jasper, which was horrible news to Echo.

"Mr. Marlon, it was Mr. Shon from Softwin than invested in Abbylon when you needed funds the most. We were the ones who helped you then.

"But this is how you repay Softwin and Mr. Shon?!"

Wayne looked up at Echo and replied, "First of all, our deal is purely professional. Be it Softwin or Mr. Shon, your relationship with me and Abbylon goes no further than business partners. It's a relationship built on mutually benefiting off each other, so there's no need to make it sound so ostentatious.

"Secondly, once again from a professional perspective, I only have one goal. I'll make whatever choice that benefits Abbylon the most, and I'm sure Mr. Shon will understand this."

Echo sneered and replied, "How professional of you!

"Why are we the only ones here for a shareholder meeting? Where are the other shareholders?" Echo asked expressionlessly.

"The other shareholders have authorized me to vote on their behalf," Wayne replied.

The corner of Echo's lips twitched and he spoke expressionlessly, "If you've already written your scripts, then what's the point of asking me to come and act it out with you?"

"Mr. Welch."

Jose had no choice but to step up and speak upon seeing the atmosphere in the room turn tense. "No matter what, Softwin is still Abbylon's majority shareholder, so we still need to follow procedures for formalities sake."

"Ridiculous!"

Echo slammed his hand on the table and pointed at Jasper while barking, "You think I don't know what you're thinking?"

"What did you agree with him? What did he promise you, huh? Did you forget how Softwin helped you during your most difficult times? If so, why are you working with him to target Softwin?"

After this, Echo's sinister gaze fell on Jasper, and he chuckled.

Life at the Top Chapter 1015

“You can’t even fend for yourself now, Jasper. I’m sure you’ve already seen Softwin’s strength. It’ll only take the wag of a finger for a huge capital like us to crush you, I don’t know how you even have the mood to hop around happily in front of me.”

“Are you referring to the problems JW Real Estate faced?” Jasper looked at Echo calmly. “To be absolutely honest, if that’s all the trouble Softwin can create, you’ve disappointed me.

“Softwin’s got to be more capable, right? Or there’s no way you’ll be able to crush me.”

“Hahaha!”

Echo laughed out loud and said to Jasper, “Stop pretending. You’re actually terrified, frantic, and angry, aren’t you?”

“You’re terrified that your real estate company will die from my siege, frantic because you haven’t found a way to counter it, and angry because I’m oppressing you with my power. You must be so aggrieved.”

Echo sneered, speaking as if he had seen through Jasper, “I must’ve read your mind, hmm?”

“Or perhaps this huge shareholder meeting is nothing more than your final counter. Perhaps you’re hoping to threaten me as one of Abbylon’s shareholders so that I’ll give up on the siege against JW Real Estates.”

Echo’s tone grew colder as he chortled. “Too bad, because that’s not going to happen!”

He turned his head and spoke to Wayne and Jose, “Don’t fall for his lies, both of you. The real estate company under his name is under my attack and it’ll only be a few months before it completely collapses.

“Just ask around outside and you’ll discover the truth. He won’t be able to last for much longer.

His competitors are closing in, and he is without any construction materials. What can he do? Demolish his own house to use his cement and rebar for construction?

“The only reason he’s persuaded you to hold such a shareholder meeting is because he wants to use this as a condition for me to stop the siege on his real estate company.

“You two are nothing more than a bargaining chip. How is he going to invest in your Abbylon when he can’t even protect himself?”

Echo’s voice echoed through the conference hall, causing Wayne to frown slightly. His gaze dimmed such that no one knew what he was thinking about.

Meanwhile, Jose frowned heavily.

As expected, Echo’s words had affected them greatly.

Jose silently leaned over to Wayne and whispered, “We have to be wary, Mr. Marlon.”

Wayne nodded in acknowledgment and turned to Jasper, “Is there anything you’d like to say, Mr. Laine?”

Jasper shrugged and spoke calmly, “You’d believe a madman’s clamor?”

“This is Abbylon Inc’s shareholder meeting. There shouldn’t be a need to raise issues irrelevant to Abbylon Inc here.”

“Regardless of whether JW Real Estates goes bankrupt or not has nothing to do with the nature of my investment in Abbylon.

“Therefore, I suggest that we spend less time talking and get to it. A shareholder meeting is a serious matter. All promises and resolutions made bear legal validity.

“If I said I want to buy shares, then I will buy shares.”

Jasper’s words had Echo bursting out in laughter. “You really are a stubborn mule, Jasper. Are you really not going to give up?”

Letting out a soft exhale, Wayne seemed to have made a decision and he spoke grimly. “In any case, the shareholder meeting starts now!

“For the first agenda, Mr. Jasper Laine will be representing JW Capital and attempting to buy Abbylon Inc’s shares. Mr. Jasper Laine, please describe your investment, as well as the percentage of shares your funds accounts for. If you could make an official statement, Mr. Jasper Laine?”

Life at the Top Chapter 1016

Echo sneered at Jasper after Wayne finished speaking as if waiting for Jasper to make a fool out of himself.

Jasper's gaze was calm as he spoke without a script in his hand. "JW Capital intends to invest 1 billion Somer Dollars into Abbylon Inc, in return for 51% of Abbylon Inc's shares.

"That collection of shares comes with ownership and legal personality, meaning that if JW Capital successfully invests, it will also become Abbylon Inc's majority shareholder.

"However, JW Capital promises that it will not interfere in Abbylon Inc's day-to-day operations. JW Capital will only employ two permanent directors within Abbylon Inc and will only be involved in huge decisions.

"Moreover, JW Capital also promises not to interfere with Abbylon Inc's independence over their personnel. Hence, any changes or transfers in Abbylon Inc's internal personnel will be decided by Abbylon Inc's operating team.

"JW Capital will also have a one-vote veto or a one-vote pass for major issues regarding Abbylon Inc. Should Abbylon Inc decide to change its board of directors in the future, JW Capital will appoint the chairman of the board of directors. Abbylon Inc will have the freedom to decide everything else."

Jasper's words were simple and as everyone present was an elite in the business world, they all understood immediately.

This meant that the moment Abbylon accepted Jasper's investments, Jasper would then become Abbylon Inc's majority shareholder.

However, since Jasper would not interfere with Abbylon Inc's day-to-day operations, it meant that Abbylon had free reign to do whatever they wanted unless it was a major decision, which Jasper still had the final say on.

Wayne frowned when he heard Jasper say this.

He knew that a 1 billion investment and such favorable promises were rare and highly desirable for start-up companies.

However, he was slightly uncomfortable about the fact that Jasper still held the most important power in his hands.

To Wayne, it felt like there was a chain around his neck and he was at risk of being suffocated at anytime.

Jasper noticed Wayne's frown.

Thus, Jasper continued calmly, "In comparison to Softwin, Mr. Marlon, my conditions are already much more generous. I'm sure that you've investigated the other companies I've invested in as well.

"Up until now, I still harbor the utmost respect for the operations teams and I've never vetoed anything before. Rest assured that I will not interfere or disrupt Abbylon Inc in any way."

"Bullsh*t!"

Echo interrupted Jasper.

"Who're you lying to whilst trying to sound so dignified and ostentatious? You're investing 1 billion and not interfering with the business at all, but you left the position of highest authority to yourself. So what if you promise them this now? Who's to say what'll happen in the future?"

Echo stared at Jasper and sneered.

Jasper looked at Echo and replied, “So you mean to say that should invest 1 billion and then give up on all shareholder rights? If Softwin is also willing to do that, then I won’t fight you for Abbylon.”

Echo’s expression changed.

There were many investments where investors did not interfere in the company’s operations, like angel investments or commercial financing.

However, that did not mean the investors were just putting in their money and not caring about what happens afterward.

To protect their interests, investors would normally add many conditions to the investment contract to ensure that they had the right to kick out the operations team from the company at any given moment. To protect their authority, they would have the operations team become their employees such that they would not dare to overthrow them.

Investors would still guarantee their own interests first when it came to future financing, shares dilution, or even when it was time to sell the company.

Life at the Top Chapter 1017

They did not care about what happens to the operations team.

As an international investment bank, Softwin Investments imposed very similar conditions.

“Mr. Welch, now that I think about it, Softwin Investment’s conditions are much harsher than JW Capital’s,” Wayne spoke.

Wayne’s words caused Echo’s expression to darken further.

“He’s just lying to you guys now, stupid. The moment the contract is signed and the most important rights go to him, you founders and the operations team will be under his control!”

Echo sneered. “Moreover, 1 billion? According to my investigation of JW Capital, Jasper’s company doesn’t even have that much cash.

“Sena had indeed given him a inflow of cash when it went public, but it was only enough to slightly relieve the risk of a capital chain rupture, There’s no way he can take 1 billion out in one go now!

“He’s scamming you!

“As I said, his goal is to use Abbylon’s shares to bargain with me. Just wait, he’ll start negotiating with me the moment you agree.

“I already know what he’s going to say. You want me to stop the attacks on your real estate company, don’t you, Jasper? And you’re going breach the contract and give up on investing in Abbylon, right?

Wayne's expression turned stern at Echo's words and he looked to Jasper. "Mr. Laine, while I'm unwilling to believe him, I'd like to ask you to give me some confidence in this matter. Otherwise, I won't be able to explain it to the others."

Echo's words were accusatory in nature, and even Wayne had to admit that these risks were real.

Abbylon Inc was too small, they could not afford to suffer such an incident.

He did not dare to imagine how his eighteen friends would sever ties with him if Echo was right. Even if they did not, Wayne would be too ashamed to meet them.

If Echo was right, it would mean that Wayne had been played like a fool.

Being made a fool was still the least of his issues. If Jasper's promise to invest in them was a lie, then the most important issue would be that Abbylon would have horribly offended Softwin. In this situation, Abbylon would have nothing to defend itself against Softwin's anger.

Abbylon was nothing more than an ant in comparison to Softwin.

Echo looked at Jasper and barked, "What bullsh*t confidence can he give you? He can't even pull 100 million out, let alone 1 billion. He might even have to sell his house and businesses just to pay you!

"Hahaha. But let's be real, if you want, you could always mortgage your property and take a loan from Softwin. I'll be sure to give you a relatively favorable interest rate. Hahaha.

"Maybe I'll cut 1 million from your interest with every bark, hmm? I'm sure a huge bunch of Somer descents would fight for such an opportunity, no?

As he stood under Wayne and Jose's burning gazes as well as Echo's mocking clamor, Jasper did not speak as he reached into his breast pocket.

Slowly, Jasper pulled out a small white rectangular card made of unique material from the inner pocket of his jacket.

The thin card was placed on the conference table before Jasper lifted his hand to push it toward Wayne.

“A ICBS’ cashier’s check. There’s a verified asset mark on it and a sum of exactly 1 billion. It is effective for three months, meaning anyone can go to any bank to withdraw 1 billion dollars.

“With ICBS’ verification as my guarantor, it means that 1 billion dollars has been temporarily frozen in my account as pay margin. Therefore, there’s no need to worry about this becoming a dishonored check.

“Will this inspire enough confidence?”

Life at the Top Chapter 1018

The words 'ICBS Somerland' were written clearly on this small card made of unique material that prevented it from being forged.

ICBS Somerland's Waterhoof City branch was clearly stated as the payment bank.

This meant that this check was verified and filled out by the Waterhoof City branch.

On the most important column specifying the value were the numbers 1000000000.00 in Somer Dollars.

With the words One Billion Only written clearly next to it.

Besides the written words and Arabic numerals, the piece of paper also had the Waterhoof City branch's verified electronic seal signifying the authenticity of this slip of paper.

This small white paper carried wealth that dazzled people's eyes and caused their breathing to quicken.

Ordinary people could never accumulate such wealth in ten lifetimes.

This was the year 2000. According to the domestic exchange rate for gold, where 1 gram cost around 100 Somer Dollars, 1 billion would be equal to 10 thousand kilograms of gold!

It would not be wrong to describe this sum as a mountain of gold.

Even Wayne and Jose, who had much more money than ordinary people, felt the corner of their eyes twitch.

This was 1 billion.

With this amount, Abbylon would never have to worry about funding again. At the same time, accepting these funds would immediately turn Abbylon into a large enterprise within the country without them doing anything.

There were few enterprises in the country with more than 1 billion in funds.

Despite Wayne's personality and Jose's wealthy familial background, the two still felt their heartrate quicken as they looked at Jasper whilst sharing the same thought. 'Having money sure is f*cking great!'

Producing a 1 billion Somer Dollar check as if it was nothing.

Not to mention that it was verified too.

There was no refuting it.

This meant that Jasper had already anticipated Echo's accusation, and thus made preparations to counter it.

'You claim that I can't even save myself because you're holding a siege against my real estate company? That my investment company is short on cash and can't afford to buy any shares? That I'm trying to scam them?'

'Sure.

'Then I'll pull out a 1 billion bank-certified check that can't possibly be dishonored.

'What can you say now?'

Wayne finally understood why Jasper could be so calm in the face of Echo's provocations and clamor. From Jasper's point of view, Echo must have looked like a clown performing by himself. He was not worth explaining to at all.

This reestablished Wayne's understanding of Jasper's tricks, the complexity of his thoughts, and how strong the man was.

Jasper had already predicted every last detail of Echo's plan since the conference began and had prepared accordingly. There was just no winning against Jasper.

Wayne could not help but glance at Echo when he thought of this.

As expected, he saw a horrifyingly dark expression and the corner of the man's eyes twitching crazily.

The man did not seem to believe what he saw.

"No way!"

Echo suddenly roared.

He glared at Jasper and shouted, "How can you still have 1 billion?"

"This money, this check! Something's wrong with it!"

Both Wayne and Jose shook their heads slightly at Echo's claim. The man had lost his mind.

Jasper would never forge a 1 billion Somer Dollar check with a verification seal even if he was crazy. Such forgery would be punished with a lifetime in prison.

“I could plop a mountain of gold in front of people like you and you’d still claim that I dyed brinks to look like the real thing.” Jasper looked at Echo with a glint in his eyes that the latter did not understand.

It looked like... pity. The kind of pity a hunter would look at his prey that was caught in his trap with.

Echo was going mad under that gaze.

“What kind of look is that?!”

“Who do you think you are? You lowly Somer hybrid! The lowest race of them all! How dare you look at me like that?!”

Wayne’s expression immediately changed at that. Even Jose looked at Echo in disbelief.

Jose was a Nawaiter. Even though he had grown up abroad, it could not change the fact that he was of Somer descent.

No Somer descent could let the matter go after hearing such a thing.

Jasper’s expression grew cold and he replied, “Did you just call Somer descents lowly?”

Echo also realized that he had said something inappropriate and immediately replied in a cold tone, “Don’t change the subject! Where’d you get the money from?!”

“I don’t need to explain the source of my money.” Jasper’s tone was frigidly cold.

“Since Mr. Laine’s already shown proof, then there’s no point in further hesitation. Let’s begin voting on the agenda of JW Capital investment of 1 billion Somer Dollars in Abbylon Inc in return for 51% of the shares.”

With a cold look on his face, Wayne raised his hand and continued, “I vote with 59% of the shares in agreement.”

Wayne then looked at Echo, who had an utterly dark expression on his face and said, “There’s already more than 51% support in favor of the motion, so your opinion isn’t needed anymore.

“But I’ll still ask anyway. Do you agree, disagree, or forfeit your vote?”

Echo slammed his palm on the table and roared, “You two vile and shameless Somer dogs! You did this on purpose!”

Echo then glared at Wayne and growled icily, “Did you forget what you promised Mr. Shon, Wayne? You kick us out right after we invested in you. Aren’t you afraid of Mr. Shon’s revenge?”

With that, Echo then turned to Jasper and warned, his words dripping with resentment, “So you’re really going to challenge Softwin to a full-on fight huh, Jasper?”

“Abbylon is the Somer enterprise Mr. Shon values most. Interfering with Abbylon means interfering with Mr. Shon and Softwin’s core interests here in Somerland! Trust me, you are not strong enough to bear Softwin’s true anger!

Jasper chuckled at Echo’s threat and got up from his seat.

Jasper’s actions had reminded Echo of particular unhappy memories, and the man took an instinctive step backward.

It immediately occurred to Echo how embarrassing this action was, so he took a step forward to return to his original position.

This back and front was quite a hilarious sight.

Jasper stood in front of Echo, and due to the difference in heights, the latter was forced to look up to meet Jasper's gaze.

“Go back and tell your master, Sunrizer. We've got time to slowly play this out ...”

Life at the Top Chapter 1019

“You... idiot! Let’s go!”

Echo knew that staying would only lead to him humiliating himself further, and understood that the current situation had already gone beyond what he can solve. Thus, he had to return and report it straight away.

Jasper gave a small smile as he watched Echo leave. Then he extended a hand to Wayne, “I look forward to working with you, Mr. Marlon!”

“And I you...” Wayne spoke, shaking Jasper’s hand.

“Gentlemen, I have to say that we still have a huge problem in front of us,” Jose continued with a frown, “We’ve badly offended Softwin now, so we have to consider how Softwin will react to today’s shareholder meeting.

“Once we’ve accepted your investment, Mr. Laine, my, Mr. Marlon, and Softwin’s percentage of shares will all have diluted. Softwin currently holds 20.5% of Abbylon’s shares after financing. What are your plans for this, Mr. Laine?”

Jasper fell silent for a moment before he smiled and replied.

“I’ll talk to Softwin’s headquarters about this. I’ll contact you when it comes to the specifics. After all, I’ll still need your absolute support in the follow-up for this matter.

Wayne and Jose exchanged a look and nodded.

Regardless of whether they wanted to admit it or not, the two of them had to understand that they were already affiliated with Jasper.

Jasper investing in Abbylon would definitely evoke Myles' fury, and Softwin would certainly target more than just Jasper in their upcoming revenge. There was simply no way Wayne and Jose could ignore this.

This was especially true for Jose, who looked very conflicted.

"If that's the case, Mr. Laine, then I should return right away. There's much I need to discuss with the others in the company," Wayne told Jasper.

Jasper nodded. "Alright. I'll find time and take a trip there too so I can meet everyone formally. Still, as I said, Abbylon is your company and I will not interfere. As far as I'm concerned, your capabilities are worth more than Abbylon itself."

Jasper was not lying.

Rather than investing in Abbylon, it would be more accurate to say that Jasper had invested the 1 billion in Wayne.

The man was worth the price.

Wayne smiled and replied, "Then I shall await your arrival in Harvey City."

"Alright," Jasper replied with a chuckle.

The duo soon left, leaving Jasper to stand by the conference hall doors as he watched the scene downstairs quietly. Jose told Wayne something as they walked out of the hotel before the two got into the car and left.

Jasper then pondered over how he was to treat Abbylon in the future.

Abbylon was unlike the other subsidiaries under him. Naturally, this was because Wayne himself was different.

Both their surnames started with 'M', yet Wayne and Hudson were completely different people. Hence, Jasper had to treat them differently as well.

People like Wayne would never agree to be someone else's subordinate, so Jasper had to treat him like a partner right from the get-go. The same applied to Hudson.

However, Wayne needed more autonomy than Hudson did.

Abbylon was going to be a company that would cost more of Jasper's money and effort.

Softwin's Myles Shon alone was a tough nut to crack.

Jasper had made it sound easy in front of Wayne and Jose, but he knew that this would be an extremely difficult feat to perform.

"Slowly, then. At least I've already got a good start." Jasper let out a soft exhale.

He knew that the old man in Sunrise Land would be notified very soon. His fight with Jasper would also begin to surface.

JW and Softwin still had a long, bloody war to fight over Abbylon.

Everyone saw how he had acquired Abbylon, Terizone, and Sena. However, only Jasper himself knew that Google, all the way across the Pacific Ocean, was just as important.

Google's rise would be JW's main support as it expanded out of the country.

Just as Jasper was deep in thought, his phone rang.

"Where are you, Jasper? I've already arrived at Nauritus City."

Jasper's eyes lit up when he heard the voice come through the speakers and he smiled. "I've been waiting for you for ages. I'll come pick you up."

An hour later, in the office in Southface River Tower. Greg looked around the brightly lit office and the floor-to-ceiling windows that displayed the superb and astonishing river view. He exclaimed.

"I only knew that you were rich and had a huge business, but it never felt like anything to me. It's only today after I arrived at your company that I realized that you've already walked further than most people will throughout their entire life."

Greg stood beside him and the two watched the quiet flow of the Southface River below them. Jasper smiled and replied, "You're just seeing a small portion of this. The whole company's moving to Waterhoof City in two more years.

"That's when the letters JW will resound all over Somerland."

Jasper was, of course, referring to the first skyscraper to be built in Waterhoof City.

Greg did not know too much about this, and he gasped, "But this building is still new, isn't it? Are you going to give it up so soon?"

Jasper smiled. "I'm just moving the company. I can still lease this office to other companies, you know?"

Greg looked at Jasper and answered. "As we promised, I come here today in hopes to start my own business."

Jasper nodded and said, "I know what you're capable of and that you have extraordinary talent when it comes to the managerial ranks. Go ahead, tell me what kind of work you want to do."

While Jasper and Greg had initially agreed to have the latter start from a clerk-level position, Jasper had changed his mind over the past few days.

He believed that starting from the bottom was too much a waste of Greg's talents.

Jasper knew Greg too well, thanks to experiences from his past and present life with this man. It was this profound understanding Jasper had of Greg's personality that made the man so trustworthy to Jasper.

As Jasper's property grew, so did his employee-base. There were tons of capable people under him.

However, a person's capability was one thing. Their trustworthiness was another thing altogether.

Life at the Top Chapter 1020

Winthin JW Capital and its subsidiaries, there were only a few people Jasper could trust. Wendy was one of them, of course; Malcolm and Jack too perhaps, but that was all.

Now that Greg was here, there was one more person that he could mostly trust.

Hence, Jasper decided to give Greg a special mission.

Greg replied determinedly, "I want to start from scratch. Regarding what kind of work, I'll accept whatever you assign me."

"But what if it's difficult and filled with obstacles?" Jasper's gaze burned into Greg as he asked.

"To be frank with you, I'm planning to assign you to somewhere completely new. It'll be a huge challenge for you once you go there.

"This is because it's going to be a completely new environment and industry. I can give you start-up capital, but you're going to have to start from the bottom for everything else.

"The chance of failure is extremely high and the road to success will be long and arduous. Therefore, I'll respect whatever decision you make.

"If you still wish to stay in the Southeast Province, then you can choose any position within the province and I will get you that job, no problem."

Greg was stunned for a moment. This was different from what they had discussed in the beginning.

Frowning slightly, he asked, "Can I ask what kind of work you're arranging for me?"

Jasper raised his hand and patted Greg's shoulder before pulling his phone out. He said, "Look at this, this is Nokia's newest mobile phone. Equipped with the Symbian operating system, this phone has many strong features and is really useful."

Greg nodded dumbly and asked, "I know, but what does this have to do with my job?"

Jasper placed the phone on the table and pointed at it as he explained to Greg, "If I told you, that this small gimmick will one day become an important tool that people cannot part with, and will also represent the prime application of future science and technology, would you believe me?"

Greg looked at the insignificant mobile phone on the table and answered instinctively, "Are you kidding me?"

"Someone said that computers would change the way people lived a decade ago. No one believed them, but look at the it now."

Jasper continued softly, "I dare say that mobile phones will change the way humans live in the next ten years."

"So you want me to manufacture phones?" Greg asked in shock.

"Bingo. Counterfeit mobile phones are everywhere within the country, but only a few are actually manufacturing their own brand. I want to enter this field, but I've got too much on my hands right now. I have too few capable people by my side, so you're the only one I can ask.

"I can give you a start-up capital of 200 million, but you'll have to find your own technicians, equipment, and employees. And I'll need results within the year."

Jasper reminded Greg, "Think about it carefully before you decide. Don't force yourself either, as there will be no hard feelings regardless of your decision."

Greg stared at Jasper and asked, "You're going to trust me with 200 million just like that?"

"You're worth the price," Jasper smiled.

"Then what more do I have to worry about?" Greg shrugged. "If you're not afraid that I'll lose this 200 million, then I have no reason to be afraid of trying. Still... Where do you want me to start?"

"Cavern City!"

"Cavern City? Seems like a good place to start, considering it's a Special Economic Zone," Greg spoke.

Jasper chuckled and said, "That's not the only thing. Being adjacent to Harbor City, Cavern City has the advantage of being by the harbor, which naturally makes transportation extremely convenient. In comparison to Waterhoof City, Cavern City also has a much thinner foundation, which means there's more room for development.

"Waterhoof City is a special zone too. In fact, it's even a municipality. But unfortunately, its foundations are too thick. Moreover, Waterhoof City's already registered as the country's financial center, so it wouldn't be suitable to set up factories there."

"Indeed," Greg nodded and agreed, "I also heard that an equivalent area of land in Waterhoof City is five times more expensive than in Cavern City. Not to mention that it's also more expensive to employ people there. I agree that it would be better to set up factories in Cavern City."

"Go," Jasper clapped Greg's shoulder and spoke, "Create a whole new world."

“Alright!” Greg nodded seriously, “I won’t let you down.”

Just like that, Greg took the 200 million Jasper gave him and made his way to Cavern City.

Neither of them knew when they would meet next and in what setting.

On the way back, Wendy was told about Jasper’s plans for Greg.

“Greg? He used to be our ex-classmate, right? We didn’t talk much before, but his story sure seems like a touching one from what you’ve told me.”

Wendy looked at him and asked, “You trust him with the 200 million?”

“I wouldn’t ask him if I didn’t trust him. He knows what to do,” Jasper spoke calmly, “I wouldn’t just give him 200 million if I didn’t have my own contingency plans, though I do hope I’ll never have to resort to them.”

At this, Wendy changed the subject and asked, “Why the sudden desire to manufacture mobile phones, though?”

“Mobile phones are going to be an important electronic device in the future. The MP4s and MP5s we’re making now are nothing more than small fry to people in the electronics industry.

“The battlefield of mobile phones is going to be where the king of the industry is decided. Therefore, we have to enter the industry and start setting up in advance!” Jasper replied.

“If that’s the case, don’t we already have an electronics company? Why would you still ask Greg for help?” Wendy asked confusedly.

Jasper chuckled and replied, "Having both a well-known and a secret company is very befitting of our current situation.

"We might have to invest a little bit more in the beginning, but if it succeeds, 1+1 will equal more than just 2. We'd be reaping 3 or even 4."

Wendy shook her head and replied in exasperation, "Nevermind. I won't be able to understand your thoughts when it comes to business."

"Oh, right. Let's go to the county tomorrow," Wendy suggested.

"What for?" Jasper asked.

"Do you still remember Ms. Tiana?"

When she mentioned this name, Jasper's mind immediately filled with the mental image of an average-looking middle-aged woman with gentle features.

Ms. Tiana was Jasper and Wendy's homeroom teacher back in senior high school. She could be considered a truly nice teacher who had her students' best interests in mind.

"My familial conditions were horrible during senior high, and Ms. Tiana used to call me over to her office to eat lunch that she had brought from home. She even brought me straight to her house for dinner sometimes.

"But for the sake of my self-esteem, she did all that under the guise of tuition. How could I forget her?" Jasper answered softly.

Life at the Top Chapter 1021

In truth, most of Jasper's memories during the three years of senior high were of mockery and rolled eyes. There were only three things that brought him warmth.

The random conversations with Wendy.

Playing with Greg.

As well as Ms. Tiana.

All the teachers in school had ignored Jasper and turned a blind eye to the boy. Yet, Ms. Tiana was the only one who could not bear to watch the prepubescent child eat white bread and vegetables every day. She would bring him home-packed lunches once or twice a week or even bring the boy home to eat with her.

Be it Jasper's daily life or his studies, Ms. Tiana had taken very good care of him.

Therefore, this teacher held a very important place in Jasper's heart, and he would always remember to call and check in with her during festivities.

"You're right, it's been a while since we went to visit her. It's teacher's day soon, right? We should visit Ms. Tiana."

Wendy sighed when she heard Jasper's words. "Ms. Tiana isn't doing so well lately. I heard something about her being very sick, so the other classmates have all decided to go and visit her."

Jasper was stunned. 'Ms. Tiana only passed from sickness two years later in my past life. Why so soon in this?'

“Is it severe?” Jasper asked.

“The hospital’s gave her a few medical reports for critical illness, and she’s essentially spending her final days at home now,” Wendy replied softly.

Jasper frowned.

Jasper was too weak to help in his past life, but it was different this time. He decided that no matter what illness Ms. Tiana was diagnosed with, he would spend all his money even if it only meant extending Ms. Tiana’s life for a few more years.

“We’ll rush over early tomorrow morning to check up on her,” Jasper decided.

Wendy nodded.

Ms. Tiana’s excellent teaching could be seen in more than how she nurtured Jasper. She treated all her students equally.

Ms. Tiana was surrounded by students she had once taught. After all these years, these students had all become contributing members of society, yet they still remembered how great Ms. Tiana was. Hence, now that she was ill, everyone was extremely concerned.

Jasper and Wendy were no different.

As a result, Jasper and Wendy then made their way to the county early the next morning.

Julian had brought Jasper’s Bentley in for service today, so the couple drove Wendy’s BMW instead.

“I’m not used to this,” Jasper said. Driving the BMW felt weird to him.

Wendy glared at Jasper from the passenger seat and shot back, "I don't see you getting me a better car."

"You're the one in charge of the company accounts, I even put the official seal with you. My personal account is also joint under your name, so you can literally take money out at anytime," Jasper answered.

Wendy harrumphed and refuted upsettingly, "Can you even compare me buying a new car with your money with you buying me a new car as a present?"

Jasper smiled and replied, "Okay, okay, I get it. The car's growing old, and it's time to change it to a new one. Is there a specific car you have in mind? We'll go get you a new one after we're done with Ms. Tiana's situation."

"I was thinking of something small and quaint. Like a beetle or a SMART. This car is too big and inconvenient for me," Wendy muttered.

Jasper replied with a crescent-eyed smile, "Alright. We don't need cars to prove our social status anymore anyway, so get what you like."

After a few months, Jasper and Wendy returned to Faith County again.

It had only been a few months so there had not been many changes in Faith County; The roads were still bustling with people.

The couple's car arrived at Faith country's number one senior high's staff building. Jasper had just found a parking spot and was about to back the car into it when a Benz stepped on its accelerator and took the parking first, scratching the BMW's bumper in the process.

A man and a woman stepped out of the Benz. The man was young, dressed in a suit and with an expensive golden watch around his wrist. He looked the epitome of a nouveau riche.

"Oh, Ro, what driving skills you have."

The woman got out of the passenger seat and slinked her arms into the young man's, speaking coquettishly.

With a snicker, Ronald slapped the woman's butt and replied, "You know that I've got better skills elsewhere."

The woman twisted her body and replied coquettishly, "Stop.

"Alright, let's get our work done first. Then we can go somewhere else and I'll give you a recap of how skilled I am."

Ronald spoke with his arm around the woman. Walking past the BMW, the man spat and scoffed, "Stupid f*cker. Who are you to steal my parking spot?"

Ronald was about to leave bossily with the woman in tow when Jasper's voice sounded out from behind them.

"So, you're just going to leave just like that?"

Ronald stopped in his tracks and turned around to see Jasper alighting the BMW. Ronald barked darkly, "What? Angry that I've stolen your parking spot? Who're you to complain when you're a bad driver? F*cking stupid."

Jasper rapped his knuckles on the BMW's bumper and pointed at the large scratch as he spoke, "I'll forgive you for the parking, but you're really just going to leave after scratching my car?"

Ronald was stunned and he followed Jasper's hand to see the ugly scratch on the BMW's bumper. He suddenly thought of something and rushed over to look at his Benz.

As expected, he saw a large scratch and an indent on both the front and rear doors of his car.

Ronald's heart ached at the sight of this and his expression changed. He pointed at Jasper and scolded, "F*cking Hell! Do you want to die?! How dare you scratch my car?!"

Life at the Top Chapter 1022

Jasper narrowed his eyes and looked at Ronald. "I arrived at this parking spot first. You were the one who forced his way in when I was putting the car in reverse.

"I even stopped reversing when you rushed over, but you still had to force your way in and scratched my bumper. No matter how you look at this, you're the one at fault. Even so, you're claiming that I'm the one who scratched your car?"

Ronald replied harshly, "F*ck you. Stop giving me all these excuses! I wouldn't have scratched you if you didn't f*cking stop your car there, now would I, you stupid f*cker? How dare you continue to give excuses!"

"If that's the case, there's no point in wasting my saliva with you either. Let's hand this to the traffic police, then," Jasper spoke calmly.

Jasper then made a move to call them.

At this moment, Wendy got out of the passenger seat.

"What's wrong, Jasp?"

Wendy asked this without knowing what was going on.

Ronald was about to scold Jasper when he saw Wendy. His eyes immediately shone with lust.

The anger disappeared from his features, instantly replaced with a smile as he turned to Wendy. "Yo, don't you look familiar, beautiful? Have we met somewhere before?"

Wendy did not even spare Ronald and his flirtations another glance as she shot him down coldly, "Sorry, you've mistaken me for someone else."

Ronald snickered and smiled. "Instead of being with a man that drives an old BMW, how about you take a look at me, pretty? My car's the latest Benz, one of this is twice the value of that stupid BMW."

Wendy frowned and answered distastefully, "This stupid BMW is my car."

Ronald was stunned for a moment before he turned to Jasper and said, "I didn't take you to be a man that lives off his girlfriend, brat."

Jasper did not pay Ronald any mind. The point of this trip was to visit Ms. Tiana, so he did not want to waste time on insignificant problems.

He would have handed this matter over to Julian if the man was here.

Dialing for the traffic police, Jasper began to miss the days where he had Julian by his side.

"I was talking to you. Are you deaf?" Ronald shouted at Jasper.

At this moment, Ronald walked over with the woman in tow. She glanced at Wendy warily and defensively before she spoke, "There's no point talking to lowly trash, Ro. Let's just get rid of them. Don't we have more important things to do?"

Ronald harrumphed and realized that the woman was right.

"How about this, forget calling the traffic police. I won't need you to compensate me either. But this woman by your side, I want a meal with her," Ronald ordered Jasper arrogantly.

Jasper looked up and narrowed his eyes at Ronald.

He did not care about the scratch in the car.

After all, that would only cost a few thousand to repair.

However, if this douchebag had his eyes on Wendy, then the man had a death wish.

“You were the one who scratched our car. How can you be so shameless to claim that you don’t need us to compensate you? How unreasonable can you be?” Wendy asked Ronald.

Ronald smiled and replied arrogantly, “Only the strong are qualified to reason. What’s the point of reason when you’re weak and a nobody?”

“After all that nonsense, this is the only reasonable sentence that came out of your mouth,” Jasper looked at Ronald and said calmly, “So you think you’re strong?”

Ronald sneered and replied, “Everyone’s strong in comparison to stupid f*ckers like you. I’m someone you aren’t even qualified to admire, understood?”

Just then, a car drove over.

It was a slightly low-profile Audi.

The car stopped in front of them and the windows were rolled down to reveal a young man’s face. The man exclaimed when he saw Ronald, “Yo, well if it isn’t Ronald!”

Ronald frowned then smiled after a moment of thought and answered, “Mr. Nicholls.”

Mr. Nicholls alighted the car. He had just greeted Ronald when he spotted Jasper and Wendy.

After a long daze, he asked, “Jasper? Wendy?”

Jasper glanced at the man and it took him a while before he remembered the identity of the person. This was Archer, his and Wendy’s ex-classmate. Jasper did not expect the man to start driving an Audi and to be greeted with such respect.

Wendy greeted Archer as well, “Archer? Are you here to visit Ms. Tiana too?”

Archer laughed out loud and replied, “Yeah. Ms. Tiana isn’t doing so well, so it’s only right we students come and visit her.

“I’m doing well, working at a huge company in Nauritus City now. Let’s save each other’s numbers later so we can keep in contact.”

Archer’s words were evidently directed at Wendy, as he was not even interested in giving Jasper another glance.

Everyone in their class knew that Jasper was the poorest and most introverted person amongst them. No one expected someone like him to make too big a name for himself.

“You know each other?” Ronald asked calmly as his gaze flicked between Archer and the couple.

Archer pulled Ronald over and handed him a cigarette as he explained, “They’re my ex-classmates, Ronald. We came to see our teacher today, but did some misunderstanding happen? Maybe you could let it go. On my behalf.”

Ronald glanced at Archer and sneered. “You’re interested in her, aren’t you?”

Archer looked back at Wendy as passion flared in his eyes. He whispered to Ronald implicitly, with jargon that any man would understand, “She was essentially every man’s crush back in high school. Everyone was interested in her; I still dream about her today.”

“I can let them go on your behalf today so you get to look cool in front of your crush, but remember to share her amongst us once she’s yours.” Ronald smiled at Archer.

Life at the Top Chapter 1023

The corner of Archer's lips curled up and he replied, "No problem. We're friends, aren't we? And this is just a woman."

"Alright, haha."

Ronald clasped Archer's shoulder and laughed loudly before he glared at Jasper harshly. "I still have important things to do, so I'll let you go because Mr. Nicholls asked. Be thankful, or you'd be suffering now."

Ronald then left casually with the woman in his arms.

Jasper's gaze dimmed and he was about to call out after Ronald when Wendy tugged at his clothes. "It's fine, let's visit Ms. Tiana first."

Archer had also walked over by then and he told Jasper arrogantly, "Ronald isn't someone you can afford to offend. He already decided to let it go thanks to me, so don't go causing trouble for yourself."

Archer paid Jasper's reaction no heed and he turned to smile at Wendy. "I don't think we've seen each other since graduation, Wendy. It's almost been seven years since then. How're you doing?"

Wendy frowned.

Archer's words might seem fine, but there was an amorous tone to it.

It was as if the two of them used to be close.

Not to mention that the choice of words was what couples who had broken up a long time ago normally used.

Wendy realized that Archer was trying to take advantage of her, so she glanced at him indifferently before replying, “Not bad. We were never close to begin with, so let’s not waste unnecessary time here. Let’s go visit Ms. Tiana.”

Wendy then naturally wrapped her arm around Jasper’s and looked up at him with a beautiful smile Archer had never seen before. “Let’s go, Jasp.”

Archer’s expression immediately darkened at the sight of this.

By now, Jasper and Wendy had already moved toward the stairs, leaving Archer to grind his molars and force himself to suppress his anger. He needed to understand what was going on between Jasper and Wendy before he did anything rash.

‘F*cking Hell, this stupid broke f*cker! He couldn’t even afford to buy food so how dare he steal my woman now? Just you wait—upper-class society is much crueler than people on campus!’

Archer harrumphed, glaring at Jasper’s back sinisterly, before following after them.

The old staff building was already two decades old and there was a vintage air to the tubed-shaped apartments.

Elevators could not possibly exist in such a building, while Ms. Tiana’s lived on the fifth floor.

Jasper and Wendy were fine as they climbed the dark and messy staircase upward, but Archer mumbled and complained while covering his nose distastefully the entire time.

“What kind of stupid place is this. It’s so disgusting, you might as well live in a landfill at this point.”

Meanwhile, Jasper took a trip down memory lane as he walked.

He remembered walking this dark and messy staircase countless times during the three years of senior high when Ms. Tiana would bring him to her house on the fifth floor to eat dinner with her.

Excluding his home in the village, this staircase had led him to the only place that promised him a full stomach during those three years.

His meals would consist purely of white bread and vegetables if not for her.

“No one’s forcing you to walk if you don’t want to,” Jasper replied calmly, snapped out of his memory by Archer’s words.

Archer was stunned for a moment before he raged. “What do you mean?! How dare you talk to me like that!”

Jasper ignored him though, for they had already arrived at Ms. Tiana’s home by then.

From the shoes by the door, they knew that there had to be other ex-classmates inside already.

Wendy knocked on the door and someone’s voice rang out in response. This was followed by footsteps as the old room door opened.

“Wendy? Archer?”

An ordinary face appeared behind the door and the woman exclaimed when she saw Wendy and Archer.

Life at the Top Chapter 1024

She did not recognize Jasper anymore.

After all, the only impression Jasper left on anyone during senior high was that he was poor and introverted.

“Are you...Ramona?” Wendy asked after a pause.

The woman beamed and replied, “Yes. You still remember me.”

“Okay, okay, enough reuniting here. You saw me, didn’t you? So let me in already,” Archer spoke irritably.

“I heard that you’re a manager for Southface River Properties, right?” Ramona asked carefully.

Archer smiled, pleased that Ramona had brought up his professional identity in front of Wendy. He replied calmly on purpose, “Yeah. It’s just a job, nothing much. I’m glad my superior likes me.”

Southface River Properties?

Jasper and Wendy exchanged a look.

Jasper owned the entirety of Southface River, so he certainly knew this property company.

The real estate company needed a property managing department since Southface River had many lots, and most of them were leased out. That was why a new property company was founded.

Its only job was to manage and serve the properties in Southface River.

Was this company a huge one?

Bullsh*t. Strictly speaking, this was just a department of a real estate company.

But was this property company small?

Not exactly either.

After all, the Southface River project was huge, and new tenants came to sign contracts and move in all the time. The property company was also in charge of the managing and maintenance of water, electricity, and security of the area.

Therefore, the company could be considered a nanny of sorts.

However, the property company did have some level of authority as they were involved in many things. People and companies who wanted to make friends with JW would naturally treat the property company with respect as well.

“I only earn ten thousand or so a month. It’s not much, but it’s certainly more than the average person. The main thing about this job is the workload and people I’m in charge of, as there are tons of people begging me for a chance to meet every day. I suppose I do meet a few bigshots here and there after working long enough. Sigh, but it’s quite a lot of work actually,” Archer replied pretentiously.

From the way he spoke, he might as well be begging everyone to fawn over him.

Ramona looked at him enviously and replied, “You’ve got to be the most outstanding one out of our class.”

Wendy's expression contorted into a weird expression.

'Archer's arrogance is because he's working under us?'

"Let's go in and visit Ms. Tiana," Jasper told Wendy.

This was the most important goal of Jasper's trip.

Archer scoffed when he heard that.

"Oh, why? Were you jealous that I'm living a better life than you? Where do you work now? How many hundreds do you earn a month?"

"I could spare you some work since we're classmates. Perhaps you could be a security guard for Southface River? People would fight for a monthly salary of at least 1200 bucks, but I suppose that's way beyond what you'd ever dare to even dream of."

Life at the Top Chapter 1025

Archer's words were intended for Jasper, but he looked at Wendy as he spoke.

He mainly wanted to show off his capabilities in front of Wendy so as to attract her attention.

Therefore, he was disappointed when Wendy did not react in the way he wanted her to. In fact, Wendy looked at him with slight exasperation.

Wendy looked at him in a way that one would look at a clown.

Archer was enraged by her gaze.

Jasper was the poor person here. Archer believed that he was strong enough to crush Jasper with his mere finger, so who was Wendy to look at him like that?

"Thank you for the good intentions, but I won't be needing it," Jasper replied calmly before he pulled Wendy into the house.

"Hmph!" Archer harrumphed as he stared at Jasper's back darkly. "Who are you acting for? Seriously, the poorer and more useless someone is, the more they like to act like they're some sh*t."

At this moment, Ramona asked carefully, "Archer, did Jasper and Wendy get together?"

The question hit Archer where it hurt, and the man glared at Ramona before he spoke.

“What gave you the idea that idea? Don’t spout nonsense when you don’t know what you’re talking about. All of us know about Jasper’s limited capabilities anyway.

“He’s just a poor man without a buck to his name. All he can afford is white bread and vegetables, so who is he to be involved with Wendy? I’ll never agree to it!”

Jasper had already walked into the bedroom by then.

It was still decorated with vintage ornaments just as Jasper had remembered. The paint on the furniture had already cracked and begun to turn yellow, but the furnishing of the house was just as Jasper remembered seven to eight years ago.

One could easily come to the conclusion that Ms. Tiana had not changed nor added any new furniture to her house over these years.

On the bed laid a frail old woman, who peered at Jasper and Wendy as they walked in.

“Ms. Tiana.”

Jasper sped up and walked to the bed, lifting his hand to grab the sickly elder’s hand and whispered, “It’s me, Jasper. Do you still remember me?”

Ms. Tiana chuckled with difficulty and replied weakly, “Of course, I remember. You’re the introverted and shy boy who always failed his tests.”

“...” Jasper was speechless.

Wendy leaned down to speak to Ms. Tiana, “Ms. Tiana, it’s me, Wendy. Do you still remember me?”

Ms. Tiana nodded and replied, “Of course. You’re the smartest and prettiest student I’ve ever taught throughout all these years.”

“I’m very glad you came to visit me,” Ms. Tiana said, looking at Jasper and Wendy.

Jasper sat on the bed and replied, “Ms. Tiana, I still remember how you used to give me your lunchbox back in senior high and how you used to bring me over for dinner. Then, you’d supervise my homework or tutor me after dinner. I still remember everything you’ve done for me, Ms. Tiana.”

Ms. Tiana replied gently, “It’s my duty as a teacher. I can’t bear to see children suffering. How can you grow strong and well without proper nutrients during puberty?”

“I might never produce genius-like students, but I hope that every child I teach ends up kind, dutiful, and good.”

Jasper replied softly, “Still, how many teachers in the world would go as far as you did? Perhaps as a teacher, you think that you’ve only done your part. But to me, it was something that changed my life.”

It was said that a teacher’s job was to teach students principles of life, study curriculum, and explain difficulties. The study of curriculum and explanations came after, as the principles of life always came first.

Jasper’s personality in both his lifetimes as well as his ingrained kindness was due to two main reasons. Firstly, his parent’s teachings not to be malicious and mean, followed by Ms. Tiana’s kindness.

It was not wrong to say that during the critical period in which Jasper had cultivated his character, Ms. Tiana was the one who had influenced him most right after his parents.

“Why won’t you go to the hospital if you’re so unwell, Ms. Tiana?” Wendy asked gently.

“This is a psychological issue. The hospital can’t solve it and staying there will only be a waste of my money,” Ms. Tiana replied weakly.

‘Psychological issue?’

Jasper and Wendy exchanged a look and frowned.

It seemed like Ms. Tiana’s sickness was not as simple as it seemed.

Just then, Archer walked in from the outside.

He stopped in front of Ms. Tiana, and before he could speak, Ms. Tiana flew into distress.

“What are you doing here? I don’t have students like you, nor do I need you to visit me! Get out!”

Ms. Tiana was even about to sit up from the bed in agitation. However, Wendy quickly went to help Ms. Tian and asked, “Calm down, Ms. Tiana. What’s wrong?”

Archer sneered and replied calmly, “I’m still technically your student, Ms. Tiana. How could you treat me like an enemy?”

“Moreover, I’m the one that’s been helping you all this while. Your useless children can’t even pay your hospital bills. I was the one who paid them for you.

“Despite all that, instead of thanking me, you’re chasing me away. Ha, what kind of teacher are you?”

Ms. Tiana's complexion flushed red in anger as she pointed at Archer to speak, "You only did so in order to get me to sign the demolition agreement! I'm telling you, no way! I'll never sign it!"

"Why must you be so stubborn, Ms. Tiana?" Archer stared at her and spoke unkindly.

"Everyone in the staff building's already signed the papers. You're the only one between everyone and the demolition compensation. Who knows how many of your old colleagues are angry at you for being stubborn? Yet, you still won't give in?"

Ms. Tiana's emotions calmed down under Wendy's care and she spoke with a slight pant, "Your demolition paperwork isn't complete, and you're also paying half of what the official statement claimed. They only signed the papers because they had no other choice after your threats and bribery! But I will not compromise with you!"

Archer chuckled sinisterly and answered, "I already knew you were going to say that. But don't worry, I'm not the demolition company after all. Someone else will talk to you regarding this."

Archer then made a call and went to fetch someone at the door.

Jasper's gaze darkened as he watched Archer leave.

"The building's getting demolished, Ms. Tiana? And you disagree?" Jasper asked.

Ms. Tiana sighed and explained, "Their papers aren't complete and they're also paying half of the standard compensation fee. They're beating up whoever doesn't agree so no one truly agrees with him!"

“It’s just that everyone else has a family to protect, so they have no other choice but to leave. It’s different for me. However, my children are working outside and can’t be threatened. Additionally, I’m just an old woman, so what can they do?”

Life at the Top Chapter 1026

Jasper frowned slightly.

The staff building of Faith County's number one high school had only been demolished after 2010 in his past life because it was too old.

So why was it being demolished now?

Jasper could not help but feel that there was more to the situation.

Just then, two familiar voices sounded at the door.

Shockingly, it was Archer and Ronald.

"Mr. Nicholls, you swore that you were going to persuade the old woman. That's why I let you come here first.

"See, I even got the signatures of the last family on the sixth floor, and you're telling me you can't even handle one old woman?"

Ronald sounded displeased.

The important business he referred to moments ago was to sign contracts on behalf of the demolition company.

He thought that Archer would be able to handle this old Tiana woman, but he did not expect Archer to come back empty-handed.

Ronald began to feel impatient when he thought about the pressure the real estate company was giving him.

It was rare that such a profitable piece of business fell at his feet, and Ronald desperately wanted to show his capabilities to the client. That way, all new demolition businesses in Faith County would be given to him.

However, if he could not carry out the first bit of business well, then there was no future to speak of.

Ronald's expression darkened and he pushed open the room doors.

Ronald snickered when he entered and realized that both Jasper and Wendy were there. "F*cking Hell, why are you everywhere, you stupid f*cker?"

Ronald then turned to Ms. Tiana, who was sitting on the bed, and spat arrogantly, "My name is Ronald, Madam. I'm the person in charge of Robust Demolitions.

"I'm sure my subordinates and your student Archer already told you about the demolition. So, I won't waste my time. I've brought the contract, so sign it and the demolition compensation will be banked into your account in the afternoon."

"Get out! I will not sign your papers!" Ms. Tiana shouted with newfound strength.

Ronald sneered and spoke, "I already gave you respect, you old woman! I've seen old b*tches like you before, you just want to squeeze me of my money, don't you? Well, I'm telling you, there's no way in hell I'll let you scam me of my money!

"Everyone's already signed it and you're the only one left. You're going to sign this paper whether you want to or not. Either you sign it by yourself and I'll still pay you the demolition fee, or you watch yourself before I kill you!"

Jasper looked at Ronald indifferently as he spoke up, "So you're going to resort to violence, then?"

Ronald scoffed and replied, "Who are you to join the conversation, you stupid f*cker?"

“I’m only letting you be because you’re not worth my time, you brat. Don’t take it for granted. Or do you want to die too?”

“Go out and open your ears. Do you even know who I am in Faith County? Who do you think you are? What gave you the right to raise your voice at me? Had this been any other day, I’d have slapped you across the face long ago. F*cking idiot!”

Ronald then pulled out a contract from his briefcase and tossed it on the bed with a sneer. “Be a good student and persuade this old woman to stop being so stubborn.

“Otherwise, by the time the lights go off and she’s too old to run, an old woman might get buried here when my bulldozer comes to wreak the building.”

This was a blatant threat.

Even Ramona, who had been watching everything happen from the outside, was looking at Ronald furiously, much less Jasper and Wendy.

Archer was the only one with a matter-of-fact expression on his face.

“I suggest you sign the papers, Ms. Tiana. You’re already an old woman, what do you even need so much money for anyway?”

“It’s not like Ronald isn’t giving you money. Don’t think that just because you’re educated you can base everything on the official statement. Did the official statement consider Ronald’s situation?”

“Do you know how many people Ronald has in his demolition company? If he follows the official statements every day, then Ronald and his employees might as well not take home a salary at all!”

“So just sign the paper. This is for your sake. Didn’t you say you don’t care about money or fame and only had your students’ best interests in mind? In that case, why are you being so stubborn now? Just take the money for your retirement.”

Ms. Tiana paled in anger as she seethed, “Do you think I’m doing this for myself? I’m doing this for justice and equality! This house is mine! Do you think you can decide how much to pay me for demolition compensation?”

“I’m still sponsoring the tuition and living costs of more than ten children in poor families! I’m arguing for their sake!”

When she said this, everyone in the room was stunned.

“Ms. Tiana, you’re sponsoring more than ten students?” Wendy gasped.

Ms. Tiana sighed deeply and turned to Wendy, “In the second drawer by my bedside table is a canvas bag. Take it out.”

Wendy followed and pulled out an old canvas bag.

Ms. Tiana took the bag and pulled out a thick pile of envelopes. There were new and old ones, spanning over at least a decade.

Ms. Tiana took these envelopes and said, “You can read the letters if you don’t believe me. These are all written by children I’ve sponsored, and inside them are their pictures.”

After this, Ms. Tiana sighed deeply and continued, “As you said, I’m already old and I don’t even know how many more days alive I have left. I don’t need so much money, but any extra amount will go to another child in need. These children are too pitiful.

“I don’t even want more, just what the rules say. I just want what I am entitled to, is that too much to ask for?”

At that moment, even Ronald felt his cheeks burn in humiliation, let alone Archer.

Jasper glanced at the letters that were filled with innocent words of gratefulness directed at Ms. Tiana. These words and feelings could not be replicated.

Jasper took a deep breath and turned to Ms. Tiana. “Don’t worry, Ms. Tiana. I’m sure heaven sees everything that’s happening here. If you’re willing to demolish this place, then you will not get a Somer Dollar less than you deserve.

“If you don’t want to demolish the house, then God himself can come down here and he still wouldn’t be able to touch a single brick!”

Life at the Top Chapter 1027

Archer was the first to laugh when Jasper said this.

“Would you stop acting like you’re some bigshot, Jasper? Don’t you feel ashamed at all?”

“Seriously, I’m starting to think you’re living backward while all of us are moving on with the times. You were still smart back in school, not daring to interfere with anything or spout any nonsense. It’s only been a few years since we graduated, so why did you start acting pretentious all of a sudden, huh?”

“At least look around before you start acting. Does this look like something you can control?”

Ronald scoffed at Archer’s words and continued, “Who knows, maybe he’s outstanding now? Maybe he’s a boss of some company.”

“Hahaha, as if his company would be more formidable than yours, Ronald. Your demolition company makes at least a million each year.”

“Poor fellows like him only got to eat white bread and vegetables every day. His clothes were always torn and sewn back together, and even his shoes had holes in them. You think he’s ever seen so much money before in his life?”

Archer chortled loudly.

Ronald scoffed when he heard that.

“So, that’s the kind of person he is? And to think that he was so aggressive to me downstairs. If not for you, I’d have taught him a lesson long ago.”

Archer glared at Jasper before turning to Ronald and saying, “You let it go on my behalf, Ronald, I only asked because we used to be classmates.

“However, if he’s going to continue acting so stubborn, then there’s no need to leave him alone for my sake anymore. Hit, slap, do what you have to. Ignorant people like him won’t understand the concept of respect without a harsh beating from society.”

Archer then warned Jasper, “This is my last warning to you, Laine. Ronald isn’t someone you can afford to offend. His demolition company is the biggest in Faith County, and there are dozens of people under him.

“Most of them are ex-convicts, and Ronald’s bent so many of them to his will.

“Ronald’s also working with JW Real Estates. Have you even heard of JW Real Estates? It’s the biggest real estate company in Southeast Province! Do you know about the Southface River Project? Poor fellows like you will never get a chance to encounter such a thing, huh?

“But that’s okay, you can look for yourself. The south bank of Nauritus City’s southface river doesn’t charge admission fees. You’ll understand once you go there that there are tons more powerful people and companies in society. Who do you think you are?”

Jasper looked at Ronald and asked calmly, “JW Real Estates commissioned you to demolish this building?”

Ronald scoffed and replied, “Yeah, so what? Why do you sound like you don’t care about JW Real Estates, hmm?”

“You can’t blame an ignorant person for not understanding fear, Ronald. How can he be afraid when he doesn’t even know how big JW Real Estates is? Haha.”

Ronald laughed out loud at Archer’s words.

Just then, Ms. Tiana turned to Jasper and sighed. “Thank you for your kind intentions, Jasper, but there’s no need for you two to interfere with this. These people are all rascals and they’re willing to do anything to achieve their own goals. I refuse to believe that they would dare to bury an old woman like me here!”

Ronald’s expression grew cold and he shouted at Ms. Tiana, “Take the kindness I’m extending you now, old woman. I already gave offered you my respect when I first negotiated with you, but piss me off and I’ll immediately have my bulldozer come over and run this building to the ground!”

By now, Wendy was absolutely furious.

“You two are going too far!”

Instead of feeling uncomfortable, Wendy’s words only caused Ronald to laugh maddeningly. “A pretty lady is just different. You look so beautiful even when you’re angry and you scolding me only makes me feel better. Hahaha.

“So what if I’m going too far, pretty? After all, I have the qualifications for it.”

Archer piped up in agreement. “You’re too naive, Wendy. This society runs on strength, not reason.

“Ronald’s power is beyond your imagination. Attacking him is a suicide mission, so don’t do anything stupid. With your looks, Ronald and I can still help you enjoy a life in the upper-class.”

“Life in the upper-class?” Jasper asked meaningfully.

“You think that you’ve made it in life because you’re considered powerful in a small place like Faith County?”

Archer scoffed. “I really pity you, Jasper. What are you trying to say? That the world is huge?”

“Yeah, Faith County is small and the world is huge. There’s also a ton of much more powerful people outside, but are you one of them? No! You’re nothing more than a pitiful pest.

“Mark your words.” Jasper gave Archer and Ronald one last glance before he turned to Wendy and asked, “Do you know who the person-in-charge of Faith County is?”

Wendy naturally knew who Jasper was referring to and nodded. “He’s in the company’s contacts list. We can reach him at anytime.”

“He has ten minutes to come over,” Jasper said coldly.

Wendy gave her acknowledgment and then made a call.

Archer and Ronald were confused by Jasper’s actions.

“Did you go crazy or what?” Ronald sneered at Jasper and scoffed.

“Person-in-charge? What person-in-charge? Considering that you know him, I’d say it’s got to be the person in charge of sweeping the streets, hmm? Oh, I’m so scared.”

Archer laughed loudly too. “Who knows, Ronald. Maybe he’ll call JW Real Estates’ person-in-charge over? After all, everything’s possible when you live in a dream.

“But why would you put on this act with him, Wendy? Aren’t you just lowering yourself by doing so?”

Archer snickered and continued speaking to Wendy, “People say you start imitating the people you spend time around, Wendy. I suggest you leave this poor and stupid f*cker Jasper lest your intelligence gets dragged down as well. Come follow me and Ronald. It’ll be much better for you.”

Jasper smiled faintly when he heard Archer. After Wendy made a call, so did he.

Jasper then called the general manager of Southface River Properties.

The general manager was many ranks below Jasper, so he immediately greeted the man frightfully when he picked up the phone.

Jasper only said one thing.

“What kind of people are you employing? What use is being a general manager if you can’t even employ the right people?”

“I want you to reflect on your issues, and I don’t want to see the name Archer Nicholls in the list of employees under my companies!”

“Understood?!”

Jasper hung up the phone right after saying this.

Archer was about to laugh and mock Jasper when his phone rang.

Seeing that it was a call from his general manager, Archer’s smile froze and an ominous feeling filled his chest.

Life at the Top Chapter 1028

No matter what, Archer did not dare to leave a call from his superior unanswered, so he accepted it hesitantly. Before Archer could speak, his general manager shouted through the phone.

“Archer, I don’t care how you want to f*ck yourself over, but don’t involve me in your mistakes! Listen to me closely, you’re fired!”

Archer’s heart raced and his expression paled.

He felt the urge to explain himself quickly, but he had only just opened his mouth when the general manager hung up the phone.

Archer gaped at Jasper with widened eyes and he felt his throat tighten as if clogged with cotton. Countless words formed at the tip of his tongue but he could not say a thing.

Conflicting emotions of agitation, shock, disbelief, and confusion swarmed Archer and engulfed him.

The entire house fell silent for a moment.

“What happened?” Ronald asked, seeing how the color had drained from Archer’s face.

Ronald was confused at the strange situation.

Before Archer could reply, hasty knocks were heard at the door.

It had only been eight to nine minutes since Wendy’s call.

“I’ll open the door!”

It seemed like she was the only one suitable for the role.

She had watched everything transpire with her own eyes just now, including the phone call from which Archer was fired. The other party was too loud, so everyone in the room, including Ramona, had heard the contents of the call even without the speakers being turned on.

Ramona was not stupid, so she knew that Jasper currently had a magnificent status and identity.

Excited, Ramona opened the doors.

On the other side of the door stood a middle-aged man panting and sweating in place. The man was currently using an expensive suit jacket to wipe the sweat from his face.

Ramona could tell that this was a man who stayed in a luxurious environment most of the time. It must have been difficult for such a person to run up five floors of stairs in one go.

Nobody knew how this man had rushed over.

“You...”

The man interrupted Ramona before she finished speaking.

“Sorry. My name is Currey Abbott, I’m JW Real Estate’s Faith County branch’s person-in-charge. Is Mr. Laine here?”

Ramona sucked in a cold breath at how polite Currey was.

JW Real Estates was the number one real estate enterprise in the whole of Southeast Province. As the person in charge of the county, this man was someone a normal salaryperson like Ramona could never approach.

“Jasper Laine?” Ramona asked bravely.

“Yes.” Currey nodded vigorously.

“He’s inside, follow me.”

Ramona answered before bringing Currey inside.

“Yes, please. Thank you.”

Ramona marveled over how weird the world was when she heard Currey speak.

She could never meet people like Currey normally. Even if she did, Currey would certainly be very arrogant throughout the meeting and might not even spare her a word, let alone speak to her so politely now.

Upon entering the bedroom, the atmosphere in the room turned exceptionally strange.

Archer’s complexion was still devoid of color as his lips started to quiver.

Ronald had also realized what had happened. The man now looked at Jasper warily. He looked like there was a lot he wanted to say but decided to bite his tongue.

Jasper and Wendy were the only ones unaffected as they took care of the weak Ms. Tiana.

“I’m here, Mr. Laine,” Currey greeted courteously once he saw Jasper and rushed over.

Jasper hummed in acknowledgment as he held a cup of hot water in his hands. With Wendy’s help, he slowly fed Ms. Tiana the water.

Currey stood rigidly in place and did not dare say another word. He stood there like a guilty student awaiting his teacher’s punishment.

Ronald’s expression also changed when he saw Currey.

He knew who Currey was.

Ronald had put in a lot of effort to become Currey’s friend.

His relationship with Currey was finally going somewhere, but... Ronald’s expression soured greatly when he thought back to how Currey had addressed Jasper.

Mr. Laine!

Not anyone could be referred to so courteously.

Archer had only pretended to be the president of a company purely for the sake of fooling others and showing off.

However, when Currey referred to Jasper as Mr. Laine.

It meant that Ronald had completely screwed himself over.

Jasper only turned to meet Currey after Ms. Tiana had drank her water.

“Is this our first time meeting?” Jasper asked.

Currey quickly replied, “I’ve only been in Faith County for one and a half months. I was working in the headquarters in Nauritus City before, and I was fortunate enough to meet you during the Southface River topping-out ceremony, Mr. Laine.”

Jasper nodded. Be it the real estate company, his other subsidiaries, or even JW Capital the parent company itself, the number of employees under him was ever-growing as his enterprise continued to develop. Hence, he could no longer remember every single employee.

“Do you recognize this person? Is he a partner?” Jasper pointed at Ronald and asked.

Currey turned his head to look. The look in his eyes had terrified Ronald.

“No, that’s not the case, Jasper. Oh, wait, Mr. Laine. Mr. Laine, it’s a misunderstanding, Mr. Laine.”

Ronald no longer held the same air of arrogance about him now as he stumbled about to explain with a pale face, “This really is a misunderstanding. I didn’t know about your noble status before this, Mr. Laine.”

“Noble?” Jasper smiled and spoke calmly, “I don’t think there’s anything noble about my identity though. I’m just a normal man that’s doing business to make a living. How does having a larger business suddenly make me someone noble?”

Ronald looked like he had been made to swallow a fly. He nodded vigorously. “Yes, yes, of course, Mr. Laine. You’re right, you aren’t noble... no, that’s not what I meant.”

With a ‘pfft’, Ramona burst into laughter as she listened to Ronald stammering.

Ramona would never dare to laugh out loud if this was any other time, but she was elated right now.

Contrary to how arrogant Ronald and Archer were earlier, the two were now terrified and humiliated.

Ramona was extremely thrilled to see the large contrast in the two’s behaviors, especially when the two were acting so vile and abominable just moments ago.

Just then, Currey spoke.

“He’s Ronald Malone, Mr. Laine, the owner of Robust Demolitions. We do share a few business partnerships.

Jasper nodded and looked at Currey to ask, “Is the partnership process normal?”

Corruption was a potential risk to any company.

The larger JW got, the more likely problems of this kind were to arise in the lower ranks.

Currey from the county branch, for example, had full control over which demolition company he chose to partner with. There had to be a reason why he set out to partner with a specific company—be it Ronald, McDonald, or otherwise.

That was why Jasper had asked this.

Life at the Top Chapter 1030

The situation suddenly became more serious when Currey heard him ask this.

“I can guarantee this with my life, Mr. Laine. There’s no problem with the process at all.

“I chose Robust because I thought that it would be better to choose a local demolition company considering how demolition is extremely complicated and troublesome work. Robust happens to be the best demolition company in Faith County as well, so we decided to commission them.”

Jasper smiled when he heard Currey’s explanation and replied, “Don’t worry, I was just asking.

“But you have to remember that our partner’s strength shouldn’t be JW’s only metric when looking for a partner. The company owner’s personality is also very important.

“What kind of partnership benefits can we expect from a company that would hurt civilians for their personal interests? We should be satisfied as long as the partnership doesn’t come back to bite us in the bud.”

Jasper pointed at Ronald who was shivering and pale as he continued, “Take him, for example. He threatened a retired and severely ill teacher who was living alone. He claimed that he’d use a bulldozer and bury her under the building if she didn’t sign the demolition contract.

“Regardless of whether he was just threatening or if he actually planned to do so, JW should never partner with such people. Understood?”

Currey fully understood Jasper's lecture and immediately replied, "I understand, Mr. Laine. I'll go back and immediately announce the cancellation of all partnership with Robust Demolitions.

"We won't partner with them again in the future, and we'll also do some digging on this aspect when we choose our future partners."

"Very good." Jasper nodded.

Jasper then turned to Ronald who looked desperate and asked calmly, "Do you two remember what you said just now?"

"The world is huge and there's also a ton of much more powerful people outside. I might not be the most powerful person out there, but I am more powerful than you."

Jasper spoke slowly, and there was no hint of glee in his voice from oppressing them with his status and power. There was no sign of arrogance either—Jasper was calm, as if he had just done something insignificant.

"You had claimed that strength is more important than reason in this society, but what about now?"

"I fired Archer and ensured that your Robust Demolitions would never receive another deal from us. This is my strength. Even so, I believe that without enough reason, a little bit of strength will get you nowhere."

Ronald's entire body shivered as he looked at Jasper in despair. "Who, who are you?"

Jasper chuckled and replied, "Does it matter who I am?"

Thud.

It was the sound of Ronald falling to his knees.

He wailed as he begged Jasper, "Please, Mr. Laine, please. Forgive me, I'm sorry, I won't bully people like this anymore. Please, let me live, I don't want to go bankrupt!"

"Is it my fault whether you go bankrupt or not?" Jasper asked coldly.

Ronald frantically replied, "If you don't dissolve our partnership, then I'll spend the rest of my life as your lackey, Mr. Laine. I'll never be disloyal."

"Forget it, not with how you'd readily bury people with your bulldozers. I'm not brave enough to hire you."

Jasper averted his gaze from Ronald. It would only sully Jasper's business to have someone like Ronald work under him.

Jasper looked at Currey again and asked, "What's with the demolition of this staff building?"

Currey immediately replied, "We're planning to build a small district here and we've already demolished the surrounding area. All that's left is this building. The company's ready to start construction once that's done."

Life at the Top Chapter 1031

“Our proposal for this project has already been approved by the headquarters half a year ago.

“And the arrangement for the demolition compensation?” Jasper asked.

Currey was even more confused as he replied, “That is decided according to the documents the local officials gave us. As a real estate business, all we have to do is compensate the people affected in accordance with the statement provided by the officials. Is there something wrong?”

Jasper scoffed and replied, “This Robust Demolitions you partnered with is only paying half the standard demolition fee!”

Currey’s expression immediately changed and he hastily replied, “The real estate company knows nothing of this, Mr. Laine.

“I’ll have someone investigate your involvement in this. Bring them out of here now now, I don’t want to see them.

“And contact all households that signed the demolition contract. Find out how many families Ronald had forced to sign the release and ensure that you pay them the standard compensation package.

“We’re demolishing people’s homes, so it’s only right we pay them exactly how much we owe. JW Real Estates will not profit from immorally-made money.”

Currey quickly replied, “Yes, Mr. Laine. I’ll get to it right away.”

Jasper waved his hand and did not speak anymore.

Currey glared at Ronald and shouted, "What are you waiting for? Come with me! Or do you want to continue being Mr. Laine's eyesore?"

Ronald got up despondently and followed Currey out with a blank expression on his face. Archer left with them, his complexion pale and his head drooped down.

Archer was in despair now that he was fired; He knew that he was screwed.

Still, his situation was slightly better than Ronald's.

After all, all he lost was a job, and it would not be too difficult for Archer to find another job. Ronald had lost his entire company, so he was the one with nothing left.

Ronald grabbed Currey once they walked out the door.

As far as Currey was concerned, Ronald was like the plague, and he did not want to come in contact with the latter. Currey quickly shouted, "Let go! What're you holding on to me for?"

Ronald let go of him and pleaded sorrowfully, "I'm not even asking for your help, Mr. Abbott. But please, seeing as how we used to be partners, just tell me. Who is Jasper Laine?"

"What for? So you can take revenge?" Currey could tell what Ronald was thinking by the latter's expression.

"As you said, because we used to be partners, so I'll do you one better. I suggest you give up on the idea of taking revenge.

"Mr. Laine isn't like the people you used to deal with. You can't threaten or scare Mr. Laine off with a few thugs.

“This is JW we’re talking about. JW! Think about it properly, what do you think those two letters represent?”

Ronald looked deep in thought when he heard Currey say this.

Beside them, Archer reacted first and gasped, “JW, that’s Jasper’s and Wendy’s initials together isn’t it?”

Currey scoffed and answered, “So you’re not too stupid, brat. Now, do you know who Mr. Laine is?”

“He’s the owner of JW! And not just JW Real Estates. The real estate company is only one of Mr. Laine’s many subsidiaries. Each of them is just as powerful, if not more so than the real estate company. Who do you think you’re offending here?”

“No one in Southeast Province would dare to disrespect Mr. Laine, let alone the two of you.”

Life at the Top Chapter 1032

Both Ronald and Archer were in despair when they heard Currey.

It was only then that they finally understood who they had offended.

This was especially true for Archer.

He had bullied and looked down on Jasper because he believed that Jasper could not be someone outstanding, considering he was a poor fellow back when they were studying together. Had he not done so, Archer imagined that he would be living a life of riches now as Jasper's ex-classmate.

Therefore, Archer was immediately filled with regret.

He knew it was impossible, but Archer still felt the urge to rush back to kneel and beg for Jasper's forgiveness.

However, the tightly closed door had cut off any possibility of this.

"Oh my God." Ronald swayed before leaning against the wall limply. He wanted to cry but had no tears to shed.

"What now?"

Ronald suddenly turned to Archer, grabbed his hand, and shouted, "You two used to be classmates, right? Go beg for forgiveness! Maybe he'll give us another chance seeing as how you used to be classmates!"

Archer flung off Ronald's hand distastefully and replied, "I wouldn't have offended him if not for you! You want me to beg his forgiveness now? You think he'll give me the time of day?"

"I only lost my job now, but if I truly piss him off, who knows if I'll end up dead because of it!"

Ronald's expression soured. "You're blaming me?"

Archer harrumphed and answered aggrievedly, "Who else am I supposed to blame but you? You're the one that's been acting high and mighty because you're considered strong and have contacts here Faith County. This is karma! It's only a matter of time before something like this happens to people like you!"

Ronald was already greatly agitated to begin with, so when Archer began to look down on him as well, he grew enraged. "What the f*ck did you just say to me?!"

Ronald then swiftly punched Archer across the face.

Unfortunately, Archer was not someone to be offended either. Feeling both regret and the hasty urge to vent, Archer could no longer hold back when Ronald punched him, so he pounced on the man, causing the two to get into a fistfight.

Currey shook his head at the sight of the two intertwined and fighting figures.

No matter how he looked at it, the scene reminded him of a dogfight.

Not that it mattered to him anymore.

In the room, Ms. Tiana was also curious about who exactly Jasper was.

"Are you some owner of a big business now, Jasper?" Ms. Tiana asked.

Jasper sat by the bed and smiled “I wouldn’t call it a big business, but I do own something quaint.”

Despite this, Ms. Tiana shook her head. “Don’t lie to me. I can tell from how that old head of the real estate business treated you with respect that you’re his superior, aren’t you?”

Jasper nodded. “Yeah.”

Ms. Tiana sighed and spoke with relief, “Good, then. Very good. You’re the most successful one out of all my students.”

“Ms. Tiana, it’s still my fault for being too lax with my subordinates. If I wasn’t, this wouldn’t have happened. You heard him just now, so don’t worry. I’ll follow up on this and I’ll make sure the families who signed the demolition contract won’t be cheated of any money,” Jasper spoke gently.

Ms. Tiana replied contentedly, “I know. I have nothing to fear now that I have your promise. As for the demolition contract, I’ll sign it right away once you have your people come over.”

“There’s no rush for that, Ms. Tiana. I plan to bring you over to the hospital in the provincial capital for treatment. Your health is still the most important thing here. Just look, all these children are eagerly waiting for you to get better,” Jasper spoke.

However, Ms. Tiana seemed hesitant. “I didn’t go to the hospital before because I was worried that they’d demolish the building while I was away.

“Even now, when there’s no need to worry about that anymore, going to the hospital is still too expensive. I know my own body, so once the psychological illness is gone, I’ll be return to health in no time at all.”

Jasper glanced at Wendy to signal for her help in persuading Ms. Tiana when he realized that she was unwilling to go to Nauritus City with him.

Thus, Wendy spoke gently as well, “Ms. Tiana, it’s only right we go to the hospital when we’re not feeling well. Don’t worry about the expenses and all. Jasp is doing really well now and the money won’t be a problem.”

Despite this, Ms. Tiana still looked hesitant.

Jasper smiled. “Actually, Ms. Tiana, I was hoping to seek out a charity foundation when I got back. Mainly to sponsor children who are too poor to attend schools.

“But I’m too busy with work most of the time and I can’t do this all on my own. Therefore, I was hoping you could become the first chairwoman of this charity foundation, Ms. Tiana.”

Ms. Tiana flushed in excitement and gasped. “Really?”

Jasper nodded and smiled. “Of course. I’m planning to donate an initial amount of 10 million to the charity foundation. It’s not much, but it should help quite a few children. That’s why you have to take care of yourself, Ms. Tiana. Otherwise, how will you provide them a chance to go to school?”

With that, Ms. Tiana replied excitedly, “Yes, yes, you’re right. This is great, Jasper. You’ve never disappointed me. A successful person should always think of ways to benefit the rest of the world, and you’ve already begun to walk this path.”

“You’re too kind, Ms. Tiana. I’m still far from a successful person, I’m just doing what I can with the little that I have.”

“That’s precious enough as it is. In that case, I agree, I’ll go to Nauritus City immediately!

“However, there are still a few things I need to pack up, and the children don’t know that I’m going to Nauritus City. I’ve got to tell them first, so I can’t leave today,” Ms. Tiana continued ashamedly.

“Leave it to me.”

Ramona suddenly spoke up, “Jasper, Wendy, you two are busy people so you should go back first. I’ll send Ms. Tiana to Naurtitus City tomorrow or the day after once she’s totally prepared.”

Jasper nodded and replied, “Thank you for your trouble, then. This is my name card, so just contact me then.”

Ramona suppressed her excitement and took Jasper’s name card, then she beamed brightly at Jasper and asked, “If possible, can I help out in the charity foundation too?”

“Of course. The charity foundation’s still in the process of being founded, and it’s in dire need of recruits. I’d be grateful if you wanted to join it,” Jasper answered with a crescent-eyed smile.

Both Jasper and Wendy were in a great mood as they left Ms. Tiana’s house.

After all, they had successfully dealt with Ms. Tiana’s issue.

“Is this charity foundation real?” Wendy asked when she got in the car.

“Of course it is. It’s not like I can go back on my word now that I’ve said it,” Jasper replied while driving. “I’ve been poor before so I know how it feels when you can’t even afford a meal. How is anyone supposed to afford education under circumstances like that?”

“It’s within my capabilities, so I’ll help them as best as I can. It won’t cost us much, but it’ll be a life-changing opportunity for the kids.”

Life at the Top Chapter 1033

As Jasper drove away from Faith County, an Audi approached it from the opposite direction.

Excluding the driver, there was a man and a woman in the car.

“This is your hometown, Miss Hunt? What a great and scenic place. It’s just as I expected.”

The man in a smart outfit spoke with stilted Somerish as he looked out the window.

Beside him was a woman dressed in a feminine suit with light makeup on her face.

This woman was the ‘Miss Hunt’ he was referring to.

Jasper would be shocked if he saw this, for Miss Hunt was none other than Penelope.

With Jasper’s recommendation, Penelope had gotten a job in ICBS thanks to John. However, she resigned two months later and was now completely different.

Not even the people closest to Penelope would believe that the harsh and calculative girl would turn into someone that now oozed with confidence.

“Are you implying something else, Mr. Carr?” Penelope asked calmly.

Leroy smiled and replied, "I was just voicing my genuine thoughts. Oh, right, do you plan to stay for a few days now that you've returned to your hometown, Miss Hunt?"

Penelope replied, "I've only come this time to fetch my mother to Waterhoof City for treatment. It won't take long, so don't worry. I know what my mission is, and I won't add to Mr. Atticus' troubles. I'll return as fast as I can."

Leroy chuckled and said, "Don't worry about it. After all, we are partners. As long as you've done what Mr. Atticus wants of you, he'll give you what you want in return."

Penelope replied indifferently, "If we really are partners, then how would you explain Mr. Atticus having you stay by my side to monitor me?"

Leroy laughed out loud. "You're being too sensitive, Miss Hunt. Mr. Atticus already told me that I'm only by your side to help you deal with issues you cannot handle alone.

"After all, you're still new to the business world. If not for my help, your company would not have been able to develop so smoothly. What use is Mr. Atticus' taking care of you and giving you business orders when you can't even carry them out?"

Penelope's gaze sharpened and she spoke indifferently, "I know exactly what your plans are. Still, it's one thing to act when others are observing you, but aren't you tired of acting even in private?"

Leroy twisted his body and leaned toward Penelope to ask. "Tired? I'm full of energy and vigor."

As he said this, Leroy had already placed a hand on Penelope's thigh before she realized.

Penelope immediately struggled and pushed Leroy's body and hand away as if she were suddenly electrocuted. She spoke icily, "Did Mr. Atticus tell you to do this too, Leroy?"

Leroy's ego was bruised after being pushed away and he replied coldly, "I just wanted to learn more of you. Don't you want to gain more benefits through me?"

Penelope sneered. "You're just one of Mr. Atticus' dogs, so what benefits can you offer me? I suggest you show some respect!"

Leroy harrumphed and stared at Penelope. "Stupid b*tch! Don't take my kindness for granted. Who do you think you are? You're nothing more than a lowly b*tch in front of Mr. Atticus!"

"Had it not been for your relationship with Jasper and the fact that you're useful to us, Mr. Atticus would never spared a b*tch like you a glance!"

Penelope stared at Leroy frigidly and answered, "Even if I'm just a b*tch, you aren't any more dignified than I am! My deal with Mr. Atticus is between him and me. It has nothing to do with a servant like you merely stands by Mr. Atticus' side!"

Penelope ignored Leroy's wretched expression and continued to speak, "I already told you. Either show some respect, or I'll notify Mr. Atticus immediately!"

"It's just like you said. I'm still useful to Mr. Atticus, so do you think he'll get rid of me or you?"

When he heard this, Leroy's expression changed slightly.

Penelope was no more than a facet for him to vent out his sexual frustrations, but it was not worth it to anger Mr. Atticus over such a thing.

As Mr. Atticus's lackey, Leroy knew better than most that the last thing he should do was anger Mr. Atticus. If he did, he would face a fate more tragic than he could ever imagine.

Penelope harrumphed when she saw that she had deterred Leroy, and said, "I can pretend that nothing happened earlier, but I don't want it to happen again.

"Mr. Atticus had you monitor me, so do your job honestly. I'll also complete what I promised Mr. Atticus, but this process has nothing to do with a servant like you. Don't even think about touching me again or I'll make you pay for it!"

Leroy narrowed his eyes and bore his gaze into Penelope.

He had first seen this woman in Mr. Atticus's office. She was terrified, akin to a newborn chick, and she had an air of an insignificant townspeople. She was an extremely ordinary woman of the lowest rank.

However, this woman was easily adaptable and it had only taken a few months before she changed completely. Now, a couple of curt sentences from her had Leroy admitting defeat.

Leroy harrumphed after weighing his options. Then, he temporarily dismissed his lustful desires.

After all, this woman would become a stray dog after she stopped being of use to Mr. Atticus. 'When that happens, I'll get to do whatever I want to her.'

When he thought of this, Leroy felt his body heat up.

'Just you wait. You may be prideful now, but I'd like to see how you die once Mr. Atticus' plan succeeds!'

In the car, Leroy's expression jumped between prideful and wretched as his mind raced through these thoughts. Meanwhile, Penelope remained expressionless.

The hand hidden by her side curled into a fist as Penelope took a deep breath, her gaze sharpening.

She knew that both Leroy beside her and Mr. Atticus far away in Harbor City saw her as nothing more than a pawn to deal with Jasper. Not that she cared, for she was using them at the same time too.

“How have you been lately, Jasper?”

Penelope muttered internally as she stared at the familiar bustling street outside the window.

Life at the Top Chapter 1034

Jasper had no idea of the two special guests that arrived in Faith County after him.

At the same time, the man was currently discussing the charity foundation with Wendy.

“This charity foundation will aim to sponsor poor children so they can have a chance to pursue their education. This is also all it will do. From what I know, international charity foundations tend to invest donations in insured financial products and do charitable transactions with the returns as they’re non-profit organizations.

“JW Company is this charity foundation’s only shareholder, so we won’t do public fundraising. It’s also not time for that yet.

“I’ll have Jake represent me to invest the 10 million from Harbor City when the time comes, and I intend to have an annualized rate of return for this. Say that we set a rate of return of 10%. If it exceeds, then all is well, but if it doesn’t, then I’ll top it up with my own money.”

Wendy frowned when she heard that, “Won’t you make a huge loss if you’re coming up with the principal and also covering the shortage?”

Jasper smiled and replied, “We’re doing charity. In comparison to the money we make, this isn’t much. But this seemingly small sum of money is enough to help a lot of children.

“Besides, it’s not like we’ll definitely making a loss. Charity foundations come with many tax incentives. The main reason why so many enterprises abroad are passionate about doing charity is that it helps reduce the amount of tax one has to pay. For every 1 million we donate, we pay 800 thousand less for tax, meaning we only pay a net amount of 200 thousand. At the same time, we win both the officials’ and society’s favor.

“Our country also has systems like this in place to encourage the development of the charity industry. A certain amount of donations from an enterprise can result in a 100% tax deduction. When this happens, we don’t have to pay a buck, since our tax money will be considered to have gone to charitable donations.

“The most important thing is that the charity foundation is an asset, which benefits us, the society, and the officials.”

Since she worked in finance, Wendy immediately understood what Jasper meant. Soon, her expression became one of keen interest.

“I’ll have someone follow up on this immediately once we get back, so we can go through the procedures as soon as possible.”

Jasper smiled. “Alright. But remember that the point of this is to do charity within our capabilities, so keep things low-profile. There’s no need to broadcast it to the world or it’ll lose its original meaning.

“Find professionals to manage it when the time comes, and we’ll try to distance it as far away from JW Capital and its subsidiaries as possible.”

“Okay,” Wendy replied.

Jasper had almost no time to rest once they returned to Nauritus City as he joined Wendy in submerging himself in work.

The larger JW Capital’s subsidiaries became, the more decisions the parent company had to make.

The team of decision-makers and senior executives grew as well, and while they did help share quite a bit of Jasper's and Wendy's burdens, Jasper still had to oversee and approve important decisions and proposals.

"The research and development of a stepper?"

Jasper looked up from the report in his hands to Lance and Chad, who sat in front of him, and asked with a smile, "You two have given me a very tricky question here."

Chad smiled wryly and replied, "I couldn't decide when Lance handed the report to me, so I thought that it'd be best if you made the decision, Mr. Laine. After all, a few hundred million a year for research is just too much.

"If I'm right, this research expense of a few hundred million has already gone through multiple rounds of restructuring, hasn't it?" Jasper asked Lance.

Lance nodded embarrassedly and replied, "That's true, Mr. Laine. But this was something Professor McGee had strongly requested.

"They said that our country's technical field is currently empty, and future electronics will all rely on technical development of the integrated circuit. Relying on imported goods will one day become a weakness others can exploit."

Jasper nodded but did not make a sound.

He was well aware of this.

In the year 2020 of his past life, Warwick was the leading figure in the private technology manufacturing industry within the country. Despite this, the company had been cornered and stunted by its competitors due to their inability to compete technically when it came to integrated circuits.

There were two main components in electronic equipment: the operating system software, and the integrated circuit hardware.

Huge western technology companies also had a tight grip of these two components.

For the operating system, Google was already one of Jasper's subsidiaries. One of the advantages of his reincarnation was that Jasper understood the importance of operating systems before everyone else did, as well as the fact that the creator of Android would also hail from Google.

When it came to hardware, however... the West had almost a century's worth of technological advancement over them, and it would not be so easy to surpass them.

"This few hundred million won't be enough," Jasper put his report down and answered.

Lance and Chad shared a look as they did not understand what Jasper meant.

"I know about steppers, and the integrated system is the most important component of it all. A research fund of a few hundred billion a year isn't enough to develop something like this and I don't remember Professor McGee being someone so unreliable."

Chad smiled wryly at Jasper's words and turned to Lance. "I told you, didn't I? Don't even think about trying to deceive Mr. Laine. Just tell him your requests as it is."

Lance then answered with an embarrassed expression, "There really isn't hiding anything from you, Mr. Laine. Indeed, a few hundred million is only enough for the initial stages of research and development.

"Once research actually begins, Professor McGee and his team estimate funding of at least 5 billion a year if he hopes to produce any results. After all, we're short of a decade's worth of technological prowess, and are lacking the research normally carried out by hundreds of national experts."

“So you two decided to come up with this plan to placate Elbert while deterring me at the same time?” Jasper asked.

Lance quickly replied, “We didn’t think too much about it. A research fund of a few hundred million is already a huge deal to any enterprise within the country.

“Therefore, you’d have realized that something was wrong after a detailed investigation of the market, Mr. Laine, and we suspected that you’d decline the proposal. I’m sure Professor McGee would also have been deterred by this.”

After saying this, Lance sighed. “All these technicians know is how to ask for money, but they don’t know how difficult it is to make money to begin with. Who can possibly support R&D that cost billions every year?”

Jasper fell silent for a long moment to think about it before he finally spoke up, “Still, not every expense can be cut down.”

Life at the Top Chapter 1035

Jasper's words stunned both Chad and Lance.

"So you're actually going to invest the amount, Mr. Laine?" Lance asked in shock.

Chad was a higher-ranked employee, after all, so he had a more comprehensive view of issues. Chad frowned and replied, "Mr. Laine, I don't think such a large investment is a good idea."

"I'm sure you two are aware of the basics of the company's current financial situation." Jasper leaned back against his office chair and sipped his tea with a crescent-eyed smile.

"We aren't exactly at risk of a capital chain rupture, but that's only because all our companies are developing exponentially. The money we're making is almost completely rechanneled back into the company.

"Our electronics company produces the most profits out of all the subsidiaries, but it only gave the parent company 80 million worth of profit last month. Do you think the parent company can afford to allocate them billions to fund research?"

Lance replied in embarrassment. "It's mainly because construction of the new factory area has already wrapped up over in Reed City. Therefore, we invested a little more to add a few production lines over there."

Jasper waved him off and replied, "The company needs to develop, so it will need money. I'm not blaming you for the small profit, but telling you instead that the JW Capital's cash flow is tight, and it can't afford such expensive research."

"If that's the case, then what did you mean when you said that not every expense can be cut down, Mr. Laine?" Chad asked.

“Exactly what you think I mean.”

Jasper placed the report into his drawer and continued.

“For every enterprise that relies on advanced technology, research funding is an expense they cannot afford to reduce. Take a look at the top advanced technology companies around the world and observe how many of them have research funds that represent at least 50% of their operating costs.

“To a technology company, technology is their lifeforce. A monopoly on technology can lead to endless wealth and a worldwide market to reap from.

“All of JW Capital’s subsidiaries aim to reach the pinnacle of their respective industries. Not just within the province or country, but within Terra or even the entire world.

“Which is why we’re not aiming to be labor-intensive enterprises, but rather profitable technological giants with plenty of influence.”

Jasper smiled as he looked at Lance and Chad who were inexplicably excited. He continued.

“Go back and tell Professor McGee that I already know about his request. Tell him to give me a moment and I’ll talk to him personally soon. He has my vow that he’ll get to research this project.”

“Alright, Mr. Laine. I’ll make sure he is notified of this,” Lance replied.

Jasper waved his hand and spoke, “Leave everything else to me from here on. I’ll take a trip to Waterhoof City to negotiate this, then I’ll update you on the results afterward.”

‘Waterhoof City to negotiate?’

'There are stepper technicians or companies to negotiate with in Waterhoof City?'

Lance and Chad exchange a look, but were smart enough not to ask questions. Now that the matter was settled, the two of them left the room.

Jasper sat in the office for a moment as he thought about the stepper.

A few minutes later, he picked up his phone and called Zachary.

"Hi, Uncle Law. I remember that Old Master Law had donated a stepper to a few years ago, right?"

Jasper continued after hearing the response from the other end of the line.

"Haha, I know that it's an old device from decades ago. But the old master had the ability and contacts to get a stepper into the country. That's something that most people can only dream of.

"I know that the west has a technology blockade on the stepper, so I wasn't planning to look for a stepper manufacturer outside the country. Instead, I was thinking that perhaps Hoofmorn University might have some results after researching the stepper for so many years."

Life at the Top Chapter 1036

“Yes, I do have plans to bring over a team to conduct the research alongside them.

“I’m prepared to invest astronomical amounts into this. This is going to be a magnificent thing if we succeed. It’ll mean that JW Electronics broke through the technology blockade and will mark a turning point in which JW Electronics can finally make its way toward the international market.

“Alright. Thank’s for your trouble putting, Uncle Law. I’ll take a trip to Waterhoof City immediately to contact them.”

Hanging up the phone, Jasper had just stood to leave the room when his phone rang again.

This caught Jasper off guard as the phone call was from Gale, who Jasper had not talked to in a long time.

“Old Master Hurlbutt, is there a reason you’ve taken time out of your busy schedule to talk to me today?”

While Gale and Old Master Law were elders of the same generation, Jasper made sure to maintain enough distance with this crafty Haddock businessman that liked to look down on the younger generation for their lack of experience.

Crafty businessmen like him were ruthless, and they left no remains when they devoured others whole.

Take Conrad’s aluminum mine that Jasper had tried hard to seize before for example.

It was an aluminum mine without too much developmental value, yet Gale had spent quite a bit of money to get it through Jasper.

Jasper remembered being confused as to why the old man would spend so much when there was not much to profits to be made from it. Even if Gale had gained ownership of the aluminum mine, he would still have to deduct inflation and interest from the remaining extractable ores.

He did not know why Gale was so stubborn about the aluminum mine.

However, what the old man did with the mine afterward completely stunned Jasper.

It also taught Jasper the difference between himself and this crafty businessman.

The old man had no desire to continue developing the mine at all. Instead, he immediately split the mining company into seventeen or eighteen smaller companies, each holding few resources and property rights. Then he completely reorganized them and sought out a few listed mining companies to sell the assets to.

Those listed companies released statements claiming that they had purchased important mining resources, and their share prices immediately skyrocketed.

Gale had made 800 million with this split and reorganization.

It was a win-win situation.

The only people who made a loss were investors.

However, even for them, the prices of their shares had increased.

Through this incident, Jasper came to believe that Gale was undoubtedly Haddock Chamber of Commerce's most important figure. The old man had managed to use ruthlessness and craftiness to maximize his profits in Haddock Chamber of Commerce.

“You are putting your guard up against dear old me, aren’t you, sly child?” Gale’s chuckle drifted over from the other end of the line.

Jasper decided he might as well sit down again for this phone call and replied with a bright smile, “Old Master Hurlbutt, you prefer working on yourself and sitting down to enjoy the world around you. But I’m still young and I like moving around and wreaking havoc. We’re different people, so there’s no trust between us, nor is there any need to keep up our guard.”

Gale chuckled and replied, “There is no need to plot, sly child. I came looking for you this time with a specific goal in mind. I suppose you have forgotten your position, haven’t you?”

Jasper asked confusedly, “What position, Old Master Hurlbutt?”

“Hmph. You are still the Vice President of the Haddock Chamber of Commerce’s Waterhoof City Branch. You agreed to take this position back then, yet you have not walked through the Waterhoof City Branch doors even once. Does it not hurt your conscience to lie to an old man who is already living out his last years?”

Jasper pretended to be shocked as he replied, “I’m innocent, Old Master Hurlbutt. I’ve just been too busy lately...”

“Alright. I did not come to hear your excuses. Something has occurred at the Chamber of Commerce. We need you there.”

Life at the Top Chapter 1037

Jasper immediately raised his guard when he heard Gale say this.

“Do tell, Old Master Hurlbutt. I’m listening,” Jasper spoke.

Glare harrumphed when he heard Jasper clench his jaw but not promise to deal with the matter.

Any of his countless students in the Haddock Chamber of Commerce at this moment would be promising and swearing on their lives to deal with the matter well if he gave them the chance to work for him.

Yet, Jasper always acted as if Gale was ready to hurt him at any given time.

“An asset forum conference will be held in two days and I need you to attend it as the Haddock Chamber of Commerce’s representative,” Gale went straight to the point.

“The Teo Chamber of Commerce is holding the conference. Though based over at Cavern City, they decided to hold the conference in Waterhoof City, in Haddock’s Chamber of Commerce’s territory. They even sent invitations with great fanfare.

“That is why the Waterhoof City Branch will have to send out someone powerful to represent us.”

“However, there is no one suitable for the role over at the branch. I have given it some thought and you are the only one who can do it.”

Jasper frowned slightly at Gale’s words.

“Old Master Hurlbutt, I made it clear when I agreed to take the role as Vice President of the Chamber. I’m just here in name and I won’t interfere or participate in any of the specific businesses of the Chamber. I’m not a businessperson from Haddock, after all. It wouldn’t be right of me to attend this conference.

“This asset forum conference is essentially a fight between the Teo and Haddock Chambers of Commerce, it wouldn’t be suitable for a youth like me to join in.”

Gale seemed to have anticipated Jasper’s rejection and answered calmly, “You also agreed that you would take on the responsibility and work of a Vice President of the Chamber. I would not have asked you to assume the position otherwise.

“The only reason why the Teo Chamber of Commerce would dare to hold an asset forum conference in Waterhoof City is because they realized that the Haddock Chamber of Commerce is currently left without a strong leader.

“I am already old and there is only a handful of successful ones in the next generation, none of which are in Waterhoof City. Meanwhile, the generation after that has yet to grow up and establish themselves.

“A fight between chambers of commerce is large and it involves the interests of countless people. This is why the Waterhoof City Branch must send someone to attend, and the representative must win as well. You are the only one suited for the job.”

Jasper did not want to charge into this battle as Gale’s pawn, so he wanted to reject him immediately.

However, Gale continued before Jasper could speak.

“I’ll owe you a favor after this.”

Jasper immediately changed his mind after this.

Gale was a crafty man, but he kept his promises. This was evident from the situation with the Hull family.

Gale had helped the man even though it risked others mocking him for shamelessly bullying someone weaker.

All because he owed that family a favor.

During crucial times, a favor from someone like Gale could result in unexpected outcomes.

“I can go and do my part, but I have a small request. The Waterhoof City branch is not to cause me any more problems in the future,” Jasper spoke.

Jasper did not forget that after getting rid of the Hull family, Haddock Chamber of Commerce’s Waterhoof City Branch still had the Gardner family lying in wait.

Over there, Norman had assumed the position of president.

“Alright,” Gale understood what Jasper was implying and replied calmly, “Whoever causes trouble you from now on will also be causing trouble to me.”

“I’m relieved to hear that, Old Master Hurlbutt,” Jasper smiled.

“Hmph. It won’t be easy owning a favor from me, sly child. I’ll have the branch send you information about the asset forum conference later. Treat it seriously, or I won’t be the only one in despair. You’d be making a fool out of yourself too.”

Life at the Top Chapter 1038

Gale was evidently not in a good mood, so he hung up the phone right after.

It was almost time to clock out once the two calls were done.

Jasper went to fetch Wendy and the two soon returned home together.

Dawson was also home when they arrived at the house.

“You’ve helped me a lot with that 1 billion worth of funds, Uncle Schuler. But I might still need a little longer before I can pay you back next month,” Jasper spoke as he walked into the house with Dawson.

In reality, Jasper had borrowed the 1 billion investment into Abbylon from his future father-in-law...

Dawson waved him off and replied, “Take your time. You know how it is with the supermarket industry. The last things we lack are stores and cash. Not to mention that this money is going to belong to you two one day. I’m just handing it to you early.”

Jasper chuckled and did not decline. “Alright, then I’ll take this as an investment. Give me another month and I’ll make some big money. I should be able to pay you back two-fold if nothing goes wrong.”

While Dawson did not mind giving Jasper 1 billion Somer Dollars, his eyebrows still arched when he heard the younger man’s claim.

Dawson knew how Jasper had made his first fortune, so he immediately understood what Jasper meant by making big money.

“Be careful. The financial capital industry is no different from a huge legal gambling table. No one can promise to win forever,” Dawson reminded.

Jasper smiled and said, “I know. I won’t act without absolute certainty.”

Dawson nodded when he heard this. “Good. I’ve never had to worry about this when it comes to you.”

The family of three and Tiffany soon had dinner together.

After dinner, Jasper then called Tiffany to the study.

“I still have to wash the cutlery, Jasper,” Tiffany spoke softly.

Jasper replied with a crescent-eyed smile, “That can wait. You seemed preoccupied over dinner, as though you had something on your mind. You can always talk to me about it if you want, or your big sis Schuler if you’re uncomfortable talking to me about it.

“Also, have you decided on the thing I suggested to you last time? About going to university?”

Tiffany’s finger gripped her clothes when she heard him and she replied softly, “This is actually what I’ve been thinking about... I want to go to university, Jasper.”

Tiffany mustered up the courage to say the last bit.

“But I feel like I’m owing you too much, Jasper. I, it makes me feel uneasy.”

Jasper sighed lightly at Tiffany’s words.

“I understand what you are feeling, but I told you before, I’m just lending the money to you, and you’re going to have to pay me back in the end. Therefore, you don’t have to feel like you owe me.”

Tiffany replied in a conflicted tone, “But why are you so good to me when you have no reason to, Jasper?”

“Would you believe me if I said you reminded me of someone from the past?” Jasper asked.

Tiffany was stunned and she blinked in slight confusion.

“Don’t overthink it. Since you’ve already decided, then I’ll arrange it for you. I’ll be taking a trip to Waterhoof City tomorrow anyway, and I’ll be in contact with Hoofmorn University. So, I’ll help you contact them for your enrolment,” Jasper smiled.

Tiffany gaped in shock. “Hoofmorn University? That’s the fifth-best university in the country, Jasper. Is that even possible?”

“Superpowers exist in this world, and one of them is called having money.” Jasper chuckled.

Life at the Top Chapter 1039

“Thank you, Jasper.”

Tiffany suddenly got up and gave Jasper a deep bow.

Jasper instinctively went up to stop her, but he immediately backtracked after taking the first step. Standing in place, he accepted Tiffany’s bow.

He knew that not accepting would only make Tiffany feel more uneasy. Hence, he might as well accept it since it would make Tiffany feel better.

Indeed, the girl exhaled in relief after bowing as she beamed brightly at Jasper.

“Just tell me how much money I used when the time comes, Jasper. I’ll calculate a total and write an IOU. I’ll start working after graduation so that I can pay you back.”

“I won’t charge you interest, but you will need to pay the principal back,” Jasper replied with a crescent-eyed smile.

Tiffany nodded enthusiastically when she heard this.

Just then, the study room doors were opened.

“What are you two talking about? I heard something about an IOU?” Wendy asked, walking into the room.

“Jasper said he’ll help me enroll in a university, so I’ll write an IOU for Jasper and you, Big Sis Schuler,” Tiffany spoke softly.

Wendy glanced at Jasper intently and said, "It's great that you want to study. Is there a major you're interested in?"

Jasper facepalmed when she said this. Wendy was indeed more detailed than he was when it came to things like this. All he thought of was to enroll Tiffany in a university, but he totally forgot to ask her what she wanted to major in."

Considering Tiffany's personality, she would only force herself to study if it was a major she did not like. This would go against Jasper's original intention.

"Can I study law?" Tiffany asked.

Wendy's eye lit up and she spoke, "Law's a major overlooked by many people, so it's in dire need of great talents. Having a law degree would also help you greatly in your future career."

"I don't see why not. If you can pass the judicial examination when you graduate, it'd help you greatly whether you go on to assume a legal position in a company, becoming a lawyer in a law firm, or even being a government official.

"I have no desire to work for the government or to be a lawyer, but I will take the judicial and bar exam. I want to work in your company's legal team," Tiffany spoke bravely.

Jasper smiled. "You're ambitious, that's great. Not to mention that JW's current legal team is still very weak, so it'll definitely need strengthening in the future. Even so, it isn't easy taking the judicial examination. Are you confident about this?"

Tiffany replied embarrassedly, "I love law. I even have half the general rules of Civil Law memorized. I'm confident."

After talking for a little longer, Tiffany excused herself.

Tiffany had just left when Wendy narrowed her eyes and walked over to stand in front of Jasper.

Wendy and Jasper stood very close together, to the point that they could feel the other's breaths on their faces.

However, Wendy was not flirting with Jasper now as she had questions to ask.

Jasper could also feel that Wendy was slightly pissed, and he smiled drily, "Why are you looking at me like that?"

"Are you guilty?" Wendy asked.

Jasper replied solemnly, "Why would I feel guilty when I didn't do anything wrong?"

"You're guilty," Wendy narrowed her eyes and spoke with certainty.

"Or you wouldn't be acting like this.

"Tell me, what are your plans with Tiffany?"

Jasper replied exasperatedly when he heard this, "She's just a young lady who came out to work after high school. I sympathize with her family background so I want to help where I can. What other plans could I have?"

Wendy looked at Jasper suspiciously and said, "No, I can tell that your reaction was different the first time you met Tiffany. It's like you've known her long ago, but Tiffany doesn't seem to remember you at all.

"Jasper you flirt, this isn't one of those amnesiac female-lead Conreana dramas, is it?"

Jasper let out a sigh. "What a vivid imagination you have. Say there is a female lead, it'd still be you, no?"

"Hmph."

Wendy seemed to be satisfied with Jasper's reply for she answered, "Don't even think about Tiffany in that way. She's too young and clueless."

"I wouldn't think about her that way even if she wasn't clueless," Jasper shook his head, "Don't you what kind of person I am?"

"I do know, which is also why I'm giving you this talk to deter you," Wendy spoke firmly.

When he recalled Anna and Celine, Jasper immediately surrendered and could not refute.

"Moving on, help me pack two outfits, would you?" Mr. Laine immediately changed the subject.

As expected, Wendy was stunned for a moment before she snapped back to attention. "Where are you going?"

"I have to take a trip to Waterhoof City tomorrow. There are quite a few things I have to do so it might take a few days. I also have to go check on the skyscraper. The construction team there asked me to come up with a name for the building. Any suggestions?"

Jasper asked.

Wendy tilted her head and thought about it, "The tallest building in the world, huh. JW Tower? Wait, no, this building is supposed to be a landmark, it's best the building doesn't scream JW."

“Yeah,” Jasper agreed. “The skyscraper’s model is already beyond what can be considered as part of the company’s ancillary assets. It has to be treated as an independent asset.

“The most important aspect of this building is its overall influence, so it’ll need an independent name, one that best has nothing to do with JW if possible.

“Take a look at how the previous tallest buildings in the world were named. There’s a reason none of them are named with any reference to their parent enterprises.

“It’ll limit the building’s potential once it’s named according to the enterprise, and it’ll also influence the types of tenants willing to rent lots in it. No one wants their office address to be under another company’s name.”

“Then how about the World Financial Center?” Wendy suggested.

“I think there were similar buildings in global financial centers overseas.

“Moreover, I think it’ll do both JW and Waterhoof City good to give off the impression as though our building is the only financial center in the country. Since it implies that Waterhoof City is comparable to the long-standing large financial cities in the west.”

“Sounds good,” Jasper smiled, “Still, I worry that this name is a little too grand. I’ll discuss with the people in Waterhoof City later, but it should be fine. Who else is deserving of such a name if not the tallest building in the world, right?”

“I’ll go pack your outfits then. Are you leaving tomorrow?” Wendy asked as she stood up.

“Tomorrow morning,” Jasper nodded.

Life at the Top Chapter 1040

Jasper and Julian left early the next morning, taking the Bentley as they made their way to Waterhoof City.

“Jul, I heard from Wendy that your sister’s been trying to set you up for blind dates recently?”

Jasper suddenly thought of something as they entered the highway, so he asked Julian with a subtle smile on his face.

Julian was in a great mood this morning, but his expression immediately darkened at the mention of dating.

Jasper and Julian had known each other for quite some time and their relationship was more akin to friendship than that of an employer and employee. Hence, there were fewer inhibitions between the duo’s private conversations.

Julian immediately began to complain, “I already told my sister that I don’t want to start dating so soon, let alone get married. I don’t even know what she’s searching for.

“You’re the only son of the Lager family. Elder sisters tend to take up the role of the mother in the family too, so of course she’d worry for you,” Jasper answered.

Julian sighed and complained, “I’m busy with work and I don’t have the kind of time to deal with those girls. They can be so demanding sometimes I might as well train with what little remaining time I have.”

Jasper replied irritably, “Will training continue your family bloodline? Will training find you a doting wife?”

“Getting married and having children is something everyone has to experience. Sometimes people just need the company of their other half; it’s different from the company of friends and family.”

Julian grumbled at Jasper’s words, “I’ll just see where fate takes me. I’ve actually met a few girls but none of them felt right. These girls only came to me because I worked by your side, Jasper. They come with ulterior motives.”

“You’re making a few hundred thousand annually, so you should have quite a bit saved up, right?” Jasper smiled.

Julian chuckled innocently and replied, “My sister’s the one saving my money for me. I heard I’ve made over a million now.”

Julian could be regarded as a small wealthy local man with more than a million Somer Dollars in savings in the year 2000.

“That’s nice. Your sister’s got quite the talent in managing money. This will be your savings allocated to marriage and dating.

“But as you said, let fate decide. Who knows, maybe you’ll find someone you like just around the corner. Tell me if you need my help one day. I’ll be your wingman.” Jasper laughed out loud.

The two continued to talk, and in a few hours, they had exited the highway and entered the overpass leading to Waterhoof City.

“Jasper, are we going to the hotel or somewhere else first?” Julian asked.

“To the construction site of the skyscraper first. We can have lunch around the area before we get to work in the afternoon,” Jasper replied.

Julian then changed directions and made their way to Waterhoof City city center.

This construction of the skyscraper was no secret in Waterhoof City.

Relatively capable companies and individuals all knew about it, as well as anyone who simply asked around. They would immediately learn that some large company's owner wanted to build the tallest building in the world. As envious as these people often were, they were also fascinated to learn that Somerland had produced such hidden talents.

After all, not everyone could construct the tallest building in the world just because they wanted to.

Soon, even commonfolk had gotten wind of the construction, and Waterhoof City quickly became abuzz with news of the construction.

People who were more well-informed immediately took the opportunity to spread the little bits of gossip they knew.

Something about the construction party being a trust-fund child from a formidable family, or about a fight involving a huge amount of backing behind each party, and rumors about something some powerful person did amidst all of this.

Gossip rapidly spread through the city.

Despite all this, the undisputable fact was that the tallest building in the world being built in their city was something to be proud of.

Life at the Top Chapter 1041

On this ordinary morning, Jasper arrived at the construction site with Julian in tow.

He had not informed anyone of his arrival and came to look around by himself.

The skyscraper had already taken its initial shape and the concrete foundation of the main construction sight had been complete. With that, one-third of the 666-meter skyscraper was already constructed.

The scorching sun shone over the construction site and countless workers were busying themselves in all corners of the site. The quiet rumble of machinery could also be heard.

Construction materials laid about everywhere and there were six tower cranes as tall as buildings operating on the site.

These tower cranes were rented on a weekly lease. Installation was 200 thousand each and rental was another 100 thousand regardless of whether it was put to use or not. Jasper also had to pay the operators of these tower cranes, and each skilled operator cost him at least 30 thousand a month.

It was currently the year 2000 too.

Jasper had spent 3 million per month on this expense alone.

The man found his heart aching at the thought of these expenses during such a time where money was tight.

However, the costs now were nothing in comparison to the profits he would earn once he succeeded.

“Hey, hey, hey! Who are you people? This is a construction site, all you unrelated people need to leave.”

Jasper heard a shout from behind as he observed the construction. He turned to see a worker in charge of overseeing the site walk over and speak unkindly.

However, Jasper was not angry even though he had been shooed away impolitely, especially considering the man was only doing his job. Instead, Jasper replied with a crescent-eyed smile, “I was just taking a look when I walked by. I’ll be going now.”

The worker waved him off and said, “Get to it then, we can’t take responsibility if anything happens to you. I don’t understand you people. What’s there to watch anyway? Even so, you guys just appear every other day to look around.”

Jasper’s heart skipped a beat when he heard this, and the man passed the worker a cigarette from his breast pocket with a smile, “Do a lot of people come to look around, Sir?”

Seeing that it was a CW cigarette, the worker’s attitude immediately brightened and he replied.

“Exactly! It was still fine in the beginning when it was just curious people coming in out of curiosity, but it changed as a group of people soon started sneaking in to take pictures. They don’t say or do anything but take pictures. Who knows what those people are doing?”

“Look at how dangerous the construction site is. Rebar, concrete, and structures are all being lifted by cranes. What if something happens and we accidentally hurt someone? Who’s going to take responsibility for that?”

“A lot of people are already saying that there’s something wrong with the vibes here and that something bad’s going to happen. We’d be screwed if something did actually happen.”

“A lot of people are already saying that there’s something wrong with the vibes here and that something bad’s going to happen?” Jasper narrowed his eyes and repeated the phrase.

At this moment, even Julian realized that someone was trying to secretly sabotage the skyscraper or attack Jasper himself.

When it came to construction within the country, be it for commercial or residential use, or even housing that farmers built for themselves, there was one thing that was universally feared.

A haunted location!

Countrymen would rather play it safe than be sorry later, so the moment any construction was suspected to be haunted, people would surely begin avoiding it. If such an issue were to arise, the best case scenario would just be that people would comment about and slander it while the worse case scenarios would spell an early end to the construction project.

The mastermind behind this was truly ruthless.

However, the worker seemed to have realized that he had misspoken. His expression changed slightly and he was about to clarify himself when they heard a sudden shout sounded from the other end of the construction site.

“Oh no! Someone’s falling from up there! I think he’s going to die!”

Life at the Top Chapter 1042

The shout had caused the entire site to go into an uproar.

Countless workers rushed toward the location and the orderly construction site immediately erupted into chaos.

Jasper and Julian rushed toward the scene the moment it happened, such that the worker from earlier could not even stop them in time. Not that he had the time to, for he immediately rushed to the office to search for the person in charge.

Julian was still a trained man, so he ran the quickest and arrived at the scene first.

He took a glance and immediately turned around to hold Jasper back.

“Don’t look, Jasper. It’s a bit unsettling.”

Jasper pushed Julian away and walked forward.

What he saw next was more terrifying than a scene from a horror movie.

Falling from a great height, the man would certainly have died if not for the guard rail and safety net around the construction.

Jasper saw a young man lying on the floor, his body contorted into a weird angle as weak whimpers escaped his mouth while he shivered in place.

The sight stunned many of the workers that rushed over. While it was not uncommon for accidents to happen in construction sites, it was a completely different feeling to see it with one's own eyes.

Jasper's complexion paled as well.

He did not expect something like this to happen at his own mega skyscraper. His expression immediately darkened.

It explained why Julian did not want him to see it.

Just then, the security officer and project manager in charge of the site rushed over as well.

Their expressions changed instantly at the tragic sight.

The security officer was a man with professional training, so he immediately shouted, "Stop looking! Everyone go back! Secure the area and stop all construction work temporarily! Dial 911!"

Under the efforts of the security officer and a group of officers in charge of site maintenance, order soon returned to the area.

Just as things were about to calm down, a couple ran over from afar. They wore construction jackets, so it indicated that they were workers here.

"Oh, my son!"

The woman looked at the young man lying on the ground and wailed. As a mother, one glance was all it took her to know that this was her son. She was about to pounce on his frail body, only to be held back by the security officer.

“Please calm down, Madam,” The security officer spoke.

“How am I supposed to calm down? That’s my son!” The woman wailed.

The man beside her paled and stuttered as he asked, “How, how did this happen? He was fine this morning. How’d he suddenly fall?”

“Some, some people have been saying that our construction site’s got bad vibes, that we’ve angered the gods. It can’t possibly be real, right?”

Someone suddenly asked from the amongst the crowd.

The words caused everyone’s expressions to immediately change.

It was daytime and the sun was blazing above, yet everyone seemed to feel a cold gust of wind rush from the bottom of their feet to their heads.

“What nonsense is that?”

The security officer shouted, “This is the twenty-first century. What kind of medieval superstition is that? No one is allowed to speak of this anymore, and I’ll come after whoever brings it up again! Understood?”

As the person in charge of the entire construction site’s safety, the man’s words held quite a bit of authority. Thus, everyone immediately shut their mouths.

At the very least, no one would speak of it in front of him.

What happened in private was beyond the security officer’s control.

Exchanging a look with the project manager, the security officer was about to speak when he saw Jasper and Julian standing by the side.

“Where did you two come from?” The security officer asked with a frown.

Jasper’s nerves had calmed down as well and he replied, “We were just walking by so we came here to take a look.”

The security officer's expression changed and he demanded angrily, "Who's in charge of watching the entrance today?"

The worker that Jasper was conversing with immediately raised his hand to admit, "It-it's me."

"Would it kill you to do your job properly?"

The security officer scolded, "How many times have I told you not to let outsiders come in? Now not only are they inside but they've also gotten involved in this mess too! Do you want to die?!"

The worker glanced at Jasper resentfully and was about to reply when Jasper beat him to it, "It's not his fault. He told me to leave, but I heard the commotion just as I was turning to leave. He didn't have time to chase me away, but he did his part."

The security officer harrumphed and glared at Jasper unkindly as he answered, "I don't care who you are and what you're here to do. Please just leave now!"

"Something's wrong, Jasper."

Julian suddenly looked up and said after he went to check on the victim and the safety measures at the site.

Jasper raised a defined brow and turned to Julian to ask, "What is it?"

"There's a high possibility that this is attempted murder, not an accident."

Julian's words immediately caused an uproar.

Attempted murder to look like an accident was a big deal since it would mean that this was a case of homicide!

Just then, the project manager who remained quiet all this while suddenly piped up. He pointed at Jasper and Julian and shouted, "Who the hell are you two? This is a matter concerning our construction site, so it's not up to you to interfere! Get lost, now!"

"Why are you acting like detectives? This is obviously an accident, not homicide! Who're you trying to scare?"

Everyone present looked confused when heard the project manager's statement.

They did not know who to believe.

Not to mention, the project manager's claim caused Jasper to narrow his eyes suspiciously.

Typically, construction site managers tended to blame any on-site incidences as intentional rather than pin them as accidents.

After all, the managers had to face responsibility for accidents, and serious cases were even filed under criminal law.

However, if the accident was criminal behavior, then the managers would not need to shoulder any responsibility for it.

Therefore, this project manager's attitude was extremely unnatural.

"A simple investigation will tell you whether this is a case of attempted murder or not. I wouldn't accuse anyone baselessly! I checked out your safety measures and there are no major issues with it. Hence, something seriously wrong had to occur for an accident like this to happen at the site," Julian replied calmly.

The project manager glared at Julian harshly and roared, "This has nothing to do with you. You'd get out now if you knew what was best for you! Otherwise, I'll have someone chase you away!"

Life at the Top Chapter 1043

"How imposing of you," Jasper spoke coldly, looking at the project manager.

The project manager scoffed and replied, "I'm the project manager so I hold the most say here at the site. Not to mention that the both of you are outsiders, so who knows what you two came in here to do. What's wrong with me asking you two to leave?"

“Someone’s fatally injured here at the construction site and instead of thinking about how to resolve the situation, you’re busy arguing with us. Are you afraid we’d find something?” Jasper asked.

The project manager’s expression immediately changed and he roared, “What the f*ck are you implying?!”

The tall and broad project manager then made his way over to push Jasper aggressively.

There was no way Julian would let that happen.

The man took a step forward to stand protectively in front of Jasper. He narrowed his eyes and stared at the project manager, warning him, “I’ll cut off whichever hand you use to touch my boss today.”

Julian’s aura was extremely oppressive.

The project manager was an ordinary man, and he immediately surrendered to Julian’s threatening aura. His expression paled and he took an instinctive step backward.

However, the project manager seemed to have realized how embarrassing his actions were, so he clenched his jaw and barked. “You’ve got absolutely no respect at all! I can’t believe you two outsiders are planning to attack me!”

“I’m not an outsider. You’ll understand very soon,” Jasper told the project manager indifferently.

The project manager scoffed and replied, “Oh? You think you can do what you want just because you’ve got some level of power? Open your eyes and look at where you are. You think that just because you’re somewhat powerful, that it gives you the right to make this place your playground? I’ll kill you before you even know it!”

Ever since the man started working as the project manager of the construction site for the tallest building in the world, he had been raised and mounted on a high horse by the people around him.

He had the most authority at the site, and construction workers, raw material suppliers, and even other real estate businesses in Waterhoof City often watched their behavior around him.

As time slowly passed, he began to think of himself as an important person; He feared no one now that he had JW supporting his actions.

He had just finished speaking when a large group of people suddenly rushed over.

They were all JW Real Estates Waterhoof City branch's senior executives.

With the exception of Sean, who was not present, everyone who had rushed over held the highest positions within the branch. All in all, two vice presidents and four department managers were here.

The two vice presidents leading the group felt their knees go weak when they saw Jasper. They did not dare to waste another second as they rushed over and pushed aside the project manager who was still clamoring away. They greeted Jasper courteously.

"We didn't know you were coming, Mr. Laine. Our apologies for not welcoming you upon your arrival."

'Mr. Laine?'

'What Mr. Laine?'

Everyone present was stunned.

The security officer looked at Jasper with eyes blown wide in disbelief.

Meanwhile, the project manager gaped in shock as if he had been struck over the head.

Jasper looked at the group of people and stated calmly, "What a group of talents Sean's found me, huh?"

Sean was the highest-ranked superior in the real estate company, while Jasper was Sean's highest-ranked superior.

The project manager had been too low-ranked to recognize Jasper, but he certainly knew who Sean was.

Sean was his superior's superior's superior. Yet, here Jasper was using Sean's name to scold them all. Because of this, he quickly understood that Jasper was someone he could not afford to offend at all.

Instantly, the project manager felt cold sweat bead all over his body despite the searing heat above.

Life at the Top Chapter 1044

The two vice presidents, who were sharing similar emotions, stood in front of Jasper with their heads looking downward. They did not dare to even breathe.

Jasper glanced at the two vice presidents sharp and icily.

"I remember sending Sean a document about how important the safety of the skyscraper's construction site is, and that a vice president of the branch is to be on duty at all times.

"So, would someone like to tell me why only the security officer and project manager are here when an incident like this occurred? Where is the vice president on duty?!"

"Did Sean lie only to placate me, or are you so brave as to disobey the orders sent from the parent company?!"

Jasper's voice boomed around them and everyone held their breaths in fear. No one dared to speak as they each stared at their own shoes with their heads down.

"Have all of you gone dumb?" Jasper roared.

Seeing that Jasper seemed intent to investigate the matter, a vice president mustered up the courage to speak despite the ominous feeling filling his chest. "Well, Mr. Laine, Vice President Rohin is the one on duty today. But we don't know where he is now."

"I do." The confession was sudden and instantly caught Jasper's attention.

Jasper looked over and saw that it was the security officer who had appropriately managed the scene earlier that was speaking up. Thus, he forced himself to calm down slightly before saying, "Go ahead then. Tell me where he is."

"He's sleeping in the duty room," The security officer forced himself to ignore the looks from everyone around and explained.

"Sleeping?!" Jasper was truly furious now.

"Wow. Bring me to the duty room, I'd like to see how he can keep sleeping when an accident's occurred at the site!"

Jasper had the security officer lead the way. Glancing at the project manager coldly, he instructed Julian.

"Watch him. There's something wrong with him. One of you two vice presidents stay back and deal with the situation and handle the injured's family. After this, come to the duty room."

Jasper then turned to leave.

The project manager's expression paled and he shouted, "I'm innocent, Mr. Laine! I did nothing wrong!"

However, Jasper and the group did not seem to have heard him as they continued walking away.

The project manager was about to continue proclaiming his innocence when Julian stood in front and cast a dark shadow over him.

“Save your strength to think of how you’re going to explain to Mr. Laine later,” Julian said calmly.

Just then, the project manager’s phone rang.

His expression changed greatly and he was about to turn his phone off when Julian grabbed it with his quick reflexes.

Julian answered the call without hesitation and began to record its content. He soon heard a frantic voice from the other end of the line.

“How’s it going, Mark?”

“This isn’t some trivial business, let me tell you. We’re both screwed if anyone finds out, and you’re going to be the first one they come after!”

“Anyway, about your request for more money... Fine, I’ll give you 300 thousand cash once you’re done, but you better do it well and completely crush the skyscraper project!”

“I want the entirety of Waterhoof City spreading the news of the horrible vibes at the site and how someone had died there tomorrow!”

Julian stared icily at the project manager when the clear voice echoed through the speakers.

The project manager’s body swayed, and he almost fainted on the spot.

Life at the Top Chapter 1045

At the construction site's duty room.

The doors were pushed open, and Jasper felt the thick smell of alcohol hit him in the face right as he walked through the door.

Cigarette buds and bottles of alcohol were littered all over the duty room. There was even some leftover food as well.

It was evident that some gathering was held here last night, and a rambunctious one at that.

This was proven by the fact that the smell of cigarettes and alcohol had yet to disperse even though it was almost noon.

Jasper's gaze soon fell on the bed in the duty room. On it was a young man in his thirties, sleeping away under his blanket.

"Go wake him up," Jasper instructed the vice president beside him.

Not daring to hesitate, the vice president jogged over to the bed and shook Rohin awake. Thankfully, this was rather easy.

"Tadhg?" Rohin blinked open his alcohol-muddled eyes. Seeing that it was his colleague, he waved his hand and said, "Leave me alone. Let me go back to sleep, I had too f*cking much to drink last night."

Rohin then turned around to see a group of people looking at him strangely at the duty room doors.

"What's with the people?" Rohin asked confusedly, having yet realized what was happening.

Tadhg, who had shaken him awake, whispered awkwardly, "Sober up already. Something huge happened and Mr. Laine's here."

“Mr. Laine? Which Mr. Laine?” Rohin had drunk himself stupid and he scoffed. “Since when did our company have another Mr. Laine? Stop being so noisy, Tadhg, and shoo everyone away. I’ll wake up after a bit more sleep, I won’t be delaying anything.”

“Seriously, Mr. Tucker must’ve been crazy to call all three of us vice presidents to take turns being on duty at the construction site. Like, what’s the point of s being on duty anyway? What a waste of time.”

Tadhg felt beads of cold sweat trickle over his forehead, and he quickly spoke, “Stop talking. It’s Mr. Laine from the parent company, open your eyes and take a good look!”

Rohin was stunned. Blinking as he looked to the door, he was instantly met with Jasper’s icy gaze.

Jasper’s eyes pierced deep into Rohin’s soul like two emotionless knives.

Rohin was shocked sober the instant their eyes met, and he shuddered suddenly. At the same time, he flipped over and fell off the bed.

Ignoring how embarrassed he looked and how painful the fall felt, Rohin frantically got up to explain himself only to find that Jasper had already turned and left.

“I want everyone present above the rank of deputy manager to come to the meeting next door. I have an important announcement to make.”

Rohin fell on his butt at that. He did not dare to say another word.

Tadhg sighed and spoke to Rohin before he left the room, “Good luck, man. Someone almost died over at the site while Mr. Laine came in secret. You essentially got caught red-handed.

“I told you before, Rohin. Something bad’s going to happen if you kept up your inattentive attitude. You’re basically screwed.”

“Tadhg!” Rohin grabbed Tadhg’s clothes and spoke frightfully, “Help me put in a good word! Or it’ll really be over for me this time!”

“What can I say?” Tadhg felt fear creep up within him at the memory of Jasper’s frosty expression.

“You should clean yourself and sober up before you go next door and ask for forgiveness. Maybe Mr. Laine will be kind and forgive you then. But no one can help you otherwise.”

Ten minutes later, around a dozen men sat down in the temporary meeting room next door.

They were all senior executives of JW Real Estates’ Waterhoof City branch.

Jasper swept his gaze expressionlessly over everyone in the room, including Rohin, who looked down silently. Then, Jasper began to speak.

“This is the first time all of you have met me, but I’m sure none of you are strangers to who I am.

“I won’t waste time with unnecessary things. A huge incident occurred at the construction site, and someone will have to take responsibility for it.

“I won’t repeat company rules and regulations because all of you are senior executives. I’m sure you’ve all had your fair share of chiding others about these exact same rules, so you should be well aware of the process.”

Jasper’s words silenced the entire meeting room. Everyone seemed to hold their breaths and no one dared to make a sound.

“Alright, let’s get straight to it, then.”

Jasper spoke calmly. “What I’m about to say next will be relayed to the head office after this meeting. Documents will be issued by the headquarters presidential office, and will then be executed by the president of the real estate company.

“Number one, this major safety incident has revealed poor site management in the construction site. As a result, JW Real Estates’ Waterhoof City branch will be comprehensively reviewed—members of the managerial rank bear inescapable responsibility.

“Everyone from the senior executives to the deputy managers will have their monthly performance bonuses deducted. The vice presidents their seasonal performance bonuses, and Sean his semiannual performance bonus because he has direct leadership responsibility.

“Number two, JW Real Estates’ Waterhoof City branch’s vice president Rohin Ruell will be relieved of all his professional duties effective immediately.

“Number three, JW Real Estates’ Waterhoof City branch will come up with a rectification plan and a situational report. This is to be handed up to the head office for review within the week.”

Then, Jasper glanced at everyone’s expressions before he continued coldly, “I want all of you to pay this incident your undivided attention. The head office will treat the rectification plan and the situational report solemnly.

“Your implementation of this rectification plan will be supervised. Whoever decides to continue being careless will end up just like Rohin.”

With that, Jasper waved his hand and ordered, “Dismissed!”

The entire meeting lasted no more than three minutes, yet it left everyone in the branch’s managerial ranks petrified.

Rohin could not accept this.

Seeing as how he had lost his job, Rohin stood up and let go of all inhibitions, “Mr. Laine, this isn’t fair!”

“All I did was invite a few friends over and drank too much. The nature of the safety incident has nothing to do with me at all,” Rohin forced out an excuse.

“Nothing to do with you?”

Jasper scoffed before slamming his palm on the table. He immediately started shouting at the man.

“I had you vice presidents remain on shift to monitor the site, not to have you sleep and invite friends over! I might as well get you a hotel or a restaurant if that’s the case. It’s more comfortable there than at a construction site too, no?”

“Why do you think I asked for you to be on duty here?!”

“I wanted everyone in the branch to understand the importance of this construction project!”

“Yet here you are, getting drunk and blacking out! Now, you have the audacity to tell me it’s not fair?”

Life at the Top Chapter 1046

Rohin could not refute Jasper's words.

He was filled with regret now.

JW Real Estates was a company recognized in the industry for its great treatment of its employees.

As the vice president of the Waterhoof City branch, his salary was one-point-five times higher than others who held the same position in other companies.

Not to mention, the company also gave annual dividends, paid leave, free medical insurance for their employee's families, 2 overseas vacations, housing subsidy, and an educational support plan for employees' children to study in Waterhoof City. These were benefits that only top-notch international enterprises provided.

No company gave as great a treatment as JW within the country.

Despite this, he had lost it all.

"Mr. Laine, please give me one more chance," Rohin begged Jasper with a quiver in his voice.

"Does what I just said sound like a joke to you? A chance? Most things don't come with second chances or the chance to regret. This is an issue with your professional attitude. How am I supposed to give you another chance?"

"Let's take a step back and say that I hypothetically did give you chance, then am I also supposed to give chances to others who make the same mistake in the future? How's the company supposed to operate like that?"

Rohin's complexion paled further upon hearing Jasper's words.

“Mr. Laine, what if I atone for my sins? I have a report to make!” Rohin clenched his jaw and spoke suddenly.

Jasper arched his brow and looked at Rohin before asking, “Who are you reporting and about what?”

“This is very important matter, so I was hoping I’d get to talk to you alone about this, Mr. Laine,” Rohin spoke bravely.

Jasper glanced at everyone else in the room, especially the other two vice presidents. They seemed confused, and there was no trace of fear or panic on their faces.

“Everyone else is dismissed,” Jasper waved them out.

Excluding Jasper and Rohin, everyone else in the meeting room stood up and filed out.

While they had no idea what Rohin was going to report, they knew that it had to be something huge if the man felt it would save his life.

Therefore, everyone who left the temporary meeting room inexplicably felt a shiver run down their back. They immediately tried to recall if they had done anything incriminating before.

At the same time, Jasper turned to Rohin and said, “We’re the only ones left now, so go ahead and tell me what it is.”

Jasper continued when he saw Rohin hesitate in a seemingly self-conflicted state, “Don’t think about negotiating with me. There’s no way you can keep working for the company. But if your information is important and reliable enough, I’ll give you a sum of money at my discretion.”

Rohin grit his teeth.

He knew that Jasper’s stance on the matter was clear. There was no way he could go back to working in JW Real Estates, so he might as well settle for second best. It would be nice to leave with a sum of money in his pockets.

After all, he could always leave once the secret was out. There was an abundance of places for him to further develop, like Cavern City or Swallow Capital. There was no need to fear being the target of revenge.

Once Rohin had made up his mind, he immediately said, "A company in Waterhoof City actually came to me some time ago, almost right after I started working here.

"They wanted me to provide them with the all the data on the skyscraper's construction plan. Including labor, materials, and design."

Life at the Top Chapter 1047

"That's not all. They were the ones who spread rumors about how our construction site has bad vibes. From what I can tells, it seemed like they wanted to attack the construction site and bring the construction of the entire building to a halt.

"I rejected them then, but I don't know who they contacted next. I am certain, though, that someone did get bribed into working for them.

"Because they contacted me the day before yesterday and said that they were going to cause an incident at the construction site. They told me I didn't have to do anything, but just turn a blind eye to what was happening since someone else would do the dirty work for them.

"Coupled with what happened at the site today, I suspect the project manager."

Jasper narrowed his eyes and asked Rohin, "So you decided to get drunk and have fun in the duty room yesterday?"

Rohin immediately replied, "I am grateful that Mr. Tucker appreciates my work. I may act high and mighty but I am still not fully aware of my strengths or shortcomings.

"It was by pure coincidence yesterday that a few old classmates of mine came to Waterhoof City. I hadn't seen them for years and I had to welcome them, but it wouldn't be right for me to leave the duty room while I was on shift either. Thus, I ended up welcoming them in the duty room instead."

Jasper neither approved nor disapproved of Rohin's explanation before he asked another question.

"Why do you suspect the project manager? The project manager isn't the only one capable of plotting these things on the construction site. What about the security officer? Or even the construction foremen or the general contractor? There are plenty of people to suspect."

Rohin chuckled wryly and responded, "Mr. Laine, I dug around a little and I found out.

"While that project manager is pretty capable, he's a gambling man through and through. He has a huge debt to repay and debt collectors have actually come to the construction site to demand that he pay them back on more than one occasion.

"The company's high salary is the only thing supporting him and stopping his debt collectors from killing him.

"However, he suddenly managed to pay off all his debts some time ago. He even had the money to pay for his son's marital housing in full in Waterhoof City, as well as purchase a car worth more than 200 thousand. Unless he won the lottery, there should be no way he made so much money.

"I don't know for sure if anyone else has also been bribed, but this project manager has to be one of them. It's really obvious if you just scrutinize his financial situation.

"I have no reason to lie, Mr. Laine. Things have already reached this state and I just want to leave with a some money in my pockets."

Jasper's expression remained unchanged. "I'll investigate the matter further, but I'll make sure you receive a hefty sum if the matter is truly as you have said. Go back for now and try not to show yourself for the next few days. I'll have Sean contact you afterward."

Rohin sighed and stood up. He opened his mouth to say something but swallowed his words after thinking against it. He then bowed to Jasper and turned to leave the room.

Rohin had just left when Julian dragged the project manager in.

"You're right, Jasper. There's something wrong with this man."

Julian relayed the contents of the call the project manager received, and Jasper looked at the despondent man in question.

"Victory and loss are common when two parties are fighting each other. But do you know what the most tragic thing is?" Jasper asked the project manager.

The project manager was frantic and did not have the mind to ponder Jasper's question. Thus, he remained quiet.

"The people who betray their original superiors," Jasper answered icily.

The project manager shuddered and fell to his knees with a thud. He wailed, "Please forgive me, Mr. Laine. I gave into temptations. Besides, I'm not the only one involved in this."

"Who else is involved? Write down all their names, including the person giving orders to all of you. You will meet a fate worse than death if there is a single omission or lie in your confession."

Life at the Top Chapter 1048

Half an hour later, Julian walked out of the room with a depressed project manager.

Ten minutes after that, Jasper exited the room too.

Once he walked out, the middle-aged couple immediately fell to their knees in front of Jasper.

Jasper recognized them to be the parents of the heavily injured young man that fell from the building.

“Please stand,” Jasper immediately helped the couple to their feet.

The middle-aged woman wiped her tears as she sobbed to Jasper. “Mr. Laine, you’re the biggest boss here. You have to save our son.”

“Don’t worry, the company will take full responsibility since your son was working and got injured on our construction site.”

“How’s he doing now?”

The security officer immediately ran over and replied courteously, “Mr. Laine, he’s already been sent to the emergency room and his condition is stable. He’s not in life-threatening danger but he might be plagued with lifelong disabilities after this. Worst case scenario, he might live the rest of his life in a vegetative state.”

Jasper frowned slightly and asked, “All workers on site are insured, right?”

“Yes.”

The security officer hastily replied, “This is something the head office and Mr. Tucker stressed. We could not afford to be frugal with the insurance, so every worker was given the best workmen compensation and medical insurance available.”

“Good, but insurance claims tend to be processed slowly. The company will prepay all medical expenses and send professionals to deal with the supplementary nutrition and escorting expenses. There’s no need to be frugal with this either, it’s important that we at least keep our workers stress-free if we can’t keep them safe.

“The company will also pay for everything the insurance claim cannot cover, and if the worker ends up with a life-long disability, the company will assign them with another post once they’re ready to work again. Don’t be stingy with the compensation package either, and make sure you follow the standards.”

The security officer was stunned. He wondered how much money the company was going to end up paying according to that.

Ordinary companies might only give a sum to help pay the medical expenses and ask for the money back once the insurance claim had been processed. This was also normally the full extent of their compensation as well.

Construction workers were at a disadvantage, and legal awareness was shallow among the people nowadays. Most workers did not know how to protect their own interests according to the law.

Those that did know their rights would most often end up getting scammed of their hard-earned money by illegal middlemen. They also could not fight against wealthy and powerful companies.

Despite this, Jasper’s attitude on the matter was completely different.

The security officer, who was technically just another worker on-site, was genuinely grateful and moved by this.

“Mr. Laine, on behalf of everyone working here, thank you,” The security officer spoke sincerely.

Jasper patted the security officer on the shoulder and replied, “You’ve done well handling the scene just now. You’ll be the project manager from now on.”

The security officer flushed excitedly and replied, “Thank you, Mr. Laine! I’ll do my best!”

Jasper chuckled and turned to the grateful couple. “The situation’s very complicated now, but I promise I’ll catch whoever’s pulling the strings behind this.

“Don’t worry about too much now, just go to the hospital and take care of your son. You’ll still be paid during this period. Your son’s health is the most important thing right now.”

“Thank you, Mr. Laine. You’re a saint,” The middle-aged couple declared as they wiped their tears.

Jasper shook his head and sighed. “This wouldn’t have happened at all if I was a saint. No matter how much money I give, it still won’t change the fact that your son might end up disabled. I only ask that you do not blame me too much.

“I still have things to settle, so come to the company directly for the follow-up process.”

Life at the Top Chapter 1049

Then, Jasper turned and left quickly.

The middle-aged man supported his wife and spoke as he watched Jasper leave, “Mr. Laine sure is a great boss. Let’s go take a look at our boy first.”

“Yeah. I’d be willing to work for a boss like him even if he didn’t pay me,” The woman answered.

Their words echoed the thoughts of the majority of workers at the scene.

People were all the same, if you treated them sincerely, then they would be genuine to you too.

Being wealthy did not make someone superior, and being poor did not mean that person had to live a life inferior to everyone else.

Jasper's kindness had won him the hearts of these construction workers, and they were now whole-heartedly willing to work for him.

In the future, when the country's real estate industry would face a shortage of workers, JW Real Estates would be the only company not to face any trouble finding employees.

Not that Jasper thought that far into the future. All he knew now was that all the evidence on hand pointed to the president of the Haddock Chamber of Commerce, Norman Gardner, as the culprit!

Sean rushed over to Waterhoof City that night.

After Sean arrived at Waterhoof City, the man had a closed-door meeting with Jasper that lasted for two hours. Then, as the president of JW Capital, Jasper sent a series of documents to the real estate company.

The business group responsible for JW Real Estates immediately held a high-priority video conference, hosted by Jasper himself.

The conference lasted until one a.m. the next morning.

JW Real Estates' Waterhoof City branch went through tremendous change after the conference was over. Two senior executives were immediately fired and up to 40% of the mid-level managers were moved about.

The construction of the skyscraper was the Waterhoof City branch's most important and core business. Excluding Zeph, who had been promoted from security officer, all managerial positions working on the project, from chief engineer to project manager, had been transferred away.

They were replaced with skilled members from JW Real Estates' other branches within Southeast Province.

In just one night, the entire Waterhoof City branch had completely changed. Almost all mid-level managers were transferred somewhere else, and a small portion were even fired.

Not to mention, the shifting of personnel within JW Real Estates had spread to other subsidiaries and businesses under JW Capital as well.

For the first time, Jasper, who had always opted for a gentle management strategy, was harsh and direct when dealing with JW's personnel.

All of JW's employees, no matter their ranks, now knew not to cross their ultimate superior.

Throughout the city, employees of JW Real Estates' Waterhoof City branch and another family in Waterhoof City were frantic.

The Gardner family!

In the study of Gardner's family villa. The ashtray was filled with cigarette butts and thick smoke filled the room, making it almost impossible to open one's eyes inside.

In this heavy environment, Norman held a cigarette between his fingers. The butt of the cigarette was lit, but the man did not seem to have the desire to smoke it.

A long trail of cigarette ash crept from the lit butt until it burned Norman's hand. Only then did the man extinguish the flames in the ashtray.

"Of all the times, why would Jasper come to Waterhoof City now?!" Norman murmured to himself. Great unease and panic could be heard in his voice.

Life at the Top Chapter 1050

Lisa pushed the door open, and before she could enter the room, she choked and sputtered due to the overwhelming cloud of smoke.

“Why’re you smoking so much, Dad?”

Lisa had changed greatly from how she used to be in the past.

Donning a long-sleeved top and long pants, her short ear-length hair made her look smart.

Coupled with the glint of resentment and hatred in her eyes, the woman sent shivers down people’s spines.

“Can you contact anyone from the construction site?” Norman asked instead of replying.

“No.”

Lisa shook her head and opened the study windows to let fresh air into the room. She sighed. “Dad, we should be thinking of how to deal with at this stage. There’s no point in locking yourself in the study to smoke.”

“What solution could there be?”

The corner of Norman’s lips twitched. “Jasper’s already arrived at Waterhoof City. He’s definitely found out what we’ve done, and considering his temper, there’s no way he’d let us go.”

“We did this with the idea to fight to the death, didn’t we?” Lisa spoke firmly.

“What was Old Master Hurlbutt’s game by assigning Jasper as the vice president? He’s obviously trying to take your power away!

“Old Master Hurlbutt was also really ambiguous when we and Uncle had a conflict with Jasper.

“Even though Jasper was the one who destroyed Uncle’s family, who knows if Old Master Hurlbutt had given him the green light to do so? Jasper wouldn’t be able to do anything if Old Master Hurlbutt was firm about protecting the Hull family.

“Now that uncle’s family is done for, Old Master Hurlbutt even had Jasper assume the position of Waterhoof City Branch’s Vice President.

“Instead of asking you, the president, to attend the asset forum, Old Master Hurlbutt even had Jasper go instead. He’s never even showed up once as vice president before. Old Master Hurlbutt’s obviously telling the rest of the Chamber that he doesn’t like us.

“We aren’t doing anything wrong, Dad. We’re taking revenge for Uncle Ian and protecting ourselves. Jasper would still attack us even if we didn’t do anything, so there’s no going back now. We just need to fight Jasper to the end.”

Norman’s expression was solemn as he heard Lisa speak.

“Did you tell Mr. Atticus about the situation?” Norman asked.

Lisa nodded and replied, “I did. Mr. Atticus told us not to worry and that he’ll act at the right time. He’s also prepared a lot of follow-up trouble for Jasper, so he won’t be able to save himself when the time comes.”

Norman nodded at the first bit of good news he had heard today, and a small smile graced his face. “Good, Mr. Atticus is reliable after all... I heard you went to Harbor City last week. Was it to be with Mr. Atticus?”

Lisa replied calmly, "Weren't you the one who taught me to grab ahold of an opportunity with two hands no matter what the costs, Dad?"

"Did that Mr. Atticus promise you anything?" Norman asked attentively.

Norman flushed in excitement at the thought of being Mr. Atticus' father-in-law. The Gardner family would soar if this happened.

Yet, Lisa immediately poured cold water on Norman's excitement.

"That's not going to happen, Dad. I did sleep with Mr. Atticus, but he's had more women on his bed than you have cigarette butts in your ashtray. Not even I would entertain the idea of marrying into his family."

Norman's expression darkened and he sighed. "I don't even know if I made the right decision sending you over to Mr. Atticus' side."

Lisa replied harshly, "I'd be willing to sleep with beggars and rascals if it means that Jasper will be crushed! Let alone Mr. Atticus."

"What do we do next, then? Jasper's definitely going to take revenge on us," Norman asked with a frown, reluctant to continue this topic.

"We wait..."

Lisa replied grimly, "Hold on a little longer. Mr. Atticus still needs to contact another important player first. If he manages to win them over, then this person will help greatly in our plans to target Jasper. Mr. Atticus also needs to arrange for backup, so he needs some time to prepare everything.

"Mr. Atticus wants us to hold him off a little longer. This is the mission he gave you, Dad."

Norman spoke solemnly, "We don't have any other option now. Let's just hold him off for as long as we can, then. I'd also like to see how Jasper plans to counter us."

"Mr. Atticus said that Jasper would most likely attack us through the Chamber of Commerce. Since he's going to attend the asset forum conference on behalf of the Chamber, this is a great chance he won't ignore."

"Mr. Atticus even predicted that? Alright, then. If he's planning to attack me through the Chamber, then I should still be able to deal with him," Norman spoke, energized.

Jasper walked out of the hotel room the next morning and was about to eat breakfast with Julian downstairs when he saw Sean exit the elevator exhaustedly.

"Did you just get back?" Jasper asked.

Sean had held a meeting with the Waterhoof City branch overnight after the real estate company's senior executive conference the night before. The meeting aimed to relay the spirit of the head office's conference, as well as carry out the details decided during the session.

"The meeting just ended, and all personnel transfer procedures have just gone through. They'll be carried out immediately," Sean replied.

Jasper nodded and replied, "Let's eat breakfast together first. Then you can come back and rest. Don't neglect your meals no matter how tired you feel. It's not worth harming your own health for work."

Sean kept the elevator doors open for them and chose the floor with the buffet restaurant after Jasper and Julian got in. Then, he turned to Jasper and spoke remorsefully.

“Mr. Laine, it’s my fault for not being negligent. I didn’t expect so many people within the Waterhoof City branch to have been corrupt.”

“Not to mention that the overall atmosphere at the branch is negligent and lazy. It’s only been a few days and there are already self-interest-serving groups and alliances forming within the company. I should’ve kept a tighter leash on them.”

Jasper waved him off. “I understand that you’re busy too. The real estate company’s growing larger and there are more things you have to overlook and head.

“Not to mention that the siege from the three other real estate companies with Softwin’s support in Southeast Province hasn’t ended yet. You can’t clone yourself, so I understand that you can’t deal with everything.

“I’ve already had human resource begin a search to get you some help. I’ll assign you two deputies to help shoulder your burden.”

Jasper’s words caused Sean’s expression to sour.

It was only natural the man did not want to share after discovering how good it felt to be in a position of power. Yet, from the way Jasper spoke, it looked like Sean did not have any choice but to accept it.

Not to mention, reality had all but proven his inability to handle everything on his own.

“I understand, Mr. Laine.”

Life at the Top Chapter 1051

The trio talked as they walked toward the buffet.

Stared hotels' buffets were pretty consistent and Jasper had already gotten tired of the food they provided from business trips his past life, let alone this present one.

Jasper simply grabbed a plate of food and asked Sean as he ate, "Oh, right. How's the injured worker doing? Is everyone else on the construction site doing okay?"

Sean replied, "He woke up already. Fortunately, it was just a fracture of his spine. There's still hope for him and he should be alright after a year or so. But from how the doctor seemed, I don't think he'd be able to get back to construction work in the future.

"But their emotions are considerably steady, they're really grateful to you too, Mr. Laine. They've been asking to come and thank you themselves but I declined them.

"The workers on the site are doing well. We've calmed most of them, mainly because they know you're looking out for them, Mr. Laine. No one made a ruckus and they've all gotten back to catch up on lost work."

Jasper nodded and spoke, "Comprehensive compensations are a must when it comes to situations like this. It's too small a sum to matter to the company, but it's enough to save these workers. They're using their entire life's health in return for what's an insignificant amount of money to us. We cannot and will not deduct compensations, this is our bottom line.

"And ask him if he has any plans after he gets better. If he wants to continue working for us, then assign him a more leisurely position, but let him go if he doesn't want to stay."

"Alright, Mr. Laine, I understand," Sean replied.

After eating, Jasper got up and spoke, "Go get some rest later. I still need your help to keep an eye out for the real estate company. I won't have the time to check up on it for the coming two days."

“Are you going back, Mr. Laine?” Sean asked.

“No, I’ll be staying in Waterhoof City for the time being. There’s no way I’d just move on after getting plotted against,” Jasper replied calmly.

Under Norman’s efforts, the Haddock Chamber of Commerce’s Waterhoof City Branch had moved to the business center in Peace CBD after Jasper had kicked them out from their original address.

The Haddock Chamber of Commerce had always been known for its abundance of wealth. They had leased three whole floors for their office, costing at least a million a year for rent.

This was the first time Jasper had come here to the Chamber since he had assumed the position of Waterhoof City branch’s Vice President half a year ago.

Pushing open the door, Jasper saw the word ‘Haddock’ written in huge cursive letters, representing the Haddock Chamber of Commerce.

“Hello, who are you looking for?” The receptionist was beautiful and dignified as she greeted Jasper politely.

“I’m looking for President Norman, is he here?” Jasper asked with a smile.

“Mr. Gardner? He’s not in. But his daughter Miss Lisa is... Miss Gardner, someone’s looking for Mr. Gardner.”

Jasper turned around and locked gazes with Lisa who happened to walk out.

Lisa sneered and replied, “Why would I be able to guess when and why you’d arrive, Mr. Vice President?”

“That’s alright, I’ll tell you then. The asset conference is about to begin, I’m here to get my materials,” Jasper spoke.

Lisa's eyes shone and she replied indifferently, "Is that so? That's all you came here for, Mr. Vice President?"

"What else? Or did you think that I was here for revenge, Miss Gardner?" Jasper chuckled.

Lisa replied coldly, "I don't know what you're talking about."

Jasper walked over to Lisa and spoke calmly, "This is business, it's only normal you attack others. After all, we're enemies, not friends.

"But if you're so willing to involve an innocent life just because of your conflict with me, do you not fear the haunting of ghosts when you sleep, Miss Gardner?"

Lisa took a step back in terror and gasped. "The construction worker died?!"

At that, Lisa immediately realized she had misspoken. Yet it was already too late to go back in time and change what she had already said. She immediately stared at Jasper darkly and accused him. "You set me up, Jasper!"

"I wouldn't be able to set anything up if you weren't feeling guilty, to begin with."

Jasper continued coldly, "He's still alive but that's because he was lucky. It doesn't make you any less guilty, Lisa, go back and tell your dad that it isn't over."

Lisa replied resentfully, "Stop acting so arrogant! I'd like to see how long more you can stay prideful!"

"Oh? So you're telling me that you've still got tricks up your sleeves, hmm?" Jasper narrowed his eyes and spoke.

Having learned her lesson of being set up, Lisa harrumphed and spoke, "You deserve any trick against you. Just you wait, you have too many enemies and you'll die a miserable death one day."

Just after Lisa spoke, a young man walked out of the same room Lisa did just now.

The man rolled his shoulders lazily as he approached Lisa. He reached out to wrap an arm around her shoulders and spoke affectionately, "Who's this f*cker, Lisa? Looks like there's a conflict between you two?"

Jasper raised his eyebrows slightly when he heard the accent businesspeople from Teo had.

The Teo Chamber of Commerce had already arrived at Haddock's Chamber's doors to attack them. So what was Lisa, the daughter of Haddock Chamber of Commerce's Waterhoof City Branch's President, doing by mingling with someone from Teo's Chamber of Commerce?

"This is our great Vice President, Jasper Laine. He's the one that's going to represent Haddock in attending the asset forum conference." Lisa stared at Jasper and smiled.

The young man chuckled and pointed at Jasper, speaking disdainfully, "This f*cker? Forget it, look at him. He looks like a child, go home and call your parents out instead."

"Or does Haddock's Chamber of Commerce not have anyone left? Instead of having someone able like Uncle Gardner, they had a stupid f*cker you like you come and make a fool out of yourself?"

Jasper looked at the young man and spoke, "This is Haddock's Chamber of Commerce's station. What is a Teo businessperson like you doing here?"

"Dudley is my friend! I invited him over!" Lisa claimed.

"You are the daughter of Haddock's Chamber of Commerce's Waterhoof City Branch's President. How do you have no shame to shout about inviting him into the station?" Jasper spoke calmly.

"Business is business, friends are friends. What's it to you?" Lisa sneered.

"Exactly, you dumb f*ck. You think you're some sh*t just because you're a Vice President here? I go wherever I want, who're you to control me, huh?"

Life at the Top Chapter 1052

Dudley raised his arm as he spoke to shove Jasper.

Dudley's movements were wide, perhaps because he wanted to show off in front of Lisa.

Instead of shoving Jasper, Julian ended up catching his hand and twisting it behind his back.

Dudley shouted in pain as his wrist was twisted to his back. Julian pressed the hand against Dudley's back, causing the man to bow forward and shout.

The action and posture Dudley was in caused a few pieces of paper to fall from his breast pocket.

Both Lisa and Dudley's expressions changed at the same time.

Lisa instinctively bent down to pick up the papers.

However, Julian was much faster than her.

Just as Lisa reached out, Julian had already picked the papers up with one hand while still holding Dudley's wrist with the other.

"Give my things back to me!" Lisa glared at Julian and spoke angrily.

Julian ignored her and passed the papers to Jasper instead.

Jasper took the papers and glanced at Lisa before he read their contents.

Jasper was elated by what he saw.

The paper was precisely the prepared schedule and explanations for the core topics of the asset forum conference prepared by the Haddock Chamber of Commerce for Jasper.

This so-called asset forum conference was essentially an event where a bunch of bigshots within the industry would sit together and give their own opinions on topics each other or the host had brought up. It could either be a debate or a speech.

As this was a provocation from the Teo to the Haddock Chamber of Commerce, they would certainly decide on a debate.

This meant that if the Teo Chamber of Commerce wanted to put businesspeople from Haddock in a difficult position, then they would surely attack Jasper who was their representative. Coincidentally, there were also people within Haddock's Chamber of Commerce who wanted to put Jasper in a difficult position, so the two parties had intriguingly ended up with the same 'enemy'.

Both Lisa and Dudley's expressions changed.

"Motherf*cker! Tell your dog to let go of me and give me back my things!" Dudley shouted fiercely.

Jasper looked at the duo and waved the documents in his hand before speaking calmly, "Who'd have thought that I'd get such a great surprise the first time I'm here. Should I understand this as a gift from both of you together?"

Lisa's face was taut and she did not speak, but her eyes kept flickering as she came up with a plan.

Dudley was more aggressive and simple. The man turned his head to sneer. "I don't know what you're talking about. Also, I said let go of me right now, you hear me? Or I'll kill you two!"

"F*cking h*ll, do you even know who I am? My dad's the President of the Teo Chamber of Commerce! How dare you hurt me, I'll have people kill you once you walk out the doors!"

"Jul, I think this child's gone mad. Give him a shock to wake him up," Jasper spoke calmly.

Julian did not hesitate before he slapped Dudley's mouth with the back of his hand.

Julian's hand was akin to a steel plate as he slapped on Dudley's clamoring mouth. The latter immediately let out a muffled scream and stopped speaking, replacing it with pitiful screams and shouts.

Dudley covered his own mouth and stared at Jasper with hatred and fear, all while blood seeped out from between his fingers.

Dudley was used to being arrogant thanks to his family background and identity, so he had not expected Jasper to attack him.

“You’ve gone crazy, Jasper!” Lisa screamed as she saw Dudley’s pitiful situation.

She immediately rushed over to help Dudley up and wiped the traces of blood from his face with a tissue. Then she turned to speak to Jasper icily.

“Do you even know who Dudley’s father is? Don’t think that just because you’ve got a small business now you’re suddenly a true wealthy businessman. You don’t even have the right to stand and speak in front of someone of Dudley’s father’s caliber!”

Jasper narrowed his eyes and looked at Lisa calmly.

There was something strange with Lisa’s expression right now.

It seemed like she was elated to see him and Dudley get into conflict. Yet for the sake of acting, she had no choice but to pretend to be furious.

That was not all. Lisa’s choice of words was very specific as well. Instead of explaining the cause of the conflict or trying to smooth things out, she had emphasized Dudley’s identity.

This was a sore spot for trust-fund children like Dudley.

She had also told Dudley that Jasper was just a normal businessman with a little bit of property and a normal family.

“Motherf*cker. How dare you hit me! Just you wait, my dad will never forgive you!”

As expected, Dudley had mustered the courage and he glared at Jasper, his gaze resentful and fiery.

“No one’s ever dared to hit me all these years, you’re the first. But that’s alright, just you wait. I’ll make you pay tenfold for this slap!”

Dudley was stunned and he looked like he was about to rage. He glanced at Julian instinctively and fear spiked within him to squash the anger down.

That slap had told him that Julian was not someone he could fight back against. There was no other option but to let the matter go for now.

Or he would get beaten up again.

Dudley stared at Jasper and spoke with his jaw tightly set, “Fine, you win this time!”

Dudley then made a move to leave.

He was evidently at a disadvantage now and he could not beat Jasper in a fistfight. So Dudley planned to go back and wait for a chance to take revenge.

However, he had only taken one step forward when Julian appeared in his path.

“What is the meaning of this?!” Dudley asked, terrified and angry.

“What’s the meaning?” Jasper chuckled and looked at Lisa. “I’m afraid you’re going to have to ask her that. I’m only doing what she wants me to do.”

Dudley turned to Lisa confusedly and saw a rather frantic expression on her face.

“You’re insane. I don’t even know what you’re trying to say,” Lisa spoke, forcing herself to calm down.

“You wanted Dudley and me to fight, best to the point that both of us are willing to risk our lives to get rid of each other. All while you watch by the sidelines and reap the rewards, no?” Jasper spoke calmly.

Lisa’s expression changed slightly at that.

“What are you talking about! Dudley and I are friends! I’d definitely stand on his side if you two fought, what do you mean reap rewards?”

Jasper smiled and spoke, "I don't care if you admit it or not, but there's something the both of you must explain to me today."

Jasper brandished the papers in his hands and his expression turned frosty. He shouted, "You two. What is the meaning of conspiring and stealing this document?!"

Life at the Top Chapter 1053

Lisa's expression darkened when she saw the papers in Jasper's hands.

She knew that Jasper had found a weakness and without a reasonable explanation, Jasper would surely blow the issue up. She would be put in a difficult position then.

"I don't know," Lisa turned her head away and replied unnaturally, "Why would I know what he has on him."

Dudley wiped the blood from the corner of his lips and scoffed. Yet he did not say a word.

It was evident that the two planned to leave the matter alone by denying and remaining silent.

Jasper looked at the two and spoke, "So you're not going to admit it? Alright, then."

Jasper then turned to look at the receptionist who was still dazed and frightened. He spoke, "Could you please call Mr. Gardner?"

"Huh?" The receptionist looked at Jasper blankly. Her brain had yet to catch up to what was happening.

“Tell him that if he doesn’t come over and deal with this as fast as he can, then I’ll sue his daughter on grounds of stealing trade secrets.”

Lisa jumped up like a cat who had her tail stepped on. “What nonsense is that, Jasper?!”

“You have to take responsibility for your words! You can’t just accuse me of stealing trade secrets without evidence! You really think you’re on top of the world?”

“We’ll know if we investigated,” Jasper spoke calmly.

With that, Jasper turned to look at the receptionist. The latter did not dare to anger Jasper so she immediately found Norman’s number and called him.

At the same time, Lisa was also cueing Dudley with her gaze, urging him to do something.

Dudley’s expression was sour.

Lisa was the one who handed him the documents. Dudley knew that his Teo Chamber of Commerce was planning to attack Haddock’s Chamber from its Waterhoof City branch and he wanted to make a huge contribution. He had not expected to be caught red-handed at the very last moment.

The matter could potentially be blown into something huge, depending on whether people wanted to investigate it or not.

With the way Jasper acted, it was unlikely he would let the matter go.

Dudley’s eyes darted around and his expression kept changing.

“The asset forum conference held by the Teo Chamber of Commerce to attack the Haddock Chamber is about to commence. Yet the daughter of Haddock’s Chamber of Commerce's President brought a businessperson from Teo into the Waterhoof City branch station to steal all of Haddock's core future plans."

"What do you think will happen if word gets out? Do you think your father, as President of the Chamber, would praise you for being understanding or hang you up and scold you for being a failure?"

Dudley's expression darkened extremely at Jasper's words.

"What do you want?" Dudley asked, clenching his teeth and ignoring the pain on his lips.

"Simple. Tell me what transaction you two made and I'll let you go immediately. I also won't hold you accountable," Jasper replied calmly.

Dudley's eyes flickered and asked, "Really?"

"I have no reason to lie to you," Jasper replied.

Lisa immediately spoke, seeing how Dudley was persuaded to tell, "Mr. Ball! Don't fall for this crafty and vile man's lies! Who knows what bad intentions he's got in mind!"

Jasper replied calmly, "I'm sure you can tell who's more trustworthy. Me, or a woman who's willing to betray her Chamber of Commerce father just for her own interests."

That sentence worked better than any vow and Dudley immediately decided.

"Lisa and I are just acquainted, we aren't especially close. She contacted me a few days ago and told me she could hand me a document your Chamber of Commerce has prepared for the asset forum conference later."

“The only request she had was for me to humiliate you harshly at the conference.”

“I thought that since we’re going to have to deal with whoever Haddock’s Chamber sends over, I’d be gaining important internal intel without having to do more than I originally have to. So I agreed.”

Dudley completely sold Lisa out once he opened his mouth.

“Dudley! Are you even a f*cking man? Jasper just gave you a slight shock and you’re already admitting everything! You’ve got no balls, you coward!” Lisa shrieked in mortification.

Dudley glanced at Lisa icily. He clenched his jaw quietly and turned to ask Jasper, “Can I leave now?”

Jasper waved his hand and replied with a crescent-eyed smile, “If you wish.”

Despite getting Jasper’s approval, Dudley did not leave straight away. Instead, he looked at the document in Jasper’s hands hesitantly.

Jasper smiled before he ripped the papers in front of Dudley in half and spoke, “Does this soothe your worries?”

Dudley let out a long breath and wiped off the blood from the corner of his mouth. He spoke grimly, “At least you’re a man of your word. But this isn’t over, just you wait!”

There was no way people like Dudley would leave the matter alone after losing so horribly to Jasper once. The man had thought of countless ways to kill Jasper in his mind and he turned to leave after he said his piece.

Julian looked at Jasper as if to ask whether he should follow after the man.

Jasper shook his head and replied, "Let him go. This is just a small matter, there's nothing we can do even if we catch him red-handed. It's not something we can bring up, so it won't affect the outcome of the situation."

Jasper then turned to Lisa and asked calmly, "Is there anything you'd like to say?"

Lisa stared at Jasper icily and sneered. "Don't look so proud, Jasper. You're a dead man walking."

"Is that so? Then please wait with me for your dad to come and deal with this."

Jasper shrugged and turned to the receptionist. "Excuse me, but has the call connected?"

The receptionist stuttered in fear, "It-it's connected. Mr. Gardner said, said he'll be here shortly."

"Alright. Could you also help me contact the other council people? Tell them to arrive in half an hour, I'm holding a meeting."

"One last thing, could you bring me to your most commonly used meeting room please?"

The receptionist nodded vigorously and did not dare to say anything. She glanced at Jasper secretly through her peripheral vision and thought to herself. How this young, handsome, and wealthy man was not only respectful and dignified but also friendly.

Her cheeks flushed the more she thought about it.

"Hello? Could you lead the way, please?"

Jasper's voice had shocked her out of her delusions and she frantically replied in acknowledgment. She quickly led the way, sighing as she walked. 'What am I thinking? This isn't a man I can dream about...

'But he's so charming!'

Life at the Top Chapter 1054

In the meeting room, Lisa sat icily on one of the chairs by the side while Jasper took the head seat comfortably.

"The environment here's quite nice," Jasper commented.

"Haddock Chamber of Commerce's wealth isn't what a nouveau riche like you can imagine. This isn't even much, you should look at the Chamber's headquarters if you want something grand," Lisa spoke disdainfully as if to a country bumpkin.

"Oh? Is that so? I've seen Haddock's Chamber of Commerce's Waterhoof City branch's station before. I don't remember seeing the wealth you were referring to though. That three-story building was quite the pitiful sight."

"As for the headquarters. I haven't been there before but I've been to Old Master Hurlbutt's. It's luxurious, I have to say, but there weren't as many doors as you said," Jasper replied calmly.

Lisa clenched her jaw. She felt like she had been belittled by Jasper again.

Jasper had singlehandedly destroyed the previous Haddock Chamber of Commerce's Waterhoof City branch station.

So there was no right to brag about the new station to Jasper no matter how beautiful it looked.

Not to mention that Jasper was the Vice President of the branch.

Lisa felt extremely uncomfortable at that line of thought.

She wondered if the spiritual leader of Haddock's Chamber of Commerce, Old Master Gale Hurlbutt's eyes was worsening with age. How could he have Jasper, an enemy, be the Vice President?

As they spoke, the conference room doors opened to reveal Norman.

At the door, Norman glanced at Lisa darkly before he turned to Jasper.

Norman scoffed and spoke, "How arrogant of you, Mr. Laine. You haven't been here for the earlier half of the year, yet the moment you come you hold a meeting with all members of the council. What's this, are you trying to get rid of me?"

Jasper replied calmly, "You misunderstand, Mr. Gardner. I haven't been here for half a year because I have absolutely no interest in this title as the Vice President, let alone get rid of you. It would be inappropriate of me."

"I'm only here because Old Master Hurlbutt forced me and to attend the asset forum conference.

"I've resigned myself to it, but I also told Old Master Hurlbutt that my only request is that the branch does not cause me trouble.

"Who'd have thought that in the end, it'd be your darling daughter that's causing me a lot of trouble and I've only been here for one day. Thank goodness I found out in time, or I wouldn't be the only one humiliated, but so would the entire Haddock Chamber of Commerce.

“Initially, I thought that since it’s my own thing, I should deal with it by myself. But then again, I came here to help. And instead of thinking of a way to get rid of the Teo Chamber of Commerce, you’re teaming up to get rid of me.

“What do you think will happen if I were to call Old Master Hurlbutt, throw a tantrum and leave? I’m sure the old master is too kind to blame a youth like me, no?”

Norman’s expression darkened further at Jasper’s words.

He had no idea what Lisa had done, but regardless of what it was, the fact that Jasper caught her red-handed meant that this would be a horrible situation to resolve.

As expected, Norman’s brows scrunched up at Jasper’s suggestion to call Gale.

No matter what happened, it would be best resolved within the Waterhoof City branch. The moment Gale caught wind of it, then the situation would be beyond Norman’s control.

Norman could not afford to anger Gale.

“What happened?” Norman asked Lisa.

Lisa bit her lip and relayed what happened to Norman by her father’s ear.

“Useless brat!”

Life at the Top Chapter 1055

Norman immediately slapped Lisa across the face when he heard.

Norman had slapped her harshly, forsaking all public image.

Lisa shouted in pain and fell to the ground with a hand cupping her cheek. Her cheek immediately reddened and bumped up, and she looked rather pitiful.

“I already warned you a long time ago that no matter what conflicts there are, it’s still between ourselves. It cannot involve what’s important.”

“The Teo and Haddock Chamber of Commerce have had decades of history, ever since Old Master Hurlbutt. We’re mortal enemies! How dare you endanger something so important!”

Norman pointed at Lisa and scolded her angrily.

“Get lost, right now! This isn’t over, I’ll deal with you when I get back later!”

Norman then walked over to Jasper and bowed deeply after he was done scolding her. “This is my ignorant daughter’s fault, Jasper. Thank goodness you stopped her in time before she made a horrible mistake. I’m sorry, and thank you.”

Jasper narrowed his eyes and looked at Norman as if trying to see through the man with his calm and unfazed gaze.

Norman’s expression was calm as if he had spoken his genuine thoughts just now. There was no deception in the man’s face.

Jasper did not say anything and Norman did not move from his bow.

The conference room fell silent, less Lisa’s soft sobs.

Other than that, it was terrifyingly silent.

The silence was only broken when the conference room was opened again.

Filing in were three members of the Waterhoof City branch council.

The Chamber was a loose organization. It was made up of unofficial members and official members. Ranked above them were members of the council, the Vice President, then finally the President.

Members of the council were considered the managers of the Chamber even though there was nothing binding the members of the Chamber and thus nothing to manage. Still, the Haddock Chamber of Commerce was a huge chamber with members all over the country and not everyone could be a council member.

The three council members had decided to come in sternly to take a look first when they heard that Jasper had called for a meeting. After all, they were members of the Chamber's council and they knew who Jasper was.

They also knew that Jasper was the one who ended the Hull family before. No one knew if they would be next now that Jasper had assumed the position of Vice President.

The three were stunned when they entered the room.

They saw Jasper sitting on the chair rigidly while Norman, the President, was bowing to him. There was also Lisa by the side, sobbing as she cupped her cheek in pain.

'What are they doing this time?'

The three council members wondered if they had seen the scene wrongly.

"You're too kind, Mr. Gardner. It's common for youths to make ignorant mistakes, why would I hold a grudge?" Jasper suddenly smiled, reaching out to help Mr. Gardner up.

"As Vice President, I also wish that our Chamber of Commerce grows better every day. As President and Vice President, we have to work together with the same goals."

Norman remained unaffected by Jasper's words and the three council members looked terrified.

They wondered if, in addition to having poor eyesight, their ears had also begun to hear things as well.

Life at the Top Chapter 1056

The three members of the council looked at each other. No one knew what happened.

There were bucketloads of stories about Jasper and their chamber of commerce and there were only stories of grudge and no grace.

They thought this meeting would be a collision that was as huge as a meteor crash. However, they did not think that the president would get cold feet before the meeting even started.

Not only that, but Jasper also had a modest and amiable look on his face. It seemed that he wanted to dispel bygone enmity.

Everyone in the room was experienced in the business world and none of them exposed their thoughts easily. So, everyone planned to wait and see.

After he said that, Norman realized something awkward.

Jasper was sitting on the seat of honor and only the person with the highest position would be sitting in that seat during meetings.

Normally, Norman would be sitting there.

However, Jasper sat down directly and left him at one side.

This made Norman feel extremely awkward.

One of the members of the council was Norman’s die-hard supporter. After confirming that Jasper would be representing Haddock Chamber of Commerce’s Waterhoof City Branch to attend the Asset Forum Conference, he communicated with Norman, so he said this bluntly.

“Oh? Where should I sit then?” Jasper asked.

“You’re just the vice president and you dare to sit in the seat of honor? Get down and sit in the seat below that,” this member of the council said boldly and confidently.

“You’re young so I remind you out of kindness. This is a very solemn and proper setting, not those unregistered companies that you’re operating illegally without following the rules.

“Maybe you can sit wherever you want over there but don’t be confused with your identity and position over here. You’ll suffer a disadvantage if you do.”

This member of the council was pleased with himself because he felt that he found a perfect excuse to embarrass Jasper.

After berating Jasper, he saw Jasper looking at him with a half-smile on his face. He could not contain this anymore.

“Why are you looking at me like that? Am I wrong?”

Jasper said insipidly, “You said you’ll make me clear of my identity and position, and I did. I am the vice president and you’re just a member of the council. So even if I get a group of people to lie down and go to sleep in this meeting room, aside from Mr. Gardner, do you think you have the qualification to question me?”

“So, am I the one who’s not clear of my identity and status, or are you the one who’s not clear of yours?”

That member of the council’s face flushed immediately after hearing what Jasper said. He looked at Jasper in anger and said sinisterly, “What do you mean by that?”

“Literally,” Jasper said unenthusiastically.

After Norman said that, he found a seat beneath Jasper and sat down.

“Mr. Gardner, what are you doing?” When that member of the council saw Norman backing down after he charged and broke through enemy lines for him, he was slightly lost for words.

“Alright, Mr. Heron. It’s just a seat. It doesn’t mean anything.” It was clear that Norman did not want to say much when he waved his hand and said that.

Mr. Heron chuckled coldly and sat back down. He said, “Right, it’s just a seat. I’ll let you feel pleased with yourself for a while. You’re just like a dog I keep as a pet. It won’t become human even if I put a suit on him.

“A dog will always be a dog.”

After he said that, the people around the meeting table were smiling. They were starting to look at Jasper with sarcasm and ridicule in their eyes.

As the members of the Haddock Chamber of Commerce, they would be siding with Norman naturally.

Plus, they even saw their president bowing to Jasper when they entered this room. Even though they did not know what happened, Jasper’s wild image was imprinted in their heads.

Life at the Top Chapter 1057

They were glad when they saw Jasper getting put in his place.

“Alright.”

Norman cleared his throat and came out to maintain the peace.

He looked at Jasper and said, “Mr. Laine proposed to host this meeting. So, Mr. Laine, what do you want to talk to us about?”

Jasper said calmly, "A few simple things."

After he said that, Jasper looked at Lisa and said, "I wonder what position Miss Lisa Gardner holds in this chamber of commerce."

After he said this, the three members of the council looked at Norman at the same time. Meanwhile, Norman looked as if he was caught unprepared. He did not expect Jasper to ask this question at all.

"What's wrong? Is it a very difficult question?" Jasper asked.

Norman frowned. Even though this was not a huge matter, he was genuinely scared that Jasper would cause trouble to him from some unexpected angles.

After pondering, Norman braced himself and said, "She's my secretary."

Norman was just saying this without thinking the matter through. However, it would not be a strange thing for a president like him to have a secretary. So he figured Jasper would not push this matter further.

After smiling at him, Jasper said, "So, Mr. Gardner, you like to ask the people you're close to work with you?"

"Mr. Laine, is this related to our meeting today?" Norman asked, feeling infuriated.

"Yeah, we're very busy. If there's nothing significant, we should end this meeting and not waste any time," Mr. Heron said with a dark face.

"If I mentioned it, it's relevant to the meeting naturally."

Jasper said calmly, "Firstly, I made myself clear at the start of this meeting. I asked people who have a position that's higher than the rank of councilmen to participate, and since Lisa is just a secretary to the president, why is she here?"

"So, Miss Gardner, please leave."

Jasper's words caused Lisa's face to be filled with shame.

She had never been kicked out like this in her whole life.

“Jasper, are you doing all of this to humiliate me?” Lisa shrieked.

Jasper said calmly, “I’m just doing things according to the rule. Is there anyone who opposes my decision? You can tell me.”

The three members of the council were silent.

On the surface, it was completely reasonable that Jasper wanted to kick Lisa out. Nothing could be said about this.

After taking a deep breath, Norman said in a deep voice, “Lisa, you should go out.”

Lisa bit her lips and looked at Jasper in rancor. She said frigidly, “I want to see how long you can stay so savage.”

After she said that, Lisa made to leave.

“Wait.”

Jasper stopped her at this moment.

Lisa stood on her ground and smirked at Jasper. “You’re the one who asked me to leave and you’re the one who asked me to wait. What do you want?”

“I asked you to leave because you’re not qualified to take part in this meeting and I asked you to stay because what I’m about to say is directly related to you.”

“In other words, you are now an interrogee who needs to answer my question, understand?”

After Jasper said that, he did not look at Lisa’s expression. He turned his head to look at Norman and the other members of the council. He said, “Everyone, you all know that I’m going to represent the chamber of commerce to attend the Asset Forum Conference. The businesspeople from Haddock and the businesspeople from Teo are completely incompatible. However, in order to embarrass me, someone joined forces with the people from the Teo Chamber of Commerce to steal our business secret.”

“If you guys don’t give me an explanation for this today, okay, Old Master Hurlbutt will have to find someone better qualified than.”

Life at the Top Chapter 1058

Jasper’s words flashed across the hearts of Norman and the three members of the council like a clap of thunder.

They looked at each other and saw that everyone had the same look of confusion on their faces. Then, they looked at Lisa at the same time spontaneously.

At this moment, Lisa’s face was as white as a piece of paper.

She finally understood what Jasper was planning.

Jasper wanted to cause trouble and conflict between Norman and Lisa inside the Haddock Chamber of Commerce.

The rivals were coming right into their faces and the upper management was colluding with the rivals. If word about this got out, how big of a commotion would be caused inside the Haddock Chamber of Commerce?

After realizing what was going on, Lisa looked at Jasper with extreme rancor and screamed, “Jasper, are you trying to eradicate me?”

When Jasper heard this, he did not have the slightest interest to answer her. He turned his head to look at Norman.

The expression on Norman’s face was also very interesting since he had already known about this.

He stared straight at Jasper and gritted his teeth. He was so mad that he was shaking.

Back then, he accepted a compromise to give Jasper the false illusion that he had admitted defeat.

Because Mr. Atticus said he would need more time to plan this.

Norman knew Jasper would come to him and cause trouble for him. He had already thought this through, so he would endure everything Jasper said or did.

That was why Norman gritted his teeth and endured Lisa's trick of injuring herself to gain the enemy's confidence and also the conflict that happened because of the seat.

He felt that his victory was going to come.

However, Jasper was turning the tables now.

He could not keep pretending anymore.

Because if word about this got into Gale's ears, he would be the first one to die.

When that happened, Norman would not have a place to hide in the world.

"Mr. Gardner, what's going on?"

"What's wrong? Are you not going to say anything, Mr. Gardner?" Jasper asked calmly.

After taking a deep breath and clenching his fists, Norman said in a deep voice, "I think there are some misunderstandings here."

"Misunderstandings?"

Jasper chuckled lightly and looked at Norman before saying, "If this is a misunderstanding, then are the rumors about my construction site ruining the vibe and almost costing someone their life misunderstandings as well?"

After Jasper said this, Norman's face became tense even though he was prepared for Jasper to bring this up.

Norman felt as if Jasper's gaze on him was piercing and it was preventing him from hiding from Jasper.

"I don't understand what you mean. What does your construction site have to do with me?" Norman asked while bracing himself.

Jasper chuckled lightly and stood up to walk in front of Norman. He bent down to look straight at Norman's face and said, "He's a young man in his twenties and his parents suffered harshly to raise him into the man he is now. When it's time for him to finally start making money to pay back his parents, you caused him to become disabled for life and lost his ability to work because of your grudges with me.

"Do you still have a conscience?"

The corners of Norman's eyes twitched and he lifted his head to look into Jasper's eyes. He said through gritted teeth, "I told you I don't know what you're talking about and this has nothing to do with the chamber of commerce. Hence, there's no need to talk about that right now."

"Jasper, don't go too far!"

Mr. Heron stood up and pointed at Jasper before saying angrily, "I think you've been domineering for way too long. Don't forget where you are. You're just a vice president so who are you to question the president?"

"Do you think you're qualified to speak now?" Jasper turned his head to look at Mr. Heron coldly as he said that.

Mr. Heron widened his eyes and said in anger, "I am a member of the council so how am I not qualified to speak?"

"A member of the council? What a huge boast." Jasper chuckled lightly and took out his phone to call Gale.

The call was answered immediately after.

Jasper said calmly after putting Gale on loudspeaker, "Old Master Hurlbutt, you said as long as I represent the Waterhoof City Branch to attend the Asset Forum Conference, then I will have absolute power in the branch, am I right?"

"Yes."

Gale answered without hesitation over the other end of the phone.

"What about firing one of the members of the council?" Jasper asked.

This time, Gale was silent for a while. "I told you you have enough power."

"Thank you, Old Master Hurlbutt," said Jasper.

"As long as you get things done."

After Gale finished saying that, he hung up the phone immediately.

The two of them were conversing through the wireless phone so Gale who was in Suesville would not be able to see the interesting expressions of Norman and the three members of the council in the meeting room.

Especially Mr. Heron. He went mad immediately.

Who was Gale Hurlbutt? He was the lifetime honorary president of the Haddock Chamber of Commerce and he was the one who brought the Haddock Chamber of Commerce to a great height of development.

He was the spiritual leader of all businesspeople from Haddock all over the country.

As one of the normal members of the council in the Waterhoof City Branch, perhaps Mr. Heron did manage to interact with the current president of the Haddock Chamber of Commerce in the country, however, he would never get the chance to interact with a top-notch big shot like Gale.

However, he knew that the voice from the phone was from the person he needed to look up to, Gale Hurlbutt.

Even if the old master had backed down from his position, no one would question his prestige in the Haddock Chamber of Commerce.

Since Gale supported Jasper, then he would be finished!

When he thought about this, Mr. Heron said to Norman with a pale face, "Mr. Gardner, y-you have to help me!"

The chamber of commerce was just an organization that was not consolidated, so any one of those members had their own property and business, and naturally, Mr. Heron was the same.

However, to a person like Mr. Heron, being a member of the council in the chamber of commerce, was very beneficial for his business.

At least, the Haddock Chamber of Commerce was in every industry, so if he mentioned his position in the chamber of commerce, it would help him greatly in all kinds of business deals.

However, if he was fired and his dismissal was approved by Old Master Hurlbutt, everyone in the Haddock Chamber of Commerce would avoid him like he was a venomous snake.

When Norman heard this, he felt his scalp getting numb.

He knew Gale supported Jasper but he did not think that he was so supportive.

No matter what, Mr. Heron was a member of the council in the Waterhoof City branch and he was serious about his job. However, Gale did not even ask for his consultation before agreeing to let Jasper fire Mr. Heron.

What did that mean?

It meant that if it was necessary, Jasper could just kick him out of the chamber of commerce.

Norman was already helpless so how would he have the mood to care about Mr. Heron's cries for help? He lifted his head to say to Jasper in a deep voice, "Jasper, don't push us so far! What on earth do you want?"

Life at the Top Chapter 1059

"I'm pushing you too far?"

Jasper looked at Norman and asked coldly, "Am I the one pushing you too far, or are you the one who's forcing me to do this?"

Norman gritted his teeth and said frigidly, "Don't you just want an explanation? Alright, I'll give you an explanation!"

As he said that, Norman announced loudly, "From now on, I'm going to take a long break because of personal reasons. During this period, I won't care about anything that's happening in the chamber of commerce. Mr. Laine will be responsible for everything from now on."

After he said this, Mr. Heron, who initially hoped that Norman could save him, collapsed on his seat. He wanted to cry but no tears were coming out.

Meanwhile, the other two members of the council had a change of expression on their faces.

"Mr. Gardner, you don't have to do this. Please reconsider!" One of the members of the council implored him.

Compared to the more assertive Jasper, it was evident that they were more willing to listen to Norman's orders.

Everything else aside, everyone knew that Jasper would not focus his attention on the chamber of commerce. Plus, if Jasper had the absolute authority of the chamber of commerce, they would suffer in the future.

"No need. I've decided," Norman took a deep breath and said in a deep voice.

After he said that, Norman stared at Jasper with rancor and asked, "Is this enough?"

"Jasper, I won't care about anything that's going to happen next. Our grudge ends here. I hope you can shape up."

After Norman said that, he left with Lisa.

Jasper never stopped them. He just watched the two of their figures disappear from the meeting room.

After the door was closed, Jasper looked at Mr. Heron and said insipidly, "Mr. Heron, this will be the last time I call your name. From now on, you're no longer a member of the Waterhoof City branch. Please leave."

Mr. Heron's expression changed. He gritted his teeth and stood up to look at Jasper with resentment. He said, "Alright, you're ballsy. Just wait. I want to see when you're going to die!"

After he said that, Mr. Heron turned his head and left.

Jasper looked at the two members of the council who looked apprehensive and said, "Do you think I want to replace Norman?"

Of course, no one would answer Jasper. The two of them pretended they did not hear him and did not make a sound.

"Actually, I am not the least bit interested in the Haddock Chamber of Commerce."

Jasper patted the back of the chair and said ruminatively.

"I don't care if you believe me or not, but that's what I'm going to say. You don't have to worry that I'll take action against you guys. The relationship I have with the Haddock Chamber of Commerce was just a promise I made with Old Master Hurlbutt. After I'm done, I'll leave."

"Since Norman doesn't want to bother anymore, you two should do as you see fit for the daily operations of the chamber of commerce. You don't have to care or worry about the Asset Forum Conference as well. I'll take care of it and you just have to send me the workflow and that's it."

"After that, we won't have any interactions anymore."

After Jasper said that, the two members of the council looked at each other and they were confused.

They thought this would be a vigorous battle for authority, yet they did not expect Jasper to act like this when he was in power and still be able to let this go easily. Was he really going to split the power of the president between the two of them so easily?

The two members of the commerce looked at Jasper in disbelief after they were given a free lunch.

One of the braver members mustered the courage and asked, "Mr. Laine, may I ask why you did so much but not want the power of the president?"

"Self-defense," Jasper said unenthusiastically.

The two members of the council did not believe what Jasper said at all.

After Jasper entered the door, he had been so assertive. He had Mr. Heron and Norman in the palm of his hands and now he said he was just doing that for self-defense?

The two of them just assumed that Jasper did not want to say much, so they did not ask.

...

"That sly animal!"

Lisa cursed with bitter resentment once she got into the car.

Norman closed his eyes and leaned against the seat of the car. He said softly, "I've been so careful and he still managed to get information that can be used against me. Jasper is so hard to deal with."

Lisa clenched her fists tightly and said with bitterness, "We can't just let this matter go."

"Lisa, what you did today was too impulsive," Norman said after he opened his eyes to look at his daughter.

Lisa lowered her head upon hearing that. She replied, "I know that, dad. I didn't think this through and I didn't expect to run into Jasper so coincidentally."

"This is not a matter of coincidence. You need to risk too much for this, but even if it's successful, the return is too little. So, you're still too impulsive no matter how you think about this. You shouldn't have done that," Norman said while shaking his head.

"I just don't want Jasper to be so comfortable," Lisa said with bitter resentment.

"Lisa, you still didn't realize one thing," Norman said.

When Lisa looked at him suspiciously, Norman continued with a slight bitterness, "This is not about our grudge with Jasper anymore the moment Mr. Atticus contacted us. Instead, it's a battle between Mr. Atticus and Jasper."

"The two of us are just Mr. Atticus' chess pieces at most, do you understand?"

Lisa answered nonchalantly after she heard that, "This is not important. I don't care if we're chess pieces or not, I just want Jasper dead."

"No, this is very important."

Norman emphasized his words. "We will only change how we think as long as we know our positions."

"To Mr. Atticus, we're chess pieces. So, we shall behave like good chess pieces. From now on, we won't do anything unless Mr. Atticus tells us to."

Lisa said angrily, “Dad, we don’t even know what Mr. Atticus is planning to do. Today, Jasper used this opportunity to kick you out of the chamber of commerce. What if he takes one step further in the future? Should we just watch him do that?”

“We’ll just cause a little trouble for him so that he won’t be able to take action against us in the time being,” Norman gritted his teeth and said.

“I’m sure that Dudley person will not let this go after suffering a disadvantage. You should go to him and fan the flames so that he’ll go find Jasper for trouble.”

“The Asset Forum Conference is starting as well and Dudley’s father is not a person that’s easy to deal with, plus he’s extremely protective of his family members so Jasper will be so troubled when that happens.”

Upon hearing that, Lisa’s eyes lit up and she said, “Dad, I’ll listen to what you say!”

“Remember, you can’t show up in the foreground anymore. Just let Dudley, that brainless son of a rich man, look for Jasper. You can just hide behind him and watch.”

“Okay!”

Life at the Top Chapter 1060

After dismissing the two members of the council, Jasper walked out of the meeting room.

Initially, he wanted to go back to the hotel but when he walked past the reception, someone called out to him.

“Um, M-Mr. Laine.”

Jasper turned his head to look at the receptionist with a smile. The receptionist's face was red and she looked nervous. Hence, Jasper said, "Hello, can I help you?"

When the receptionist saw how polite and conservative Jasper was, the woman was slightly disappointed. She reapplied her makeup lightly and delicately while Jasper was in the meeting.

After all, the politer he was with her, the more it showed that her beauty was nothing to Jasper.

She sighed in her heart and mustered up the courage to say, "Just now, I saw Mr. Heron barge out of the meeting room looking furious. He was also on the phone but I didn't hear much, I only heard him saying that he'll find someone to teach you a lesson, Mr. Laine."

Jasper was lost for words when he heard that. Then, he smiled at her and said, "Thank you for telling me."

The receptionist added, "Mr. Laine, you have to be careful. Among the three members of the council, Mr. Heron is a local in Waterhoof City. He's in the entertainment industry, as in bars and arcades."

"You should know that he has a lot of thugs under him since he's in this industry. That's why the other two members of the council won't provoke him usually."

When he saw the receptionist's nervous face, Jasper knew that she was very stressed and scared when she said this.

Jasper nodded and said warmly, "Alright, I understand. I'll look out for that."

The receptionist watched as Jasper left. In the end, she did not muster up the courage to ask him for his phone number. So, she could only sigh in misery and sat back down. She was wondering when Mr. Laine would come to the chamber of commerce next time.

After Jasper came out of the chamber of commerce, he went back to the hotel.

It was already afternoon when he got back to the hotel. So, he decided to have lunch with Julian in the hotel to get by. However, when he went back to his hotel room, he saw Sean coming over to find him coincidentally.

"Mr. Laine, I was looking for you," Sean said.

“What’s going on?”

Jasper opened the door of the room and asked Sean to sit anywhere he liked. When he saw that Sean was still a little dispirited, he opened the mini-fridge and took out a can of coffee to throw it to him. He laughed and said, “Sean, are you suffering because you’re old? You still haven’t recovered from that all-nighter?”

Sean chuckled bitterly and opened the can of coffee to take a sip. He said, “I’m already in my forties so of course, I can’t compare with a strong young man like you.”

“However, my foundation is still fine. Back when I was in the military, I was the parade guard of our company.”

Jasper sat opposite Sean and said, “You have to watch the real estate company, especially the branch in Waterhoof City. There’s been a major personnel transfer recently and there will be people who are unhappy with this. You should confront them as you see fit.”

“After all, we still need employees for the work. We can’t have all of them quit because something happened.”

“I got it. I will supervise and urge for the completion of this.” Sean nodded.

“Right, Mr. Laine, the reason I’m here is to talk to you about the naming.”

“The base of the skyscraper is already finished. According to the rules stated in the document, we have to report to the Waterhoof City’s government about our progress. Also, we have to start preparing for the name registration of our trademark.”

“Mr. Laine, do you need me to ask the planning department to provide you with a few names or...”

Jasper remembered the name Wendy proposed back then and said, “No need. I already have a name. Let’s call it World Financial Center.”

Life at the Top Chapter 1061

Sean's eyes lit up and he nodded. "Alright, it sounds grand and dignified. I like it."

"Oh, and there's one more thing I'd like you to help me do."

Jasper gave it some thought before he said, "Help me find a few formal gifts. Nothing too outlandish, so no need for jewelry. Something like tea, perhaps. I'm using them as gifts."

Sean nodded and replied, "Alright. I'll get to it immediately."

...

The following day, Hoofmorn University.

Jasper's Bentley came to a slow stop before the administrative building where a group of people was already waiting for him.

"That's Jasper?"

"I heard that he's the richest man in the Southeast Province. One of the wealthiest in the entire southern region too."

"That's not even the half of it. I think Waterhoof City's skyscraper belongs to him too. There's no youth richer than he is within the country."

"The most unbelievable thing is that he's only in his twenties. He's around the same age as our university's students, but there's no comparing against him. I heard he's an entrepreneur too. Such a capable man."

"Does anyone know what he's doing here in our school? I heard that a few important department chiefs, the university's president, and the dean's waiting for him upstairs."

“Of course. Universities around the country have to raise their own funds now. It’d be good for the school to make friends with wealthy people.”

“Stop talking, stop talking. He’s getting out of the car.”

A man in his forties strode over to welcome Jasper once he saw the latter alight the car. The man extended his arm as he walked and smiled. “Welcome, Mr. Laine. Hoofmorn University is joyed to know of your arrival.”

Jasper shook the man’s hand and replied with a smile, “You are all seniors and pioneers of the education industry. I am but a mere businessman driven by benefits, there is no need for such a grand welcoming.”

The man smiled and said, “You’re too kind, Mr. Laine. Let me introduce myself, I’m Doiran Clem, the secretary of the presidential office. Mr. Marshman, the president, and a few important department chiefs are waiting for you upstairs.”

Jasper chuckled and spoke, “Then let us make our way upstairs quickly. There’s no need to make them wait any longer.”

Under the loud applause and Dorian’s lead, Jasper and Julian made their way into the administrative building.

When they arrived at the elevator, Dorian suddenly said rather embarrassedly, “Mr. Laine, the elevator’s getting old so it’s a little slow. Please forgive us for the long wait.”

Jasper asked curiously, “Hoofmorn University is the fifth-best university in the country but the administrative building looks simple and rather aged. There should be no reason for the school to struggle with funding, right?”

Dorian sighed and replied, “Swallow Capital sent a document last year, stating that all universities will have to raise and deal with their own funding. Our finances are only enough to cover staff wages and benefits, leaving us to struggle for campus construction.

“Not to mention that the university’s in dire need of funding for research projects as well. Any extra money we have is given to the professors and students for research.”

“As for our working environment, it’s as the dean said. It just has to be passable. There’s no need to furnish it too luxuriously, since this is a school and our focus should be on educating and learning.”

Jasper nodded in understanding. “Mr. Marshman is a great dean.”

Life at the Top Chapter 1062

In the dean’s office in Hoofmorn University’s administrative building, Jasper saw one of the most important figures of the country’s academic field, Patrick Marshmeet.

This old man looked lively and vigorous despite being in his late sixties.

This was the second time Jasper had seen such an energetic man of such age.

The first time was with Old Master Law.

“Hello, Mr. Marshman. I’m Jasper Laine, I hope you’re doing well.”

Jasper was extremely courteous and sincere upon entering the room.

This was not just because of Patrick’s identity and status, but also because the man was a true academic senior that devoted his life to the country and its people.

Patrick took a good look at Jasper before replying cheerfully, "Hello. To see you achieve such great success at such a young age, Mr. Laine, makes old men like us embarrassed. Seeing as how we've lived our whole lives for nothing."

Jasper replied, "You're too kind, Mr. Marshman. I just happened to be born in a better era. Youths like us would never have had such a great environment to flourish in without the countless effort and hard work seniors like you have put in for the country, Mr. Marshman."

"Very good," Patrick shook Jasper's hand and praised, "Here I was worried that I'd be meeting a money-minded businessman when Tom called me before this. Looks like I was worried for nothing."

Jasper smiled and turned around to take a long box from Julian's hands. Then, he turned back to tell Patrick, "I come bearing gifts this time, Mr. Marshman."

Patrick frowned at Jasper's actions and words. The man answered unhappily, "What for? I never accept gifts, so please put it away."

At this moment, Patrick's previously good impression of Jasper from earlier also turned sour.

Dorian began to feel nervous as he watched the scene play out by the side. He felt that Jasper was still rather young and untamed, as he incorporated the societal practice of gifting over here.

Mr. Marshman was one of the top leading figures in the academic field. He did not accept gifts.

Jasper smiled in the face of Mr. Marshman's displeasure and replied, "Don't be in such a rush to reject me, Mr. Marshman. I'm sure you'll like this gift."

"Not to mention that I'm not only gifting it to you, Mr. Marshman. This gift is for everyone in Hoofmorn University; staff, faculty, and student body."

“Oh?” Patrick was intrigued now. “Now I’ve got to see what grand gift you’ve gotten us.

“Let it be known that if this is any secular gift, I will still reject it. After all, this is a campus, and the harmony of the atmosphere is important.”

Jasper chuckled. He did not rush to explain as he opened the box instead.

Within the long box was a carefully packaged scroll. The scroll itself was around a meter and a half in length and seemed rather aged. There was a layer of wax over the exterior of the scroll to prevent it from oxidizing.”

“If you could lend me a hand, Mr. Clem.”

Dorian immediately agreed and walked over. Standing opposite Jasper, they carefully took out the scroll and unfurled it.

Mr. Marshman stared at the slowly unfurled scroll as he instinctively pulled out his reading glasses to put them on. He could tell that this scroll was a valuable antique.

At the same time, the other department chiefs and president that had come to accompany the dean also walked over. Everyone looked at the scroll with curiosity.

After the scroll was opened, a single sentence caused gasps of disbelief to ripple through the crowd.

“This... this is Mr. Hines’ calligraphed Exchange of Ancient Somer Scholars!”

With that, the crowd was immediately in an uproar.

Life at the Top Chapter 1063

Most people within the country did not know who Mr. Hines was.

However, it would be a crime for anyone within Hoofmorn University to not know the man.

Mr. Hines was Hoofmorn University's founder and its first dean. He was the most highly-ranked figure in Somerland's cultural field during his time.

All his students were people who were involved in, or even led, the massive spurt of development in Somerland's early modern history.

Everyone was excited once they heard this, especially Mr. Marshman.

Jasper looked up at the man who spoke and smiled. "You've got a great eye for things, Mr...?"

"Professor McDaniel is the department chief of Hoofmorn University's Early Modern History. He's one of the top three figures in the field of Early Modern History."

Patrick introduced the man before he looked at the open scroll again and asked, "Is this the real thing?"

Jasper smiled, "I wouldn't dare mess with you gentlemen by offering you a counterfeit. This is indeed the genuine article."

Jasper then praised Sean internally after replying.

Sean, who was thinking of how he could make up for his mistakes, had immediately found this treasure once he learned that Jasper was preparing gifts for Hoofmorn University.

Jasper could only get his hands on this item because Sean's family was friends with the scroll's previous owner. Even then, it had cost Jasper an eight-figure sum to buy Mr. Hines' calligraphed work.

It was an expensive piece, costing tens of millions.

Ten of millions was a suffocating sum in such a setting. However, as far as Jasper was concerned, this gift was a perfect one for Hoofmorn University.

“Mr. Hines is a publicly recognized scholar within the country. While he has already passed, his achievements continue to stand the test of time. Hoofmorn University remains to be a sacred academy that benefits thousands of people.

“It occurred to me how much of a shame it would be to Hoofmorn University if Mr. Hines’ calligraphed work were to disappear in the outside world, so I thought I’d take the responsibility to gift it to Hoofmorn University instead. I hope Hoofmorn University will honor Mr. Hines’ passing wish and continue to produce and nurture scholars and talents for the country and its people.”

If there was anyone good with his words.

It would be Jasper Laine.

Everyone in the room smiled joyfully at Jasper’s words as these titans of their respective academic fields looked at Jasper with great affection.

Even Mr. Marshman peered at Jasper with extreme gentleness.

“Jasper, allow me to refer you by your given name as your elder. On behalf of Hoofmorn University’s staff and student body, I thank you for your present.

“We know that this was an expensive gift, but Hoofmorn University values what the gift symbolizes even more. So, to be frank with you, we cannot nor are we willing to decline the gift. Thank you, we’ll treasure it.”

Patrick suddenly moved to give Jasper a grateful bow.

Jasper could not accept such an action, so he immediately reached out to stop Patrick. Jasper replied awkwardly, “Mr. Marshman, I’m going to have to shamefully leave if you keep being so overly courteous to me.”

Laughter filled the room after Jasper said this, and Patrick no longer insisted. The latter had someone put away the valuable calligraphed treasure before it got sent to Hoofmorn University's large hall and framed so staff and students could pay their respect.

Jasper smiled softly at the unexpected effect his gift had brought. He was thinking about how he could mention the reason for his visit before Mr. Marshman took the initiative to bring it up.

"Jasper, I know that you came to visit us for the stepper, yes? I've already called the relevant academic professors over. How else would you like Hoofmorn University to help you?"

Jasper exhaled softly. 'This is the difference between bearing and not bearing gifts!'

Life at the Top Chapter 1064

Ecen if Jasper had not gifted Hoofmorn University such an unrefusable present, Mr. Marshman would still have welcomed Jasper grandly on behalf of Old Master Law's introduction and Jasper's strengths.

However, such a grand greeting would only be out of common respect.

After all, Old Master Law had put in a word, and Jasper was no longer the nobody he once was.

As the owner of JW Capital and its subsidiaries, Jasper was quite a formidable man.

However, Jasper did not want a courteous greeting for the sake of respect.

Jasper hoped to establish an even deeper relationship with Hoofmorn University so that it could become a place that nurtured JW's future talents.

“Mr. Marshman, Department Chiefs, since we’ve already brought up the matter, then allow me to go straight to the point.”

In the small meeting room in Hoofmorn University’s administrative building, Jasper cleared his throat in front of a group of professors and cleared his thoughts before he started slowly.

“You are all experts in your academic fields, so I won’t make a fool out of myself by introducing what the stepper does and how important it is. I trust that all of you know it better than I do.

“Its importance is the reason why the West has imposed a major blockade on this technical project, preventing it from reaching our shores for the past few decades.

“But does this mean we’ll have to sit and wait for the West to overpower us just because they’ve sealed off the technology?

“No!

“Coincidentally, my JW company has business in just such a field.

“Therefore, my idea is to build my own team and try to achieve a breakthrough on the stepper’s manufacturing technology. This will need more than an astronomical amount of funds, but also the technical support from the best research team in the country.

“This is why I came to Hoofmorn University today.

“Hoofmorn University had received a stepper a few years ago, and had also published the most research findings on the stepper. This is why Hoofmorn University will be the best partner for me.”

While everyone in the room had already expected the contents of Jasper’s speech, they still found themselves excited by the man’s words.

“You’re right, Mr. Laine. If it’s possible, then we are very willing to provide you the support you need.

“But the issue is that such a large research project will require funding of at least tens of billions. Moreover, there’s no certainty that we will produce results either.

“All the time, money, and effort will be for naught if we fail. This isn’t something ordinary people can afford.”

The one who said this was a professor of Hoofmorn University’s digital information field. He had voiced out what almost everyone was thinking.

While it would be great news if someone was willing to fund their research, the issue was with just how large the research project would be. Not only was this a huge project that would cost a lot of money, but its chance of failure were extremely high too.

“I understand. Research isn’t easy and it’s filled with obstacles, after all. To be honest with you, I’ already prepared myself for failure before I made this decision.”

Jasper’s firm gaze swept over everyone in the meeting room before he continued decisively, “I’ll invest at least 20 billion within one year. In return, I want a team of the best technicians in the country who will research and domestically develop a stepper without fear of repercussions!”

20 billion!

The meeting room was in an uproar after they heard the figure.

While everyone seated in the room was an academic expert, they were still financially normal people who lived on a monthly salary. They might have made more money than other families, but their hearts still shook in excitement when faced with the prospect of 20 billion.

“20 billion. That’s enough to fill this meeting room, isn’t it?” Someone whispered.

While opinions flew about, Patrick turned to look at Jasper and asked, “Jasper, are you coming up with this funding yourself, or are there other financiers?”

Jasper replied, “JW will shoulder the full burden of the project. There will not be any other sources of funding, so I will be the only one in charge of the project.

“The research team will hold the highest priority within the entire company. All resources and funding will be prioritized for them and they are not to be interfered with by any administrative offices.”

Patrick arched his brow at what Jasper said. “Jasper, you have to think carefully. This is 20 billion. If the research fails...”

“If it fails, then JW will face the risk of going bankrupt,” Jasper finished Patrick’s sentence.

“Let me be frank with all of you. JW’s currently has a very tight cash flow, and while it won’t affect day-to-day operations of the business, suddenly taking up such an important research project will surely place the company in a severe financial crisis.”

Jasper pondered over his next words for a moment before he continued, “But as far as I’m concerned, companies are like men, and there are some things we should and should not do. No matter how difficult, if it’s something that should be done, then I’ll get it done as soon as possible. The current predicament JW is facing is an experience it has to undergo in order to grow.

“Mr. Laine, have you considered funding research after some time, perhaps once your company’s financial situation is stable and you have the funds comfortably available?” A macroeconomics professor asked

Jasper chuckled and replied, “Following the basic rules of economics, that would be the smart thing to do. But how long am I supposed to wait?”

“Time is of the essence, and we’ve already spent too long waiting about. There’s not much time left, so someone has to rush up there and seize the opportunity by the horns!

“If no one else is going to do it, then I will! JW will!”

There was still something Jasper had not said. If possible, he really did not want to tackle this project with the risk of JW going bankrupt and shutting down.

However, this was already the 2000s, and the age of smartphones was on the horizon. Apple’s first-generation smartphone was already in development.

If Jasper wanted a piece of the smartphone market pie in the future, then he had to hold on tight to its core technology and not let go.

More importantly, the stepper would lead to more than just the breakthrough of mobile phones. The stepper was a key component for cutting-edge production in the integrated circuit manufacturing field.

Any device relating to electronics, like computers, mobile phones, and high-end appliances, relied on the operation of an advanced integrated circuit. It would not be an exaggeration to claim that this circuit was of national importance.

This was also a major piece of technology in Jasper’s plan for his JW business empire. Hence, he could not afford to wait.

The longer he waited, the larger the gap between technology in and outside the country would grow. This would make it even more difficult to narrow the gap, much less surpass them.

However, these were not things he could say out loud.

Even so, Jasper was met with a thundering round of applause that resounded throughout the meeting room once he had finished speaking.

Regardless of his innermost thoughts, the experts and professors in the room had been impressed by Jasper's strong will and courage.

"Mr. Laine... you are indeed a promising man. Bold and patriotic!"

Life at the Top Chapter 1065

Jasper's negotiation before the forming of the partnership was a success.

The experts and professors then introduced themselves and exchanged name cards with him. Every single one of them, even those that had nothing to do with the project, was filled with confidence as they shook Jasper's hand.

After the meeting was over, Jasper returned to the dean's office alongside Patrick.

"Dorian, could you make us some tea?" Patrick was in a great mood. After instructing Dorian to make them tea, Patrick turned to tell Jasper kindly, "We'd be elated if there were more courageous and responsible youths like you in the country, Jasper."

Jasper waved his hand and smiled. "It's nothing much. I'm just doing what I think is right."

Patrick sighed and said, "These things that you consider as nothing much are almost impossible feats to many others."

"Please don't be too kind, Mr. Marshman, otherwise I won't know to bring up my small request." Jasper smiled.

Patrick had a great impression of Jasper by now, and he laughed and said, “Do tell. As long as it’s within my powers, then it won’t be an issue.”

Jasper replied, “What a coincidence, then. A word from you would actually solve this little issue of mine, Mr. Marshman.

“So basically, I have a distantly related sister. She...”

Jasper proceeded to tell him about Tiffany’s situation.

“She’s very hardworking and she loves to study. She’s talented as well, but her family conditions have been too harsh, and she has to take full responsibility for her brother’s expenses.

“What she lacks is an opportunity, which I was hoping Hoofmorn University could give to her.”

Patrick frowned slightly after he heard Jasper.

As a morally conscious individual, Patrick would never agree to anyone trying to enroll in his school through private connections. However, he could not help but consider this deeply since Jasper was the one who was requesting it.

“I don’t see why not. Compile her documents and send them to the admissions office. I still have two special offers on hand, and I can give one of them to her.”

After a short moment of thought, Patrick replied with a smile.

Jasper sighed in relief as well after he heard Patrick agree.

While Jasper did have other methods to achieve his goal, and he could always have just sent Tiffany to another university, resorting to those methods would only fracture his relationship with Patrick.

Patrick was a reasonable and suave man, so he did not put Jasper in an awkward position by declining.

After a dozen more minutes or so, Jasper received a phone call and got up to bid farewell.

Patrick shook Jasper's hand again after walking him to the office doors.

"Then I shall await your good news, Jasper," Patrick said seriously.

"Rest assured, Mr. Marshman. I'll send someone here tomorrow to sign the official framework agreement of our partnership.

"Of course, for confidentiality's sake, I do hope that Hoofmorn University will keep the specifics of our research project a secret from the outside world.

"Otherwise, the situation could potentially end badly. We might have to face a lot of unnecessary trouble if other countries got wind of this."

Patrick nodded and replied, "Don't worry. I'll make the necessary preparations on my end. That Tiffany girl you spoke of, perhaps you could bring her over in a few days. It would be difficult to arrange her for admission once the timeframe passes."

"Alright. Thank you for your trouble then, Mr. Marshman," Jasper thanked him sincerely.

With a chuckle, Patrick patted Jasper's shoulder affectionately and said, "Don't let me delay you from your work any longer, then. I'll see you off here."

After walking out of the administrative building, Jasper turned to tell Julian, "Jul, I'll have to trouble you to go back to Nauritus City and bring Tiffany over... She's never been out the city before, and I worry that she'll get lost the moment she leaves the house if I have her come on her own."

Julian replied with a smile, “Sure, Jasper. Then I’ll get going... Should I send you back to the hotel first?”

“No need. Go back immediately. The sooner you go, the sooner you get back. I can return to the hotel myself since it’s not too far—less than a twenty-minute ride if I hail a taxi.”

Jasper was in no rush to return after Julian left. Instead, he took the nearest subway to the beach.

Jasper strolled along the beach and stared out at the expansive view before him, filled with tourists.

Hiding in a sea of tourists, Jasper let himself be engulfed by all sorts of dialects as they expressed excitement and yearning for the bustling city life.

Jasper felt that it had been ages since he had lived the life of a normal person. He soon found a random stone platform and sat down on it before pulling his phone out to dial a number.

“I was dealing with something at Hoofmorn University just now, and so I couldn’t talk too much with you. Is something up?”

Henry’s voice then sounded from the other end of the line.

“You’re at Waterhoof City too?”

“What’s with this ‘too’ of yours? I thought you were pursuing love over at Swallow Capital?” Jasper joked.

“Don’t remind me. Jill’s not interested in me at all. I spent a few days there and watched her practice at her training center every day. Her coach and teammates don’t like me since I was there for so long, so I came back first.”

Henry replied despondently.

“You’ve got to take these things slow. Jill isn’t the kind of girl you can win over with money, and I doubt you’d cherish her if she was that easy,” Jasper consoled.

Henry snickered and replied, “You’re right about that. The more she ignores me, the more interested in her I become.”

“Cheap.”

Half an hour later, Henry found Jasper on the beach drinking a cup of bubble tea.

“You drink things like this?” Henry exclaimed in shock, as if this was the first time he was meeting Jasper.

“This is called living life. It’s not something sordid trust-fund children like you can understand. Anyway, what was so important that you had to rush over and tell me in person?” Jasper asked lazily.

Henry snickered before he answered, “Nothing much. I was meeting an old friend here in Waterhoof City, so I thought I’d share some intel when I found out you were here too.”

“Fabian’s been going to lots of places to cause you trouble lately. The sinister little sh*t wouldn’t challenge you directly, so he’s been silently contacting your enemies. It seems like he’s already found quite a few.

“My sources are definitely reliable, and I had to use my dad’s channels to understand exactly what he’s doing. You’ve got to be careful, or he’ll find everyone you’ve offended in the past to seek revenge against you at the same time. After all, you aren’t an easy opponent.”

Jasper frowned slightly and narrowed his eyes. “I remember receiving news before that Conrad’s left the country to relax.”

“You think Conrad and Fabian are in contact?” Henry asked.

Life at the Top Chapter 1066

At almost the same time, far away in Harbor City.

Conrad sat on a skerry at the Dammer Fishing Grounds with a fishing rod in his hands as he stared with focus at the fish maw that danced in the waves.

Waves smacked against the skerry and wet the leg of his pants, but the man remained frozen in place.

He had lived this lifestyle for around a week.

Behind him stood his confidant, Valentine.

“The tide us rising, Mr. Monty. We should return soon.”

Valentine told Conrad softly.

Conrad waved his off and replied, “I haven’t caught a single fish today, I can’t leave yet.”

Valentine sighed gently at how stubborn Conrad was.

“I don’t like seeing you like this, Mr. Monty, it feels wrong to me. I’d rather you vent about it,” Valentine said sincerely.

Conrad smiled and replied, “I know what you want to say, Valentine, but you worry too much. What is there for me to vent? Victories and losses are common in war, and it’s not the first time I’ve lost to Jasper anyway. After a few losses, you start to get used to it.

“Plus, I quite like the kind of life I’m living now. It doesn’t have any of that fighting and aggression, and a single fish brings me joy for a very long time.

“Father told me that I was being too hasty and that I should learn to calm down and have some patience. I didn’t understand him then, but now that I look at it, Father knew me too well. After these past few days of peace, I’ve finally realized where I went wrong.

Valentine opened his mouth to refute but did not make a sound.

He knew that there were some things someone of his status and identity could not say. He should never touch on the topic of the Monty’s father-son duo’s core interests.

“Mr. Monty, Mr. Atticus sent an invitation two days ago. Are we really not going to meet him?”

“After all, Mr. Atticus and we share a common enemy in Jasper, and we could potentially work together to defeat him. Not to mention that Mr. Atticus isn’t someone we can easily afford to offend,” Valentine brought up.

Conrad smiled and replied, “He’s in more of a rush than we are, so don’t worry. He’ll come and look for me. It’d be too cheap of me and unbecoming of my person to seek him out because of one single invitation.”

As if to prove Conrad right, a yacht sped toward them from not too far out in the sea soon after he finished talking.

The yacht’s destination was clear as it made a beeline for Conrad’s skerry. The yacht stopped around a few dozen meters away as a speedboat pulled out from behind the expensive-looking yacht.

The speedboat arrived before the skerry with a man standing atop it. He spoke to Conrad courteously, “Are you Mr. Conrad Monty?”

Conrad replied calmly, “I’m fishing.”

The man gave a small smile and said, “Mr. Atticus said that you’re welcome to go fishing on Mr. Atticus’ yacht if you wish, Mr. Monty. There are larger fish in deeper waters, and they’re easier to catch.”

Conrad arched a brow and answered, "Since Mr. Atticus is already here, then it would be disrespectful of me to not take his offer. Bring me over, then."

The speedboat pulled up to the skerry and Conrad got on. At the same time, Valentine made an instinctive move to follow.

Yet, the young man immediately raised his hand to halt him. His tone was polite but firm as he said, "My apologies, Mr. Atticus invited Mr. Monty alone."

Valentine looked at Conrad.

"Valentine, bring my fishing rod back first. It seems like today isn't a good day for fishing," Conrad told Valentine as he waved him off.

Then, he made way to the yacht alongside the young man on the speedboat.

On the third deck of the yacht that sat in international waters, Conrad found Fabian lying on a sofa.

The man wore nothing more than a pair of shorts, his top bare, oozing with an air of untamed fierceness. There was a woman in his arms and a few more surrounding him.

Fabian snapped his fingers when he saw Conrad walk up. "A handsome man from the Mainland is here, beautiful. Go give him a taste of our Miss Harbor Cities.

"I'll reward whoever works the hardest to earn a place in Mr. Monty's bed with 1 million Harbor Dollars."

At that, a few beauties immediately flocked to Conrad, surrounding him and using all their skills to seduce him.

"What if I carry all of them to bed, Mr. Atticus? Aren't you afraid I'll make you lose a large sum of money?" Conrad asked calmly.

Fabian laughed out loud and replied, "It's just money, and that's the last thing I lack. As long as we're happy, any amount of money is worth it."

Conrad soon went to sit on the sofa. He did not reject the ladies by his side, holding one in each arm while another peeled him fruits.

“I’ve had an endless supply of money ever since I was born. I didn’t even need to think of how to earn more, since the interest from putting just a small portion of it in the bank was enough to let me live comfortably for the rest of my life.

“For a person like me, what would differentiate me from a piece of trash if I didn’t know how to enjoy life?” Fabian laughed out loud as he kneaded the flesh of the girl in his arms.

Life at the Top Chapter 1067

Conrad chuckled and replied, “Of course. You’ve certainly got a better understanding of things than I do, Mr. Atticus.

“But what I hate most are eyesores that just keep blocking my view. The moment someone becomes an eyesore, I just feel the need to kill him.

“The more comfortable this person gets, the more uncomfortable I grow. Therefore, Mr. Monty, I’ll get straight to the point with you.”

Fabian then clapped his hands and the women around him, as well as the ones around Conrad, got up understandingly. They immediately left the third deck to play downstairs.

The third deck was instantly left vacant except for Conrad and Fabian.

Just then, Fabian plopped himself right next to Conrad and reached out to hook his arm around the other man's neck. He grinned as he said, "I want to get rid of Jasper and I know you do too. So, let's work together."

Conrad glanced at Fabian's arm around his shoulder and frowned slightly.

He was not used to having physical contact with others.

Fabian may seem brash, but he was actually a sensitive man. He immediately realized Conrad's discomfort.

However, he did not let go of Conrad. Instead, Fabian pulled him in tighter so that Conrad would have to lean into Fabian's chest unconsciously.

Fabian placed his mouth by Conrad's cheek and spoke casually, "Do you know what I love doing most?"

Conrad shook his head as a sign of him not knowing.

"I love doing what makes people unhappy."

Fabian laughed out loud. "I get a rush when you people look irked but can do nothing to stop me!"

Conrad commented expressionlessly, "You've got quite the unique tastes, Mr. Atticus."

Fabian's smile fell and he let go of Conrad's neck. He got up and spread his arms wide, facing the open sea as he said.

"Look at this yacht underneath my feet. How much do you think it costs?"

“50 million, whilst maintenance alone costs 4 million. There are tons of expenses similar to this, but don’t we live for the rush—the thrill—in life? If we didn’t, it’d be a waste of such a great life we’ve been blessed with.”

The corner of Conrad’s mouth twitched. While everything Fabian said was morally wrong, Conrad had to admit that the other made some sense.

“That’s why we have to have fun with life, and it’s also why anyone that stands in our path deserves to die,” Fabian said, his expression hardening.

Conrad looked up at Fabian and asked with a frown, “I’m curious, Mr. Atticus. Why do you feel the need to get rid of Jasper? From what I know, you two have never even met before.”

Fabian chuckled and replied, “I just don’t like the surname ‘Laine’. Is this reason enough for you?”

Conrad replied calmly, “It’s alright if you don’t want to tell me why, Mr. Atticus.”

“Conrad,” Fabian’s smile vanished as he said indifferently, “Of all of Jasper’s enemies that I’ve won over, you’re the one I admire the most. Because of this, I can tell you one of the reasons. Anna Law, understand?”

Conrad was stunned for a moment before he nodded. “Because of a woman, I understand.”

“There are countless beauties in Harbor City, all so pretty, so dignified, and with such great figures. They can all be yours as long as you’re rich, but there’s only one Anna, and I’ve loved her for a whole decade!” Fabian’s gaze turned sinister and cold.

“I spent all of last year overseas but when I came back, Jasper that little sh*t actually got into an amorous relationship with Anna. So tell me, does he deserve to die or not?”

Conrad replied calmly, "He deserves it."

A bright and warm smile instantly returned to Fabian's face. The stark contrast between the two expressions would have given people the impression that Fabian was crazy.

"Alright, that's enough nonsense with you. Have as much fun here in Harbor City as you want. Eat, drink and play. I'll show you a luxurious life of pleasure you can never experience in the Mainland."

Fabian patted Conrad's shoulder intimately and continued, "But you're going to have to start working for me once you get back. I'm a nice employer. Do your part well and I will reward you generously."

Conrad frowned slightly and replied, "You misunderstand, Mr. Atticus. I'm currently..."

"Misunderstand what?" Fabian interrupted Conrad coldly.

"Are you telling me that you've surrendered to Jasper or that I'm unreliable?"

Conrad swallowed his words of rejection. He knew that if he angered Fabian now, the man would have no qualms throwing him directly into the ocean.

Fabian would also not be held responsible for anything either.

"Most of the Teo Chamber of Commerce are my men, and they're about to deal with Jasper.

"How hilarious, that despite being thrown out as a forsaken pawn, Jasper still decided to jump back in because he thought he'd be owed a favor."

Fabian picked up a glass of red wine and swirled its contents slowly. Infinite confidence shone in his eyes.

“I’m sure Gale, that old sly man, would know who to choose between the Atticus family and Jasper.

“Hahaha. Jasper’s is said to never have lost a single time ever since he started his business, but this is a setup I planned myself, and I’d like to see first-hand how tragically he loses.”

Conrad frowned slightly at Fabian’s words.

“But doing so would only bruise his self-esteem at most. What else would it do?”

Fabian laughed out loud when he heard this and slowly answered, “Here’s what you don’t understand. When it comes to people like Jasper, you attack his confidence first. The moment he has a taste of failure, he’ll lose all the composure he’s accumulated through his many wins. That’s when we make our move.”

Life at the Top Chapter 1068

“Have you seen whalers at sea?”

Fabian patted Conrad’s shoulder and continued meaningfully, “Whalers first find the whale, then follow it until it grows tired. They attack the moment it gets distracted.

“Whalers only get one chance to attack, because the moment they fail, an irked whale will capsize the entire boat and flee into the deep waters.

“We’re like whalers. The moment we attack, we aim to kill.

“I know of the processes and plans that you’ve used against Jasper before. You made the mistake of being too careful with all sorts of buildup and traps, but they all proved to be useless. Rather, you’ve only caused him to be wary of you.

“Hence, there are only two steps to my attack. The first, I hit his confidence hard. Then, I’ll follow it with the ultimate move right after. After all that, it’ll be time for us to taste the fruits of victory.”

Conrad fell deep in thought when he heard Fabian.

After a long while, he nodded. “Perhaps you’re right.”

“Then I look forward to working with you, hahaha.”

...

Waterhoof City, at the beach.

Jasper frowned as he aimlessly walked along the landscape route with Henry following beside him blankly.

The latter would glance at Jasper from time to time, yet, Henry did not disturb him when he saw that the other was still thinking.

He was used to Jasper’s occasional strange expressions, since the man always managed to find a lead within a messy haystack of clues. This was something Henry could never come up with no matter how hard he wracked his brain.

“Henry, did Fabian leave Harbor City recently?” Jasper asked.

“I don’t think so.”

“This is the first time I’ve seen you so cautious about someone. Does he worry you?” Henry joked.

Henry had always thought that Jasper would be able to solve any complicated issue or person easily from how the latter always acted. However, this was the first time Henry had seen such a conflicted expression on Jasper’s face.

“Do I look like a god to you?”

Jasper glared at Henry. "The last thing this world lacks are capable people. If I can't understand that, then death is right around the corner.

"I may never have met Fabian, but do you know what he reminds me of?"

Henry shook his head. As a qualified supporter, he asked cooperatively, "What does he remind you of?"

"A venomous snake."

Jasper narrowed his eyes and stated heavily.

"Hidden in the dark and rarely attacking. However, the moment he does, it's done with tremendous power!

"If I don't make the proper preparations, I'll likely die from just one bite. To be frank with you, I really don't want to be targeted by someone like him if possible."

Henry was stunned for a moment. Even so, he must have thought of something as he suddenly laughed out loud. "You got that right. This man really is a venomous snake that will go to any lengths to get what he wants."

Jasper placed both his hands on the railing and stared at the steady flow of Harpoon River. "We already know that Fabian's contacting my past enemies and they're going to team up to attack me.

"But other than that, we have no idea when, in what way they plan to attack, or even who exactly Fabian has contacted. We have too little leads to derive any useful information.

"Hence, there's nothing we can do now but wait. We can't make our move until we've got more information."

"The worst-case scenario is that we are forced to take everything he prepared head-on unprepared."

Henry could also sense the severity of the situation and spoke up whilst standing beside Jasper, "Aren't we playing a very passive role, then?"

“There’s nothing we can do about that. After all, they know everything about us, but we know nothing of them. It’s not like we can run over to Harbor City to ask them what their plans are either.”

Henry was overjoyed when he heard Jasper’s suggestion. “I don’t see why not.”

Jasper waved him off and replied happily, “We’ll take this one step at a time. It’s unrealistic to overthink this.”

Seeing Henry’s blank and careless expression, Jasper suddenly said, “There’s going to be an asset forum conference in two days. Do you want to come with?”

“What’s the point of those conferences anyway? They’re so boring. Just a group of crafty old people trying to get rid of each other, while each smiling brighter than the last as they show off.” Henry pouted.

“Boring? Other conferences might be boring, but I promise that this one won’t be.

“Are you coming or not? I’ll give you the identity of a special guest if you are.”

Henry nodded and replied, “Sure. Not like there’s anything I need to do in two day’s time anyway. I sure hope some stupid f*cker appear so I can bully him.”

Jasper thought back to Dudley, whom he had met today, and chuckled. “There might just be one.”

Henry’s eyes lit up and he asked, “Can I f*ck with him if one appears?”

“Go wild.”

Jasper patted Henry on the shoulders. “This is one of the reasons why I invited you. You’re the best when it comes to being as cruel as possible, and I’ll also need you to test out their reactions to some things. If all goes according to plan, we might be able to prove quite a lot.”

“Alright. Don’t tell me all this as I won’t understand you anyway. But if I can screw with someone then that’s good enough. I’ve never stepped over any trust-fund children here in Waterhoof City before, so I wonder how it feels. Hahaha.”

“He’s from the Teo Chamber of Commerce, not Waterhoof City.”

“Doesn’t matter! They’re all the same to me.”

Life at the Top Chapter 1069

That midnight, Julian had quickly driven between Nauritus City and Waterhoof City twice.

It was in the early morning when Tiffany and Julian arrived at Waterhoof City.

The two did not disturb Jasper, who was already resting. Julian immediately checked Tiffany into a hotel room before he went to rest.

The next morning, Jasper saw Tiffany in the hotel.

“How are you feeling? Was it tiring traveling all day yesterday?” Jasper asked.

Tiffany shook her head and replied cautiously, “Not at all. It’s just that Waterhoof City is flourishing with life. I even saw a few foreigners when I arrived at the hotel yesterday.”

“Of course it’s flourishing—it’s the largest financial center in the country.

“This is a five-star hotel so it won’t be weird to see foreigners here. Foreigners are also people like us, and there are also scums and failures among them. Therefore, there’s no need to treat them with extra respect just because they’re foreigners, understand?” Jasper taught her.

Tiffany did come from a small village after all, and this was the first time she had been to such a large city like Waterhoof City. She was only doing fine now because she had Jasper watching out for her.

Unfortunately, Jasper could not stay in Waterhoof City forever while Tiffany had to spend four years of university here. Hence, Jasper had to shape her understanding of values and worldviews now in case this innocent lady ended up being scammed by someone in the future.

Tiffany nodded vigorously and replied, "Alright, I'll remember that!"

"Let's go eat breakfast, then I'll bring you to the department store for new clothes before I send you to school," Jasper said.

Tiffany quickly replied, "I brought clothes."

Then she asked embarrassedly, "Or are my clothes too reflective of my poverty?"

"Tiffany."

Jasper sighed slightly and sat by Tiffany's side. He spoke gently, "I think there's a huge problem with you right now, and that's your mindset of inferiority.

"You keep thinking of how poor and broke you are, and how you haven't seen the world. Because of this, you have no courage in anything you say and do, which isn't a good thing.

"You need to be more confident, you have to believe that your state of poverty is only temporary. I can't say that your poverty means nothing, but the truth with society is that the wealthier you are, the more respected you will become. Sayings about how poor and rich people are the same are lies people tell their children.

"But you have to remember that what differentiates a good person from another is their morals and their capabilities. Not their bank balance, the brand of clothes they wear, or the kind of car they drive."

Tiffany looked at Jasper intently after she heard him speak. A long while later, she nodded slowly and said, "I'll do my best to rectify that, Jasper."

"Good. Now let's go eat breakfast."

Jasper ruffled the top of Tiffany's head with a smile. After he did this, Jasper quickly realized how overly affectionate his actions were and that he might have crossed some boundaries.

After all, Tiffany was not Wendy nor was she a child. Such an act was inappropriate between adults unless they were a couple or biological siblings.

Tiffany seemed shy but her eyes shone with more elation than aversion.

After they ate at the buffet, Jasper then brought Tiffany to shop for clothes at a department store nearby.

Henry joined as well since he had nothing better to do, while Julian left to carry out the task Jasper had entrusted him with.

Jasper did not know much about female clothing brands, but this was the year 2000 and only high-end brands could secure a lot in Waterhoof City's large department stores.

Life at the Top Chapter 1070

Tiffany's figure and appearance had already surpassed most girls; she was just rather lacking in the confidence department. However, this did not stop her from bringing out the beauty of most clothes she tried out.

Thus came the scene every salesperson in the department store was envious of.

Tiffany kept taking clothes that the salesperson, Jasper, or even Henry picked out for her to try on. Jasper did not comment on whether the clothes looked nice or not when she tried them on, so she tried them one after another.

After some time, Jasper turned to the salesperson while Tiffany returned to the changing room and said, "I'll buy all the clothes she tried on just now."

The salesperson widened their eyes in shock. "These... sir, these clothes aren't cheap..."

There was no novel-like scene where the salesperson looked down on Jasper, while the man's attitude remained kind and warm toward the store staff as well. He said with a smile, "I know. Please package them up for me, I'll take all of them."

The salesperson's eyes grew starry and they quickly went to pack the clothes and print out an invoice.

Just then, Tiffany came out to see dozens of clothes on the counter and quickly pulled on Jasper's sleeve to stop him.

"Jasper, I saw the price tags on them and each of them costs a few thousand. Let's not."

Before Jasper could speak, Henry piped up first.

"A few thousand only? Seriously, silly lady, you have no idea how rich this man in front of you is, do you? If you're talking about making money, this man earned more than a million in interest alone during the time he spent shopping for clothes with you."

The salesperson's hand shook by the side as they typed out the invoice. Their hearts were about to jump out of their chest.

As a salesperson in a department store, they had seen all sorts of people. Among them were quite a few business owners who brought their lady friends out to shop. However, it was rare to see someone rich enough to buy tens of thousands worth of clothing while remaining so unfazed.

After all, the monthly income of people working in Waterhoof City was a little more than a thousand.

This purchase was enough to support an ordinary household of two for two years.

Jasper took the invoice and told Tiffany, "Wait for me here, I'll go get the bill."

"Okay," Tiffany replied softly.

She looked at the large pile of clothes beside her with a frown and began to think about the few ten thousand she 'owed' Jasper this time... She felt lost, seeing how she was beginning to owe him more and more money.

There was normally a specialized common counter for payment when buying things in a large department store. All bills from the department store tended to be paid there instead of at the individual shop.

Jasper took the invoice and walked out of the shop with Henry in tow so he could swipe his card and pay for the clothes at the counter not too far away.

“Hey, are you interested in that lady? She’s pretty pure, and cute too.” Henry nudged Jasper with his elbow and snickered.

“You’re not afraid that Anna’s going to fly over and cut the both of us down with an axe?” Jasper said without looking up at him.

Henry’s expression hardened. “This has nothing to do with me. My job is just to monitor and make sure you don’t flirt around and hurt my sister. She already said that an opponent like Wendy has caused her enough of a headache.”

Jasper’s hand paused while he looked down, about to sign the receipt. “What else did she say?”

“You wanna know? Bribe your future brother-in-law then,” Henry said gleefully.

He had just finished speaking when a sharp cry sounded from the clothing shop behind them, followed by the sound of a woman’s piercing scolding.

“Where did this country bumpkin come from? Are you blind or what? Do you even know how expensive my clothes are? Can you even compensate me after dirtying it? Cheap sh*t!”

Life at the Top Chapter 1071

“I’m, I’m sorry, I didn’t mean it. Sorry...”

“What’s the use apologizing? Just look at how poor you are, you village girl. Who gave you the right to come to high-end places like this? What’s with this department store anyway? How can you let cheap and inferior people in?”

“I’m sorry, I really didn’t mean it. I... I can have it cleaned if you want?”

“Have it cleaned? Seriously, you really are a village girl that knows nothing of the world! Do you know that expensive clothing these can’t be washed? It has to be sent to professional places for maintenance, with each round costing a few hundred bucks! Can you even afford that?”

A few salespeople stood awkwardly by the side.

The man and woman stood arrogantly in the middle of the shop. There was an obvious patch on the alluringly dressed woman’s cashmere top as well as a cup of spilled coffee by her leg.

Tiffany was flushed and her eyes filled with fear and tears as she stood in front of the woman and apologized profusely.

Just then, Jasper and Henry walked into the shop.

The moment Tiffany saw Jasper, it was like she spotted her hero. All the fright and unjust she had bottled up immediately flowed from her eyes.

Anger flared between Jasper’s furrowed brows when he saw the lady trembling as she hid by his side and cried unjustly. Jasper looked up at the couple.

The man beside the woman had spotted Jasper by now, and he shouted instinctively. His expression was sinister and cruel.

This man was none other than Dudley, whom Jasper had taught a lesson to the day before.

Dudley had not expected to meet a nemesis like Jasper when he had come to buy clothes with his new sex friend. Countless ruthless plans he had thought of the night before surfaced in his mind as he glared at Jasper, wanting nothing more than to rip the man's flesh from his bones.

Dudley was much more confident when he saw that beside Jasper stood an unfamiliar young man instead of Julian, who had previously left a terrifying impression on him.

"Son of a b*tch, I was just getting frustrated thinking about where to find you when you served yourself to me on a silver platter!" Dudley stared at Jasper resentfully.

Henry arched a brow when he heard him, smelling the familiar scent of an idiot with a death wish. His gaze slightly deadly dangerous as he looked at Dudley.

Young Master Law loved brainless trust-fund children like this the most.

This man seemed like a pure imbecile and the perfect person to step over.

"Looks like your mouths healed," Jasper said calmly, causing Dudley's expression to immediately sour.

Jasper then ignored Dudley and turned to Tiffany. "What happened?"

Tiffany replied softly, "I was standing there waiting for you when she knocked me from behind."

Tiffany pointed at the woman by Dudley's side and continued, "She had a cup of coffee in her hands so knocking into me caused the coffee to splash and dirty her clothes."

"I already apologized but she was very angry and didn't want to accept my apology."

"Since she's the one that knocked into you, then you don't have to apologize for anything," Jasper said.

Tiffany looked down and fumbled with her fingers. "But... but I don't want to cause trouble."

“It’s good that you don’t want to cause trouble, but if they’re bullying you, then there’s no need to keep giving in. Many people in the world will only take advantage of that.”

Jasper’s words completely irked the woman by Dudley’s side. She shrieked, “Stupid girl! You think you’re so powerful now because someone came to help you, huh?”

“You’re implying that I knocked into you?! Take a look at how poor you are, I’d feel tainted just touching you, so why would I knock into you, huh?!”

Jasper glanced at a salesperson and asked gently, “Excuse me, but who knocked into who just now?”

The salesperson looked conflicted, but she cautiously glanced at the infuriated woman.

While she had not answered outright, her actions had indicated enough.

The woman pointed at the salesperson angrily and said, “Do you want to get fired?! Why are you looking at me, huh?! Are you saying that I made a mistake?”

“Will you shut up?!” Jasper suddenly shouted.

The woman was shocked by Jasper’s roar, and she looked at Jasper dazedly, falling silent for a long while.

“Ignoring the fact that you were the one who knocked into her, even if she had knocked into you, she already apologized. I’ll compensate for how much your top cost but was there the need to embarrass a little lady?”

“All you know is to call her a stupid girl and a poor and cheap person, but how much do you think you’re worth?”

The woman paled at Jasper’s words and she turned to pull Dudley’s sleeve while wailing, “Look at him, Dudley, he’s bullying me. You’ve got to help me.”

Dudley patted the woman’s hand and stared at Jasper, scoffing. “I was going to get rid of him even if this didn’t happen today.”

Dudley then walked toward Jasper and sneered. "Enough with all these grandiose words, Laine. How do you want to deal with this matter today? Tell me."

"Easy, have that woman next to you apologize to her," Jasper replied coldly.

Dudley reacted as if he had heard a large joke and replied exaggeratingly, "Are you f*cking crazy? You want my woman to apologize to the b*tch next to you? I'll f*cking kill you two, b*tch and b*stard!"

"Pfft."

Henry could not help but laugh.

Henry turned to Jasper in excitement and asked, "Which huge businessman or high-ranking official is this stupid f*cker's dad? How can he be so f*cking dumb?"

When he heard this, Dudley was utterly infuriated.

"This has nothing to do with you, you little sh*t, so you best shut up. Don't you know that being careless with your words will get you trouble? Don't end up offending people you can't afford to, or it'll soon be too late to cry about it."

Henry was in awe. "Damn, you know how to use proverbial sayings?"

Henry still had a stunned expression on his face the second before his expression suddenly darkened. His expression was dark and devilish as the man raised his hand to slap Dudley across his left cheek.

The slap rang out clearly, stunning everyone present.

Dudley staggered from the force of the slap and almost fell onto the floor.

"Motherf*cker!"

"I'm always the one that threatens others, so who the f*ck do you think you are to talk to me like that?"

“Think well and give me the name of the most powerful elder in your family. If it’s not powerful enough, then you’re screwed, you moron!”

Life at the Top Chapter 1072

Every word and punctuation in his sentence was filled with presumptuous arrogance.

This was Henry’s true form.

As the most powerful trust-fund child in the country, Henry did not pay respect to anyone but the Law family and Jasper when he was angered.

The words and the slap stunned Dudley.

He cupped his face and paled in anger.

As a trust-fund child himself, he had never been trampled over. He immediately roared, “Who the f*ck are you?! Give me your name, I dare you! F*ck you!”

“F*ck me?”

Henry smiled wretchedly.

“The name’s Law, from Harbor City. How about you f*ck me yourself if you’re so powerful?”

Dudley spat out a mouthful of foam. “Law? Your motherf*cking bullsh*t, I’ve never heard that name before! So what if you’re from Harbor City? This is the f*cking Mainland, not Harbor City which so small that the entire City can hear you when you cough.

“Even a dragon listens to my call here!

“I’ll f*cking remember this slap and I’ll make you pay for it tenfold!”

Without another word, Henry raised his right fist and punched Dudley in the stomach.

This was not a light punch.

Henry won during in his amateur fights with three to five people, so an unfit trust-fund child like Dudley was no match for him.

Dudley did not even have the time to avoid the punch so he took the full brunt of it. He curled over like a cooked prawn and heaved as he laid on the floor, his eyes and mouth wide open.

That was not all, for Henry then lifted his leg to step on Dudley's head as he laid on the floor. Dudley almost ended up crawling on the ground.

"To be honest, I love people like you the most. All you spout is nonsense. You're stupid, and you know jack sh*t. All the other f*ckers who understand the natural order of things surrender the moment they hear that my family name's Law. It's not fun beating them up at all, but you, you're good. You can still spout sh*t."

"F*ck you!"

Dudley immediately erupted after all the humiliation he had been forced to endure. He flipped around to throw off Henry's foot before he got up to pounce on Henry.

Henry scoffed and slapped Dudley's right cheek with the back of his hand as the man pounced.

Dudley's face lost its shape from the force of the slap, and he spat out a small mouthful of bloodied foam. With a bloated face, he roared, "How f*cking dare you slap me again?!"

At that moment, the woman following Dudley was terrified and she shrieked. She ran out of the store and shouted, "Help! Someone come help! They're killing people in here!"

At that, half the department store was cast into motion.

The few bodyguards accompanying Dudley rushed over from their previous positions by the elevators.

Dudley let out a sigh of relief when he saw this. Thank goodness his sex friend was not completely useless.

After Jasper taught him a lesson yesterday, Dudley did not forget to have his bodyguards follow him whenever he walked out thereafter. He only had the bodyguards wait outside because he was buying clothes for the woman today.

Seeing his bodyguards run over, Dudley pointed at Jasper and Henry resentfully and roared, "Hit them! Beat them up! I don't care if you kill them, I'll take responsibility for that!"

At that, the few bodyguards looked at Jasper and Henry fiercely.

"Hide behind me," Jasper told Tiffany calmly.

Tiffany had never seen such a sight before, and in utter nervousness, she suddenly did something no one had expected.

She mustered up the courage to step in front of Jasper and spoke loudly, "I won't let you hit Jasper! If you want to hit, hit me!"

That sight had Henry, who was focused, solemn, and ready to fight, almost breaking out of character and laughing.

Life at the Top Chapter 1073

Jasper did not know whether to laugh or cry at the sight of this.

He was shocked but also touched.

Not every girl could be so brave.

This had at least proven that he had not treated Tiffany well for nothing. She was a good lady that knew how to repay someone's kindness.

“What use is there standing in front of me, silly girl? This is an issue between men.”

Jasper pulled Tiffany to stand behind him. Turning his head, he grabbed a shirt from a mannequin by the side and ripped it into two halves.

He passed Henry one half and wrapped his half around his right hand so that it functioned as a simple boxing glove.

“F*cking hell, what are you doing just standing there? Go on! I’ll give each of you 5000! Anyone who doesn’t hit hard gets fired immediately!” Dudley roared in anger.

The few bodyguards shared a look as they rushed toward Jasper and Henry without further thought.

The fight began immediately.

The four bodyguards were well-trained and professional. It was evident from the way they fought that they actually knew how to fight and were more than just men who looked like they fit the part.

They split work among themselves clearly, two of them against one of Jasper or Henry, separating the two immediately.

Henry was fine. He landed a few punches and immediately struck back when punches landed on him.

Jasper, however, was not a novel’s male protagonist who happened to be a great fighter, so he immediately began to wane against two professional bodyguards alone.

Tiffany felt her heart lurch when she saw a bodyguard push Jasper, causing the man to stagger two steps backward.

She turned her head and looked around until she saw a fire cabinet at the entrance of the store.

She summed up all the courage in her life and ran straight to the fire cabinet. She opened it and pulled out a fire axe with difficulty. Then, she turned and rushed to Dudley without another word.

Dudley was still laughing gleefully the second before.

“This is what you two get for being arrogant you f*ckers! F*cking hell, I’ll crush you two to dust or I’ll change my damn surname!”

Just then, he heard the terrified shout of the woman beside him. His eyes locked on what was Tiffany’s tiny figure less than five meters away, running toward him with a fire axe.

“I’ll kill you for asking someone to attack Jasper!”

This lady that could only apologize vigorously and endure mistreatment when she was getting bullied had completely let go of all inhibitions. She was currently running toward Dudley without hesitation and a fire axe in hand, ready to swing it at his head.

If she swung it, Dudley would surely lose his life today.

Dudley screamed in extreme fear and he took an instinctive step backward. Only to knock into the woman who had by now jumped behind his figure, using him as her shield.

Dudley did not have the time to scream profanities when he tripped and fell on the floor.

Still, Tiffany was just a puny lady. She only had the strength to raise the fire axe, but she could not control its trajectory. Dudley stepped backward, fell, and Tiffany closed her eyes as she swung the axe down.

It fell with a loud boom...

Dudley sat on the floor, his legs spread open and the fire axe lodged right between them. It landed a few inches away from his vitals.

Had Tiffany stretched out her arms, Dudley would have lost his chance for children forever.

Under immense terror, Dudley paled and shook uncontrollably.

Before relief could flood him, he felt his butt heat up and a warm gush of liquid leak out from under him.

Everyone was shocked when they saw the pungent yellow puddle.

Dudley had peed himself in fear.

Life at the Top Chapter 1074

The sudden turn of events immediately quieted the messy scene.

Forget everyone else, even Jasper's eyes were widened, and that terrified Tiffany.

Had it landed anywhere else, then today would become much more interesting.

Tiffany stood blankly as she stared at the axe in her hands as well as the disgusting liquid flowing around the axe head. The courage Tiffany had mustered up completely disappeared and she let go of the axe as if she was electrocuted. Then, she immediately dashed to hide behind Jasper.

“Good job!”

Henry was panting from laughter and he gave a flushed-red Tiffany a thumbs up. Young Master Law was extremely intrigued by the fierce side of this seemingly cowardly lady had.

Dudley, the victim, paled in shock and had yet to realize what had happened.

“F*ck. motherf*cker. F*cking hell!”

Dudley was both terrified and angry. He felt like he had been utterly humiliated and he did not have the will to meet anyone’s gaze anymore.

Just then, the woman who had hid behind him ran out and screamed, “Ah! Mr. Ball, you, you peed yourself?”

The woman, who had a knack for bringing up things she should not have, immediately fell silent when she saw Dudley’s dark expression.

“F*ck you, you stupid b*tch!”

Dudley slapped the woman, which had her immediately falling to the floor. He scolded, “I wouldn’t have fallen on the floor if you didn’t stand behind and block me, you stupid b*tch!”

“You hid quickly once things took a turn for the worse! How dare you take me for your shield?!”

In a fit of anger, Dudley vented everything he felt onto this woman. He even stepped on her a few times and as she shouted out in agony, Then, Dudley suddenly turned his head.

His dark and devouring gaze drilled into Tiffany as the latter stood beside Jasper.

Tiffany was terrified and she grabbed Jasper's clothes. She hid half her body behind the man, trembling slightly.

"It's okay."

Jasper comforted, meeting Dudley's gaze as he asked, "Do you want to continue?"

No matter how shameless Dudley was, there was no way he would continue to trouble Jasper with a wet patch between his legs.

Upset and furious, Dudley felt the weird gazes from the onlooking crowd pinned onto him. This made the man's pale-from-infuriation complexion turn fuchsia.

"Just you wait!"

Dudley roared pitifully as he glared at Jasper and the other two with utter hatred. Then, he ran out of the store whilst surrounded by his bodyguards.

Henry narrowed his eyes and made a move to follow.

Henry had never been a man deterred by threats.

However, Jasper immediately pulled him back after he took his first step.

"Let's stop here. He's going to fight with everything he has if you run after him," Jasper explained.

Henry pouted and said uncaringly, "So what? As if I'm afraid of him. At the end of the day, he's going to be the one that risked his life while I come out completely unscathed."

"I know you're strong, but we'll have more chances in the future. How're we supposed to play if we drive him insane now?" Jasper said intently.

Henry arched a brow and calmed down. He asked interestedly, “You mean the forum?”

“Yo, I see you’ve grown smarter, hmm?” Jasper stated in shock.

Henry immediately replied proudly, “Of course. People improve all the time. You invited me to go to some forum before and you promised me some fun. Now you’re telling me we’re going to play, so when else could you mean but then?”

Life at the Top Chapter 1075

“Not bad. But we’re going to deal with more than just Dudley by then. He’s still just a trust-fund child with no respect and won’t be shown off in public settings like this. It’s his elders that are difficult to deal with,” Jasper said.

“So what? If that old man knows what’s good for him, fine. If he doesn’t, then I’ll beat both father and son up!”

Jasper and Henry brought Tiffany away as they spoke, leaving the woman Dudley had aggressively beaten up to squat and wail on the floor. Even so, no one looked her in the eye.

At the same time, Dudley ran into the car surrounded by his four bodyguards. He had just sat down when he felt something cold under his butt.

The damp and chilly feeling was accompanied by something smelly, causing him to feel like he was about to go mad.

One of the bodyguards by his side had a frozen expression on his face as Dudley suddenly slapped the bodyguard in rage.

“Are you f*cking complaining that I’m smelly?”

“I would never, Mr. Ball.”

While the bodyguard was very much capable of ending Dudley’s life with one hand, he had no other choice but to lower his head and apologize. A clear handprint appeared on his cheek, but he still did not dare to fight back.

Dudley said icily, “I wouldn’t have to be so humiliated if you few trashbags were capable of protecting me!”

Dudley felt the urge to kill everyone who knew of the incident once he thought back to how he was almost forcibly castrated and had peed his pants in public.

“We’re going back!” Dudley growled, frustrated and furious.

The car quickly started moving as it left the department store.

Dudley pulled out his phone to make a call in the car. Once it connected, he began to wail, “Dad, someone almost killed me today!”

...

While an unexpected incident did occur, it did not affect Jasper’s schedule too badly.

After helping Tiffany get her clothes and a few other daily necessities, Jasper and Henry brought her to Hoofmorn University.

This was her first time arriving at one of the best academies in the country. Tiffany knew that she was going to have to spend the next few years here, so she looked around curiously.

Jasper was relieved to see that Tiffany was starting to grow more confident. She no longer looked fearful and inferior.

“Ah, university girls sure look pure and innocent.”

Henry suddenly spoke beside them, completely ruining the atmosphere.

“Thinking back to when I studied abroad, there was never anyone wherever I went. I don’t know why, but it’s like everyone was trying to run as fast as they can when they saw me coming, like I was a ghost or something,” Henry said unhappily.

“Because you’re annoying,” Jasper concluded with three words.

Henry rolled his eyes and said, “You guys do what you need, I’ll go flirt with university girls.”

“Don’t cause trouble,” Jasper said to Henry’s disappearing figure.

The latter waved Jasper off while turning around, vanishing a moment later.

“Who is he, Jasper?” Tiffany asked as she stared at Henry’s back.

“The most powerful trust-fund child in the country,” Jasper replied casually as he walked Tiffany to the administrative building.

“Trust-fund child? I thought that was a derogatory term?” Tiffany asked in shock.

“Depends on who you’re describing. For him, it’s a neutral adjective. He’s not bad.” Jasper smiled.

The two arrived at the administrative building as they spoke.

From afar, Jasper saw Dorian jog over with a familiar and polite smile. Jasper immediately shook Dorian’s hand and said, “Thank you for the trouble today, Mr. Clem.”

Life at the Top Chapter 1076

With Mr. Clem's help, and Mr. Marshman's promise as the Dean of Hoofmorn University, Tiffany's admission papers were quickly processed.

Almost no time was wasted as Mr. Clem took Tiffany's documents and went to the relevant departments to finalize her admission.

All while Jasper and Tiffany sat in the lounge. Half an hour later, Mr. Clem returned with a stack of materials in his hand.

"It's done. As a special recruit freshman in Civil and Commercial Law in our Law Department, you will study full-time for four years, Tiffany. Your diploma will be the same as the other students who enrolled via the traditional entrance exams.

"Should you wish, you can also take the postgraduate entrance exam for further studies."

Dorian smiled as he told Tiffany, "Welcome to Hoofmorn University, freshman."

Tiffany was respectful and understanding, so she immediately bowed to Dorian once she heard the man's words. "Thank you for your trouble, Mr. Clem."

Mr. Clem smiled widely. He could tell that Jasper cared for Tiffany after this series of events. He did not know what relationship the two shared, but that did not matter to him.

As long as Jasper was Hoofmorn University's partner, then there was nothing wrong with these 'privileges'.

“Not at all. This is my name card, you’re free to look for me if there’s anything you don’t understand in school.

“The lecturer arranged to head your tutorial class is in a lecture right now, so I’ll bring you to meet him after he’s done later. Most of your time here in school will be spent with these lecturer and other classmates,” Dorian said.

Tiffany took the name card with both hands and replied with pursed lips, “Okay, I understand. Thank you, Mr. Clem.”

Jasper got up and shook Dorian’s hand with a smile. “I’ll have to trouble you to help Tiffany from time to time, Mr. Clem.

“I’m not always free, nor will I always be in Waterhoof City. Tiffany’s studying all alone here in Waterhoof City, so I’ll have Tiffany see you as an older brother to turn to. I’ll put her in your care.”

Dorian quickly replied, “It’s no trouble at all. I’m very happy to help.”

Mr. Marshman was in a meeting, so Jasper did not go to visit the man. After processing Tiffany’s admission, Jasper and Tiffany followed Mr. Clem as they arrived at Tiffany’s assigned dorm.

“Tiffany, our school provides single dorms. Are you sure you don’t want them?” Dorian asked.

“No, thank you. Jasper told me that I should socialize more, and I like making friends too,” Tiffany replied softly.

Dorian nodded, feeling that Tiffany was indeed an understanding child.

After they settled Tiffany in, Jasper then pulled out a bank card and placed it into Tiffany’s hand.

“I’ve already pre-deposited your living expenses in this card, and there are many ATMs on campus. Use it when you have to—there’s no need to be frugal. This bit of money doesn’t matter much to me.

“I sent you to school so you can study, so don’t starve yourself of things and experiences just because you’re unwilling to spend the money.”

Jasper reminded, fully aware Tiffany's character.

Tiffany pursed her lips but did not reject it. She took the bank card and looked down as she said, "Thank you, Jasper."

"There's no need to thank me for this," Jasper huffed a laugh, "I'll be going, then. Look for Mr. Clem if you need anything. You can come talk to me too, as I'll come and visit you from time to time. If you're free, you can also go back to Nauritus City to visit your big sis Schuler."

Tiffany nodded heavily as she watched Jasper and Mr. Clem leave.

Life at the Top Chapter 1077

Tiffany sighed slightly as she watched Jasper leave with his head held high while Mr. Clem followed with the slight desire to please on his face. An indescribable feeling surfaced in her innocent and pure heart.

Jasper and Dorian spoke happily among themselves as they exited the dormitory. The two men ignored the woman running the female dorms as they walked out openly, garnering the attention of many female students.

Some of them had even recognized Mr. Clem and were immediately stunned. Why would the dean's secretary come all the way to visit the girl's dormitory?

Hoofmorn University had a huge campus with a great environment. A short distance away from the dorms, Jasper pulled out a pre-prepared check and handed it to Dorian.

Dorian was stunned by the act. 'What is Jasper doing?

'Bribery?

'Since when do people bribe in broad daylight so openly?

'In broad daylight, in school where teachers and students are everywhere?'

Dorian frowned and did not take the check. He turned to look at Jasper with a rather stern look in his eyes.

Jasper knew that Dorian had misunderstood, so he explained himself with a smile, "Mr. Clem, I realized that one of Hoofmorn University's libraries is long due for reparations.

"As a businessman with few achievements, I wish to contribute to the maintenance of Hoofmorn University's campus."

"This money is my donation to Hoofmorn University so it can build a new library."

Dorian's doubts vanished when he heard Jasper's explanations. He asked with elation, "Really, Mr. Laine?"

To repay Hoofmon University for their quick process of Tiffany's enrollment, coupled with the fact that they were also research partners, Jasper would not be stingy when it came to doing things that would both better his reputation and improve their relationship as partners.

"Why would I lie about this? It's just a library. I plan to donate even more in the future, mainly to beautify the campus and to improve the living and learning environments of the staff and students," Jasper said with a crescent-eyed smile.

Jasper sure knew how to talk to ensure his own benefits!

Dorian was well aware of what Jasper was trying to do and took the check. He looked at the sum that was more than enough to build a new library and was impressed. "This is a huge donation, Mr. Laine. A ceremony should be held for this."

"There's no need."

Jasper looked around at the youthful and romanticized students as he thought back to the low-ranked university he had graduated from in his past and present life. It could not compete with Hoofmorn University, but it was still his, so he felt that he should go back to visit from time to time.

Emotional, Jasper turned to Dorian and said, "I'm mostly busy with work, so there's no need for any unnecessary formal ceremonies. Just relay it to Mr. Marshman later, he'll understand."

"You're a noble man, Mr. Laine," Dorian said genuinely.

Any other person, wealthy businessman, or Hoofmorn University's successful alumnus would have liked telling the entire world that they had come to donate something.

While they called it donations, the ceremony and everything made it seem more like a chance to show off. Yet, Hoofmorn University had no other choice but to play along exasperatedly with them as they were one of the best academies in the country.

Even if they were a university where teaching and research took priority, people still had to make a living and there was no escaping worldly customs.

However, while Jasper's simple donation was of the largest amounts Hoofmorn University had seen in decades, the man had not said anything nor did he plan to broadcast his contribution.

'What else, if not noble?'

Life at the Top Chapter 1078

After bidding Mr. Clem goodbye, Jasper then called Henry only to find that the latter had turned his phone off.

Perhaps he had managed to find a female university student and was trying his luck with her.

Jasper was too lazy to care about what he was up to.

After all, there was no need to worry about Henry's safety when they were in a place like Waterhoof City.

Only madmen would seek out Henry to cause trouble. Not to mention that Henry was well-versed in the ways of trust-fund children and he would be the first to back out when he knew that he could not beat them in a fight. After this, he would either look for Jasper or his family to take revenge for him.

After leaving Hoofmorn University, Jasper and Julian went to pay a visit to the construction site.

Even though the matter was over, Sena's heart still hurt whenever he thought back about the incident. Therefore, he would take a trip to the site whenever he was free. The site also became much more orderly after what had happened.

However, Jasper was surprised to find that he was warmly welcomed by the workers.

"Are you here to see our progress, Mr. Laine? Don't worry, we're all doing our parts well and I'm sure we'll be able to finish construction before the targeted date!"

"That's right, Mr. Laine. I heard from everyone that you're a great employer, how you not only give us workers a good salary, but you always pay us on time too. The catering's fine and I heard that the site even gave Bo ten thousand bucks in advance when his dad got sick!"

"All of us remember the good that you've done for us!"

Jasper acknowledged each of the workers with a smile.

"I had no idea about Bo, nor was I referred to when it happened. But I did advocate for a more humanized management to look out and be considerate of each other since it's not easy working out here."

Sean sighed as he followed Jasper. "The country's real estate industry has been growing lately, Mr. Laine, and the worker's treatment has improved too. But with that also comes more messy situations.

“There are a lot of companies who owe wages to migrant workers and a lot of issues have arisen from this. There’s a lot of conflict and lack of trust between workers and us enterprises as well.

“But our JW is about to become a huge brand. While the other construction enterprises are looking for workers, our JW has workers taking the initiative to contact us for work whenever we put up notices about new projects.

“This happened back in Southeast Province and now in Waterhoof City. It fills me with joy to see such a thing.”

Jasper replied, “These are the benefits of an enterprise with more people-centric management. These are all pitiful people born from poverty-stricken families. There might be a few difficult ones among them, but most of them are honest folks trying to make a living.

“We can’t be too cold-blooded when doing business, and wages have to be distributed on time and according to the agreed upon standard. If there are any complications, then we should also look out and care for them.

“People have feelings, and this amount of money means almost nothing to JW, but it’s powerful enough to influence an enterprises’ public image.

“JW Real Estate’s image has to be shaped and established from the very beginning. Otherwise, it’ll be very difficult to change the horrible impression people have of us in the future.”

Sean nodded solemnly and replied, “I understand, Mr. Laine. I’ll make sure to carry out your instructions!”

Jasper laughed out loud and said, “You’re starting to sound more and more like you’re placating me just so I’d shut up, Sean.”

Sean replied aggrievedly, feeling misunderstood, “I meant what I said though.”

Jasper made his way around the construction site and found himself satisfied with the situation. He had preliminarily approved of this new construction team Sean had formed.

Jasper and Julian did not stay for long, opting to leave for the hotel once they ate something simple at the construction site.

The asset forum conference was to be held the next day, and Jasper had to make his preparations.

...

Some unknown time ago, a piece of news began to circulate and affect the hearts of many people in Waterhoof City.

Life at the Top Chapter 1079

The opening ceremony of an asset forum conference was about to begin.

This was the year 2001, and ridiculous high-end events had yet to become as common as they would be more than a decade later.

The asset forum, for example, was a concept they had taken from the West. Most people initially did not know what such an event entailed.

Basically, this was an event where a group of successful entrepreneurs would sit down with a few fake economic experts as they proceeded to predict and discuss their hopes for the country's financial situation or the industry's developments.

If the people attending were not powerful enough, then the forum became a joke.

However, this asset forum conference in Waterhoof City was held by Seatreasures International Group, and the person invited was a renowned financial expert in the country. Large companies in Waterhoof City's financial industry were also present.

The most well-known attendee would be the vice president of Haddock's Chamber.

Everyone knew that the symbol of Teo Chamber of Commerce was Seatreasures International Group, which was worth tens of billions on the market. The Teo and Haddock Chambers of Commerce also had many conflicts and they were at great odds with each other.

Therefore, this forum, with so many inter-connected figures, was already incendiary before it even began.

Especially when word got out that Haddock's Chamber of Commerce's vice president was Jasper. People were in an uproar when they did a background check on Jasper.

The majority shareholder of JW Company.

JW was no longer the small company that no one knew of in the past.

With its subsidiaries involved in the dot-com, electronics manufacturing, real estate, and entertainment industries, JW was starting to look more like an established group.

Especially to people in Waterhoof City, where Jasper was leading the construction of the future tallest building in the world.

The strangest part of all was that Jasper's birth and path to entrepreneurship had nothing to do with Haddock's Chamber of Commerce.

Some more knowledgeable people also knew that Jasper was in conflict with the previous president of the Haddock Chamber of Commerce Waterhoof City branch. In fact, Jasper was also directly involved in the other's downfall.

So why did Jasper suddenly become the vice president of the Chamber's Waterhoof City branch?

Under countless curious and confused gazes, the asset forum proceeded anyway in Waterhoof City's W Hotel's main conference hall.

The car slowly drove toward W Hotel's lobby entrance, and from afar, Henry exclaimed as he sat beside Jasper whilst observing the frenzied atmosphere in front of them. "It actually looks legitimate."

The hotel's lobby entrance was already surrounded and packed with reporters while a large group of suited workers with identity cards draping from their necks tried to maintain order.

Under the continuous flashing of cameras, the event had the atmosphere befitting of an important conference.

"Seatresures International Group wants to use this forum to crush Haddock's power in Waterhoof City so that they can get a foothold in the Waterhoof City, the country's financial center's financial industry. It's only normal they would arrange such a grand event."

Jasper was unsurprised as he replied.

Henry's eyes suddenly lit up and he snickered, pointing at a young man who was speaking to someone darkly not too far away. "That's the stupid f*cker from that day, no?"

Jasper looked up at the young man and realized that it was Dudley.

"His father, Alban Ball, is the founder of Seatresures International. I guess you could consider Dudley as its heir, so it makes sense that he's here."

"This is going to be fun!"

Henry rubbed his hands together excitedly. "Let's make it clear now, don't pull me back if that stupid f*cker jumps up. I've been holding it in these past two days and I'm at my limit."

Life at the Top Chapter 1080

“Mr. Laine is here!”

One of the sharper reporters had spotted the vehicle and shouted. In a flash, almost all the reporters flooded to approach the car.

Their gazes were filled with excitement as they all wanted to interview Jasper to obtain first-hand information.

At the same time, reporters still engaged in interviews with other people grew awkward and unsettled.

One reporter from South Somer Commercial Post stared at the old man they were interviewing, who was still speaking endlessly. The excitement of getting a chance to interview this renowned financial expert in Waterhoof City disappeared, quickly replaced with impatience and anxiousness.

Seeing how the side of Jasper’s car was already flooded by his competitors, the reporter was beginning to feel hasty since there was almost no space left.

“Of course, an expert’s opinion would definitely be more significant...”

The reporter could not hold it back any longer when he saw how Professor Mack was not done speaking yet.

“Alright, Professor Mack. Thank you for your explanation today, I look forward to more financial knowledge from you in the future! Thank you!”

The reporter interrupted Professor Mack and made his way to Jasper’s car. They did not even notice Professor Mack’s constipated and sour expression.

The balding Professor Mack was dazed.

Reporters would normally be extremely grateful when they had a chance to interview him, treating him with the utmost respect. Yet, this reporter had just interrupted him and cast him aside!

The furious Professor Mack glanced over resentfully. He sneered when he saw Jasper getting out of his car.

“You’re just an immature youth. A child. What economic and financial knowledge can you possess when you’re so young? You just happened to be lucky and made a bit of money! Just you wait, I’m going to make you pay when the forum starts!”

Jasper had just gotten out of the car when he was flooded by reporters.

Jasper smiled wryly at the microphones that might as well be forced into his mouth as he listened to all sorts of questions directed at him.

“Everyone, please calm down. Your safety is the most important thing now. I’ll answer each and one of your questions in a bit. Please forgive me as time constraint forbids me from answering every single one of you.

“This reporter over here, you can ask first.”

The reporter from South Somer Commercial Post was elated when Jasper picked him. He thanked the heavens for throwing away the imbecilic Professor Mack, or he would have lost such a great opportunity now.

Under the envious gazes of their competitors, the reporter asked.

“Mr. Laine, is the skyscraper in construction right now in Waterhoof City one of JW Real Estate’s properties? Have you thought of a name yet? Is it really being construction with the intention of it being the tallest building in the world?”

The questions voiced out the majority of the reporters’ thoughts.

After all, all the news thus far had merely been rumors among civilians and there had never been any formal response to the skyscraper’s construction progress from JW Real Estates.

Jasper gave it some thought before he replied, “You’re right. JW Real Estates is indeed the sole proprietor of the skyscraper in construction.

“Since its initial design, its goal has been to become the tallest building in the world. What I can tell you is that it was designed to be 666 meters tall, and that preliminary construction of the building is estimated to finish within the year. Its name is also confirmed. It will be the World Financial Center.”

Life at the Top Chapter 1081

“As for the details, I’ll have JW Real Estates hold a special briefing to reveal more later. This is good news, after all, so all of you are welcome to attend and join.”

Dudley’s gaze was dark and sinister as he stared at Jasper, who was surrounded by countless reporters desperate to talk to him.

“Should I get rid of those reporters, Mr. Ball? There’s no reason to let Jasper appear so magnificent,” A bodyguard leaned over to whisper in Dudley’s ear.

Dudley harrumphed before he smiled wretchedly. “We’ll let him feel gleeful for now. The more people seek him out now, the more people will laugh and trample over him after the forum is over and he’s lost everything. He’ll soon become the subject of public mockery.”

At that moment, Dudley’s phone rang.

He waved his bodyguards away and walked to a quieter area before picking up the phone.

Lisa’s voice sounded from the other end of the line.

Dudley’s gaze flickered when he heard the voice, and he chuckled lowly, “Is something wrong, Lisa?”

Lisa replied softly, “The forum’s about to start, right? Will your plan work?”

Dudley chuckled arrogantly and replied, "Don't worry. My dad's the one attacking him this time, so it will definitely spell the end for Jasper. I can't promise anything, but he'll definitely be made a fool of, and the entirety of Waterhoof City will know that Jasper's a piece of trash with looks and no skills."

"Hmph. His JW was only founded a year ago, so how can it compare with my Seatreasures International? And to think that he's ignorant enough to join this forum. As if a fight between the Haddock and Teo Chambers of Commerce is something trash like him can interfere with."

"Don't worry, I'll make sure to give him a lesson he'll never forget."

Lisa's tone was filled with glee and admiration. "You're so cool, Dudley. I'm sure nothing will go wrong with you and Uncle Ball attacking him together, I have faith in you."

"However, Jasper's a very crafty and dangerous man. You have to be careful not to fall for his tricks. He's ruthless, so the slightest misstep will cause you to immediately fall into his trap."

Dudley sneered and replied, "Don't worry. With my dad here, there's no way he can do anything crazy."

"But Lisa, you promised me that you'd spend a few days with me after I helped you with this. Don't forget that."

"Oh my God, stop. We'll talk about this after you're done, okay? Why're you in such a rush? It's not like I'll run away or anything."

Dudley laughed out loud when he heard Lisa's coquettish voice. He was about to speak when a bodyguard came over to remind him of something.

"It's time, Mr. Ball. The interviews outside are over, and Jasper's entered the venue as well."

“Alright, Lisa, I’ve got to hang up and go. I’ll see you next time in the room I booked for us, hahaha,” Dudley laughed loudly and hung up the phone. Then, he turned to ask the bodyguard.

“Do the people from the other companies, and especially that professor, know our goal?”

The bodyguard snickered and replied, “Don’t worry Mr. Ball. These people took the money, so they’ll know what to do. The other companies won’t dare to fight against our Seatreasures International anyway. As for Professor Mack—he just came over and personally requested to target Jasper, haha.

“You’ll always be supported when you’re standing on the right side of history. Jasper’s just too arrogant, so there’ll always be people who won’t stand for it!”

Dudley laughed out loud and continued energetically, “Let’s go to the venue. I want Jasper to know what it feels like as he slowly walks toward his own death!”

Life at the Top Chapter 1082

W Hotel’s main conference hall.

W Hotel was Waterhof City’s best and most luxurious international five-star hotel, so its layout and decorations were extremely luxurious. Its most important high-end conference room took up an entire floor.

At the reception, where attendees of the conference would arrive first, Jasper had just gotten his attendance card when he heard Henry’s voice from behind him.

“What do you mean I’m not on your name list? F*ck you! The fact that I’m coming to your conference is an honor for you! How dare you throw me out?!”

Jasper turned around and frowned at the middle-aged manager in charge of handling the attendance. He asked, "What's going on?"

"My apologies, but this man isn't on our list of invitees so he cannot join the forum."

The middle-aged man looked polite, but he was hiding a mocking sneer behind his expression. He looked at Jasper and Henry as if they were a joke as he spoke indifferently.

"I've already sent someone to pass you a list of people attending the event with me. There's my name and Henry Law, so how can he not be on your name list?" Jasper asked.

The middle-aged manager shrugged and replied uncaringly, "I have no idea about that. After all, this forum is held by us, Seatreasures International, and we get to decide who we want to invite. While you do have the right to invite others, Mr. Laine, the final say is ours, and we still have to review your request.

"After all..."

The middle-aged manager then glanced at a furious-looking Henry arrogantly before he said in a neutral tone, "We can't just let questionable people in."

"F*ck you!"

Henry's anger exploded and he almost flipped over the small receptionist counter.

"Did you just call me a questionable person?!" Henry narrowed his eyes and stared at the other person. His being exuded a dangerous aura.

The middle-aged manager had not expected Henry's huge temper and took a wary step backward. He shouted fiercely, "What are you doing! Are you trying to cause havoc? I'll call security on you right now!"

"Open your stupid eyes and take a look around. Does this look like a place where you can go around causing trouble willy nilly?!"

At that moment, everyone's attention was fixed on them. The crowd looked at Jasper and Henry with curiosity, but no one came forward to seek justice for them.

It was evident that these people, whom Jasper had stolen the spotlight from, now wanted to see Jasper made a fool of.

“Motherf*cker! You’re f*cking crazy!”

Henry was enraged and he raised his leg to kick the middle-aged manager in the stomach.

The scene shocked everyone.

Everyone present had established identities, and they all thought of themselves as upper-class. Hence, it was rare for them to be in situations where people started fighting physically from the very offset.

Despite this, Henry had shown physical aggression before their eyes.

The scene was a mess, and quite a few people were in an uproar.

Hotel security guards who were in charge of maintaining order were shocked as well and they immediately stepped forward pull the fight apart.

They did not dare to do anything against either party, so all they could do was pull away Henry, who was aggressively throwing punches, away from the middle-aged manager.

Henry kicked the middle-aged a few times amidst the chaos and pushed the security guard away once he had been pulled off. He glared at the middle-aged man darkly. From the way Henry was standing, he still appeared to be infuriated.

“Ow, it hurts so much. How dare you hit me? Fine, then. This isn’t over! I’ll make you pay for this!”

The middle-aged manager whimpered as he shouted painfully with a bruised face and body.

“Motherf*cker, this guy is really a moron,” Henry spat and said.

Just then, Jasper walked over as well.

He stood in front of the middle-aged manager with an indifferent look in his eyes.

The middle-aged manager must have been terrified that he would get beaten up again, so he looked at Jasper warily and threatened, “Are you going to hit me too, Mr. Laine?”

“You think you’re worth my energy?”

Jasper fired back calmly.

Life at the Top Chapter 1083

Despite his mortification, the middle-aged manager did not dare to say anything to retort.

After all, Jasper was still the vice president of the Haddock Chamber of Commerce’s Waterhoof City branch as well as the majority shareholder of JW.

Meanwhile, he was just a middle-ranked employee in Seatreasures Group.

Their statuses were miles apart.

He did not know who Henry was, and had merely thought that he was Jasper’s subordinate, so he thought he would use this chance to put Jasper in a horrible position while gaining the favor of the heir, Dudley, by humiliating Henry. He did not expect Henry to be such a difficult person.

Even so, this manager might have been petrified if he came to know Henry’s identity.

A name card was tossed onto the middle-aged manager’s body before Jasper’s voice piped up.

“Since you consider the people I bring in to be questionable, then perhaps you should question my status as well. Until you’ve straightened that out, I don’t believe there’s any need for me to attend this forum.”

Jasper then turned and walked toward the exit.

The scene stunned everyone in attendance, let alone the middle-aged manager.

They did not think that Jasper would take the issue sitting down, so they did not expect Jasper to suddenly throw aside his name card and leave.

This forum was held with the sole purpose of targeting Jasper, the vice president of Harddock's Chamber of Commerce's Waterhoof City branch. If he left, then was Seatresures International supposed to perform this play alone?

The middle-aged manager instantly paled in terror.

Similarly, Henry raised his hand to poke the middle-aged manager and sneered, his expression arrogant.

"Seatresures International, right? You think you're so capable, huh? Fine! Just you f*cking wait. I won't waste my time dealing with nobodies like you. I'll screw your employer over. Just you wait, your boss will be the one to deal with you!"

Henry then turned to leave furiously.

In the short moment it took Jasper to talk, Henry had already come up with tens of ways to blow the things Seatresures International did to him out of proportion while reporting it to his dad.

He already knew of this company, which a large local group from Mustiece Province. It was located by Cavern City, and it was also coincidentally listed on Harbor Stocks.

That place.

Was Young Master Law's territory!

Just as Jasper and Henry were about to take their leave together, a slightly chubby man appeared while being surrounded by a crowd of people.

He resembled Dudley, but this man had a long-lasting smile on his face. He looked kind and easy to talk to.

This man was Seatresures International's majority shareholder, and Dudley's father, Alban Ball.

Alban had a shocked expression on his face when he saw Jasper. “Mr. Laine, the forum’s already begun. Where are you going?”

Jasper looked at Alban calmly and said with a subtle smile, “You sure came at the right time, Mr. Ball.”

Alban pretended to not understand what Jasper was implying as he replied with a crescent-eyed smile, “I was held back by some things. I just got here a few moments ago.”

“Just your motherf*cking foot. You were watching everything gleefully just now, weren’t you? Henry scoffed and scolded as he stood beside Jasper.

His profanity caused everyone’s expressions to change drastically.

As the president of the Teo Chamber of Commerce and the chairman of Seatresures International, Alban was a formidable figure over at the borders of Mustiece Province. No one would dare to scold him so blatantly.

Alban was the only one whose smile did not falter. It was as if he was not the one getting scolded.

“You’re Mr. Law, right? Oh my, who angered you, Mr. Law? I’ll be sure to make it up to you on his behalf.”

“Make your f*cking foot up, stop acting so ambiguous in front of me! It’s disgusting!

“Alban, right? Seatresures International, hmm? You think you can step all over me like I’m your carpet?”

“Just you wait, I’m calling home right now! There’s no point in me continuing to exist if I don’t get your f*cking Seatresures International’s share prices to plummet!”

Life at the Top Chapter 1084

This scene here.

Was an absolute classic!

Alban was a top-notch wealthy businessman who had a certain degree of influence in Mustiece Province and even most of the southeast region. Yet, here he was, being pointed at and scolded by Henry.

Henry even threatened Alban by saying that he would cause Seatreasures International's share price to plummet.

This scene reminded the crowd of something.

It was like their neighbor's child was pointing fingers at them and threatening to light their house on fire.

Everyone present felt their scalp grow numb.

Their gazes all instinctively shifted to Alban, wondering how this huge figure that dominated the southeast region was going to react.

Alban's smile slowly vanished as well.

He had to be crazy if he could still smile at such a time. After all, this had nothing to do with how complex the man's thoughts were.

"Mr. Law, there has been no history of resentment between us and the Law family. I was also polite to you, so why do you have to force my hand right from the start?" Alban suppressed his fury and asked.

Everyone else became even more confused when they heard Alban admit defeat so quickly.

They began to wonder who exactly Henry, and this Law family, was.

There was no powerful Law family in the Mainlands.

Therefore, why was Alban, such a powerful figure, terrified of a young man's threats?

Henry sneered and said, "Stop acting in front of me. As if your dog would dare to bear its fangs at me without your instructions!"

Alban looked back and saw the pale-faced middle-aged manager. He asked in a deep tone, "What the hell happened?!"

Someone immediately stepped up and relayed the whole incident to Alban.

Alban was infuriated when he heard the story and he looked at the middle-aged manager who was trembling on the ground. His eyes were cold as he shouted, 'Do you even know who Mr. Law is?!

"It's our honor to invite someone like him, yet you dare to shoo such an important VIP away! Are you f*cking stupid or what?!"

The middle-aged man fell backward with a thud when he was shouted at. He now understood that he had gotten himself in deep trouble.

"Mr. Ball, forgive me, please. I didn't know. All I knew is that Mr. Dudley doesn't like Mr. Laine so I purposefully tried to pick on them. I was only doing it for our group and the Teo Chamber of Commerce's sake, Mr. Ball. Please forgive me!"

"Yo, what a loyal dog you've got there."

Henry sneered. "For the sake of your Teo Chamber of Commerce and the group, huh? Is that why you thought you could trample all over me?"

Alban's expression was grim and he felt the urge to swallow this brainless middle-aged manager alive.

How could he say something like that in public?

As expected, the crowd all looked at Alban weirdly, as if he had just been made a fool of.

“Mr. Ball, since this has matter has already been clarified, then I believe it’s best Henry and I leave. It’s only natural we do so.”

Jasper suddenly said calmly.

“Since this forum is of such high standards, then it’s best if neither of us joins in case someone interrogates us for being questionable people again.”

Jasper’s words caused Alban’s expression to turn even darker.

He forced a laugh and said, “Gentlemen, this is indeed a huge misunderstanding. It’s completely my fault, so please forgive me.

“You two are extremely important guests in this forum conference, after all. The forum will be considered a failure if you two leave.”

Alban then turned to look at the middle-aged manager and snapped coldly, “You useless b*stard! Get lost! I never want to see you in front of me again! Leave!”

The middle-aged man quickly scrambled off while Alban turned back to look at Jasper and Henry. “Please follow me inside, gentlemen. I promise I’ll make this up to you in the future, is that alright?”

Henry lifted the corner of his lips insincerely and turned to look at Jasper.

He made his stance clear.

It meant that Jasper would decide whether Young Master Law stayed or left.

“Since this is just a misunderstanding, then it’s only right we be respectful to you too, Mr. Ball.”

Just as Alban thought that Jasper was going to exploit the issue and make things more difficult for him, Jasper caught him off guard by suddenly extending him a warm smile.

Alban narrowed his eyes as he gave Jasper a good look over. While Alban remained smiling, he internally raised the perceived danger level of this youth that was two years younger than his son by a few good notches.

They were all formidable members of society, and they understood that some things could only be resolved through formal means.

These small misunderstandings and mistakes, regardless of who committed them, did not influence the big picture too much. These were nothing more than appetizers before the main dish.

If Jasper thought that he had won from this alone and became prideful over the matter, then Alban would continue to see Jasper as an easy target.

However, Jasper's current reaction caused Alban to sigh internally. That old crafty man, Gale, had truly sent him a difficult opponent this time.

"That's wonderful, then. Thank you for your generosity, Mr. Laine, Mr. Law. Let's go inside, they've been waiting for a long time already," Alban beckoned them with a crescent-eyed smile.

They had just entered the main hall of the forum when Alban excused himself.

He walked into the room inside with a dark expression on his face. Dudley was already waiting for him inside.

"How was it, Dad? Jasper and that Henry's faces must've looked so sour, right?" Dudley rushed over to say pridefully when he saw Alban walk in.

Alban asked Dudley grimly, "You instructed that imbecile?"

Dudley replied pridefully, "I didn't actually tell him anything, I just gave him a hint. Hmph, take it as a show of our power to Jasper and Henry. Let them know who's territory they're in.

"What a shame that I didn't get to see how pitiful they looked. It must've been exciting, haha!"

Alban's expression darkened with every word he said. Dudley was about to ask what was wrong when Alban suddenly raised his hand as if to slap him.

Dudley was shocked and he raised his hand to defend himself instinctively. He shouted, "What're you hitting me for, Dad?!"

Even so, Alban's suspended hand did not connect with Dudley's cheek. The man simply replied harshly, "Keep these lowly tricks of yours to yourself. You'll only make a fool out of yourself!"

Dudley was stunned. "It failed? No way!"

"Do you even know who Mr. Law is? His status or identity? How dare you use your tricks on him!" Alban reprimanded disappointedly.

Dudley said indignantly, "I checked. It's nothing special, he's just the young master of the Law family. So what? I'm also the young master of the Ball family!"

"Young master my foot!"

Alban scolded, "You must be out of your mind. You think the bit of money our family made these years can compete with what the Law family has?"

"We're not even on equal footing!"

"I'm warning you. Picking on Jasper is one thing, but you do not attack Henry! Otherwise, the both of us are screwed!"

Life at the Top Chapter 1085

Dudley was extremely pissed by Alban's warning, but he had no choice but to endure it.

"Alright."

Alban harrumphed upon seeing Dudley agree. "Good then. Alright, it's almost time to go out there. Don't forget what I told you!"

Alban then walked out of the room first.

Dudley followed after him, his expression so stormy that rain might as well have begun to fall in the hall. His fists were bunched up tightly and his gaze was frigid.

The forum conference began after the host gave a passionate opening speech.

As the core representative, Jasper was of course invited to sit at the platform on stage.

Alban quickly rushed over to sit beside Jasper. Just then, a knowledgeable expert who had been working in the financial industry for thirty years and had experience working abroad began to speak.

Alban took this time to shift his body toward Jasper with a smile as he commented, "You've founded such a large enterprise at such a young age, Mr. Laine. Perhaps there are some experiences you can share with all of us?"

Jasper replied with a smile, "There's no comparing my experience with seniors like you, Mr. Ball. Therefore, I think I'd rather just listen and learn instead of speaking."

"You're too kind, Mr. Laine. But I'm afraid a lot of people are eager to hear wise comments from your mouth, Mr. Laine," Alban said with a meaningful tone.

Alban had just finished speaking when the previous expert walked off the stage amidst a round of applause. The next person to speak was a balding Professor Mack.

As one of the renowned experts in Waterhoof City's financial field, Professor Mack was quite the formidable figure. Therefore, before he started speaking, applause rang out again below the stage.

Professor Mack was rather prideful. After basking in a round of applause, he began.

"Hello, I'm sure all of you know who I am. I'm Perry and I've been working in the financial industry for more than twenty years. I am part of the first batch of financial practitioners that grew up alongside our country's financial industry."

"I'm currently the chief professor employed by Waterhoof City's Financial Policy Office."

After saying that, Professor Mack cleared his throat and his gaze turned stern as he continued.

“There’s been a new thriving and especially hyped-up industry as of late, and the public consensus seems to be that as long as a business is related to this industry, then it will instantly be viewed as a high-end and sophisticated company. However, not many people understand it at all. I’m referring to the dot-com industry.

“I believe that finance and economics should still lie on solid principles. What can the internet contribute to our society and lives?”

“I admit that it’s made many people’s lives easier, but that does not mean it’s important. It’s just an accessory to our economy. Yet, some people claim that it’s the direction of humanity’s future, and I find that ridiculous.

“Attending today’s forum, I know that Mr. Laine has the country’s huge dot-com enterprises in his hands. Both Sena and Terizone are his property.

“Everyone knows Sena, the company that started with web portals and is now shifting to develop games. This is an enterprise without a physical factory, yet it’s worth tens of billions on the market. It even experienced caused a wave of investments after listing on the Nasdaq.”

“This is evidently the second time the capitalist market is intentionally blowing the dot-com industry out of proportion. Despite this, some people seem to have lost their minds and think that they’re truly the owner of a capable business. If they just gave it some thought, they would know that an enterprise that does not benefit our country’s employment tax should have no right to such a high market value.

“All of this is fake! It’s a bubble that will pop at the slightest poke! What a shame that our Mr. Laine here is still drowning in his own delusions. He has no idea that he’s lying on a cliff, and that a large gust of wind will have him falling to his demise!”

Perry’s words instantly caused quite an uproar within the audience.

Life at the Top Chapter 1086

The situation outside the country was the same as within it when it came to the dot-com industry, where people were split into two main groups.

One group believed that it was a fluke, that the industry was pretty much useless and a mere concept the capitalist market overhyped to get people to invest money.

Meanwhile, the other group of people believed that the industry would be the driving force behind the third industrialized revolution. Or at the very least, it would surely change the way people lived and worked.

Regardless of which group one belonged in, they were still rather conservative when it came to expressing their own opinions. This was still the year 2001, after all, and everything was still unclear.

However, Perry's words were heavily opinionated.

He was essentially pointing at Jasper's nose and accusing him of being a huge conman.

Perry then proceeded to raise examples that would further support his theory. Everything he said both blatantly and implicitly targetted Sena and Terizone.

However, everyone knew that Perry was truly targeting Jasper, the man who sat on the panel that day.

One had to admit that Perry's oratory skills were impressive. After his speech, people under the stage who did not understand the internet began to sway to his opinion.

Everyone now looked at Jasper strangely.

Even so, Jasper remained calm where he sat.

"Things sure took a quick turn for the worse, Mr. Laine," Alban smiled calmly at Jasper.

Jasper glanced at Alban and replied unaffectedly, "What a great play you've arranged, Mr. Ball."

Alban narrowed his eyes slightly and said, "You misunderstand, Mr. Laine. I have no control over what these experts and professors say. Why would I need to arrange anything?"

"Let me guess, there should be more after this Perry, correct?" Jasper asked.

Alban pursed his lips but did not speak anymore.

As Jasper expected, Perry turned to look at Jasper proudly after he was done, while the following few speakers all took Perry's side.

Each of them spoke harsher than the last. They started targeting the dot-com industry in the beginning, before they decided to stop beating around the bush and began slamming JW Company and Jasper directly.

"That's why I believe that a person without the basic ability to make decisions or have a good heart has no right to qualify as a businessman.

"He spends all day basking in the glory of being wealthy, but didn't he earn his first big money through pure luck? People like this might rise quickly, but they meet their ends even faster!

"This is precisely what people refer to as the heartless rich. His enterprises bring no positive value to society!

"He's just a village boy, a rough and bossy son of a farmer that's never received any high-end elite education! He has no right to sit with highly educated people who possess masters and degrees like us! He should be struggling for his life at the lowest class of society!"

All sorts of opinions flew about the room.

It was not until the last person had finished speaking and shot Jasper a taunting smirk that Alban finally turned to Jasper and said with a happy chuckle, "It's your turn to speak, Mr. Laine.

"Of course, the current atmosphere isn't quite in your favor, so I'd understand if you have reservations, Mr. Laine. You don't have to say anything if you don't want to. After all, you are our esteemed guest. Hahaha."

However, Jasper ignored Alban's mockery and walked toward the podium.

Life at the Top Chapter 1087

Most people present at the forum conference did not have the right to speak at the podium.

So when Jasper got up, everyone's gaze fell on the man.

They wanted to know how Jasper planned to deal with this situation when almost the entire conference seemed to have come to a tacit agreement to target him.

Perry, who had just gotten off the podium, was currently taking credit in front of Dudley.

"Mr. Ball, I did just as you asked, right?" Perry said with a wide smile.

Dudley nodded in satisfaction, his expression arrogant. "Not bad, you're not completely useless, old man."

Perry was not angry at all. Instead, the man lowered his voice and said with a chuckle, "Then about the things you promised me, the money and the women..."

Dudley glared at Perry and said in annoyance, "I already promised you, so I won't go back on my word. I'll have someone transfer 100 thousand to your bank account later.

"F*cking hell, what easy money this must be for you. You only earn 100 thousand a month, no? And that's already considered an above-average pay. Work under me in the future, I'll make sure you'll earn much more benefits.

"Women aren't a problem either. I'll have one join you in bed at anytime. But can you even play, old man? I won't be responsible if an old man like you dies in bed."

Perry snickered and replied, "Don't worry, Mr. Ball. I may be old but I'm still vigorous."

"Jesus Christ. I love insincere experts like you the most. All of you are monsters are driven by selfish desires—you're all fake!"

Not too far away was Henry, who watched Dudley and Perry conspire with a dark expression on his face. Had Jasper not reminded him to be patient, Young Master Law would already have gone after the pair to wreak some havoc.

Even so, did not mean that Henry would leave Dudley alone.

Henry got up from his chair and walked over in a gangster-like manner.

Dudley, who was talking to Perry, suddenly felt a tremendous force attack him from behind. Dudley staggered, caught off guard, and he turned angrily only to see Henry's evil face.

"You motherf..."

Dudley was about to burst into a rage, but was met with Henry's narrowed eyes, the latter just waiting for him to start cursing.

His father Alban's warning surfaced in Dudley's mind, and he forced himself to swallow his words that were already forming on the tip of his tongue.

"Why'd you stop?" Henry sneered.

Dudley clenched his jaw and asked icily, "What are you doing?!"

"I want to take a piss. What's it to you?" Henry pouted as he replied and pushed Dudley away harshly.

Henry was strong and Dudley had taken the full force of the shove. The latter staggered four to five steps backward before he knocked into the wall and dropped, falling to the floor embarrassedly.

“Are you picking on me, Henry?!” Dudley roared, infuriated.

“Yo, not bad. Can’t believe you could tell,” Henry chuckled happily and leaned over to Dudley. “So what if I’m picking on you? Don’t like it? Come at me then.”

Dudley drilled his bloodshot eyes into Henry. His anger was already at his limit and the only thing stopping him from exploding was his last thread of rationality.

“Coward.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1088

Henry was disinterested when he saw that Dudley had held himself back. He mocked the latter with a pout and then ignored him.

Henry turned around only to see Perry, who he proceeded to mock with a sinister tone, “How much money did this coward give you to turn you into his dog, old baldy?”

Perry was stunned for a moment before he replied, mortified, “What nonsense is that! I’m a truly knowledgeable intellectual! A real expert! How could I be bribed? Stop defaming me! ”

“Yo, what a knowledgeable man indeed. Such formal terms even when you’re scolding people, ” Henry chuckled. “If It’s not money, then maybe it’s women? or perhaps he promised both money and women?”

Perry’s pupils contracted and he silently wondered who this young man was. This was someone that Dudley did not dare to fight back against even though he had been pushed around. Someone who seemed to be very aware of his deal with Dudley.

“My dad got tired of such immature slander years ago. What’s the point in acting like you’re some sh*t in front of me?” Henry said disdainfully.

“You know, old baldy, sometimes it’s easy to say things, earn easy money, and sleep with easy women. But these things all come with a price.

“The more you benefit, the more you have to pay. Unless, of course, you were born in a f*cking awesome family like I was. But seeing how you’re already so old, I doubt that you’ve been blessed in that area.

“Since you didn’t get born in a great family, then you should think twice before you take or sleep with anything. Think first if you can afford to pay the price, because if you can’t, then all that’s left for you is a tragic end.”

Henry patted Perry’s chubby cheeks arrogantly and snickered happily before he turned to leave.

Perry was a man reaching his sixties and this was the first time he had been humiliated so thoroughly. Mortified, he turned to Henry and scolded, “ Uneducated! How did your parents raise you for you to end up so disrespectful and undignified! You’re an eyesore and shame on your family!”

He had set himself up for trouble.

Henry’s head snapped back as he stared darkly at Perry, a storm brewing in his eyes.

Perry was startled by the look in Henry's eyes, and he took an instinctive step backward while exclaiming, "What, what are you doing?!"

"What am I doing?"

Henry scoffed. "Didn't you say that I was uneducated and that my parents didn't teach me well?"

"Then let me show you how an uneducated and undignified person behaves when they're angry!"

Henry dragged Perry by his collar and pulled him into the toilet a short distance away like he was a little chick.

Perry struggled for his life and tried to pry Henry's hand off, but the difference in their age and strength was evident as Perry simply could not break free.

"Mr. Ball, save me!"

Dudley's expression paled when he heard Perry shout. The memory of Henry's dark gaze from earlier reminded him of the fear associated with Henry, such that the man did not dare to stand in latter's path. Thus, he could only pretend that he did not hear anything.

Perry's tragic yelling slowly faded as Henry dragged the man further away. Dudley exhaled deeply. 'All that matters is that I'm fine. As for what happens to Perry... Well that has nothing to do with me!'

At the same time, Jasper had already reached the podium.

As he faced dozens of pairs of eyes and cameras, the corner of Jasper's lips curled slightly into a charming smile that brimmed with confidence. This alone was charming enough that all the women present, regardless of age and status, instantly took an innate liking to Jasper.

It was the same feeling men got when they looked at women.

Jasper cleared his throat, his voice echoing throughout the entire conference room.

“My apologies, ladies and gentlemen, that you had to hear a bunch of insincere experts babble on about nonsense that they had no idea about. Now, let me tell you what the future actually is.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1089

Jasper’s first sentence had defined the future, and thus overturned everything the previous speakers had preached.

“The Internet is the future!”

No one could be certain of the Internet’s power in the future, so no one could step up and make the final call. All this required time and facts to prove.

Therefore, Jasper did not plan to persuade these people to believe him. He merely stated his line of logic.

“Now, the third industrial revolution will be a revolution of advanced technology, represented by computational atomic power and space biotechnology. This, is the era of information.”

“Every piece of technology I refer to today is closely related to our daily lives. It has the ability to change the way all of us live and even... Our understanding of the world.”

“The Internet can close the distance between people, making communication even easier and convenient.”

“With Sena, we can consume news and information from abroad much quicker, easier, and cheaper. If you click on Sena’s web portal, every important incident from around the world within the past 24hours will be clearly displayed before your eyes.”

“With Terizone, communication between you and your colleagues, family, and friends becomes much simpler. There’s no need to pay telephone bills at all, as you’ll be able to converse at a moments notice through texts or a network cable.”

“All of this will only become more convenient and quicker in the future. And before we’ve realized it, the new era will have already quietly arrived.”

“The people quickest to embrace the changing times will lead us down the path to the future, while those who choose not to improve will only be eliminated!”

Jasper’s words had put the entire room in an uproar. The topic of the Internet’s future was still a hot topic of discussion, but neither the people against it nor supporting it dared to come out and say anything with absolute certainty.

After all, everyone was terrified of being proven wrong, so they preferred to speak ambiguously, leaving them with room to backtrack.

Even so, Jasper’s words countered the mocking and disdainful speeches from the previous experts. No matter how you looked at it, Jasper’s speech was clearly a counterargument.

Alban’s expression was sour when he saw how easily Jasper had gained control of the situation.

Alban glanced at a few helpers he had employed advance to cue them in. Then, he scoffed and closed his eyes slightly, no longer reacting to the situation.

The few helpers shared a look after they received Alban’s cue. One of them suddenly stood up.

“Nonsense!”

The word was spoken loudly, instantly shaking the venue.

This middle-aged man pointed at Jasper and scolded, “Don’t think that you can say whatever you want just because you got lucky and managed to make a small business for yourself. How old are you, huh? You’re just in your twenties, so who gave you the right to point fingers and comment on the world? Every entrepreneur here has managed their business since before you were even born! ”

“Exactly! A young man like you should be humbler instead of trying so hard to curry favors and rise in social status. Take a look at yourself first, at least.”

“Haha. I knew that the Internet was just a con industry. It’s not a serious industry at all! Look at him, this is supposed to be the so-called number one figure in the country’s Internet Industry. He’s just in his f*cking twenties-even my son is older than him. What does he know about commerce?”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1090

“That’s right. Without physical businesses like us supporting it, the Internet is completely useless. Seriously, it’s almost like anyone can get on the stage and start talking. It’s like they’re not even afraid that their ridiculous claims will be made fun of! ”

“Haha. The older generation like us has seen enough of huge waves like this to understand. I’ve seen my fair share of people like this. They think they’re so successful in the beginning, but they’ll just vanish overnight.”

“Doing business requires true strength and capability. How stupid can they be if they think having the ability to talk and persuade people is all they need?”

People who had been stunned by Jasper’s opinions slowly began to look at him doubtfully as they were slowly influenced by the opinions of the people around them.

Many of them now expected Jasper make a fool out of himself.

After all, Jasper’s words were too sharp and definite, so it only made sense that he would anger the group of people who did not agree with the Internet industry. This was their so-called revenge.

Jasper stood behind the podium as the scathing remarks grew louder. Even so, the man pretended not to hear any of them.

If this was anyone else, they might have walked off the stage in embarrassment after being doubted by everyone.

However, Jasper was different.

As a reincarnated man, Jasper had knowledge of the next 19 years. He knew that what he said was reflective of the genuine future of the world.

Instead of doubting himself, these words of opposition or even direct humiliation only furthered his belief that this was a group of imbeciles. No wonder almost all of these businesses would disappear 19 years later.

Jasper did not feel the need to fight with people destined to be eliminated by the changing of times. Thus, before Jasper walked away from the podium, he said one last thing.

“The truth will not change just because it has little support, nor will it disappear because it’s greatly opposed. Our society isn’t something decided by one person or a group of people.

“I never planned to persuade anyone here today, and whether you choose to believe it or not matters little to me. You can’t affect me, let alone the development of the Internet or the world.

“So with that, I urge everyone present to take a look back to today in five, ten, or even twenty years time. I’m sure who’s right or wrong will be very clear then.”

Jasper then turned and left coolly, walking away from the podium whilst leaving a crowd of people questioning him behind.

Back at the panel, Alban turned to smile at Jasper while the people’s opinions stewed in the crowd. “You’re a promising young man, Mr. Laine, to fight such a large group on your own.”

“Isn’t this what you wanted to see, Mr. Ball? Me cooperating with this show you put on?” Jasper asked calmly.

Alban answered calmly, “Is that necessary, Mr. Laine? You’ve been stating that this is an act ever since we began.”

“The conflict between the Teo and the Haddock Chamber of Commerce has never been reconcilable. I’m sure everyone already knows the goal of this so-called asset forum conference. The fact that you continue to hide, Mr. Ball, makes me wonder if I’ve overestimated you.”

Alban raised his brows at Jasper’s words.

“Alright. If that’s the case, then I’ll get straight to the point” Alban sneered.

“I’m very interested in your electronics company’s MP5 patent rights, Mr. Laine. I wondering if you’re willing to give it up to me.”

Jasper’s gaze immediately fell on Alban when the man said this. Jasper’s ocean-deep gaze focused on the other’s face as if he was trying to see through what the other man’s thoughts.

Despite this, Alban maintained his kind smile, showing no indication of his true emotions.

“So your target was me all along, Mr. Ball?” Jasper said calmly.

Alban smiled and replied, “I’m a businessman, and I make decisions that benefit me the most I’m sure you understand, Mr. Laine.”

Jasper narrowed his eyes and asked, “Then what role does Old Master Hulbutt play in all this?”

Alban had finally shown his true intentions. The man's goal was not the Haddock Chamber of Commerce but rather Jasper's MP5 patents.

Jasper refused to believe that Gale was uninvolved when the man had invited him to attend the forum as the vice president of Haddock's 5 Chamber of Commerce's Waterhoof City branch.

Right now, it seemed more like a sinister setup against him.

Jasper had no idea what dirty plan Alban and Gale had plotted out

However, the truth now was that Gale had come up with an excuse to cooperate with Alban and corner him. Meanwhile, Alban had finally shown his true intentions and was about to make a move.

Jasper had only come to this forum conference in return for an asset in the form of Gale's favor. However, only now did he realize that the old and sly man was backstabbing him.

"We're talking about a deal between us, Mr. Laine," Alban sneered and said, ignoring Jasper's 5 question.

“Deal between us? Is there even a deal to be made? The MP5 patent rights, was it? Sure, 1 billion US Dollars, and I’ll give it to you when you hand me the money. I can give you all my production lines and my factory area too if you want,” Jasper said calmly.

Alban’s smile slowly vanished and he replied forcefully, “It would do you no good to be so temperamental, young man. Being emotional will do you no good, Mr. Laine.”

“Being setup is only normal in the business world and there’s nothing wrong with getting caught. At the very least, it shows you that you’re worth being targeted. It’s truly tragic for people who aren’t even worth the effort for us to scheme against.”

“So I should thank you then, for deeming me valuable?” Jasper commented calmly.

Alban smiled and said, “I understand that you’re unhappy, but I have a way to calm you down.”

With that, Alban waved a hand to gesture to someone behind him. That person approached with a document in hand, which he handed to Jasper immediately.

Jasper calmed down and took the document to take a good look at it.

He knew that this was something important if Alban was so certain it would make him surrender.

As expected, Jasper frowned slightly at the contents of the first page.

“This is the risk evaluation I commissioned Harbor City’s most powerful architectural office to do on the World Financial Center’s main building. We realized that according to your design, the building has a huge construction risk.

“Then again, this is just an evaluation, and this is just some risk. Nothing is certain.”

“The building might collapse before you’re done with construction, perhaps after it is complete, or perhaps it’ll never collapse at all. ”

Alban’s soft voice sounded by Jasper’s ear.

“But who knows and who cares?”

“I’m sure you’re very well aware, Mr. Laine, that if I release this statement today, the Waterhoof City City Government will surely call for construction of the World Financial Center to stop. Be it out of precaution, or consideration of actual risk factors.

“After all, it would be great news if this huge construction was a success, but also a huge problem if anything goes wrong. Do you think they’ll let you risk it?”

Jasper looked up at Alban calmly and asked, “What can this document alone prove?”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1092

“Nothing much, but it’s enough to stall your construction for at least half a year. You’ll have to pay for to undergo new evaluations every day and those expenses alone are enough to render any real estate comp any bankrupt.

“You have to know that this isn’t the only issue your real estate company is facing. I heard that an overseas investment bank is supporting many other competitors in Southeast Province to launch a comprehensive attack on JW Real Estates too.

“At such a time, the tallest building in the world, the World Financial Center is JW Real Estates’ most important project. Even if you manage to continue construction half a year later, times would’ve changed. Can JW Real Estate even survive that long?”

Alban had a confident smile on his face as he patted Jasper’s shoulder and said gently, “Rising up comes with a price, young man.

“While the country’s market is huge, there are only so many pieces of the pie. You and your JW are rising too fast and you’re interfering with too many people’s interests. People don’t want another greedy businessman on the already saturated market.

“This is only the first lesson I’m teaching you, so you understand the most important rule in the business world.

“Be humble and keep a low profile when it comes to business. Being too arrogant will only result in everyone working together to get rid of you.”

Jasper looked at Alban quietly and asked, “I’d like to know who this ‘everyone’ refers to, Mr. Ball.”

Alban laughed out loud and said, “Is that what’s important? No. What’s important now is whether you agree to this trade or not.”

Jasper’s expression was solemn.

This was the biggest trap he found himself in ever since he started his business, excluding the loss he made when Harbor City and Quantum Funds had a conflict. This was also the first time he had made an error in his calculations, which was mainly because Gale’s setup had caught him off guard.

Jasper was not a god, and there would always be situations when the unexpected arose.

Still, he had to make a decision now.

Alban would not give him the time and chance to think it through.

Ever since Jasper stepped foot into this asset forum conference, he walked himself into a huge net made just for him.

At the same time, Henry was currently smoking under the non-smoking sign and ignoring the exasperated gazes of the servers around him. He looked over at Jasper and frowned slightly.

'Did something go wrong for my infidel brother-in-law?'

'Did something happen that he can't quite handle?'

Henry pondered. This was the first time he was seeing such a dark expression on Jasper's face. In contrast, there was a silly smile on Alban's face as he sat next to Jasper and talked to the other. The more Henry looked at that smile, the angrier Young Master Law felt.

Just then, Jasper's gaze fell on him.

Henry did not know how, but something clicked in his mind when the two locked eyes. His mind suddenly cleared and he instantly understood.

It was as if a voice was telling him that his infidel brother-in-law needed him!

Young Master Law tossed his cigarette away and snuffed it out with his foot, ignoring the small black burnt hole on the expensive carpet underneath his feet. Then, Henry walked over to the panel on stage.

Young Master Law was in an extremely good mood as he ignored the hopeless look of the few servers behind him as they stared at the carpet.

'The day has come, where I become my infidel brother-in-law's savior!'

'I'll show you today how cool your brother-in-law can be!'

Life at The Top – Chapter 1093

“Excuse me, sir. This is the platform, you can't simply come up here.”

A bodyguard stood in front of Henry and said expressionlessly.

Henry grinned joyfully, “F*ck you. As if there's anywhere I can't go. Move out of my way!”

The bodyguard frowned slightly. Henry's arrogance told him that this was a man none of the bodyguards around the venue could afford to offend, so he replied patiently, “My apologies, sir. Please do not make it difficult for me.”

“Who the hell are you? You think you're worth my effort to trouble?”

Henry felt extremely irritated whenever he saw someone from Seatresures International, so he said this with a dark look on his face. When he realized that the bodyguard did not move, Henry was immediately pissed off.

Considering Henry's status, a mere bodyguard was not worth his anger.

Hence, Henry looked up at the platform and Alban staring back at him with a wary expression. He grinned as he said darkly, "Oi, Ball. Are you sure you want your dogs to hold me back?"

"Either let me come up or I'll turn and leave now."

Henry's words were simple and direct, but also very effective.

Alban's expression darkened and he waved his hand. "Let him up."

The bodyguard let out a sigh of relief. Despite how Henry talked to his boss, the man in question did not get angry. Because of this, this bodyguard knew that this young man was not someone he could afford to anger. It was great news that he could escape the scene now.

Henry walked up onto the stage as if he owned the place and chuckled at Alban. "Not bad, so you oldies do know your limits. Just think of how troublesome it'd be if I had to call my dad so late at night."

Alban's expression was extremely stormy.

He was a huge businessman who presided over many large provinces in the southeast region. People both his age and younger treated him with the utmost respect. Yet, before Henry, he had none of the dignity and power of a bigshot.

Was Henry dignified?

No!

Did he have a plan?

Also no. At least not right now.

Also no. At least not right now.

However, Henry's threat to call his dad was enough to keep Alban in his place and unable to make a move.

To be honest, all enterprises listed on Harbor Stocks survived by pleasing the four richest families. This was especially true for the Law family, the one with the deepest roots and the best relationship with the mainland.

Henry looked at Jasper and scratched his head.

He could tell that Jasper needed him to come over, but he had no idea what exactly he should do.

Even so, Henry was smart enough not to ask Jasper this in front of Alban.

“My dad’s looking for you!”

Hence, Henry had no other option but to use his dad, the man far away in Harbor City.

As far as Henry was concerned, the first thing he had to do was get rid of Alban. If he could not be gotten rid of, then Henry would create the opportunity to speak to Jasper alone.

His simple mindset was precisely what Jasper needed right now.

“Right now?” Jasper asked, intentionally sounding confused.

“Of course!” Henry felt prideful when he saw the praise in Jasper’s eyes.

Jasper sighed and stood up, turning to Alban. “Mr. Law’s looking for me, Mr. Ball, so could I leave and call him back? Perhaps give me some time to consider your proposal as well.”

Alban’s expression was icy and the corner of his lips twitched.

Even an idiot could tell that Jasper and Henry were acting, but there was nothing Alban could do about it.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1094

“What’s the point in delaying this by a few minutes, Jasper? I can tell you right now that if you disagree, I’ll release what I have on hand no matter who comes over!”

Jasper smiled at Alban’s words and said, “I’ll see you in a bit.”

Jasper then left the stage with Henry in tow. Henry glared at Alban from the corner of his eye before he left and said, “You think I lied when I told you that my dad’s looking for Jasper, don’t you, old man?”

“How dare you think that I’m lying. If he wants to, my dad can fly here overnight and beat the sh*t out of you! Look at your stupid f*cking face, thinking you’re so powerful.”

With that, Henry followed Jasper off the stage bossily Without sparing Alban, who was shaking in anger, another glance.

Alban ground his molars together, his gaze horrifyingly dark. The man slammed his fist on the table as his legs twitched in infuriation.

The plan was flawless, and Jasper was supposed to be defenseless.

Yet, no one had expected the most volatile variable, Henry, to suddenly appear.

In terms of tricks, Henry could hardly win against the group of crafty men in this scenario. However, Alban could do nothing since Henry had a powerful dad and an even more powerful grandfather supporting him. Hence, Alban had no other choice but to concede while facing him, albeit very angrily.

“I’d like to see what you can come up with in these few minutes, Jasper! You can’t run from this!” Alban growled wretchedly.

Henry followed Jasper into one of the conference hall's lounges. He had just entered when he saw Jasper's frigid expression.

"Holy sh*t, what's wrong? Something really happened, didn't it? You look like you want to kill someone." Henry said.

Jasper took a deep breath, and in one brief moment, he broke down everything that happened.

Gale had sold him out, which was something he definitely would take revenge on.

The most troublesome matter now was Alban and the document on hand.

Jasper was confident that there was nothing wrong with the World Financial Center's design since he had multiple specialized companies check it for him. This was an investment of tens of billions, after all, and Jasper was not such an idiot to act without making precautions.

He had already spent 100 million on design, and a few chief engineers from Waterhoof City Design Institute had spent more than a month reviewing it. Jasper even invited the top-notch design team in the industry from Swallow Capital to review it once more to ensure that no problems would arise.

The most difficult to deal with now was this document. It was an evaluation by the most powerful architectural office in Harbor City, so even if it was filled with nonsense, the power behind this office's statement was just as Alban had stated. Releasing it would surely invoke doubt.

Waterhoof City City Government would request JW Real Estates to pause construction just to be cautious.

Moreover, it would be difficult to pick up construction once again after it was halted.

Throughout this lengthy period, Jasper would have to invest maddening amounts of money every day.

This would easily and directly cause the downfall of an already pressured JW Real Estates.

"This is hard," Jasper said after a long period of silence.

Henry did not understand what was going on and he snickered, "I didn't know there were things you found hard. Don't worry and just do it. If we can't handle it, then I'll go back and ask my dad for help."

Jasper paced around before he exhaled and said, “We might just have to ask your dad for help about this.”

Henry’s eyes widened in disbelief. “We’re really asking him? We haven’t even tried yet, so how’d you know we can’t do it?”

“You’re right.” Jasper nodded as if agreeing with Henry.

Henry looked joyful and he answered excitedly, “Then let’s go and screw them over. If we can’t, then we’ll call Dad.”

“No, we’ll call Old Master Law immediately.”

Jasper’s words were serious, and Henry gaped in shock.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1095

Henry already thought that it was shameless to ask his father for help.

Because of this, he did not expect Jasper to go straight for the ultimate move. However, having spent so long with Jasper, Henry knew that the man had his own reason behind everything he did.

Thus, Henry did not waste any time and immediately pulled out his phone. After dialing his grandfather's private number, he tossed his phone to Jasper.

It was late at night, but the phone was connected in no time.

"Is this Henry?" The old master's voice sounded from the other end of the line. Jasper replied softly, "It's me, Jasper, Old Master Law. I'm sorry for disrupting your rest so late at night."

Old Master Law's laughter echoed through the line and his tone turned even more gentle. "It's alright. Go ahead and tell me what's wrong."

Old Master Law knew that Jasper would not seek him out lightly without a good reason. Something troublesome must have arisen if Jasper was looking for him.

With that, Jasper recounted the essentials of the whole situation.

Old Master Law muttered softly after Jasper was done, "It's quite troublesome indeed. How do you want me to help?"

Jasper replied grimly, "I can't give in, Old Master Law. If I do, then I'll be placed in a completely passive stance after this."

The old master agreed with Jasper and he said, "You're right. Standing firm now means you'll still be able to turn this game around. If you give in, then they will have control over whether you live or die."

"The construction of the World Financial Center cannot be halted if this report gets released to the public, Old Master Law," Jasper said.

Old Master Law chuckled and replied, "Don't worry. Do as you wish."

Jasper let out a sigh of relief when he heard the old master's assurance. Jasper then said rather remorsefully, "I'm really sorry I have to trouble you for help all the time, Old Master Law."

"I'm growing old and I can't fight these battles anymore. The future will belong to you youths, so until you've fully grown up, isn't it our responsibility as your elders to watch out for and protect you while we're still alive?"

At that, Jasper glanced at Henry, who was yawning beside him.

In all honesty, Jasper did get envious of Henry sometimes. He wondered if Henry had saved the universe in his last life to be blessed with such a great life in this.

“I understand. I won’t disturb your rest any longer, Old Master Law. I’ll get to work now,” Jasper said.

Jasper hung up the phone and handed it back to Henry, his entire aura completely different now.

It was as if the confident Jasper had walked out of the difficult situation and finally returned.

“How’d it go? Do we have permission to show off?” Henry took the phone and asked excitedly.

The corner of Jasper’s lips lifted up as he said, “Let’s go!”

At the same time, Old Master Law had also put his phone down in his hilltop villa located in Harbor City.

After a moment of thought, Old Master Law lifted the phone and said unhappily, "Connect me to Swallow Capital's specialized line."

More than ten minutes later, Old Master Law made another call.

It took a long time before this call was connected.

On the other end was Gale's rather exhausted voice.

"It is late, Old Tom. Is something wrong?"

Old Master Law replied calmly, "Gale, Jasper's a youth I value deeply. If you're going to be so shameless so as to target my youngster personally, then I'll come down and play with you too, hmm?"

Gale was stunned for a moment before he quickly said, "Where is this coming from, Old Tom? Perhaps there has been a misunderstanding."

“You know better than I do whether there’s been a misunderstanding or not. You’re the one among our generation that likes to jump around and ignore the fact that you’re old. But since that’s your personal issue, I won’t interfere.

“But don’t you dare extend your slimy hands onto my people. I beat and left you crippled once back then, and I can beat and leave you crippled again. Don’t test me.

“I already put in a word with the people in Swallow Capital. If Waterhoof City truly has any apprehension about Jasper’s World Financial Center, then I’ll tell Jasper and he can move his tallest building in the world over to Harbor City! Waterhoof City can be a coward who is constantly afraid of the seizing once-in-a-lifetime opportunities, but Harbor City will not be the same!

“I won’t waste time asking you which questionable people you’ve been in contact with despite already being so old, but I stand by what I said. Know your limits, or I won’t be blamed for turning against you at such an old age.”

Gale’s snow-white brows twitched and he replied slowly, “Is it worth turning against me over a youngster’s small matters, Old Tom? There’s nothing wrong with putting a young man through more training and difficulty.”

“I will train my own youngsters. I don’t need old men with ulterior motives like you to point fingers.”

“Everyone in Harbor City knows that Jasper’s the man in his generation whom I value most. Those old men know better to make a move themselves, so they had their children and grandchildren look for you instead. Your eyesight must’ve gotten worse with age, since you’re being used and you still don’t know it.”

“As I said before, this issue ends here.” Gale replied grimly, “I’m afraid that Jasper of yours won’t back down without revenge. It wouldn’t be enough for him if I just stopped here, would it?”

“You’re the one who sold him out first and now you’re forbidding a young man from having a temper? So what if he comes for you if he’s angry? So, you’re angry? Come for me then! ”

With that, Old Master Law hung up the phone.

Gale heard the static of a disconnected line on the other end of the call and ground his molars as he roared, “None of you are sensible! Who are you to talk about me, old man? Why don’t you take a look at how biased you’re being!”

After the second call, Old Master Law then slowly pulled out a tobacco pipe and smoked for a long time.

The study doors were pushed open to reveal a personal care worker who said caringly, “Old Master Law, the doctor said you can’t smoke.”

“Okay, okay, I’ll stop,” Old Master Law laughed aloud like a child, but he was still reluctant to put the pipe down.

“Could you please leave for a moment? I still need to make a call,” Old Master Law said.

The personal care worker nodded and reminded, “I’ll be back in half an hour. Don’t let me catch you smoking then, okay?”

Old Master Law put the pipe down once the study doors closed, and he picked up the phone again.

This time Old Master Law only said one sentence to the person on the other end of the line.

“You’re going too far.”

The line was quiet for a moment before a voice rang out.

“I understand.”

Old Master Law hung up the phone afterward.

It was a conversation of no more than six words, but the fate of the situation was already decided.

Old Master Law smacked his lips as he smoked from his pipe. His gaze was deep as he stared out at the colorful mountain View outside.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1096

At the venue of the forum conference. Jasper and Henry walked out of the room to see Alban bringing Dudley around as he talked with a group of people.

The father-son duo was glowing and in a great mood.

Jasper's appearance immediately garnered the attention of a large crowd of people.

Dudley saw Jasper as well. He sneered and stepped up to say, "So, have you considered it yet, Jasper? My dad and I don't have that much patience for you to take your own sweet time and think. You better give me an answer now."

Dudley must have known all of Alban's plans.

The former felt extremely exhilarated now as he looked at Jasper.

"Haha, Jasper. You would never have predicted today, hmm? Let me tell you, this is only the beginning. There's only more fun in store for you from here on out!"

Dudley's expression grew even more wretched as he said sinisterly, "This is what you get for being prideful and showing off! I'd like to see how you're going to continue acting so prideful! I'll make you kneel in front of me once you've lost everything and have you lick my shoes!"

Jasper tilted his head at Dudley's arrogance and asked seriously, "Are you sick in the head?"

Dudley was taken aback when he heard Jasper say this.

"What did you say?!" Dudley growled in mortification.

"He asked if you're sick in the head, you stupid f*cker. Can you not understand human speech?" Henry raised his hand to push Dudley's head, an action akin to a dad lecturing his son. The push had Dudley staggering backward.

"All you do is yap all day. Ask adult as you a question and all you need to do is answer yes or no. But looking at your stupid face I'd say it's highly likely you're badly sick."

Dudley first took a verbal hit from Jasper before being pushed in the head by Henry; He had no idea what was going on. Dudley felt a rush of blood to his head as he shoved Henry's chest, roaring, "Motherf*cker!"

Henry's physique was sturdy and instead of making Henry move, Dudley's shove only caused himself to stagger a few steps backward.

"Hehe..."

Henry narrowed his eyes and sneered at Dudley.

He interlocked his fingers and stretched them, causing his knuckles to crack. With a wretched smile, Henry walked over to Dudley and said, "I was just frustrated about not having a reason to beat you up. What an attentive little sh*t you are, sending yourself over on a silver platter."

Dudley finally realized what he had done, and he watched Henry walk toward him with a twisted smile like the main Villain of a movie. He himself was akin to a weak and powerless Victim waiting to be destroyed by the villain.

Dudley did not have any desire to fight Henry when he recalled how terrifying the man was in a fight. Terrified, Dudley screamed, "What are you doing! Don't come closer!"

Dudley might have felt that his cries were useless, so he turned in Alban's general direction and shouted, "Dad! Save me!"

This shout attracted the attention of more than half the attendees present.

Henry almost chuckled joyfully out loud. “So f*cking useless. I haven’t even started and you’re already screaming for your dad?”

With that, Henry raised his hand and wrapped it around Dudley’s neck. He sneered. “But your dad isn’t powerful enough. You think I wouldn’t dare to hit you just because you called for him?”

With that, he slapped Dudley across the face.

The loud and crisp slap sounded through the room, which was promptly followed by numerous gasps.

Alban had let someone hit his son?

Everyone was intrigued, so they came over to get a closer look.

Under countless pairs of eyes, Dudley felt extremely humiliated.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1097

Dudley struggled like mad. “Henry! F*cking let go of me!”

Yet, no matter how he struggled, Dudley could not fight out of Henry’s grip. He was like a powerless chick.

Just then, Alban walked over with a dark look on his face.

He glared at his son first. Despite how Alban had reminded him not to offend Henry, his useless offspring had still angered the man anyway, which made him extremely upset.

This was the perfect time to force Jasper to surrender, yet here his son was, getting into trouble with Henry. He was causing unnecessary issues now.

“Mr. Law, this, isn’t very appropriate, is it?”

While he did want to beat Dudley up, the latter was still his son, and many people were currently looking at them. Thus, Alban had no other choice but to suppress his anger and get his son out first.

“Hey, old man. How about you ask your son what he did first before you ask me to let him go, hmm?”

Henry patted Dudley’s face as he said. “This little sh*t’s been going on motherf*cking this and motherf*cker that, he just kept bringing my mom into the conversation. You see, my mom passed early on and she’s a taboo topic between me and my dad. But who knows how many times this son of yours has involved her? Is this how you educate your child?”

Alban’s eyelid twitched and he looked at Dudley extremely darkly.

Dudley was currently bent at his waist while Henry kept his arms around his neck. He seemed like a stray dog that had been tied and hoisted up, making him look extremely embarrassing.

Dudley wanted to cry, but could not do so. He shouted, “It’s a habit, I didn’t mean it.”

“So what if it’s a habit? Who taught you the habit of involving mothers into your curses, hmm?” Henry sneered.

Alban took a deep breath. He knew that there was no point being reasonable with trust-fund rascals like Henry, so he could only turn to Jasper.

“Mr. Laine, isn’t this trick of yours a little too lowly?” Alban asked grimly.

Jasper replied curiously, “Your son’s lack of respect is the issue here. He was the one who offended Henry first. I don’t see anything wrong with Henry teaching him a lesson in your place, so how am I the one acting lowly?”

Alban clenched his jaw in infuriation.

Now, it was not just Henry-Jasper was being unreasonable as well.

Despite this, there was nothing Alban could do.

After all, he son was exactly the kind of person to have insulted Henry.

If they were in any other setting, Alban might not have cared too much. However, to have Henry stubbornly exploit this issue in their important event would only leave to Alban and his son being embarrassed.

Hence, Alban could only grit his teeth and say, “Jasper, Mr. Law, let’s leave this matter for now. Let’s talk about this slowly, as we still have something to settle, don’t we?”

Jasper chuckled and said calmly, “Publicize and release that report as you wish, Mr. Ball!”

“I wouldn’t dare to claim that all my properties are flawless, but I’m sure it can survive an investigation on the issue of its quality. If a mere evaluative report is enough to cause the downfall of my World Financial Center, then I might as well not construct it at all.”

Alban’s pupils contracted instantly at the words.

Jasper had actually spoken about this incident in front of so many pairs of eyes and ears.

It had been no more than twenty minutes and a phone call in the adjacent room between Jasper’s current stance and his sour expression from when he first received the report.

Just who had Jasper contacted, and what had been said, for this man to grow so fearless in the space of around a dozen minutes?

Alban suddenly felt lost.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1098

Suddenly, the crowd surrounding them in hopes of overhearing some gossip was in an uproar upon hearing Jasper's words.

It had long been public knowledge that the tallest building in the world would be constructed in Waterhoof City.

Many people also knew that the primary backer behind this tower was Jasper.

This was especially true for the people present at this forum conference. Most attendees were from the Teo Chamber of Commerce, excluding the few small fry from the Haddock Chamber of Commerce and the rest of the so-called experts like Perry.

Regardless of identity or stance, none of them were normal civilians.

So many things immediately came to their minds when they heard the news of Waterhoof City's World Financial Center.

"Mr. Laine, I believe I heard you say something about an issue with the World Financial Tower that's currently under construction? Would you mind elaborating on that?" A reporter mustered the courage to ask.

Jasper looked over to find that, coincidentally, it was again the reporter from South Somer Commercial Post.

"There's nothing wrong with the World Financial Center, of course. The construction of the building and its design was approved by the Waterhoof City Design Institute, and was also reviewed in-depth by a team of national experts from Swallow Capital!"

"This is a large project, after all, and while it does mean the world to me, it's also greatly valued by the government. There's no way anything could go wrong with it."

Jasper smiled and glanced at Alban, who had a dark look on his face. Then, Jasper continued, "But Mr. Ball had suddenly pulled out a so-called evaluative report just now and exaggeratedly claimed that there's an issue with the World Financial Center's design. This, I don't understand. So perhaps we should let Mr. Ablan explain it in detail."

After Jasper was done, everyone, regardless of background, turned to look at Alban intently.

Even a majority of businesspeople from Teo were not informed of this in advance, so they were greatly displeased to hear it from Jasper first.

Meanwhile, the reporters were in an uproar.

“Mr. Alban, could you respond to Mr. Lain’s claim?”

“Mr. Alban, all of the World Financial Center’s procedures are legal and rule-abiding. This is something recognized by the Waterhoof City City Government and Swallow Capital’s Design Institute. Could I ask why you would commission someone else to write up an evaluation on a Tower that has nothing to do with you?”

The question from the South Somer Commercial Post’s reporter caused Alban’s expression to sour immediately.

However, Alban was still a commercial hero who had experienced huge issues before, so after his initial shock, the man immediately recomposed himself.

After clearing his throat, Alban faced countless pairs of eyes and answered calmly.

“No matter what Mr. Laine claims, there is indeed a problem with the World Financial Center. To prove this, I have a professional evaluative report from Harbor City’s best GenAll Architectural Office on hand.”

“Just ask around and you will know of GenAll Architectural Office’s power. Harbor City’s Conference Center and the Amethyst Gold Square were both designed by their team. This office is ranked seven in the world’s top ten architectural and design offices.”

“As for the question you asked about why I would commission an evaluation on the World Financial Center even though I’m an outsider... Simple, because it’s going to be one of the many faces of our country in the future!”

“This is the tallest building in the world. It’s going to be closely related to the glory and dignity of all us Somer descents. Mr. Laine won’t be the only one embarrassed if anything goes wrong with this construction, but rather all us Somer descents. We would be made into the laughing stock of the international audience.”

After saying that, Alban sneered and glanced at Jasper. “Mr. Laine, I wonder if you’re satisfied with this reply.”

“Whether it’s a satisfactory reply or not doesn’t matter to me. No matter how you want to explain yourself, the truth will always remain,” Jasper replied calmly.

Alban harrumphed and glared at Jasper sinisterly, “Mr. Laine, it looks like you’re planning to stay stubbornly wrong until the very end.”

“I don’t need others trying to direct my path, regardless of how right or wrong it is.”

At that, Alban laughed out loud and replied, “Good, you’re courageous. But when it comes to doing business, young man, there are times where you have to take a step back and give in. Stubbornly walking forward will only result in a greater loss.”

With that, Alban turned his head to announce to everyone, “As a man of Somer descent, I have a duty to hand my report over to the Waterhoof City City Government when I realize that something is wrong with our prospective tallest building in the world.

“I believe that the City Government will sincerely consider it and treat the matter seriously. Or at least, pause the construction of the World Financial Center before they reach a clear conclusion.”

“Whether this project can continue will be at the government’s discretion. However, if there’s something wrong with Mr. Laine’s design of JW Real Estates’ most important project, then it poses the question, could there be any other problems with products from his other companies?

“For example... the MP4 and MP5 product that’s currently a hot topic within the country as well as JW Real Estates other projects.”

When he mentioned this, everyone's expressions changed.

Alban seemed like he was launching a comprehensive attack on Jasper.

The man had managed to involve Jasper's companies involved in the real estate and electronics industries with just one sentence.

His intentions were malicious!

How was Jasper going to react to that?

Everyone looked at Jasper.

Under the immense pressure, Jasper was unaffected while his expression remained unfazed.

"All of JW's subsidiaries' businesses is conducted with a conscience."

“There will not be an issue with the World Financial Center, nor will its construction be halted. All work will follow its predetermined schedule.”

“As for the other products, everyone here is welcome to supervise. Should there be anything wrong with its quality, please do seek JW Company for compensation as per the relevant regulations. This is something JW promised and something that will certainly be adhered to!”

Jasper’s words were powerful and his voice resounded throughout the conference venue. He had not raised his voice, yet it seemed to have the strange ability to shake people’s hearts.

The people around could not help but feel that Jasper’s words were reliable. It was as if he would never lie about the quality of his products.

Just then, Alban laughed out loud.

“Hahaha. Jasper, you must’ve gone mad. Or perhaps you’re just so baselessly arrogant. “You must be delusional if you think your World Financial Center can continue its construction once I release this report! At the very least, you’ll need to reinvestigate the issue, which will take half or an entire year! Your real estate company will have gone bankrupt by then!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1099

With that, it became clear how this incident would play out.

None of the people present were stupid and they were well versed in such tricks.

Thus, they also knew that Alban was going to act on his words.

“Hey, Jasper. Perhaps you shouldn’t be so stubborn. It won’t benefit you in the long run.”

A man said, shaking his head slightly. His expression was filled with impartial rationality.

Another lightly chubby man chuckled with him and said,

“I told you long ago, Jasper. You’re still going to have to respect your seniors when it comes to doing business. Being so young and vigorous will only result in a huge loss! Our Mr. Ball’s known for being generous and forgiving, so be humble and apologize. Perhaps then this tense situation might cool down.”

“That’s right. We’re all doing this for you. Or are you really trying to halt the construction process? You’re going to be the only loser here!”

At that, Henry who had been holding Dudley in a deadlock silently all this while was elated.

“Motherf*cker. Shut your stupid trap, I get it if everyone else is brainless, but I hate f*ckers who love to claim that everything they do is for the other’s sake.”

“F*ckers like you make me want to distance myself. What if I get affected by your bad luck when a god strikes you with lightning, hmm?”

Henry’s words caused the chubby man’s expression to change. He turned to Henry and said unkindly, “Who are you? Your vocabulary is full of profanities. How can uneducated people like you come in here?”

Henry snickered and tossed Dudley away. Then, he walked over to the chubby man bossily and asked in an arrogant tone, “Did you just call me uneducated?”

The chubby man was just one of Alban's lackeys. When he saw a tall and broad Henry walk over to interrogate him, the man suddenly felt a little guilty.

“Oi...”

“You motherf*cking trash, who're you calling 'Oi'?”

Henry then raised his hand to slap the man across his face.

No one had expected Henry to hit someone so casually in front of everyone else.

The slap rang out loud and clear, causing everyone else to shiver.

The chubby man who had been slapped roared in mortification, “Oi, motherf*cker...”

Slap!

He was slapped again.

“I said no ‘Oi’s. Didn’t you hear me? And you complained about my profanities? What’s with that last word you just said then, hmm?” Henry sneered.

The slightly chubby man was going crazy after he had been slapped twice. He looked over at Alban only to see the latter with a sinister expression, but showing no indication that he was about to step in.

Alban wanted to step in. After all, this was his lackey that was getting beat up so he was the one getting humiliated here.

However, he was powerless. He could not step in when Henry had beat his son up either.

“The f*ck are you looking at, huh? You want that old man to save you?” Henry said with a sneer.

Henry was the devil incarnate right now as he oozed with utter arrogance. People felt terrified when they looked at him.

Unfortunately, there was nothing anyone could do. Even Alban kept his mouth shut, so who else would dare to step up and put themselves in the line of fire?

Poking the chubby man's face, Henry said haughtily, "There's nothing wrong with being someone's lackey, but it is your fault for choosing the wrong owner to follow. All you know is to talk shit and claim that you're doing things for other people's sake. The f*ck do you think you are, huh? Who're you acting so derisive for?"

The venue fell silent after the two slaps and the harsh scolding. The chubby man's heavy panting was the only thing that could be heard.

Henry pouted when he saw the man look down silently and scolded, "Useless. You don't even know how to fight back. What use is a lackey like you?"

After this, Henry turned to look at Dudley.

Dudley shivered after he had been released from Henry's devilish hold and he instinctively went to hide behind Alban.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1100

Dudley, a serious young man in his twenties, was terrified.

Meanwhile, Alban's expression was extremely sour.

He felt even more ashamed when Henry gave him a meaningful chuckle.

“Why’re you hiding behind me? It’s not like he can eat you alive!” Alban scolded disappointedly.

He was afraid that news of Alban’s useless son would spread across the country after tonight.

Dudley shuddered but did not dare to talk back, though he did bottle some resentment within him.

After all, he did not see his dad stopping Henry when the other beat him up silly.

With a harrumph, Alban lost his patience. He knew that the situation would end up looking like a circus if Henry was allowed to continue wreaking havoc.

“I know that this is a play you and Henry came up with, Jasper. But for what? You think I’ll be afraid just because of such an insignificant trick? You think I won’t dare to hand this report in?”

“You’re too naive if that’s the case!”

Alban then pulled out his phone and sneered at Jasper as he said, "If you're going to remain stubborn until you die, then I'll send you to your grave myself!"

With that, he dialed a number.

Jasper looked at him calmly the entire time, but he did not make any move to stop the man. In fact, Jasper seemed to be looking forward to Alban making this call.

The call connected and Alban spoke solemnly, "Immediately hand the report to the Waterhoof City Government! Inform me once there's an update!"

With that, Alban hung up the phone.

He looked at Jasper with sinister glee and sneered. "You said that construction of the World Financial Center won't be halted, right, Jasper? Just you wait. In a short while, someone will contact you and Waterhoof City will put an emergency stop to your construction!"

After saying this, the people who were deterred and startled by Henry's anger were immediately energized again.

"Haha. I wonder how this stupid Laine f*cker will look later!"

“Yeah. This is what he gets for acting cool!”

“These tricks of him are nothing to Mr. Alban!”

Dudley had also gotten excited with them.

He glared at Jasper resentfully and opened his mouth to say something. The words stopped on the tip of his tongue when he sensed Henry’s dark gaze on him.

Dudley shivered and turned to Henry, saying aggrieved and angrily, “Why’re you always targeting me?”

Henry shrugged and replied, “Because you’re stupid.”

“You- ! ”

Dudley was enraged but the previous lesson Henry gave him made him too terrified to throw a tantrum now.

He knew that Henry had no qualms about rushing over and throwing him to the floor before beating him up. “Just you wait! You two won’t get to act so pridefully any longer!”

After a long moment of thought, Dudley finally managed to come up with a useless retort.

“Moron!”

Henry snorted.

After the conversation played out, Alban’s phone rang.

Everyone stopped mocking Jasper to look at Alban expectantly; Even the man himself was smiling widely.

Alban waved his phone display which showed the caller information in front of Jasper and laughed out loud. “It’s too late for you to regret it now! ”

With that, Alban accepted the call. To highlight his capabilities, Alban had also put the call on loudspeaker mode.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1101

Alban glanced at Jasper coldly when he put the call on loudspeaker. His gaze was filled with mockery.

Alban was not the only one. Excluding Jasper and Henry, it seemed like everyone else was siding against Jasper and waiting to see him be made a fool of.

It seemed as if this was a definite outcome.

Everyone held their breaths as they waited for the person on the other end of the call to speak.

A second later, a man's voice echoed from the speakers. However, instead of the excitement and glee people imagined, the man's voice was filled with fright and disbelief.

“Mr. Ball, we handed the report in, but it didn't go as we planned!”

Alban's heart skipped a beat, but before he could say anything, the man on call continued.

“The city government said that the World Financial Center’s entire design and construction process had strictly followed the proper procedures and was approved by both professional teams in Waterhoof City’s and the National Design Institue in Swallow Capital. He said that there was no way anything could go wrong with such a huge project...”

Alban’s heart began to beat erratically and he raged.

“No way! If nothing else but for prudence sake, a report from such an authoritative architectural and design office such as ours should still have caused construction to be temporarily halted and fully investigated even if its initial process had been supervised!”

“That’s what I said too, but the city government, they said... they said...”

While the person talking was not physically present, everyone could tell from his tone that he was terrified. Alban was enraged when his subordinate started to stutter at such a crucial time. “What’re you stammering on about? Get straight to the point! What did the city government say?”

“The city government thanks you for your enthusiasm, Mr. Ball, and they will communicate with JW Real Estates to bring together a group of experts to review the building’s design and construction plan. However, the construction will continue during this review process.”

When he heard this, Alban was close to spitting blood out in infuriation-especially when he heard him say 'thanks you for your enthusiasm.'

He had been in the business world for more than forty years and he had partaken in commercial battles of all sizes. Alban, who had always come out victorious before this, now felt lightheaded.

He panted heavily and glared at Jasper. He did not know where went wrong for the entire situation to play out so differently.

Alban was not the only one. Everyone else was dumbfounded.

"How can this be? This makes no sense no matter how I think about it! " Said the man who was certain that Jasper's construction site would be put to stop with a stunned expression.

"Just what huge benefit did Jasper give the city government? To the point that they're willing to continue construction even in such a situation?"

"Watch your words! Don't simply say things like that. Jasper must've somehow lied to the city government!"

“Exactly! That’s the only explanation!”

“After all, it’ll be a huge mess if something was wrong with this building. This is also a report from a worldwide renowned architectural office! But instead of stopping construction, the city government even thanked Mr. Ball for his enthusiasm! This... it’s so infuriating!”

“What do you do now, Mr. Ball?” The man asked on the other end of the line, his tone sorrowful, exasperated, and indignant.

“Nothing! What else?”

Alban hung up the phone with a roar, feeling completely embarrassed now.

Henry could barely keep his glee under control and he told Alban, “You know, I think Waterhoof City City Government should really award you with an Enthusiastic Citizen award, old man.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1102

“All that effort monkeying and jumping around, yet they don’t even spare you the time of day. Hahaha. Absolutely hilarious.”

Alban's face twitched and he looked at Henry. He understood what was happening as he looked at Jasper coldly, "The Law family?!"

Jasper spoke calmly, "I wonder if you're still interested in my MP5 patented technology, Mr. Ball."

Alban clenched his jaw. He was infuriated and had the urge to rip Jasper to shreds.

"You think you're so powerful, Jasper? So what if you had the Law family's help to get through this, huh? I dare you to hide behind the Law family forever!"

Jasper chuckled, "Here's what I don't understand, Mr. Ball. If there are enemies in business, what's wrong with having friends? Even the Allied Powers in WW2 aimed to combine their strength. If you can team up with Gale to set me up, then what's wrong with me asking someone else for help?"

Alban chuckled icily and said, "Fine, then, you little brat. You win this time, but we've got plenty of time. I'd like to see if you're still so lucky next time."

"I don't think you understand, Mr. Ball." Jasper walked over to Alban lazily and leaned forward into his personal space.

Alban was currently expressionless and his face was ice cold.

“I, Jasper Laine, have never been someone who doesn’t fight back after getting hit. Perhaps you should think about how to defend yourself against my revenge, Mr. Ball.”

Alban’s expression twitched and he chuckled furiously at the taunt. “You think you’re capable just because the Law family’s saved you once? Are you even capable enough to take revenge on me?”

“I’m sure you’ll find the answer to that very soon, Mr. Ball.”

Jasper said calmly. He glanced at the report in Alban’s hand and smiled subtly, “Something’s got to be wrong for this office to suddenly come up with a nonsensical so-called evaluative report. Let’s start from there, then.”

With that, Jasper gave Grant a call.

“Oh, Laine! My old friend. It must be nighttime over at Somerland, is something the matter?” Grant’s joyful tone sounded over the phone.

Having earned 100 million US Dollars from Jasper, Grant’s influence in his team had also increased exponentially.

Grant's fame would also be known all over the world once the World Financial Center was built in the future, so he treated Jasper with the utmost respect.

"I come with a business proposal. Are you interested in Harbor City's architectural and design market?" Jasper asked calmly.

"Very much so! But this industry of ours is very territorial. If I'm right, Harbor City falls under GenAll Office's territory and they're a group of very sinister people. They're willing to do anything for the sake of money, so I can't be the first to break the rules," Grant replied.

"That's fine. From what I know, the biggest type of scandal in this architectural and design industry of yours is slandering others' designs for money, right?"

"Waterhoof City Coty Government has just received a report from GenAll Office claiming that there's a huge fault in the World Financial Center's design which might cause the main building to collapse. Here, I just gave you a reason." Jasper said calmly.

Grant was stunned, then he fumed, "Is that how arrogant the people at GenAll are getting now? They're just ranked seven in the world! I want evidence, Laine!"

"I'll email evidence to you as quick as I can, and I'll have people at Harbor City cooperate with you as well," Jasper said calmly as he watched Alban's extremely sour expression.

“Haha, Laine. I’ll send you a great gift if this is a success!”

Jasper raised the corner of his lips after he hung up the phone and asked Alban, “Do you know how I made my first sum of cash?”

Alban remained sinisterly silent.

Jasper replied slowly, as if he had asked a rhetoric question, “The stock market.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1103

“Are you threatening me-the Seatresures Group, Jasper?!” Alban scoffed and said.

“You’re absolutely ignorant! The Seatresures Group had just been listed on Harbor Stocks two years ago and its share price was twice its issuance price by the end of the first day. It’s always been the most powerful comprehensive, mainland, publicly-listed group on Harbor Stocks.

“You think you’re powerful enough to affect Seatresures?! ”

Jasper's words from earlier had more or less seized control of the situation.

Since no one had imagined him to be able to avoid the trap Alban had carefully laid out for him so easily. However, when Jasper revealed that he intended to target Seatreasures Group, everyone began to look at Jasper in slight disappointment.

"He is too young, after all. The Seatreasures Group is more than he can handle. "

"Exactly. Seatreasures Group had more than 40 billion in turnover last year and it's one of the most profitable privately-owned mainland enterprises on Harbor Stocks. Jasper must be crazy if he thinks he can attack Seatreasures Group."

"Haha, didn't he say he first made his money through the stock market? Of course, he'd take revenge through the stock market as well. Unfortunately, all his effort will be futile."

Jasper did not seem to hear any of the comments around him.

Henry was irked, though, and he glared at the people who gave out the harshest comments. Henry said icily, "Are you busybodies done blabbering? Everyone here has a mouth, but do you see them going on and on noisily?"

"Keep yapping and I will smack that month off your face!"

Those people felt furious from this humiliation after they got brutally scolded, but the previous cases deterred them from acting out no matter how angry they were.

Hence, all of them consoled themselves by repeating internally that they were a dignified person in the upper-class society and that they did not need to be calculative with insolent living- incarnations of devils.

Meanwhile, Alban continued staring at Jasper.

“Did you hear them, Jasper? What they said was only because of Seatreasures Group’s full strength. You wouldn’t dare attack Seatreasures Group!”

“Haha. You can try, but if you end up screwing yourself over, then don’t blame a senior like me for not warning you beforehand.”

In all honesty, the Seatreasures Group was very strong at the time.

Their market value might not be the highest, but their roots were thick and expansive.

As a comprehensive group that dealt with physical businesses, the Seatreasures Group was extremely capable business-wise, while their progress in other relevant industries was nothing to scoff at either. Shares of such a business were what investors called blue-chip stocks, and were worth holding on to.

Since the company had a substantial performance history, the share price of such a company would not usually drop. Even if it did, any oscillations would follow the larger market trend, and it would not lose enough money to require them to pull out of the market. It was extremely difficult destroying a company like that.

Yet, Jasper was confident that he could do it.

This was thanks to his unique advantage of having memories of his past life.

Jasper could clearly remember that in the year 2001, the country government finally had enough of all the shady business that went on in the pharmaceutical industry. These pharmaceutical sales representatives would hide amongst the hospital's medical staff, causing medicine bought in hospitals to be at least twice as expensive as the same medication in normal pharmacies outside. Some doctors without professional ethics would even prescribe patients with high commission rebate medication, completely disregarding their treatment effect.

Thus, a policy had been issued, hitting the medical system in the country like a windstorm. This windstorm eventually swept away 80% of the country's pharmaceutical enterprises.

Seatreasures Group had started their business through pharmaceuticals, and up until now, this industry remained their main source of income.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1104

The pharmaceutical sector of the class A shares had plummeted by 50% back then!

While Seatreaures Group was badly hit on Harbor Stocks, business took a turn for the worse for them afterward as they stayed rather dormant even up until Jasper's reincarnation.

Now that the timing was right and Jasper had happened to be in this bad situation, he was determined to use this chance to get rid of Seatreaures Group.

"If you're so confident, Mr. Ball, then I guess we'll just have to see the full extent of my abilities," Jasper said coldly.

Alban snorted and raised his hand to poke Jasper. "Don't think that you're above the law just because you've got someone supporting you, young man."

"How about we make a bet? If you manage to make my Seatreaures drop by 20%, on your own and without the Law family's support, then you win."

“As a wager, I’ll give you something you can hold over Gale’s head if you win. How’s that sound?”

Jasper raised his brows and said calmly, “How curt of you to sell your teammate out even in public, Mr. Ball.”

“Teammate my foot.”

Alban scoffed. “I’m from the Teo Chamber of Commerce while Gale’s from Haddock’s. We’ve always been enemies on opposing ends. We only worked together for a common goal.

“To get rid of you, for example. He benefits, while my life becomes easier. That’s it. More to the point, it’s not like I think you’ll be able to get your hands on this intel either.

“However, the same rule goes for you. If you lose, you’ll transfer the technical research of the MP5 to me for free!”

Now, Alban finally showed his greed.

He had never given up on his desire for the MP5 patented technology.

“Deal.” Jasper nodded calmly.

“I’ll be waiting,” Alban sneered.

Jasper did not respond. He gave Henry a look and the two turned to leave.

Everyone in the room was looking at Alban now.

The man was exceptionally prideful.

As far as he was concerned, there was no way Jasper would be able to lower Seatreasures Group’s share price by 20%.

Even if he could, it would be with the Law family’s help.

Alban had no idea how much the Law family valued Jasper. However, them stepping in to prevent the delay in construction was already a very dangerous warning sign.

Hence, Alban planned to provoke Jasper as the man could not seek the Law family for help. As far as Alban was concerned, if he did this, then Jasper was dead meat and the man's future would be wrapped around his pinky.

"Haha, Jasper. There's no escaping this now!" Alban muttered to himself.

At the same time, Jasper and Henry arrived downstairs.

"Are you really just going to..." Henry was about to say something when he turned to see that Jasper was calling someone. Thus, he quickly closed his mouth.

The call connected in no time.

Jasper greeted the person on the other end of the call with a smile, "Old Master Hurlbutt, I hope I didn't disturb your rest by calling so late at night."

Henry's eyes widened when he heard Jasper. This old Hurlbutt person had just set Jasper up, yet here he was greeting him with a smile and respect.

If Henry was in his shoes, going over to this old man's house and punching his dentures out was already the kindest act Henry could do.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1105

Far away in the study of a huge manor in Suesville, Gale was brooding silently with a telephone handset in his hands. The man had lost all trace of drowsiness since he received the call from Harbor City.

“No, no, not at all. The older people get, the less they sleep. I already had a nap in the evening so I am not sleepy at all now.”

Gale replied with a crescent eyed-smile.

“You should really take good care of your health, Old Master Hurlbutt. Who knows how many people are relying on you to make a living. Not to mention that old seniors of the business are truly valuable treasures to us youths. You must take good care to ensure that nothing goes wrong with your health.”

Jasper’s calm tone sounded over the landline.

Gale furrowed his snow-white brows but his tone was still joyful and relieved when he said, “You’re still the most understanding person out there. Unlike other people who only know to anger me every day. Wouldn’t it have been great if I met you earlier?”

Jasper replied with a smile, “You’re too kind, Old Master Hurlbutt. I can’t even defend myself with the little business I have now. Had I met you earlier, Old Master Hurlbutt, I’m sure I would’ve been devoured whole and alive.”

Gale calmly commented, “Are you angry at me, sly child?”

“I had just gotten out of the forum conference and it’s only right I report to you regardless of how good or bad the outcome is. It would be a lie if I told you that I wasn’t angry. I’m still young after all, so I’m not as well-rounded and generous when it comes to many things.”

Gale suddenly chuckled.

“Haha, well then, sly child. You said that you’re here to report, so how did it go?”

Jasper replied calmly, “To you, Old Master Hurlbutt, it’s bad of course. But to me personally, it’s neither. Still, I’ve got to thank you, Old Master Hurlbutt “You’ve taught me a very valuable lesson, one that I will remember so that I don’t make the same mistakes again.”

Gale’s tone was calm and relaxed. “It’s great that you think that way. Nothing’s completely smooth-sailing in society, so it’s not necessarily a bad thing to make mistakes and lose a few times while you’re still young.”

“You’re right, Old Master Hurlbutt. I’m still young and I can afford to make mistakes. But I don’t think it’s the same for you, Old Master Hurlbutt,” Jasper said calmly.

Gale replied with a subtle smile, “So you’re planning to do something against me, then?”

“Not exactly. And even if I did have something in mind, it wouldn’t make sense for me to tell you in advance so you could prepare yourself, right?”

“Not to mention that the situation within the Haddock Chamber of Commerce is rather complex. No matter how insolent I am, I doubt I’d be arrogant enough to think that I can fight against the whole of Haddock Chamber of Commerce alone right now.”

Gale replied grimly when he heard Jasper’s claim, “So you’ll still remember what happened tonight even after you’ve grown up? Do you not think that I’ll pluck out a potential weed like you from my garden before you manage to overgrow?”

“You keep calling me a sly child, Old Master Hurlbutt, but if you allow me a moment of disrespect, you’re also a sly old man to me. Since we’re both sly, then there’s no need to keep pretending like our intentions are sincere.”

“You wouldn’t believe me if I told you I’d leave the matter be, would you? Nor would I believe you if you told me that you wouldn’t be wary of me.”

“Since neither of us believes the other, then there’s no need for lies and fake pleasantries either.”

“I called tonight for a very simple reason. Firstly, to report that the forum conference has come to an end with an outcome that is unfavorable to you but impartial to me.”

“Secondly to inform you that Alban and I have made a bet. He claimed that he has a weakness of yours I can exploit, which I am very interested in.”

Gale did not react for a long time after Jasper was done. While the latter could not see Gale’s expression from where he was, Jasper could almost guess that the old man was rather pissed now.

“It’s as he said. The Haddock and Teo Chambers of Commerce are opposing parties, and each side hopes for the downfall of the other.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1106

“You used him while he simultaneously used you, and both of you teamed up to get rid of me. Now that I’ve joined this game as well, I suppose the three of us will just be plotting against each other. Perhaps we’ll find out where our real friends and enemies lie.”

Gale was silent until he heard Jasper’s words and replied solemnly, “How about we work together?”

Jasper chuckled and said, “You really are a sly old man, Old Master Hurlbutt. It’s a shame that I’ve already paid my price and I not the kind of person to fall for the same mistake twice.”

“And you’re not afraid that I’ll work together with Alban again?” Gale asked meaningfully.

“I am, that’s why I called in advance. Be it you or anyone else behind you, Old Master Hurlbutt, I suggest you get rid of me right off the bat with the first attack. Don’t give me a chance to turn the tables and take revenge.”

“Unfortunately for you people, I’m no longer the same small wooden raft that capsizes at the slightest wave and has to be careful not to offend anyone anymore.”

Jasper hung up the phone immediately after he finished speaking.

Gale's expression darkened when he heard the static on the other end of the line.

His fury this time might surpass his rage when Old Master Law had first warned him.

He genuinely felt deeply threatened by Jasper's seemingly calm tone.

Unlike other people, Gale had long known Jasper, and the two had even partnered on many occasions before. Gale knew how dangerous Jasper could be.

Once Jasper had deemed you an enemy, he was a man of his word. Jasper always made sure to completely crush his rivals and left no room for people to reappear and cause him trouble in the future.

At this moment, Gale felt slightly remorseful.

He should not have offended Jasper over such a small issue.

“A small wooden raft, huh. I really regret not capsizing you back then. You... really have grown from that small wooden raft,” Gale murmured to himself.

...

“Overpowering.”

Henry immediately gave Jasper a thumbs up after he heard the man speak on the phone and watched him hang up. His expression was one of approval.

“There we go. We’re powerful figures, okay? There’s no need to be careful not to offend people no matter what we do. Look at you, you still get targeted no matter how cautious you are, no? So f*ck who the other person is, we’ll screw them over if we don’t like them! That’s how we live life to the fullest!”

Henry took the chance to preach his values to Jasper. Jasper stretched and said, “This incident really pissed me off. Instead of being angry at Gale backstabbing me, I’d say I’m more disappointed in myself for being too careless.”

“My path’s been too smooth thus far and I lost myself in my victories. Gale happened to teach me a lesson this time by showing me that none of the wealthy families that’s been in the country for so many generations are easy to deal with.”

“What about Alban? What do you have in store for him?” Henry asked.

“I already threatened him, so I’ll start on Seatreasures Group’s shares tomorrow! ”

“This incident blew up quite a bit and a lot of people have their eyes on me. I have to fight back and I have to hit hard, or everyone will think that my JW’s an easy target and come have their shot at attacking me.”

“I don’t have the time and patience to deal with them one by one, so what I can do is hit back so hard I deter everyone else!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1107

“Is it profitable?” Henry’s eyes sparkled as he asked.

Since Sena was listed on Nasdaq and Henry had earned a large sum of money with Jasper. This young master seemed to have gotten addicted to the idea of earning money.

He was now extremely intrigued by any situation that would potentially earn him money.

He had been nagging Jasper lately and asking him when he would fulfill his promise of bringing him along to earn another large sum.

However, it was not yet the right time for that, so Jasper did not disclose anything more to him.

After all, that was going to be a huge incident that would involve the entire world, and even change the way the world would continue to develop. Hence, Jasper was definitely not going to tell anyone about the incident until it truly happened.

“It is, but not by much. Still better than nothing, I guess. I’ll give you an account once it starts being profitable so you can transfer your funds to it. It’ll more or less pay off your airplane fuel costs.”

“I heard that your plane’s been docked at the airport ever since you bought it, right?”

Henry replied resentfully after he heard Jasper’s question, “I wish I could fly it too but it’s too f*cking expensive. Every flight costs at least a few hundred thousand Harbor Dollars and I even want to sell that f*cking thing now. It’s really not something I can afford to keep.”

“That’s why I told you to start your own business. I’m pretty sure your dad would give you money if you had your own start-up company. Then, I’ll help you plan it out. I can’t promise anything for the first year or so, but it shouldn’t be any problem to earn ten million or so. Furthermore, it’s a more long-term solution,” Jasper persuaded.

Henry yawned and replied lazily, “Another time, maybe. Let me play around and be free for another two years, I’m don’t have that kind of mindset now to think about entrepreneurship. You know how my temper is-no one can deal with me. Nor do I like that kind of angry aura businessmen have.”

With the end of the day came the circulation of what happened during the forum conference.

Of course, all normal civilians saw was what the newspapers reported, that some asset forum conference was held where entrepreneurs discussed the future development of some industries. The exciting debate over the dot-com industry’s future was also reported, ending harmoniously between hosts and guests.

This was obviously meant to deceive the common folk, and anyone even slightly more knowledgeable knew that something big had happened at the forum conference.

Jasper and Alban’s conflict as well as their subsequent bet had also become a public secret.

Countless eyes were focused on Alban’s Seatresures Group and Jasper’s JW. They knew that a thrilling fight was about to occur between these two companies in Harbor Stocks over these next three days.

However, most people believed that Jasper had no chance of winning this fight.

Seatreasures Group was a physical and comprehensive group with a long-standing history in the mainlands. Its roots ran deep, and its main company was in the pharmaceutical industry that was difficult to enter and thus had few competitors.

It was almost impossible for outsiders to enter this greatly desirable industry since the costs for research and technical barriers were too high.

Not to mention that Seatreasures Group was a long-standing privately-owned pharmaceutical enterprise in the country, which made it very, very wealthy company.

Otherwise, it would not have had the strength to expand into other fields and industries.

Jasper, on the other hand...

Many people believed that he was just an ambitious but overzealous young wealthy businessman.

While he was much more impressive than ordinary folks, no one believed he would win against Alban.

Amidst the swirl of rumors, the sun rose as per usual. Jasper had been talking to Jake ever since he woke up.

“Do it like we used to before. Open a position at the bottom first. Don’t buy too much, and don’t act rashly. We don’t want to make any large movements.”

Jake hesitated when he heard Jasper’s instruction. “But Mr. Laine, it’s different this time. There’s just too many people who have their eyes on us!

“Seatresures Group themselves will surely watch their own shares. There’s a limit to how many shares we can absorb if we don’t make a big move.”

Jasper smiled. “That’s exactly what I’m going for. I can only transfer you 1.2 billion this time, and most of this is from the profit we made in Harbor Stocks before. I don’t have any more for you.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1108

“There’s no way this small amount of money can change anything in Seatresures International’s market. It has a market cap of 17 billion-there’s just no way.”

“I just need to show the signal. Trust me and do as I say.”

While Jake was confused, he had long gotten used to playing the role of an executioner ever since he started working with Jasper. Hence, he understood that he should not press for more details when Jasper refused to elaborate.

All he had to do now was agree.

“Alright, Mr. Laine. I understand.”

Jasper hung up the phone and bid Henry goodbye, the latter lying on the sofa in his room lazily and eating an apple.

“Where’re you going?” Henry asked.

“Hoofmorn University. I won’t have time to visit and look out for her for a long while after this.”

“She’s got very high self-esteem and she’s too ashamed to take the initiative and ask for help. I’ll go take a look at how she’s doing in school and see if there’s anything she lacks,” Jasper explained.

Henry got up and followed Jasper out of the hotel. He asked loudly, then sighed.

“Jesus Christ. Do you know how many people are out there waiting to watch you fight Seatresures Group? This is a fight involving a company easily worth billions of Harbor Dollars and here you are, free enough to go check up on girls. Wow, good job.”

Jasper laughed out loud. "There's nothing I can do now anyway. But it should start soon. Very soon, Seatreasures Group will be facing a huge problem themselves."

Henry looked at Jasper suspiciously and asked, "Why do you sometimes give me the feeling that you're a shaman? How do you always predict things correctly?"

...

As Jasper sped over to Hoofmorn University, within the third female dorm building there.

Crash.

A washing basin fell onto the floor, causing the clothes and water inside to spill out everywhere.

Tiffany stood by the side with reddened eyes and pursed lips, letting the water splash and wet her pant legs.

"Tiffany York! Don't think that just because our instructor told us to take care of you that it means that you're on top of the world! Who do you think you are? You're just a little thief! How dare you steal our make-up product? Shameless!"

A freckled girl pointed at Tiffany and scolded.

“I didn’t.”

Tiffany quickly shook her head and explained, “I didn’t even touch your makeup, let alone steal and use them.”

Another girl sneered and said, “What, so you’re telling us we’re framing you, then? Mia’s bottle of Estee Lauder Essence costs more than 500 bucks. As if poor people like you have seen something like that before! You must’ve wanted to use it, huh? I’ve seen more than enough people like you!”

“That’s right You’re just a poor village girl, yet all your clothes in your luggage are branded! I can already tell that you’re not an honest person! You must’ve stolen them, or you’ve got a sugar daddy outside providing for you.”

“Yeah! Shameless b*tch! ”

The freckled girl, Mia, and the other overweight girl attacked Tiffany together. In the corner of the dorm stood another average-looking girl, who piped up softly, “Perhaps there’s been a misunderstanding.”

Mia turned her head to glare at that girl and sneered. “This has nothing to do with you, Erin. Are you sure you want to get involved?”

Erin immediately kept quiet, not daring to say another word. All she could do now was look at Tiffany sympathetically.

Mia and Monica, who shared a dorm with them, were known for being ferocious. No other female student on this floor dared to anger them. They decided to pick on Tiffany since they were envious of her branded clothes, and this was just the start.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1109

“You, you’re lying!”

Tiffany, who had never argued with anyone since she was a child, was no match for these two sharp-tongued and ruthless girls.

After taking an extremely cruel and humiliating scolding, Tiffany could only try to defend herself with reddened cheeks and eyes.

“My, my brother bought them for me. I didn’t steal, nor did I find anyone to provide for me.”

Mia sneered at Tiffany's claim.

"Stop giving excuses. Your brother bought them for you? Is he your biological brother?"

Another girl covered her mouth and laughed. "I think it's her lover. Maybe they like to act like siblings?"

Mia pretended to vomit and said, "Disgusting!"

"I'm telling you, Tiffany. This is campus."

"While I don't know how you managed to join a month after school starts, but don't bring the tricks you use outside in here. We don't like people like you."

Tiffany's cheeks flushed and she said with teary eyes, "Why do you keep picking on me?!"

"Picking on you?" Mia sneered. "It's not our fault you're so high-profile. You've only been here for a few days and you've already received a lot of love letters, haven't you?"

“I heard boys from the building next to us sent you gifts. Something about you being the most beautiful girl in the major, hmm? Absolutely disgusting and shameless! B*tch! ”

Another girl spoke sinisterly, “Mia, your boyfriend’s uncle is the deputy chief of the Academic Affairs office, right?”

“Have Cassian go tell his uncle that questionable and indecent girls should never be students of our Hoofmorn University. They’ll only lower the class of our school if word got out that they’re a student.”

Mia replied arrogantly, “Yeah, I’ll go talk to him later. I’ll have him check carefully if you’ve fooled around in school but with how flirty you look, I’m pretty sure you’ve fooled around with quite a few boys, huh?”

“You’re going too far!” Tiffany covered her mouth and she could no longer hold back the tears in her eyes. She turned and ran out of the dorm.

Mia and the other girl had expressions of disdain on her face, “What a great actress. So disgusting.”

“It’s fine, forget about her. It’d like to see how much longer she can take this, we’ll force her to drop out sooner or later,” The girl said before she gave Mia a pleasing smile. “Your boyfriend’s waiting for you downstairs to eat, right? Let’s go.”

Mia replied pridefully, “Him? He’s just a rich target I caught. But from the look on your face you like his friend from the basketball team, don’t you?”

“He looks pretty rich to me.”

“Horny b*tch, I can already tell what you’re thinking. I told my boyfriend already to bring his friend over to eat tonight. I’ve even thought of the place, a five-star hotel. We’ll land a huge hit on their wallets today.”

The duo chuckled and left as they spoke. The dorm was immediately quieted, leaving Erin alone inside.

She sighed and got up to rearrange the flipped-over basin and clothes. Her ability to read the situation was why she managed to stay in this dorm room.

Or she would have long changed dorms and dropped out like the other students under the duo’s torments.

Under the female dorm room stood Henry, staring down at the dorm auntie.

“Seriously, Auntie, just look at how handsome I am. There’s no way I’m some pervert that’s going in to take advantage of girls. I’m really just looking for someone,” Henry said irritably.

“I don’t care. Everyone in the dorm is a girl and it’s not right for a man like you to walk inside. Not even if you’re looking for someone. Call her to come down if you need her for something.”

The dorm auntie refused to back down as she rejected Henry.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1110

Similar sentences had flown back and forth between the two.

Henry was filled with displeasure, but he was not enough of a prick to bully the dorm auntie who was just doing her job with his status. So he turned to Jasper.

“Can’t we have that secretary bring us up again? He was the one who led the way last time.”

“Let’s not bother him over a private matter. I’ll just call Tiff to come down,” Jasper said, waving him off.

Just then, a few male students had also walked over and stood by the side of the dorm building with practiced ease. They were evidently waiting for their girlfriend and the like, and they looked at Jasper with curiosity.

Jasper was about to call Tiffany's phone when a series of footsteps sounded from inside the dorm building. Then Jasper saw Tiffany rush over.

She was going too fast and her hair was a mess, so she certainly did not see Jasper in front of her.

The man was in her path and about to say something when Tiffany knocked straight into him.

"Ah!"

Tiffany shouted in shock. She looked up to see Jasper and her welling tears immediately began to fall. She called out for Jasper with a sob and hugged the man, crying into his arms.

Jasper did not know what had happened but instead of asking now, he patted her back and consoled, "It's okay, it's okay. I'm here, don't cry anymore. I'll keep you safe, don't worry."

Henry had also walked over with a skip in his steps. He was immediately filled with glee when he saw that Tiffany had been mistreated. "Hey, what's wrong, Tiff? Did someone bully you? Tell your big brother Henry, I'll make sure to I beat them up."

Tiffany sobbed but clenched her lips and shook her head no matter what Jasper and Henry asked. She did not want to trouble the two.

Just as Henry felt out of his depth, Mia and another student walked out of the dorm building.

They were met with the sight of Tiffany wiping her tears in Jasper's chest.

"Yo, and here I wondered why she acted so pitiful. Who'd have thought that she had someone waiting for her? She must've been acting for him, then? What did I tell you? A b*tch will always be a b*tch, she's just got to bury her head in a man's chest even when she's crying. So shameless!"

Mia sneered.

"Mia!"

Just then, two tall and broad men walked over. They were the two that looked Jasper and Henry over just now.

“Cassian, Stan, take a look. That’s the b*tch I was talking about. She’s obviously a poor village b*tch that came from the mountain valleys yet her luggage is filled with branded clothing. Who’s she showing off for, huh? She even stole my bottle of essence. Absolutely shameless!”

Mia told the two men.

“That’s right. I saw it with my own eyes how this shameless sl*t already hooked up with a lot of men even though she’s only been here for a few days,” The girl beside Mia fanned the flames and added.

Cassian and Stan’s gazes immediately turned ambiguous when they looked at Jasper and Tiffany.

“There are all sorts of trash in society but I can’t believe these people are actually on our campus. Looks like I’ve got to tell my uncle,” Cassian said calmly with an arrogant look on his face.

Jasper’s expression darkened when he heard the other students speak.

If these things could happen even before his eyes, then he could only imagine how difficult Tiffany's days had been on campus as of late.

Yet this silly girl did not tell him anything.

"What the f*ck, are Hoofmorn University's students so uneducated? All their vocabulary's just made up of sl*ts and trash?"

When it came to such a mocking statement, one did not need to look to know that Henry was the owner of those words.

“You used him while he simultaneously used you, and both of you teamed up to get rid of me. Now that I’ve joined this game as well, I suppose the three of us will just be plotting against each other. Perhaps we’ll find out where our real friends and enemies lie.”

Jasper laughed out loud. "There's nothing I can do now anyway. But it should start soon. Very soon, Seatreasures Group will be facing a huge problem themselves."

Henry looked at Jasper suspiciously and asked, "Why do you sometimes give me the feeling that you're a shaman? How do you always predict things correctly?"

...

As Jasper sped over to Hoofmorn University, within the third female dorm building there.

Crash.

A washing basin fell onto the floor, causing the clothes and water inside to spill out everywhere.

Tiffany stood by the side with reddened eyes and pursed lips, letting the water splash and wet her pant legs.

"Tiffany York! Don't think that just because our instructor told us to take care of you that it means that you're on top of the world! Who do you think you are? You're just a little thief! How dare you steal our make-up product? Shameless!"

A freckled girl pointed at Tiffany and scolded.

“I didn’t.”

Tiffany quickly shook her head and explained, “I didn’t even touch your makeup, let alone steal and use them.”

Another girl sneered and said, “What, so you’re telling us we’re framing you, then? Mia’s bottle of Estee Lauder Essence costs more than 500 bucks. As if poor people like you have seen something like that before! You must’ve wanted to use it, huh? I’ve seen more than enough people like you!”

“That’s right You’re just a poor village girl, yet all your clothes in your luggage are branded! I can already tell that you’re not an honest person! You must’ve stolen them, or you’ve got a sugar daddy outside providing for you.”

“Yeah! Shameless b*tch! ”

The freckled girl, Mia, and the other overweight girl attacked Tiffany together. In the corner of the dorm stood another average-looking girl, who piped up softly, “Perhaps there’s been a misunderstanding.”

Mia turned her head to glare at that girl and sneered. “This has nothing to do with you, Erin. Are you sure you want to get involved?”

Erin immediately kept quiet, not daring to say another word. All she could do now was look at Tiffany sympathetically.

Mia and Monica, who shared a dorm with them, were known for being ferocious. No other female student on this floor dared to anger them. They decided to pick on Tiffany since they were envious of her branded clothes, and this was just the start.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1109

“You, you’re lying!”

Tiffany, who had never argued with anyone since she was a child, was no match for these two sharp-tongued and ruthless girls.

After taking an extremely cruel and humiliating scolding, Tiffany could only try to defend herself with reddened cheeks and eyes.

“My, my brother bought them for me. I didn’t steal, nor did I find anyone to provide for me.”

Mia sneered at Tiffany's claim.

"Stop giving excuses. Your brother bought them for you? Is he your biological brother?"

Another girl covered her mouth and laughed. "I think it's her lover. Maybe they like to act like siblings?"

Mia pretended to vomit and said, "Disgusting!"

"I'm telling you, Tiffany. This is campus."

"While I don't know how you managed to join a month after school starts, but don't bring the tricks you use outside in here. We don't like people like you."

Tiffany's cheeks flushed and she said with teary eyes, "Why do you keep picking on me?!"

"Picking on you?" Mia sneered. "It's not our fault you're so high-profile. You've only been here for a few days and you've already received a lot of love letters, haven't you?"

“I heard boys from the building next to us sent you gifts. Something about you being the most beautiful girl in the major, hmm? Absolutely disgusting and shameless! B*tch! ”

Another girl spoke sinisterly, “Mia, your boyfriend’s uncle is the deputy chief of the Academic Affairs office, right?”

“Have Cassian go tell his uncle that questionable and indecent girls should never be students of our Hoofmorn University. They’ll only lower the class of our school if word got out that they’re a student.”

Mia replied arrogantly, “Yeah, I’ll go talk to him later. I’ll have him check carefully if you’ve fooled around in school but with how flirty you look, I’m pretty sure you’ve fooled around with quite a few boys, huh?”

“You’re going too far!” Tiffany covered her mouth and she could no longer hold back the tears in her eyes. She turned and ran out of the dorm.

Mia and the other girl had expressions of disdain on her face, “What a great actress. So disgusting.”

Mia replied pridefully, “Him? He’s just a rich target I caught. But from the look on your face you like his friend from the basketball team, don’t you?”

“He looks pretty rich to me.”

“Horny b*tch, I can already tell what you’re thinking. I told my boyfriend already to bring his friend over to eat tonight. I’ve even thought of the place, a five-star hotel. We’ll land a huge hit on their wallets today.”

The duo chuckled and left as they spoke. The dorm was immediately quieted, leaving Erin alone inside.

She sighed and got up to rearrange the flipped-over basin and clothes. Her ability to read the situation was why she managed to stay in this dorm room.

Or she would have long changed dorms and dropped out like the other students under the duo’s torments.

Under the female dorm room stood Henry, staring down at the dorm auntie.

“Seriously, Auntie, just look at how handsome I am. There’s no way I’m some pervert that’s going in to take advantage of girls. I’m really just looking for someone,” Henry said irritably.

“I don’t care. Everyone in the dorm is a girl and it’s not right for a man like you to walk inside. Not even if you’re looking for someone. Call her to come down if you need her for something.”

The dorm auntie refused to back down as she rejected Henry.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1110

Similar sentences had flown back and forth between the two.

Henry was filled with displeasure, but he was not enough of a prick to bully the dorm auntie who was just doing her job with his status. So he turned to Jasper.

“Can’t we have that secretary bring us up again? He was the one who led the way last time.”

“Let’s not bother him over a private matter. I’ll just call Tiff to come down,” Jasper said, waving him off.

Just then, a few male students had also walked over and stood by the side of the dorm building with practiced ease. They were evidently waiting for their girlfriend and the like, and they looked at Jasper with curiosity.

Jasper was about to call Tiffany's phone when a series of footsteps sounded from inside the dorm building. Then Jasper saw Tiffany rush over.

She was going too fast and her hair was a mess, so she certainly did not see Jasper in front of her.

The man was in her path and about to say something when Tiffany knocked straight into him.

"Ah!"

Tiffany shouted in shock. She looked up to see Jasper and her welling tears immediately began to fall. She called out for Jasper with a sob and hugged the man, crying into his arms.

Jasper did not know what had happened but instead of asking now, he patted her back and consoled, "It's okay, it's okay. I'm here, don't cry anymore. I'll keep you safe, don't worry."

Henry had also walked over with a skip in his steps. He was immediately filled with glee when he saw that Tiffany had been mistreated. "Hey, what's wrong, Tiff? Did someone bully you? Tell your big brother Henry, I'll make sure to I beat them up."

Tiffany sobbed but clenched her lips and shook her head no matter what Jasper and Henry asked. She did not want to trouble the two.

Just as Henry felt out of his depth, Mia and another student walked out of the dorm building.

They were met with the sight of Tiffany wiping her tears in Jasper's chest.

"Yo, and here I wondered why she acted so pitiful. Who'd have thought that she had someone waiting for her? She must've been acting for him, then? What did I tell you? A b*tch will always be a b*tch, she's just got to bury her head in a man's chest even when she's crying. So shameless!"

Mia sneered.

"Mia!"

Just then, two tall and broad men walked over. They were the two that looked Jasper and Henry over just now.

“Cassian, Stan, take a look. That’s the b*tch I was talking about. She’s obviously a poor village b*tch that came from the mountain valleys yet her luggage is filled with branded clothing. Who’s she showing off for, huh? She even stole my bottle of essence. Absolutely shameless!”

Mia told the two men.

“That’s right. I saw it with my own eyes how this shameless sl*t already hooked up with a lot of men even though she’s only been here for a few days,” The girl beside Mia fanned the flames and added.

Cassian and Stan’s gazes immediately turned ambiguous when they looked at Jasper and Tiffany.

“There are all sorts of trash in society but I can’t believe these people are actually on our campus. Looks like I’ve got to tell my uncle,” Cassian said calmly with an arrogant look on his face.

Jasper’s expression darkened when he heard the other students speak.

If these things could happen even before his eyes, then he could only imagine how difficult Tiffany's days had been on campus as of late.

Yet this silly girl did not tell him anything.

"What the f*ck, are Hoofmorn University's students so uneducated? All their vocabulary's just made up of sl*ts and trash?"

When it came to such a mocking statement, one did not need to look to know that Henry was the owner of those words.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1111

“Who did you call uneducated?!”

Before Cassian could speak, Stan shouted angrily.

He had been interested in the female student beside Mia to begin with, and there was no way he would let go of such a great opportunity to show off.

“You.”

Henry replied, unfazed.

Stan was stunned.

He had never met someone like this before.

A normal person would have retaliated with even harsher words, which would then lead to Stan, the basketball team’s ace player, teaching him a lesson with his fist.

Hence, this single word and seemingly perfect reply had Stan immediately choking and lost for words.

“Why? Does it ruffle your feathers?”

Henry said casually as he glanced at the young student. His smile slowly turned into something more sinister.

Hundreds, even thousands, of men had been screwed over by the hands of Young Master Law-these weak students were hardly a match against him.

“How about I say it differently, then? F*ck you. You think ganging up to bully one girl makes you cool? You guys like bullying people, hmm? Then how about Daddy bully you today? I wonder what you can do about it, then.”

“Where did this madman come from? How dare you cause a scene here at Hoofmorn University?” Mia stared at Henry and said disdainfully.

Henry chuckled joyfully and tilted his head. He narrowed his eyes and told Mia slovenly, “I have nothing against hitting women, b*tch.”

At that moment, Mia's boyfriend Cassian frowned. He was initially unwilling to involve himself, but he would be made a laughing stock if he remained silent while the person in front of him insulted his girlfriend.

"From the way you talk, you aren't one of our school's students, are you?" Cassian asked calmly.

"If you aren't, that means you're just loiterers. Who let you in here? Leave my campus now!"

Cassian shouted, his tone filled with authority. Mia's eyes shone as she watched him defend her.

This was her man. At that moment, she felt the urge to truly date Cassian.

"Well, don't you sound cool," Henry exclaimed in surprise. "Why, is the school yours?"

"My uncle's the head of the Academic Affairs office. I'm telling you, one call from me and security will immediately chase you away!" Cassian sneered.

"F*ck, the head of the Academic Affairs office. Wow, what a powerful position. So scary." Henry had a terrified look on his face.

However, it disappeared immediately, only to be replaced with an expression as cruel as ones the villains in novels and television dramas often wore. Henry stared at Cassian and said, "That's a post so insignificant he's not even worth my time. Yet, you're using him to show off?"

Cassian's expression immediately paled in anger.

His uncle's identity had been his biggest source of support in Hoofmorn University.

It was his relationship with this uncle that allowed him to act arrogant and bossy all this while. Not even the teachers were willing to offend him because of this, let alone the students.

Hence, he was instantly enraged when Henry rendered the relationship insignificant.

"Do you want to die?" Cassian's gaze was icy as he pointed at Henry and said, "Just you wait!"

Then, he pulled out his phone and dialed a number.

Meanwhile, Henry mocked him with a casual but extremely overbearing tone the entire time.

“Daddy’s waiting. Make it quick, Daddy doesn’t have much patience.”

Cassian was pale from anger. He glared at Henry frostily as the call connected.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1112

“It’s me, Uncle Denton. I’m at the third female dorm building where two loiterers managed to get in. They’re harassing us. Please bring a few security guards over to help us chase them away.”

Cassian then put down the phone to smile wretchedly at Henry. “Just you wait. You’re going to be thrown off the campus like a stray dog in no time at all.”

When faced with Cassian’s threat, Henry only said one thing.

“Moron.”

At the same time, Jasper had already calmed Tiffany down.

“Jasper, I really didn’t steal anything. I also didn’t hook up with other people,” Tiffany explained to the man.

Jasper smiled gently and replied, “I know. They’re the ones framing you.”

Tiffany was about to speak when Jasper gestured for her to stop. Cassian was already done with his call by now, so Jasper gave it some thought before deciding it would be better to call Dorian as well.

After all, Henry was a truly extreme person, and those two students would most likely not have a future if they genuinely angered him.

At the end of the day, Jasper should still leave Hoofmorn University with some shred of dignity.

“Is this Mr. Clem? It’s me, Jasper.”

“I know, Mr. Laine. How can I help you?”

Dorian’s tone on the other end of the call was so polite it was borderline flirtatious.

Jasper chuckled and replied, "I remember troubling you to take care of my sister, Mr. Clem, but it seems like you're quite the busy man."

While Jasper had spoken with a smile, Dorian immediately shot up from his chair once he heard this.

"I made sure to put in a word with all the relevant departments, Mr. Laine. There shouldn't be any problem at all. Did something happen to Miss York? Please tell, I'll solve it right away."

Dorian was drenched in sweat. Ignoring the fact that Jasper was in a research partnership with Hoofmorn University over the stepper and was thus a huge sponsor of theirs, the amount Jasper donated for a new library alone was enough for the university to praise his name.

He was truly screwed if anything happened to Tiffany in Hoofmorn University.

"Come take a look for yourself. I'm at the third female dorm building."

Jasper hung up the phone after that.

Dorian had no idea how badly Tiffany had been mistreated on campus. He may have been the dean's secretary, but he was a busy man who could not always watch out for Tiffany. Not that Jasper was obligated to consider Dorian's difficulties though.

If what Jasper entrusted him to do was not done well, then it was only right that he showed his displeasure.

He had to show ferocity, or they would take his kindness for granted.

By the time Jasper put his phone down, Henry's confrontation with Cassian and Stan had already reached its finale.

Due to Mia and her friend egging them on by the side as if they were eager to see chaos, the situation was fast spiraling out of control.

Stan and Cassian were vigorous youths, after all, and the fact that they were on the basketball team meant that these two were athletic and strong. After realizing that even the two of them together were no match for Henry in a verbal argument, they became enraged and were about to get physical.

Henry was waiting for them to make the first move. Stan was about to step up and throw a punch when a loud shout was suddenly heard.

“Stop! Don’t any of you have any sense of order? How dare you cause a ruckus on campus?”

A slightly chubby man walked over with large strides, followed by quite a few security guards.

“Uncle Denton! ” Cassian exclaimed happily when he saw the man, and quickly went to greet him.

“It’s these two. They’re outsiders and it’s obvious that they’re up to no good. That girl over there is our student. She’s Mia’s roommate but she stole Mia’s things and even brought these two outsiders in. She should be strictly punished.”

The middle-aged man nodded calmly and walked over to stand in front of Jasper and Henry. With a harrumph, he said, “You two get out of my school right now!”

Then, he pointed a Tiffany and said coldly, “Hoofmorn University doesn’t need thieves like you as our students. Give me your name and come to the Academic Affairs office with me at once. I will deal with you properly.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1113

Henry did not like the air of arrogance this man carried. “Wow, how impressive of you.”

Henry said ambiguously before he mocked, “You must think you’re so powerful since you’re this university’s bullsh*t Academic Affairs office’s chief, huh?”

The Academic Affairs office was indeed an authoritative department, one that held the fate of all the students with the university.

As the department head, Denton was used to people being respectful toward him, and he had never been scolded like this before.

He was enraged by Henry’s words, and he stared at the man while saying, “I am this university’s Academic Affairs office’s chief. I have the right to deal with problem students as I see fit.”

“So, will you outsiders get out? Either get out yourself, or I’ll have security throw you out. Guards!”

The few security guards did not dare go against Denton’s instruction, so they immediately surrounded the three from all angles.

Henry narrowed his eyes. He was already very irritated and he badly wanted to beat someone up to vent his frustration.

Tiffany was nervous as well, and she tugged Jasper's sleeve while whispering, 'It's okay, Jasper. I don't want to cause you two any more trouble. I... I'll just admit it and apologize.'

"What's there to admit and apologize for if you didn't do anything wrong?" Jasper asked calmly.

Then, he turned to look at Denton.

"Mr. May, as chief of the Academic Affairs office, I have to ask is this how you carry out your job? Instead of trying to investigate what really happened, your first course of action is to chase people away."

Denton's expression darkened slightly at Jasper's words.

He did not care about unreasonable people like Henry, since all he had to do was have security throw him out and end the matter at that.

However, Jasper's words put him in a tight spot.

If he did not deal with the issue well, then his reputation on campus would be greatly affected.

After all, this was a student dorm building, and many people were watching the scene.

“Of course I’ll dig deeper into this. That’s why I’m having that female student follow me to the Academic Affairs office. As for you outsiders, there’s no need to understand anything. The university doesn’t welcome you!” Denton said coldly.

“My friend is right. Indeed, how impressive of you,” Jasper commented calmly.

Denton harrumphed and his expression turned more irritable.

“Enough. I don’t have time to waste with you vile people. Get lost, right now! Otherwise I’ll have security guards throw you out. Hoofmorn University won’t be blamed for being too harsh on you when that happens!”

“That’s right. We told you to get lost but you just won’t leave. How are you so shameless to keep bothering us?” Mia mocked with a sinister tone.

“From what I see, these two people are definitely trash that’s never been to university before. They’ve come to experience the view here at Hoofmorn University, but it’s such a shame. Unfortunately for them, trash will always be trash. They'll always smell bad even if an easy woman brought them in."

Stan chuckled. He had the urge to show off in front of Denton, so he walked over to stand in front of Jasper. He raised his fists and said, "We told you to leave, so why are you still here? Do you want me to get physical?"

Henry narrowed his eyes and stared at Stan. "It's bad enough that those two b*tches kept yapping over there, you dumb f*ck. Raise your f*cking fists again and Daddy will make you regret it."

Denton immediately fumed, "You still want to fight?!"

"Are you blind? Did you not see that this f*cking idiot raised his fists first?" Henry turned to shout angrily.

Denton was paling with anger and he roared, "Fine, then. You two have no sense of order anymore. Don' t wait any longer, guards. Throw them out right now! "

The bodyguards exchanged a look and stepped up to drag Jasper and Henry out.

Just then, a man rushed over to the dorm building.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1114

It was Dorian who rushed over.

“What are you doing here, Mr. Clem?” Denton had a pleasing and fawning smile on his face as he jogged over to Dorian and greeted courteously when he saw the other.

Dorian glared at Denton harshly and ignored him, waving his hands to shout at the security guards to back off.

“Move, all of you! What do you think you’re doing?!”

The security guards were confused. They were just trying to throw someone out on Denton’s orders, so they had no idea how they had angered Mr. Clem.

Denton was also stunned. He did not know how he had offended the dean’s secretary either.

At that moment, Dorian had already made his way to Jasper and said remorsefully, “I’m really sorry, Mr. Laine. It seems like I made a fool out of myself.”

Jasper replied calmly, "Fool or not, I am very disappointed in some members of Hoofmorn University's managerial staff. The quality of the students here is also very unimpressive.

Dorian felt his cheeks burn in shame.

"Tell Mr. Clem what actually happened, Tiff," Jasper called Tiffany over and said.

With Jasper here, Tiffany felt much braver as she recounted everything that had happened since she arrived to Dorian, paying particular attention to the incident that morning.

Following Tiffany's explanation, even Denton's expression morphed dramatically, much less Dorian's.

Frankly, anyone who heard the things Mia and her friend had done would feel exceptionally furious.

Dorian looked at Mia and the rest sinisterly. He clenched his jaw and said, "This is the first time I've learned that Hoofmorn University has failures like this!"

Mia was panicking.

She did not know who Dorian was, but she was well aware that Denton was the most powerful person she could come into contact with. If Denton acted extremely carefully in front of Dorian, without even daring to breath recklessly, then it did not take a genius to understand that she was screwed.

Frantic, she tried to defend herself, "That's not right. You can't just listen to her words alone.

"Someone did use my makeup this morning, and she was very suspicious. She's just exaggerating everything! I was just afraid that a bad person ended up as a student of the university, so I did it with the university's best interests..."

"I can testify!"

A clear female voice rang out before Mia could finish speaking.

No one knew when Erin had appeared. The girl squeezed through the onlooking crowd and told Dorian.

“I’m Mia, Monica, and Tiff’s roommate. My name is Erin and I can testify on Tiffany’s behalf. Everything she said was the truth.”

“Mia and her friend have been causing trouble all this time, especially because her boyfriend Cassian is Mr. May’s nephew. They’ve never respected anyone.”

“As for the things they’ve done, you can ask anyone in our class and they’ll say the same thing.”

‘Erin, do you want to die?’ Mia shrieked.

Erin replied calmly, “I stayed quiet for so long just to wait for an opening.”

Mia wanted to say more but Dorian cut in sharply. “Enough!”

Dorian took a deep breath and bowed to Jasper deeply. He then said remorsefully, “I’m really sorry, Mr. Laine. It looks like I’ve got to straighten out the habits of some students in our university.”

Dorian turned to look at Denton when he heard these words.

The latter instantly paled.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1115

Denton could be considered an experienced man, seeing as how he had been working for more than half his life. He could tell that Mr. Clem was not the most important character here. At most, the man had arrived to deal with the issue.

The true main character was Jasper.

Denton's lips quivered when he looked at Jasper.

Mr. Clem was the dean of Hoofmorn University's secretary. While he did not hold a high administrative position, half a rank higher than Denton at most, the man's identity was special.

Dorian would not be the dean's secretary if he was not also the dean's confidant.

If Jasper refused to let today's incident go, then Dorian would surely report the matter to the dean.

If that were to happen, a mere chief of the Academic Affairs office would surely be crushed.

Denton felt lightheaded at the thought.

"You... you must be Mr. Laine, right? Mr. Laine, there's got to be a misunderstanding here."

Sorrowful, Denton begged Jasper for mercy, "I admit that my attitude was bad just now, but I just wanted to deal with the issue as quickly as possible."

"How about this, Mr. Laine. I'm sorry, I really am. Please forgive me as I'll make sure to look back on my actions and learn from my mistake.

"I'll also deal with the issue regarding Miss Mia and Mr. Cassian strictly!"

In the face of grave danger, Denton did not think too much as he sold his nephew and the boy's girlfriend out in hopes of placating Jasper's anger.

“What’s the meaning of this, Uncle Denton?!” Cassian shouted, his complexion pale.

“Shut up!”

Denton glared at Cassian harshly and roared, “I wouldn’t have been dragged into this if you didn’t act so bossy because of your relationship with me. No more calling me your uncle, you little brat! I don’t have a nephew like you!”

Cassian’s pupils contracted in disbelief at what his uncle said.

At that moment, all he could do was his anger and resentment on Mia.

“You b*tch! This is all your fault! I wouldn’t have gotten involved in this if not for you!”

Mia paled when Cassian roared at her.

Despite her ability to scheme and be a snob, she was just an ordinary university student and she had never experienced such an aggressive scolding before.

She did not dare to say anything after Cassian shouted a that, and all she could do was tremble in place.

“That is enough.”

Jasper said calmly. He turned to Dorian and continued, “Mr. Clem, whether today’s incident is due to the university’s lack of regulations or because someone is trying to slander the school is the university’s internal affairs.

“I’m sure that the university has an extensive set of rules to deal with these issues, so an outsider like me will refrain from interfering too much.”

Dorian let out a deep exhale when he heard Jasper’s words.

It seemed that at the moment, Jasper had no desire to further press the issue.

Dorian would be put in a difficult place if Jasper did. “Alright, then, Mr. Laine. I’ll make sure to give you a satisfactory reply,” Dorian replied seriously.

“Whether I’m satisfied or not doesn’t matter. The students’ satisfaction comes first.”

Jasper replied meaningfully.

Dorian's gaze sharpened on Denton and he said grimly, "Mr. Denton May, I suggest you make preparations to explain yourself to the university board!"

After that, he turned to Mia, Stan, and the rest and said fiercely, "The university is a sacred place for learning. It is not a place for you people to conspire and be immoral!"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1116

“While Hoofmorn University doesn’t require every single one of its students to be geniuses or to become formidable figures in society, we require that our graduates be upright members of society at the very least!”

“The four of you will be monitored, and this incident will appear in your report cards as a demerit. Stan and Cassian, this is your senior year, yes? If you still want your graduation certificates, then I suggest both of you self-reflect and think about what you did wrong!” Dorian’s words had Mia and the other three completely shocked.

Especially Stan and Cassian, who had never expected this incident to affect their graduation.

In the current era, a university graduate, especially one from Hoofmorn University, was a huge boost to someone’s identity.

It could be said that if one was a graduate of Hoofmorn University, then getting an office job was already a given. People around them would also look at them with envy and admiration.

Demerits like these would follow them their entire lives and could never be erased.

Mia's complexion paled and she turned to look at Dorian frantically. Then, she turned to Jasper, and finally rushed toward Tiffany before falling to her knees with a thud.

"I'm sorry, Tiff. It's all my fault, I'm a sorry excuse for a human being. I shouldn't have bullied you!"

Mia wept and slapped herself as she spoke.

"I admit that I was envious of your branded clothing. I just wanted to pick on you-you didn't do anything wrong at all. I was just blowing up every minor issue. "You didn't steal my makeup, I intentionally framed you."

"I'm sorry! I'm a horrible person!"

"I can't have a demerit on my record or be monitored. My life will be over! My family will treat me like a disgrace if they found out, so please! Help me beg for mercy! Forgive me just this once!"

"I won't do it ever again. So please!"

Mia's begging was heartbreaking and Tiffany looked conflicted.

Mia looked pitiful as she continued to beg. Tiffany glanced at Jasper, but she did not know how to start.

“What’re you thinking about, silly girl? Now’s not the time for such nonsense.” Henry glanced at Tiffany. He had a feeling that if he didn’t nudge her in the right direction now, then this silly girl would become soft-hearted and excuse her. Hence, Henry spoke up before things got ugly.

Tiffany was stunned for a bit before she looked at Jasper. Seeing the crescent-eyed smile on the latter’s face, she immediately understood.

Tiffany was a smart girl, she just lacked the experience when it came to dealing with various situations. She was at lost on what to do, but she certainly was not stupid.

For example, now that Henry had reminded her, she immediately understood the situation. As Jasper had said, this was an issue classified under the university’s internal affairs and he was in no place to interfere.

Meaning that this incident would be handed over to Dorian, who would deal with the issues as per the university’s regulations. If she conceded and asked Jasper to spare them, she would be casting Jasper under the spotlight and into a difficult position.

‘Then what is he supposed to do?’

‘Jasper will be taking back his words if he agreed, thus completely going against his principles.’

‘But if he does not agree, me asking on Mia’s behalf would put him in a dilemma.’

After arriving at this thought, Tiffany immediately stepped back and distanced herself from Mia.

Mia was in despair when it happened.

“Alright. It’s time for us to leave, now,” Jasper said calmly.

“I’ll make a formal statement later,” Dorian said.

Jasper nodded, then he pulled up Tiffany and told Henry that they were leaving.

“Jasper, Erin’s my only friend here. Can I bring her with me?” Tiffany asked softly.

Jasper paused for a moment before he glanced at a shocked Erin a short distance away. Jasper immediately smiled and replied, “Of course. Bring your friend along then.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1117

Hoofmorn University canteen.

In the humongous university, there was a smaller area in the canteen with private rooms that allowed people to order food to dine-in; It was rather similar to restaurants and hotels in that regard.

It was currently lunchtime, so Jasper and the others then went to eat lunch at the canteen.

“I told you before, didn’t I? I told you to look for me if you have any troubles, so why’d you endure all this mistreatment alone over the past few days?”

Jasper finally brought it up while they ate.

Tiffany replied softly, “I didn’t want to be a bother.”

“There are many things that you may consider a bother for you, but require no more than a phone call from me to resolve. You have to contact me if similar situations arise again, alright?” Jasper said gently.

Tiffany nodded vigorously and replied, “Alright. Thank you, Jasper.”

“There’s no need to thank me.” Jasper smiled.

“Oh, would you prefer to live off-campus? I’ll just tell the university later,” Jasper asked.

Tiffany immediately shook her head. “No need. I’m fine living in the dorms.”

“But there’s no guarantee that another person like Mia won’t appear in the future if you continue to live in the dorms. The university’s huge, and there are all kinds of people out there.” Jasper felt doubtful.

“About that, the universities actually have high-end apartments for students from special or wealthy families,” Erin suddenly mustered the courage to speak, having been eating silently the entire time before this.

Jasper glanced at Erin and replied with a crescent-eyed smile, "That's great. I'll have Mr. Clem arrange for your stay at the high-end apartment then, Tiff. The environment there's better and it's still on campus, so it won't affect your studies."

"You seem to be quite close with Erin too, so the two of you can live together. But I think a dorm for two is enough, as you'll still be able to look out for each other then. I'll have someone talk to Mr. Clem about the fees and procedures."

Erin was ecstatic when she heard Jasper say this.

While the university did not function with the main goal of making a profit in mind, some wealthier students were still given special treatment.

This meal they were having now cost half of what normal students paid for meals throughout the entire month. Normal dorms cost only a few hundred a year, but these high-end apartments cost one to two thousand a month.

Erin was just a child from a normal family, and she had never thought about living in a high-end apartment before this.

Hence, she had not expected to one day get to live in one thanks to Tiffany.

Jasper took in Erin's secret rejoice and turned to ask Tiffany with a smile, "What do you think of this arrangement?"

Tiffany nodded and replied, "It's good. I'll go with your plan, Jasper."

"Alright, then. Now that that's over, let's eat," Jasper picked up his cutlery and said.

Jasper and Henry then walked around campus alongside Tiffany and Erin after lunch. Then, Jasper contacted Mr. Clem about changing the accommodation before the two ladies went back to pack up and move away.

After all that was done, Jasper and Henry returned to the hotel.

Once they walked out the campus doors, Henry turned to grin at Jasper and say, "That Erin girl. No matter how I look at it, she's definitely the scheming kind. Are you sure Tiffany can handle her?"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1118

Jasper replied calmly, "I have no qualms with her being a little smart, but the last thing I want is someone too stupid. What I need is someone who can be Tiff's friend for the four years she'll be spending in university. Her being benefited doesn't matter much to me. I'll only be concerned if she meets some idiot like that Mia again."

“Moreover, scheming or not, it’s still Tiff’s life. I can’t do everything for her, so she’s going to have to deal with it herself.”

As Jasper and Henry returned to the hotel to rest, someone else was in a horrible mood.

“Mr. Ball, that’s the situation now. The entire stock market is very calm and we’ve already identified some entities that bought shares secretly. It’s not a large amount, but we’ve got our eyes on them in case they make a move.”

Alban waved off the subordinate who was reporting the situation as the furrow in his brows deepened.

“Three days. Every hour is important, but Jasper’s not doing anything at all. What’s he trying to do?”

Alban had always prided himself on having mental prowess just as impressive, or even more impressive than anyone else. Yet, here he was, confused by Jasper’s lack of action.

Like everyone else, Alban thought that Jasper would make a huge move this morning when the market opened.

The man would either buy Seatreasures Group's shares like crazy and find an opportunity to sell it short, or he would try and affect Seatreasures Group's share price with pieces of negative news.

Despite this, the morning trading hours had now ended and the market was currently closed for lunch, yet there was still no sign of Jasper.

This was an illogical move, which had caused Alban to not stop frowning since this morning.

"It can't be that simple."

Dudley snorted beside him and grabbed a piece of watermelon to pop inside his mouth. The man said proudly, "He must've given up. His claim wasn't realistic, to begin with, and it's bad enough that he decided to make a bluff. Why would he jump into the fire and screw himself over after that?"

Alban harrumphed. He glared at Dudley's uncaring behavior and said disappointedly, "When will you stop being so stupid?"

"Who do you think Jasper is? If he dared to say something like that last night, then it means that he'll make a move. Otherwise, Jasper can forget about ever doing business in the country again. You think Jasper can't decide on the right course of action in this situation?"

“Don’t use your stupid brain to try and predict what other people are thinking. Especially when it’s Jasper we’re talking about His behavior is something your dumb brain will never be able to understand.”

Dudley felt embarrassed after Alban reprimanded him without restraint. With a dark expression, he said, “Dad, do you have to go so far when you boast about an outsider’s intellect that you need to talk down on your own son?”

“It’s obvious now that Jasper gave up. He knows that throwing his funds into the market won’t cause a dip in Seatreasures share price and he’ll only end up losing what he puts in. There’s no way he’d do something so stupid.”

Alban harrumphed and said irritably, not in the mood to further explain to Dudley, “Shut up, will you? You useless excuse of a son. Jasper’s two years younger than you and look at the difference between you two!”

Dudley got up furiously, and said, “Then have fun looking at the stock market on your own. I’m going out.”

“You’re spending time with that Lisa again? I’m warning you, that woman isn’t as plain as you think. She’s been using you all this while, so keep your distance.”

Dudley was about to say something when the office doors were suddenly pushed open.

A subordinate entered the room hastily and almost knocked Dudley onto the floor.

Dudley was about to scold the man when the subordinate in question reported with an utterly terrified tone. “Mr. Ball, something bad is happened! Swallow Capital released a statement to that they’re attempting to rectify the pharmaceutical industry!”

“They’re putting a stop to all rebates pharmaceutical companies offer doctors, with the goal of specifically targeting the collusions these doctors have with hospitals to squeeze customers of their money!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1119

“Mr. Ball, three investigative teams have already arrived at the group and they’re currently combing through our accounts. Everyone in the group is terrified, Mr. Ball. What do we do now?”

The subordinate asked Alban.

Alban was stunned by the sudden news.

He had been doing business for decades and he believed that he had experienced his fair share of ups and downs. Yet, he still felt frantic when he heard this news. It had been years since he last felt like this.

Alban's expression was very dark.

As the chairman, he had single-handedly and slowly brought the Seatresures Group up from a small pharmaceutical factory about to go bankrupt, to the magnificent business it was today. He was well aware of how many unclean trades his group had done over the years.

The money he gave those doctors and hospitals as rebates alone amounted to more than one billion!

Should this be discovered, Alban would be the first one to be crushed and destroyed.

"Calm down!" Alban slammed his palm on the table and said.

No one knew if this roar was directed at himself or his subordinate.

Alban then paced around the study irritable before he replied darkly, "Tell all senior executives in the group, the vice-chairman and the general managers of all departments that they are to remain calm!"

"If those investigative groups want to investigate, then cooperate, but make sure that things they should not see remain a secret."

“Go!”

After he shouted at the frantic subordinate to leave, Alban frowned deeply as his gaze flickered.

Dudley also realized the severity of the situation and he asked, “Dad, could this be one of Jasper’s tricks?”

“Bullsh*t! ”

Alban scolded, “What do you think is happening now? Swallow Capital has directly given the order for officials to enter the group and start investigating.”

“You think Jasper is some crown prince? The government would not let anyone interfere with something like this. They’ve already been preparing it for a long time.

“Half a year ago, I caught wind that the government was going to investigate the medical treatment and pharmaceutical industries. I just didn’t expect it to come so quickly and at such a coincidental time!”

Alban took a deep breath to suppress the unease within him. He picked up his phone and made a few subsequent calls.

Despite this, it seemed like the formidable figures he was close friends with all seemed to be outstation or in a meeting now. None of them were reachable.

After hanging up the last call, Alban threw the telephone on the floor.

“These b*stards! All of you fawn over me when I’m handing out benefits, but now you’re all choosing to go missing!”

Dudley piped up cautiously, “What now, Dad?”

“I have to go back to the group immediately, or they’ll be in chaos without someone to lead them.” Then Alban grabbed his clothes and immediately had someone prepare a car and a plane.

“You stay here in Waterhoof City. Do not cause me more problems. I don’t have the time and effort to deal with you now.”

Alban warned Dudley sternly before he left.

Dudley nodded and replied, “Don’t worry, Dad. Rest assured, I have a sense of propriety.”

“I sure hope so.”

...

This notice from the country’s government had come extremely suddenly.

Not even people in the medical industry had gotten wind of it before this, let alone outsiders.

All inspections of pharmaceutical enterprises and medical treatment facilities around the country were set off almost simultaneously after the statement was released.

The industry was instantly in complete chaos.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1120

Countless people were taken in straight from their homes and workplaces to aid in the investigations.

The people getting brought away were mostly heinous individuals with a mountain of evidence proving their dirty work. These were people that would certainly be thrown in jail after they had gone through the formal procedures.

This storm wreaked through the entire country and it almost flipped the medical treatment industry and pharmaceutical enterprises on its head.

As one of the first five largest privately-owned pharmaceutical industries, the Seatresures Group was pretty much in the eye of this storm.

At the same time, countless people slammed their palms on the table and exclaimed that even the heavens were helping Jasper when they saw the news.

The stock market, known to be the most sensitive measure when it came to news regarding the world's industries, had already begun to react.

The moment the statement was released, the pharmaceutical sector's index began to plummet. All share prices of listed enterprises relating to medicine began to crash.

Shares of the largest privately-owned pharmaceutical enterprises in the country began to tank, spearheaded by Seatresures Group. Not even investors or organizations could hold on to their stocks once news of officials investigations of those enterprises broke.

Sell!

Sell!

Sell!

Everyone immediately sold their shares of the relevant enterprises.

At this moment, shares of pharmaceutical enterprises were like hot potatoes that nobody wanted to hold.

The share prices were dyed a tragic red, and the blood-like color representing the disintegration of an astronomical amount of funds that had been invested in the pharmaceutical enterprises.

The harsh drop in the pharmaceutical sector caused an overall drop in the larger market as well.

Everyone was instantly terrified.

While Harbor Stock's situation was not as tragic as the domestic class A securities market, Seatreasures Group's share price was still drowning in a sea of red.

Investors were not idiots, and countless people immediately began to sell their own shares once news got out. No one dared to fight the market at such a time.

The mystical sight of only sales and not buy-ins subsequently appeared.

Seatreasures Group's market price dropped by 3 billion in half an hour!

At that moment, Jasper had already returned to the hotel and was in a video call with Jake.

"Mr. Laine, it's just too startling. Other than the financial tsunami stock crisis and the bursting of the dot-com bubble, I've never seen shares prices drop so fast before. We've already achieved the 10% drop that you aimed for today!"

Jake's voice was laced with shock and respect.

He finally understood why Jasper asked him not to make too big a movement. He had bought shares back then, and without doing anything at all, the funds had already dropped by 10%.

Moreover, this drop in share price seemed to be just a small part of an ongoing trend. No one knew how much money would be left in the end.

Jasper's laptop screen displayed the trendline of Seatresures Group's share price on Harbor Stocks.

As of this moment, Seatresures Group's share price had already hit the limit down. Millions of sell-out orders had resulted in Seatresures Group's share prices lying unmovingly at the limit down.

Jasper smiled softly and asked, "What do you think we should do next?"

Jake was stunned by Jasper's sudden question.

'Next?

'There's still more to come?

'Wasn't the deal just to cause a 20% drop in Seatresures Group's share prices within three days?'

'From the way things look, Seatreausers Group's share prices will definitely hit limit down tomorrow no matter what. By the end of tomorrow, the 20% goal will be easily achieved without us needing to do anything.

'What more do we need to do?'

"There's no way Alban will go down so easily. After all, Seatreausers Group is listed on Harbor Stocks and he is in a much better position than the other pharmaceutical enterprises listed as domestic class A shares," Jasper said calmly.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1121

Jake immediately understood after Jasper explained. At the same time, he felt a little sad.

He realized that the distance between him and Jasper was just too large.

He had not thought of such an important point at all, and had only realized it after Jasper had reminded him. “Don’t think too much about it. We’re looking at the issue from two different angles, so it’s only natural we understand the issue differently.”

“From a financial trader’s point of View, there’s nothing wrong with your opinion. But Alban and I are both entrepreneurs, so we’ll look at the issue from more than just the financial perspective.”

Jasper seemed to have seen through Jake’s thoughts. His calm words comforted Jake greatly.

“Still, Mr. Laine, my vision is was too narrow. I’ll make sure to do better next time,” Jake replied genuinely.

Jasper smiled. He was satisfied with Jake’s attitude.

As his businesses continues to grow, Jasper would start to demand more of the people around him. If these people could not grow with JW, then they would have to be eliminated eventually.

Jake seemed to understand this concept from the way he behaved.

“Seatresures Group is Alban’s life blood; his life and wealth all depend on that business. So there’s no way he’ll just stand by and watch as Seatresures Group crumbles to ruin.”

“The most important thing now is to understand what the government is thinking.”

“The economy of privately-owned enterprises is controlled mainly by the market, this is an absolute law. The government’s goal is just to rectify the shady business practices in the medical treatment industry so that citizens can purchase medication in a relatively fair environment. They’re setting up the framework for future health insurance reformation.”

“Thus, we can see that the government’s goal has never been to destroy privately-owned pharmaceutical enterprises.”

“This is a concept both Alban and I understand.”

“Because of this, the government will allow a large privately-owned enterprise like Seatresures Group some room to save themselves. They might even give the group some time to deal with their issues.”

Jake frowned when he heard Jasper’s analysis. “Mr. Laine, you mean that the Seatresures Group won’t fall?”

“Definitely not.” Jasper shook his head.

The truth from his past life was that even though Seatresures Group had made a huge loss in this incident, they did not close down, nor did they even exit the market. Their market price had only dropped badly.

In this life, Jasper’s vision and knowledge surpassed that of his past life, when he was a mere employee in the financial industry. He had a more unique and deeper understanding of problems now.

Hence, he was certain that the Seatresures Group would come out of this incident heavily wounded but still alive.

“I’m sure Alban and the government will arrive at some level of understanding shortly. That’ll be the time Alban cleans up this mess and starts to stop his share price from collapsing further. This will happen any moment now.”

“Both Alban and the government know very well that the capitalist market can change drastically within a split second. It’s already been affected badly and there’s no saying how Seatreasures Group’s future is going to end up if they didn’t attempt to save it as fast as possible.”

“No one can guarantee the future of a listed enterprise because no one can be certain of investors’ thoughts.”

Jake’s eyes shone as he exclaimed, “If that’s the case, then now’s the perfect time to open a long account!”

Jasper laughed out loud and replied, “Now you understand. The Seatreasures Group will go to great lengths just to save their market cap. So instead of thinking that I want to win the bet between Alban and me, how about I say that I want some of the money that Seatreasures Group has been accumulating over all these years.”

“I know what to do now, Mr. Laine,” Jake replied firmly.

Jasper nodded and said, “Then let’s get to work.”

Henry who had been in the room, lying on the couch the entire time, glanced at Jasper and said, “What the f*ck. I did not understand a single word.”

“You can transfer your money over now,” Jasper said with a smile.

“No, but how did you know about something big like this in advance?” Henry asked curiously.

Jasper simply replied, “That’s why I told you to read the news more. There’s nothing wrong with being more attuned to current affairs. Important information is always hidden among these seemingly unimportant pieces of news.”

“The country’s been heavy on health insurance lately, which is a matter of citizen’s livelihoods. It’s great that the country wants to make its people’s lives better, but in order to do that, they’d have to put an end to all the shady businesses in the industry. This is the very foundation of their plan.”

“If you link all these details together, the conclusion is pretty clear to see. I just happened to be pretty lucky that such a thing was occurring now.”

No one would know about Jasper’s reincarnation anyway, so the man had no qualms about lying to Henry so blatantly.

Henry felt lightheaded when he heard the man, then quickly transferred the 3.7 million he had saved until now into the account Jasper had opened.

All he knew was the number of the account he needed to transfer his money to. Everything else flew completely over his head.

“What’s with such a complicated number?” Jasper looked at the account and asked confusedly.

Henry’s cheeks flushed. “F*ck you. I only left 20 thousand for myself, I transferred you everything else.”

“I have never seen such an extreme young master like you,” Jasper shook his head and transferred the sum to Jake. He told the other to do additional calculations based on a 5 million principal, then distribute the profits to Henry based proportionately.”

“How much can we earn this time?” Henry asked excitedly.

“I’ve been frustrated, thinking about where I’m supposed to get the money to pay for that stupid plane’s parking and maintenance fee next month.”

Jasper gave it some thoughts and smiled. “Counting your percentage on the principal sum of 5 million, and considering the fact that Seatreasures Group had earned a lot of dirty money over the past few years, I predict that they’ll have to take out at least eighty percent of their capital for this. If we’re lucky, your 5 million will turn into 10 million in two day’s time.”

“F*ck! Seatresures Group is with 40 billion on the market. What do we have to do to make twice the initial amount?” Henry asked irritably.

“Be grateful we even have this opportunity. Those organizations and hot money traders haven’t realized anything yet, but once Alban makes a move and news of this get out, they’ll all rush over for the grab a piece of Seatresures Group.”

“We’ll still earn something because we came in early, but soon there’ll be nothing left for the other small investors,” Jasper replied calmly.

People did not compete over who was more stupid in the capitalist market, only who was craftier.

In the blink of an eye, Seatresures Group had become a slab of meat worth 40 billion that everyone wanted a taste of.

Jasper got up and stretched. Then, he walked to the hotel’s broad floor-to-ceiling windows. He looked out at the luxurious city view of Waterhoof City and murmured to himself, “This is the appeal of possessing capital.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1122

Seatreasures Group.

Alban had rushed over from Waterhoof City as quickly as possible to deal with the unease within the group.

Still, as Jasper had predicted, Alban knew that his Seatreasures Group was big enough that the government would not completely crush him, be it for the sake of tax or thousands of employees' livelihoods.

While his Seatreasures Group was no more than an insignificant ant to the government, the government still had to act in a way that benefited everybody.

Hence, despite his Seatreasures Group appearing to be in a perilous position, it was actually pretty stable.

After understanding this, Alban immediately tried to contact the government through the investigative groups.

He finally managed to get rid of two out of the three investigative groups. Meanwhile, Seatreasures Group also lost one vice president, two senior-level managers, and six middle-level employees. These people were found guilty of corruption.

These people were scapegoats that Seatreasures Group had thrown out.

Even so, they were not completely innocent, since they had indeed bribed hospitals and doctors on behalf of the company.

“I hope that you don’t blame me for this. Even if you’d done it with the group’s interest in mind, you’ve also reaped your share of the benefits.”

Alban stood in his office in the group building and looked down at his subordinates that were being escorted into the cars. His expression was neither sad nor elated.

Just then, the office doors were opened, and a shrewd and capable middle-aged man walked in.

“Mr. Ball, I’ve already drafted the statement that is to be released by the Harbor Stocks Securities Regulatory Commission. Please have a look. ”

Alban took the statement and gave it a closer look. He corrected the statement word-by-word and changed some terms that he found unsuitable. It was obvious how important this statement was to them.

“This statement will directly affect the trust Harbor Stock’s investors have in our group. We have to make sure we don’t slip up.

“I want the investors to know that even though something had happened with the Seatreasures Group, there’s nothing wrong with its core decision-making team. The group’s businesses will not be affected, and we are still a reliable and safe option for investment.”

The middle-aged man smiled wryly when he heard Alban’s words and replied, “But the market has already lost their trust in us. Our Seatreasure Group’s share price is currently locked on the limit down.”

Alban’s brows twitched. “The group will invest more and we’ll begin recycling our shares.”

The middle-aged man was stunned, and he replied, “Mr. Ball. While recycling our shares now will reignite trust in the investors, there are just too many of them throwing away Seatreasures Group’s shares. We might have to invest billions to do so.”

“Then so be it!”

Alban clenched his jaw and said grimly, “The government has decided to rectify the medical treatment system. From here on out, working in the pharmaceutical industry won’t be as smooth-sailing as before.”

“Medicine is still Seatreasure’s core business, but after what happened this time, I’ve also decided to shift the group vision to walk a more diverse path.”

“The moment the government begins their rectification of the medical treatment system, the coming health insurance reform will make it such that most normal medication will fall under the cover of health insurance. This means they will be bought by the government. Profits of our pharmaceutical enterprise will become very transparent while competition within the industry will only grow tougher.”

“A harsh will sweep over the entire pharmaceutical industry, such that everyone will have to be more frugal. We’ll be walking a path with little profits but high turnover.”

Alban sighed deeply. “The time of greedy development in this industry is over. The government wants to make its people’s lives easier, so there’s no going against that!”

“The entire pharmaceutical industry can’t fight against the government even if we teamed up, let alone Seatreasures Group itself. Whoever tries to do something so foolish will meet an early end so we have no other option but to go along.”

“I predict that the electronics market is going to be huge in the future. Technology is improving rapidly, and people’s lives seem to be becoming increasingly intertwined with these electronics. That’s why we have to take JW’s MP5 patented technology!”

“Because of this, Seatreasures Group’s market prices cannot continue to drop tomorrow. We have to rescue the market no matter what!”

One had to admit that Alban had his own set of unique capabilities as well. After all, the man had managed to turn Seatreasures from a small pharmaceutical factory into one of the top five largest private-owned enterprises in the country's pharmaceutical industry.

Be it his deduction of the pharmaceutical industry's future, or with electronics and data, he had managed to develop perfect foresight.

This proved that Alban's success was not without reason.

"How much liquid funds are there in the group?"

The shrewd and capable man replied, "We have around 2.2-2.5 billion liquid funds right now. If we need more, then we'll have to consider taking a bank loan or asking our debtors to pay up early."

"According to the current situation, I personally suggest investing around 2 billion into the market. If things go well and we manage to raise the share prices to the initial value before the incident, then our group's daily operations won't be affected."

"But the moment we use more than 2.5 billion funds, the company will face the issue of a capital chain rupture."

Alban's expression darkened.

This 2 billion was profit the group had set aside after the past two years of expansion. The principal capital was included in this amount.

While Seatresures Group was worth 40 billion on the market, this market value was purely from an accounting perspective. The 40 billion included fixed assets like inventory, factories and machinery, office buildings, patented technology, and so on.

The larger the company was, the more the expenses it accrues. After all, shipment of raw materials, company operation, and wages were all expenses that needed to be paid. Seatresures Group, for example, had about 60 million in monthly expenses.

Moreover, there was nothing strange about monthly expenses reaching the hundred of millions if a manufacturing line needed to be renewed.

Because of all this, it was by sheer coincidence that Seatresures Group could spare 2 billion right now.

"Has Jasper made any moves?" Alban asked.

The middle-aged man shook his head and replied. "He's remained dormant and there haven't been any movements from his side."

"Maybe he's already waiting for Seatreasure's share prices to continue dropping to the limit down tomorrow. That way he'd get to win the bet with you without doing a thing, Mr. Ball."

Alban sneered. "He is still a young man, after all. He hasn't gotten enough experience. He thinks that just because he's lucky that he gets to rest easily. Sure, luck matters in society, but the thing that truly decides the winner will always be a person's capabilities."

"Since he's decided to do nothing but wait, then there's no need for us to worry too much either. I've already amended the statement, so release it tomorrow morning the moment Harbor Stocks' market opens!"

"We'll release the statement at the same time the group begins to recycle its shares. I'll make sure Jasper fails horribly this time!"

The middle-aged man was energized, and he replied loudly, "Yes, sir! I'll get to it right away!"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1123

No matter how many people had their eyes glued to the situation, father time did not wait.

The following morning, when the sun rose, countless professionals were already sitting in front of their computers half an hour early as they waited for the market to open.

They knew that one day was not enough to show the full severity of this storm involving both the medical system and pharmaceutical enterprises.

All these listed pharmaceutical companies were huge businesses, and there was no way they would be willing to watch their share price fall without intervening.

If two opposing parties were respectively trying to raise and drop share prices, then the situation would develop into a cash grab for capitalists. A bloody battle was about to commence!

Countless people were anticipating today's market; they knew that havoc would wreak through the stock market today.

Due to its huge market cap as well as the bet with Jasper, Seatreasures Group's market was the most attractive target.

Seatreasures Group on Harbor Stocks even vaguely seemed to have the air of a leading enterprise in the pharmaceutical industry.

Thus, both investors and organizations had all tacitly begun to pay attention to Seatreasures Group's trendline half an hour before the market even opened.

It was 10 a.m., and Harbor Stocks officially began trading for the day.

The moment the clock struck 10 a.m., the computing center immediately gathered all auction stage data and the trendline for the share price began to move.

"Seatreasures Group dropped by 1 index point since the market opened."

Jake's report sounded by Jasper's ears. Seatreasures Group's share price continued to drop!

Jasper and Henry were in the hotel study. They placed a projector in the study so they could project and look at Seatreasures Group's trendline on the wall.

Another large screen showed Jake and his team of traders bustling about.

“Enter the market,” Jasper instructed.

Henry was stunned for a moment. While he had no understanding of finance at all, he had learned quite a bit from Jasper just from being by his side. Hence,

Henry could at least understand the data on the market.

“There’s still a lot of sell orders. Everyone’s trying to sell out the shares they have on hand, so the share prices will definitely keep dropping. Won’t we make a loss if we enter now?”

Henry piped up since he functioned on the principle of asking when he did not understand something.

Jasper wanted Henry to become familiar with these simple tricks in the securities market, so he replied. “Making a loss is guaranteed the moment we enter the market, but it won’t be a huge loss. Alban’s in more of a rush than we are. Besides, if we wait until we no longer will make a loss before we enter the market, that would mean that Seatresures Group’s share prices have already begun to rise. We won’t be left with much if we wait until then to enter.”

Henry only seemed to vaguely understand Jasper's explanation.

At that moment, Jake had already begun to carry out Jasper's instruction.

A huge buy order entered the market

Amidst the countless sell orders, this buy order seemed especially eye-catching.

The numbers continued to move and the funds on Jasper's accounts began to drop horrifyingly fast.

Replacing them were a mountain of Seatreasures International Group shares.

Under the scrutiny of countless pairs of eyes, Jasper's action had stirred all sorts of reactions.

Jasper's and Alban's bet was no longer a secret, and Jasper's account was well-known in the industry.

Thus, some organizations and investors were stunned when they saw Jasper buy in with such a large number of shares.

“What the f*ck. I thought Jasper wanted Seatresures Group’s share prices to drop? Instead of shorting his account, why is he buying more? Is Jasper crazy?!”

“Seatresures Group’s share prices had been plummeting since the market opened. Rather than Alban himself, the first order to rescue the market actually came from his enemy, Jasper?! What’s he trying to do?”

“Maybe Jasper made the wrong trade? Maybe he ended up buying when he was trying to sell?”

This was not the first time someone acted against the market trend. In fact, the largest fat-finger transaction had involved more than one billion funds, happening abroad.

While countless people wondered if Jasper had gone mad, a large professional organization seemed to have understood what Jasper was trying to do.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1124

“You used to be really low-profile and careful with every other listed company you tried to screw over before. So, why’re you making such large movements this time?”

Henry seemed to have transformed into a curious child as he repeatedly asked Jasper questions.

“The Seatresures Group is too huge, and we alone cannot devour all of it. If anything, it’s highly likely that we’re going to get screwed over instead if we try.

Thus, I have to put myself out in the open in hopes of attracting more capital to the pool.

“The last thing the capitalist market lacks is smart people. Everyone will come to a tacit understanding in the blink of an eye. After all, chances like this to earn such huge sums of money are rare.”

Jasper explained with a smile.

Just as Jasper finished speaking, Jake’s voice rang out as well.

“Mr. Laine, there are other large buy orders. I suspect that an organization has entered the market.”

“I’ve traced the source of the funds. It’s one of the country’s large organizations.”

“Good.”

Jasper nodded in satisfaction. Then, he turned to Henry, who was in awe, and said.

“See, the smart people have already entered the market. We were the first and our initial investment was sizeable. Because of this, these organizations will surround us to form a temporary group. This group will soon suck Seatresures of every penny it is worth.”

“Wow! ” Henry exclaimed genuinely.

He had a sudden epiphany about how weak his previous methods of asserting dominance were as he resorted to disrespecting and beating people up.

Meanwhile, Jasper had managed to take control over the financial market during their joyful conversation, or at the very least, seized control of the 40 billion Somer Dollar market of a huge group like Seatresures. This was a transaction worth billions of dollars. This was true power.

His methods on the other hand...

They were nothing more than child's play.

At that moment, Harbor City Securities Regulatory Commission released a statement.

There were three main points in the statement.

Firstly, it revealed that Seatresures Group was currently under government investigation.

Secondly, it promised and guaranteed that Seatresures Group's day-to-day operations would not be affected. It stated that the core management team had already passed the investigation and there would not be any huge personnel changes.

Thirdly, it stated that Seatresures Group would recycle their 2 billion worth of shares.

With this statement, Seatresures Group's share prices were instantly thrown into chaos.

The moment 2 billion of Seatresures Group's own funds entered the market, the share prices were instantly stabilized. This was thanks to Jasper and the other organizations that had entered the market beforehand.

The tragic red of Seatresures Group's share prices suddenly reverted into a green trend again.

It had only been three minutes since the statement was released and Seatresures Group before had recovered and turned the tables.

From a low opening price, the shares began to rise, with the trend predicting further increases that were soon to come.

Far away in Seatresure Group's headquarters in Teo City, Alban was enraged when he saw this.

“Dammit! These greedy b*stards! Jasper you b*stard, so you were waiting for this all along!”

Seatreasures Group’s share price had indeed stopped dropping. Alban had achieved his goal, but all of this had happened too quickly and easily.

While he had managed to avert the crisis, the current situation was not something Alban wanted to see.

What he needed was for Seatreasures Group’s share prices to start rising again thanks to the group’s own funds.

However, the rise right now was thanks to Jasper and that group of opportunistic organizations, with the former leading the latter.

In other words, Jasper and those large capitalist organizations were like eager jackals, ready to devour the entire 2 billion that Alban had invested at a moment’s notice!

Life at The Top – Chapter 1125

“Mr. Ball, what do we do now?”

The shrewd and capable man felt lost as he stared at the situation before him. Even if Alban was currently enraged, he had no other option but to muster the courage and ask.

Alban panted heavily and replied harshly, “This was Jasper’s objective all along. He predicted that this would happen, and we’ve been forced into a dead-end. There’s no way to turn this around, so we can only march forward even if it spells our end.”

“Which means...”

The middle-aged man had a sour look on his face.

“Even if we know that Jasper and the rest are going to devour our money, we can’t do anything to stop them?”

Alban closed his eyes. His chest felt tight, and he replied painfully, “Jasper, oh, Jasper. I’ve really underestimated this little brat. Is he really just in his twenties?”

“I suppose it’s only right, he did make his first profit through the stock market.”

Alban thought back to the night a few days ago. He remembered how Jasper had told him with vigor, confidence, and decisiveness that he had made his first big money through the stock market.

Everyone there thought that Jasper was a moron, including himself.

Yet, now Alban finally understood. Jasper was truly skilled.

Forced into a corner, Alban clenched his jaw and pulled out his phone to make a call.

The phone ring for a long time before it connected. Alban began with a grim tone, “Gale, something went wrong with our partnership and now Jasper’s coming for my head. You can’t just let me die like this.”

Gale chuckled and replied, “We had agreed before that the partnership was a one-off thing, regardless of whether it succeeded or failed. Whether or not he is coming after you has nothing to do with me.”

Alban was enraged. “Are you really not going to help me, Old Master Hurlbutt? Aren’t you afraid that the person in Harbor City will cause your trouble?”

Gale replied calmly, "My relationship with them goes no further than a mere partnership. One that has nothing to do with you."

"Moreover, you think he would trouble me because of you? You really think that because I have retired and decided not to involve myself in business matters that you bullsh*t businesspeople from Teo have the power to compete with the Haddock Chamber of Commerce?"

"Alban, as an old man, let me tell you something. Just stop here. You might not believe what I am about to tell you.

"After the forum that night, Jasper had already predicted the events that would unfold today, as well as your attempts at contacting me to further our partnership. Even so, he gave me a little piece of information."

"You have something to hold over me, yes?"

Alban was horrified by what he heard. Mouth and eyes agape, he stood blankly in place.

"He called me that night. I know that he was trying to pit us against each other and end all possibilities of us cooperating again. But even if he did not do that, there is no way I would work together with you again. This is because you are just a discarded pawn to me."

After Gale finished speaking, Alban heard the beeping of a disconnected line.

Crash.

Alban's phone fell to the floor. He was completely stunned.

At that moment, the shrewd and capable man suddenly shouted in a panic, "Mr. Ball! Jasper and the others have made their move!"

Alban's head snapped over to the market index.

He instantly saw that the column for sell orders was instantly filled, even though it was almost empty mere moments ago. Transactions now filled the column like a swarm of bees.

Seatreasures Group's share prices had begun to give again, less than an hour after it showed a bullish trend from a low opening price.

Instead of a dive, it would be more accurate to call this a plummet.

The share prices resembled a crashing plane as it plummeted from the heavens.

Without needing to think, Alban knew that Jasper had made his move.

After Jasper had made the first move, the other organizations followed suit.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1126

Seatresures Group's share price plummeted.

"What do we do now, Mr. Ball?"

Alban felt lightheaded and his lips dried up.

"Save it! Quick!" Alban shouted heart-wrenchingly.

Seatresures Group's share price could not fall at that moment. The statement about the group entering the market with their funds was just released to the public, so if the share prices continued to fall, it meant their self-rescue plan was a failure.

Seatresures Group would end up being abandoned by the market and completely lose the trust of their investors.

If that were to happen, Seatresures Group's shares would become trash that no one wanted.

If Seatresures Group was unable to gain income through the share market, then it would face the horrible fate of a capital chain rupture.

“Seatresures Group is still holding on, Mr. Laine.” Jake’s excited tone resonated through the study.

On the large projected screen, Seatresures Group’s market index looked very strange.

With Jasper leading the charge, the other large capitalist organizations soon began to sell their Seatresures Group’s shares crazily.

After this, many frantic retail investors followed suit and also exited the market.

The only people buying shares were the Seatresures Group themselves.

From the way the situation looked, it seemed like Seatresures Group was trying to fight against the capitalist market all by themselves.

Jasper and the organizations around him did not care about what would happen to Alban, nor did they care that the money they were earning were all the fruits of Seatresures Group’s hard work and business operations.

Jasper and the organizations were like bloodthirsty sharks as they circled the huge Seatreasures Group. They were ready to open their large mouths to bite and tear away at every inch of Seatreasures' flesh.

"The Seatreasures Group right now is like a juicy lamb standing on the edge of the cliff while being surrounded by wolves. The moment it steps backward, it'll fall to its death.

"But if it remains on the edge of the cliff, us wolves will continue to tear away at its flesh. It will hurt, but the lamb might not die. Hence, all it can do is stand in place and watch as the wolves bite away at him."

Jasper looked back at Henry, the latter's eyes shining brightly while his cheeks were slightly flushed. Jasper chuckled and said, "This is the capitalist market. What do you think?"

"So f*cking exciting!" Henry shouted, thrilled.

Jasper laughed out loud. He turned to Jake and said, "Increase the intensity. Have Seatreasures hit and stay at the limit down before the market closes for the morning session. He'll definitely come lip with a plan to save themselves during the lunch break. The victor will be decided this afternoon."

"Yes, Mr. Laine," Jake shouted excitedly. Then, he began to lead his team to short Seatreasures Group crazily.

Under Jasper's instruction, the capital frenzy reached its climax.

Thanks to Jasper, the organizations, and frantic retail investors, and the overall downward trend of Seatresures Group's share price were already set. No matter how desperately Alban strived to rescue the group, there was a limit to the funds under his control.

In just one morning, 15 minutes before the market closed for lunch, the 2 billion Seatresures Group had prepared completely vanished.

This meant that Jasper and the organizations had already won the round, and had managed to consume the 2 billion invested by Seatresures Group!

After devouring everything, this group of 'jackals' refused to stop as they continued to attack Seatresures Group's pitiful share price.

Over the next 15 minutes, Seatresures Group seemed to be unable to do anything as they hopelessly watched the share price continue to drop.

Without fresh funds entering the market, the group's share price hit the limit down three minutes before the market closed, where it remained unmoving.

The 1.5 million sell orders morphed into a metaphorical steel coffin, preventing Seatreasures Group's share price from moving anywhere.

By 12:30 in the afternoon, Harbor Stocks went on break, and the exchange center no longer accepted transactional requests.

The market was temporarily closed.

In one morning, Seatreasures Group's share prices had dropped another 10% from the day before. Including the 2 billion Seatreasures had invested today, Alban had lost more than 5 billion over the course of just one morning.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1127

“Holy f*cking sh*t! In just one morning, I turned 5 million into 8 million?!”

Henry was extremely excited.

This sudden wealth was too surprising and timely for Young Master Law, who was terrified of being broke.

“We should be able to earn even more in the afternoon; 10 million won’t be a problem at all. In fact, I think we can earn more than that.” Jasper laughed out loud.

Henry’s funds had nearly doubled, and the 1 billion Jasper invested had earned him around 800 million.

The incident had come right in the nick of time for Jasper, who was also going crazy from how broke he was.

“Let’s rest for now. We’ll continue when the market reopens later. After this is over, Jake, you’ll get half a year’s salary worth of bonus while everyone else will get three months’ worth.”

Jasper would not forget to help the others when he was earning money. Thus, he informed Jake and the team, who were busy analyzing data and information on the other end of the call, of this.

Jake was instantly elated. Jake did not care much about money and bonuses since he was already pretty well off. After all, as a financial investing genius, Jake had managed to become financially independent a long time ago.

Still, everyone loved earning more money.

Not to mention, members of his team still had to make a living and had families to feed.

Cheers immediately rang out and Jake replied with a smile, "Thank you, Mr. Laine."

Jasper waved him off and said, "Go eat lunch first. There'll be another battle in the afternoon."

Jake nodded and replied, "Alright, Mr. Laine. We're just going to analyze a bit more information so we'll have a better grasp of the battlefield in the afternoon later."

Jasper was very pleased with Jake's dedication, so he gave encouraged the man a little more before ending the video call.

"We should eat lunch downstairs as well," Jasper told Henry.

Meanwhile, Henry was still drowning in the excitement of making money.

"Seriously, Jasper. How about I pass you most of my money after this? You just need to give me a bit for allowance while you are holding it. A form of long-term financial management, if you will. What do you say?"

Henry was pleased at himself for thinking of such a comprehensive plan.

However, he did not expect Jasper to reject him right away.

Jasper brought Henry to the restaurant downstairs and replied unkindly, "Why do you think your dad's so strict with your allowance? He wants you to learn that money doesn't come easy, and he wants you to try and earn every buck by yourself."

"Just think about it. With your family's wealth, it's no issue for them to provide for a hundred of you, let alone just you alone. However, someone has to continue the family business one day."

"This is a form of training for you. If you park money with me for long-term financial management, then what? Am I supposed to give you allowance after that? I can spare you money for an emergency, but there's no way I'll be able to provide for you forever. Furthermore, I'm also scared that your dad will call to scold me."

Henry's expression darkened when he heard Jasper.

"Just marry my sister, then. All of the Law family's assets will go to you. There's no way we'd make a loss by doing so. Just remember to distribute dividends to me every year. I'm really not interested in doing business at all," Henry said bitterly.

“Look at my dad. He works all year long and only spends a few days a year at home. He’s busy every single second of the day, and so are you. Look at how boring your lives are.”

Jasper smiled but did not continue the conversation.

When it came to the Law family’s most important and sensitive interests, there was a limit to how much Jasper could say, regardless of how close his relationship with them was. He would be in trouble if he overstepped his boundaries.

Jasper had nothing but respect for Old Master Law and Mr. Law.

He had no desire to be involved in family businesses at all. If possible, Jasper was still willing to help Henry so that the other could continue the Law family business.

After all, Henry was a promising man, and if taught well, could accomplish great things.

The two, as well as Julian, did not go far, opting to order some food at the hotel restaurant instead.

They had just sat down, and some dishes had not even been served yet, when an uninvited guest arrived.

Dudley.

Like a rapid dog, Dudley seemed to have been waiting here for a long time. When he saw Jasper, the man immediately rushed over with reddened eyes.

Reacting instinctively, Julian grabbed Dudley's collar so that he could not approach Jasper.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1128

Dudley began to struggle maddeningly as he shouted at Jasper, “Jasper Laine, I hope you f*cking die!”

Dudley might just be a trust-fund child, but had long been aware that what happened this morning was inevitable. He also knew that his family business was in grave danger, and that all of this was Jasper's fault.

“You f*cking set me and my dad up. Are you even human?! I'm telling you, karma will get back at you for how cruel you are!”

Jasper looked at Dudley and slightly frowned.

He did not expect Dudley to still be in Waterhoof City, let alone to come look for him at the hotel.

Not that it mattered.

“Cruel? Even if I was cruel, I’m still miles away from people like you. Besides, didn’t your dad say it himself? It’s a privilege to lose in business. If you think of it that way, I come bearing gifts for you and your father. You’re welcome.”

Jasper’s words caused Dudley, who was already furious, to nearly lose his mind.

“Don’t act so proud, Jasper. People like you will be crushed one day! I’d like to see how pitiful you’d look then!” Dudley cursed him resentfully.

“Where’d this stupid f*cker come from?”

Henry was in a great mood before Dudley popped up and harassed him. Pissed, Henry swept his gaze over the man coldly and said, “Keep yapping and I will punch your teeth out. ”

Dudley’s eyes reddened with anger while the man panted so hard he seemed like he was going crazy.

He stared at Jasper and Henry, then roared, "Come on, then! If you think you're so powerful, hit me!"

"Oh, much braver this time, hmm?" Henry chuckled joyfully. He loved stubborn idiots like this the most because they were the most enjoyable to beat up.

He rolled up his sleeves to make a move, but Jasper quickly frowned at him.

Jasper looked at Dudley and asked calmly, "Where's Lisa? Call her out."

Dudley was stunned, and he replied instinctively, "What the f*ck are you talking about?"

"You wouldn't know about me staying here without her help," Jasper explained calmly.

"Lisa been using you to get rid of me the entire time. Don't you understand?"

Dudley had heard this line before.

His father Alban had told him the same thing before he left the day before.

He had ignored it then, but Dudley could not help but look back on the entire process again now.

He soon realized that Jasper was right, and that Lisa was just using him.

Lisa had been urging him to take revenge on Jasper the entire way over.

Once he realized this, Dudley clenched his jaw and growled, "That b*tch... but you aren't any better, Jasper!"

Jasper smiled calmly. "I didn't tell you this to let bygones be bygones and move on, since there's no point in doing so. I'm still waiting to destroy Seatreasures Group this afternoon, so why would I care about what you think of me?"

"Let's be honest, you can't do anything but shout at me uselessly here. You can do nothing to me at all."

Jasper's words cut deeply into Dudley's heart like a knife.

For the first time, Dudley regretted not building himself up more and waste away all his time on having fun.

At that moment, as he stood in front of Jasper, Dudley felt the full extent of his own powerlessness.

Jasper was powerful; the fate of Seatresures Group was now in his hands.

Despite this, Dudley could do nothing.

All he had done in this situation was mock Jasper before it happened and shout powerlessly at him after. Nothing more.

As Dudley was in despair, Jasper's voice sounded again. "Do you want to save Seatresures Group? This is your family business, and contains the fruits of your dad's entire life. It's all up to you now."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1129

Jasper's words brightened Dudley's infinitely dark world like a lightbulb.

He stopped shouting and struggling, opting to instead look at Jasper with eyes widened in disbelief.

Jasper was unsurprised by Dudley's reaction. He had Julian let go of the man as Jasper pointed at the empty chair before him and said, "If you're interested, how about we sit down and talk?"

Dudley could instinctively feel that Jasper had an ulterior motive. The man could not be so kind.

Yet, Jasper's offer was too tempting...

After some thought, Dudley walked over to Jasper and sat down.

"Very good. See? Now that we're off to a good start, we're already halfway there. I'm sure we'll have a very happy partnership." Jasper chuckled.

Dudley took a deep breath and asked, "Are you really willing to stop the attack, and rescue Seatreasures Group?"

Jasper waved him off and replied, "I don't mind stopping my attacks, but I don't have any say in letting Seatreasures Group off the hook."

Dudley was enraged and he accused, "So you really are lying to me! In that case, what partnership can there be?"

“The capitalist market has already started to encircle Seatresures Group. You wouldn’t believe me even if I told you that I could leave the market right now and have these predatory organizations finish the group off, would you?”

“It’d be a lie if I told you that I can save Seatresures Group.”

Dudley’s expression flickered drastically.

He might have been a useless trust-fund child, but he still had common knowledge of finance.

He also knew that Seatresures Group was currently being surrounded by hungry wolves, and that Jasper did not have the power to determine what would happen at such a time.

“But, if I leave the market, then you will have sliver of hope. All those other organizations want is to earn money. Seatresures Group just needs to take out a sum of money to feed them and they will stop their attack.”

“It would be a harsh blow to the group, but you will survive this incident.”

Jasper continued after he saw how Dudley had calmed down again.

Henry had a weird expression on his face when he heard Jasper's claim.

Jasper was absolutely horrible.

Henry remembered from Jasper's analysis that no matter what they did today, they would only be able to severely injure Seatreasures Group. After all, this was a comprehensive group worth 40 billion on the market; Completely destroying it was unrealistic.

Not to mention that they were a comprehensive group, meaning that they could always just halt trading at any moment and leave the market. Other than a heavy blow to their commercial reputation, they would not suffer too much.

Seatreasures Group would not die, not while their pharmaceutical factories, sales channels, and patented medical technology were still around.

Hence, Jasper had only ever planned to earn a sum of money and leave.

Yet, here the man was, using the difference in available information to make a trade. Jasper was using his initial plan as a bargaining chip to force Dudley to strike a deal to maximize his benefits.

What else, if not being absolutely horrible?

At the same time, Henry was also curious. He wanted to know what trash like Dudley could possibly offer Jasper.

What piqued Henry's curiosity also happened to be the same thing Dudley was confused about "What do you want me to do?" Dudley asked.

Jasper rapped his finger against the table and went straight to the point. He did not hold anything back. "Don't you think that it's an eyesore to have a branch of Haddock's Chamber of Commerce in a place like Waterhoof City?"

Both Dudley and Henry sucked in a cold breath.

No one expected Jasper's secondary plan.

Dudley's stared at Jasper, his emotions unstable.

Jasper took a sip of tea casually and continued, "To put it plainly, I want you businesspeople from Teo to use your contacts and powers to completely get rid of Haddock Chamber of Commerce's Waterhoof City branch."

Dudley's eyes flickered in consideration.

"Businesspeople from Teo and Haddock have always been at each other's necks. Seatresures Group is set to receive heavy injuries this time around, and if you're not going to use this opportunity to weaken the Haddock Chamber of Commerce, then how are you going to fight them again in the future?"

Jasper's words had Dudley clenching his jaw as the latter replied, "I can't decide something so important myself. I have to discuss this with my dad."

"Go ahead," Jasper shrugged.

Dudley turned and left after hearing the reply. It seemed like he had walked off to contact Alban.

Alban's tone was harsh.

Jasper had never expected the same words he used to trick Dudley to also work on Alban. Despite this, Jasper smiled and replied, "You're too serious, Mr. Ball. They may be my enemy, but they are your enemy as well. Even more so than mine."

"You're right, Seatresures Group will still be Seatresures Group whether I pull out of the market or not. The question is, how much of Seatresures Group will be left?"

Alban answered darkly, "Stop trying to lie to me, Jasper. You must've earned quite a bit this afternoon, huh? How many of Seatreasures Group's shares do you still have in your account now?"

"If you're going to keep attacking this afternoon, then you're going to have to buy Seatreasures Group's shares first. You're going to end up throwing away all the profit you made if you attack the company again!"

"At the end of the day, it is all still is your money, Mr. Ball. The amount I earn doesn't really matter to me," Jasper replied.

Alban's breathing grew heavier on the other end of the line. The man was far from calm.

Jasper's words hit Alban where it hurt most.

"So, Mr. Ball. Will you chose to lose everything or will you opt for a win-win situation?" Jasper asked.

Alban sneered. "Win-win? More like you winning again."

Jasper chuckled but did not say any more.

He knew that Alban had already made his choice.

As expected, Alban replied grimly after a short moment of silence, "I hope you don't go back on your word."

"Don't worry. It's only an hour or so until the afternoon market reopens. I'll make sure to completely exit the market once it reopens," Jasper replied.

"Alright. I'll put pressure on the Haddock Chamber of Commerce once you pull out.

"But let me make it clear now. You explain this to Gale yourself."

Jasper replied calmly, "There's nothing to explain. This is the price he has to pay."

"Ha, what a cruel young man you are."

"You're making them fight each other. What a sinister play."

Henry told Jasper after Dudley left.

“Be it Teo Chamber of Commerce’s Sea treasures Group of Haddock Chamber of Commerce’s Gale. It’s going to be very difficult for us to deal with either of them alone, so we can only borrow external powers.”

Jasper shook his head calmly.

“Besides, this is a mutually beneficial relationship and they have no reason to decline.”

After a moment, Dudley returned and handed his phone to Jasper unkindly.

Alban wanted to speak to Jasper directly.

Jasper did not hesitate as he took the phone and placed it by his ear.

“Jasper. Dudley may be an idiot but do I look stupid to you too?”

“Seatreasures Group will still be Seatreasures Group whether you pull out of the market or not. You think that this is a good enough reason to let you use the Teo Chamber of Commerce to get rid of your enemy? Who do you take me for?”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1130

Harbor Stock's lunch break was over and the greatly anticipated afternoon market officially opened at 2:30 p.m.

However, a strange movement on Seatresures Group's share prices appeared once the afternoon market opened.

The share price that had been locked on the limit down this morning had begun to shift again.

Then, Seatresures Group released an official statement.

The group, alongside several financial organizations, announced that they had signed a term sheet where Seatresures Group's chairman Mr. Alban Ball would pledge 24.13% of his shares in return for a total investment of 5 billion Somer Dollars from the financial organizations.

Seatreasures Group had a current market value of 40 billion. Ignoring the situation with premium shares, 24.13% was worth at least 9.7 billion. Yet, he had sold his shares for 5 billion dollars.

It was not a profitable trade no matter how one looked at it.

Despite this, there was no other option. At such a time, Seatreaures Group had no other choice but to accept reality.

After this statement was released, Seatreaures Group made another official announcement stating that these 5 billion Somer Dollars will all be used to recycle their company's shares on Harbor Stocks.

With that, the humongous purchase order had managed to completely devour the millions of orders at the limit down.

At that moment, both organizations and retail investors sought out Jasper with widened eyes.

Despite this, Jasper, the first to attack this morning, had completely vanished.

The organizations that followed Jasper into the market were angry and exasperated once they realized that Jasper had left.

Jasper had either gotten wind of what was going to happen beforehand, or he had arrived at a deal with Alban. Otherwise, there was no way Jasper would leave in the afternoon after earning such a huge amount that morning.

Not that it mattered, since everyone still made money in the end.

Among them, Jasper had managed to earn a whopping 900 million profit from Seatreasures Group. He had made a huge profit.

In any case, this incident had ended with Jasper exiting the market.

Alban had lost almost 7 billion today, and he was mocked as the wealthy businessman that lost the most money around the world today.

“Mr. Ball, the share price has stabilized for now. Or at least, it’s not touching the limit down anymore,” The shrewd and capable man reported to Alban, the latter looking haggard as he sat in his office.

“How much did we lose this time?” Alban asked darkly.

The other man hesitated before he replied softly, "Including the shares you pledged at half-price today, we've lost around 7 billion as of now."

"Bang!"

Alban slammed his palm on the table and roared indignantly, "It's also that b*stard's fault! Jasper took at least six to seven hundred million from me!"

The other man replied despondently, "The government's statement had come too coincidentally and out of the blue. We did not have any time to prepare at all. There's nothing we could do but endure it when Jasper and the other organizations took this opportunity to take a huge sum of money from us."

"But Mr. Ball, do we continue with the plan involving Haddock's Chamber of Commerce's Waterhoof City branch?"

Alban harrumphed and replied, "Of course. Why should we stop?"

"We've already lost so much, so how can we let Gale that old man continue living comfortably? Get to it right now. I'd like to see the look on that old man's face once I get rid of Haddock Chamber of Commerce's power in Waterhoof City."

At the same time, Jasper had already split the profits with Henry.

Henry grinned so wide that his lips reached the back of his head as he looked at the money in his account.

Jasper had immediately liquidated all his positions once the afternoon market opened. Thanks to the last burst of funds, the 5 million Henry had invested, which was more like a little more than 4 million, had returned to his bank account as 10 million.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1131

There was no money easier made in the world.

“Save up more. The huge opportunity I told you about is coming. That won’t be any small issues like what had happened today.”

Jasper turned to tell Henry this in a great mood after having made 900 million.

Henry chuckled and replied, “Don’t worry. I’ll sell everything I have just to gather the funds.”

“Hold that thought. I may be confident, but this is still an investment and there’s no hundred percent guarantee of a return. We’re both going to have to start begging on the streets if we lose the money.” Jasper shook his head and smiled.

Henry hit his chest and said, “I trust you. You’ve never lost once up until now.”

Jasper’s phone suddenly rang while the two conversed. Seeing that the message was from Dudley, Jasper got up before turning to Henry. “Come on. Now that Seatreasures Group is done for, it’s time for us to get rid of the remaining tumor in Waterhoof City.”

Young Master Law was interested in two things, making money and stepping over people. Hence, the man jumped to his feet energetically once he heard Jasper say this.

“Come on, come on, let’s go. I’ve been waiting so long for this.”

Julian already had the car waiting downstairs.

The two men got into the Bentley as they sped their way to their destination.

In Haddock’s Chamber of Commerce’s Waterhoof City branch’s office, Norman and Lisa could be seen chatting happily with Dudley.

Lisa was even sitting beside Dudley. She seemed to ignore the fact that Norman was present as she leaned her body against Dudley. She might as well have been sitting in his arms at that rate.

“Your father sure is powerful, Mr. Ball. He’s managed to increase the share price straight away. I told you that Jasper’s nothing special. He was just lucky that the government happened to be rectifying the medical treatment system at such a time.”

“He must be crazy if he thinks he can get rid of Seatresures Group!”

Lisa told Dudley in a feminine tone.

Dudley looked at Lisa and smiled. He suppressed the disgust and anger within him and said meaningfully.

“You’re right. Some people think that because they’re smart it means they can use everyone for their own benefits. It’s like they think the entire world is filled with idiots, and that they’re the smartest.”

“Wouldn’t you say so, Lisa, Uncle Gardner?”

Norman frowned slightly when he heard Dudley speak.

While there was nothing wrong with the sentence, Norman could not help but feel that Dudley was talking about someone else instead of Jasper.

However, once Norman thought about how Dudley was just a handsome but useless nobody, he immediately pushed aside those thoughts and chuckled.

“Your father is a smart man. There’s no way he’d be able to attain financing so easily if he didn’t have the necessary contacts. Now that the situation at Harbor Stocks has stabilized, I’d like to meet him if given the chance.”

Lisa agreed coquettishly, "That's right. Mr. Ball, perhaps we could find a time for your dad and mine to talk?"

Dudley sneered and replied, "Meeting the parents already? Sure. A chance will surely present itself one day."

Lisa and Norman exchanged a look and smiled.

"But Mr. Ball, you said that there was something important that you had to announce when you asked for my dad to hold this branch meeting? What was it?" Lisa asked.

Dudley gave a crescent-eyed smile and replied, "What's the rush? The most important person isn't here yet. Everything will be clear once he arrives."

At the same time, Jasper was alighting the car.

He was about to walk into the building when an ambiguous tone mocked him from behind.

"Well, if it isn't Mr. Vice President?"

“What’s this? After making a big fool out of yourself with Seatreasures Group’s share prices, you’ve still got the arrogance to disgrace us here instead of seeking out a place to hide?”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1132

Everyone in Waterhoof City knew about the bet between Alban and Jasper.

The entire financial industry in the country was also well aware of the incident involving Seatreasures Group in Harbor Stocks.

Hence, these two things incidences were widely discussed.

Now, Seatreasures Group’s share price had stabilized. Only a small group of large and important organizations in the financial industry, and the two parties involved – Jasper and Alban – knew about what had transpired behind the scenes. Everyone else was unaware of the truth.

Thus, they instinctively thought that Jasper had failed in attacking Seatreasures Group.

Mr. Heron, who had disliked Jasper since a while back, thought so as well.

Mr. Heron thought that Mr. Gardner was going to attack Jasper. Since Jasper had gotten into trouble after losing heavily against Seatresures Group, and the president had suddenly announced a meeting.

He had happily come to attend the meeting today while wondering how he was going to humiliate Jasper. Hence, after Mr. Heron spotted him downstairs, there was no way he could hold back from mocking the man.

Jasper glanced at Mr. Heron. He was unsurprised by the man's reaction. After all, Jasper was the true host of this meeting and everyone else just didn't know it yet.

"You seem to care a lot about my situation, Mr. Heron."

Mr. Heron thought that Jasper was mortified when the latter spoke, so he laughed out loud and said, "See, that's why I told you that young people like you shouldn't be too arrogant just because you seized a bit of power. Society is still in the hands of your elders."

"Perhaps there'll be hope for you after a decade or two of training, young man. But right now? I told you you'd get in trouble, didn't I?"

"And you're so sure that I'm in trouble, Mr. Heron?" Jasper asked.

Mr. Heron laughed out loud and said, “Stop acting, Jasper. Everyone knows about your bet with Seatresures Group’s Alban Ball.

“You might’ve been lucky, with the government rectifying the medical treatment system at the same time, but Seatresures Group is much larger than anything you can compare with. You put in so much effort and hard work, but look at Seatresures Group’s share prices. It still came back up, didn’t it?”

“You must’ve lost quite a bit from that, hmm?”

“Do tell me if you go bankrupt, hahaha. You are the vice president, after all, and there’s no way a councilman like me can watch as you beg on the streets. I’m sure I can spare you a meal or two.”

“Where the f*ck did this stupid f*cker come from?”

Henry had been ticked off since this old man first opened his mouth. Thus, he finally piped up as he stood beside Jasper.

He looked at Mr. Heron as if the other was an idiot and said irritably, “We only just stepped foot on the venue and you start yapping on and on by yourself. Do you even know whether he made a loss or not? Yet, you try to make yourself look like you’re some sh*t when you’re just a f*cking idiot.”

Mr. Heron’s main business in Waterhoof City was in entertainment properties. He owned many karaoke rooms and bars, as well as some less legal establishments.

Having made his profit through these properties, Mr. Heron was not an easy man to talk to.

His expression darkened immediately when he heard Henry. As he stared at Henry, Mr. Heron replied harshly, “What did you say, brat? Do you even know who I am? How dare you talk sh*t about me! I can have people kill you for this!”

“Oh?!”

Henry was delighted.

He had always been the one threatening to kill others. After all, no one was qualified to threaten him in such a way.

“I’m standing right here today. Let’s see whether you manage to kill me or if I end up killing you instead, hmm?”

Mr. Heron chuckled wretchedly and waved his hand. At that moment, three bodyguard-like men began to surround them.

“You should really go and ask around how I, Gerry Heron, make my money, little sh*t. You’re just a little brat, you don’t even have the right to be my lackey. Who are you to act arrogant in front of me?”

“You were still swimming in your mother’s womb when I started sowing my seeds in the business world.” Mr. Heron glanced at Jasper when he said that.

He had come today to screw Jasper over, but he did not mind getting rid of Henry along the way.

By doing so, he would be able to vent all the humiliation he felt while still presenting Norman with a huge gift.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1133

‘When that happens, all I’ll need to do is make a few big movements and the position of vice president will be mine.’

Gerry felt heat thrum through his body at that thought. Yet, he had no idea what kind of utter devil he had offended.

Henry narrowed his eyes and stared at Gerry while the smile on his face began to fall.

“You’re gonna keep acting in front of your daddy, old man?”

Despite the three bodyguards circling them, Henry was unafraid.

The fact that Julian was standing beside him was the biggest source of courage.

“I’ll make sure to kill you just because of what you said just now! Just you wait! I’ll make sure to pay you back by ripping out the hairs of everyone in your family!”

Gerry’s expression turned sour as he shouted, “You want to die, don’t you! You little sh*t!”

Then, he immediately ordered his three bodyguards to make a move.

The three bodyguards had just taken the first step forward when Julian raised his brow and strode over. He raised his hands and grabbed two of the bodyguards’ hair, then he knocked their heads together in the middle.

With two tragic cries of pain, the two bodyguards immediately began to bleed. They squatted on the floor while cupping their swelling head in agony.

Nothing major would happen to them, but it was unrealistic for them to keep fighting.

The remaining bodyguard did not have the time to feel scared before Julian grabbed his throat.

Everything happened in a split second.

These so-called bodyguards were pathetic. They were just slightly stronger ordinary people, and completely defenseless in front of Julian.

This scene shocked Gerry.

However, before he could say anything, Henry had already slapped the man harshly across his face.

“Think you’re so great, huh, old man? Go ahead then, put on your air of greatness again!”

Henry slapped Gerry as he spoke.

Gerry may have been a fierce man, but he was already in his forties. He was no match for Henry's strength or energy.

Thus, all he could do was retreat and escape while he continued getting slapped.

Gerry was infuriated.

"You motherf*cker... little sh*t... mother... f*cking... stop... stop hitting me!"

There were five pauses in his sentence, each attributed to a slap from Henry.

By the time he finished speaking, both the man's cheeks were red and bloated, and there was a trail of blood running down the corner of his mouth. It was a horrifying and pitiful sight.

Just as Gerry was about to get half beaten to death by Henry, Norman and the rest ended up being attracted downstairs by the commotion.

“Enough!”

Norman walked over darkly and shouted.

Beside him were Lisa and Dudley, as well as two other councilmen that had just arrived.

Norman took a look at Gerry’s pitiful expression and turned to glare at Jasper furiously. He scolded, “Have you any sense of respect. Jasper?! How dare you hear people up in broad daylight?”

“You really think you’re more powerful than anyone, huh?!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1134

Lisa and the others turned to look at Jasper coldly just as Norman began scolding him. Dudley was the only one who looked calm.

Jasper looked at Norman and replied calmly, “When did you see me beating people up, Mr. Gardner? I suggest you seek treatment at a hospital if there’s something wrong with your eyes.”

Norman was enraged by Jasper's words.

He had clearly seen Henry beating Gerry up.

However, unlike that moron Gerry, Norman was well aware of Henry's identity.

In truth, he felt his heart lurch when he saw Henry. After all, Young Master Law's identity was too terrifying, and he could not afford to offend the man.

Thus, he could only blame Jasper.

Norman sneered and said, "Everyone knows that Henry's with you. The things he does are always by your command, aren't they?"

"Ha!" Henry scoffed and looked at Jasper.

His gaze was as though he was asking permission to beat this old man up as well.

Gerry was fine, but Norman could not be attacked so aggressively for now.

Jasper had come today to handle certain matters.

Jasper had Henry calm down first as he replied calmly, "Henry is his own man and so am I. I have no power to decide what he does."

Lisa sneered and said as she stood by the side, "Enough, Jasper. Stop acting. What are you doing here? Everyone knows that you lost to Seatresures Group, so are you coming here just to make a bigger fool out of yourself?"

Dudley's expression turned extremely strange when he heard her say this.

He fully knew that Jasper had not lost in this fight. Seatresures Group did, and very badly at that.

"I'm the one who asked to hold a meeting. What do you think I'm doing here?" Jasper said calmly.

"You asked for this?" Lisa laughed out loud. "You must be crazy. My dad was the one who convened this meeting."

"You must've gone crazy after losing to Seatresures Group. Your thoughts don't seem to be coherent."

Jasper responded calmly, "If I remember correctly, you said that you're taking a long break in the last meeting, right, Mr. Gardner? You said that you'll let go of all authority as the president. If that's the case, then who are you to hold a meeting right now?"

Norman's expression changed and he sneered. "Both of us know what happened back then, Jasper. So there's no need to beat around the bush anymore.

"I only did that because the situation called for it then. If I can apply for leave, then I can also end the leave early. I'm the president, and what I say goes. Who are you to stand in my way?"

"So basically, you're telling me that you chose to accept defeat because you couldn't win against me at that time. But now that the storm has passed, suddenly you think you will stand a chance, huh?" Jasper asked with a subtle smile.

Norman's expression changed and he said darkly, "Stop acting dumb, Jasper. Who do you think you're fooling here? You must've made a huge loss over at Seatreasures Group, so what right do you have to point fingers at us right now?"

"I'm sure you'll know soon enough whether I'm acting or not. In any case, since this is a meeting, let's move to the meeting room," Jasper said calmly.

Lisa sneered and said, "You weren't invited to the meeting. Why are you attending?"

“Oh? Did Mr. Gardner relieve me of vice president?” Jasper looked at Norman and asked calmly.

Norman’s expression changed slightly.

He had realized that there was something amiss.

Jasper’s tone was rather different from usual. He was being too confrontational.

However, even if both sides felt the urge to get rid of each other, Jasper was officially still the branch’s vice president.

Even if Norman was the president, he could not just relieve Jasper of his position as he wished.

After some thought, Norman sneered and said, “If you want to join then go ahead. There’s nothing I can do if you want to be made fun of. These council people are on my side and there’s nothing you can change even if you do decide to join the meeting.”

“You’re only going to be shamed even more!”

When he heard that, Gerry was the first to react impatiently.

“So I took a beating for nothing, Mr. Gardner?” Mr. Heron asked hastily.

Norman glared at Gerry. Without making another sound, he turned and left.

Gerry’s gaze flickered as he glared at Henry. Yet, he did not dare to make any claims.

He was not a complete idiot to have worked and survived in Waterhoof City for so many years,

Even Norman did not dare to offend Henry, so this brat had to come from some formidable family.

Thus, Gerry decided that he would head back and search up Henry’s familial background before he took revenge.

Henry scoffed and turned to Gerry. “What’re you looking at me for? Look again and I’ll gouge your eyes out to soak my feet!”

Gerry paled in anger and turned to leave.

His hatred for the man had reached new heights and he wanted nothing more than to kill Henry immediately.

“Good job, ” Jasper told Henry quietly.

Henry grinned in joy. It was always fun hanging out with Jasper.

He would even get praised for disrespecting people.

The group of people soon made their way to the meeting room upstairs, each thinking about different things. Once they sat down, Norman asked Jasper indifferently, “Go ahead, then, Jasper. Tell us the reason why you’re so adamant about joining this meeting.”

“Two things.”

Jasper did not waste time and raised two fingers.

“The first, I’m resigning from my position as vice president.”

Everyone else’s, including Norman’s, expressions changed when they heard him.

‘Is Jasper crazy?’

‘Resigning?’

Norman had a honeyed smile on his face after the shock passed.

‘Jasper has admitted defeat.’

‘He must’ve lost heavily in his fight against Seatreasures Group, otherwise he wouldn’t resign.’

‘He knows that he can’t fight against me in the branch anymore.’

Norman felt pleased.

“Haha, you finally made a smart decision,” Norman sneered, “Your life here in the branch would have been horrible if you didn’t resign.”

Lisa was even more thrilled. She felt like she was on cloud nine.

‘Do you see this, Ben? Jasper’s admitting defeat.

‘This is only the beginning. I’ll help you kill him slowly. I’ll make him regret it!’

Meanwhile, Jasper acted as if he was oblivious to everyone else’s reactions as well as Norman’s words.

“Secondly, I’m dissolving Haddock Chamber of Commerce’s Waterhoof City branch. From today onwards, Haddock’s Chamber of Commerce will no longer exist in Waterhoof City!”

If Jasper’s first announcement was an unexpected firecracker, then his second statement was the big bang itself.

Everyone was stunned.

Gerry widened his eyes in disbelief, even though his mind had previously been occupied with thoughts of how he was going to take revenge on Jasper and Henry.

Norman slammed his palm against the table and stood up in anger. He roared at Jasper, "What f*cking bullsh*t is that, Jasper?!"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1135

"What the f*ck are you yelling for?!"

While the sound of Norman's palm slamming against the table and his shout were still echoing throughout the room, Henry raised his voice and overpowered him.

His voice was even louder than Norman's.

Everyone in the room felt their ears ring. They were startled by Henry's shout.

"You trying to scare me or what?" Henry glared at Norman, the latter's face pale and panting. Henry grinned, showing his arrogant and devilish smile.

“Talk normally and stop f*cking shouting. You think just because you’re loud that you’re somehow more powerful? If that’s the case then instead of f*cking shouting why don’t all of you bring a f*cking microphone?”

Norman felt rage boil within him. In that instant, he truly wanted to let go of all inhibitions and tear Jasper and Henry to shreds.

Still, it was this was nothing more than an urge.

Norman did not have the courage to do such a thing. Even if he did, he lacked the ability to act on his desires. Norman glared at Jasper icily.

“You must’ve gone completely mad, Jasper! Who the f*ck are you to dissolve the branch, huh?”

Jasper’s expression was calm as he looked at Norman with what seemed like a hint of pity.

Norman was stunned by Jasper’s gaze and he immediately raged. “Why are you looking at me like that?!”

Jasper smiled and replied, "I just find your hysteria interesting, Mr. Gardner. But I do wonder, how long will you be able to hold your title of president?"

"This will be the last time you get to be hysterical, so I've decided that I'll let you vent. You won't have another chance to do so in the future."

Jasper's words cut into Norman's heart like a knife.

Despite this, extreme anger had actually managed to calm Norman down slightly.

He stared at Jasper and suddenly began to laugh.

"I used to think that you were just arrogant, Jasper. But it looks like now that you're also crazy!"

"You say you want to dissolve the branch? Then pray tell how you're going to do such a thing. Who do you think you are? You think a word from you is all it takes to dissolve the branch?"

Just then, Gerry also interrupted with some degree of difficulty. The man held a towel over the wounds on his face as he chimed in, "Exactly! Who do you think you are? God? What makes you think we'll dissolve the branch just because you asked us to?"

Jasper replied calmly, “Of course, the Haddock Chamber of Commerce’s Waterhoof City Branch won’t just dissolve because I call for it. But what if the Teo Chamber of Commerce is on my side too?”

Everyone was stunned when they heard him.

They turned to look at Dudley instinctively, who had yet to say anything all this while.

Dudley was currently expressionless, but the twitch in the corner of his mouth revealed how unsettled he was. Dudley did not refute Jasper’s claim.

This was in stark contrast to their other encounters.

It was widely known that Dudley and Jasper were mortal enemies.

Norman felt his heart skip a beat. He instantly brightened up.

Norman finally understood the bad premonition he had been feeling today. The whole time he had felt like there was an impending danger just around the corner.

However, he did not understand why the Ball family and Jasper would team-up.

Lisa was the first to react.

“Jasper’s bullsh*tting, right, Mr. Ball? He said that your Teo Chamber of Commerce will help him dissolve Haddock’s Chamber’s Waterhoof City branch. Is that true? Say something, Mr. Ball!”

Sitting by Dudley’s side, Lisa reached out to pull at his sleeve and ask hastily.

Dudley glanced at Lisa.

His gaze was absolutely devoid of warmth. Rather, it was filled with a kind of venomous disgust.

Lisa was stunned.

This was not how Dudley looked at her before. His gaze used to be filled with greed and desire, like he wanted to strip her naked on the spot.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1136

This was the first time Lisa had seen the man with such a fierce look in his eyes.

It was as if Dudley was looking at a slab of rotten meat instead of a desired beauty.

“Enough.”

Dudley threw Lisa’s hand off and said coldly, “You and your father treat me like I’m stupid. Like I’m a tool to get rid of Jasper. Do I look like an idiot to you?”

“You seduce me time and time again, yet you keep holding back from sleeping with me. Now I’m really pissed.”

Dudley ignored Lisa’s tragically pale face and turned to Norman to continue calmly.

“Mr. Gardner, Jasper and my father have already decided to work together. Should the Waterhoof City branch choose not to disband, then the Teo Chamber of Commerce will do everything we can to restrain Haddock’s Chamber of Commerce’s Waterhoof City branch’s powers.”

“As long as you are a member of the Waterhoof City branch or a member of a chamber with property in Waterhoof City, then you will become the common enemy of both JW and the Teo Chamber of Commerce.”

Jasper looked at Norman and the three other terrified council people as he spoke.

“Under such blockade and attacks, I wonder how long the Waterhoof City branch can survive.”

Norman felt like he was going to fall when he heard the man.

He felt lightheaded.

Ashe looked at Jasper’s calm expression, for the first time in his life, Norman felt suffocated.

“No way! Do you not fear Old Master Hurlbutt’s revenge? Or the fury of Haddock businesspeople from all around the country?!”

“I can give you some time to contact Gale if you want.” Jasper had a playful smile on his face.

“Ask him what he thinks.”

Norman shivered.

Jasper’s confidence brought a terrifying possibility to his mind.

He suddenly realized that he himself, and even the entire Waterhoof City branch, might have already become a discarded pawn!

‘But there’s no way!’

‘Haddock’s Chamber of Commerce was huge! Old Master Hurlbutt was extremely powerful!’

‘How could he surrender to Jasper?’

With an expression of absolute disbelief, Norman did not hesitate and immediately contacted Gale.

Considering Norman's current identity, he did not have Gale's direct contact and could only call the man's assistant.

However, the person on the other end of the line only told him, in a cold tone, that the old master had gone to rest and recuperate, and that he would not accept calls from anyone for the time being. Norman felt his entire body grow cold when he heard this.

Norman, who was moments away from fainting, flopped onto his chair with a loud "thud". Face ashen, he did not say anything. Yet, his expression already told everyone that it was truly over for the Waterhoof City branch.

"What? No way!"

Gerry's expression was wretched.

"All because of this little brat?!"

Gerry roared, pointing at Jasper, "He's just a little sh*t. How powerful can he be? Our Waterhoof City branch has been here for more than a decade. Literally any one of our businesses can crush him! Who is he to disband us?!"

At that moment, Jasper had already pulled out a document and slid it over to Norman over the meeting table.

“Please sign this Voluntary Dissolution Description for Non-Government Organizations, Mr. Gardner,” Jasper said calmly.

“We can’t sign that, Mr. Gardner!” Gerry shouted, feeling frantic.

The other two council people were shocked, but they were more rational than Gerry.

If even Gale had abandoned them, then Norman would not be able to fend off the attacks from both Jasper and the Teo Chamber of Commerce for long.

Most importantly, not many people within the branch were willing to stand alongside Norman and fight against Jasper and the Teo Chamber of Commerce.

At this moment, Norman’s hand trembled as the man seemed to have snapped back to reality. He glared at Jasper and Dudley with bloodshot eyes.

“I just want to know one thing. How did the two of you end up working together?!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1137

Norman wracked his brain for clues but came up empty-handed. He did not understand how the Jasper and the Ball duo decided to work together-not when they should have been fighting to the death.

Everyone in the Waterhoof City branch believed that Jasper had lost a huge sum of money from Seatresures Group's share prices earlier that day, himself included. They thought that Jasper should have been trying to make up for his losses and targeting Seatresures Group instead.

That was why Norman and Gerry were so carefree before this.

Despite this, Jasper and Dudley were suddenly standing together at this moment, causing Norman to be extremely aggrieved.

"In order to survive, Seatresures Group made the most beneficial choice."

Jasper's reply caused Norman's eyes to widen instantly.

“What do you mean?!” Norman shouted raspily.

Jasper smiled but did not have any intention of explaining too much to Norman.

“Won’t you sign, Mr. Gardner? I don’t have much time.”

Norman clenched his jaw after he heard Jasper say this. He glanced at the Voluntary Dissolution Description before him as his body shook.

Even though the Chamber of Commerce was just a loose organization that did not have much power, it was symbolic to its members.

To Norman and the others, it symbolized that they were representatives from Haddock.

To the Haddock Chamber of Commerce, it symbolized their status and influence in Waterhoof City.

They would lose everything once this branch dissolved.

Norman did not know what would happen after he signed the statement, but he was well aware that if he did not sign...

Jasper and the Tea Chamber of Commerce would attack his properties first.

Taking a deep breath, Norman shakily picked up the pen to sign the papers.

"Dad!" Lisa shouted frantically.

"We can't sign it! What will be left of us if we do? The Haddock Chamber of Commerce will never recognize us again and we'll end up like stray dogs!" Lisa wailed.

Norman felt himself age a decade as he replied calmly, "But if we don't sign, we'd be too dead to even be called a dog."

Norman looked up at Jasper icily and asked, "Right, Mr. Laine?"

Jasper's expression was calm. He neither agreed nor disagreed.

In the end, Norman took a deep breath and grabbed the pen. Then, he signed the dissolution papers in with one stroke.

The man shot up from his seat and threw the paper onto the table in front of Jasper. He shouted coldly, "Fine, you win! "

The sight before them had the three council people, including Gerry, in despair. They stared at the dissolution papers in front of Jasper.

Jasper took the documents and smiled. "President Gardner... Oh wait, you're not president anymore. Mr. Gardner, then. I see that you made a smart decision, Mr. Gardner. Well then, Mr. Ball, is there anything else you'd like to say?"

The corner of Norman's lips twitched when he heard this. He turned to look at Dudley.

Lisa looked over as well with utter resentment in her eyes as she seethed, "What other agreement do you and Jasper have, Dudley? You might as well say it all right now!"

Dudley replied coldly, "From this moment onward, Seatresures Group and all businesspeople from Teo will not form any partnerships with the Gardner family. All prior working agreements will be nullified immediately."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1138

Norman could not take it anymore after he heard Dudley say this. He clutched his while shouting at Jasper, “How cruel of you, Jasper! You never intended to let me go!”

“Letting an enemy go is the cruelest thing you can do to yourself.” Jasper’s gaze was calm as he continued faintly, “You understand, don’t you, Mr. Gardner? That leaving weeds unplucked will only cause more to grow.”

Norman felt the flames of fury burn in his chest while his vision went dark. He opened his mouth to spit out a mouthful of blood. At the same time, his expression paled. Wobbling, he soon fainted.

Lisa shrieked and went up to support Norman. Then, she turned her head to look at Jasper and screamed hatefully, “I wish you would die tragically, Jasper!”

By then, Jasper had already stood up. He glanced at the other three terrified council people before his gaze fell on Lisa.

“You should’ve expected this outcome after you decided to become someone else’s pawn.”

Jasper then called out to Henry and walked out of the meeting room with Julian in tow.

They left Lisa to shriek and cuss in the room behind them.

Jasper walked out of the building and looked up to see the Haddock Chamber of Commerce's Waterhoof City Branch's business plaque hanging on the door. He turned to Julian and said, "Remove that plate, Jul."

Julian nodded and walked over. He removed the business plaque and threw it into the trash can by the side.

"From today onwards, Haddock Chamber of Commerce no longer has a branch in Waterhoof City," Jasper stated softly.

At that moment, a figure ran out of the building hastily. It was Gerry, whose face was still bruised.

"Mr. Laine, Mr. Laine, please wait."

Gerry shouted as he ran over to stand in front of Jasper. Before he could steady his breathing, a pleasing and flattering smile graced his features as he said over-courteously.

“I’m sorry about what happened before, Mr. Laine. Please forgive me. How about this, I’ll book a table tonight at Waterhoof Upstairs as a show of my sincere apology. Please do come, Mr. Laine.”

Gerry had cast aside any dignity he had left.

The man had still been thinking about how to take revenge on Jasper and Henry just moment’s ago. However, he saw with his own eyes how this young man had played Norman like a fool, and how Gale did not prevent any of this from happening.

With that, Gerry finally realized that he could not afford to offend Jasper.

Gerry who was a smart man. Now that businesspeople from Haddock were done for in Waterhoof City, and Norman was also screwed, he knew that he needed to find someone strong to hang on to.

Thus, Gerry did not mind embarrassing himself if it meant being supported by Jasper. If he had to lie face-down on the floor and bark for Jasper, then so be it.

Jasper looked at Gerry playfully.

In all honestly, compared to arrogant and stubborn people, people like Gerry were more suited to survive in society.

Gerry’s smile froze when he heard Jasper. He was about to speak when Jasper continued.

“But I do like making friends, so if you want to be my friend, there’s something that I’d like to ask you to help me with.”

Having gone through an emotional rollercoaster, Gerry patted his chest and said, “Just say the word, Mr. Laine. I’d risk my life for you without any hesitation.”

Jasper clasped Gerry’s shoulder and said, “It’s not that serious. Moreover, how could I ask my friends to risk their lives for me?”

“It’s really simple. The Gardner family’s been in Waterhoof City for years now, and they’ve got to have countless contacts and strong relationships with people everywhere. Get rid of them for me. Can you do that?”

Gerry's smile froze. The last thing he expected was that Jasper would assign him to attack Norman as his pilot task.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1139

Who was Gerry Heron?

There were all sorts of hidden talents here in Waterhoof City.

If you looked up, you would see top-notch aristocrats, and the Royal family, in the mainlands.

Looking down would find you countless bigshots with a long-standing line of ancestors. Some older and larger families even had a history in Waterhoof City dating back to the Republic.

Gerry was well aware of where he stood.

He had started up his business in the entertainment industry in the early days with violence, so his business was very much in the gray area. Despite this, he was pretty much set for life.

However, he did not have much of a family to support him in Waterhoof City.

Any business working in the main buildings of Waterhoof City's three CBDs could easily destroy him.

Thus, he would need to find support from someone else.

"Mr., Mr. Laine. The Gardner family may not seem much to you, nor are they some formidable family here in Waterhoof City, but they are much stronger than me. I'm not strong enough to deal with them," Gerry said sorrowfully.

Jasper gave the man a small smile and replied, "Don't worry. I wouldn't ask you to do it if I knew it was a suicide mission."

"Now that the Waterhoof City branch has been dissolved, there are still many business people from Haddock here in Waterhoof City. Who do you think they'll look for first?"

"Same goes for the other people in Haddock's Chamber of Commerce. Who do you think they'll look for now that they've been made a fool of and Norman's signed the papers?"

Gerry's gaze flickered about when he heard Jasper speak. The man's words made sense.

Jasper chuckled and continued gently, "So, Norman's going to be in a lot of trouble for the time being, and what I need you to do is rock the boat for me."

"Don't worry about anything else I'll be keeping an eye on the situation. I'll make a move when the time comes."

Gerry hesitated for a moment before he clenched his jaw and agreed, "Alright, Mr. Laine. I'll trust your words and get right to it. Don't worry."

Jasper nodded in satisfaction and handed his name card to Gerry. "Then I shall await your good news."

"Don't worry, Mr. Laine!" Gerry quickly replied.

Jasper gave Gerry an encouraging look before he got into the car with Henry.

Gerry's mind went through a rollercoaster of emotions as he stared at the Bentley driving away.

“F*ck it, I’ve got to pay the price for what I want anyway. Causing trouble, right? That’s right up my alley. Worse comes to worst and Jasper leaves me to fend for myself, then I’ll just run away and start over.”

In the car, Henry voiced out his confusion to Jasper after the latter had asked for Gerry’s help.

“There are tons of people like him in the world. Did you have to waste your time on him?”

Jasper smiled and replied, “The more insignificant the person, the more useless they generally are. Gerry might not be important enough to be brought up in public, but this also means he’s least likely to attract others’ attentions.”

“What happened today will reach everyone’s ears in no time, and when that happens, there’ll be much more people with their eyes on me, the Gardner family, and businesspeople from Haddock. There will be many things that I will not be able to do.”

“But if Gerry is willing, then he’ll bring an unexpected result to the situation.”

“Are you so certain that Gerry will be loyal to you?” Henry asked.

Jasper shook his head and replied, “People like him are only loyal to themselves. Not that it matters, since I just need to be kept in the loop while monitoring Norman’s movements.”

“This is an investment that doesn’t require a single cent, nor does it come with any risks. I’m just planting a potential pawn. Whether or not I can, or will, use him matters little to me.”

“F’tck. Is it not tired living like this?” Henry spat.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1140

Once they returned to the Hotel, Henry made his way to his room mysteriously while Jasper stayed in his study to think a little longer.

He thought back to everything that had happened lately before he finally decided on his next few steps. By then, the sky had gotten dark

Jasper felt his stomach rumble in hunger, and he got up to make way to Henry’s room so he could invite that man out for dinner.

The door finally opened after many knocks.

“Is there a woman inside?” Jasper looked at Henry suspiciously and asked, the man flushing in excitement.

“Bullsh*t. All I see and desire is my Jill Cobb. No one else! ” Henry complained.

Jasper recalled how Henry truly did not seek out any other woman ever since he had met Jill. He could not help but feel that the world was getting weirder.

Just then, a strange man’s voice’s sounded from inside the room.

“Mr. Law, the loot! We did it!”

Henry looked surprised and he turned around to shout. “What did it drop? Wait, I’m coming over! ”

He left Jasper at the door as he rushed back into the hotel room.

Jasper was confused and he followed Henry inside. The sight that he was met with stunned him.

Henry was a young master who had always lived a life of luxury, so there was no way he would check into a normal hotel room. Like Jasper's, his was also the presidential suite.

The room spanned over four hundred square meters and contained two study rooms. The moment Jasper walked in, he was shocked to find that Henry had turned the living room into an... internet café.

Jasper was stunned when he saw the four computers arranged in a line in front of him, each with a young man sitting behind it. They were enraptured while playing... United Legends.

Henry was currently sitting behind a computer as he stared at the screen excitedly.

Jasper leaned over his shoulder and was shocked to find Henry playing the Warrior class.

It looked like they had just defeated the boss as there was lots of equipment and items sprawled all over the floor.

"Holy sh*t, it's the Judgement Mace!" Henry cackled. Before Henry could appreciate his new weapon, a large group of players suddenly appeared on the map.

“Mr. Law, they’re people from an enemy guild. They’ re trying to steal our items!” A young man from the computer next to theirs shouted.

“Motherf*cker! Gather some people and f*ck them over!” Henry waved his hand with a dominant air around him.

Henry’s avatar was drenched in blood after he had maneuvered it to kill quite a few enemies. Henry won even though he was fighting a group of seven to eight people.

Henry was elated as he used a prop to type for the entire server to see.

“Don’t try to challenge my allowance with your annual salaries!”

Henry then brought his avatar back to the city proudly. He clicked on the interface and stood up to let the young man behind him take the reins.

“Click on level-up. I want it to reach max level tonight.”

The young man gulped and moved the mouse to click on the button. 128 Somer Dollars were spent with each click. Considering the current state of Henry’s account, he would have to click non-stop for at least four to five hours before it reached max level.”

Despite knowing that this mysterious Mr. Law, who checking into a hotel to play computer games, was rich, the young man could not help but wonder how rich someone had to be in order to throw their money away like this.

Henry got up and walked over to Jasper before he said disapprovingly, "Quickly tell the people under you that the max level is too low. It's time to raise it."

"Since when did you start playing?" Jasper asked, looking at Henry's god-level account with the ID 'LLLLLLLLL' curiously.

"Half a month ago, I think. I employed them just to play with me, and to help me level up my account when I'm not free."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1141

Jasper loved gaming in his past life too.

Because of this, he did hear of some god-level players in a few different games.

WindChaser from Journey to the War, for example, was the trust-fund child of one of Waterhoof City's richest families. The man's family was in the banking business and he had an endless stream of money to use.

Or even Rich All The Way from West Fantasyland.

No one dared to call themselves wealthy in the game without spending at least tens of millions on it.

The most powerful as well as the earliest God-level account was the legendary 8Ls.

The account had spent twenty to thirty million on the game and won in a one against the entire area fight.

The last thing Jasper expected was this legendary 8L player to be Henry.

While Jasper did bring United Legends to the world sooner in this lifetime, fate had still run its course and Henry had still gotten into the game.

While ordinary people might think that spending tens of millions on games was something unimaginable, it was considered a small expense to Henry.

“I have to say, this game of yours is actually pretty fun to play; There are even invitations to fight or defeating bosses. Still, there’s something I don’t like about it.”

Jasper was intrigued when he heard Henry say this.

“What is it? Tell me, and if it makes sense then I’ll go and put in a word with Sena to have them improve it.”

The few young men behind the computers were stunned when they heard Jasper say this.

Holy f*ck. They thought that Mr. Law was already an extremely powerful man.

They did not expect to meet another even more powerful figure who could control Sena.

If this was any other time, these youths might have mocked Jasper for being crazy. However, they watched with their own eyes how uncaring Mr. Law had been as he poured money into the game without batting an eyelid.

There was no way Mr. Law would chat with a madman so joyfully.

“The max level is too low and the map updates are too slow. Everything I have is already maxed out and I only get invites to fight other people,” Henry complained to Jasper, ignoring the shock that all the other youths were experiencing.

“I have no control over specific updates, nor do the reports pass by my hand. But I can help you ask later if there are any arrangements to improve this coming soon,” Jasper suggested with a crescent-eyed smile.

Jasper thought back to how he had pulled Wendy over to open an account when United Legends had just opened a server. He had planned to get married in-game.

In the end, they had not managed to fight the boss with the wedding ring item and had instead been tortured by a guild many times. Holding a grudge, Wendy requested Jasper to ban their accounts and she had only relented after quite a bit of consolation.

Now that he thought of this, Jasper found himself missing Wendy.

The two had audio or video calls every night, but it was different from speaking in person.

“Great, then I’ll await your good news... Oh, right. I just received news from Harbor City. I think you’d be very interested.”

Henry lowered his voice and leaned in to chuckle by Jasper’s ear. He continued, “One of my lackeys in Harbor city said he saw Lisa appear in Harbor City some time ago.”

“What’s she doing in Harbor City?” Jasper frowned slightly.

“Hehe. My boy said that he saw her shopping in a mall. She was alone, but she arrived and left in Fabian’s car!”

Jasper’s eyes lit up when he heard him.

“When was this?”

“A month ago.”

Jasper replied calmly, “That explains a lot, then.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1142

Henry still wanted to ask more questions when Jasper waved his hand and said, “Come on, let’s go eat. What about your team of players, should we get them something?”

Henry replied nonchalantly, “No need. I already told the hotel staff to send three meals a day to the room. Their diets are even more balanced than ours.”

Jasper chuckled and replied, “Alright, then. Let’s go.”

...

At the same time, in the Gardner family’s villa.

An old doctor walked out of the room with his assistant in tow. He sighed and turned to Lisa, who looked worried, “Miss Gardner, Mr. Gardner’s condition isn’t looking very good...”

“Our initial diagnosis of Mr. Gardner’s stroke today pins the cause as large emotional fluctuations as well as a long period of irregular diet and rest.”

Lisa’s heart sank when she heard him. She clenched her fists and asked, “Will my dad recover from this, Dr. Tingey?”

The doctor shook his head and replied, “There’s no cure for stroke as of now.”

“Especially when it comes to elders. After having a stroke once, there will likely be multiple relapses and the situation will only become more severe. Please be prepared for the worst, Miss Gardner.”

Lisa’s expression paled as she asked, “What’s the worst possible outcome?”

The doctor sighed again and replied, “Severe and later stage strokes can lead to Parkinson’s disease. This is also known as dementia.”

“Another possibility would be for the stroke to worsen whereby the patient will no longer becomes able to take care of themselves...”

Lisa’s expression darkened and the doctor did not dare to say more. All he could do was comfort her softly, “These things have already happened, and we cannot go back in time to change it. Please don’t think plague your mind with negative thoughts, Miss Gardner.”

“With appropriate treatment and rehabilitation, there should be no major issue. He’s not in any life-threatening danger, so we just have to prevent the situation from getting worse.”

“It would be best to bring him to the hospital for a systematic full-body check-up. I’ll contact the best team and have them come up with a treatment plan for Mr. Gardner.”

Lisa smiled wryly. “Alright. Thank you, Dr. Tingey.”

The doctor left with his assistant as Lisa opened the room door and entered the ward.

Norman was currently lying in bed. His complexion was horrible, like he was half-dead.

Lisa felt her heart clench at the sight. She walked over to the bed to take Norman's hand as she greeted him, "Dad."

"Did the doctor leave?" Norman asked weakly.

"Yeah," Lisa nodded.

"Has there been contact with Harbor City?" Norman asked again.

Lisa's gaze darkened and she replied softly, "Don't worry about that now, Dad. What you need to do most is rest."

Norman opened his eyes to look at Lisa and said slowly, "Did Mr. Atticus... ignore you?"

Lisa knew she could not hide the truth from Norman, and she bit her lip. "I haven't contacted them yet. Maybe Mr. Atticus is busy, I'll call again later..."

Before Lisa could finish speaking, Norman waved her off. "There's no need. Gale's already thrown us aside, so why wouldn't Mr. Atticus? To them, we're already discarded pawns."

Lisa replied hatefully, “Dad! I won’t just give up so easily!”

“I’m already useless, and all I can do is lie in bed. What can you do to Jasper?” Norman asked.

“We couldn’t even win against Jasper when I could still move around. He still managed to force the Waterhoof City branch to dissolve, and we’ve already lost our biggest form of support.”

“Instead of thinking about how we should take revenge on Jasper, we need to think about how to stay alive now.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1143

Lisa felt both terrified and in despair when she heard this.

“Are you giving up too, Dad?”

Norman shook his head and replied, “I’m not giving up. I’m just stating the reality of the situation.

“When we first met Jasper in Swallow Capital for the first time... To be honest, did we actually hate him that much?”

Lisa bit her lip and stayed silent.

“But it’s too late for all of this now.”

Norman sighed deeply.

“Gale and Mr. Atticus certainly won’t help us now, so we’ve got to think of a way to help ourselves.”

Lisa looked at Norman and asked, “Do you have a plan, Dad?”

Norman looked down lightly. An unstable light flickered in his weak gaze as he replied, “There’s only one thing to do now.”

“There are still people Jasper can’t afford to offend in Waterhoof City. We just have to pay a higher price for their protection. I’d bet more than half my family’s wealth if it means Jasper loses big this time!”

...

The following day, news of the dissolution of the Haddock's Chamber of Commerce's Waterhoof City Branch had spread throughout the city.

This meant nothing to the majority of civilians. However, people higher up in the social ranks knew how perilous the situation actually was.

The dissolution of the Waterhoof City branch meant that Haddock's Chamber of Commerce's influence had completely exited Waterhoof City.

Everyone thought that this was Teo Chamber of Commerce's work. After all, the two chambers were mortal enemies, and traces of work of businesspeople from Teo could be seen in the dissolution of Haddock's Chamber's branch.

However, what was even weirder was that there were no signs of Teo Chamber in Commerce in Waterhoof City either.

Instead of taking this chance to enter Waterhoof City's market, they had completely vanished.

Overnight, Waterhoof City seemed to have turned into a vacuum where there were no signs of life from either organizations.

While countless rumors filled the air, Jasper met Gerry in the hotel.

Gerry sat partially on the sofa, his expression frantic like he had lost his home.

The weather was getting cold and the air conditioning in the room was set to Jasper's favored 24 degrees Celsius. Despite this, Gerry's forehead was beaded with sweat.

This was due to shock.

"Mr. Laine, no matter what, we can't do this anymore!" Gerry pleaded with a slight wail in his tone as he looked at Jasper.

Jasper frowned.

Gerry had been wearing this expression on his face ever since he walked through the hotel room doors. Jasper initially thought that Gerry was acting, but he had a feeling that things were not that straightforward now.

“What happened?” Jasper asked with a frown.

Gerry wiped the sweat off his forehead and gulped before replying, “I was warned that someone’s already stepped up to protect the Gardner family. I really can’t offend this person.”

Jasper was no stranger to Gerry’s arrogance. The man’s business had never been completely legal, and he was not someone to be offended lightly.

‘But both Gale and Alban had completely left Waterhoof City now, so who could terrify Gerry so much?’

“Royals?” Jasper arched his brow.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1144

“Don’t you know, Mr. Laine? There’s a saying, the North has the Browns and the South has the little prince. These two are extremely formidable leaders of the younger generation.”

“This Waterhoof City little prince is the heir to the Royal family. They’re an extremely powerful presence here in Waterhoof City. They’ve been here since the Republic and their roots run deep. They’re not people small fries like us can compare to.”

“We all call him Little Prince in private. The old master to his family is officially recognized as the supreme emperor.”

Jasper’s gaze changed as he listened to Gerry.

‘A prince and a supreme emperor. What kind of feudal game is this?’

Despite how unbelievable it all sounded, Jasper could tell that Gerry was speaking the truth from his mannerism.

Even if Gerry wanted to lie to him, he would not be stupid enough to make up a whole family on the spot.

“Go ahead and tell me what happened,” Jasper said.

Gerry began, “This morning, I decided to gather a few people to cause trouble at Norman’s company. I also contacted a few of Norman’s old clients to ask them to kick up a fuss.”

“But my men had just gone out when they immediately came back completely injured.”

“Then someone called me and warned me not to interfere with the Gardner family. They told me that the little prince had already intervened.”

“I made my way over immediately after this.”

“Mr. Laine, ninety-five percent of the people in Waterhoof of City don’t know who the little prince is. But the remaining five percent that do definitely don’t have the guts to try to falsify his identity. Hence, the person on the phone mostly likely spoke the truth.”

“Mr. Laine, you can put a knife to my neck and I still won’t do it. I suggest you let it go as well. The Gardner family doesn’t mean anything to you anymore, and they’re not worth offending the little prince over.”

Jasper narrowed his eyes after listening to Gerry, then waved his hand. “Alright, I’ve got it. Go back”

After Gerry left, Jasper pulled Henry over while the man was having fun playing games.

“Since when did Waterhoof City have a supreme emperor and little prince? Do you know anything about them?” Jasper asked straightforwardly.

Henry was stunned for a moment before he spoke, “Yeah, the Royal family. They were the richest family in Waterhoof City before the Republic, but no one knows how powerful they are now.”

“Let me put it this way. The Royal family is the majority shareholder of Peace Bank. Eqven Pansky Industrial, probably the most powerful privately-owned group in the country, belongs to them.”

“I met that little prince or something seven or eight years ago. He was a smiley man like you. He definitely wasn’t up to any good...”

“Not to mention that he was still young then. He was gentle and frail, and looked like bullying material, but my dad warned me not to offend him before we met. Therefore, you can imagine that their status in Waterhoof City is equivalent to my family’s among Harbor City’s four richest families.”

Henry then nudged Jasper after he finished explaining this and asked, “Why, are they coming after you? Don’t worry, there’s nothing really special about them anyway. The little prince’s dad, the head of the Royal family, has got quite the relationship with my dad.”

“My dad stole my mom from his hands. Hahaha.”

Jasper’s expression shifted.

'From the old master to Zachary... does the Law family also have the habit of stealing other people's wives?'

Jasper moved on from that thought and sighed lightly. "Norman asked the Royal family for help."

Henry frowned as well.

"The situation's a little trickier now.

"To be honest, in this flourishing and desirable land of Waterhoof City, the Royal family isn't one to be taken lightly."

"Rather than me seeking to offend him, I'm more worried that he'd come after me himself," Jasper replied calmly.

"I don't think he would," Henry shook his head, "Who the Hell is Norman? The Royal family helping him is already a surprise in and of itself.

"I don't know how Norman is qualified to ask them for help, but the Royal family are unlikely to take Norman seriously. Who knows, maybe Norman's overestimating the Royal family's involvement."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1145

Henry's analysis made sense.

Yet, Jasper could not help but feel like there was more to this incident.

In all honesty, from what he came to understand, the Royal family was an extremely powerful presence in Waterhoof City, or even the entire mainland.

If people like Norman could gain the Royal family's support, then he would have made a huge name for himself long ago.

However, he had only come to seek the Royal family for help once he was on the edge of life and death.

Either Norman and the Royal family had history and this was a favor the latter owed the man, or there was a more to this situation that outsiders did not know about

Still, Jasper could not help but feel like he would meet the Royal family sooner or later.

“The most important thing is that I’ve never planned to let Norman and Lisa go,” Jasper said calmly.

Royal family or not, Jasper would weed out and completely destroy the father-daughter duo.

He could not opt to give up and run just because some so-called Royal family appeared out of nowhere.

Jasper might as well sell his company and go back to farming if that was the case.

“If you really need it, I could help you get you a meeting with someone from the Royal family.” Henry suggested.

Jasper shook his head and rejected him.

“No. You can’t be involved in this, because that means the Law family will be dragged into it. The situation will only become difficult to control if that were to happen.”

“Let’s wait and see. If this Royal family wants to protect Norman, then they’re going to have to contact me.”

Henry shrugged and replied, "You decide then. I'm going back to play my game, but remember to ask if you need my help."

"The Royal family might be powerful, but that doesn't mean they can do whatever they want. Keep yapping bullsh*t and I will still slap them across the face."

Jasper's premonition was right, as a middle-aged man came looking for Jasper at noon.

"Hi, is this Mr. Laine from JW?" The middle-aged man was extremely courteous as he greeted Jasper by the door with a small respectful smile.

Jasper glanced at the man. He could tell from one look that this middle-aged man was not the host, but someone like a messenger.

"I am. And you are?" Jasper asked.

The middle-aged man smiled and replied, "I'm Coffey Copeland. My apologies for disturbing you so suddenly, Mr. Laine."

"Coffey Copeland... What a unique name." Jasper smiled.

Coffey was unfazed, as if he was used to people making fun of his name. The man bowed slightly and said, “Mr. Laine, I’ve been ordered to invite you to a meeting.”

“With who?” Jasper asked.

“Dominique Royal, the little prince,” Coffey raised his voice slightly when he said the name. He seemed to hold endless admiration and respect for the man.

Indeed.

Jasper’s heart chilled.

“The little prince wants to see me, but he won’t come and invite me himself?” Jasper asked calmly, narrowing his eyes.

Coffey frowned slightly, as if displeased by Jasper’s ‘arrogance’. Yet, he replied gently, “The little prince values this meeting with Mr. Laine very much. Thus, he’s decided to wait at the venue in advance.”

There was no fault in both the tone and content of the man’s words.

Even so, Jasper still felt the forcefulness of the little prince in it.

Instead of appearing himself, the man had booked a place and sent someone to invite him.

This meant that the little prince was certain that he would attend.

“The car’s already waiting downstairs, so would you please follow me to the meeting, Mr. Laine?” Coffey piped up again, upon seeing how Jasper remained silent.

“Give me a moment, I need to change,” Jasper replied calmly.

The entire time, Jasper had never once planned to invite Coffey into the room.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1146

Not that Coffey planned to enter the room anyway. Thus, the man replied courteously, “Alright. Then I shall wait here at the door.”

Jasper closed the door and called Julian over. After changing into another jacket, he opened the room door again.

“Let’s go,” Jasper said calmly.

Coffey glanced at Julian and said, “Mr. Laine, the little prince only invited you.”

Under normal situations, Julian would not speak unless prompted.

Yet, here he was, speaking up before Jasper could reply. “Jasper isn’t going anywhere without me.”

Jasper’s expression turned solemn when he heard the other.

He knew that Julian’s words were not without reason.

Coffey narrowed his eyes slightly and stared at Julian intently.

The two locked eyes and the atmosphere around them turned heavy.

Julian's body was kept taut, and his aura was kept internally. He was ready to strike at any time.

Jasper had never seen Julian like this before.

"I'm not too used to sitting in other people's cars. It's alright if it's not convenient, I guess the little prince will have to come to the hotel to look for me instead," Jasper suddenly said.

Coffey frowned slightly. After a moment of thought, the aura around him disappeared and he returned to being a harmless middle-aged man. He gave a small smile and replied, "That's alright. Please follow me, gentlemen."

Jasper did not call Henry this time. With Julian in tow, he followed Coffey downstairs.

Once they arrived downstairs, they saw a low-profile commercial vehicle waiting for them.

Jasper did not get in. Instead, he had Julian drive his Bentley over and got into the passenger seat of his own car.

Coffey did not make a big deal about this as he got into his own vehicle and had it lead the way.

As he drove, Julian suddenly told Jasper, "Jasper, that man is a skilled fighter."

This was the first time Jasper saw Julian so wary of someone else. He asked, "Is he stronger than you?"

Julian shook his head and replied, "I won't know until we fight for real. But he's older than me and my body's in peak condition. If I don't lose in thirty hits, then he's no match for me."

Jasper nodded and smiled. "But I thought the older the sorcerer, the stronger they are?"

"That's just fiction. There's no such thing as magic in this world. There are such things as stronger genes, but it's not as prominent as it is in fiction. How strong you are still goes back to your physical capabilities," Julian explained with a smile.

They followed Coffey's car and took some winding roads. After more than an hour of navigating a labyrinth of roads, the car finally pulled to a stop next to a clean pavement.

Both walkways of the small street were filled with parasol trees, and there were vintage western houses all around. One glance was all it took to know that this was a very historical place.

Within the concrete forest that was Waterhoof City, such a quiet and exquisite place was prime property for the bourgeoisie.

Jasper inexplicably thought of the small courtyard Steven Monty had gifted him back in Nauritus City. "Please follow me, gentlemen."

Coffey led Jasper and Julian into what looked like a normal western estate.

Walking through the courtyard, they took the creaking wooden stairs upstairs and arrived at the second floor of the western building. Jasper then walked through the doors of a small private room.

After walking through the doors, he saw that the interior of the building was a completely different world.

The second floor of the western building had been renovated into a small stage, where two girls were currently performing ballet. The sound of a piano drifted through the air as this vintage room showcased the scene of a high-standard musical.

In front of the stage, right in the middle of the second floor, was a dining table. A young man was sitting at the table, facing away from Jasper as he watched the ballet performance.

“You’re stepping on land the consuls used during the French Concession a century ago.”

“Every single item here is an extremely valuable antique. I love them, for these inanimate objects come with the breath of time and age.”

“Every time I sit in this room, I can’t help but think about how those people have become nothing but artifacts of history after a century of hardship. I wonder if we would be remembered the same way by people in the future one day.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1147

This was his first time meeting the little prince Dominique Royal, but Jasper almost choked on the other's air of pretentiousness.

Jasper looked at Dominique, who remained seated on his chair, showing no intention of turning to acknowledge him. Jasper gave it some thought before he smiled.

When it came to acting pretentious, Jasper liked to think that he was just as good as anyone else.

“I cannot hold onto the people who turn away from me. After all, the past will only add on to my troubles.”

“On the contrary, I much prefer the future. A time where everything is uncertain and up to us to decide.”

Jasper strode into the room with his head held high as he talked.

Julian took in the situation and followed instinctively.

Only for Coffey to tilt his body slightly and stood in his path.

“My apologies. Like me, you can only wait outside the doors.”

Coffey gave Julian a small smile and said gently.

The man’s tone was calm, but his gaze was firm and held no room for argument.

Julian’s pupils contracted and his chilling aura exploded. He replied indifferently, “And if I must enter?”

Coffey replied with a small smile, “No one can cause trouble in front of the little prince.”

Julian narrowed his eyes and stepped forward.

With that, the two men who were already standing close to one another physically clashed.

Julian's left shoulder knocked against Coffey's right, the former trying to enter the room while the other standing in his path.

Their flesh had obviously collided, yet, it made a dull thud as if a sack had fallen from the sky.

One man stood at the door while the other stood outside. One was trying to enter while the other was trying to stop him. The two men's strengths collided through their shoulders, but neither Julian nor Coffey moved.

Unimaginably powerful strengths clashed, and Julian's eyes shone brightly with wonder. With a slight harrumph, his body shifted and Coffey leaned back slightly.

The two looked at each other as they both shared the same thought.

They recognized each other's strengths from the brief conflict.

Julian's gaze was filled with the excitement and the urge to fight. It had been a long time since he had met an opponent that filled him with excitement and nervousness.

However, this was not a place for him to do as he wished upon finding a worthy opponent. Hence, Julian quickly looked at Jasper.

If Jasper nodded, then Julian would have no qualms about inviting Coffey outside to fight.

Jasper’s words completely dispelled Julian’s desire to fight and he took a silent half-step backward. His gaze was still trained on Coffey.

He heard a creak, followed by the sound of the latch being locked, and the door was closed.

“It must be great being young.”

Coffey said with a smile, seeing how Julian was still staring at him.

“I’d be no match for you if you were ten years younger.” Julian’s words were direct but confidence shone through his eyes after he said that.

Coffey chuckled. He did not refute Julian's claim. The man merely closed his eyes to rest them and repeated what he said softly, "It must be great being young."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1148

In the room, the little prince Dominique Royal finally turned to look at Jasper.

Dominique's appearance was pleasing to the eye. His facial features leaned more to the feminine side, and despite being a man, he gave off a distinct charm.

This was especially true for the delicate shape of his eyes under his defined brows. The man's gaze lit up with an unforgettable shine.

While Jasper looked Dominique over, Dominique did the same to him.

The two equally young men observed each other quietly for two whole minutes without saying anything.

The ballet performance did not stop and the sounds of the piano flowed slowly like trickling water in the room.

Dominique eventually smiled.

“Have a seat.”

Dominique gestured to the seat opposite him with his palm.

Jasper walked up to take a seat.

Dominique’s gaze flickered back to the ballet performance on stage and said, “It’s a refreshing idea to hear an argument in favor of the future, Jasper.”

Jasper replied, “Your vision is unique as well, little prince. Not many so young prefer antiques and history.”

Dominique chuckled and replied slowly, “I had cooked up many ways of talking to you before we met, Jasper. But after seeing you, I realize that all those methods and tactics are useless.”

“So, I’ll be frank. I want to protect the Gardner family!”

Jasper nodded and replied, "Indeed. I do like it when things are more straightforward. In that case, I'll be frank too and tell you and I want to get rid of the Gardner family."

Dominique was neither angry nor frustrated when he heard Jasper say this, as if he had already anticipated this.

The man's gaze was deep and he showed no sign of the terror rumored outside. It was almost as if he was just a normal gentle scholar.

"I've researched you before this, Jasper. And all this while your performance has been exceptional. To be frank, I don't think anyone can do any better than you did. Especially as an entrepreneur from a normal, or even poor, family."

"From what I understand, I believe that you are a businessman through and through, Jasper. As a businessman, what matters most to you are your interests. You know that I wish to protect the Gardner family, yet you seem adamant about getting involved in this. This doesn't seem to follow your motto of what benefits you most."

Jasper's gaze also fell on the graceful ballerinas before him. The two men resembled good friends that were currently enjoying art together.

"There are short-term and long-term interests. In the long-term, maintaining a good relationship with you is indeed beneficial, Little Prince. But in terms of immediate interests, the Gardner family's existence is an obstacle to my plan."

“More importantly, I don’t know what relationship you and Norman share, Little Prince. But if Norman’s able to ask you to step up and protect him, then it must mean that he must serve some unique purpose to you. I also can’t guarantee that Norman won’t request you to target me, Little Prince.”

“So even if I give up on my plan of getting rid of the Gardner family, there’s still the risk of me butting heads with you in the future, Little Prince.”

“But if I continue on my quest of eradicating them, at least I’ll be able to guarantee my current interests.”

Dominique nodded after hearing Jasper’s calm statement and said, “Very well. Not bad, Jasper. There are no flaws in your judgment.”

Dominique reached out and took out a bottle of red wine as he spoke, pouring Jasper a glass.

Then, he swirled the glass of red wine with a playful smile and toasted Jasper. “This bottle of wine is part of my family collection.

“It was processed during Princess Diana’s fiftieth birthday by the British royal family sixty years ago. Excluding the one in the Royal Treasury Museum, this is the only bottle in the entire world. Let’s celebrate our acquaintance with this bottle today.”

Jasper raised his glass and the two transparent glasses clinked against each other with a clear sound.

Jasper tilted his head back to drink the wine. It was slightly bitter with a sweet aftertaste while its aroma was full-bodied and mellow. It was a high-grade red wine.

Dominique chuckled and clapped his hands.

The music stopped, and the ballet dancers and the pianist got up to leave the stage. At the same time, from the dark area from which they exited the area walked out a shaky father and daughter.

These two were precisely Norman and Lisa.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1149

Jasper frowned slightly when he saw the father-daughter duo.

Norman and Lisa had not expected to see Jasper here either. Already afraid, the two of them were terrified now.

Dominique continued to swirl the glass of wine in his hands and said lazily, “Norman’s father used to be my grandfather’s driver. So, I suppose there is some semblance of a relationship between us.”

“But. A favor my grandfather owes has nothing to do with me. And I don’t see why a grandson must repay his grandfather’s debts.”

Dominique then turned to smile at Jasper as he said, “Don’t you think so, Jasper?”

Jasper did not react at all.

Norman and Lisa were stricken when they heard the little prince.

To them, the Royal family was supposed to be a definite source of protection. No matter how powerful Jasper was, there was no way he could do anything if the Royal family wished to protect them.

Yet, after they had just found shelter in the Royal family, the little prince decided to change his tune and send them straight into Jasper's jaws. 'What is the meaning of this?!

"Little prince! This, this, this isn't what we agreed upon!" Norman stuttered, his tone confused and pleading.

Dominique chuckled and swirled the glass of red wine, admiring the fine red liquid that had fermented for the past sixty years. It seemed like the glass of red wine was more important than Norman to him.

"This was supposed to be an easy job, but I changed my mind after I found out that it's Jasper you wish to trouble."

"What more important is that I've already asked Jasper about this, and he doesn't seem to have any desire to give up. Thus, I suppose I'll have to sacrifice you two instead."

Norman was confused when he heard Dominique's statement. Even Jasper was shocked.

He was even fully prepared to go against the Royal family before he arrived.

'But from the way Dominique acted, it seems like he's unwilling to become my enemy simply because of Norman.'

Jasper narrowed his eyes and quickly ran through everything that had happened during his brief interaction with Dominique. However, there were too few leads, and he could not deduce what was going on in Dominique's mind at all.

"You have to save us, Little Prince. We can't be given to Jasper! Please, on behalf of our history and what insignificant relationship we shared, please help us," Norman began to sob and beg.

At that moment, he felt terrified, as though the world was ending.

Norman had always been fearless while he still had the Royal family as his trump card.

This was because Norman believed that neither Jasper nor anyone else would dare to hurt him as long as the Royal family was involved.

However, this trump card was too valuable, and he would not use it unless it was a life-and-death situation. He was so adamant on this that he could not afford to help even when the Hull father-son duo was cornered and desperate.

Despite this, now that it was his turn, he suddenly realized that this trump card was nothing but poison to him.

Lisa was frantic right now and she mustered the courage to approach Dominique. She knelt and looked up at Dominique, trying her best to show the fair white flesh of her chest to him.

“You’re a generous and kind man, Little Prince. I’m sure you won’t just let us die, right? Just one word from you and I’ll do whatever you say.”

At this moment, the only bargaining chip Lisa had left was her own body.

Hence, Lisa had resigned herself to be treated as a business product and tried to Show off the ‘best’ part of herself in front of Dominique in hopes that he would change his mind.

Dominique chuckled.

He tilted Lisa's chin up with one hand gently and swept a playful gaze over every inch of her body wantonly.

Instead of feeling humiliated, Lisa took his gaze like it was some glory and pushed her chest out further. She thought that every man in the world was the same, and as a woman, her body was the most tempting weapon.

Just as Lisa began to build up some level of hope, Dominique said something that made her pale.

"You might not know this, but I'm a clean freak."

This sentence was a huge form of humiliation to any woman. Even for Lisa, who had long since discarded her dignity.

At this moment, she felt Dominique crush her dignity, throw it on the floor, and step on it harshly.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1150

Dominique then pulled his hand back after that and pulled out a clean white handkerchief to wipe the fingers that touched Lisa’s chin.

This action had Lisa, her face colorless, feeling further humiliated.

“If you want to live, I’m not the person you should be turning to. Ask him instead.”

Dominique pointed at Jasper.

Lisa and Norman looked over.

Jasper’s expression remained calm.

From the short conversation between Dominique and Lisa, Jasper had acutely caught on to something important.

Dominique knew about Fabian, and he also knew of the relationship Lisa had with him.

This was worth pondering on.

“Ja-Jasper.”

Norman looked at Jasper. His gaze was conflicted as he called the man’s name with great difficulty.

Jasper’s gaze fell on Norman calmly.

There was no mockery nor any hint of boastfulness in his tone as Jasper’s gaze remained calm and unaffected.

Norman took a deep breath and suddenly fell to his knees in front of Jasper.

Bending his knees and leaning forward, Norman knelt curtly in front of Jasper.

“Dad! ” Lisa screamed and rushed to Norman’s side. She tried her best to pull him back onto his feet.

“What are you doing, Dad? Why are you kneeling for Jasper? You’ve gone mad!”

However, Norman pushed Lisa away and stared intently at Jasper. He looked extremely exhausted and aged.

“I’ll kneel for you, Jasper. I don’t ask that you let me go, but please let Lisa leave.”

“I’ll take responsibility for everything. I know that I’m in no position to talk about conditions. But as a father, this is the last thing I can do.”

Norman then bent over until his forehead hit the floor harshly.

He had prostrated in front of Jasper.

“Dad!”

Lisa shrieked, her tone tragic and utterly heartbreaking.

Despite this, Norman did not change his posture. He did not move, nor did he say anything. It was as if he were waiting for Jasper's reply.

Jasper had yet to say anything since they appeared.

Dominique looked at Jasper playfully. He seemed to be admiring this play; It was an act much more interesting than the ballet performance from earlier.

The atmosphere immediately grew heavy.

He could not tell if it was due to his weak body or psychological fear, but Norman's body began to tremble as he awaited Jasper's reply.

Norman was moments away from collapsing when a hand grabbed onto his arm and helped him to his feet.

"I help you up in admiration for your fatherly love. This alone makes you stronger than I am."

Ecstasy graced Norman's pale face.

'Was Jasper agreeing to let them go?'

Life at The Top – Chapter 1151

Jasper had never planned to kill Norman or Lisa, to begin with.

Jasper was confused as to why all these people think he was truly coming for their lives.

Ever since he had started his business, he had fought with quite a few people. While some lives have been lost, it was always through suicide because his opponents could not accept the fact they lost.

Jasper had never killed anyone before.

Not now, not ever.

So when Jasper saw the ecstatic expression on Norman's face, he said, "Just go. Leave Waterhoof City and never return."

Jasper's words had Norman immediately feeling despondent.

He knew that with Jasper's words, he would lose the business he had built up with difficulty.

Jasper then glanced at Lisa, her face was pale and her lip bleeding after all the gnawing. He said calmly, "There's never been any huge feud between us. All the resentment was one-sided from you."

"Of course, there's no point in saying all this now."

"After leaving Waterhoof City with your dad, find him a place where he can retire and rest. Ignoring everything else's he's done, he was a good father to you. You'd be a horrible excuse of a human being if you can't be filial to him."

"No one will force you to sell your property lower than market value. Sell accordingly and take every Somer Dollar. It should be enough to guarantee a comfortable life from here on."

"Then... find someone nice and get married. Start over and live peacefully, say goodbye to the past."

Jasper waved them off afterward and did not say anything more.

Lisa's complexion was ashen and she looked moments away from fainting.

She still wanted to say more but Norman held her back.

"Let's go," Norman said hoarsely.

Lisa did not say more and followed Norman out with her head down.

Jasper's expression was calm as he watched the two leave.

He did not feel the elation of winning against his enemies, nor the despondence of a loss.

His enemies were still there, after all. Norman and Lisa were just insignificant pawns on the chessboard at most.

It was a blessing for pawns like them to walk out unscathed.

Jasper turned to look at Dominique and asked, "So, what do you want from me?"

Dominique looked at Jasper playfully and asked, "What do you mean?"

"The little prince can't possibly have handed me the Gardners because he's afraid of me, right?" Jasper stated calmly.

Dominique laughed out loud and said, "You can take it as an act of kindness from me."

"As to what I want from you, I don't know yet. I'll contact you when I think of something. Take this as a favor you owe me now I guess."

Jasper looked at Dominique and replied, "Yet you've sold out the Gardners who sought your help on a favor, little prince. Aren't you lacking a bit of credibility to talk about favors with me?"

Dominique stood from the chair and replied lazily, "Favor or not is just a hoax. What matters is still how useful you are."

"They've lost their usefulness, so they can only hope that other people will be merciful to them. If they're useful, then they don't need to say anything and people would still seek them out."

“I’m sure you understand this concept, right, Jasper?” With that being said, Dominique then walked toward the doors.

Dominique was just about to open the door when he suddenly turned to say to Jasper intently, “I admire you, Jasper. But many people share a different sentiment. They hate you, so much they wish you would drop dead right now.”

Jasper arched his brow and asked, “Like Fabian?”

Dominique smiled. He did not answer the question, opting to say meaningfully instead, “Contact me anytime should you require. I look forward to working with you, Jasper.”

Then Dominique opened the room doors.

Outside stood Julian and Coffey, one on each side of the door like sentinels guarding the room.

“Little Prince.”

Coffey greeted courteously.

Dominique was looking Julian up and down. Chuckling, he commented, "Not bad at all."

Then he left.

Coffey glanced at Julian thoughtfully before he turned and followed.

At that moment, Jasper had walked out as well.

"Did anything happen, Jasper?" Julian asked.

Jasper waved him off and replied, "People like him won't do anything to me. And if he did, you alone won't be able to stop him at all."

Julian seemed indignant and replied, "If I try my best, we never know."

"Haha," Jasper laughed out loud. "Sure. Come on, let's go back too."

This meeting with the little prince had surprised Jasper. The man was completely different from what he expected.

Still, no matter what, this meeting was an overall positive one. The little prince had not shown any signs of hostility. If anything, he had even shown subtle acts of friendliness.

Norman and his daughter were one of them, the partnership at the end was another.

Albeit potentially and not explicitly stated.

Still, people like Dominique did not say anything without reason, nor would he speak unreliably.

“I’ve got to go back and ask Henry that little brat I wonder if Dominique’s got history with Fabian,” Jasper murmured to himself.

At the same time in the commercial vehicle, Dominique was tinkering with an exquisite vintage pocket watch. He had a playful expression on his face.

“Gather a copy of Jasper’s information and give it to me later, Coffey, a detailed one.”

Coffey replied after hearing Dominique, “I understand. This is the first time I’ve seen you so interested in someone, Little Prince.”

“Because I’ve found my kin.” Dominique smiled mysteriously and looked at the street view through the window. He narrowed his eyes and continued, “He’s much like me. I can even say that we’re the same kind of people, it’s just... his ranks aren’t high enough yet.”

“Why do you say that?” Coffey asked curiously.

This question showed how special Coffey’s status was to Dominique. He would not have dared to ask such a question if he was a normal subordinate.

Dominique stroked the pocket watch in his palm and replied calmly, “He’s a conqueror, yet he’s filled with benevolence. He opted to be a saint and show mercy when he should have chosen to kill. This is also why I lost the initial desire to partner with him.”

“Had he decisively chosen to drive Norman and Lisa to death, then I would perhaps be willing to give him a chance at a partnership. But now that I look at it... perhaps further observation should be made before I decide again.”

Coffey shrugged and replied, “In comparison to the little prince, he will never be as outstanding as you.”

“You overestimate me, Coffey. And you’re looking down on the world,” Dominique murmured to himself.

Then he thought about Jasper and chuckled suddenly. “But Jasper Laine. From his behavior today, he’s missing something indeed.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1152

“Little Prince, Fabian has asked multiple times if you’re willing to join their Empire Meet. How would you like to respond?”

Dominique’s smile grew slightly cold when he heard him.

“They’re just a circle made up of over-hyped and ignorant trust-fund children. What else to respond but to tell him to get lost as far away as possible! Tell him I’m not interested!”

...

“The little prince and Fabian? They have no reason to be acquainted.”

In the hotel, Henry was filled with confusion.

“Waterhoof City’s Royal family doesn’t have any means to join the Harbor City market.”

“Nor did Harbor City’s Atticus family show any desire to make money in Waterhoof City.”

“The Royal family is a local and long-standing wealthy family here in Waterhoof City. The family’s started their business here even before the Republic. The Royal family controlled the Waterhoof City before the Republic and they’ve been developing further all this while no one knows how terrifyingly powerful they are now.”

“But about the Royal family. They have businesses everywhere but their family’s powers don’t reach beyond Waterhoof City. I suppose it’s a smart move to protect themselves. But there’s almost no contact with rich families from Harbor City.”

“As for Fabian, the Atticus family’s businesses are mainly local in Harbor City or somewhere in the southeast region. There’s almost no business with the mainlands but I did hear something about searching for things to invest in the mainlands these years.”

“Still, there’s not much chance for contact.”

Henry said everything in one breath and his mouth was left dry after he was done. He took the cup of water and drank it in large gulps before he placed it down and asking Jasper, "Did you meet the little prince?"

"That neither dark nor bright expression of his makes your hand itch to slap him, doesn't it?"

Jasper was still trying to process Henry's prior information when he heard the man again. He replied exasperatedly, "His expression just leans toward something more sinister but gentle. It wasn't even as exaggerated as you claimed."

Henry snorted and replied, "When it comes to acting pretentious, he's the best of all I've met. It's like he doesn't care about anything at all like he's got no doubt in everything. You know what I'm talking about, right? That disgusting high and mighty attitude of his."

Jasper thought back to the course of meeting Dominique and rubbed his chin. "You got that right about loving to act pretentious."

"Haha," Henry cackled. Then he looked at Jasper mysteriously and said, "I just received news of something you'd definitely be interested in."

"Fabian that d*ck got a bunch of people together to make some organization called the Empire Meet. He's currently inviting all sorts of people in."

Jasper frowned at what he heard. "Empire Meet?"

"It's a club, filled with rich children from powerful families like Fabian. The only difference is that people invited are rich children that have already begun to take up the family business. So they're not all trust-fund children."

Jasper frowned and replied, "He's got to be planning something big with something like this Empire Meet."

"Heh. It's not as easy as you think. Fabian's reputation among the circle is horrible so excluding the few that are close with the Atticus family, there aren't many people willing to join him."

"Not to mention that everyone knows how strained Fabian's relationship with Kayden is. The larger the business Kayden and his dad, Half-the-Harbor Langdon, are doing, the fewer people are willing to risk offending Kayden to join Fabian."

"There's quite a lot of people waiting to watch him make a fool out of himself now."

Yet Jasper shook his head and said, "He wouldn't do this out of the blue unless he's certain. Who knows, maybe he has a secret trump card?"

“Well, it’s got f*ck all to do with me anyway nor would he invite me. But I’ll help you keep an eye out on who joins this Empire Meet. These people will be your enemies.”

“I’m starting to realize that you’re very suited for intel gathering,” Jasper said genuinely.

“You wish. I’m going to Swallow Capital tomorrow,” Henry suddenly told him.

“For Jill?” Jasper asked.

Henry snickered. “She’s going abroad for a competition next week and she’ll be leaving for a week. So I thought I’m going to go visit her.”

“Find a chance and tell her about your identity if you’re serious about her, lest the situation gets out of hand one day. And try to hint at it with your dad too. You know how important marriage is for families like yours.

“Elope behind your dad’s back and it’ll get really messy when he finds out,” Jasper reminded.

Henry rubbed his face and said grimly, “We’ll deal with that later. I still haven’t thought that far yet. I’m pretty sure my dad will say no to this.”

“But I will find a chance to tell Jill the truth, then try and meet her family. I’ll do a check on what kind of family she has and see if her relatives have any ulterior motives about my identity.”

“If they do, then that’s that. If they don’t, then I’ll bring it up with my dad.”

Jasper was relieved when he heard Henry’s plan.

The romantic story of Prince Charming and Cinderella in dramas and novels are all fake, after all.

Take Henry before him for example, no matter how much he liked Jill, he still had to give up on her if his family was against it.

Henry was not stupid either. If Jill and her family have the intention to further their relationship with Henry because of his familial background, then he would most likely sever ties and turn against them ruthlessly as well.

All in all, a young master like Henry might be arrogant and a trust-fund child, but he wasn’t a brainless idiot. If anything, this man was much smarter than ordinary people.

While Jasper and Henry chatted, someone knocked on the hotel room door.

Seeing Lisa stand outside nervous and anxiously, Jasper's gaze turned pensive.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1153

Jasper was not harsh to Lisa at all in the hotel room. Instead, the man was very respectful.

“Tea or soft drinks?”

Lisa was shocked by Jasper's respect.

“Do you have alcohol?”

Lisa must have felt that Jasper's kindness was genuine from the man's expression as she asked bravely.

With a smile, Jasper had the hotel staff bring up a bottle of red wine.

He drank tea while he watched Lisa tilt her head back and down two glasses of wine. Only then did Jasper ask, “Is there a reason you're here?”

After two glasses, Lisa was evidently much more relaxed. Holding the glass, she nodded and said, "My dad told me to come here. We've already contacted a few sellers willing to take over after us and we're in the middle of negotiating the specific costs. We'll leave the country and go overseas after the trade is done."

"Have you decided on a place?" Jasper asked.

"Australia, perhaps. I like it there." Lisa smiled, her eyes filled with hope for the future.

"Good choice. There are quite a few people of Somer decent there, so it won't be too lonely at least." Jasper agreed with a nod.

The two chatted a little about everyday life like friends. This short conversation had caused a great change in Lisa's emotions.

"To be honest, I came here prepared to be humiliated. I thought you'd scold or embarrass me, maybe even think of ways to torture me. I've prepared myself for all that," Lisa looked at Jasper and spoke seriously.

Jasper took a sip of his concentrated tea and replied calmly, "I can do that, but I find no need to."

Lisa nodded. Jasper's words were much more genuine than any self-righteous thing he could say.

No matter how nice Jasper's words sound at such a time, there would always be the suspicion that the man was faking kindness. However, the man had not honeyed his words at all nor did he flaunt himself. All he did was state his true thoughts.

"Since we're at the stage of negotiating prices, it'll still take some time to bargain for the best price even though the buyers are very willing. So we might have to stay for a few more days." Lisa brought up the topic again.

"That's alright. If they're intentionally lowering your selling price because they think that you're in a rush to sell your family business, you're free to take the time and contact a few other buyers," Jasper told her.

Lisa smiled wryly and asked, "Would you believe me if I told you now that I really regret offending you?"

"Does it matter if I believe you or not?" Jasper asked.

Stunned, Lisa nodded and replied, "You're right, it doesn't matter anymore."

“I came here to tell you two things, actually. The first, to inform you that we need to stay for a few more days.”

Jasper nodded and said, “As you told me. The second thing is what’s truly important, isn’t it?”

Lisa stared at Jasper intently and continued, “Fabian’s the person behind me that’s been targeting you.”

Jasper raised an eyebrow slightly.

He was unsurprised by Lisa’s statement.

In truth, Jasper knew why Lisa had come since he saw her at the doors to his hotel.

Jasper did not care whether her reason was to sell Fabian out, in revenge for not reaching out to save her and her father when they needed it. Or if Lisa told him because she wanted Jasper to feel uncomfortable.

Jasper did not care about why Lisa was telling him anything. He was more interested in what information Lisa came with.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1154

Jasper knew that Fabian was targeting him. He also knew that Fabian had contacted his enemies. However, Jasper had no idea what exactly Fabian was planning or had already done.

Perhaps Lisa would be his breakthrough.

Lisa seemed to have decided on leaving, so she was frank and showed no desire to hide any information from Jasper. She continued to say, “Fabian took the initiative to contact me first, he wanted me to do something for him.”

“Since these were also setups that targeted you, I agreed under protest.”

“Because of this, I even went to Harbor city to spend a few days with him. That’s when I learned about the trap he had long set for you.”

“He didn’t let me know the specifics, so I have no idea either. All I can tell you is that everything that happened in Waterhoof City was directed by Fabian.”

“Including the accident on your construction site, and being targeted by the Teo Chamber of Commerce. Alban and his son are also following his instructions, and he even contacted Gale for this as well.”

“Instead of claiming that the incident with Seatresures was a set up by Alban and Gale together, it’d be more accurate to say that this was all Fabian’s plan.”

Lisa’s words had confirmed Jasper’s previous deductions.

His expression remained calm and unfazed.

Lisa looked at Jasper and continued, “You’re wrong if you think that this is all Fabian has in store for you.”

“From what I know, he did all this just to cause you some trouble. He didn’t expect to beat you with this alone, and he hasn’t shown his true scheme yet.”

“You can call this incident a warm-up.”

Jasper smiled. “Looks like he values me a lot, to employ both Gale and Alban just for a warm-up.”

Lisa said indifferently, “You haven’t met Fabian, so you don’t know how terrifying and cruel this man is.”

“To be honest, every second I spent by his side was in terror. He’s too frightening. It’s like he can see through what everyone’s thinking. Up until now, I still don’t think you can win against him.”

“Then why did you come to tell me this today?” Jasper asked.

Lisa smiled sadly and said, “You would believe if I said it’s to take revenge?”

“I would. But the question is, are you taking revenge against me or Fabian?”

Lisa did not expect Jasper to be so direct. Her expression turned slightly forced but she answered anyway, “Both. But more against him.”

“Even if I know that your fight with Fabian will continue whether I come and tell you these things or not. But at the very least, I want you to know more and hurt Fabian a little.”

“What a cruel woman you are,” Jasper exclaimed.

Lisa got up expressionlessly and stated, “One last thing. He’s sought out more than just your enemies...”

Lisa paused for a moment before she continued, “He looked for the people around you too. People you used to be close with. He’s already used his methods to find them, so be more careful.”

Jasper narrowed his eyes and stroked the hot teacup gently. His mind instantly combed through people close to him but Jasper’s expression remained unaffected.

Inexplicably, Lisa thought of something when she took in the sight of Jasper now.

‘A truly powerful man looks calm despite the emotional rollercoaster he experiences.’

‘Wouldn’t it have been great now if I didn’t make Jasper an enemy?’

With a light sigh, Lisa got up and said, “I’ve said my piece. I should get going now.”

“Goodbye.”

Jasper did not step foot out of the hotel room after Lisa left.

Even dinner was sent to his room by the hotel staff on Julian's instructions.

Jasper locked himself in the hotel room's study as he began to write and draw. He reviewed the current situation and wrote it all on around a dozen A4-sized papers. Right in the center was Fabian.

Beside Fabian was Dominique, the little prince.

Instinct told Jasper that there was definitely a link between those two. He just had no idea whether they were enemies or friends.

"Even with all of this, I don't know enough yet."

Jasper frowned.

Henry might have given him information, but what he told Jasper was no more than what everyone in that Harbor City circle already knew about.

If Henry was not involved in it, he would not know of the many secrets that went on.

For example, there was no way Henry would be told if there was a link between Fabian and Dominique.

Jasper exhaled softly. It was at midnight when Jasper put his pen down. He realized that he greatly lacked contacts for intel and information gathering.

After all, he had only started his business for more than one but less than two years. The memory of his past life before he reincarnated could only bring him an astronomical amount of wealth in a short period of time. Things like information networks and roots that huge families had could only be accumulated with time.

He could not rush it right now. These were things that had to be done slowly.

...

The following day, at the hotel entrance.

“I’ll be going, then.” Henry waved Jasper goodbye.

“Go. I won’t be sending you to the airport. There’s one more thing I have to do here in Waterhoof City before I return to Nauritus.” Jasper smiled.

Henry replied, with his head in the clouds, “I’ll be back in three to five days. I’ll wait for you to bring me along and earn more money when I get back.”

Jasper chuckled and waved his hand. He watched Henry’s car leave the hotel.

After Henry left, Jasper then called for Julian.

“Let’s go. To the ICBS branch’s headquarters.”

Jasper was no stranger to ICBS’ Waterhoof City Branch’s office tower.

In this dignified and stem ICBS’ Waterhoof City Branch’s deputy chief office, Jasper sat on the guest sofa and looked at Vita sign a document sternly for a careful, humble, and courteous middle-ranked employer.

A few minutes later, the office was left with Jasper and Vita alone.

“Is there something I can help with, Mr. Laine?” Vita’s expression immediately turned courteous as he asked, placing a cup of brewed tea in front of Jasper.

Jasper nodded and replied, “Indeed. The market reaction to the online payment partnership. So I’ve decided to develop this business further and I need the ICBS’s support.”

Vita’s expression froze,

In all honesty, Jasper’s suggestion about online payment had caused an uproar all the way to ICBS headquarters in Swallow Capital. Even top officials from the government’s financial bureau were aware of this.

After all, Jasper had suggested a completely new concept and no one knew how big of an effect it could cause.

Now that Jasper wanted to completely develop the online payment business, Vita had a feeling this would result in another huge commotion.

“I acquired an online shopping platform and I plan to build a comprehensive shopping website within the country.”

“But this requires the support of online payment or everything planned would be for naught. If all goes well, this website will become the equivalent of Amazon in the country. Perhaps even stronger.”

Vita concealed his unease when he heard Jasper speak. He realized that the more he got to know Jasper, the less he understood about the man.

To be frank, it would be enough for a majority of people to achieve the business success Jasper did.

Looking at the property under Jasper’s name, one would see that the man’s career was beyond what ordinary people could imagine.

His business was considered large even if you compared him with the entire country or even the entire business world.

Yet Vita was still shocked by Jasper’s ambition.

Vita who had worked his entire life in the banking industry was more sensitive to this than others in the financial industry were. He also knew better how powerful Jasper would be if he managed to control online payment.

“I’m afraid this won’t be easy,” Vita frowned and replied.

Jasper arched his brow and asked, “Why’s that?”

Vita smiled wryly and replied, “Do you know how many applications for online payment like yours I’ve pushed down recently?”

“It’s normal for people to jump the bandwagon because they see others doing it. The last thing this world lacks is people with a good eye for things,” Jasper said.

“I may be able to hold them off for now, but I can’t hold them off forever. You have to know that there are tons of powerful people among them. If you didn’t look for me today, I might have gone to look for you.”

“The higher-ups have been fighting over this online payment recently.”

Jasper’s expression turned solemn when he heard Vita.

“The most troublesome one here is Soha. Soha has the support of family capital and people are moving about right now to get a comprehensive online payment partnership signed with Soha.”

“Their framework might be even larger than yours and if they succeed, then they’ll end up crushing everyone behind them. Including you.”

“Who’s this other party?” Jasper asked.

“Formally, they’re Soha’s majority shareholder. But from what I know, they’re also the heir to Clear Seas Industrial Group.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1156

Vita leaned over closer to Jasper and whispered, “This Clear Seas Industrial is actually the holding company of Clear Seas.” He smiled wryly.

“As someone in the financial circle, you should know that Clear Seas status within the country’s capital circle is on par with Vast Mountain Capital and other large funding groups.”

“Among the country’s privately-owned capitals, Clear Seas’ comprehensive strength easily puts them among the top ten.

Jasper held the cup of burning tea and fell deep in thought.

He was no stranger to Clear Seas at all.

In his past life, his superior was one of the small bosses in a company under Clear Seas. The man had a net worth of eighty to ninety million just thanks to his relationship with this group.

Not many people might know of Clear Seas now, as its name would only be spread with the BN Group after a fight of capital with the country’s largest real estate business, Somer Vanke.

Still, there was no denying Clear Seas' strength.

“His name is Prince Chavez, also known as the Crown Prince.”

‘Crown Prince?’

‘If he was nicknamed the Crown Prince, then he must be someone more high-standing than the little prince.’

Jasper made a mental note of the man's name and looked up to ask Vita, “What are the higher-up's thoughts on his idea?”

“The officials are discussing it together. Some people support it and some do not, but a majority of them have decided to remain silent and watch. Though from the information I got, they'll likely adjust the proposal and then pass it.”

Jasper sighed when he heard Vita.

“You told me this too late...”

Vita proceeded to tell Jasper the frame proposed by the Crown Prince.

Jasper fell silent for a moment after he thought about it.

“If that’s the case, then open the entire market! Agree to the government supervision he proposed and apply for a regulation on payment license.”

Jasper’s first sentence stunned Vita completely.

“Have you gone crazy? That way you won’t have any advantages at all!”

Yet Jasper smiled at Vita’s franticness. He knew that Vita only reacted like this because the man truly held his best interests in mind.

“A normalized market is beneficial to all the enterprises within that market. The government will still announce the policy even if we disagree. There’s no preventing it, so we might as well go with the flow and gain their favor.”

“But we will add one condition, and that’s to forbid exclusive partnerships with banks.”

“As long as the governments reviewed and passed it, and the company should be allowed to partner with any commercial bank in the country once it gets an online payment license and fulfills the 1 billion Somer Dollar deposit requirement.”

“If the Crown Prince wants to blockade this industry, then I’ll open it. When trouble comes, I have the capital to take everything, but I can’t say the same for the crown prince.”

With the memory of his past life, Jasper knew that the government will fully open for applications of a payment license that only capable and qualified enterprises could get.

The Crown Prince’s desire to blockade this industry was already against the government’s initial desire to open the market, so there was no way it would be approved.

Therefore, Jasper decided that he would gain the government’s favor first and let them see who was truly trying to benefit the industry.

Being in the government’s favor was more important than one would think. It might seem useless as balls most of the time, but it could affect the government’s stance during crucial moments. When it came to deciding important policies, the government would likely take into consideration enterprises with ‘a sense of societal responsibility.’

Within the country, whoever captured the government’s heart was the true winner.

Future history would prove that even with the payment license open for application, the market would still be split fully by Terizone and Abbylon. There was no third place in this field, only the first and second.

Vita considered Jasper's opinion and said, "To be frank, there's a high chance that your suggestion will be approved since you're considering from the government's point of View. But aren't you afraid that this ruckus will hinder your own development too?"

Jasper smiled. "Everyone thinks that online payment is doomed for failure. But this is a huge market and it'll only be a matter of time before people turn around and realize."

"What I need to do is get the sweetest bite of this figuratively huge cake as fast as possible. I'm not trying to control the entire market, nothing good comes out of monopolizing it."

Vita exhaled in awe as he looked at Jasper. He commented genuinely, "A huge majority of the businessmen I meet are so greedy they almost wish they could own the entire market. But you're the only one I've met that's willing to let go."

"You have to let go of what you have on hand if you want to take more. With this temperament and character of yours, it makes sense how you've made it so far and will only continue to go further."

"Wish me luck, then. Haha."

Walking out of Vita's office, Jasper was just about to have Julian gather information on Soha and the Crown Prince when he received a call.

"Jasper."

Tiffany's voice was shy and nervous when she called.

"What is it?" Jasper asked with a smile.

Tiffany felt inexplicably calm when she heard Jasper's gentle tone and asked, "Are you free tonight! I want to treat you to dinner!"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1157

"I'm free, but why invite me for dinner so suddenly?" Jasper asked with a crescent-eyed smile.

"I got my first part-time paycheck," Tiffany replied.

Jasper was stunned. He had made sure to give Tiffany enough money for her living costs, but this strong and independent girl had still decided to earn money by doing part-time jobs.

Jasper was not against this, in fact, he supported it.

“Congratulations! This is indeed worth celebrating, where do you want to eat?”

Tiffany seemed prepared as she immediately replied, “I heard that there’s a really tasty seafood restaurant that opened recently at Gold Pedestrian Street Is that okay?”

‘Gold Pedestrian Street?’

‘Isn’t that my property?’

Following the full completion and publicity of the Gold Pedestrian Street as well as the support from the Waterhoof City City Government, the street had developed very quickly.

As of today, it had already shown signs of being one of the future three large pedestrian streets in the country. All foreign tourists would surely visit the Gold Pedestrian Street first, then make their way to the beach.

As a result, business at the Gold Pedestrian Street was only improving and the most evident change with it was its rental costs.

There was no way Jasper would sell any property located here, nor would any stores be sold on the market. Yet its rental prices were increasing every day. It had currently risen to the rental cost of 5000 Somer Dollars per square meter.

This was an unimaginable cost in the year 2001, yet countless people were fighting for a lease contract.

Naturally, Jasper made a lot of money from this.

Jasper had first bought these property lots from the City Government with the agreement to pay them in installments. The rent Jasper earned now has reached the point where it could easily pay off the installments to the government with profit left to spare.

In no time, more than half of Gold Pedestrian Street's properties would become cash cows that countless people desired, and they would supply Jasper with an endless flow of cash.

"Sure. But it isn't cheap eating over at Gold Pedestrian Street," Jasper told Tiffany mirthfully through the phone after recollecting his thoughts.

“Mr. Clem takes quite good care of me and he gave me the best job there is. So don’t worry, Jasper!”

Hanging up the phone, Jasper had Julian turn the car around and make their way to Gold Pedestrian Street.

This was Tiffany’s first part-time paycheck, and she wanted to repay Jasper with it. So there was no way Jasper would decline this lady’s kind wish.

This was a pedestrian street, after all, so cars were not allowed to drive in. The car pulled up at the recognizable structure of Peace Restaurant and Jasper alighted first. He had Julian park the car at that restaurant first while he walked over to the seafood restaurant Tiffany talked about.

At the same time, Tiffany who had already arrived at the pedestrian street when she called Jasper was currently talking to a server at the entrance of the seafood restaurant.

Hearing Tiffany ask that, the server that was already busy from the huge influx of customers since it had just opened frowned. She looked Tiffany over and while she found her pretty, all the servers here were trained to have sharp eyes.

They could tell with one look which customers were rich and which were tourists coming to try things.

“We do, but there’s no space for discounted customers now. Wait first if you want,” the female server replied unkindly with a taut expression.

“Seriously, what’s a broke student doing here?”

Tiffany bit her lip when she heard the server mutter and asked, “How long do I have to wait?”

The female server replied irritably, “Can’t you tell that the restaurant’s busy? Go wait outside if you want a discounted seat, or come back when the restaurant’s empty.”

Tiffany tugged on her own fingers. While she was angry at the server’s attitude, she was used to resigning herself nor did she want to cause more trouble, so she said, “Then I don’t need the student discount, then. I’ll pay normally.”

The female server snorted and said, “Are you here to cause trouble? First, you ask for a discount and now you say you don’t want it. Does this place look like somewhere broke students can afford to eat?”

“Do you know where this is? A simple dish here is enough to cost you your entire week’s living expenses. Can you even afford this?”

Tiffany replied angrily, “What’s it to you if I can afford it or not?”

The female server slammed her pen on her notebook and said, “Who do you think you’re talking to? What’s with your attitude?”

“I’m telling you, our seafood restaurant doesn’t serve customers like you! You want to eat here? Sure. We charge at least 1500 bucks a meal. If you can afford that then I’ll let you in!”

Tiffany pinched the 800 Somer Dollars in her pocket and flushed, too embarrassed to say anything.

The female server scoffed when she saw Tiffany’s reaction and said, “You can’t afford it, can you? Open your eyes and take a good look. Our restaurant is full all the time and every single table spends more money than you will. How do we have to spend time on you?”

“Leave. Don’t come to places like this if you can’t afford it. Just go and buy snacks outside, okay?”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1158

“Your attitude’s horrible!” Tiffany told the female server angrily.

The female server was infuriated and she pointed at Tiffany’s nose to say, “My attitude’s bad? What kind of attitude do you expect from me when you can’t pay for anything? Sure, I can be nice, but can you afford it?”

“I shoo away dozens of broke people like you a day. Who are you to claim that my attitude’s bad?”

The loud server attracted the attention of many customers and other servers. Under public scrutiny, Tiffany felt her cheeks burn in shame and she bit her lip, unable to say another word.

Just then, a man in a suit walked over.

“She’s right, Lara. Your attitude’s not very nice!”

The man in a suit chided the server.

The server, Lara, looked at the man and smiled courteously. She said, "I'm sorry, Mr. Pearce. But I'm already too busy and I still have to deal with broke students."

"Being busy isn't an excuse for a bad attitude. After all, we're in the service industry and the customer is always right," The man said with a crescent-eyed smile.

Despite his words, he showed no sign of truly reprimanding Lara.

The man walked over to Tiffany. Seeing such a pretty and refreshing girl in front of him, his eyes lit up brightly.

"I'm the manager here, Miss, as well as half an owner since I have shares in the restaurant. You're very much welcome to eat here, I can arrange the best private room for you," Mr. Pearce snickered and said.

Tiffany may be innocent but she was not stupid. From Mr. Pearce's gaze, she could tell that this man had ulterior motives.

Tiffany took an instinctive step back and shook her head. "It's alright. Your restaurant's too expensive, I can't afford it."

Tiffany then turned to leave.

Yet Mr. Pearce stood in front of Tiffany, blocking her path. His expression was stern as he said, “No way. Our server’s attitude was horrible just now, so as an apology, let me treat you to a meal.”

Mr. Pearce then reached out to take Tiffany’s hand as he spoke.

Tiffany took another wary step backward. Staring at Mr. Pearce, she said, “What are you doing? Don’t touch me!”

A mortified expression flickered through Mr. Pearce’s face but it vanished right away.

The man smiled and straightened his suit before he said arrogantly, “Look, miss. I’m considered half an owner of this restaurant and I am worth a few million in assets. Don’t you want to get to know me more?”

“If I’m in a good mood, I might even give you a chance to experience the world of wealth.”

Disgust filled Tiffany’s eyes when she looked at Mr. Pearce.

She did not understand why some people could be so full of themselves.

They were both men, but he seemed like a completely different species from Jasper. There was just no comparing the two.

“I’m not interested in your world of wealth. No thank you!”

Mr. Pearce chuckled and said, “I understand where you’re coming from since you’ve never got to experience the world of wealth anyway. So it makes sense that you don’t know how magical it is. But you won’t be able to leave that world once you’ve had a taste.”

“Say, for example, you want to eat here today. You won’t have to worry about a discount, nor would anyone humiliate you over it. No matter how busy the restaurant is, no one would make you wait and they’d arrange the best private room for you to eat in.”

Mr. Pearce looked at Tiffany with arrogance and haughtiness hanging off the corner of his lips.

“Let’s not talk about that anymore. You wanted a table within the seafood restaurant, right? I’ll have someone prepare a room for you right away. How does that sound?”

Tiffany wanted to reject him, but she thought about how she had come to treat Jasper to dinner. This was something important to her so Tiffany’s expression turned conflicted and hesitant.

She did not know if she should agree to it or not.

Mr. Pearce's expression grew even more joyful when he saw hesitance on Tiffany's face.

He approached Tiffany before she knew it and said, "And all of this is just the basics. If you had a boyfriend like me, you'll get even more."

As he spoke, Mr. Pearce's hand had already moved and hovered above Tiffany's shoulder.

However, before he could touch Tiffany, a hand had grabbed his wrist tightly.

Mr. Pearce was enraged. He turned his head to see an expressionless face.

"You should be glad that your dirty hands haven't touched her yet," Jasper's voice rang out slowly.

Tiffany's eyes lit up when she saw Jasper. Exclaiming in surprise, she quickly ran over to stand beside him.

At this moment, Tiffany felt engulfed by absolute security and she felt extremely safe.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1159

“Motherf*cker! Who are you?!”

Mr. Pearce was enraged when he realized that his plans have been foiled.

“Her friend,” Jasper replied calmly.

Mr. Pearce took a look at Jasper’s outfit. The man was dressed simply at there was no sign of how outstanding he was from his clothes.

Mr. Pearce scoffed and said, “Let go of my hand. Or I’ll make your life not worth living!”

“How will you make it?” Jasper asked.

Mr. Pearce’s gaze chilled and he said icily, “Are you here to cause trouble?”

“My friend came here to eat. It’s enough that you’re not willing to serve her, but what are you trying to get by making her uncomfortable? Have you no sense of shame?”

“F*ck you!”

Mr. Pearce flung Jasper’s hand off and pointed at the latter’s nose to say, “Since when do loafers like you have the right to control what I do? Take a look at where you are, at least! Do you want to die?!”

Jasper glanced at the rambunctious interior of the seafood restaurant and said, “Where I’m at? Isn’t this just a restaurant? Why, or perhaps I’m looking at a forbidden area in a palace?”

“To people who can afford to pay, yes, this is a restaurant. For broke losers like you, then this is a forbidden palace!” Mr. Pearce said harshly. Greed and envy flared in his eyes as he glanced at Tiffany who stood beside Jasper like a kitten.

If he wanted this beautiful girl, then he had to get rid of this annoying man first.

By humiliating him in front of her, he would let her know that women had to look for powerful men in society. Trash like this could not protect her.

Most importantly, Mr. Pearce had an extremely dignified guest to receive and he did not have time to waste with Jasper.

Mr. Pearce was enraged when he thought of that and his gaze turned unkind as he looked at Jasper.

“Where’s security? Get over here!”

With Mr. Pearce’s shout, three to five security guards surrounded them.

“Beat this troublemaker up and throw him out!” Mr. Pearce said gleefully.

Hearing him, the security guards immediately made their way to Jasper.

From how practiced their actions were, it seemed like this was not the first time such a thing happened.

Just then, a figure approached from the entrance and stood in front of Jasper. It was Julian who had just arrived.

Julian's gaze was icy as he stared at the few security guards. If any dumb guards took another step, then he would attack them.

The security guards were just ordinary people who could read the situation. They could tell that Julian, radiating with an icy aura, was not someone they could win against. The guards immediately shared a look and no one dared to make the first move. They had all frozen.

"What are you doing just standing here?" Mr. Pearce was frantic and he shouted, "Go attack him right now! Whoever runs away can get lost! Get rid of them and I'll reward you with bonuses!"

Under the temptation of reward, the security guards saw that they had numbers and mustered the courage, and pounced on Julian.

Julian's gaze was indifferent. Dealing with security guards that were essentially normal people was a waste of his talent.

With a few attacks, the few security guards yelled in pain and knocked against each other before falling down.

Still prideful a moment ago, Mr. Pearce was now stunned when he saw the sight.

This was real life, after all, not an action movie. Normal people have hardly seen cases where one man won against three to four others.

“How, how dare you attack people here?!” Mr. Pearce screamed.

Jasper replied calmly, “You were the one who ordered to hit people first. How is this my fault now?”

Mr. Pearce’s expression was wretched yet he feared Julian’s horrifying skill. Just as he was conflicted about what to say next, a sound rang out by the seafood restaurant entrance.

“What’s going on here? What’s with all this commotion?”

Mr. Pearce’s expression lit up when he heard the voice.

As if meeting his savior, Mr. Pearce ran out and greeted the person respectfully. “My apologies, Mr. Heron, I’ve been dealing with a mess. There were two f*cking idiots that came to cause trouble so I was dealing with them.”

Then Mr. Heron frowned and said coldly, “I invested in this seafood restaurant, Roy. I had you manage it because I didn’t want people to cause trouble. Why, has the name Gerry Heron lost its effect in Waterhoof City?!”

“You’re right, Mr. Heron. But there are always reckless people who just want to die. Here, it’s these two f*ckers. I’d say, just waste them and get it over with, Mr. Heron.” Roy reached out to point at Jasper and Gerry’s fierce gaze followed.

Gerry was stunned when he saw Jasper.

Mr. Heron, who was still extremely powerful the previous second, was stunned in place the next. As if he had been stricken by lightning, the man could be seen trembling where he stood.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1160

Jasper met Gerry’s gaze and said with a smile, “It’s been a few days since we last met Mr. Heron. Looks like you became even more successful.”

Gerry stuttered and did not know how to reply, while Roy had fired back beside him.

From what he saw, Jasper was obviously trying to win Gerry over.

So he scoffed and pointed at Jasper's nose to say, "Shut your stinky trap!"

"Who do you think Mr. Heron is? Who knows what situation you've seen Mr. Heron in from afar, but you're just a piece of low-level trash! Aren't you afraid that Mr. Heron would rip you to shreds for what you just said?"

"Hah! You don't know how powerful Mr. Heron is in Waterhoof City, do you, young man?"

Slap!

Roy had just finished speaking when he was slapped across his face.

Naturally, Gerry was the one who did it

It was an angry slap too, one forceful and strong. All that could be heard was the clear sound of a slap, followed by Roy cupping his face and shouting tragically. Then the man fell backward onto the floor and a few of his teeth have flown out in the process.

Roy was utterly confused.

He had no idea why he had gotten slapped. Cupping his face, Roy looked at Gerry in disbelief. Yet all he saw was a furious expression with the desire to devour him.

Gerry was already terrified of Jasper and he was just thinking about how he should calm the situation and calm the atmosphere when Roy stepped up and spewed a bunch of offensive words. Gerry then wanted nothing more than to beat Roy to death now.

“You shut your f*cking stinky trap!”

Gerry pointed at Roy, his eyes bloodshot as if wanted to eat him alive.

Gerry took a deep breath to suppress the unease and franticness within him. Then turned to give Jasper an exceptionally wry smile.

“Mr. Laine. This, it’s a misunderstanding. All a misunderstanding.”

Jasper looked at Gerry and asked meaningfully, “You’re the owner here, Mr. Heron?”

Gerry quickly explained. “There’s no such thing as owner or not. A few friends and I got together to open a restaurant, I just have a few shares here.”

“What a huge business you’re doing, Mr. Heron. It seems like your properties are everywhere. But you have to make sure that management can keep up with the size of your business, or you’ll only be implicated in the end. Don’t you think so?”

Gerry felt cold sweat bead when he heard Jasper. He quickly replied, “Yes, yes, of course. You’re right, Mr. Laine.”

Gerry then turned to kick Roy. “What the f*ck are you waiting for? Apologize to Mr. Laine now!”

At this moment, Roy was completely dumbfounded. He did not expect Jasper to be someone even Gerry could not afford to offend.

From the way Gerry acted, he more than just feared Jasper. Gerry seemed moments away from getting down on the floor and cleaning Jasper’s shoes with his tongue. While Roy still had no idea who Jasper was specifically up until now, he was sure of one thing... He was in great trouble.

Gerry’s kick snapped him back to reality. Ignoring everything else, he crawled his way to Jasper and wailed, “Mr... Mr. Laine, I’m sorry. I, I was blind, I’m sorry for offending you! Please give me another chance...”

“Chance?” Jasper smiled subtly at Roy.

Frankly speaking, someone like Roy was not worth Jasper's anger. However, since the incident involved Tiffany, Jasper had no intention to let him go easily.

"Yes, yes, please. You're a kind man, Mr. Laine. Please give me another chance, I'll change and be better..."

Before Roy could finish begging, he heard Jasper say, "Chances are things your parents give you. I only care about the results."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1161

Roy's expression paled when he heard this.

Standing beside him, Gerry immediately understood that Jasper's words were actually directed at himself. After all, he had been in working in the industry for a long time.

His expression changed and Gerry smiled wryly at Jasper. "Mr. Laine, this restaurant has quite a few shareholders and Roy is one of them. I may hold more shares than him, but it wouldn't be right to just fire him."

"Hmm. You're right. There's no such thing as firing a shareholder." Jasper nodded understandingly.

Roy let out an internal sigh of relief when he heard Jasper's reply. At the same time, he also lost a bit of respect for the man. 'Looks like Mr. Laine isn't all that great. His identity's just slightly more formidable, but not unimaginably so.'

'See? Isn't Jasper also admitting that there's nothing he can do?'

'I'll just need to treat him to a meal after this to apologize. Then, we can all move on from this.'

With that thought, Roy could not help but feel gleeful again.

He looked at Tiffany secretly and his chest burned with desire.

'Turns out, this Mr. Laine isn't even that powerful. I'll give him room to back off then I'll secretly make this woman mine. There's nothing he can possibly do anyway once I've had a taste of her.'

Roy felt extremely excited when he thought of that, and he felt the urge to pull Tiffany into his arms.

Yet, he did not know that Jasper was aware of every minute change in his expression and gaze.

Scoffing, Jasper said, "Since you can't fire a shareholder, then you'll just have to close the restaurant down."

Roy was stunned when he heard Jasper as he looked at the man confusedly. He wondered if he had imagined the man's words.

Gerry's expression turned disgruntled, but he could not refute Jasper.

“Aren’t you going too far, Mr. Laine?” Roy grit his teeth and asked.

“A good number of shareholders invested a total of tens of millions to open this restaurant. What right do you have to close it down just like that?”

“The fact that I own the lot your restaurant currently rents,” Jasper replied calmly.

“No way!” Roy was in disbelief.

“F*cking dumb *ss!” Gerry glared at Roy and scolded, “Forget this shop lot, more than half of Gold Pedestrian Street is Mr. Laine’s property. Who the f*ck do you think you are? Do you know what trouble you’re getting yourself into?”

Jasper ignored the scolding Gerry was giving Roy and continued, “I’ll pass along my instructions later, after which, the JW Real Estate staff in charge of Gold Pedestrian Street’s property will come and terminate the contract with you.”

“We’re not leasing this lot to you anymore, so please close your doors and move out within three days.”

Roy was stricken and he stood dumbly in place. He shouted raspily, “No, no way! We signed a contract!”

Jasper looked at Roy's desperate expression and answered calmly, "Everything will be in accordance with the contract. I'll just pay you the compensation for breaching it."

"No, no. Don't!" Gerry was terrified. He did not dare to take this money from Jasper. "We'll close the restaurant immediately. There's no need to bring up the compensation fee at all, Mr. Laine. I'll talk to the other shareholders, we can't possibly take that compensation from you."

"We're at fault for this, and I promise that we'll give you a satisfactory response."

Gerry glared darkly at Roy as he said this. It was evident that Roy would have to come up with compensation for the shareholder's losses.

Roy understood what Gerry had in mind and he shuddered. Fear engulfed him.

He was just a businessman with a bit of extra money. There was no comparing him with Gerry and the others. He would go bankrupt in the blink of an eye if he had to compensate them for their losses!

At that thought, Roy exclaimed in terror, "Mr. Laine! Please forgive me, I'm really sorry!"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1162

Roy's tragic pleading did not evoke Jasper's compassion.

If it were any other person, Roy might bully them badly such that no one would pity them. At the end of the day, people like Roy would only take advantage of others' kindness.

Hence, it would benefit society to get rid of these people early.

"Enough! Stop shouting!"

Seeing that Jasper remained unaffected by Roy's pleas, Gerry did not dare to let the man continue. He glared and shouted at Roy, "What're you still here for? Get lost! There's no place for you to talk here!"

Roy did not dare to leave. Staying meant he still had a shred of hope, but his life would be over if he left.

Gerry saw through Roy's intentions and said coldly, "I'll give you a chance to leave, which you'll take if you're smart. Mr. Laine isn't the kind to kill you off."

“But if you choose to continue and anger Mr. Laine, then don’t blame me for turning against you, Pearce!” Gerry was truly frantic.

Only he knew the fear he felt toward Jasper.

Getting rid of the Haddock’s Chamber of Commerce’s Waterhoof City branch was one thing, but what terrified Gerry the most was the news he had received.

Norman and his daughter had sold all their property this morning and had taken the earliest flight out of the country.

Others might now know about this, but Gerry was well aware of this piece of information.

He also knew that Norman had contacted the little prince, and the Royal family, to protect his property.

The little prince had stood up for Norman as well. Despite this, Norman had been forced to leave overnight.

The implications behind this terrified Gerry.

It meant that Jasper had met the little prince and the two had come to a compromise.

There was no way Gerry would know of the exact contents of the meeting, but he could clearly see that Norman did not get the protection he wanted.

Norman and his daughter might not have died, but Jasper had never intended to take their lives in the first place.

Therefore, from what Gerry could see, he believed that Jasper had forcibly made the little prince give in to him.

The terror Gerry felt when he found out that the little prince had stepped aside to give Jasper access to Norman was no less than the respect he had for Jasper.

If Roy continued to yap on and cause Jasper to divert his anger to himself, then Gerry would truly take Roy's life.

Roy shuddered when he saw the furious glare Gerry gave him. He clenched his jaw and remained quiet. Roy knew that he would not be allowed to live if he completely angered Gerry.

Utter regret filled Roy for being driven by sexual desires, as it had gotten him into real trouble now.

After the emotional rollercoaster he had gone through, Roy looked devastated as he kept his head down as he left.

Gerry turned to Jasper politely after Roy left and said, “This is all a misunderstanding, Mr. Laine. Really. How about this, since we’ve coincidentally met, how about I treat you to a meal, Mr. Laine?”

Jasper glanced at Tiffany and waved him off. “No need. I came here today to have dinner with my sister.”

Gerry was a smart man and he immediately substituted ‘sister’ with ‘lover’. He chuckled and turned to Tiffany, “What a pretty sister you have, Mr. Laine. I didn’t prepare any meeting gift, but here, for you. I hope you like it.”

With that, Gerry pulled out a diamond necklace from his breast pocket

From the exquisite packaging, one could tell that this might have been a gift Gerry had bought to win over a woman.

Tiffany had been in such a situation before, and shook her head with flushed cheeks. Then, she hid behind Jasper.

Jasper replied calmly, "You're too kind, Mr. Heron. Thank you for the thought, but there's no need for gifts."

Gerry let out a sigh of relief when he heard Jasper speak.

He was truly afraid that Jasper would hold today's events over his head. He would be in great trouble if that were the case.

He might have lost a bustling seafood restaurant today, but the restaurant was not completely his own. He had only invested a little bit of money in it, so he did not care much about the loss.

However, if Jasper made him an enemy, Gerry did not believe he would end up any better than Norman.

It was great that Jasper declined dinner since Gerry had come today to meet another distinguished guest. He would be troubled if Jasper decided to stay.

Gerry was about to say something when a group of people arrived.

These people were currently chatting happily among themselves.

In the middle of the crowd was a handsome man in his twenties, donning a sharp red jacket and wearing a silver shiny earring on his ear.

The group walked over, and Gerry's expression changed when he saw the young man. He quickly went over to greet him, "Mr. Chavez, you're here early."

'Mr. Chavez?'

Jasper was intrigued when he heard the rare surname, and turned to look at the group of people.

The young man by the title Mr. Chavez replied calmly, "Why? Do I have to tell you what time I arrive too?"

Gerry bowed slightly and quickly smiled. He replied, "Of course not. What I meant was that I could have met you downstairs if I knew the time of your grand arrival, Mr. Chavez."

At that moment, Mr. Chavez also spotted Jasper.

Despite being the first time the duo met, this Mr. Chavez seemed to recognize Jasper.

“Jasper Laine?” Mr. Chavez arched his brow and asked casually.

From Mr. Chavez’s reaction, Jasper knew that he had guessed the identity of this man correctly.

Prince Chavez, also known as the crown prince.

He was the heir, as well as the most important member, of Clear Seas, an extremely strong company among the country’s capitalist circle.

“Prince Chavez,” Jasper greeted calmly.

Prince chuckled and raised his hand to touch the earring on his left ear as he replied, “I much prefer being referred to as the crown prince.”

“Might as well use Your Highness, then,” Jasper commented.

“Haha,” Prince laughed out loud and said, “I have no qualms with that either.”

Prince’s arrogance could be seen in how he referred to himself.

“The last imperial dynasty ended long ago. There are no crown princes in the country anymore.”

Prince’s gaze turned sinisterly cold upon hearing Jasper’s remark.

“That depends on where we are. As long as I’m around, then there will be a crown prince!”

Jasper shrugged and replied, “This is a modern society where everyone has freedom of speech. You can call yourself a king if you want.

“Of course, but remember not to take it too seriously. It wouldn’t be worth it to get charged with the crime of dividing the country. You’re a law student, Tiff. What is the punishment for such a crime?”

Tiffany was familiar with her curriculum, and she immediately replied, “At least three years jail-time. If the circumstances are severe, the first offense can even be charged with life imprisonment.”

Prince's smile began to fade upon witnessing Jasper and Tiffany's coordination. His expression turned sinister as well.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1163

Prince stared at Jasper expressionlessly and said coldly, "Looks like rumors were right, Jasper. You are indeed very arrogant."

"There are many rumors about me but I always thought of myself as humble and cautious. I don't know when the word 'arrogant' began to be associated with me, but perhaps it's because people don't know me very well. I'm sure that once they get to know me, they'd find that I'm a really easy person to get along with."

Prince harrumphed at Jasper's claim and said, "Cut the nonsense with me. It's useless."

"Since you know who I am, Jasper, then I'm sure you know about the situation there too. So, stop playing dumb."

"I'll tell you straight up. I have my eyes on the online payment industry."

Then, Prince smiled and stepped out of his small crowd toward Jasper. Once he got close, Prince grinned wretchedly and said slowly, "You, get lost!"

Beside them, Julian narrowed his eyes at Prince's taunting words.

All he needed was a glance from Jasper, and Julian would crush Prince's head without hesitation, crown prince or king.

As far as Julian was concerned, no one was allowed to provoke Jasper.

Yet, Jasper only looked at Prince calmly.

Ever since he started his business, Jasper had been faced with countless enemies.

As he began to climb the ranks, the enemies he had to fight against also gradually grew stronger.

His enemy Fabian had already caused him a multitude of problems even though they had yet to meet.

His so-called ally, the little prince, posed a danger that surpassed anyone he met.

Prince, who stood before him now, was not an easy opponent to deal with either.

Jasper could tell there was a scheming man beneath all his arrogance.

Not that it mattered.

“We shall see, then,” Was all Jasper calmly replied.

Prince laughed out loud, yet his gaze was exceptionally dark.

“No one’s ever dared to steal what I wanted ever since I was a child. I’ve already got my eyes on the online payment industry, so there’s no way I’d let anyone else touch it. There are plenty of people vying to go against you, Jasper, but I’m not going to sink to their level just to get rid of you together.”

“Still, be smart and back out of the online payment industry. I have nothing against doing something many other people would like to see.”

Prince stared and sneered at Jasper after he finished speaking, then he turned his head away. "Let's go. It's dinner time."

With that, he left arrogantly.

Jasper narrowed his eyes as he watched Prince leave. A spark flickered in his eyes.

"Mr... Mr. Laine?"

Gerry's cautious tone caused Jasper to look over.

"Not going to serve Prince?" Jasper asked.

Gerry's expression was dark.

He had used all kinds of contacts and methods to finally seem of slight importance in front of Prince. The man was the distinguished guest he was supposed to be treating to a meal today.

However, after what had just happened, even an idiot could tell that Jasper and Prince were at each other's throats.

Gerry immediately felt as if he was being grilled over high heat. He did not know which side to join.

He was afraid that Jasper would direct his anger onto him, and terrified that Prince would be able to tell that he and Jasper were acquainted. The latter would get him into grave trouble.

“Go ahead. What you choose to invest in is your own business.”

Jasper said calmly, then he ignored Gerry and left with Tiffany and Julian in tow.

Gerry stomped his foot as he watched Jasper leave. He felt the urge to slap himself.

Of all the times, it had to happen now. What a coincidence.

Prince and Jasper just had to become enemies, and the day he decided to treat Prince to dinner, Jasper just had to be there to find out.

Jasper who had no idea of Gerry's internal turmoil as he soon arrived downstairs.

"Jasper, did I end up causing you trouble again?" Tiffany saw Jasper's stern expression and asked softly.

Jasper snapped back to reality and smiled. "Not at all. There was some other issue, but it wasn't your fault... Are you hungry? What do you want to eat?"

"But we agreed that I would treat you," Tiffany whispered, "But we can do it next time if you're busy, Jasper."

"There's no rush. Work can wait, but we can't drag on the celebration for your first part-time paycheck. How about this, let's eat somewhere else." Jasper smiled.

Tiffany felt conflicted when she saw a gentle smile grace Jasper's features again.

"Alright."

All the words she wanted to say were condensed into one.

She was not an idiot. She could tell that the man from just now would pose great trouble for Jasper.

Still, Jasper had chosen to eat with her.

Tiffany told herself internally that this would be the first and last time she acted on a whim.

Julian followed the duo as they shopped around Gold Pedestrian Street, then went to a restaurant on the beach with a nice view and atmosphere.

It was not a cheap place to dine in. The three were frugal, yet they had ended up spending more than 400 Somer Dollars altogether.

Jasper had a small smile on his face as he watched Tiffany pull out money for the bill excitedly. Being considerate of the girl's self-esteem, Jasper did not try to help her pay for it.

The dinner came as a product of her desire to thank him, and it meant more than 400 Somer Dollars to her. Hence, Jasper did not do anything to kill the mood.

After dinner, Jasper had Julian drive Tiffany back to school. Jasper sent her to the entrance of her dorm before he walked out of Hoofmorn University.

Once he got into the car, Jasper's smile instantly vanished and he immediately called Hudson and Wayne.

Jasper did not say much and only told them one thing over the phone.

He had to pack their luggage and make their way to the airport immediately, where his private plane would bring them over to Waterhoof City overnight.

After that, the first private Gulfstream airplane parked in Nauritus City International Airport immediately departed upon receiving Jasper's instruction.

Its first stop was to pick Hudson up from the further distanced Cavern City, then it went to Hervey City to pick Wayne up. It was already two-thirty in the morning by the time the airplane arrived at Waterhoof City International Airport.

After that, Hudson and Wayne rushed over to the hotel from the airport, looking exhausted from the flight. It was three-fifty in the morning when they arrived.

On the other hand, Jasper was still wide awake.

In the study of Jasper's hotel room, he shook Wayne and Hudson's hands before everyone took their seats.

Jasper smiled and said, "Sorry for troubling you two into coming overnight."

Hudson had known Jasper longer, and he replied with a smile, "It wasn't much trouble, Mr. Laine. But I have to say, that airplane of yours is quite the vehicle. It wasn't too tiring coming all the way here."

Wayne, who was currently in his start-up stage, was more realistic and he went asked straightforwardly, "Is something wrong, Mr. Laine? Why did you call us over so suddenly?"

Jasper knocked on the table with his finger and replied, "Since you asked, then I might as well get straight to the point. This is a matter of life and death for Terizone and Abbylon."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1165

Both Hudson's and Wayne's expressions changed slightly upon hearing this.

Both of them knew that, considering his character, Jasper would not make a joke about something like this. Not to mention that he had flown both of them over from different cities with his private plane. It would be ridiculous for him to go so far just to make a joke.

Hence, Jasper's words had to hold significant meaning. Jasper exhaled softly and continued, "It's to do with payment."

Payment!

Wayne and Hudson frowned at the mention of this.

Payment methods were the most important aspect of online shopping platforms, so Wayne was no stranger to online payments. He also knew that he could not make his platform into something big no matter how good it was if they did not find a good solution for this problem.

"As things stand, the government has plans to standardize online payment; it will be implemented through policies soon. They'll most likely try to increase accessibility and standardize market behavior."

"This implies that the government is aware of the huge effect that online payment may bring, which is why they're setting a standard in advance."

“This involves many parties, and we’ve already got competition. If we’re not careful, our opponent will completely seize control of the online payment market. We’ll be in trouble if that happens.”

Hudson seemed fine when he heard Jasper explain this, but Wayne’s expression changed completely.

The main point of an online shopping platform was to have a huge number of products and a quick and convenient shopping method. From signing up on the website to choosing goods to communicating with suppliers, everything came down to paying for the goods.

If someone else were to dominate online payment, then he might as well close his online shopping platform.

“Don’t worry. Since we have the first-mover advantage, it won’t be that easy for competition to get rid of us,” Jasper consoled Wayne.

“But we don’t have much time now, so we have to take control of the online payment industry before the direction of the future has been decided.”

“I’ve thought about this before. We’ll take the online payment technology platform that Terizone Inc and Sena partnered to create, then integrate it with Abbylon’s shopping platform.”

“Then I’ll separate this segment and establish a whole new subsidiary for it. This subsidiary company will only take care of online payments, and it will be the most important company that will connect all of JW’s dot-com enterprises.”

Jasper’s words were not complicated, and since both Wayne and Hudson were experienced businessmen, they immediately understood what he meant.

This meant that all Internet companies under JW in the future would have business with this online payment company.

This company’s importance had instantly outshone any other.

It immediately became JW’s new core.

“JW Capital will own 70% of the new payment company’s shares. For the remaining 30%, I’m planning to split it between Terizone and Abbylon equally. JW Capital will maintain ownership and be the majority shareholder, but I plan to hand management rights over to both of you.”

Wayne and Hudson’s eyes lit up brightly when they heard this.

“I’ve thought about the specifics of management too, and I’ve decided to go with a co-CEO model.”

This co-CEO model meant that two presidents would hold the same level of authority in the company. Both presidents would be in charge of operating and managing the entire company together.

“For this co-CEO model, I’ve taken into account both your own positions and work. Unfortunately, it’s against my principles to allow you two to assume the role of CEO of this new company yourselves. However, the two of you can hand me your recommendations and I’ll personally assign them to the role.”

Jasper glanced at the two men and continued immediately, almost as if he knew what they were thinking.

If Terizone and Abbylon wanted to compete, it had to be through positive and friendly competition. Fighting internally would only result in friction and a waste of JW’s resources. There was no way Jasper would allow both conquerors like Hudson and Wayne to share the same chair.

That was a recipe for trouble.

Things would be much easier to deal with if the duo recommended their own men.

“I... don't see why not.”

Wayne and Hudson shared a look before nodding and saying. They saw the effort Jasper had put into solving this issue.

This was indeed the best way to avoid conflict

There would of course still be arguments over authority within the new company for a co-CEO model, but that did not matter anymore.

The company's ultimate authority still laid in Jasper's hand, while the duo were not unreasonable rookies but rather people who knew their priorities. Conflicts over authority would still exist in the new company, but Jasper's plan ensured that it would be limited to an acceptable level.

“As I said before, Abbylon and Terizone may both be subsidiaries of JW as its still the majority shareholder, but they are completely different companies. Needless to say, the two of you have completely different interests and demands. You can put your own interests first, but do not strain your relationship too much.”

Jasper was essentially setting a limit to the scale of conflict Abbylon and Terizone's could have more than a decade into the future when two of them would be giants of the industry.

They could fight, only so long as it was within his pre-determined limits.

“Next, let’s talk about the specific technology bylaws and modus operandi. We have to come up with a realistic and implementable proposal tonight. We never know, I might have to hand this proposal up to the government for reference very soon.”

...

Jasper knew that if the government wanted to devise a better access policy for online payment, that they would definitely ask for his opinion.

After all, he was the only person in the country who was operating an online payment company.

However, he did not expect everything to happen so soon.

The following day, Jasper had not managed to sleep for long after pulling an all-nighter when Vita’s phone call woke him up.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1166

Half an hour later, after a simple breakfast Jasper had Julian drive him to ICBS' Waterhoof City branch's conference room.

Vita met Jasper outside the conference room.

“How is it? Did I miss anything?” Jasper asked.

Vita quickly replied, “You're just in time. The conference starts in five minutes.”

“The higher-ups sent a survey team to attend this conference. The main objective of today is to confirm the access policy. I've already sorted your ideas and handed them over, so they might ask you a few more questions about it.”

Jasper nodded. He was about to push open the door and enter when Vita lowered his voice and said, “Prince is inside too.”

Jasper arched his brow slightly. “He doesn't have an online payment company not any relevant experience. What's he doing inside?”

Vita smiled wryly and replied, “We can’t decline him because of his status. Soha’s vice president’s also inside with him.”

Jasper nodded. He pushed open the conference room door and walked in.

There were not too many people in the conference room, just five to six, but everyone looked stern.

Jasper immediately attracted everyone’s gaze once he entered the room.

Sitting on the left of the conference table was Prince. The man tinkered with the earring on his earlobe and looked at Jasper neither dark nor brightly. Then, he sneered.

The middle-aged man sitting at the head of the table was very polite as he took the initiative to walk up and shake Jasper’s hand.

“Hello, Mr. Laine. I’m the leader of the survey team, Barnaby Wilcher. You can call me Mr. Wilcher.”

Jasper smiled and shook Mr. Wilcher's hand. "Mr. Wilcher, please survey to your heart's content."

Barnaby laughed out loud and replied, "It's our job. Well then, let's begin the conference."

The conference was about to begin when Prince suddenly said casually, "Wait. Before the conference starts, I have something to say.

"Since there's no set policy for online payment yet, I think all running businesses should temporarily be put on hold. Only after the policy's issued should the company be re-reviewed, after which qualifications and licenses can be distributed."

Everyone looked at Jasper after hearing this.

Even an idiot could tell that Prince was targeting Jasper alone with his words.

This was because Jasper was the only person in the country officially operating an online payment system. Jasper would be forced to suffer a huge loss by putting his online payment system on hold until the policy was enforced, his company's qualifications were re-reviewed, and a license was distributed to him.

Jasper was expressionless when he replied calmly, "Well then, Mr. Chavez, I wonder if you eat by injecting food into your stomach and waiting for it to digest before you take it out to chew?"

Muffled snorts were heard from the other attendees. They could not help but laugh at the response.

Even Mr. Wilcher, who was hosting the meeting, showed a tint of mirth on the corner of his lips.

Prince was the only one with a pitch-black expression. He stared at Jasper and asked, "What did you say, Jasper?"

"Don't you know understand what I said?" Jasper asked back.

This conference had been a fight between him and Prince to begin with, and Jasper would not lose.

Admitting defeat meant that there would be a slight change to the policy in the future. One that might result in a huge attack against his properties.

Because of this, Jasper was fully prepared to face off against Prince, both from a logical and emotional perspective.

“Online payment is a concept I first proposed, and with the central bank and the government’s support, it’s proven to be a viable option to adopt. I have no qualms about sharing the fruit of my hard work with you since I had never decided to act illegally and monopolize the country’s market.”

“But this is still a survey conference, after all, one that will decide the policy framework of the online payment industry in the future. So what are you trying to do by requesting that I close my operating platform right off the bat?”

“My partnership is recognized by ICBS, the central bank, and the government. I will change according to the official policy when it’s issued in the future, but I will not put a halt to my business until then.”

Jasper’s words were well-founded and reasonable.

Even Mr. Wilcher nodded slightly in approval.

However, there was no way Prince would give up so easily when he had the intention to cause trouble for Jasper.

“You make it sound so nice, but I heard rumors long ago that your online payment has a turnover of tens of millions everyday. Who knows if you’ve done anything illegal? Would you dare to pull out all your data for us to audit?”

The atmosphere in the conference room changed at that.

Prince did not stop there.

“Do you know how much wealth is involved in a turnover of tens of millions? Do you know how much dirty money you can earn with even a slightly underhanded trick?”

“You think that just because you claim that there’s nothing’s wrong that there won’t be a problem at all?”

“You want to prove your innocence? Sure. The best way to do so would be to share your data with the public and let us investigate it thoroughly.”

Jasper glanced at Prince’s prideful expression and replied calmly, “So you want to investigate me. What happens if there’s nothing wrong, then?”

Prince snorted. “Shouldn’t that be the given? You’d be in grave trouble if there was something wrong. What do you mean, ‘what then’?”

“So you mean I have to immediately reveal all my data to the public and let you flip through all my important trade secrets as you wish. However, if there’s no problem, you’ll just up and leave matter-of-factly, correct?”

Prince grinned. “Exactly. That’s correct. Why, do you not dare to do so?”

“It’s not that I don’t dare.”

Jasper shook his head.

“I’m just really curious how you can be so arrogant.”

“Following your logic, it means that I can enter your house and start digging around. If I find nothing I want, then I’ll just walk out self-righteously. If I find something, then I’ll confiscate it and your entire house. What difference is that from a common bandit?”

“Not to mention that neither of us have any say in whether there’s anything wrong with it or not. All my companies have performed their tax duties and cooperated with tax auditing businesses. There's never been any problem when it comes to us and paying taxes."

"But according to what you said, are you telling me that your authority is above the tax department? Or perhaps you think that everyone in the tax department is useless and are not as skilled as you."

"You want to investigate? Sure. I can open all my data to the public. But what about Clear Seas Industrial's data? Can I investigate that as well?"

Prince's expression darkened with every word. Once he heard the last part about investigating Clear Seas' data, Prince exploded in fury like a cat whose tail had been stepped on.

"Who the f*ck do you think you are? How dare you propose investigating Clear Seas Industrial's accounts? Who gave you the right to say something so treacherous?!"

In comparison to Prince's fury, Jasper looked much more laid-back. He nodded calmly and said, "Exactly. You just voiced out exactly what I wanted to say."

Prince narrowed his eyes and glared at Jasper. The conflict between the two seemed even more incendiary than ever before.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1167

Prince suddenly smiled and slowly sat back down. He raised his hand to play with his earring and said, “Wow. You’re not a weak opponent at all, Mr. Laine. Very well, then. Let’s start the conference.”

Everyone felt uneasy at the drastic difference in Prince’s attitudes. It was as if he had turned into a completely different person.

Jasper was the only one who frowned slightly as he internally raised Prince’s level of danger toward him.

The impression Prince gave Jasper right now was of an arrogant and insolent man. However, beneath all these emotions hid an even stronger capability to control them.

People like him were very difficult to deal with.

Mr. Wilcher finally found the opportunity to speak. He cleared his throat and said, “Let’s move on from the previous topic. There are two agendas for this conference today.”

“Firstly, about the access review policy plan Mr. Prince Chavez proposed for the online payment industry. It’s a great plan, and after further research, we’ve found that we can use this suggestion as a sort of the blueprint while designing the future policy.”

Prince finally smiled after he heard Mr. Wilcher's words.

The entire proposal was designed with a professional AI policy research team under Mr. Wilcher.

The proposal ensured that the government's goals were met while his own interests were kept. As far as Prince was concerned, there was no reason for this proposal to be rejected.

Prince chuckled and said, "I just want to standardize the industry even more. Otherwise, other people might start thinking that just because they came first, that the entire industry now belongs to him. They should at least take a look at themselves first. Wouldn't you say so, Mr. Laine?"

Prince's attention was fixed on Jasper the entire time, so he did not realize the awkward smile on Mr. Wilcher's face.

"Uh, I'm not done yet," Mr. Wilcher interrupted.

Prince leaned back against the chair and said casually, "It's alright. There's no need to praise, to thank, or to give me recognition. I'm just doing my part. Only by brainstorming and working together can we make the best out of the industry."

Mr. Wilcher's expression turned even more awkward.

"After a research meeting and taking all aspects into consideration, we've decided to use Mr. Jasper Laine's proposal as the final executed standard that will decide the future direction of the industry's policies."

With Mr. Wilcher's words, the conference room fell pin-drop silent.

Prince's smile froze on his face and his expression became as dark as a moonless night.

Mr. Wilcher had been speaking about how Prince's proposal could be used as a blueprint mere moments ago, only to state that they would use Jasper's suggestion as the final executed standard in the next. The stark contrast in both sentences had the other employees in the room feeling agitated, let alone Prince himself.

Prince's explosive temper could not be contained anymore, and he turned to glare at Mr. Wilcher. "What did you say?!"

Mr. Wilcher felt awkward, but his identity and status were still somewhat powerful. Hence, he felt displeased when he heard Prince's interrogative tone.

“Mr. Chavez, I understand where you’re coming from but please correct your attitude. All decisions were made during the research meeting and was not decided by any one person.”

Prince felt like he had been made fun of as he suppressed his fury that was moments away from exploding again. He answered, “Didn’t you say that my proposal would be taken as a blueprint? What the f*ck is Jasper’s proposal?”

Mr. Wilcher sighed and said, “The overall decision of the higher-ups is to carry out the license issuance system. The government will do a comprehensive qualification review before a company can apply, and they will only be issued a license should they pass it. Your idea of a 1 billion Somer Dollar security deposit has also been retained.”

“Mr. Chavez, the biggest difference between Mr. Laine’s and your suggestion is that he proposed that the bank can partner with multiple companies possessing an online payment license, meaning that the industry is open to the public. Mr. Chavez, the scope of your proposal was too narrow.”

“Online payment is new, but it will become a huge industry. No one is allowed to monopolize it.”

Prince’s expression darkened with every word.

When Mr. Wilcher told him unkindly that his scope was too narrow, Prince slammed the table and pointed at Jasper's nose while scolding, "How dare you f*cking steal my profits, Laine?!"

Jasper looked up and glanced at Prince before he replied calmly, "Didn't you say it yourself? I'm just doing my part. Only by brainstorming and working together can we make the best out of the industry, no?"

The last thing Prince expected was for Jasper to revoke the most important part of his proposal.

"Are you f*cking crazy?! What good does opening this industry to the public do for you? You're willing to screw everyone over just to stop me from profiting, huh?"

Prince was infuriated.

"The license qualification review and the 1 billion security deposit means nothing. But you allowing the bank to partner with multiple companies means that you're completely opening the industry to the public! How f*cking cruel of you, Jasper!"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1168

Prince's anger was only natural.

The man was in a rush to prove himself to his family. He was optimistic about the online payment industry, and he had invested a lot of time and effort to make it come true.

To Prince, this incident was like a trial for him. If he passed, then he would be given more say in the family enterprise. If he failed, then he was to do his part and be an obedient son of his wealthy family.

Prince was indignant.

After paying the price in an immeasurable amount of effort, Prince's most basic goal was to monopolize and enforce a blockade on the market so that only he alone was allowed to operate it.

The situation had been going great until Jasper suddenly appeared. After Jasper figuratively flipped the dinner table so that no one could eat anything, Prince now hated the man to his very core.

However, it had never occurred to him that Jasper had already stepped foot in this industry before he could. If he wanted to control the entire market, he had to throw Jasper out.

Jasper ignored all of Prince's scolding and complaints. After all, he had more important things to do than deal with Prince's disgruntlement.

"Mr. Wilcher. I also brought something this time."

Jasper then pulled out a stack of papers. Mr. Wilcher looked at it then waved his hand, and someone immediately distributed the papers to everyone.

Prince received a copy as well.

"I'd like to see what tricks he has up his sleeve!"

Prince scoffed and flipped open the document.

He had only taken one look when his pupils constricted.

As the sound of flipping pages sounded filled the conference room, Jasper began to elaborate on his plan.

“I’ll announce the establishment of a whole new company very soon that will continue development of the online payment platform initially run by Terizone Inc. The company will also arrive at an in-depth strategic cooperation agreement with the three companies Terizone, Sena, and Abbylon.”

“This new company will only be in charge of one business, online payment.”

“For this, in addition to the 1 billion Somer Dollar security deposit with the central bank, I will also put in an extra 1 billion specifically for compensation purposes. This way, anyone who uses my online payment business will not have to worry, as any loss of funds will be compensated for in full without failure.”

Prince’s hand shook when he took in the contents of the document.

He knew that this would be the nail in the coffin.

Should Jasper begin to execute this, no one in the country’s online payment industry would be able to defeat Jasper.

Prince passed the document to his team of research consultants that had followed him here, then turned to glare at Jasper with extreme hatred and iciness.

He realized that he had to do everything possible to stop Jasper.

Otherwise, it would be over to him.

In stark contrast to Prince, Mr. Wilcher and the rest became more terrified and satisfied as they read on.

“Mr. Laine, if you don’t mind me asking, is this entire operating concept and framework, as well as what you said just now, true?” Mr. Wilcher asked.

Jasper chuckled. The contents of the document were something he had come up with Hudson and Wayne overnight.

The concept was something he had introduced from the future, it was something that was proven to be feasible as history had proven. Hence, Jasper had no fear that it would fail.

“I wouldn’t make a joke in such a situation. I’ll make my words come true.”

Mr. Wilcher shouted after hearing Jasper's reply, "Good!"

"We were still worried before about this completely new industry. The government might have come up with a policy and standard, but we've never encountered something like this before. There is no relative experience for this overseas either, so we were worried that a problem would arise somewhere along the process."

"But with you leading the way, Mr. Laine, I'm confident that there won't be any problem at all."

"Wait!"

Prince's voice interrupted Mr. Wilcher's joyful conversation with Jasper.

Mr. Wilcher frowned irritably as he looked at Prince. He said patiently, "Is there anything you'd like to add, Mr. Chavez?"

Prince sneered and stared at Jasper before saying, "You're about to establish a new subsidiary, right, Jasper? Great Then I'll use this setting and opportunity to announce something as well."

"Soha's about to launch its own online payment platform too, very soon!"

Prince then stared daggers at Jasper and spat icily, “Since we’ve come to an agreement on the policy, Jasper, let’s decide the true victor on the market. Whoever dies will be forced to pull out from the market. Do you dare to accept my challenge?”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1169

Before Jasper could react to Prince’s words, the vice president of Soha sitting beside the latter paled in shock.

‘Since when was Soha about to launch an online payment platform?’

‘As vice president, how do I not know about this?’

‘We have nothing. What are we launching?’

‘We have no product to sell, so there’s no reason for any customer to use a barebones online payment platform! What are we launching it for, then?’

Sitting on his chair, the vice president felt sweat bead and trickle down his forehead. He was frantic.

Yet, Prince showed no signs of interest in this as he glared at Jasper.

“So? Do you dare to take up my challenge or not?”

Jasper merely chuckled in the face of Prince’s aggressive and forceful shouting. The former replied, “I don’t care what you or Soha are going to do. If you think you have the capability then fight for what you want. What’s the point of blowing this into something bigger than it actually is?”

“Good!”

Prince smiled wretchedly and stood up to point at Jasper. He continued, “I’ll commend you for your bravery. But as someone who’s never experienced it for themselves, you’ll never know how terrifying it is to offend me.”

“I don’t need too much effort to get rid of you considering how small your capital is in comparison to mine. If you have a death wish, then I won’t be blamed for being cruel either.”

Mr. Wilcher shook his head at both Prince’s aggression and Jasper’s indifference.

If possible, he truly hoped that these two companies could collaborate and work together to develop this newly emerged industry.

However, from the way things looked now, it seemed like this was a pipe dream.

Not to mention that his identity at this conference was a sensitive one. He represented the government, so no matter how distasteful he found Prince's arrogance, or how much he appreciated Jasper, he had to remain impartial.

"Alright. Now, let's move on to the next item on the agenda. Before I do that, let me remind everyone once more that the point of this research conference is to plan for the online payment industry's future. Please refrain from bringing up topics unrelated to this matter."

"I would like everyone to try and refrain from adding your own emotions into this conference too, as it will only waste everyone's time."

The following discussion was spent with Mr. Wilcher's research team asking Jasper about how online payments operated, what problems he's faced or would face in the future, and how to resolve these problems. Overall, this could be considered a scenario where the government was asking for all of Jasper's opinions in one go.

After all, Jasper was the only person in the entire country and world that was officially running an online payment system. There were similar businesses abroad, but those were of a completely different kind, and there was no way they could invite someone foreign over to conduct an interview.

It was evident that the government had decided to build this online payment industry well. Thus, they decided to resolve all potential problems that could possibly arise.

Naturally, Jasper was glad to help.

Be it within or outside the country, all companies required their respective government's support if they wanted to grow.

The government planned for the benefit of its people while enterprises only had to worry about profiting, paying taxes, and internal personnel.

The government and enterprises were not enemies. In fact, they were co-dependent and could develop a mutually beneficial relationship.

However, while Jasper and Mr. Wilcher began to benefit from each other, Prince no longer had anything to do with the conference.

Prince might have wanted to enter the industry, but he had no experience in the online payment industry at all before this.

Soha's vice president was useless in the scenario too, since Soha did not understand the industry either.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1170

All they could do was watch as Jasper and Mr. Wilcher grew even closer.

Many people believed that with Prince's temper, there was no way he would accept being discarded like this.

Surprisingly, Prince did not cause trouble throughout the rest of the conference. It was almost as if he had accepted the role as a bystander.

It was only his sinister gaze sweeping over Jasper from time to time that gave him away. After all, nobody would believe that this quiet man sitting at the conference desk could look as arrogant as he did at the beginning of the conference.

An hour later, the meeting ended.

Outside the conference room, Mr. Wilcher shook Jasper's hand and said, "Thank you for so many of your suggestions, Mr. Laine. I'll compile and hand this up as soon as possible. I'm sure that the official document will be issued in no time."

Jasper smiled and replied, "I'm just doing my part."

After their chat, Prince also walked out of the conference hall bossily.

He made a beeline for Jasper and snickered.

"I really want to rip your face off so I can send it to you and let you admire it, Jasper. Because it won't be long before you'll never get to smile again!"

Prince's eyes shone with a venomous glint.

"I used to think that you were a prideful ant, but I realized that I was wrong. Rather than prideful, you're just a scheming ant who has a bit of luck."

"Not that it matters, since you're just an ant at the end of the day. It'd take no effort for me to crush you."

Prince sneered and lowered his voice to continue, "You've never faced Clear Seas Industrial, so you'll never know how powerful I am. I am the crown prince of Clear Seas Industrial! Just you wait, Jasper. I'll make sure to kill you!"

Staring at Prince, who was mere inches away from him, Jasper replied calmly, “Let the results do the talking. What use is being ruthless with your words? Do you see me getting affected by them?”

Prince glared at Jasper and replied icily, “You sure have a way with words!”

“But I do hope that you can still joyfully rebut others in the future. Not that you’ll have the chance, though.”

Prince gave Jasper one last sinister look after he finished speaking, as if trying to memorize Jasper’s current expression before he turned his head and left.

Jasper watched Prince’s figure leave calmly.

However, no one seemed to realize that most of Jasper’s attention was not on Prince. Instead, it was focused on Soha’s vice president who stood beside Prince and whom had held an insignificant presence throughout the conference.

Jasper could clearly remember that when Prince first said that Soha was about to launch an online payment platform in the conference room, the vice president looked shocked and helpless. It was almost as if he had been told that aliens had invaded earth.

So why did he look overjoyed and confident now?

Excluding the few minutes Jasper and Mr. Wilcher had spent conversing outside after the conference was over, Jasper and Prince had been in the same venue the entire time.

'Prince and that vice president were alone in the conference room only for those few minutes.

'What did they talk about?

'What was it that turned the vice president from a desperate mess mere moments ago, to an extremely confident man in the next?'

Jasper refused to believe that Prince had simply given the vice president an empty promise to console him.

The man had managed to become Soha's vice president. Without seeing some tangible benefits, there was no way he would buy into a rich kid's baseless plan.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1171

Jasper's worries were not unwarranted.

The day after the conference, before Jasper could officially announce the establishment of his new company, Soha made their move.

Soha made an official announcement to establish Soha Payments, which had arrived at a strategic cooperation agreement with the three gaming companies Netsy, Ideal World, and Senator.

At the same time, the three gaming companies also released public statements.

They announced that the online games under their respective companies would integrate an online payment system, and all players would be able to utilize the bank system and buy points cards online.

As far as the outside world was concerned, these three gaming companies appeared as though they had taken note of how Sena managed to earn huge profits through selling points cards online for United Legends and decided to replicate their success and enter the market as well.

On the other hand, an extremely small group of people could see the true danger lying underneath this sliver of information.

This was a two-pronged attack across two industries.

The first attack was Soha Payment's open challenge toward Jasper's existing payment platform. The second was that this represented a revolt from other online gaming companies in the country against Sena after United Legends had blown up.

Due to the butterfly effect, Senator had actually gotten the agency rights for another exciting online game that had been developed in Coreana.

Miracles.

This was another online game that had once blown up within the country. This was an online game Coreana had developed to counter United Legends once they saw its hype.

In the present timeline, due to United Legends' popularity being moved forward, Miracles also fell under the public spotlight earlier. The game was also greatly sought out by a large group of players.

Miracles was not the only game that had appeared earlier.

So did Ideal World Co., Ltd's representative game, Ideal World.

Even West Fantasyland had hit the markets earlier, a long-standing online game also known as a miracle on par with World of Warcraft.

Jasper's appearance resulted in many future well-known and outstanding online games appearing sooner than they had in his original life. However, these premature games were no match for United Legends, the best online game in the country which was currently at its peak.

"Mr. Laine, even though United Legends' current player base and revenue are decreasing, we still control at least 60% of the country's online market share."

Jack, who was fully presiding over Sena's business, reported to Jasper through a video call.

Jasper nodded. He was unsurprised by the data.

One of the reasons behind United Legends' eventual weakening in his past life was Senator's heartless cash-grab tactics. This resulted in explosive growth on their side.

A simple monster and player fighting game had been forcefully turned into a game of token exchange. This money-minded operation had also sped up the game's demise.

However, Senator did not have much of a choice at the time. They were facing the issue of overly high protection costs, as there had been a leak in server source codes overseas, which spread to private domestic servers.

At the same time, other online games also began to arise. Coupled with the fact that United Legends had reached the end of its version's lifespan, Senator had no other option but to quickly wring United Legends dry of every dollar it was worth.

Jasper had taken precautions against this and bought ownership over United Legends. All follow-up development and agency rights were decided by Sena themselves in order to make sure the possibility of a leaked source code would not occur.

"We have to speed up the content creation of the version. Among Miracles, Ideal World, and West Fantasyland, the last one will be our biggest competition.

"But that is still a 2D turn-based game and it's unimportant to our target audience. You still have to watch out for the other two games, especially Miracles."

"And I heard that cheat codes have appeared as well?"

Cheat codes were essentially coding software that skilled programmers wrote to hack into the players' accounts. When it came to online games, the most important things to look out for after private servers were cheat codes.

When it came to danger levels, cheat codes were even more dangerous than private servers.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1172

After all, not everyone was brave enough to risk being sued by the gaming company and potentially face life imprisonment just to steal a source code.

However, anyone who was even slightly familiar with technology could code.

Jack looked embarrassed when he heard Jasper's question and replied, "We've already gathered the relevant reports and handed it over to the technical department for urgent repairs.

"Being constantly on guard is a waste of resources and has no guarantee. Just contact the legal department and suspend all accounts that used the cheat code once they've been detected. We'll sue everyone that wrote the code. Do I need to explain something so simple to you?" Jasper asked distastefully.

Jack smiled wryly and replied, “Mr. Laine, I don’t know if you know this, but it costs almost nothing to write a cheat code. However, it costs a lot for us to protect our rights.”

“We can only use technical methods to suspend accounts that are using cheat codes, but we have no right to trace the physical addresses of the players who used the codes. We’ll have to contact the police for this and have them investigate the matter. You know how difficult this is, Mr. Laine.”

“I am confident that I can do this.”

Another voice suddenly rang out on Jack’s side of the video call.

The camera turned and Jasper saw a familiar person appear on the screen.

Dane Warren.

Sena’s previous chairman and its true founder.

After completely losing against Jasper in a fight for shareholder rights, Dane opted to stay in Sena’s internal ranks when the former gave him the choice to.

It was an act that required a lot of courage, but Dane continued bravely despite the weird looks the other employees gave him.

Jasper initially worried if the man had ulterior motives, He even asked Jack to keep a close eye on him.

Yet, the truth remained that Dane truly wished to make Sena into something great. Even if this Sena was not the same one he had founded.

Dane had worked diligently all this while and he did not contact any of his previous confidants. He carried out his own role clearly and well.

Dane must have possessed his own strengths and capabilities to create Sena by himself and turn it into the best web portal in the country.

He might not have been an outstanding chairman, but he was an exceptional senior executive.

Dane looked nervous in the video call as he looked at Jasper intently. There was an almost pleading look in his gaze.

“Uh...”

Jasper did not know how he should refer to Dane.

It had been a long time since he paid Dane any attention. After all, the difference in status between the two was just too large.

“I’m currently the manager in charge of maintaining the web portal’s forum,” Dane said calmly with a wry smile.

“Mr. Warren,” Jasper nodded. Pondering for a bit, he asked, “This is a difficult and ungratifying job, something that you could put tons of hard work and effort into only to come up empty-handed. Are you sure you’re willing to do it?”

Dane replied sternly, “I am. Please give me a chance, Mr. Laine.”

After a moment’s silence, Jasper answered, “You still have a small portion of the initial shares when it was previously diluted. I can give special approval for you to cash all of it out at Sena’s current market rate.”

Jasper’s words implied that Dane could become a multimillionaire at any given moment.

Dane replied calmly, “Money isn’t the most important thing to me anymore.”

Jasper nodded and said, “Alright. Then I’ll pass this responsibility over to you. I view all capable people the same. so as long as you do well, I won’t be stingy with your dividends and bonuses.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1173

Ex-enemies could one day become intimate partners. Dane’s wish was for Sena to grow strong, and so was Jasper’s.

People who had the same goal could fully move on from the past with a smile on their face.

Only children talked about who was good or bad. Adults focused on gains and losses.

This gain or loss could be about their interests or their dream.

Dane felt his chest lighten when he heard Jasper’s reply. Frankly speaking, it took a lot of courage for him to volunteer for this, and he felt immense pressure to say what he did today.

Dane had stayed even after he lost his identity as the company’s founder and chairman, and ended up as a maintenance manager for a small forum. He had no reason not to fight one last battle for himself.

Even so, he could bet that Jasper was not a narrow-minded person.

Thankfully for him, he had made the correct bet.

This incident would spell a huge change in Dane's career and life, but it was just a small act of leniency on Jasper's side.

After deciding this, Jasper immediately moved on.

“Jack, have everyone in the company be taught on the importance of anti-cheating. Give Mr. Warren the appropriate resources as well...”

“I understand, Mr. Laine.”

“Alright. Now moving on...”

The entire video conference lasted almost two hours. Jasper had to be more cautious with this.

The current situation was clear. Prince had used the power of Clear Seas' capital and managed to bring Netsy, Perfect World, and Senator together. This was all for the purpose of obtaining United Legends' market share in the country. However, Prince's primary goal was still the online payment industry.

United Legends might be able to hold its ground now, but these three gaming companies were not easy to deal with either. Jasper was not arrogant enough to believe that the world lacked talents that could defeat him.

Not to mention that history told a clear truth. After United Legends met its end in his past life, these three games then started to grow, eventually absorbing a large number of United Legends' previous players.

This time, with Prince supporting them, the three companies that had been oppressed by Sena thus far were instantly rejuvenated. It would not be wise for Jasper to look down on their combined strength.

Looking down on one's enemies was the first step to self-destruction. This was a rule Jasper had always been very well aware of.

After ending the call with Sena, Jasper went to look for Wayne, who was still in Waterhoof City.

Payments for gaming points cards were only a small portion of the online payment feature. It was something Jasper used to accumulate experience whilst simultaneously testing out the technology behind it.

With the advantage of memories of his pre-reincarnation life, he knew that online shopping was the immense energy that would truly open up this space.

Online shopping itself was a hundred-million Somer Dollar market. It was a huge industry that would put Abbylon and Wayne onto the pedestal.

However, Wayne was currently in a meeting with the eighteen founders far in Harvey City. After Jasper instructed them to launch their shopping platform online as soon as possible, Wayne became busier than anyone else.

Hudson, strangely, had returned first.

There were not many follow-up procedures he had to handle. Terizone Inc had thousands of employees, but it was currently going through the golden age of company development. Thus, as a leader, Hudson could not be absent for too long during this period.

“Alright, then. Come over after you’re done with your meeting. I just got off communications with Sena, and there are a few details I need to confirm with you.”

Jasper was about to get up after he hung up the call with Wayne when someone knocked on his hotel room door.

Gerry had come to look for Jasper.

“Take a seat.”

Jasper was unfazed by Gerry’s cautiousness.

Since the beginning, Jasper had planned to use Gerry to monitor the Gardner family and cause them trouble.

However, after the unexpected negotiations with the little prince, the Gardner father-daughter duo ended up leaving the country. It was likely that they would not return after leaving this time, so Jasper moved on from the issue as well.

Hence, Jasper did not really care about Gerry’s relationship with other people, including Prince.

It was only natural that people went to places where they would benefit most. Not to mention that Jasper had never seen Gerry as one of his own, so there was never any resentment over a possible betrayal.

Instead of feeling happy, Jasper's attitude and kindness terrified Gerry further.

As far as the man was concerned, Jasper's kindness could be a prelude to his downfall.

At that thought, Gerry truly believed that he had made the correct decision to seek Jasper out before the man personally started hunting him. His life would truly be over when Jasper started his attack.

"Mr. Laine, I actually came here today bearing news," Gerry did not dare to withhold information. Hence, he immediately stated his intentions upon sitting down.

"Oh?" Jasper looked at Gerry with a crescent-eyed smile, waiting for the other to continue.

Jasper's reaction further solidified Gerry's belief. 'Indeed, Mr. Laine is going to end me!'

Jasper had the same crescent-eyed smile when he faced Norman and Dudley before the branch dissolved.

Then... Norman was completely defeated while Dudley ended up fleeing. Gerry heard that Seatresures Group had also taken a huge blow and it take at least four to five years for it to recover.

Gerry thought back to himself and his small business. Forget Dudley, even Norman used to be one of his pillar's of support before Jasper appeared. Thus, there was no way Gerry could remain unaffected when he saw Jasper's smile.

"Basically, Mr. Laine, when I had dinner with the crown no, with Prince, it was through the connections of a friend. I had no idea that you had conflicts with him, Mr. Laine, otherwise I'd never..."

"It's alright. That's a small issue. Did you come to tell in e this, Mr. Heron?" Jasper interrupted him, not in the mood to listen to Gerry's apology.

Gerry smiled awkwardly and replied, "Sorry, that was too much nonsense. Basically, I've been in contact with Prince twice, and he seems to want me to use my contacts in Waterhoof City to help him do something.

"He gave me a few missions, one of which was to spread rumors on the market about how unsafe your payment platform was, Mr. Laine."

"And there's also something especially important. Prince seems to have dirt on Vita Layne, the ICBS' Waterhoof City branch's vice president!"

Jasper remained calm and unfazed when he heard the first piece of information.

There was nothing new about spreading rumors since it was just a dirty trick that held no value in official settings.

The rumors could be extremely exaggerated and widespread, but as long as there was nothing wrong with the payment platform itself, then there would be no cause for alarm.

However, Jasper immediately frowned when he heard the second bit of news.

'This won't be easy to deal with!'

Life at The Top – Chapter 1174

Dirt on Vita!

Were Jasper and Vita close?

Not really.

Jasper had only met Vita through John.

At the beginning, Jasper had only wished to acquaint himself with one of ICBS' Waterhoof City branch's internal personnel. This would help him with his purchase of the plot of land for the World Financial Center.

What happened after proved that Vita was a good and capable man.

Because of this, Jasper decided to help the man move up the ranks of the system.

The higher Vita's ranks, the more power he held, and the more conveniences Jasper enjoyed.

Of course, he would not exploit Vita's position to do something illegal. Jasper had no need to pursue such a thing, nor did Vita have the courage for it.

Their partnerships henceforth had been joyful all this while.

Take the online payment incident, for example. Vita played a crucial role in its development as the man had used his contacts to aid Jasper.

After partnering for a long time, Jasper had begun to consider Vita his friend.

Only when their relationship was mutually beneficial and their interests intact could their friendship last.

Most importantly, once the online payment policy was issued and carried out, Jasper's partnership with the bank would only grow more intimate. Vita played an important role in this future.

Now that John had changed jobs to work for the Agricultural Bank, Vita was the only person within ICBS who could deliver crucial information to Jasper.

Be it out of logic or personal relationship, Vita had to be protected.

"What dirt?" Jasper asked solemnly.

Gerry smiled wryly and replied, "This I have no idea of. I only found out about this from eavesdropping on Prince's call with someone else."

"If I have to guess, Prince's people should have contacted Vita about this already. But I don't know what the two talked about specifically."

Jasper frowned sternly.

Jasper would be affected negatively if something happened to Vita right as the online payment industry was about to open to the public.

Prince seemed to have realized this too, which was why he did not attack Jasper directly. Instead, he chose to attack someone as vital as Vita. Absolutely ruthless.

If Vita was removed from the equation, then all Prince had to do was use Clear Seas' contacts and strength to block Jasper from forming a partnership with the ICBS.

Everything Jasper had planned for the online payment industry would be over then.

Jasper immediately thought of this severe repercussion and said sternly, "This is a very important piece of information to me."

Gerry let out a long sigh and quickly replied in a pleased tone, "I'm glad that it helped you, Mr. Laine. I'm glad."

Jasper looked at Gerry intently and asked, "To tell me something so important... Aren't you afraid that Prince will cause you trouble?"

Gerry chuckled wryly and replied, "To be honest, Mr. Laine, I've thought about this deeply before."

“Prince is powerful, but his power isn’t based in Waterhoof City. It’d take him quite a bit of effort if he wanted to get rid of me. In comparison to him, it’s more important that I don’t offend you, Mr. Laine.”

Jasper asked with a crescent-eyed smile, “My power isn’t based in Waterhoof City either, though. My properties are gathered in the Southeast Province.”

Gerry laughed dryly. “After being shown the Gardner family’s tragic end, I would never dare to offend you, Mr. Laine.”

Jasper suddenly understood. Gerry was not terrified of Jasper, he was terrified of the little prince.

The man also seemed to have misunderstood his relationship with the little prince.

However, Jasper was happy to let this misunderstanding continue. After all, Gerry’s information this time turned out to be priceless.

“Alright. Don’t worry, since you gave me such an important piece of information, then there’s no reason for me to cause you any trouble. I’ll keep the secret for you.”

“I also remembered that the Gardner family had a restaurant on Southwest Veil Road. The seafood restaurant you invested in closed down, right? I can give this one to you if you’re interested.”

All of Norman’s property had been auctioned to other people. However, considering who Jasper was, it was not difficult to get what he wanted. After all, everybody made seemingly profitable decisions.

Jasper was uninterested in Norman’s company, but he did use certain methods to procure a few properties, restaurants, and hotels that would appreciate in value in the future.

The aforementioned restaurant was one of them.

Gerry’s eyes lit up when he heard Jasper. Southwest Veil Road was an important piece of Waterloo City’s future development, and even an idiot knew that the land there would appreciate. Not to mention that the restaurant had good business too. It would be a huge source of profit if he got ahold of it.

Seeing this only furthered Gerry’s belief that he had made the right decision in coming here. He quickly smiled and replied, “That would be nice, very nice. Thank you, Mr. Laine.”

Jasper patted Gerry’s shoulder as he replied with a crescent-eyed smile, “I’m always generous when it comes to my friends.”

Gerry got up and said, "Since you're busy, Mr. Laine, then I will get going so as to not disturb you. There's no need to send me off."

Jasper walked Gerry to the door and said, "Then about Prince..."

Gerry was an experienced man in the industry, and he immediately understood what Jasper was implying. Before Jasper could finish speaking, he patted his chest and said, "Don't worry, Mr. Laine. I'll make sure to tell you right away if I obtain more news."

Gerry had originally come to notify Jasper for the sake of repenting. He did not expect Jasper to give him such a huge reward.

Not even Norman or Prince rewarded him so well before, so Gerry would naturally swear his loyalty to Jasper.

Jasper nodded with a crescent-eyed smile and watched Gerry leave.

He knew that while individuals like Gerry were fickle people driven solely by benefits and interest, they were also much more reliable than a majority of ingenuine people who made empty promises.

They were cowards who were easily motivated by benefits. This made them much more useful.

People like them could be immensely useful once you instilled fear or rewarded them.

After Gerry left, Jasper returned to the study in the hotel room. He paced deep in thought for a long while before he picked up his phone to call Vita.

“This is a sudden call, Mr. Laine. Is there anything I can do for you?”

Vita’s tone on the phone was casual and relaxed.

Jasper smiled and replied, “I was thinking of treating you to dinner tonight. Are you free?”

Vita hesitated and said, “It might have another meeting tonight.”

“Is it important?” Jasper asked.

Vita clenched his jaw slightly and replied, “Perhaps I could treat you tomorrow instead?”

“Don’t worry about it,” Jasper beamed and replied understandingly, “Tomorrow’s fine too.”

“Alright then.”

After a few seconds of silence, Jasper ended the call.

His smile instantly disappeared and his expression turned calm.

Jasper had obtained an important piece of information from the call.

‘Something is indeed wrong with Vita!’

Life at The Top – Chapter 1175

Business-wise, Jasper was currently Waterhoof City branch’s top-notch VIP. JW Real Estates’ Waterhoof City branch’s account alone brought them a cash flow of billions a month due to the World Financial Center’s construction funds.

As the vice president, Vita had to win over this important client.

Personally speaking, Jasper and Vita had known each other for almost a year and their friendship had always been great. The fact that Vita could be promoted from a small asset management office manager to the most authoritative vice president in a year was also thanks to Jasper's support.

There was no way Vita could reject Jasper's invitation for a meal.

That was how their relationship always worked. Despite this, today, Vita's hesitation and struggle had Jasper's heart sinking slightly.

He was unsure if Vita had betrayed him yet or not. This was something he had to verify himself.

With that thought, Jasper called Julian over.

They arrived at a normal apartment building in Waterhoof City's Golden Garden, Open Seas Road, Peace District. As a middle-income area that could be seen from any vantage point in Waterhoof City, it was not an extravagant place. This fit Vita's current salary as vice president of an ICBS branch.

The house door opened with a creak as a rather attractive middle-aged woman opened the door. She looked at Jasper who held a gift in his hands confusedly.

“You’re... Jasper... Jasper Laine?”

Daphne was Vita’s wife and she had met Jasper during a gathering with John. Thus, she could recognize this dignified guest her husband spoke of.

Jasper smiled and said, “I was in the area so I thought I’d come and visit, Mrs. Layne. I’m not disturbing you, am I?”

“No, no, not at all. Please come in.” Daphne may have been confused but she did not dare to make Jasper wait.

She had heard from her husband how Jasper was more than an extremely wealthy man. He was also someone important who helped her husband get promoted, so she did not dare to inconvenience him..

Jasper looked at the ordinary decorations in Vita’s house after walking in and said with a smile. “I don’t remember there being so many rewards on the wall the last time I was here. Did Valerie get first place again?”

The last time they met was during a family gathering. Jasper brought Wendy with him, and John and Vita each brought their own families.

The gathering was held in Vita's house.

That was when Jasper met Daphne and Vita's daughter, Valerie. She was a smart girl.

Daphne beamed at Jasper's words and replied, "Yeah. Valerie doesn't disappoint. But she's playing at her friend's house tonight so she's not home. Vita should be off work soon, I'll call him and tell him to come home quickly."

"No need, Mrs. Layne. He should be on the way home already so it wouldn't be wise to urge him while he's driving. He'll be back soon anyway, I'll just wait for him here," Jasper said with a crescent-eyed smile.

Daphne felt that something was off with his behavior, but she did not go against Jasper's wishes. Instead, she quickly poured Jasper a cup of tea and sat by his side carefully, chatting with him.

She kept trying to probe Jasper about why he had come to visit so suddenly. She wondered about why he was here, especially while her husband was not home. However, considering who Jasper was, the man kept the conversation about domestic trivia. His mouth was tightly shut when it came to the specifics of his visit.

...

As of this moment, Vita was not in a meeting nor was he on the way home.

He had actually arrived home long ago and his car was parked in the underground car park. The man smoked furiously in his car.

Beside the car were more than ten discarded cigarette butts. The already horribly ventilated basement was now filled with a mist of smoke, yet Vita and his deeply knit brows seemed unaware of it all.

Just then, a car drove into the car park and stooped beside Vita's.

An average-looking man stepped out of the car and walked behind Vita's car over to the passenger side. Opening the car door, he then got in.

"Heh. Even though you're a vice president of the ICBS, you're quite down to earth to live in such an old district while driving such a cheap car," The man said as he pulled down the visor and played with it casually.

Vita tossed away the cigarette that almost burned to its butt and asked grimly, "What do you people want?"

The man smiled and replied, "Simple. Just push for the termination on your branch's partnership with Jasper."

"Impossible!"

Vita's first reaction was to reject the man.

Disregarding the fact that Jasper was a huge client of his, the man's help before this was enough to deter Vita from doing such a thing.

"Impossible? Nothing's impossible in the world. Just like how a dignified vice president of a bank branch like you, a person of the upper class with quite a bit of power at hand and a beautiful family, can also have another child outside."

"I suppose others wouldn't believe me either if I told them about this. But it's the truth, isn't it?"

Vita's expression paled at the man's casual voice. He replied painfully, "It was a careless mistake I made back then."

"Careless?" The man scoffed, "I don't think you were careless when you had fun lying on top of that female student's stomach, though."

“Mr. Layne, as vice president of your branch, I’m sure you’re very aware that this is an issue of conduct. If no one pays attention to it, then no one cares. But if someone refuses to let it go, then this beautiful family of yours and your position as vice president will come to a premature end.”

“What would your superiors think of you? What about your colleagues? Your wife, your kids? What would they think?”

“Would you still be the greatly envied vice president by then?”

The man’s words were like a curse as they drilled into Vita’s brain. He replied painfully, “Could you change your request? Anything else is fine. But I, Vita Layne, refuse to be a treacherous b*stard!”

The man scoffed and replied, “You’ll never know how powerful my boss is. A small vice president of a bank branch like you doesn’t even have the right to talk to my boss.”

“You think he can’t do other things himself? We just need a bit of effort from your side on this.”

“You don’t even need to suggest a termination. Other people in the branch will. All you need to do is shut your mouth and make the correct choice during the final vote.”

“Oh, right. And we’ll also need all the details of Jasper’s online payment businesses. Their online payment business is conducted with your branch, so it shouldn’t be difficult for a vice president like you to get your hands on it, right?”

Vita’s head shot up as he stared at the man. “Online payment? You’re Prince Chavez’s men!”

Vita was slapped across the face.

“Who are you to call out the crown prince’s name? Do it again and I’ll cut your tongue off!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1176

This slap was both without warning and extremely forceful.

Vita had spent his life climbing up the social ladder and he had never experienced such humiliation.

Caught off guard, this slap almost had him dazed.

Vita glared at the man with extreme levels of anger. Ignoring the burning pain on his cheek, the anger was more driven by the unjust and indignance he felt.

“What are you looking at me like that for? Be grateful that you’re still useful, otherwise beating you to death would be too light a punishment!”

The man looked at Vita and scoffed, “You think you’re some powerful person just because you’re some bullsh*t vice president of a bank? People like you aren’t even qualified to hold the crown prince’s shoes!”

“Think carefully and don’t be stupid. Make the correct decision, or even death might end up being a luxury for you.”

“The crown prince doesn’t have much patience. He’s already being exceptionally lenient with you. You better give us a reply tomorrow. Don’t forget.”

The man then patted Vita’s reddened cheek and laughed arrogantly before he opened the car door and left.

Vita clenched his jaw as he stared at the extremely insolent man’s back. The man got out of his car bossily and left in the car he first arrived in. From start to finish, all of Vita’s anger and indignance could only be vented through his balled fists.

He punched the steering wheel and roared. Both his hands grabbed his hair and he moaned painfully with his head kept down.

More than ten minutes later, Vita left the car park like a zombie and returned home upstairs.

Upon opening his house doors, he heard the sound of happy chatter and looked up in confusion. He quickly saw Jasper sitting on his sofa and looking at himself with a small smile.

Vita was stunned and was rooted in place the moment he saw Jasper.

The last thing he expected was for Jasper to appear at his house.

“Jasper had just arrived too, Vita. He’s been waiting for you to come home here, Why’d you come back so late?”

Vita’s wife Daphne approached to greet him and squatted down to put slippers in front of Vita for him to change into. Then, she took his briefcase with practiced ease whilst simultaneously explaining.

Vita looked at Jasper and was rendered speechless. “Why, am I not welcome, Mr. Layne?”

Jasper asked with a crescent-eyed smile.

Daphne also realized her husband’s abnormal behavior today and glared at him, facing away from Jasper. She lowered her voice and said, “He’s greeting you. Why’re you acting like you’re dumb?”

Vita suddenly snapped back to reality.

“Oh, you’re here, Jasper. Why didn’t you tell me you were coming in advance?” Vita smiled forcibly.

“You said you had a meeting today and I just happened to be in the area. So I thought I’d come by and visit,” Jasper replied with a grin.

Jasper looked at the clock on the wall as he spoke and continued meaningfully, “Doesn’t seem like a long meeting at all.”

Vita felt extremely embarrassed.

The meeting was just an excuse, but he did not expect Jasper to wait for him at home.

His lie exposed, Vita did not know what to say.

Daphne must have realized the unusual atmosphere between the other two and said, “You two sit here first. There aren’t many groceries at home, so I’ll go buy something from downstairs. Do stay for dinner, Mr. Laine. I’ll go make the preparations now.”

Jasper did not reject her and smiled. “Thank you for the trouble, Mrs. Layne.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1177

“Hey, there’s no need to be so polite. You two talk first, I’ll go buy groceries downstairs.”

Daphne said while nudging an abnormal Vita. Then, she took her wallet and keys and went downstairs.

After Daphne left, Jasper’s smile vanished as he looked at Vita calmly.

Vita was not an idiot. With the situation progressing to this point, he knew that he could not hide it from Jasper anymore.

Sighing deeply, Vita turned to the other man. “Will you come to the study?”

Jasper got up and followed Vita there.

After closing the door, Vita patted his pockets for a smoke, only to pull out an empty box of cigarettes. Jasper then pulled out a pack of his own and tossed it to Vita.

Vita smiled wryly when he looked at the exquisitely packed 1916. “What a nice brand of cigarettes.”

Jasper sat on the chair and said calmly, “Look, Vita. I came here today to do one thing only, to hear the truth from you. If you’re facing difficulties or you need help, then tell me. We’ll deal with it and come up with a solution together.”

“But, if you say there’s nothing wrong at all, then I’ll get up and leave.”

“I see you as a friend but if it’s not mutual, then I’ll take it as me being over passionate. I don’t have many friends but you are one of them. Still, the basis of friendship comes down to being genuine and sincere. There’s no reason for me to continue to act dumb when you’re evidently setting me up, correct?”

Vita smiled wryly when Jasper showed his hand. The former replied, “I already made my decision when I saw you sitting in my home.”

“Whether you choose to believe me or not, I’ll come clean, Jasper. I’ll tell you everything as it is since I’m older than you and I see you as my friend too. I’ve never done anything that could cause you harm.”

Jasper narrowed his eyes slightly and looked at Vita. He realized that the other’s cheek was slightly bruised and Jasper replied calmly, “Go ahead then. Tell me everything you want to say.”

Vita clenched his jaw and spoke slowly, as if letting go of all his inhibitions, “Three years ago, I found out that my girlfriend from university died of cancer.”

“I also found out that she had a child, and that it was mine!”

“But I’d already gotten into a shotgun marriage with my wife by then. She’s never told me about this before, and she’s been taking care of the child until she died.

“After her passing, her brother and his wife took custody of the child.”

“I felt like I owe it to her, but I can’t lose my own family in the process.”

“So all I could do was help the kid out financially. I helped her brother’s family set up an account in Waterhoof City and I got them a home to live in. I’ve also been visiting the child over the past three years...”

Jasper nodded after hearing the story and said, “That’s a very dramatic plot.”

Vita smiled wryly. “You don’t believe me?”

“I do.”

Jasper replied without hesitation.

“Considering your character, I believe that you would do such a thing.”

Vita did not care whether Jasper was mocking him or if he meant it in another way. He simply sighed deeply and continued, “I thought that I’d be able to keep doing this peacefully...”

“But someone suddenly found me two days ago and wanted to report me for extramarital affairs. You know how sensitive the nature of my position is, I don’t want to lose my business and my family.”

Vita nodded and replied, “One of his men came to look for me downstairs. They ordered me to help them terminate the branch’s partnership with you, and give them all of your online payments’ important information and account data.”

Jasper narrowed his eyes as they filled with a certain fire.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1178

The truth began to surface as Vita recounted the details of the incident.

The truth would always come out in the end.

Vita thought that he had been stealthy enough, yet Prince's ministrations had easily detected his little secret. It was like a fly over white snow.

Jasper was relieved to hear Vita's words.

He was grateful for Gerry's information before this. Even now Jasper could not be completely certain that Vita would never betray him. This was not a risk Jasper could afford to take.

He could not risk the entire future of online payment and even the whole business of Abbylon's online shopping platform on Vita's conscience.

Even if Vita showed no signs of betraying him up until now.

“I don’t have any other choice, Jasper. I never expected Prince to find out and hold this over my head.”

Vita said, pulling at his hair painfully.

“I’ve never planned to do anything against you or your interests!”

“I already rejected his men when they told me what they wanted me to do just now. But they want me to give a final reply tomorrow.”

“I don’t know what to do. I’m well aware that once I listen to them, I’ll become their puppet completely and they’ll never let me go!”

Jasper got up and patted Vita’s shoulder. “It’s actually not as severe as you think.”

Vita looked up at Jasper with a sliver of hope and asked, “You’re willing to help me?”

“Helping you is helping myself too,” Jasper replied.

After some thought, Jasper said, “Can you still contact your ex-girlfriend’s brother’s family?”

Vita nodded. “I can!”

Vita then pulled out his phone without further prompting and asked, “Should I contact them now?”

However, Jasper put his hand over Vita’s and replied, “Not yet. You can’t take the initiative to contact them. Give me their address and contact details.”

Vita had no other plan in mind, meaning Jasper was his only source of hope. Thus, he immediately gave the younger man the contact details.

After jotting down the number and address, Jasper then asked Julian to come up.

Jasper handed the woman’s contact details and address he had written down to Julian and said sternly, “Bring them to a hotel tonight and check them into a room. Make sure that they are safe for the next two days.”

Julian nodded and replied, “If they’re still at the address after this period, then I’ll bring them back safely.”

Jasper smiled. "I've never doubted your capabilities. But things won't be so easy this time."

"Prince's men will definitely have a close eye on them. So, in addition to bringing the people over, Jul, you'll need to find two similarly aged people to impersonate them and have them act as though they've never left home."

Julian frowned slightly. "It won't be easy looking for doubles."

"It is."

Jasper chuckled and handed Julian Gerry's number. "Tell him what kind of people you need."

Julian understood.

It would be extremely easy for a local power like Gerry to find two qualified actors.

"The only problem is if Prince's men are living with them. Things will be difficult if that's the case," Jasper said.

Vita quickly replied, “They’re not. I went over this afternoon and Prince’s men were only watching them from downstairs in the district. They made sure that I didn’t bring anyone away.”

“That makes things easier then.”

Julian immediately spoke up, “I have a way of bringing the impersonators up whilst simultaneously bringing the targets down.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1179

“Alright then. Go quickly, this is very important,” Jasper told him sternly.

Julian nodded and left immediately.

After Julian left, Vita then looked at Jasper hopefully and said, “So the issue is resolved, then?”

“It won’t be that simple,” Jasper shook his head.

“Your franticness blinds you. Prince definitely has direct evidence of you and that child’s contact, meaning he has information that proves that the two of you are related.”

“All I can do now is guarantee her brother’s family and the child’s safety. You’re still at risk.”

Vita suddenly understood what was going on. “Then what should I do?”

Jasper paced in the study for a moment before he replied, “There’s only one way to handle this situation now, and that’s to drag it on.”

“Prince’s final target is me, after all, not you. So just agree to everything he asks.”

Vita was stunned by Jasper’s words and asked, “But what about you?”

“All I said was agree to his requests. The point of all of this is to buy time, I never said anything about carrying out what he asked.”

“He wants to bring up the termination of my partnership with the branch, but you need time to talk to people and convince them, right?”

“If you’re going to follow his requests and give him my account data, that’s also going to take time, no?”

“If we have time, then I’ll be able to create a new copy of data for you to hand over to him. The moment he brings up termination of my contract with the bank is when I will truly face off against him.”

“By then, all that will matter is who wins between him and me. What happens to you won’t matter anymore.”

“If I win, then all is well. If he wins, then we’re both in trouble.”

Vita nodded bitterly when he heard Jasper and replied, “Indeed.”

Jasper sighed again and patted Vita’s shoulder before saying, “Don’t blame yourself too much, Vita. Many things are beyond our control.”

“It’s my fault... I planted the seed for today’s trouble. I had this coming,” Vita said with a sorry smile.

“Think about your wife. Even if I win against Prince this round, you’re still going to have to resolve the issue with that child. Are you planning to hide it from your family for the rest of your life? Is it fair to them?”

Vita looked down silently upon hearing Jasper’s words. At that moment, the house door opened from outside and Daphne returned from doing the groceries.

“There weren’t many groceries left at the market, so I got a few dishes to cook some food. I had the restaurant prepare a few dishes too which they’ll deliver in no time. Do you two want to come out and eat something first?”

Daphne’s voice drifted over from outside.

Jasper glanced at Vita and said, “Mrs. Layne is a great wife. Don’t hurt her.”

Jasper then responded to Daphne, who was outside the study, and opened the doors to leave.

Vita let out a deep sigh.

He was still frantic and at loss, but his chest felt significantly lighter now that he had told Jasper everything.

“Thank you, Jasper.”

At the dinner table, Vita raised a glass of white wine as he thanked Jasper, then he tilted his head back and downed the glass.

“Hey, why are you drinking it like that?”

Daphne quickly shouted, not knowing what had happened.

Jasper smiled. “Let him drink, Mrs. Layne. He and I are happy tonight.”

Jasper also grabbed his wine glass and toasted Vita, “Cheers. We’ll drink until we drop.”

“Yes! Drink until we drop!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1180

It was already midnight when he left Vita’s home. Jasper did not ask Julian to fetch him, opting to hail a taxi back instead.

He knew that no matter how heartless and crazy Prince was, he knew better than to pay gangsters to cause bodily harm.

This was an unspoken rule in formal business fights.

People could fight for their own interests and benefits. However, everyone was also part of the upper-class society. It would be against this unspoken rule to physically harm someone under the table.

Jasper had people supporting him too, so Prince had to first think of the Law family's stance on the matter before he could do anything. Not to mention that even without the Law family, Jasper was no longer the nobody he used to be.

Many people depended on him to make a living, and his properties were responsible for a lot of economic development. Besides this, a majority of his subsidiaries were also leading enterprises in their respective industries.

If anything happened to Jasper, many companies and industries would erupt into chaos.

These factors ensured Jasper's personal safety and made sure nothing would happen to him under normal circumstances.

Jasper smiled once he returned to the hotel, as he saw Julian waiting for him at the door.

There was no way this man would relax unless he saw Jasper return safely in one piece.

Julian smiled as well when he saw Jasper.

“Did you fetch them back too?” Jasper asked.

Julian nodded and replied, “Everything went well. They’re currently staying in a room next to mine. Nothing will happen to them.”

“Good. ”

Jasper nodded. “This façade won’t last for long and Prince isn’t an idiot that would easily fall for this lie. But we won’t have to keep lying to him either. The results of our little ploy will be out in another two days, and the victor will be determined by then.”

The following day, the release of a few announcements silently triggered many hidden movements.

Abbylon Inc's new c2c shopping platform, Treasurehunter, was officially launched.

There was nothing new about this piece of news though, as huge Internet companies in the country like Sena and Terizone had already advertised this a few days ago.

It was worth noting that with Jasper's all-around support, Treasurehunter had attracted much attention right after it launched.

This completely new method of purchasing and selling of goods had attracted the attention of many people.

Coupled with the support of Terizone and Sena, the platform's business volume skyrocketed moments after its announcement

This completely new shopping method made it extremely convenient for both buyers and sellers. The trading volume had exceeded 100 thousand Somer Dollars on the day of its launch.

In comparison to the future trading volume that would amount to hundreds of billions, this 100 thousand was very insignificant. Still, it was a perfect first step.

Meanwhile, another announcement was made by JW Capital about the establishment of a new subsidiary.

JW Payment Co., Ltd.

This company only had one business, and that was the JW Online Payment System.

As things stood, JW Payment's platform only supported payment of bank cards from ICBS. The platform was launched at the same time as Treasurehunter, and it supported all payment businesses within the three companies Treasurehunter, Sena, and Terizone.

These three companies also simultaneously announced that JW Payment would be the only online payment channel they officially recognized.

Ordinary citizens would focus more on Treasurehunter, while people within the industry knew that JW Platform was Jasper's true primary attack.

...

Life at The Top – Chapter 1181

“Motherf*cker!”

The sound of things breaking were heard from inside the study. The interval between each smash was filled with Prince’s indignant shouts.

“Who the f*ck does Jasper think he is? The bullsh*t JW Payment has only been launched for a day and it’s completely stolen Soha Payments’ glory!”

Prince stood in a messy study with reddened eyes. His aura spoke volumes of how pissed and murderous he felt.

Also in the study were Soha’s vice president and Gerry. They both shuddered and dared not breathe too loud in fear of attracting Prince’s attention and have his anger redirected at them.

Still, Prince vented his anger at the two.

Prince slapped Gerry across the face harshly.

“Didn’t I tell you to spread negative rumors about JW Payment? How did that go? Is this how you do things?!”

Gerry forced himself to ignore the pain on his cheek and the resentment in his heart. With a terrified expression, he replied, “You really can’t blame me for this, Crown Prince. You need time for rumors to spread and take effect, but Jasper moved too fast and acted before the rumors could do their part.”

Prince glared at Gerry and said icily, “Get lost! I am the crown prince and I don’t need useless trash like you!”

Gerry’s complexion was ashen but he did not dare to refute the man. Cupping his cheek, he turned and left.

However, no one saw the elation and glee in his eyes the moment he turned around.

He had decided to take Jasper’s side to begin with. Thus, seeing Prince being screwed over brought him glee!

Soha's vice president shivered. Unlike Gerry, who would still have his own businesses to attend to after being told to get lost, the Vice president's career would instantly be over.

"Crown Prince, Jasper's actions were just too quick and decisive. Our plan was hasty, so it's only normal that we were caught off guard. Please give me some time, Crown Prince, I promise business-wise we won't lose to Jasper."

Prince narrowed his eyes. No one knew what he was thinking.

This silence of more than ten seconds was extremely torturous to Soha's vice president.

Thank goodness Prince seemed to have vented all of his anger, as he did not make things difficult for the vice president anymore.

"I suppose your words make sense to some extent. I'll give you one last chance."

Soha's vice president sighed deeply when he heard the man. Relief flooded through him.

"We can't wait any longer. Immediately start the plan! Before Jasper completely crushes everything we've prepared!" Prince suddenly said.

Soha's vice president was stunned. As someone who's been by Prince's side all this while, he naturally understood what plan Prince was referring to.

"But Crown Prince, Vita still hasn't replied yet..."

Prince sneered and waved to interrupt Soha's vice president. "He's a smart man. He'll know what decision to make."

"Al.. Alright then," Soha's vice president sighed and replied.

"Immediately contact our people in ICBS. Have them bring it up during the agenda for tomorrow's conference and invite Jasper. I'll be there too!"

"Tomorrow. Tomorrow I'll make Jasper regret and lose everything!" Prince growled wretchedly.

Time ticked by and the following day arrived with the sun shining brightly above.

Jasper walked out of the hotel room only to see Henry walk out of the elevator casually.

Henry grinned mirthfully when he saw Jasper. “It’s been a few days since we saw each other. Did you miss me?”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1182

Jasper was indeed surprised to see Henry.

“Didn’t you say it’d be a few more days before you got back? Why so soon?”

Jasper asked, ushering Henry into his room.

Henry’s expression immediately darkened and he said irritably, “All these women are crazy. I haven’t even started complaining about how dry and boring it is going all the way to Swallow Capital just to watch her train before she started complaining about me first.

“She just got angry at me for no reason yesterday and she’s not even willing to talk to me. I went to ask last night but she said she’s focusing on training and refusing to see anyone. Fine. I’m not going to stay there and let her take it out on me, I’ll think about it again in a few days.”

Jasper replied playfully, “You haven’t even gotten together yet and you’re already fighting. What happens when you do get together then?”

As if finding his soulmate, Henry nodded vigorously. "I know right? You think so too, huh. F*cking Hell, you just can't be too good to women. I can have any woman in the world I want, it's a blessing for her that I chose her out of all of them. And yet, here she is with this temper. As if I'd stay and let her take it out on me!"

Jasper was unsurprised by Henry's thoughts.

Henry was a son from one of the richest families, the man was born with a silver spoon in his mouth. He had always been surrounded by women who tried to gain his attention, so the man had never had the need to coax someone else.

Jasper patted Henry on the shoulder and said solemnly, "Jill's different from those girls. Those girls are just bedwarmers and outlets for your sexual frustrations. Let's be honest, have you dated anyone seriously?"

Women need to be coaxed.

"Take it slow."

Henry was evidently annoyed and he did not want to bring up this topic again.

"Do you have anything fun? I'm very pissed and I need a stupid f*cker to bully."

Jasper was about to say something when his phone rang.

Seeing that it was from Vita, Jasper accepted the call.

After a moment, Jasper hung up the phone and smiled at Henry. "You're just in time. The stupid f*cker you're looking for just sent himself over on a silver platter."

...

At a small meeting room in ICBS' Waterhoof City branch.

Every senior executive was present; They sat up straight and solemnly.

Excluding employees of ICBS, Prince and Soha's vice president were also present.

The atmosphere in the quaint meeting room was dense and heavy.

No one said a word.

Prince looked up to glance at Vita not too far away. The former sneered; the sinister look in his eyes was blatant. Vita quickly averted his gaze when it met Prince's. He seemed rather guilty.

Prince turned his body slightly to ask Soha's vice president, "How's the monitoring operation of that woman and the child? Is everything normal?"

Soha's vice president quickly whispered a reply, "Nothing special's happened. They've been obediently staying at home and didn't go anywhere."

Prince nodded in reassurance and his smile brightened further.

At that moment, the meeting room doors were pushed open.

Jasper strolled into the room with Henry in tow.

Jasper had just walked inside when Prince immediately mocked him impatiently, "You really dared to come, huh? And here I thought you'd hide away like a coward."

Jasper replied calmly, "Why do I have to hide?"

As he asked this, Jasper and Henry also took their seats. Henry sat on the chair and looked at Prince.

He did not recognize the man, but years of experience stepping over morons told Henry that Prince was the prime target to vent the frustrations he had accumulated from Jill.

Henry was blatantly looking Prince up and down. Rather than looking at another person, it was as if Henry was looking at a prop-a sandbag to vent on.

Prince was extremely displeased with his behavior.

He narrowed his eyes on Henry and sneered. "This is the ICBS' meeting room, Jasper. We're holding a very important meeting here. You can't just bring intellectually stunted people into the room."

Henry's smile instantly turned cold and he stared at Prince icily before he replied, "This alone is enough to make me beat the sh*t out of you, you f*cking idiot."

Prince might be just as arrogant, or even more so, than anyone he had met before.

Therefore, Henry's statement had his expression immediately darkening.

“Haha. Wow. Very well, then.”

Prince raised his voice. “It’s been ages since anyone dared to speak to the crown prince like you did.”

“This crown prince?”

Henry was stunned. Then, he pointed at Prince and turned to ask Jasper, “Is there something wrong with his head? Who even calls themselves this crown prince in this time and age? He’s not right in the head, is he?”

Prince stood up to point at Henry as flames of fury filled his chest. “I dare you to f*cking repeat yourself.”

“I said something’s wrong with your brain, Your Highness.” Henry laughed out loud gleefully and casually crossed his legs.

He was not done mocking Prince. Hooking his finger at the man, he continued, “Why? Are you angry? Come on and hit me, then. Crown prince your foot, f*cking idiot. You give me goosebumps of disgust.”

“Everyone here should be careful. Who knows if idiocy can be transmitted? This man might even be crazy for all we know.”

“Motherf*cker!”

“I’m going to kill you! I’ll kill you!”

Prince was utterly enraged.

The truth remained that in order to deal with an arrogant trust-fund child like Prince, the best solution was always to look for an even more arrogant and powerful trust-fund child.

Henry was the best way of dealing with all this indignance.

Seeing how the situation was about to get out of hand, the branch president mustered up the bravery to say, “Please calm down, gentlemen. We came here today for a meeting, so perhaps we should start on that. If possible, please do resolve your personal conflicts afterward and in private.”

The president was exasperated too. He could not afford to offend either Jasper or Prince.

If possible, he truly wanted to just turn away and leave. He did not want to be involved in this at all.

The president's words were not completely useless.

Prince glared at Henry icily, causing the latter to snort.

Prince suppressed the fury that threatened to surface again and slammed the table to say, "Fine, let's start the meeting! There's no need for any nonsense, just straight-up start voting. I request for termination of all partnerships with Jasper! That is the purpose of today's meeting!"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1183

The president of the branch frowned slightly when he heard Prince.

They were in ICBS and he was the president here. He was the host of this meeting.

No matter how powerful Prince was and how influential his family was, he should still show common respect for the president of this branch instead of making the situation awkward for him.

Despite being furious, the president thought about Prince's character and ended up Sighing instead.

"Mr. Laine, I'm sure Vice President Vita already told you that today's meeting was suggested by the other two vice presidents. They've requested that we temporarily end our cooperation with you before the online payment policy is issued by the higher-ups."

"I am well aware."

Jasper looked meaningfully at the two other vice presidents who dared not meet his gaze and said calmly.

As a first-grade branch, the ICBS Waterhoof City branch operated with one president and three vice-presidents.

Unsurprisingly, Prince had long won over the two other vice presidents. Otherwise, they would never dare to make a suggestion that would offend Jasper.

The president of the branch knew about the shady business underneath, and he also knew that this was Prince's way of attacking Jasper. He sighed and continued, "Our job isn't easy either, Mr. Laine, and I hope you can understand where we're coming from."

“Of course. You have protocols to follow, after all. It’s only normal that you decide to hold a meeting when two vice presidents have suggested the same thing at the same time,” Jasper said with a crescent-eyed smile.

Before this he had to deal with Prince’s arrogance and domineering attitude, now he was faced with Jasper’s understanding and generosity.

Comparing the two, the president’s favor toward Jasper increased exponentially.

‘See, this is how successful people should act. It makes sense that he’s achieved so much despite being so young. Unlike some trust-fund children who only know how to be arrogant.’

Despite what he sincerely thought, the president did not dare show any of it on his expression.

“Haha. I don’t know whether to call you brave or stupid, Jasper. You know that you’re going to lose, but you’ve still come here to let yourself be humiliated.”

Prince glared at Jasper and laughed out loud.

“I’d hide at home and never come out if I were you. At least use your brain and think. The fact that I can sit here today means I’m one hundred percent certain that I’d get your partnership terminated. When that happens, your bullsh*t JW Payment will be nothing more than a huge joke!”

“JW Payment that had only been officially launched for a day immediately loses its partnership with ICBS the next. How are you going to keep your head held up after this, Jasper? Hahahaha!”

“You’re so certain that you’ll win?” Jasper asked.

Prince glanced at Vita’s expressionless face meaningfully and laughed out loud. “You’re still too young, Jasper. So what if you were lucky and you made a bit of money? The most complex thing in society is still the human psyche. Who do you think you are to play mind games?”

“Don’t understand what I mean? That’s alright, I’m sure you’ll understand soon enough. I can’t wait to see the interesting look on your face then.”

“You’ll find out very soon that I’ve already got you right in the palm of my hand without your knowledge. You think you can escape my control? You must be naive to think so!”

Prince then turned to the president and said indifferently, “What are you waiting for? Get to it already!”

This chiding tone instantly caused the president's anger to spike to its limits. He pushed his distaste down and said solemnly, "If that's the case, then let's not waste any time. Let's get to voting then."

"Please raise your hand if you agree to terminate the partnership with JW Payment."

After the president spoke, the two vice presidents bribed by Prince raised their hands.

However, despite having their hands in the air, the two did not dare to look at Jasper at all. Instead, their eyes were trained on the table in front of them as if it was some sort of treasure.

According to the branch's rules, more than half the votes were necessary if the bank wanted to terminate a contract that was operating normally and did not cause any losses.

Each vice president was one vote, while the president held two.

According to Prince's plan, he just needed to bribe the three vice presidents, and the president's stance could be disregarded.

After all, the president was much more difficult to bribe than his vice presidents.

Most importantly, Prince also knew that the Waterhoof City branch was unlike the other branches. The president of the Waterhoof City branch was also of a higher status than the presidents of other provincial branches. It would not be easy to bribe such a person.

Thus, he never planned to corrupt the president in the first place.

However, this was also why his eyes were blown wide when he only saw two raised hands.

Prince glared at Vita an extreme unease grew in his chest.

“Vice President Vita, it’s time for you to raise your hand!”

Prince clenched his jaw and spat out.

Each word he spoke was laced heavily with venom. Sitting silently all this while, Vita’s eyelid twitched, and he finally thought it through.

He had planned to side with Jasper, meaning he had already offended Prince no matter what the outcome of this meeting was. There was nothing to fear now.

After understanding this, Vita replied icily, “Why do I have to raise my hand when I don’t agree to the termination?”

Prince slammed his hand on the table and shot to his feet. He glared at Vita and roared, “Do you really want to die, Vita Layne?!”

“Prince Chavez!”

Vita’s head shot up to look at the man icily.

His anger that had accumulated over the past few days instantly exploded and he shouted as if letting go of all his inhibitions, “This is the ICBS meeting room! It’s already against the rules to let you attend this meeting. Are you actually trying to interfere with ICBS’ internal voting decision too?!”

Prince did not expect Vita to go against him. Both angry and frustrated, he was just about to start scolding people when he heard Henry say ambiguously, “Exactly. You really think you’re the crown prince? “F*cking idiot.”

“Vita Layne, was it? Good job. I like the words you just said. Scold him, yes. If this f*cking dumb*ss dares to stamp his foot and throw a tantrum here then I’ll break his f*cking foot.”

Prince did not even pay Henry's words any attention now. He glared at Vita and grit his teeth, "Have you no fear that I'll completely destroy you for life with what I have on hand, Vita?"

Vita was expressionless as he replied coldly, "I have no idea what you're talking about."

At that moment, Prince would truly be a moron if he still had not realized that Jasper had played him like a fool.

He turned his head abruptly and stared at Jasper. Prince shouted, "You're the one who ruined my plans, Jasper! You knew all along, didn't you?"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1184

"What exactly am I supposed to know?"

Jasper looked at Prince and said calmly.

Panting heavily, Prince was barely holding back the fright and fury within him.

He had that victory in his grasp, yet Jasper had managed to break out of his trap, leaving no trace behind.

It was ridiculous how Prince thought victory was his just a second ago.

The stark contrast between his perceived victory just moments ago versus the situation now infuriated Prince to no end.

“Stop f*cking acting!”

Prince did not care too much now, and he exploded.

“I don’t know how you managed to get that dog Vita to risk his life and stand on your side, but since he wants to die, then I’ll fulfill his wish!”

With that, Prince stared at Vita and sneered. “Vita Layne, you’ll never f*cking see those two for the rest of your life again! And just you wait, I’ll spread the news of what you did such that everyone will know of it!”

“You had this coming for yourself. Don’t blame me, blame yourself and Jasper.”

“I already brought them away last night.”

Jasper interrupted Prince casually. Tilting his head slightly, he looked at the man, who was clearly stunned by the news, with a crescent-eyed smile. “You could go check if you don’t believe me.”

Prince was shocked.

After what had just happened, Prince no longer felt confident in his own plan.

He quickly turned to stare at Soha’s vice president. Cold sweat began to bead all over the latter and he did not dare to waste time. Hence, he immediately called his subordinates.

A quick moment later, Soha’s vice president sat limply on the chair and looked at Prince sorrowfully.

After seeing Soha’s vice president’s reaction, Prince did not even need to ask to know that Jasper had indeed brought the people away.

At that moment, Prince truly felt lightheaded.

He stared at Jasper and clenched his teeth. Utterly furious, he smiled and said, “Wow, wow, wow. How capable of you, Jasper!”

“I’ll just ask you one thing. How did you find out?!”

Prince kept recalling the past few days but could find no loopholes throughout the entire execution of his entire plan.

Most importantly, every aspect of the plan was extremely covert so Jasper should not have had time to react at all.

Yet, the truth remained that Jasper had managed to learn of his plan, and even found an opportunity to turn the tables despite the tight timing!

His prideful *ss was the actually pitiful one who had been kept in the dark.

Prince flushed date-red when he thought of this. He was moments away from spitting out a mouthful of blood.

“You’re the one who said it just now, Your Highness. The most complex thing in society is still the human psyche,” Jasper said softly.

This 'Your Highness' cut through the room and slapped Prince across his face.

Prince felt exceptionally humiliated.

The comment about how the human psyche was the most complex thing made him feel extremely furious. He thought back to how prideful he had been when he said those words before. Comparing it with the current situation, Prince felt like he had been stripped naked and made a fool in front of everyone.

Fury.

Mortification.

Aggrievance.

Prince's whole body trembled as his complex emotions ran amok.

He trembled and roared, "I hope you f*cking die, Jasper!"

At that moment, a 'pfft' sounded beside Jasper.

Henry was extremely gleeful and excited.

"You're really one of the stupidest f*ckers I've ever seen. You were still referring to yourself as crown prince a moment ago and here you are moving about like a f*cking dumb monkey. It's so ridiculous. Hahaha."

Already extremely infuriated, Prince felt like his head was about to explode when he heard Henry mock him. He pointed at Henry and screeched, "Who the f*ck are you? Laugh again and I'll kill your whole family!"

At this moment, before Prince himself had even consciously admitted it to himself, he already knew that he could not refer to himself as crown prince anymore.

Perhaps it was due to the change in the situation, or perhaps Henry's words made him feel truly embarrassed. Only he would know the true reason behind it.

Henry snickered and while the smile on his face did not change, his gaze turned downright sinister.

When it came to being a trust-fund child, Young Master Law was just as strong, if not stronger, than anyone else.

“I’ve always been the one to threaten to kill someone’s entire family. Which insignificant hole did a dumb f*cker like you crawl out from? How dare you act high and mighty in front of me?!”

Henry did not even bend to Jill, the woman he loved most, so there was no way he would give in to Prince.

Henry grabbed the cup he had been drinking from as he talked and threw it fiercely at Prince from across the conference table, coaster and all.

Considering Prince’s identity, he had always been the one to attack others in anger while the other party would never dare to fight back Nobody had ever thrown anything at him before.

Not even in his wildest dreams.

This white ceramic cup crashed right against his head.

There was a bang, followed by the sound of the ceramic cup shattering.

Burning hot tea splashed over his face and there was a small wound on his forehead. It burned and Prince shouted in horror while cupping a hand over his forehead.

The sight shocked everyone.

No matter how annoyed they were at Prince's arrogance, they had never entertained the idea of attacking him.

Doing so would put them in grave danger. Coincidentally, Henry was not afraid of trouble.

While Prince screamed and everyone remained stunned in their seats, Henry got up and strolled around the conference desk to stand in front of Prince. Henry then raised his hand to grab the other by his collar.

Prince looked embarrassing and pitiful with tea and tea leaves all over him while blood trickled down his face.

Henry lifted him from his chair like he was a small helpless chick

Henry smiled wretchedly as he stared at Prince's pained expression. "Crown Prince, was it? Go ahead, then. How about you crown yourself again?"

Henry raised his hand to slap Prince across the face twice as he spoke.

Prince had yet to snap back to reality from the pain of his cup-cut forehead. After taking these two slaps head-on, Prince was dazed.

“Motherf*cking hell. Kill my whole family? At least try to take a look at your stupid f*cking behavior.”

Henry scolded before pushing Prince back onto his chair.

Henry looked down at Prince from above and said arrogantly, “Who the f*ck are you to compete with me in terms of arrogance, huh?”

Prince had lived a life of arrogance for over twenty years. Even so, this was the first time he had been completely overshadowed by someone else in this aspect.

There was only hatred and fear in Prince’s eyes as he stared at Henry.

Under extreme anger and terror, Prince’s voice changed.

“Who the f*ck are you? Tell me! I’ll kill you! I will!”

Henry raised his hand and slapped Prince heavily again. Then he sneered and replied, “Who am I? Go to Harbor City and ask around for who the most powerful young master is. That’s who I am! Don’t forget it, dumbf*ck!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1185

All of this had actually happened really quickly.

Only one minute had passed since Henry threw the cup at him to Prince getting slapped multiple times.

Everyone in the meeting room was stunned.

Especially the president.

He greatly disliked Prince and wanted nothing more than to throw the man out of the room.

Yet, considering Prince's status, the president knew that he would be in great trouble if anything happened to Prince today because of Henry. On the other hand, he had no idea would happen to Henry.

He did not recognize Henry, nor did he know what family Henry came from. All he knew was that Jasper was the only person who could hold Henry back.

"Mr. Laine, I don't think it would be good for anyone if this situation gets out of hand."

Jasper looked at the president's terrified expression and replied calmly, "Prince pissed my friend off so it's only normal he pays the price. Why, Mr. President, do you think we're going too far?"

The president smiled dryly and replied, "It's just that I don't think anyone here would like to see something actually bad happen over such a conflict, right?"

At that moment, Henry scoffed and told the president unkindly, "What're you scared of? I'm the one who beat him up, this has nothing to do with you. It's not like I need you to take responsibility for this."

Jasper saw the president's expression turn awkward and said calmly, "Mr. President, what of this meeting's notion, then?"

The president seemed to wake up from his stupor and immediately replied, "It's denied, of course. Our partnership with you will continue, as usual, Mr. Laine."

Jasper nodded and said, "Mr. President, our partnership has always been a fulfilling one on both sides, and there's never been an issue throughout its lifetime. Since everyone's interests are met and have benefitted by the partnership, I would prefer if similar situations did not happen again. After all, you're a busy man and I don't have the time to wait for you to hold a meeting over this every other day."

"Should you consider terminating our partnership over some small and insignificant matter again, then I see no point in further partnership with you either. Do you see where I'm coming from?"

The president smiled wryly and nodded. "I'll make sure to take note of that, Mr. Laine. I promise that similar situations will not arise again."

Any intelligent person could tell that Jasper was extremely displeased by today's 'meeting agenda'. That was why he criticized the president, or rather, criticized the entire ICBS branch.

To this end, the president who was in the wrong could not say anything but endure it and admit his faults.

After all, from a business partner's point of view, this meeting they held was indeed too unstandardized. Even if it was due to oppression from Prince's methods.

“A smart choice.”

“We’re leaving, Henry.”

Jasper called out to Henry.

Henry made a sound of acknowledgment and scoffed as he stared at Prince.
“Remember to come and look for me, moron.”

With that, Henry followed Jasper out of the room casually.

Prince remained quiet the entire time, but no one knew if it was out of anger or fear.

It was only after Jasper and Henry had completely left the meeting room that he let out an extremely furious and heartbreaking shout.

Henry’s mood was much lighter once he walked out of ICBS.

“I’d almost gone crazy from how I kept in all this frustration over the past few days. It feels so good to vent all my displeasure this time!” Henry laughed out loud.

Jasper opened the car door and got inside. Then, he pinched the bridge of his nose and said, “Prince won’t let this go so easily. Be more careful over the next few days and stay by my side.”

Henry replied uncaringly, “As if he’d dare to cause me trouble.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1186

“It’s always better to be more careful. Prince is a little different from the other people we met. He could very well do something rash,” Jasper said seriously.

Henry waved him off in a half-hearted acknowledgment. He did not take the man seriously.

Jasper could only leave the situation alone when he saw the man’s reaction. All he could do was ask Julian to keep a closer eye on Henry when they returned.

...

This well-prepared ICBS conference that Prince had been confident about had ended in Jasper’s overwhelming victory.

This was something no one had expected.

His victory in this meeting meant that JW Payment would not have to face any follow-up trouble for a short period of time.

Therefore, what Jasper, JW Capital, and its subsidiaries needed to do was try their best to occupy the entire market.

Before the document for the online payment policy had been issued and the market fully opened to the public, Jasper had to take the advantage of his majority control over the market.

He had to do so whilst simultaneously getting rid of Soha Payments.

This was easier said than done.

After all, both Netsy, Senator, and Perfect World were capable companies. Especially Netsy, which was one of the country's top four web portals. They had chosen to partner with Soha Payments, meaning they would not be gotten rid of so quickly.

Jasper was not in a rush when it came to this either.

Food had to be eaten mouthful by mouthful, and the market could only be obtained step by step.

The official launch of Treasurehunter, coupled with the continued hype over United Legends, meant that people would soon become familiar with JW Payment. It would be almost impossible for other companies to steal customers away from JW Payment.

Jasper spent the following two days in close contact with Wayne to check on Treasurehunter's situation whilst waiting for Prince to strike back.

However, the strange thing was that up until the third day when Swallow City released the access policy regarding online payment and everything was beginning to take place, Prince still had not made his move.

It was as if the man had disappeared.

Jasper felt slightly lost.

Jasper had not expected Henry to be the reason behind Prince's lack of revenge.

In a secluded private tea house in Waterhoof City. Prince sat in the grandest private room and touched the earring on his ear. His expression was extremely sinister.

Sitting opposite him with a small smile was no other than the man who had remained hidden for a long while Conrad Monty!

“Crown Prince, anger and fury are useless in many situations.”

Conrad got up and bent over to pour Prince a cup of tea as she said this.

Prince glanced at the steaming amber-colored tea before he looked at Conrad darkly. Then, he sneered, “Don’t think that just because you’re Fabian’s dog it means you have the right to teach me anything. You’re nothing without Fabian.”

Conrad was not angry by what he heard. Instead, he replied with a crescent-eyed smile, “You’re right. I’m nothing without Mr. Atticus. Being Conrad Monty alone doesn’t make me important enough for the prince to know my name, let alone teach him a lesson.”

Prince touched his earring and replied, “So you’re not stupid.”

Conrad gave a small smile. There were no signs of displeasure or fury on his face as he leaned in to ask, “Then, Your Highness. What is your decision on Mr. Atticus’ suggestion to work together?”

“Work together? Sure! As long as Fabian gets rid of that f*cker Henry, Jasper is nothing at all!” Prince clamored arrogantly.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1187

After getting badly humiliated by Henry in ICBS' meeting room, the first thing Prince did when he returned was to search up the man's identity and familial background.

Prince felt even more despondent once he found what he was looking for.

Henry's identity and status were no weaker than his. Prince did temporarily entertain the thought of getting rid of Henry through darker and illegal means.

Prince might be impulsive and arrogant, but he was not stupid. After weighing the consequences, the man finally decided to give up on that option.

Prince's plan would end up affecting too many powerful people. To the point where Prince was unwilling to bear the responsibilities of angering them.

At this moment, Conrad sought him out.

Prince did not know who Conrad was in the beginning. It had taken a call from Fabian for this meeting between Prince and Conrad to occur.

Conrad gave a small smile when he heard Prince and replied, "How difficult can it be to get rid of Henry?"

Prince arched a brow and asked, "You have a plan?"

Conrad smiled and replied, "You must know, Crown Prince, that Henry is much easier to deal with than Jasper. If you were to compare Jasper to a crafty jackal, then Henry is just a stray dog at most. When it comes to stray dogs, all you need to do is slightly irk it and it'll fall into the trap you set."

Prince narrowed his eyes and said nothing.

Conrad raised his cup to take a sip before he continued by himself, "Mr. Atticus has already contacted a large number of Jasper's enemies. The setup is almost complete, and Jasper will die when we eventually harvest."

Prince scoffed and said, "They say that Fabian's the one with the best schemes among Harbor City's youths. But now that I look at it, he's not anything extraordinary, after all. Is it necessary for all of you to prepare so much just to get rid of Jasper?"

“Necessary or not, I’m sure you’ve learned your lesson. Right, Your Highness?”

Prince’s expression darkened at Conrad’s words.

“Since you’ve already come up with a complete plan, then what are you seeking me out for?” Prince changed the topic and asked tensely.

“An enemy of my enemy is my friend, Crown Prince. Since we’re all friends, I’m sure we can share many other partnerships while we get rid of the same enemy, no?” Conrad said mysteriously.

“Say, for example, Mr. Atticus’ Empire Meet. If you’re willing to join, then you’d surely become one of the top five high-level members. This is quite the pool of contacts.”

“Empire Meet?” Prince snorted, “There’s also an Empire Meet in Swallow Capital. What’s the difference between Fabian’s organization and the one in Swallow Capital?”

“There’s a huge difference. Swallow Capital’s Empire Meet’s no longer as sophisticated as it used to be. Anyone with a few million in assets can join it. A clubhouse like that isn’t worthy of your status, Crown Prince,” Conrad said.

Prince waved him off and replied, "I'm from the Mainlands. How do you expect me to keep my head held high once word gets out that I've joined Fabian's Empire Meet in Harbor City? The Harbor faction and the Mainland faction have deep conflicts over many things."

Prince was not an idiot. As the owner of Clear Seas, Prince's father was an important figure in the Mainland faction. Prince's identity was too sensitive for him to join Fabian's Empire Meet. That was why he never agreed to this in the first place.

Prince harrumphed coldly when he saw that Conrad wanted to continue talking. He said darkly, "Don't give me this useless bullsh*t. I just want Henry and Jasper to die."

"We still need some time before dealing with Jasper, but to get rid of Henry... easy peasy!"

Conrad smartly moved on from the topic of Empire Meet when he saw how uninterested Prince was in it. Instead, he engaged Prince's new topic.

Prince's eyes lit up once he heard Conrad and he slapped the table as he said, "Alright then. What do you have in mind? I'll agree to work together if you succeed!"

At this moment, Jasper had no idea that Conrad had already arrived in Waterhoof City and was conspiring with Prince to attack him and Henry.

Currently, the man had Julian follow Henry out.

Henry had friends in Waterhoof City too. Frustrated, the man had been going to various places in search of fun. All with his questionable friends in tow, of course. To ensure Henry's safety, Jasper had Julian follow the other just in case.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1188

Despite how displeased Henry was with the arrangement, he ended up giving in to Jasper.

Excluding the two men in the Law family and Anna, the only person in the entire world Henry would bend to was Jasper.

Jasper left as well after he sent Henry away.

Jasper had been extremely busy the past few days so now that he was slightly free, he decided to go somewhere.

With JW Capital's business model growing larger, Jasper was also badly lacking talents.

The only difference from before was that JW now had a comprehensive enough human resources reserves, so Jasper did not need to seek people out anymore. However, Jasper still decided to look for this man himself.

This man's identity was too unique.

It was Baz Willis, Jasper's superior in his past life. Sharing the same first and last name as a historical general, this Baz Willis was an absolute master in the financial circle.

Baz, this ex-superior of Jasper's, was someone with quite the legendary history.

The man had been living on the streets from the time he was twelve, and he had endured many hardships before he returned to Somerland at the age of twenty. After working in the kitchens and manning street stalls, the man finally entered the financial industry.

Quoting what the man told Jasper in his past life, all thirty-five years' worth of talent had fully taken flight when he finally encountered the financial industry.

It had only taken the man a few years since he began his entrepreneurship journey for him to achieve a net worth of hundreds of millions.

Jasper knew in his past life that his superior could have achieved much more if not for the huge change in his family.

Jasper had been the man's subordinate for more than a decade in his past life, so he knew very well that JW Capital needed a hands on talent like Baz.

Naturally, Mr. Laine would like to clarify that he was not purposefully employing his ex-superior to work for himself out of some distasteful fun.

Though, he had to admit, it was an interesting concept.

According to Jasper's memory of idle chats with Baz in his past life, the man should be working in a relative's shop in Legends District.

26th Golden State Street.

Alighting the taxi, Jasper looked up to see a video product store. Jasper's expression changed instantly.

He did not remember Baz saying anything about a relative that sold CDs.

Eighties children were no strangers to CD and cassette tape rental shops. In fact, this used to be an extremely lucrative business more than a decade ago.

However, with the passage of time, it was only a matter of time before these shops would be eliminated.

However, since he was here anyway, he felt that he might as well go in to look around.

Jasper pushed through the door and looked up, only to see three to five men getting physical and being noisy in the shop.

Surrounded by them whilst being scolded and pushed around was Jasper's superior in his past life, Baz. Albeit more than a decade younger.

Jasper felt moved by the huge change in the man's features.

"Tell your uncle he'll regret owing our Easy Media's money, little brat You better pay up tomorrow, or hehe, I'll wreck your shop!"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1189

Jasper arched a brow when he heard the chubby man speak.

'Easy Media?'

'Isn't that my company?'

As the largest entertainment company in the mainlands, Jasper had no idea that his company's business scope had spread to involve partnerships with a small CD rental shop.

At that moment, Bax replied furiously, "There's no way I'd give you the money!"

"We want official cassette tapes, but instead you're giving us pirated ones. Most of the tapes can't even be played. Forget the tapes being completely returned by In y customers, I even lost a few long-time customers because of this. I lost money and reputation, so be grateful that I didn't seek you out for compensation!"

The few men were infuriated when they heard Baz.

The burly man who spoke just now suddenly pushed Baz, causing the latter to stagger backward. If not for the wall-mounted shelf that was filled with CD and cassette tapes, the man would have fallen straight to the ground.

“What the f*ck did you just say?”

“We’re from Easy Media! Why would we sell pirated cassette tapes, huh? Keep spouting nonsense and I’ll kill you!”

Baz flushed in anger and roared, “You still have the shame to say that? Everyone in Legends that works in this industry knows that you took our order and secretly bought pirated cassette tapes to placate us, Ulric. We know you’re abusing your power as Easy Media’s small agent in charge of the Legends District. I’d rather not do business at all than pay you any money!”

Baz revealed the group’s mental scars.

Ulric, the leader of the group, glared fiercely. In utter fury, the man scolded, “F*ck you, brat! Shut up!” Then, he raised his hand to slap Baz across the face.

The hand was raised, but it never came down.

Ulric struggled and turned to glare at Jasper. He shouted, "This has nothing to do with you, young man! Get lost or I'll beat you up too!"

"How can someone like you really be Easy Media's employee?"

Jasper ignored Ulric's threats and asked.

As far as he was concerned, this matter was more important than anything else.

Ulric sneered and pulled out an employee badge. Shoving it in Jasper's face, he said, "Open your eyes and take a good look, brat. I'm Easy Media's Legends District agent. I distribute all supplies of Easy Media's videotapes and cassette tapes in Legends, understand?"

Just then, one of Ulric's lackeys even boasted proudly, "Not only that, but Mr. Sandoval's cousin is also Easy Media's Waterhoof City branch's vice president. Civilians like you will never have the chance to meet someone so formidable."

Jasper narrowed his eyes and scoffed when he heard the man.

With the maturing of the MP4 and MP5 technology, the market had slowly begun to eliminate cassette tapes.

However, that did not mean an industry that had more than a decade's worth of history would change overnight.

Still, anyone with common sense would be able to tell that electronics like MP4 and MP5 would be the future.

Easy Media's current focus was on electronic music. Following the market trend of online advertising, management over physical shops that sold cassette tapes started to become messy.

Because this was an industry that would be completely eliminated in a few years time, there was no way anyone would put much effort and time into managing it well.

This was why a small group of people found the opportunity to exploit it.

Ulric was one of these people.

Thanks to his contacts in the company's middle-ranks, Ulric had gotten himself a position as an agent.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1190

This so-called agent simply oversaw the orders of cassette tapes and CDs of audiovisual product shops in a specific area.

Ulric took the orders of these shops, and instead of handing them over to his superior, the man went and bought pirated cassette tapes from the black market to deliver to his customers.

More than scamming these audiovisual product shops, the man was also tarnishing Easy Media's reputation.

“And you're not afraid of getting reported for doing so?” Jasper asked.

Ulric and the rest were stunned for a moment before they erupted into laughter.

Ulric pointed at Jasper's nose and laughed out loud. “Is your brain working? Report? My cousin's the vice president and I'm the agent of this area. Who are you going to report me to?”

Ulric's expression then turned even more sinister as he said, “I'm warning you one last time, brat. Get lost right now if you know what's good for you. This has nothing to do with you. But if you have a death wish, then I'll break one of your legs today before you will even be able to cry for mercy!"

"Get lost now!"

As he shouted this, the chubby Ulric did indeed look rather forceful.

At that moment, Baz also told Jasper, "Thanks for helping out, man, but this issue has nothing to do with you. Instead of calling them Easy Media's employees, these people are actually just a bunch of rascals. There's no point fighting with them, so go. Don't get yourself into unnecessary trouble."

Baz was a good man.

Baz had come up with his own money to help Jasper through difficulties when he was dirt-poor in his past life. Being seven to eight years older than Jasper, Baz took great care and watched out for the younger as if he were an older brother.

If not for him, there was no way Jasper, a non-financial major graduate from a normal and insignificant university, would outshine his competitors.

It was thanks to Baz's care and protection that Jasper managed to persevere.

This was also why Jasper came all the way here to look for Baz.

“No, I really do have to take this matter into my own hands,” Jasper shook his head and rejected Baz’s kindness.

“I refuse to believe that Easy Media’s managerial ranks have rotted to such a level in Waterhoof City. To the point that people like this can become an agent. Are the employees in Easy Media’s Waterhoof City branch blind?”

Jasper’s words had ticked off Ulric.

“Don’t blame me when you’re the one with a death wish, f*cking idiot!”

Ulric shouted and waved his hand. Then, three to five men immediately surrounded Jasper.

“You want to hit me? You better think it through first.

Hit me and you’ll have to take full responsibility for your actions.” Jasper stood in the middle and looked down on the men around him. The man showed no signs of fear.

“Mr. Sandoval, what if someone is supporting this brat?”

A man asked Ulric when he saw how fearless Jasper was. Ulric frowned and narrowed his eyes as he glared at Jasper.

People like Ulric were not afraid of trouble, they were only afraid of offending someone more formidable than them.

It was thanks to connections with his relative that Ulric could show off here in Legends District and bully these small owners of audiovisual product shops. However, he had to think twice before he ended up offending someone he could not afford to.

“Don’t say I didn’t give you a chance, brat. Go ahead and call someone, I’d like to see who you can call,” Ulric shouted at Jasper. He decided to play it safe first.

“As if people like you are worth my phone call. Your cousin’s the vice president of the Waterhoof City branch, right? Invite him over. He’ll know who I am,” Jasper replied coldly.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1191

If Ulric was only slightly doubtful before, but Jasper's words had him dazed now.

There were only two possibilities here.

The first being that Jasper, the f*cker, was crazy.

The second being that Jasper was an extremely powerful person. Someone who could potentially be a senior executive in Easy Media.

However, Ulric did not think this was very likely.

The young man before him was in his twenties. There was no way this man could be a senior executive of the company.

Yet, Jasper's calm and majestic aura could not be faked either.

At that moment, Ulric was at loss about what to do. Ulric felt that calling his cousin would be too embarrassing an act.

It implied that he was scared of Jasper.

“Mr. Sandoval, I think it would be safer to make the call,” A subordinate gave him the chance to extricate himself from the awkward situation.

Ulric harrumphed and glared at Jasper. Then, he pulled out his phone and made a call beside them.

At the same time, Baz walked over.

The man looked Jasper up and down before he frowned and asked, “Do we know each other?”

Baz thought that this might be some friend of his, but no matter how he looked at the man, he was certain he had never seen the younger before. Hence, he had to ask this.

“This is the first time we’re meeting.” Jasper smiled at Baz.

Baz was stunned and asked, “Then why are you helping me?”

“I came here to look for you,” Jasper explained.

Baz was even more confused.

At the same time, Ulric’s call with his cousin connected. Horace, the Vice president of Easy Media’s Waterhoof City branch picked up the call.

“What is it?”

Ulric heard the indifferent voice on the other end of the call and said carefully, “I’m here at Golden State Street collecting payment, but there’s a really arrogant brat here, Horace. I was afraid that he’d be someone from the company so I wanted to check with you first.”

Horace was stunned for a moment. He glanced at the employees from the headquarters that were sitting in his office and asked, “Someone from the company? What’s his name?”

Ulric blanked.

He had no idea what Jasper’s name was.

Ulric turned to glance at Jasper before replying, "I don't know. But he's a young man in his twenties and he doesn't seem like a local from Waterhoof City."

Horace gave it some thought before he replied grimly, "The branch doesn't have a senior executive in his twenties. He's probably just an entry-level employee."

Ulric was immediately relieved and replied, "Good, then. I'll get rid of him right away. F*cking brat, I can't believe I actually got scared when he acted like he's someone powerful!"

However, Horace was smarter than Ulric, and he frowned in thought before saying, "Don't be so rash. The situation's a little tense over at the headquarters, and a few people from Waterfall South seems to have found out about your business. The headquarters' senior executives are angry and an investigative team have come over to our Waterhoof City branch office.

The general manager from headquarters is sitting in my office with their team right now."

"You never know. The investigative team could be sitting here while they send someone to dig around in secret. I have to go over and check out the situation first."

Ulric replied uncaringly, "But Horace, you've been contributing to Easy Media for years already. What can they do if they catch you? We've already used most of the profits we've earned in bribes."

“Nonsense!”

Horace scolded, “Will you only stop after you’ve caused a huge ruckus? Don’t act rashly for now. Wait for me to get there. You can do whatever you want if it’s a false alarm.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1192

Horace then hung up the phone and looked up at Truman, the general manager of the headquarters’ Inspection Department, and smiled. “Mr. Geis, did you send anyone from your investigative team directly to the audiovisual product shops?”

Truman was stunned when he heard Horace and shook his head. “There hasn’t been any arrangements of that manner as far as I’m aware, Horace. We’re old colleagues, aren’t we? I’d tell you in advance if I’d made such an arrangement.”

Horace’s expression darkened and he told Truman, “Then, I suspect that someone’s impersonating your people, Mr. Geis. The agency caught them red-handed, so perhaps we could go and take a look.”

Truman was enraged. “How could such a thing happen? Let’s go right away. We have to deal with these people harshly.”

At the same time in the shop, Ulric was overcome with joy to learn that Jasper was most likely pretending to be someone formidable.

“Just you wait, you little brat! You like to act, don’t you? I’d like to see how you f*cking keep this act up once they arrive!”

Ulric pointed at Jasper and scolded him loudly.

Despite this, Jasper remained calm.

In all honesty, considering Jasper’s current identity and status, he would truly be lowering himself if he were to engage Ulric in a verbal fight.

On the other hand, Ulric took Jasper’s silence as guilt. Ulric scoffed and looked at two of his lackeys as he cued them to block the door so that Jasper could not run.

Then, he said with a sneer, “Do you know how much trouble you’re in today, brat? I’ll beat you up and make you call me daddy later while you lie limply on the ground.”

“You’re going too far!”

Baz could not endure Ulric's attitude any longer and said.

Horace had told Ulric not to act rashly with Jasper, but the man was not in the mood to be soft with Baz.

Slapping Baz with the back of his hand, Ulric scolded, "Who the f*ck do you think you are? Who are you to shout at me? Give me the money you owe me, or I'll get rid of your shop!"

After taking the slap head on, Baz was utterly mortified as he glared at Ulric with reddened eyes.

He wanted nothing more than to charge head on and fight Ulric.

However, this was his relative's shop and not his. Not to mention that Ulric's people outnumbered him. Baz knew that rushing into a fight would only get himself beaten up.

Hence, All Baz could do was suppress the fury he felt and swear that he would one day make a name for himself and never be taken advantage of like this again.

"Touch him again and you will regret it." Jasper's icy tone drifted over.

Ulric stared at Jasper and smiled wretchedly, “You can’t even protect yourself, brat Stop acting like a here.”

As they talked, a commercial vehicle came to a stop outside the car. The car doors opened, and a good number of people got out.

Horace led the group, with Easy Media’s Inspection Department’s general manager Truman trailing after him. The other employees of the Inspection Department walked behind Truman.

Ulric saw Horace and went to greet the man happily. “Horace, the stupid f*cker I was talking about is right inside.”

Horace frowned slightly since Truman was also present, and he scolded Ulric, “Watch your choice of words. This is Truman Geis, the general manager of the headquarters’ Inspection Department. He’s an old colleague of mine. What are you waiting for? Greet him!”

Ulric was not a blind man, and he immediately bowed to greet Truman, “Hello, Mr. Geis.”

Ulric chuckled and continued pleasingly, “Mr. Geis. I should make preparations to celebrate your arrival. Perhaps we could do dinner?”

This was the general manager from the headquarters' Inspection Department!

This man was considered a formidable figure beyond Ulric's usual network.

It made sense that he wanted to be acquainted with the man.

Truman gave a small smile and was about to reply when he looked up and saw an extremely familiar young man looking back at him expressionlessly in the shop.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1193

As an entry level agent, there was no way Ulric would recognize Jasper.

As the vice president of the Waterhoof City branch, Horace should have been able to recognize Jasper.

However, since Jasper did not involve himself in most of the company's daily operations after he acquired Easy Media, Jasper only knew what Ted reported to him. High-level employees consisting of general managers of the headquarters' many huge departments only occasionally saw Jasper during video conferences.

A vice president of a branch like Horace was not high-ranking enough to know who Jasper was.

Truman was the only one here who was different.

As the general manager of the Inspection Department, Truman was not qualified to be a part of the core decision making team. However, the man had seen Jasper before during a few huge video conferences. Truman felt an impending headache when he saw Jasper.

He did not expect to meet his superior for first time under such circumstances.

Before Truman had the chance to think further, he pushed away all nonsensical thoughts in his mind and leaned forward. With a flattering smile, he jogged into the shop and straight to Jasper.

Ulric's hand froze mid air as he had pulled out a packet of CW, initially having planned to acquaint himself with Truman through a smoke.

Even Horace was stunned.

The two cousins exchanged a look in utter confusion.

By then, Truman had already reached Jasper.

“Mr. Laine. Why are you here, Mr. Laine? Why didn’t you tell us you were visiting in advance?”

Ulric felt extremely familiar with the act of absolute humility Truman had shown Jasper, as if it he himself had experienced it just moments ago.

However, Ulric’s object of flattery was Truman, while Truman was trying to win over that little brat!

Before he could fully process the shock, he heard Jasper say.

“Tell you in advance? If I didn’t happen to come across this then I would never have known how powerful Easy Media’s personnel all are now, would I? As an Easy Media employee, you’re even stealing from your own company now. You take orders for your company, but you turn around to sell pirated goods!”

“I’d be watching a peaceful play if I called in advance, wouldn’t I? Huh?!”

Jasper’s shout had Truman’s complexion paling immediately.

Sweat began to form on Truman's forehead and he was about to respond in anguish.

"You're Waterhoof City branch's vice president? Ulric's cousin?"

Jasper did not recognize Truman at all.

Seeing how Jasper had mistaken him for someone else, Truman quickly explained, "I'm Truman Geis, Mr. Laine, the general manager of the headquarters' Inspection Department. I've met you before in a few video conferences. He's Waterhoof City branch's vice president, Horace Sandoval."

In the matter of life and death, Truman sold Horace out without hesitation.

Rather than 'selling out', Truman would argue that he was merely stating the truth.

Jasper looked up at Ulric and Horace, who were frozen in place and said, "I remember now. I've seen you before, you were the second in command while hosting the conference, right?"

Truman smiled wryly, "I was. Thanks to your and Mr. Swanson's trust, I officially assumed the position of general manager half a month ago."

“Ted must’ve been blind,” Jasper replied calmly.

Truman turned cold at that statement.

He felt aggrieved. After all, this matter had nothing to do with him at all.

In fact, he did not even know what had happened.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1194

Just then, Ulric and Horace shivered. They realized that they were in big trouble.

Ulric was confused and he pointed at Jasper to ask, “Who, who are you?”

“This is Mr. Laine! The owner of Easy Media!”

Truman looked at Ulric like the latter was an idiot. To think that the man would still dare to point at Jasper now... Truman scolded him frantic and impatiently.

In all honesty, Truman did not care about what would happen to Ulric or even Horace. He just did not want these idiots to get him involved too.

At that moment, Horace snapped back to reality and he slapped Ulric across his face. Then, he dragged Ulric who was wailing pitifully over to Jasper and said sorrowfully, "I'm really sorry, Mr. Laine. I never knew that there'd be such a failure by my side!"

Jasper looked at Horace and smiled. "Officially speaking, he's the agent for Legends district and is directly supervised by the Waterhoof City branch. Privately, he's your cousin. Are you telling me that you have no idea what he's been doing?"

Horace's complexion paled and he looked at Ulric darkly like he wanted to eat the other man alive.

"If you knew, then there's a huge problem with you as a person. If you didn't know, then it's still your fault for being negligent."

Jasper's words put a stop to any of Horace's excuses.

As he was at his wit's end thinking about what to do, Ulric suddenly fell to the floor with a thud and kneeled in front of Jasper.

“Mr. Laine, please forgive me. It’s my fault for being a snob, for being blind to the reality of the situation, for offending who I should not have.”

Ulric slapped himself as he apologized.

The clear slaps accompanied by Ulric’s tragic pleas turned the scene into something extremely strange.

“Not bad. All you knew were expletives moments ago, but I see you’ve changed,” Jasper stated calmly.

Ulric sobbed and continued, “I’m really sorry, Mr. Laine. Please forgive me this time. I’ll never do it again.”

Jasper did not look at Ulric, instead turning to Truman coldly, “You’re the person in charge of the Inspection Department. You should know what to do in this scenario.”

Truman clenched his jaw and replied, “I do. Firstly, Ulric is undoubtedly in the wrong. After requesting payment from the company, he then bought cheap pirated CDs to resell them at a high price. We’ll sue them accordingly and call the police if we see fit. In addition, the Waterhoof City branch will have to face severe consequences for leadership negligence. Horace is a major suspect and we’ll launch an investigation on him according to the company’s bylaws.”

Horace's expression paled and he turned to beg Jasper frantically. "Mr. Laine, Ulric was the person who did everything. I knew nothing at all!"

"We'll know of your involvement once we investigate everything and the truth comes to light."

Jasper waved his hand and told Truman, "Bring them away. I don't want to see them again."

Truman immediately had the other officers bring the two away.

Truman looked at Jasper hesitantly, but seeing how the man showed no signs of talking to him, he quickly left uneasily.

Ulric and Horace were definitely screwed, but he did not know if he would be affected too.

As he processed this train of thought, Truman felt utter hatred for the devastated Horace and Ulric. Truman felt like he had been implicated by them for no reason.

"Damn you two!" Truman cursed resentfully.

Jasper shook his head as he watched the commercial vehicle drive away.

Jasper had understood everything since the moment the group had alighted the car. Truman's relationship with Horace and the words he told Ulric was enough for Jasper to fire the man.

Everything happened so fast but ended even quicker.

Ulric and Horace were screwed. Seeing how the situation was against them, Ulric's lackeys fled as well. In the blink of an eye, only Jasper and Baz were left in the shop.

Jasper smiled and walked over to a stunned Baz as he extended his hand. "Nice to meet you, my name's Jasper Laine. Laine with an I."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1195

Baz looked at a beaming Jasper dumbly.

His mind had yet to register what had just happened. He could not understand how Jasper, who was still silent a moment ago, had suddenly become a formidable person.

Meanwhile, Ulric, who was flaunting his power arrogantly, had suddenly become a pitiful mess and was brought away.

Taking in the situation before him, Baz recognized that Jasper was someone none of the people just now could afford to offend.

Baz had also acutely caught on to something Truman said.

The owner of Easy Media!

For Baz to meet someone of this caliber was like a civilian meeting the richest man alive.

It felt unreal.

“Why, why... do I feel like I’m watching Records of the King’s Travel Incognito?”

Jasper laughed out loud at Baz’s statement.

Baz made this point as that television series was what had kickstarted the country's trend of acting weak to lower your opponent's defenses before finally revealing how formidable you were in order to win.

Despite being a king, the man loved traveling incognito and only revealed his identity after meeting various oppressive or corrupted officials.

Jasper felt the analogy rather apt.

After calming down, Baz immediately realized something.

In comparison to a formidable man like Jasper, he was nothing more than a pond loach in the mud.

'Why is he looking for me?'

With this question in mind, Baz wiped both his hands on his clothes embarrassedly before he shook Jasper's hand. Then, he asked, "We don't know each other. Why did you look for me?"

Even though Baz did not believe that someone as formidable as Jasper could seek him out for anything, he did not know what else to say.

Jasper smiled and was about to reply when the back door of the video product shop opened.

A stealthy middle aged man walked in.

“Did they leave already Baz?”

Baz frowned when he saw the middle aged man.

He replied indifferently, “They’re gone. You can come out relax.”

“Mr. Laine, this is my uncle Ross.”

Under Baz’s introduction, Jasper came to know that Ross was the shop’s true owner.

Still, this uncle and boss had hidden when Ulric and the rest came to ask for money, leaving Baz to bear the humiliation and the attacks.

From this, one could tell that Ross was not a good man.

“Mr. Laine?”

Ross was shocked by the way Baz referred to Jasper. Due to his fear that Ulric would be adamant about looking for him, Ross had hidden next door. Therefore, he had no idea what happened within the shop.

As a result, he did not know who Jasper was either.

Ross looked Jasper up and down a few times before he grinned. “You’re so young, what’s with the ‘Mister’ title.”

From Ross’ casual and arrogant tone, the man did not seem to believe that Jasper was a powerful figure. Naturally, Jasper did not care about how Ross viewed him either.

However, Jasper recalled the huge problem Baz had faced at home in his past life, and how it was directly related to this Uncle Ross here. Thus, he promptly told Baz, “I came to look for you. There’s something I’d like to talk to you about in private.”

Logically or emotionally speaking, Baz had no reason to reject Jasper after the man had just saved him.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1196

Just as he was about to nod, Ross suddenly jumped out and interrupted them.

“Wait. I’m the owner here as well as Baz’s uncle. You can tell me whatever you want to say directly!”

Jasper frowned slightly and said, “You can’t decide this for him.”

“How do you know this if you don’t tell me what it is first?” Ross’ eyes flickered as he insisted.

Jasper replied calmly, “I came today in hopes of inviting Baz to work at my company. Can you decide that for him?”

Baz was stunned by what he heard.

The last thing he expected was for Jasper, a man he did not recognize, to come and give him a job.

Ross voiced his objections immediately.

“No way! Who knows if you’re a scammer or something of that nature? The world’s a messy place, young man. Baz might not know anything and might for your lies easily because he doesn’t have much experience in society, but I’m not an idiot.”

Jasper replied calmly, “Baz is already an adult. He knows how to make his own choices. Moreover, any job outside would promise him more of a future than being exploited and used as a shield by you here.”

“Not to mention, it’s not like Baz is some unmarried virgin maiden either. Even if I was a human trafficker, I wouldn’t try to scam a strong burly man.”

Ross was infuriated when he heard Jasper.

Like an old rascal that had been stripped naked, Ross flushed red and pointed at Jas while scolding, “What evidence do you have to claim that I’m using Baz as a shield? How dare you claim that I exploited him? You’re just an outsider! You know nothing at all!”

Jasper looked at Baz and replied calmly, “Since I’m an outsider, then I’m sure Baz would know best since he’s an involved party.”

“Baz, I’d like to talk to you about this. There’s an opportunity right in front of you, but whether you take it or not is up to you. Think carefully before you decide.”

Baz’s expression turned solemn.

If not for what had just happened, it would surely have taken Jasper more than a few sentences to persuade him. In fact, Baz might even have thought that Jasper was a scammer.

However, after he came to know of Jasper’s true identity, he knew that such an important person would not pull this kind of joke for no reason.

Thus, Baz immediately replied, “Let’s talk outside!”

Baz was about to walk out the door with Jasper when he heard Ross say angrily, “Baz, I am your uncle! Instead of listening to me, you’re really going to leave with an outsider?”

Baz sighed and replied, “Can’t you just let me make my own decisions, Uncle Ross?”

Ross’s expression darkened.

He would not be able to find an employee during such difficult times who was also willing to work hard, take his grumblings and complaints, not require a salary, and most importantly, take responsibility when something bad happens.

From this perspective, Ross was reluctant to let Baz leave.

However, Baz's firm expression told Ross that he could not stop the youngster, even as his uncle.

He had no one to blame but how himself for being too harsh on Baz before this. Forget the care an uncle should give his nephew, Ross did not even do his part as Baz's superior.

Thinking of this, Ross' eyes flickered, and he looked up at Jasper to say, "You can bring Baz away if you want. He's a grown man, and if you really can give him an opportunity to change his life for the better, then I won't stop you."

Baz was stunned by what he heard.

Yet, before he could feel moved, Ross continued to speak.

“But I paid for his living costs all these years, I gave him food and a house to live in. It’s only right you compensate me for that, right?”

Baz looked at Ross in disbelief. He never imagined the man to be so shameless.

Before any touching emotions could arise, his heart was instead filled with disgust and disdain.

Jasper was unsurprised by what he saw.

This was who Ross was in his past life as well.

The man had done even more shameful things in Jasper’s past life, things that caused Baz to lose many chances of launching his career and strengthening his business.

Therefore Jasper was unsurprised to see this man reaching his hand out and demanding payment to ‘buy’ Baz.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1197

“Un-Uncle Ross... That, that’s so heartless of you! ”

Baz trembled in infuriation.

“I might have been eating and living under your roof all these years, but it wasn’t for naught. I worked in your shop even when you didn’t pay me any wage. How can you ask me for money now?”

“Do you have no shame?”

Embarrassment flickered across Ross’ expression when he heard Baz, but it vanished right after.

“Hmph. I told you, you didn’t know anything, Baz. Do you even know how expensive things are outside?”

“Go ask around how much it costs to rent a house in Legends District. Go ask how much people spend on daily living expenses.”

“Even if I counted the hours you worked for me, the salary that I’m supposed to pay you would never amount to what you owe me.”

“So, you can leave if you want. But I want at least 10 thousand, no, 20 thousand Somer Dollars!”

Ross had completely discarded the last bit of shame he had.

He refused to back down before squeezing Baz dry of every penny he was worth.

Baz trembled in anger and replied, “Uncle Ross, you didn’t even pay me all these years and you know how much money I have. How am I supposed to get you 20 thousand when all I have are the few dozen bucks you give me for living expenses every week?”

“I’m your nephew! Does it not hurt your conscience to treat me like this?”

Ross scoffed. The man spoke even more matter-of-factly now that there was no saving his relationship with Baz.

He pursed his lips in Jasper’s direction and said, “You might now have money, but what about Mr. Laine? He must be rich if he can offer you a job.”

Jasper looked at Ross coldly. Under normal circumstances, Jasper would not spare Ross even a cent. Jasper would rather throw money on the ground than give it to Ross freely.

However, Jasper turned to look at Baz before deciding. If Ross refused to respect Baz, then Jasper would.

“You decide.”

Jasper’s words caused an indescribable rise of passion and emotion to fill Baz’s heart.

He would follow Jasper even if the man was blatantly scamming him to work in the mines.

Most importantly, he knew who Jasper was. He was the owner of Easy Media. There was no way such a formidable man would waste his time on scamming him.

As he thought of this, Baz did not waste any more time wondering about into why Jasper was giving him such a chance. He clenched his jaw and said, “Please lend me 20 thousand, Mr. Laine. I’ll give it to him, and from today onwards, we won’t be uncle and nephew anymore! He and I will be strangers!”

“Alright”

Jasper nodded and agreed without hesitation.

‘Was 20 thousand a lot of money?’

To ordinary people, 20 thousand was the net income they made in a year, but this was only because Waterhoof City paid a higher salary. Still, it was quite the fortune.

However, this sum was insignificant to Jasper.

Jasper had earned more than 20 thousand during the time wasted here.

“I don’t have that much cash on me right now, so come to the bank with me,” Jasper said.

This was a logical request since no one would carry ten thousand worth of cash on them for no reason.

Ross, however, felt secretly regretful when he saw how readily Jasper replied. He wondered if he had asked for too little money.

He should have asked for 30 thousand instead.

What Ross thought did not matter though, as the three soon arrived at a nearby bank. Jasper walked straight to the counter and passed the employee his card. "Withdraw 20 thousand."

The employee was taken aback when they saw Jasper's ICBS VIP Black card.

The ICBS would not issue this card unless the owner had more than a hundred million worth of assets.

The employee smiled enthusiastically and quickly put the card in its reader. A ten-figure account balance appeared on the screen as the employee lost their breath.

'Holy sh*t, 2.1 billion...'

This man's personal account balance was equal to the cumulative deposits of three of their outlets.

Ross, who followed Jasper's side closely, saw the figure as well.

He was dazed.

When Ross first saw the number, he thought he had mistaken someone's phone number for it.

However, he immediately realized that a Somer phone number could not start with 21, nor could it be 10 figures long.

Ross gulped and looked at Jasper, paling with fear.

If Jasper was just slightly rich, Ross would be thinking of how he could squeeze him of another paycheck. However, seeing how wealthy the man was now, Ross' greed turned into terror.

Any idiot would be able to tell that a certain degree of wealth was synonymous with power.

Jasper handed Ross the 20 thousand Somer Dollars and said calmly, "Why, wasn't this what you wanted?"

Ross gulped loudly and he replied with a shiver, "It's just... I... Mr. Laine, I actually..."

"Forget it." Jasper had no desire to listen to what Ross wanted to say.

Jasper was unwilling to listen to what a man who was willing to corner his own nephew to the point of desperation wanted to say.

"This is the money I lent Baz. What he wants to do with it has nothing to do with me. All I hope is that you uphold your end of the bargain."

"From now on, do not disturb or harass Baz ever again for any reason. The two of you are no longer uncle and nephew. You two are mere strangers, understood?"

Jasper's words were to prevent the tragic event in his past life from happening to Baz again.

"Yes, alright."

Ross took the money and turned to flee without giving Jasper another glance.

After Ross left, Jasper clasped a despairing Baz on the shoulder and said, "Relatives might not treat you the best sometimes, while strangers could potentially become a confidant. It just depends on the person."

Baz nodded, understanding Jasper's intention of consoling him. He grinned to reveal a sour smile. "Come on, let's go talk somewhere in private."

Jasper and Baz arrived at a quiet and elegant restaurant and sat opposite each other, ordering a few dishes in the process.

"Mr. Laine, could I ask how you came to know of me?"

After mulling it over for a long while, Baz could not help but voice out his biggest concern.

"We didn't know each other before this but you came straight for me. You even gave me the chance to work for you and lent me 20 thousand Somer Dollars..."

"I know that 20 thousand doesn't mean much to you, but it's a huge sum for me."

Jasper chuckled and replied meaningfully, "This 20 thousand really isn't anything compared to the help I got before this."

Jasper thought back to how his phone had been blown up with calls demanding him to repay his debts to online loan sharks, and how he could not even return home because of that. It had been Baz, the same man that was sitting cautious and respectfully in front of him now, that helped him every single time. Jasper felt emotional now that he thought about it.

He admitted that he was not a saint, but the most important thing people needed was a conscience.

Considering Jasper's situation in his past life, Baz was already considered a great man for not avoiding Jasper. However, this superior had even forked out his own money to help repay his debts time and time again.

Instead of alleviating Baz's concerns, Jasper's words only caused him to become even more confused.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1198

“Don’t think too much about it. ”

Jasper restated his answer. There was no way he could tell Baz the truth, because even if he did, what would he say? That he reincarnated from the future and now wanted to employ Baz because of the man’s capabilities and repay the kindness he was once shown?

Baz would only think that he was crazy if he said that.

“You want to change your life, and the opportunity I’m providing you now is your best bet. All you need to do is take the opportunity and do your best.”

Hearing how unclear Jasper’s explanation was, Baz nodded and did not think too deeply into it anymore.

Not when there was nothing to scam him of.

He did not have money and his appearance was average. Baz was an ordinary person, and he could not think of any thing he had that would cause Jasper to go through so much trouble to employ him.

“Other than Easy Media, I also have an investment company under my name. This company is actually my most important property and I’m planning to have you work there.”

Baz was stunned when he heard Jasper, and replied confusedly, “Investment? But I know nothing about investing.”

“No one is born with knowledge, everyone slowly learns what they know. I believe that you’re talented in this field, but most importantly, that you’d appreciate this opportunity more than any university student I can employ.”

Jasper chuckled before poking into the food and taking a bite.

“Eat. We’ll talk as we eat.”

Baz picked up his cutlery as well and spoke softly as he ate, “It’s just, Mr. Laine, could you give me a more ordinary position? Like working odd jobs or something. Investments are too specialized, and I don’t think I can do it well.”

“There’s no way I’d let you work odd jobs,” Jasper chuckled, “After spending so much effort just to find you and deal with that incident just now, there’s no way I’d employ you just so you could be a janitor. Why would I waste my effort and your potential on such a thing?”

“There’s nothing wrong with not knowing, nor will I personally put you in charge of a project right off the bat. I’ll have someone guide you when you start so you can accumulate experience. Once you’re experienced enough, then you’ll have your own team to lead.

“Investment is just a game of making more money with money. Once you’ve understood the rules, it’s actually much easier than you think.”

Baz was stunned when he heard Jasper.

He would never know that this was the same thing he told Jasper when the man first starting working for him.

Jasper was just returning the same piece of advice to him.

“Trust yourself a little more, being ordinary doesn’t mean you’re any worse than others. I must have my reasons for telling you to give it a try. Just believe yourself and believe in me. Then everything will be much easier.”

Baz did not reject Jasper any further upon seeing the lengths the man had gone to persuade him.

“Alright. Then, I’ll do my best.”

Jasper laughed out loud in response and raised his cup. “Then, let’s toast with tea to celebrate a new beginning in your life. I wish you all the best.”

“Thank you!”

Baz raised the teacup grandly and clinked it softly against Jasper’s before downing its contents. Baz felt his life suddenly brighten.

After lunch, Jasper gave Baz the address of his investment company in Nauritus City and 1000 Somer Dollars for transport.

“Wrap up your matters here and make your way over. I’ll have human resources arrange your job. Just ask for Chad Wright when you arrive and listen to his arrangements. He’s the Director of Human Resources at the investment company.”

“There’s nothing much to wrap up, actually. I don’t have many friends here, just one relative. Now that the relative’s no more, I can leave at anytime,” Baz replied softly.

Jasper nodded and patted Baz’s shoulder.

“Everyone will have to live their own lives. The people you meet are no more than passing guests.”

“Yeah.”

Baz nodded sincerely. Suddenly, he took a step back and bowed deeply to Jasper.

“Mr. Laine, while I still don’t know why you had looked for me and offered me such an opportunity, it won’t change the fact that I’m immensely grateful to you. Thank you.”

Jasper watched as Baz’s taxi made its way toward the train station. Now that this matter had been dealt with, Jasper let out a sigh of relief as well.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1199

Jasper hailed a taxi and was about to return to the hotel when he received a call from Henry.

“You should be partying at this time, Young Master Law. Why’d you think to call me? I’ll make it clear first that I’m not interested in the kind of venues you go to.”

Jasper said with a smile when he picked up the call.

However, instead of Henry's teasing or refuting remarks, Jasper heard a furious shout instead.

"I've been f*cking set up! Come to the Heavenly Palace and save me!"

Jasper's expression instantly turned serious. He was well aware of Henry's temper.

The man was nothing if not two things. Aggressively domineering and arrogant.

There was no need to explain his dominance, while the man's arrogance was also thanks to his familial background.

Henry refused to surrender lightly, nor would he ask for help unless absolutely necessary.

Let alone use the word 'save' as he did this time.

It spoke volumes about the severity of the situation.

Without wasting much time, Jasper asked grimly, "I'll be right there. Is Julian by your side?"

"He is," Henry replied.

Jasper felt slightly reassured by that.

As long as Henry was fine, then everything could be easily solved.

"Alright. Wait for me at the Heavenly Palace. Remember, no matter what happens, do not get into any conflict or fight with anyone. Do not leave Julian's side either. As long as you're safe, everything else can be solved."

Jasper immediately hung up the phone afterward.

"To the Heavenly Palace, please."

The taxi driver proceeded to activate his career's foundational skill speaking long windedly.

“The Heavenly Palace? That’s one of Waterhoof City’s best clubhouses but it’s a little too far from where we’re at. There’s also heavy traffic so I don’t think we’d be able to get there in time if you’re in a rush.”

He had just finished speaking when a stack of hundred Somer Dollar bills was tossed at him.

“Arrive in 15 minutes, I don’t care what method you use. This money should be enough for you to pay the traffic fines.”

The taxi driver’s eyes widened. He had an internal dialogue about how this man perfectly fit the description of a wealthy businessman who could afford to spend money in the Heavenly Palace. Forget paying fines, the money Jasper gave him was as much as he earned in a month.

Without another word, the taxi driver stepped on the pedal and sped over.

At the same time, the atmosphere was tense in Sky High Court private room of Waterhoof City’s Heavenly Court, a club that celebrities and trust-fund children frequented.

Henry sat on the sofa in the middle of the room, his expression murderous and sinister.

Julian stood diagonally in front of Henry, staring at the group of people in front of him.

Surrounded by that group of people was... Prince!

The man sat on the coffee table while his shiny leather shoe continued to shake in front of Henry. Prince could not hide the arrogance on his face.

He leaned toward Henry slightly and raised his hand to wave the stack of pictures in it with a wretched smile. "There really isn't anyone more powerful than you, Young Master Law. Was it fun beating up the f*cker that knocked into you this afternoon?"

"That man's currently lying in the morgue now. You killed someone, you're in big trouble now! Hahahaha!"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1200

Henry's head snapped up and he stared at Prince icily.

After experiencing the tragic lesson of being beaten up by Henry in the meeting room, Prince did feel slightly afraid. He instinctively leaned backward to escape Henry's gaze, but the man immediately realized what he was doing.

Henry was the one who would be charged for murder, not him!

"What the f*ck are you looking at?!"

Prince scolded and pointed at Henry's nose while continuing, "You think that just because you're f*cking from Harbor City, that you're more powerful than anyone? You had fun beating people up randomly, didn't you?"

"Well, I'm telling you today that only low-level trash raise their fist. You're nothing when it comes to a proper scheme."

"No matter how cruel you are, you'd never be able to get away from this murder charge! You hear me?"

“The man you killed came from a somewhat powerful family too. Even if there’s no comparing them to the Law family, they’re not completely defenseless either. You killed their son and even if you were God, there’s no way you’d come out of this unscathed!”

Henry spoke icily in response to Prince’s arrogance, “Point your slimy hands at me one more f*cking time and I’ll make you regret it.”

“You!”

Prince was enraged. He did not think Henry could still be so domineering at such a stage.

Prince did feel the desire to back down when he saw Henry’s furious expression. As if to recover from the shame he felt, Prince sneered. “Being calculative with a mad dog that’s going to get screwed over is an insult to my status.”

“Don’t think that I have no idea that you’re framing in e, you little f*cker. This was a setup since the beginning, wasn’t it?”

Henry was not an idiot. After the incident happened, he thought back about it and immediately understood what happened.

“That idiot wouldn’t even dare to fart in front of me before this, but he suddenly gained the courage to call me a Harbie at noon today? All I did was slap the man and you tell me he died this afternoon? If you’re going to set me up at least make it inconspicuous, Chavez.”

Prince heard Henry’s words and sneered, “You still don’t get it, do you, Henry? So what if it’s a setup?”

“It’s the truth is that you hit him today and he’s dead now. The autopsy stated very clearly that he died from physical assault. What makes you think you can escape conviction?”

“This is what you get for being arrogant and always itching to fight. Now do you know how dangerous society is?”

Henry suddenly got up and grabbed Prince’s collar. He spat icily, “F*ck you, you f*cking dumb*ss. You think two slaps can kill a person? After I slapped you so many times that day, you’re still f*cking alive now, aren’t you?”

“This just happened and you’re already jumping out to blame me. Do you really take me for a moron?”

Caught off guard, Prince was lifted off his feet by Henry as fear flashed through the man’s eyes. He roared, “You wouldn’t dare to hurt me, Henry!”

“Hurt you?”

Utterly furious, Henry did not care too much as he raised his foot and kicked Prince right in the man’s stomach. Prince flew across the room and knocked into various fruits and wine before falling backward onto the ground. It was an embarrassing sight.

“So what if I hurt you today? What’re you gonna do about it, huh?”

Henry looked down at Prince and said.

Humiliated again, Prince ignored the pain in his stomach and pointed at Henry while shouting, “Just you wait, Henry! You’re going to die very soon! I’ll make sure to kill you this time or so help me God, my name won’t be Prince Chavez!”

Prince’s men reacted as well and instinctively began to surround Henry.

Henry stood fearlessly in place as he swept his icy gaze over the people around him. “Come at me if you don’t value your life!”

At the same time, Julian took a silent step forward as well. He did not say anything, but the implications of his actions were clear.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1201

Julian would not go easy on whoever decided to step up now.

Prince crawled up from the floor and wiped off the alcohol on his face. He roared, “You killed someone in Waterhoof City, Henry. Forget your Dad, even if your grandfather came he’d still need to make up for your actions.”

“I won’t back down on this at all, Henry. I won’t let this go until I watch you get sent to jail! ”

“Then get to it, would you?” Henry stared at Prince. “You taking all this time to talk instead of acting is making me look down on you.”

Prince had initially believed that Henry would surrender to him in utter fear. The stark difference of reality had Prince feeling like a stranger in this world.

Henry was the one who got into big trouble, yet the man was acting more arrogant than Prince was.

Prince wondered if Henry was an idiot or if he was truly fearless.

Prince thought back to how this was Conrad 's idea but his own plan. While simple, this plan was effective and without any loopholes. So Prince believed that Henry was being too arrogant and confident.

“Fine. You can't blame me if you've got a death wish. I'll immediately contact the authorities to have you thrown in jail tonight!”

“You think that just because you're from the Law family it means you can be as arrogant as you want?”

“You'll always have to pay for taking others' lives no matter where you go. Not to mention that I'm here making sure it happens! If you have to blame someone then blame your own arrogance for all of this!”

“Who's arrogant?”

A voice interrupted the scene.

Henry's expression turned joyful and Julian sighed in relief when they heard the voice.

Prince was the only one whose expression darkened. The man tensed as if faced with a powerful enemy, as if there was some mythical monster that had rushed into the room.

The private room door was pushed open and in strolled Jasper.

Jasper swept his gaze over the scene and pushed through the crowd to stand next to Henry. Then he turned to look at Prince and said calmly, "How free of you to join Henry for wine, crown prince."

Prince chuckled wretchedly and replied, "Free your f*cking foot. I'm here to kill Henry!"

"Okay."

Jasper nodded calmly and moved so that Henry was exposed to Prince.

"Come on, then. He's right here, kill him."

Prince was stunned by Jasper's words.

How was he supposed to continue this conversation?

“What are you doing just standing there? Go on, then. Kill him. Isn’t that what you wanted to do?” Jasper urged.

Prince took in a deep breath, he felt like his chest was about to explode from infuriation. He glared at Jasper and said icily, “Don’t give me this sh*t, Jasper. Henry’s in for murder this time and you won’t be able to save him even if you’re extremely powerful!”

Jasper turned his head to look at Henry. “Did you kill someone?”

“No. This stupid f*cker set me up and framed me!” Henry replied.

Jasper nodded and looked back at Prince. “Did you hear him?”

Stunned, Prince nodded instinctively. “I did.”

“So if he didn’t kill anyone, then what are you still standing here for?” Jasper asked calmly.

Prince seemed to have woken up from his stupor with Jasper’s question and the man was furious.

“Stop f*cking acting, Laine. Henry beat my friend up earlier today and he’s lying in the morgue right now. The autopsy states that the man was beaten to death. You can dream on if you think Henry can walk out of this unscathed!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1202

It would be wrong to assume that trust-fund children could do whatever they wished without fear.

In truth, trust-fund children are actually under more limitations than ordinary people in various aspects. Especially renowned families like the Law family.

Of course, nouveau riche families were another story altogether.

Truly renowned and wealthy families actually set extremely high standards for their children. People like Kayden were more different than the norm.

However, be it the Langdon, the Law, or any other family, as long as there was one reasonable elder within it, there was no way they would let their descendants get involved in some things.

Murder, for example.

The children could plot and scheme, but they could not get blood on their hands.

Even if they had to get rid of a person, it must be done through hiring gangsters or ordering their lackeys to carry it out. No matter what, their descendants themselves could not get their own hands dirty.

This was the reason why Prince's exploitation posed quite some trouble to Henry.

Murder was very much illegal in the country, and not even God could save you if you got involved.

It was the same for the Law family.

"Go on, then. Keep acting arrogant, why don't you? Huh?"

Prince thought that he had caught onto Henry's weakness and he was extremely arrogant.

"You were the one who hit him, surveillance cameras clearly caught you. There's no arguing out of this. And the autopsy too! Hahaha! You'll lose to me this time, Young Master Law!"

Prince felt extremely gleeful as he looked at Henry whose expression was dark as the void.

Taking revenge was surely among the proudest things he had done in life.

He thought back to Henry's arrogance just now and how forceful the b*stard still was just now.

However, now that Prince had truly turned against Henry, he refused to believe that the latter could remain fearless.

Framing Henry for murder was a huge bombshell that could completely screw Henry over.

"All I did was slap him a few times. You're telling me that's howl killed a man?"

"How do you even have the gall to pull out that bullsh*t autopsy too? You think some random child's play framing can get rid of me?" Henry looked at Prince and said icily.

Despite what Henry said, it did not change the fact that the situation was not in Henry's favor. This was something anyone with eyes could tell.

No matter who you were or how deep your family's roots went, it would be extremely difficult to extract oneself once one was involved in something like this.

Prince must have been fully prepared to rush over so openly.

Henry might be arrogant but the man was not stupid. So he immediately called Jasper over once he realized that this was not a situation he could deal with by himself.

Prince chortled when he heard Henry and said, "Frame? Everything you say has to have evidence, Young Master Law. Did you see me frame you? What evidence do you have?"

"But I have a whole load of evidence against you! The surveillance footage alone is conclusive evidence. How can you explain yourself?"

With that, Prince smiled wretchedly and made a slicing gesture with his hand over his neck.

"You're dead!"

Jasper narrowed his eyes and his brain quickly analyzed the situation before him.

Concluding the information he knew with the analysis of the current situation, Jasper made an assessment of the incident, unresolvable.

Yes, it was unresolvable.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1203

There was no question that this was a setup by Prince.

Jasper knew Henry very well and while the latter was arrogant and paid no one any respect, he was not a bad person at heart. More importantly, Henry was smart enough not to kill someone.

The most Henry would do was beat the person up. If the person was powerful, then Henry would just use his family's power to end his opponent's family, but he would never kill a man.

Prince's setup was hasty and the methods used were rough, but the man had fulfilled the aspects required to form a chain of evidence. His argument was solidly backed.

It would be very difficult for Henry to walk out from this unscathed.

Jasper immediately felt that Prince was not the person who came up with this plan.

Having dealt with Prince before, Jasper knew that the other had the ability to scheme and plot. However, this setup was too formal and presumptuous, and too unrefined enough for Prince to come up with right now.

The scheme seemed brash but it was filled with danger. A few moves and Henry ended up extremely cornered.

“Turn yourself in, Henry,” Jasper suddenly said.

The four words had Henry stunned. Even Prince looked at Jasper with eyes widened in disbelief as if an alien had descended on Earth.

Even Julian looked at Jasper with utter confusion and shock.

Meeting Henry’s stunned gaze, Jasper said calmly, “Turning yourself in is a mitigating factor and they’ll be lenient with their murder charges. I’m doing this for your own good.”

Henry barely held back the urge to throttle Jasper.

After his stupor, Prince let out a loud laugh. “Hahahaha. This is hilarious. Do you see this, Henry? Even Jasper’s given up on you! How’re you going to keep fighting?”

Prince turned to Jasper after laughing out loud and said, “Haha! I have to say, Jasper. Even if you’re very annoying, at least you can read the room. You know that there’s no way to fight back, so why not just surrender, right?”

Prideful, Prince felt extremely elated.

As if he could already see the scene of Henry lying face down on the ground and calling him Daddy.

At this moment, Prince could not help but think of the man who always wore a faint smile on his face.

‘Tsk. This Conrad’s status might be a little low, but the man’s got a good plan. He’s even managed to hold Jasper back. Not bad. Not bad at all!’

However, Prince had no idea how many times Conrad had lost horribly to Jasper. Prince would not think this way if he knew.

Just then, Henry glared at Jasper and seemed to have understood the intention behind the latter's gaze and expression.

"Follow my lead!"

While confused and suspicious, Henry decided to follow Jasper's lead out of his trust for the latter.

"Fine, then I'll tum myself in." Henry pouted.

"It's just a small issue. It's not like they can execute me by shooting over this."

"They won't. It's stated in our national law that turning yourself in is a mitigating factor. Suspects will be charged leniently," Jasper replied calmly.

Prince's smile slowly fell at the duo's cooperative performance.

He narrowed his eyes and Jasper and Henry, suddenly feeling that his plan was not going as smoothly as planned.

Jasper's next words then had Prince's heart skipping a beat

"But this is a huge problem and there's no way we'd be able to hide it. How about this, Henry, do you want to call your dad or should I? We should at least tell the elders about the situation."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1204

If anyone was curious about what risking everything for victory entailed. Then this was it.

Once Jasper realized that the current situation was difficult to solve, he made the riskiest as well as the most correct choice...

"You want to blow this situation out of proportion, right?"

"Then I'll blow it up with you. We'll make as big a deal as possible out of this situation."

"I'd like to see who gets pushed past their limits first."

Jasper planned to escalate the importance of this situation beyond a point Prince was willing to accept.

“A murder charge, right?”

“Sure.”

‘Then I’ll have Henry turn himself in. ‘And pull the entire Law family into play.’

‘I’d like to see how long you can hold on, Prince Chavez.’

Jasper’s biggest support in all this was his belief that Henry had nothing to do with this murder. By then, as long as the entire Law family was involved, the truth would naturally be revealed as well.

No matter how arrogant Prince was, the man would not be able to endure the pressure of the entire Law family. However, all of this was based on the most important condition that Henry had nothing to do with the victim’s death.

As expected, Prince was stunned.

He did not expect this at all.

'Instead of thinking about how to compromise with me and exchange benefits or how to get Henry to surrender to me, Jasper decided to turn Henry in directly! How could people like this exist?'

"Are you sure? The situation would be beyond what you can control once you really turned yourself in, haha," Prince mustered up the courage to say.

Both Jasper and Henry took in his behavior. They could tell that Prince was afraid.

"It's alright. A life for a life, right?" Henry chuckled, his eyes gleaming with fury and something cold.

"Weren't you the one who kept telling me to pay the price? Sure. I'll pay the price and turn myself in."

"Thought before that, I'm going to have to tell my dad and my grandfather first. After all, I am the Law family's only son."

"By then, the Law family will definitely do everything to investigate the truth behind all this."

“I’ll tell you now, Prince, that my family’s temper isn’t the best.”

“You better run to your dad and ask him to come up with a plan fast if my family finds out that there’s something off. Too slow and my family might just crush you straight away.”

Prince bit the inside of his cheek silently at Henry’s words. He stared at Jasper and said grimly, “Are you really going to blow this incident beyond what can be resolved?!”

Jasper chuckled and sat on the sofa. He crossed his legs and said, “You’re the one who brought this up, crown prince.

You’re the one who wanted Henry and me to pay the price. So why am I suddenly blowing this ‘beyond what can be resolved’ now?”

“Or perhaps you thought that you could keep Henry compliant under your control here? Is that right?”

Prince barked out an angry laugh at Jasper’s words.

“Fine, then. Go turn yourselves in. I have conclusive evidence and the truth, yet here you are threatening me instead. So what if you’re the Law family? You think you can overpower and control the Chavez family?”

“This is the mainlands, not Harbor City. No matter how powerful the Law family is, they’re still not invincible!”

Henry had always been the most powerful trust-fund child.

This incident had caught him off guard and Henry was extremely pissed about this. Hearing Prince’s claim now, he did not think any further and pulled out his phone angrily.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1205

“Fine, then. The Law family may not be invincible, but getting rid of your Chavez family is child’s play! Come on, then. Whoever surrenders first is a f*cking idiot!”

Henry then dialed the number.

Prince narrowed his eyes and stared as Henry made the call. It would be a lie if he said he was unafraid. He was well aware of what he did.

This had been a setup ever since the beginning but the situation would be extremely difficult to control once the Law family was enraged and the higher-up's power came into play.

His methods were meant to pressure and make Henry surrender. The goal of this was just to take revenge. This did not mean he had the courage to cause a huge war between the Law and the Chavez family.

'Since this incident involves murder, there's no way the Law family would let Henry go to prison. So they'll definitely investigate and find out the truth. By then, they'd know that this was a setup too!'

Prince felt lightheaded at the thought.

The incident had gotten out of his control ever since Jasper arrived and this infuriated Prince.

Prince turned his head to stare at Jasper only to see the same calm and small smile on the man ever since the beginning. As if he was not afraid to blow the incident out of proportion.

Prince gave it some thought before he scoffed and told Jasper, "Don't blame me for what happens when this gets out of hand, Jasper."

Jasper glanced at Prince and said calmly, "With your level of intellect, you wouldn't be able to come up with such a plan. Meaning you have someone planning for you. Let me think, Fabian Atticus?"

Prince's limbs felt numb when he heard Jasper.

'What kind of monster was Jasper? How could he see through the truth with one sentence?'

Still, Prince could not admit it.

"Cut your bullsh*t. As if I'd need others' help to get rid of you!"

Jasper smiled and replied, "You'd know best if you needed external help."

"Henry, do you know the victim's identity?"

Henry stopped dialing and nodded. "I do, the son of a coal company's owner. His family's pretty wealthy."

"Contact the victim's family too. You've got to say something since their son's dead."

Henry frowned slightly. "Do I have to? There's nothing for me to say anyway, I wasn't the one who killed his son."

"I'll just tell my dad directly then I'll go and tell the authorities next. I'm sure they'll investigate the truth."

Prince felt a vein on his head throb, and said, "It'd be good to tell the victim's family too. That way the situation won't go beyond what cannot be salvaged."

Jasper chuckled too and replied, "Is this crown prince showing rare kindness?"

Prince clenched his jaw and balled his fists. He really wanted to punch Jasper across the face.

Prince's gaze flickered between something bright and dark as he said, "It's one of my friends that died. I'm just speaking for his sake."

After he finished talking, a loud commotion sounded outside the door and a group of people rushed into the private room noisily.

The one leading was a middle-aged man, and from the clamor, Jasper came to know who the man was. It was Timothy Burke, the victim's father.

Once entering the doors, Timothy glared with bloodshot eyes at everyone in the private room. He roared, "Who's Henry Law?"

"I'd risk my life today as long as it means I'll take revenge for my dead son!"

Even Prince was stunned to see Timothy and the latter's group of men.

Evidently, the appearance of the Burke family was beyond what he and Conrad had expected.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1206

In truth, Jasper had been watching Prince's expression and reactions since Timothy entered the room. From Prince's reaction, Jasper had some gained valuable information.

Prince did not expect Timothy's appearance. In fact, Prince was extremely shocked.

Just as Jasper thought about how the situation would change with Timothy's appearance, Henry spoke up.

"I am..."

While Timothy was overcome with utter rage and resentment, Henry was completely unafraid.

As far as he was concerned, there was no reason for him to be afraid when he did not kill Timothy's son.

Timothy immediately glared at Henry when the latter replied.

“Henry!”

Timothy clenched his jaw, his voice sounded extremely pitiful.

“My son’s been spending time with you people all this while. Even if he was ignorant and accidentally offended you, then couldn’t you just have scolded him? The Law family is powerful and wealthy, we can’t afford to offend you.”

“But you shouldn’t have killed him! I’ll make you pay with your life for this!”

Henry frowned and replied patiently, “I know that you’re very angry, but you have to listen to my explanation. This has nothing to do with me.”

“Nothing to do with you?!” Timothy smiled in extreme anger.

“My son is now a cold body lying in the morgue. You think a mere ‘nothing to do with you’ will let you get out of this unscathed? You’re going too far!”

Timothy shouted. The group of people he brought over seemed to be well prepared and each of them had a cold look in their eyes as they each pulled out a machete from their waists.

From the way things looked, it seemed like these people would do anything to take Henry's life today. There was no going back once that happened.

Julian's gaze was serious and he looked ready to move anytime.

Just then, Jasper walked out.

"Mr. Burke, there really is a misunderstanding."

Jasper's tone was calm. "Just think about it, everyone knows that it's big trouble to be involved in a murder. Not to mention the murder of someone from the Burke family. What deep hatred must Henry have toward your son to kill him without regard?"

"Even if he's got some irreconcilable hatred with your son, there's no need for him to kill your son himself and leave evidence behind, right?"

"He could've just found some random people to kill your son in secret. There's no promise that he would get away, but at least he wouldn't leave such obvious evidence, correct?"

"More importantly, even if Henry had killed your son, there's no way he would wait for you to come after him here. It's not logical."

Jasper's words were sensible, but Timothy was driven by the pain of losing his child and he did not care.

"I don't care who you are but get lost right now. I don't need to hear your explanation all I want right now is to make Henry pay for killing my son!"

Timothy had just finished speaking when the dozen or so men immediately surrounded them with gleaming blades in hand.

Just then, Prince took two quiet steps backward and narrowed his eyes as he watched the scene unfold.

Regardless of why Timothy appeared here, Prince could tell that Timothy's appearance had helped to break the impasse Jasper caused. This was something good for him.

Once Jasper realized that a conflict could not be avoided, he no longer hesitated.

"Jul, disarm them."

Julian immediately carried out Jasper's instruction. While there were more than a dozen people and they were all evidently fighters from their fierce faces, these people were no match for Julian.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1207

Knives gleamed and people shouted. It had only taken Julian a few moves before the man held four to five machetes in each hand and tossed them onto the ground. The machetes hit the ground with a clang.

Of the dozen or so men, those who were smarter still stood while those who fought back against Julian were now lying on the ground.

Timothy was stunned.

He had never seen someone as powerful as Julian.

Seeing that Timothy had calmed down, Jasper asked calmly, “Can you listen to me now, Mr. Burke?”

Timothy’s gaze turned cold and his chest still heaved in anger.

“I won’t say much, Mr. Burke. But give me one day. I promise I’ll bring you the true murderer.”

Jasper's words finally got a reaction out of Timothy. Timothy stared at Jasper and said, "The murderer is Henry. What more is there to say?"

Jasper shook his head and replied, "I understand that you've lost your son and you're going through a lot of pain right now, Mr. Burke, that's why I'm going so far to explain it to you. I also don't want to watch you being used to carry out someone's dirty work. But if you're adamant about Henry being your son's murderer, then I won't waste time explaining so much with you either."

Timothy clenched his jaw and replied, "Alright. Then I'll give you one day. I'll look for you again this time tomorrow and if you can't fulfill your end of the deal, then it's as I said before. I don't care how powerful the Law family is, but I will risk my life if it means I make Henry pay!"

With that, Timothy then turned and left with his people in tow.

Once Timothy left, Jasper immediately turned to look at Prince and asked indifferently, "Are you ready, Your Highness?"

"What?" Prince was stunned.

"For a full-out war with the Law family and my JW," Jasper replied coldly.

Prince reacted as if he heard a huge joke.

“Who do you think you are? You think you can attack me without preparing? Do you have a death wish or something?”

Jasper smiled faintly and turned to Henry. “Call your dad and tell him.”

Henry did not hesitate and dialed the number.

While Prince continued to sneer at Jasper.

The corner of Jasper’s lips curled upward slightly and he said, “You’ve really been used this time, Your Highness. It’s a hefty price you’re going to have to pay.”

Jasper then called Jake who was far away in Harbor City.

“Gather the funds and prepare to attack Clear Seas.”

Jasper then hung up the phone. Soon later, Henry passed his phone to Jasper.

Zachary wanted to talk to Jasper.

Looking at Prince's darkening expression, Jasper took the phone.

"Uncle Law," Jasper greeted.

"What happened?"

Zachary's tone was extremely stern on the other end of the line.

"Basically Henry's been framed and it involves murder. There's no way we're leaving this be when Clear Seas is coming for Henry's life."

Prince felt his head throb at Jasper's words.

"Will you attack or should I?" Zachary asked.

Jasper glanced at Prince and replied to Zachary calmly, "I plan to attack Clear Seas."

“Alright.”

Zachary paused for a bit before he continued, “I’ll leave Henry’s safety to you, then. Call me if the situation gets worse, the Law family will do everything to protect Henry.”

Jasper nodded and replied, “Leave it to me, Uncle Law.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1208

Jasper was unsurprised by Zachary’s reaction.

Even he was certain that Henry did not kill anyone, let alone someone in the Law family.

As parents, they would know their own child’s character best.

It was also expected that the Law family would do everything to protect Henry.

Not to mention that the situation had not even been investigated yet. With how the Law family were, there was no way they would just stand and watch as Henry was put behind bars.

Prince, who watched and heard Jasper's conversation with the Law family, was in a horrid mood right now. He did not expect Jasper and Zachary to be so headstrong and willing to start a huge war with the entirety of Clear Seas over this.

Prince stared at Jasper, the corner of his lips twitching, and said resentfully, "And you're so confident that you'll win, Jasper? Clear Seas is much more powerful than you could ever imagine!"

"I know."

Jasper replied immediately.

As one of the earliest and biggest privately-owned capitals, there was no doubt that Clear Seas was extremely strong in terms of their capital or any other aspects.

"But so what?"

Jasper looked at Prince and said coldly.

"Timothy is nothing more than just another weapon against me. The moment you decided to join in was when you became a mere weapon too. Don't you get it?"

“I might not be some wealthy or renowned family, but I have my limits. You can pick a fight with me but I will not allow you to use the people around me as a bargaining chip to threaten me. Or else, what’s the point of me making so much money and establishing so many companies?!”

“If you’re so willing to be someone else’s pawn, then I’ll just eat you and move on. So what if it’s Clear Seas I’m dealing with? So what if it’s Fabian Atticus?”

“I don’t care who you are, but cross my boundaries and I will do everything I can to get rid of you!”

Prince’s expression soured further at Jasper’s words.

While Henry now looked at Jasper with excitement.

“Holy sh*t. Hell yeah! Assert dominance!” Henry cheered.

No matter what would happen to Henry in the future, the man was extremely grateful that there was still someone choosing to stand with him unwaveringly at this moment.

At this moment, Jasper seemed to be glowing brightly through Henry’s eyes. Henry truly believed... ‘It sure is great to have a sister.

'Without a great sister, how would I have a great brother-in-law like Jasper?'

"Stop acting so arrogant, Jasper!"

Frantic, Prince glared at Jasper furiously. Fundamentally, Prince and Henry were the same kinds of people.

They were both sons of wealthy families, both arrogant trust-fund children. The only difference was that Prince was more selfish and was willing to do anything just to achieve his goal, while Henry had boundaries and this made the latter much more sophisticated.

However, Prince was naturally fearless and he had never surrendered to anyone before.

The scene was supposed to be much in his favor, yet Jasper had still managed to easily turn the tables and force him into a corner. Furious and indignant, Prince let go of all his inhibitions.

"You think that just because you have a few bucks and the Law family's support you'd be able to get rid of Clear Seas? Do you know why Clear Seas is the chain of business it is?"

“Clear Seas Industrial is backed by extremely strong capital stemmed from its group. No one in the country can claim that they’re strong enough to oppress Clear Seas! Let alone you!”

Prince roared wretchedly and resentfully while pointing at Jasper.

“Don’t blame me when you’re the one with a death wish! Worse come to worst I’ll just go back and tell my dad. Nothing will happen to me, but you’re screwed if you dare to fight against Clear Seas yourself! Haha! Do you even know how futile that is? You’ve overestimated yourself!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1209

Prince was not baselessly arrogant.

Since Clear Seas was indeed one of the strongest within the country’s capitalists.

However, right after Prince arrogantly shouted, a young man suddenly rushed into the room.

“Something bad happened, crown prince. The share prices of the three major stocks under your name, Sandxibit Technologies, Soaring Dragon Telecommunications, and Purple Seas Pharmaceuticals have plummeted across the board!”

“The contracts in the two funding organizations you host are also suddenly faced with the one-sided termination of contracts by many partners. The Securities Regulatory Commission is requesting an explanation from us.”

“If this continues, the Securities Regulatory Commission will likely revoke our funding organization’s financial practice license and we’ll be facing a lot of trouble now.”

The series of news had Prince stunned, the man’s arrogance and prideful expressions still frozen on his face.

He turned his head harshly and stared fiercely at the person who ran into the room. Prince asked in an icy tone, “What happened?”

The man replied sorrowfully, “I don’t know. Everything happened so suddenly and the company’s in a mess. The worst part, the worst part is that...”

“Tell me!” Prince raged.

“The worst part is that the headquarters seems to be aware of it already. They called just now and asked us to explain the situation to them. Your Highness, it’s possible, it’s possible that the old master already knows about this. There’s no way we can hide it from them at this point”

As if to prove the young man's words, Prince's phone rang at the same time.

Prince glanced at the caller ID and the corner of his eyes twitched, but the man still immediately accepted the call.

A gentle voice sounded on the other end of the line. "Mr. Chavez, the old master would like me to ask if you've gotten into trouble."

Prince let out a sigh of relief and forced a smile to reply, "It's alright, Uncle Fleming. It's just a small issue, I can deal with it myself."

Uncle Fleming on the other end replied kindly, "That's good, then. The old master has been busy signing a partnership with Great Britain's nationally owned energy group lately. He does not have the time to take care of business within the country."

"It would be best if you do not add to the old master troubles at such a time, young master."

"I understand," Prince took a deep breath and replied.

"You're welcome to look for me if there are any further issues, young master. But if there's nothing more, please hang up the phone first."

Prince ended the call and stared at Jasper with resentment and shock.

“What a powerful man you are, Jasper! It’s only been a few minutes and you’ve already started attacking?” Prince narrowed his eyes slightly.

There were countless companies that Clear Seas had invested in or was the holding company of. However, the core strength of this group lies in Clear Seas Industrial.

Be it the subsidiary properties held by Clear Seas or Clear Seas Industrial itself, they were not easy to attack. The former was too spread out and easily triggered, while the latter was just too powerful.

That was why Jasper texted Jake to directly attack the properties under Prince’s name.

It was highly effective.

However, a call from Jasper was not enough to have Jake cause the termination of contracts in Prince’s funding organizations.

This was evidently the Law family’s handiwork.

“This is only the beginning.”

Prince was enraged when he heard Jasper.

“Fine! Don’t blame me when you’re the one with a f*cking death Wish, Jasper! I’ll take on your fight today, let’s see who dies first! F*ck you!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1210

A dull thud sounded in the room.

That was the sound of Henry kicking Prince in the stomach.

These past few hours had Henry going crazy with all the bottled up fury.

He had always been the one framing others, not the one being set up.

With this incident of being set up involving such a sensitive subject, Prince was truly trying to get rid of Henry for good.

Henry had no option but to suppress his anger before since the situation was murky and not in his favor.

However, now that both parties were clearly going into war and Henry had Jasper and his family supporting him, he no longer held back his distaste for Prince.

“F*ck you! You motherf*cking b*tstard! I’ve had enough with you already!”

Henry ran after him to kick Prince a few more times.

“You really think I’m something you can mold and control as you wish? What the f*ck?”

Henry looked down at Prince from above and his eyes gleamed with the desire to devour Prince alive.

Henry pointed at Prince who was yelping pitifully and shouted, “Watch your words, stupid. Or I’ll kill your entire family!”

This was the second time Prince was getting beaten up by Henry and the resentment on the former’s face almost seeped out of it.

Still, no matter how much he hated Henry, Prince had no other option but to swallow his fury.

This was because he could not beat Henry in a fight, and a fighter like Julian was also present.

Lying on the ground, Prince's fingers scraped the carpet beneath him and clenched his fists tightly.

He slowly climbed up from the ground and wiped the blood off the corner of his mouth. Then he glared at Henry and Jasper.

"I'd like to see how much longer you two can act proud!"

Then, Prince left the private room with a limp.

Henry was furious and was about to run after Prince to continue beating him up, only for Jasper to help him back.

"Let him go. He's not the most important person in this fight anymore."

Henry frowned when he heard Jasper. “This f*cker’s full of bad news. He won’t just let this go if we let him run free.”

Jasper replied with a smile, “We’re already fighting to the death. Unless you plan to kill me right here and now?”

Henry waved Jasper off.

Beating Prince up to vent his anger was something insignificant.

Yet to kill Prince right here would escalate the situation into something extremely huge. No matter how powerful the Law family was, Henry would not be able to walk out of this unscathed if that happened.

Henry was a trust-fund child, but he was not stupid.

Two parties of substantial strengths and statuses would not engage in battle lightly. However, once engaged, it would certainly be a huge war. Fistfights between the two parties were no more than an outlet to vent.

“The most important thing now is to deal with your murder charge.”

Jasper glanced at Julian as he spoke.

“I’m going to need you to do the legwork, Jul.”

Naturally, Julian had no qualms and he replied solemnly, “What do I need to do?”

Jasper gave it some thought before pulled out a check from his breast pocket and filled it in. Handing it to Julian, Jasper said, “Take this money and go look for a few trustworthy people to follow you from the company. First things first, find everyone involved in the incident this morning.”

“Be it through threats or bribes, find leads.”

“There’s no way someone would die from getting slapped twice, so find out his true cause of death. This has to be investigated thoroughly because only with this truth will Henry be cleared of suspicion.”

Julian nodded and replied, “I’ll get to it immediately. But Jasper, if we can come up with this, they should have made preparations too, right?”

Jasper replied calmly, "The timing's too hasty. There's no way their planning is flawless."

"Worse come to worst we'll just do another autopsy. A living person can be bribed and threatened, but the dead doesn't lie. As long as the body's still there, there'll be evidence."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1211

Julian replied, “Got it. I’ll get to it immediately.”

Julian knew that time was of the essence, so he immediately got to work.

Jasper then turned to Henry and said, “Let’s go, then. Come back with me first. Don’t go anywhere for the next two days, just stay by my side.”

Henry scoffed and replied sourly, “What’s with this f*cking bad luck. Everything was going great before this troublesome thing happened.”

Jasper and Henry were busy discussing details of this murder on the way back to the hotel when Jasper received a surprising call.

When he saw Jasper fall deep into thought after reading the caller ID, Henry could not help but ask, “Who’s phone call got you looking so grim?”

Jasper smiled and said something that had Henry’s expression changing slightly.

“The little prince.”

After replying Henry, Jasper accepted the call.

Jasper had to pick the call up regardless of the reason behind the little prince’s sudden communication.

“You’re a busy man, Little Prince. It must be something important for you to take time out of your busy schedule to call me.”

A chuckle echoed through the speakers after Jasper finished talking.

“Nothing important, really. I’m just here to provide intel.”

Jasper arched his brow slightly in response.

“While I am very intrigued in seeing Henry, that fool, suffer a little from a prank, I’m more inclined to watch your stunning performance.”

Dominique's words implied that the man knew everything that had happened today.

Jasper was unsurprised.

Waterhoof City was the Royal family's territory. The strengths and depths of this family's roots were, as far as Jasper knew, unparalleled within the country.

The way Prince Chavez called himself the crown prince just because of Clear Seas Industrial was nothing in comparison to this family's strength.

This man had no right to call himself the crown prince in front of Waterhoof City's little prince.

A powerful entity, yet to be determined if friend or foe, that hid and watched the game play out from afar.

This was Jasper's impression of the little prince.

"Fabian sent someone from Harbor City a few days ago to look for Prince. The setup Henry's currently facing was also this person's idea. This person knows you very well, and I'd say the two of you are old friends, even."

Dominique did not hold out and immediately told Jasper what he knew.

“He’s also someone from home.”

With this, Jasper now understood who Fabian had sent over.

An old friend from home who knew him well. There was no one else but Conrad.

“So he’s joined Fabian’s side, then,” Jasper replied calmly.

Dominique commented mirthfully, “You don’t seem very surprised. I thought you might be a little shocked, at least.”

“It was a good choice to retreat from the personal conflict he had with me and advance his narrative by joining Fabian, who’s of a much higher status, to jointly get rid of me. But from what I see, the scale’s still a little small.”

Jasper stated calmly.

“He is merely a frog in a pond.

“Or a fish in bigger waters.”

“By jumping from a small pond to bigger waters, it might seem to him like a whole new world with much bigger possibilities. But...”

Jasper’s eyes shone brightly at this moment, and the corner of his lips quirked into an alluring and charming smile.

Seeing Jasper now, even Henry began to feel sour with envy.

‘What the f*ck. We’re both manly men, so how the heck do you look so cool showing off?’

“I have the blue sky above me while I step foot on the vast land. My future lies high amidst the clouds, and this game I play goes far beyond ponds and bigger waters.”

While Conrad plotted and climbed to what seemed like great heights, evolving from a pond frog to a fish in the sea in hopes of becoming someone much more formidable, Jasper’s every move altered the world. The two were realms apart, and the difference in their statuses had already become too huge to cross.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1212

“Hahaha! ”

Dominique laughed cheerfully on the other end of the call.

“I thought that you’d at least seem solemn, if not shocked, when I told you what I knew. Who’d have thought that you’d be so confident? Interesting. Things are getting very interesting.

“Looks like calling you was unnecessary, then.”

Jasper replied with a crescent- eyed smile, “You’re too kind, Little Prince. While I don’t really care whether it’s Conrad or Fabian that’s come over, this was still a very important piece of information. After all, the advantage of insider information is that, more often than not, it lets me plan far ahead.

“Perhaps we could have tea together next time?”

Dominique, who was in a villa on the outskirts of Waterhoof City, chuckled when he heard Jasper and replied, "I can have tea anytime, but... we'll talk about this again after you resolve this issue."

Dominique ended the call before he handed his phone to a confidant beside him. Then, he picked up the watering pot and carefully watered the plant in front of him.

"Little Prince, so we've decided to invest in Jasper, then?"

The confidant had grown up with Dominique. If this was back in the medieval ages, then this confidant would surely be someone like a personal attendant. This man was a confidant of confidants, so he was also more causal while speaking with Dominique, and which was also why he asked directly.

Dominique focused on the flower he was watering. Once he believed that he had watered it enough, he put the pot back down. The confidant immediately reached out both hands out to take the pot and place it by the side.

Dominique took the towel from the tray his confidant offered him to wipe his hands before he said slowly, "What do you think of my pot of noble orchids?"

The confidant smiled dumbly and replied, "I'm not a sophisticated man, and I don't really understand the art of exquisite playthings. I can't seem to understand the concept behind a sunflower that costs hundreds of thousands."

“Not understanding it is correct.”

Dominique pointed at the flowerbed before his eyes and said, “Every plant here is not necessarily cheaper than the noble orchid.”

“Be it one plant or ten plants, you’ll still have to take care of them. Every flower has its seasons, and they’ll bloom and wilt accordingly. No flower blooms throughout all four seasons, so if you want to be able to admire the beauty of this flowerbed, then you’re going to have to plant a few more. Do you understand me?”

The confidant gave it some thought before nodding. “I understand.”

Dominique chuckled and turned to walk into the house. While walking, he said, “Jasper and Clear Seas will have a harsh battle waiting for them. Pass along my instruction to cause Clear Seas a bit of trouble.”

“That old man, Vere Chavez, wants to sign the entirety of Great Britain’s contract. We should knock some sense into him too. Let him know that it’s never good to eat too much.”

“Yes, Little Prince. According to our sources, we’ve also heard the news that Fabian’s been getting rather close with the Chavez family. Perhaps the Atticus family plays a role in this? Should we teach them a lesson too?”

“The Atticus family? Forget them. Let Fabian, that mad dog, deal with Jasper. We’re mainlanders, so we’ll only deal with issues within the Mainlands.”

“I understand.”

...

This huge and extremely fierce battle in the financial industry had come without warning.

More than ten stocks on class A shares were under attack at the same time, as some of the rather alert investors immediately realized that master investors were fighting against each other.

After detailed analysis, it was revealed that these stocks were all important businesses under Clear Seas. Everyone became intrigued at this news.

Clear Seas was one of the strongest figures among the country’s capitalists. Most people did not dare to irk this ferocious entity.

However, as expected of one of the country’s most prolific entities, Clear Seas immediately made effective defense maneuvers.

As a result, under Jasper's instruction, the gruesome battle between the two parties was condensed to two stocks.

Sandxibit Technologies and Soaring Dragon Telecommunications.

These two companies were outstanding properties under Clear Seas, as well as Prince's core assets.

This battle Jasper initiated was extremely aggressive and forceful.

With the Law family's coordination and support, Sandxibit Technologies was the first to fall as it remained pinned at the limit down.

Soaring Dragon Telecommunications did slightly better, but it was soon approached the limit down as well.

Both Jasper and Prince had invested more than a total of 5 billion funds to attack each other.

While 5 billion was not much to Clear Seas, it was an extremely intense battle since the power was focused on only two of Prince's companies.

Bang!

Prince kicked the coffee table in front of him over; The man was akin to a furious devil.

“B*stards! Where’s the support from the headquarters?! Is that group of people just going to f*cking sit and watch as Jasper attacks my stocks and holds the share price at the limit down? Aren’t they scared that my dad will kill them once he returns?!”

A subordinate mustered up the courage to reply, “Crown Prince, the headquarters said that they need to prepare to defend against the Law family, so they don’t have enough hands to help us now. From the way the current situation looks, it seems like we’re on our own for now.”

“Motherf*cker! Useless trash! Every single one of them boasted and called themselves stock gods in front of my dad, but the second the Law family gets involved, they all run away with their tail between their legs. What a bunch of motherf*cking trash!”

Prince clenched his jaw in fury and looked up to ask, “What about the people from the main house? Are they here yet?”

The subordinate immediately replied, “The plane just landed ten minutes ago. They should arrive in around half an hour.”

“Good!”

Finally, with one piece of good news, Prince was greatly reenergized. “White Glove’s been my dad’s personal bodyguard for more than a decade. With him here, there’s no way Henry, that stupid f*cker, would get to hit me! It’s finally f*cking time for me to beat him up!”

Prince’s cheek flushed and he felt the urge to drag White Glove over to Henry and regain his lost dignity.

At that moment, the room doors opened.

Conrad walked into the room and swept his gaze over the messy sight before him. He asked, “You were looking for me, Crown Prince?”

Prince quickly walked over when he saw Conrad and grabbed the latter by the collar. Prince narrowed his eyes and stared at Conrad murderously.

“Why did Timothy suddenly appear, Monty?! Don’t you dare tell me that you had no idea about this! Explain yourself right now!”

Conrad gave a small smile. Prince might be grabbing his collar, but the man seemed unaffected by it. Instead, he said calmly, “We’re allies now, Crown Prince. How am I supposed to explain anything to you if you grab my collar like this?”

Prince pushed Conrad away and said disdainfully, “Allies? With Fabian maybe, but you’re just a dog! You are unworthy to be my ally!”

Conrad straightened his clothes and said with a peaceful look in his eyes, “You’re right, Your Highness. I’m unworthy, indeed.”

Prince scoffed and said, “You better give me a reasonable excuse. Timothy’s appearance was never part of our agreed plan. If your explanation is unsatisfactory, I guess I’ll just have to call Fabian.

“And tell him that I killed his dog. I’m sure he wouldn’t mind.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1213

Conrad looked at Prince quietly and narrowed his eyes. From the other’s gaze, Conrad knew that Prince meant what he said.

This made Conrad derail from his original plan.

“What do you think of Jasper, Your Highness?”

Conrad asked instead of replying Prince.

Prince scoffed and replied, “That b*stard’s so hollow that even his eyelashes are empty inside. I wouldn’t be facing this predicament if not for that *sshole. What do you think?”

Conrad sighed and pulled Prince’s hand off his collar. “As you can tell, Crown Prince, Jasper is indeed an extremely difficult opponent to deal with.”

“To be frank with you, I was watching the scene through surveillance cameras the entire time. I know when Jasper arrived and what happened afterward.”

“This is also why I had someone direct Timothy over. Otherwise, Jasper would most likely have completely turned the tables.”

Prince replied indignantly, “Turn your foot! Henry is obviously related to this incident. No matter how powerful Jasper is, there’s no way he can rewrite the truth!”

Conrad smiled and said, “But Your Highness, the real people who’ve rewritten the truth are us, no?”

“Both of us are well aware of how the man from the Burke family died.”

“When you told him to hurt himself and gain Henry’s trust, he was too afraid of Henry’s domineering aura to agree. All you did was push him in a fit of anger, Crown Prince, and he happened to drink too much. He hit his head against the wall, meaning his death was an accident.”

“Still, Crown Prince, you’re the direct perpetrator in this accident. Henry is just an unlucky subject you’re framing.”

“But what’s fake will always be fake. A plan like this might work for ordinary people, but it’s far from enough to deal with Jasper.”

Prince’s expression darkened further at Conrad’s words.

“Who’d have thought that he’d be so useless! I just pushed him slightly when he slipped and he hit the corner of the coffee table! What the f*ck! What kind of f*cking bad luck is this?”

“Since the incident’s over, then there’s no point in dwelling over it,” Conrad said calmly. Then, he changed the topic instead of remaining conflicted over the murder.

“I heard that you need money, Crown Prince. Mr. Atticus said that he’s willing to lend you 1 billion without interests.”

Prince’s expression lit up joyfully at Conrad’s words. “Really? 1 billion worth of funds isn’t a small amount. Even bridge loans come with an interests of millions. But he’s just giving it to me for free?”

With his assets under Jasper’s attack, Prince was currently badly short of cash. This 1 billion Somer Dollars had come just in the nick of time.

“Mr. Atticus said that making a friend out of Your Highness is more important than the bit of interest he might have earned.”

Prince liked Conrad’s choice of words.

However, before Prince could smile, Conrad continued, “Mr. Atticus is willing to lend this money to you for 1 month without interests, Crown Prince, but there are still regulations to follow. For example, mortgaging the shares of two of your best and listed companies.”

“Huh?” Prince frowned and looked at Conrad. Something felt off about this.

“Not to worry, Crown Prince. It’ll be stated in the contract that the shares will only be transferred to Mr. Atticus if you do not return the 1 billion loan in 1 month’s time.”

“This mortgage is merely for formalities’ sake. Not to mention that this 1 billion is nothing to Clear Seas, and you’ll also earn much more after you’ve gotten rid of Jasper, Your Highness.”

Prince gave it some thought before agreeing to the deal. “Alright. Then we’ll go according to your plan.”

Conrad smiled brightly as he watched Prince sign the loan contract with his head down.

Once all the procedures were completed, Conrad excused himself from Prince’s room.

Once he exited the room, the humility and smile on Conrad’s face immediately disappeared.

Conrad took the elevator down and got into the car, then he pulled out his phone and dialed a number.

“Mr. Atticus, Prince refuses to partner with us.”

The other end of the call fell silent for a moment. “Forget it, then. Let him fend for himself. There’s no need to interfere with the issue between him and Jasper. He’ll know who to turn to for help once Jasper’s hit him hard.”

Conrad remained expressionless when he heard Fabian’s instructions.

“Then, should I stay in Waterhoof City or return to the Southeast Province, Mr. Atticus?”

Fabian pondered for a moment before he replied, “Stay in Waterhoof City for now. Jasper’s existence is a real problem for us.”

“Wait for an opportunity. There’s nothing wrong with causing him more trouble in advance once there’s a chance, and we don’t lose anything if no such opportunities arise. After all, we have an idiot like Prince taking the brunt of the attack.”

“I understand, Mr. Atticus,” Conrad replied.

“That’s it, then. Don’t contact me again unless it’s something important. I’ll be busy dealing with something big. Once this is done, then it’ll be time to reel Jasper in as well. I’ll contact you if anything else pops up.”

After ending the call, the corner of Conrad’s lips then curled into a playful smile.

“To Peace Church.”

The driver was stunned for a bit when he heard Conrad’s request and asked, “Are we not going back to the hotel, Mr. Monty?”

“Do your job.”

“... Yes, Mr. Monty.”

...

Life at The Top – Chapter 1214

Using the 1 billion Prince got from Conrad, he immediately began to attack Jasper.

This counterattack was immediately carried out in the stock market. Instantly, the quiet class A shares were roped into another storm.

The 1 billion dollar injection would cause a huge change to any stock in the country’s current securities market.

“Someone outside helped Prince.”

Jasper looked at the market trendline and immediately made the correct deduction.

Henry instantly got to his feet and asked, “Is it Clear Seas?”

Jasper shook his head and replied, “Clear Seas and your father have come to a certain understanding. They’re both aware that the moment Clear Seas’ funds are transferred, the Law family will definitely begin their attack.”

“Clear Seas might be owned mostly by the Chavez family, but it’s not a family business. There’s no way other the shareholders would be idiots and transfer Prince their money to be poured down the drain, so it’s not them either.”

“Then what do we do now?” Henry looked at Jasper.

Henry could hold his ground if this was a physical fight, but participating in a battle without actual gunfire or blood was beyond his capabilities.

“No worries.”

Jasper shook his head confidently.

“I initially made the preparations to go into full out war with Clear Seas, but your father and them have come to an understanding to contain my battle with Prince to the three stocks under his name. Since this is the case, then I’ll completely crush him!”

“So what if he has outside help?”

At least 500 million worth of funds had been invested into the three shares. Jasper knew that this money had not been given to Prince for free. There had to be a price for this gift.

What Jasper needed to do now was completely devour these funds.

Jasper pulled out his phone to call Celine, who was far away in Harbor City.

“You guys can make your move now,” Jasper said. Jasper and Celine had already come to an understanding a long time back.

As president of Colossal Investments’ Terra regional branch, Celine was in dire need of a chance to show her ability to earn the company some hefty profits.

Meanwhile, Jasper needed to completely destroy all three of Prince's listed companies.

Business wise, it was only natural they partnered together.

Personal feelings-wise, well, everyone understood. "But I saw the injection of new funds into the market. Is it another player or was that Prince himself?"

In the brightly lit office in Harbor City, Celine sat in her chair as she played with her freshly done nails and asked lazily.

Opposite her sat a group of Colossal Investments' high ranking executives. Every single one of them looked at Celine with cold sweat beading on their foreheads.

No one dared to offend this strong willed president in the office. Celine had even gotten the nickname Woman of Steel because of how firm she was in her management style.

While Celine's high pressure policies had caused extreme agony to the office, employees could see the rapid performance improvements and generously growing monthly bonuses. Thus, everyone was greatly impressed by this ex-general manager, now current president.

However, no one had ever seen the merciless Woman of Steel, Celine, act so casual, alluring, and feminine before.

While the group of Colossal Investments' Terra regional branch's high – ranking executives were busy wondering what formidable person Celine was on the phone with, Jasper had already replied to Celine's question.

“According to the intel I have now, this is money Prince's acquired from external channels by himself. There's already 500 million invested in the three stocks, while I place an initial estimation of his total funds to be around 800 million to 1.2 billion. Possibly more.”

Celine harrumphed and replied, “I can make a move right now, but I'll make it clear first. The investment bank has a bullish view of Soaring Dragon Telecommunications, so I'm going to take it when the time comes.”

Jasper replied calmly, “Since this is an attack on behalf of the investment bank, then there's no reason for you to help without earning any benefits for your side as well. I have no qualms with you taking Soaring Dragon Telecommunications.”

“Deal. Wait for my good news, then.”

Jasper was about to hang up the phone when he suddenly heard Celine ask, “Hey, how long has it been since we saw each other?”

“ ... ”

Mr. Laine felt exasperated.

“A few months, I think?”

“3 months and 4 days to be precise.” Celine scoffed.

“As expected, all men are trash.”

Beep beep beep...

Jasper put the phone down and rubbed the bridge of his nose.

He was about to say something when his phone rang again.

Seeing that it was an unknown number, Jasper arched his brow slightly.

“Hello, this is Jasper Laine. Who’s this?”

“Chat with me?”

Jasper immediately knew who was calling from those three words.

“On the phone or somewhere else?”

“Peace Church.”

“30 minutes. ”

Jasper put the phone down and got up while asking Henry, “I’m going to meet an old friend. Wanna come?”

Henry shook his head. “No thanks. I’ll wait for Julian to get back. Jesus Christ...”

“Relax. I’ll definitely get you out of this.” Jasper smiled.

“I’ve never been set up like this before!”

Peace Church used to be a rather famous and supposedly very spiritual church in Waterhoof City.

However, with the influx of pilgrims came the construction of the business and residential districts. With time, this area had been partitioned to become one of Waterhoof City’s administrative districts, and was now considered the city center.

Jasper made his way to Peace Church and walked straight into the cathedral. Upon entering the main hall, Jasper looked up to see Conrad sitting on the pew with his hands clasped tightly as he prayed.

Jasper walked over and sat on the pew next to Conrad. Placing his hands together, he prayed as well.

“I thought you didn’t believe in God,” Conrad said with a small smile as he stared intently at the cross.

“I didn’t before,” Jasper replied.

He had indeed been an atheist in his past life, but after being reincarnated, Jasper could not help to think that there might be some larger entity in this world.

“It’s not like I believe wholeheartedly. But that’s how these things are, it exists if you believe and disappears if you don’t. There might not be a God that’s watching over your every move, but a person’s morality is what defines that person’s words and behavior.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1215

A middle aged woman walked over as the two conversed.

The woman was dressed poorly and her complexion was dull. Seated on the pew, she murmured her prayers.

Jasper and Conrad were a short distance away from her, so they both heard how she prayed for her family member’s health.

After the middle aged woman left, Conrad said, “Only when people need help do they come and pray. Does anyone ever remember to light a candle for God when they’re without misery? People who come here are all suffering.”

“From your words, it sounds like you’re suffering from something too, Conrad,” Jasper said with a calm smile.

Conrad chuckled and replied, “The lower class worry if they can afford the next meal while the upper class worry if their interests will be affected by competition. Who can truly claim that they’re living carefreely?”

After praying, Jasper got up from the pew and said, “Looks like it isn’t easy colluding with Fabian.”

Conrad followed Jasper to stand as well and replied, “Looks like you already know this, Jasper.”

“Go ahead and tell me, then. Why did you look for me today?” Jasper asked calmly.

Conrad turned around to look at Jasper and said, “For a partnership.”

After speaking, Conrad took in Jasper’s unfazed expression and smiled before explaining, “A partnership between you and me.”

Only then did Jasper’s expression change slightly.

The first thing Jasper did when Conrad brought up a partnership was wonder if this was another trap set by Fabian.

However, now that Conrad clarified that this was a partnership between them, implying that this had nothing to do with Fabian, Jasper found the matter worth pondering over.

“Do tell,” Jasper said with a crescent eyed smile.

Conrad did not withhold any information and said frankly, “Fabian predicted that you would begin to take revenge and attack Prince. If Prince doesn’t request help from his family, then he’s no match for you.”

“So in addition to helping him plan, I also provided a sum of funds as financial support when he most needed it.”

With Conrad’s explanation, the source of Prince’s funds was explained.

Conrad or Fabian was the one who lent Prince at least 500 million.

Jasper arched his brow slightly and replied, “So I’ve seen.”

Conrad chuckled and continued, “I told Fabian that Prince rejected his funds.”

Jasper's expression immediately changed.

"When in truth, Prince has already taken 1 billion worth of funds."

Jasper looked at Conrad and asked, "Those funds were yours?"

Conrad laughed out loud, the smile on his face freezing. "This is why I sought you out to become my partner."

After saying that, Conrad pulled out the loan contract and passed it to Jasper.

Jasper narrowed his eyes slightly when he read the contents of the contract.

"What's next is simple. All you have to do is defeat Prince, and our partnership will be considered a success," Conrad stated.

"What do you want from this?" Jasper asked.

Conrad looked at Jasper and replied, "Purple Seas Pharmaceuticals belongs to me after this."

"No problem."

Jasper agreed curtly.

"But aren't you afraid that Prince and Fabian will take revenge afterward?" Jasper asked suddenly.

"I have my ways of turning the table. It's none of your business how exactly I do it. All I want is my share of the reward after you succeed," Conrad replied expressionlessly.

Jasper stared at Conrad for a long time before he replied, "Deal."

Conrad chuckled and extended his hand toward Jasper. "Then I look forward to working with you."

Half an hour later, Conrad walked out of Peace Church and got into his car. Then, he left without looking back. Jasper got into another car as well. He stared at the speeding car that soon joined the endless flow of vehicles through his rearview mirror and fell into thought.

Conrad had lost to him many times before. However, the man gave Jasper a completely different feeling this time.

Perhaps the various failures before had changed Conrad. A change that made this man much more sophisticated than he used to be.

Take this partnership as an example. In the past, Conrad would never attempt such a thing.

Still... It did not matter.

It would not be the first time Mr. Laine crushed Conrad anyway.

Like he told the little prince, this pond frog had only evolved into a fish in bigger waters. Whether Conrad manages to become someone even more formidable was still uncertain.

Thinking of this, Jasper gave Jake a call.

Jake's attitude was extremely courteous over the phone.

"There's no need to wait anymore. Prince's already showed his hand. He has a total of 1 billion gathered from an outside source. Make him use all of it. Borrow from the Law family if you don't have enough funds, I'll talk to Mr. Law about it in advance."

In Harbor City, Jake's demeanor sharpened, and he immediately replied, "Understood. I'll get to it immediately."

The taxi driver could not help but pout his lips when he heard Jasper's instruction.

'Youths these days. Instead of learning something good, each one of you bluffs better than the last. You're taking a cab and you talk about 1 billion dollars. I don't even see that much money in United Legends' in game currency.'

Life at The Top – Chapter 1216

The afternoon market had reopened by the time Jasper returned to the hotel.

Both Jake and Celine began their attack on all three of Prince's listed companies at the same time.

This wave of attack under Jasper's instruction was done extremely fiercely.

Financial battles could be complicated, but they could also be very simple.

The simplest and most aggressive method was to overwhelm them through sheer volume.

Direct oppression without any consideration for wins, losses, or consequences.

This was a game where you attacked at the cost of injuring yourself. There was no need for smarts at all. With enough funds, you could easily crush the battlefield to dust in the shortest length of time.

Prince did not have the chance to celebrate for too long after receiving the financial injection of 1 billion worth of funds this morning. The fierce attack this afternoon stunned him completely.

“How could this be?! Why is there another party?” Prince shouted in the room, his face pale.

The display in his room right now showed a petrifying line of plummeting share price.

“Our funds can’t hold on much longer, Crown Prince.”

A subordinate in charge of trading reported to Prince while sweating profusely.

Prince’s complexion was pale and his expression soured as he shouted, “Jasper that b*stard! He has another attack up his sleeve? Find out who’s causing the trouble right now! I’ll kill him!”

The traders immediately got to work under Prince’s instruction.

More than ten minutes into the chaos later, a subordinate placed their phone down and looked up to report, “Crown Prince, we traced the funds back to Harbor City.”

“The Law family?!” Prince exclaimed resentfully.

“No, it’s Colossal Investments!” The subordinate’s complexion was tragically pale.

“Colossal Investments attacked. They’ve used a huge amount of funds to short shares of all three of our companies. The situation’s looking very dire.

“Our funds will be completely devoured in the next 30 minutes if they continue to attack. All we can do is watch as our share price plummets.”

Prince stopped shouting when he heard his subordinate. He was stunned and stood rooted in place, his eyes blown wide open and his expression filled with disbelief.

Panting heavily, Prince worded his panic, “How, how can this be?! Why would Colossal Investments enter the market now? This isn’t logical at all!”

“Your Highness.”

A middle aged man who had been standing in the corner of the room quietly finally spoke up. He explained calmly.

“According to our sources, Colossal Investments Terra regional branch’s current president Celine Maynard is very close with Jasper Laine. There were signs of Colossal Investments’ involvement in Jasper’s huge battle with Seatreasures Group before too.”

Prince clenched his jaw at the middle aged man’s words and replied with resentment flaring in his eyes, “Contact Colossal Investments and tell them to give up their partnership with Jasper. Otherwise, Clear Seas will launch an attack on all their investments in the Mainlands! ”

The middle aged man shook his head. “Something so important can only be instructed by the old master himself. And even then, the old master has to come to a unified agreement with the other shareholders before it can be carried out.

“I’m afraid that they won’t take you seriously if you order such a thing.

“Not to mention... As the strongest investment bank in the world, Colossal Investments might not pay our threat any mind.”

Prince was enraged. “Then go look for that Celine Maynard and tell her to act smart! I’ll give her whatever she wants, money, status, anything!”

“You’ve already lost all rationale, Your Highness.”

The middle aged man's gaze was indifferent. "Jasper's played a huge part in Celine's assumption as the president of the Terra regional branch. Their relationship isn't something you can win over with a bit of temptation.

"Not to mention that Celine's familial background runs deep too. You'd only be humiliating yourself by attempting to bribe her."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1217

"Then what do you propose I do?!"

Prince was enraged after his previous ideas was systemically dismantled. He glared fiercely at the middle aged man.

"You're my dad's most trusted confidant, White Glove! Are you going to just watch me get screwed over?"

White Glove replied softly, "The old master already gave me specific instructions before this. I'm only in charge of your personal safety, so I will not interfere in anything else."

Prince panted heavily and roared, "Call my dad right now! I refuse to believe that Jasper is powerful enough to have a say in everything!"

...

“Prince is losing.” Jasper said in the hotel room with a crescent eyed smile. Looking at the computer screen in front of him, he took the glass of champagne Henry passed him and tilted his head back to enjoy a sip.

Henry replied excitedly, “Then amp up the attacks and completely crush this motherf*cker!”

“If he doesn’t have any more funds coming in, then I’ll give him one more hour at most before all his defenses fall. All three of his companies will be done for before the market closes today.”

In the beginning, the task of destroying all three listed companies involved a certain degree of difficulty.

After all, the shares listed on the stock market were only a percentage of a listed company’s overall shares.

Even if the company was crushed on the stock market, there would not be much difference to the company’s daily operations. The company would face a tight cash flow, but funding was never a problem when it came to Clear Seas.

However, with Conrad's coordination, this loan contract had just become a weapon that would cost Prince his life.

This greatly sped up Jasper's plan to completely crush Prince.

If Prince is wiped out on the stock market this week, then he would have no choice but to repay his loan according to the contents of the contract.

At this moment, Julian returned,

He had arrived with one other person in tow.

"Jasper, Mr. Law, there's been great progress in my investigation today."

Julian's expression was energized as he pointed at the jittery man behind him and said, "This is Grayson Cash. He clearly saw that after Henry slapped the Burke victim twice, the man then left safely and went to drink at a bar nearby.

"A group of people then brought the Burke victim away afterward. These people were sent by Prince."

Jasper looked at Grayson's terrified expression after he heard Julian.

From how terrified the man was, he must have already had a taste of Julian's ferocity.

"Is what he said the truth?" Jasper asked.

Grayson immediately nodded vigorously. "Yes, it's the truth. I saw it with my own eyes. I wouldn't dare to lie."

Before Jasper could say anything, Henry jumped up from his seat.

"Where're you going?"

Jasper immediately asked as he watched Henry make his way to the doors impatiently.

"Where else? We've got an eyewitness. I'm going kill Prince, that little brat!" Henry shouted.

"Come back."

Jasper felt exasperated. “There’s no need to rush.”

After stopping Henry, Jasper turned to ask Julian, “How did the autopsy go?”

If Jasper wanted to reinvestigate this incident, then the most crucial piece of evidence would not be a living eyewitness, but the deceased himself. Only the evidence found on the victim’s body was conclusive and unfalsifiable.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1218

Julian immediately replied after he heard Jasper ask this, “We’ve made even greater progress on the autopsy.

“I found the pathologist in charge of the victim’s autopsy. The victim’s verified that the cause of death was blunt force trauma to his temple leading to intracranial hemorrhage.”

“Moreover, according to the type of wound and the heavy bleeding, the fatal injury was completely unrelated to the slap from before.”

Julian might have sounded carefree, but both Jasper and Henry knew that a certain level of aggression was necessary for Julian to get his hands on these pieces of evidence so smoothly.

Grayson's expression of innate fear when he looked at Julian, like a mouse facing a cat, was proof of this.

"Good job."

Jasper nodded.

"Jul, bring this person alongside the pieces of evidence you gathered and hand them over to Timothy. He'll know what to do next."

While the death of Timothy's son had nothing to do with Jasper and Henry, it was still the loss of human life.

Not to mention that Jasper had promised Timothy yesterday that he would give the man a reply within a day.

Naturally, Jasper would not allow Henry, who did not murder anyone, to be framed. The true culprit behind it all had to face the consequences of his actions.

"I'll get to it immediately."

Julian was also very concerned about Henry's incident, and he would not delay the process.

"I'll bring you out for some fun after all this is over," Henry grinned and told Julian.

Henry might be a trust-fund child, and was someone who a majority of people would take as the typical uneducated son of a wealthy family, but he was not a bad person.

As long as Henry approved of you, then the man was a genuine and sincere friend to have.

It was just that not too many people were qualified for his approval.

Fortunately, Julian happened to fit the bill.

This showed that Henry did not make friends based on status or wealth.

Like the son of a renowned tycoon would say in the future, "They'd never be wealthier than me anyway."

Henry's status and familial background made him even more qualified to say such a thing than that tycoon's son.

Julian gave a small smile and replied, "Just treat me to a meal."

"Sounds like a plan."

Henry's great mood was evident in the man's eyes. After conversing a little longer, Julian bid Jasper goodbye and brought Grayson to Timothy.

Henry followed him this time.

With Julian around, there should not be too many issues. Not to mention that Henry also claimed that he was meeting Timothy to resolve the issue. Thus, Jasper let the man go without worrying about it.

After they left, Jasper turned around to sit in front of the computer while connecting a call to Jake.

"Give me a report on the current situation."

“Mr. Laine, since Colossal Investments are joining us to attack the three stocks without inhibition, we’ve made an unrealized loss of 780 million according to our accounts. We don’t have enough funds left.”

“Did you contact the Law family yet?”

“Yes. The Law family said that they’ll transfer another 1 billion funds to our account in half an hour. They’ll reimburse us in the future if it’s not enough, so there’s no limit to how much we can ask for.”

“Alright, then. Ignore the current profit or loss and focus on defeating all three of his listed companies. The assets we’d end of seizing will greatly surpass the current costs.

“Not to mention that we’d still attack even we ended up losing money. This was never a battle of interests, to begin with. Keep attacking until all three companies are completely destroyed.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1219

“Yes, Mr. Laine! ”

Under Jasper and Celine's coordinated attacks, the three primary companies under Prince's name immediately turned into gruesome financial battlefields under the barrage of never-before seen firepower.

Astronomical amounts of funds were used up every second.

When godlike entities fought, it was always the weaker retail investors that suffered the most.

Retail investors who used to hold stocks of all three companies wept shamefully as they stared at the terrifying amount of unrealized loss on their accounts.

They were too reluctant to sell their shares, but their wealth was also shrinking with every second they held the share.

This was a financial battlefield where the winner took all, and the strong consumed the weak. Most of the time, there was no way anyone could defend themselves against such exploitation.

This financial battle came without a warning and attracted the attention of quite a few financial companies.

However, since this was a battle involving a personal feud, all the financial companies decided that they would stay clear and simply watch from the sidelines.

They had initially entertained the idea of taking advantage of this fight to earn some profit, but they would need reevaluate their own capabilities first. The slightest mistake could cause them to lose all their wealth.

In the face of such a huge risk, all the organizations immediately sold their shares and exited the market.

They were all smart people who could easily tell that someone was actively picking on these three companies which were under Clear Seas' support.

This was no longer a fight of commercial interest.

As Jasper said before, he would fight the battle to the end if they attacked someone close to him, even he suffered a loss in doing so.

This was not a battle benefit driven organizations were willing to involve themselves in.

“The market’s crashing, Your Highness!”

A desperate shout rang out in the room and a few profusely sweating and pale faced traders looked at their drained funds before directing their gaze at Prince. “We’ve already thrown all 1 billion into the market, but the opponent seems to have an unlimited pool of resources. Without an influx of more funds, we’ll have no other option but to watch as they completely wipe out these three stocks, Crown Prince!”

Prince sat limply on the sofa whilst gripping a bottle of wine tightly in his hands. His expression was twisted and devilish.

“Useless! All of you are useless!”

Prince suddenly shouted.

“Each and every one of you boasted and claimed that you’re stock gods during your job interviews and when you asked for raises. Yet, now that I need you to work, what have you done but ask me for more money?!”

Prince threw the bottle of wine on the floor.

The bottle shattered the instant it hit the floor as the heavy scent of alcohol immediately filled the room. However, no one would be able to enjoy this flowery aroma of alcohol right now.

“I spend so much money feeding you people just so you can be useful to me at times like this! You think I’d need you people if I had enough money?! All I have to do is scatter dog food over the keyboard and even a dog would know to spend money for more buy in orders! What about you people, huh?”

The traders all kept their heads down as they were targeted by Prince’s almost insane shouting. No one dared to look the man in the face.

Panting heavily, Prince flushed in utter indignance.

“White Glove, has there been any reply from my dad?”

Standing in the corner of the room, White Glove replied softly, “The old master said that it’s currently the most crucial point of his negotiation, and he doesn’t have the time to deal with your issue. He’s also rejected the headquarters’ suggestion to transfer funds to help because he doesn’t want to make an enemy out of the Law family while he’s not present.”

“So, the old man’s just going to let me die then, huh?” Prince sneered.

White Glove replied calmly, “Please watch your words, Your Highness.”

“The old master has a thorough understanding of this incident. As far as he is concerned, this is no more than a quarrel between children.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1220

“A quarrel between children?!”

Prince let out an angry laugh.

“It’s because this is a quarrel that I have to win! Otherwise, how else am I supposed to keep my head held high when talking to others in the future?”

White Glove glanced at Prince and said calmly, “Crown Prince, the old master told you before that no one can win forever in this world.”

“Truly powerful people aren’t people that win every battle they participate in, but those who learn to stand up again after they’ve lost. You’ve still got a long way before you reach that point, Crown Prince, and this is also why the old master refuses to pass his authority to you just yet.”

Prince glared at White Glove and sneered. “Since when did you have the right to teach me lessons? Don’t forget who you are. No matter how much my dad values you, you’re still nothing more than my family’s servant!”

White Glove remained calm. It was evident that he had heard similar phrases before.

“I understand, Your Highness. I won’t speak out of line again.”

White Glove bowed slightly before he took a step back, retreating further into the corner of the room.

This meant he would not interfere anymore no matter what happened to Prince on the stock market.

Even without the support of more funds, Prince refused to give up.

He thought of all the different ways of gathering funds, thinking as far as to sell quite a few estates under his name.

This would usually represent quite a bit of money, but they were insignificant in a market that involved hundreds of millions and more.

“B*stards! Jasper that son of a b*tch! He’s got to be doing this on purpose!”

A week later, Prince cursed and shouted demonically as he stared at the screen with bloodshot eyes.

“He’ll slow down the attacks so I can take a breather every time I’m about to give up, but when I put in more money, he gobbles it up immediately.

“He’s cutting flesh off me piece by piece! He’s got to be doing this on purpose!”

In comparison to being crushed instantly, true torment was what Prince was currently going through. This slow game of cat and mouse was what pushed a person toward desperation and eventually go off the deep end.

Prince had lost a good few kilograms over the pasta week, and he was moments away from mentally breaking down.

“Perhaps we should give up, Your Highness. We’ve endured an entire week of hitting the limit down and our share price is only 30% of what it used to be a week ago. We’re going to have to exit the market if this continues.”

A trader mustered the courage to say.

Prince's head snapped over and he stared at the trader icily. Grabbing a glass next to him, he flung it at the trader's head.

The trader yelped and fell onto the floor with a hand covering his bleeding head.

"It's all of your faults, you useless pieces of trash! You're the reason I've lost so badly!"

Prince roared angrily.

He could almost imagine how he would become a laughing stock, doomed to be viewed as an idiot by countless people after this war.

This fury and humiliation was not something Prince could endure, especially considering how arrogant the man had always been.

He did not mind losing, so long as it was not to Jasper.

This concept had become a nightmare of his.

Staring at Prince, who seemed to have gone mad, the already quiet room turned deathly silent. No one dared to speak lightly anymore.

Prince heaved and fell onto the sofa. He clenched his jaw and said, "I still have a villa in Swallow Capital that'll sell for at least ten million. Sell it, immediately contact someone and sell it for me. I can sell it slightly cheaper but I need the money immediately!"

"I don't care if I sell all the assets under my name. I can get all of this back once my dad returns. I still am the crown prince of Clear Seas! No one can look down on me!"

Just as Prince arranged to contact someone to sell off his assets again, someone knocked on his door.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1221

Opening the door, he saw Conrad standing outside. “What are you doing here?”

Prince stared at Conrad icily and asked.

Conrad gave a small smile and replied, “Did you forget, Your Highness? Today’s the deadline we set one week ago. I’m here to take back the 1 billion you owe us.”

Prince was stunned for a moment before he waved the man off in annoyance. ‘Get lost. I’m not in a good mood now so don’t make me attack you. Can’t you tell what kind of situation I’m in? Where am I supposed to get you the money? I’ll pay you back once my dad returns.’”

Prince was about to close the door after he said this. However, Conrad raised his hand to stop the door from closing.

Faced with Prince’s dark gaze, Conrad said with a small smile, “We signed a contract in black and white, Your Highness.

“The 1 billion was lent to you for one week without any interest. But if you were unable to return the 1 billion when the time is up, then three companies under your name had to be liquidated.”

Prince finally understood that Conrad had come to collect his debt.

“What are you implying here?!”

Prince glared at Conrad icily and said venomously, “Are you claiming that I won’t be able to pay you back?!”

“Of course not,” Conrad shook his head.

“Your Highness has Clear Seas’ support and your father is one of the country’s financial industry’s leading figures. There’s no way you couldn’t pay the 1 billion back.”

“So, you are aware! ”

Prince sneered and continued, “Then what are you still doing here?”

“Your Highness.”

Conrad pulled out his loan contract and said calmly, "Either I leave with the money you owe us, or I leave with a stock transfer agreement for the three listed companies today. There's no way I can return empty handed."

"You wouldn't f*cking dare!"

The fury and humiliation Prince had been suppressing over the past week exploded at that instant.

Prince pointed at Conrad's nose and scolded, "As if you'd f*cking dare! You're just Fabian's dog! Not even Fabian would dare to speak to me like this, so who do you think you are?"

"I'm telling you right now! I don't have your money and you can dream on if you think I'll sign some stock transfer agreement! What can you even do to me, huh?!"

Conrad looked at Prince, who was both furious and fearless, then shook his head while sighing. "I guess there's no other option, then."

After this, Conrad tilted his body slightly and moved out of the way so that the people behind him could move forward.

Out from behind him walked Jasper, with an impatient Henry and a calm Julian following closely behind.

Prince's mouth gaped in shock at the sight of this, his mind had yet to process what was happening.

"Looks like the crown prince is in financial embarrassment and debt."

Jasper said first with a smile.

Jasper then turned to look at Conrad and replied, "Mr. Monty, His Highness is still Clear Seas' crown prince and I'm certain that he'd repay his debt in due time. How about this, I'll pay you 1 billion instead, and you transfer the creditor fights to me? Would that be alright?"

Conrad chuckled and glanced at a dazed Prince before replying, "Of course. All I need is the principal loan amount. The crown prince is of formidable status and I am but a mere dog. I would never dare to collect the crown prince's debts."

Prince watched as Conrad and Jasper spoke in an almost rehearsed fashion.

Conrad then handed the loan contract to Jasper as Prince felt a rush of blood rise to his brain. He roared, “Motherf*cker! You set me up?”

Conrad glanced at Prince and replied calmly, “You might not know this very well, Your Highness, but the most distinguishing characteristic of a dog... is that it bites.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1222

Prince paled at Conrad’s words.

Not out of fear, but infuriation.

Due to the huge difference in status between the two, Prince had never considered Conrad a threat.

He meant it when he said that Conrad was merely Fabian’s dog, as he truly saw Conrad as nothing more than a dog that could speak the human language.

This was also why Prince acted as arrogant as he did with people who were below him in terms of identity and status.

His disrespect for Conrad was the reason why Prince was so furious when he realized that Conrad had played him like a fool.

“Son of a b*tch! I’ll kill you for this!”

Prince shouted and raised his fist to punch Conrad. Conrad had already learned of Prince’s mad dog like aggression and was prepared this time.

The man took half a step backward and moved out of the way.

No one knew if it was coincidental or intentional, but Conrad moving out of the way put Henry right in the path of Prince’s fist.

Henry, who had been in a horrible mood since Prince set him up more than a week ago, was already itchy with the desire to fight since they made their way over.

Hence, when Henry saw Prince’s fist coming toward him, he did not care if it was a misunderstanding or not as he grabbed Prince’s wrist backhandedly. Before the man would yelp, Henry raised his foot to kick him in the stomach.

Prince was a young master whose body had long been hollowed out by alcohol and sex. The man was no match for a powerful trust-fund child like Henry who constantly trained his body and even picked up a few tricks from Julian. This kick landed on Prince's stomach solidly.

Everyone watched as Prince widened his eyes and curled over like a cooked prawn. The man opened his mouth but no sound came out. His expression was extremely pained and twisted.

"Did that feel good, motherf*cker?"

Henry barked out a wretched smile and raised his hand to grab Prince's collar. The former's eyes shone fiercely.

"White... White Glove! How dare you f*cking stand dare and watch him kill me?" Prince suppressed the pain in his stomach and shouted.

Once he finished speaking, the figure of a middle aged man appeared by his side.

White Glove raised his hand to grab Henry's hand which was on Prince's collar.

Everything happened in a flash.

Before Jasper and Henry could react, Julian first grabbed White Glove's wrist and stopped the man. Julian appeared beside Henry in a flash and reached out to meet White Glove's pahn mid-air.

The two parried each other's blows seven times in the blink of an eye.

Both Julian and White Glove had backed down at the same time once Jasper and Henry realized what was going on.

White Glove remained unmoving while Julian had a slight sway in his stance. It seemed like the latter had lost slightly.

However, White Glove did not manage to get Prince out. This fight had ended with a draw.

White Glove looked at Julian intently and said, "You're rather skilled, young man."

Julian did not say anything as he glared daggers at White Glove while oozing with fighting spirit.

Henry jumped once he realized what happened. He grabbed Prince's collar with one hand and raised the other to slap Prince's face.

“Motherf*cker! Trying to scare me with dogs, are you?” Prince was impatient and angry after taking an unwarranted slap. He felt both wronged and mistreated.

“Mr. Law, perhaps you could listen to a servant’s words? Since you’ve come to solve a problem, then how about we solve the issue first? Fighting would not help the situation at all.”

White Glove seemed to recognize Henry and said to the man.

Henry scoffed and replied, “Who are you? If you know that you’re just a servant then why are you speaking now? Is this the place for you to talk?”

Prince finally realized the situation he was in.

He had lost this round.

However, his loss that he merely needed to pay the price and leave. It would be pointless to also be beaten up by Henry.

After coming to that conclusion, Prince quickly said, “Look, Henry. You wouldn’t dare kill me. Even if you did, you’d only be in deep trouble.”

“You win this time and I’ll just pay whatever price you want me to pay! But if you beat me up, then I’ll do everything to fight back!”

Henry looked at Prince icily and sneered. “You still think you’re in the position to negotiate terms with me, idiot?” Henry then held Prince down and beat him up.

Prince shouted raspily in pain. He wanted to fight back but he was no match against Henry. He could not even evade the other’s attacks.

White Glove frowned slightly and wanted to make a move but Julian was currently staring down at the man. The current situation was clear. Prince and Henry would deal with their own issue and no one else would interfere.

If White Glove wanted to get involved, Julian would not just stand by and watch either.

Thankfully, Henry did not lose his rationale. While he was beating Prince up, his attacks went no further than a few slaps and perhaps a few kicks. Most of the attacks were focused on the man’s limbs; his thighs and arms. It might hurt a lot, but it posed no danger to Prince’s life.

The beating lasted for another few more minutes before Henry panted and kicked Prince one last time on the ground. Pointing at the man, Henry scolded, “I’ve officially got beef with you now, you hear me, stupid f*cker? This beating is revenge for setting me up, but this doesn’t mean I’m letting you go.”

“You better walk the other way next time you see me, or I’ll beat you up every time I see you!”

“Think twice about whether you can afford to suffer the consequences before you try to plot against me again.”

“I’ll give you one word of advice today. Next time, you’d kill me in one go, or I’ll beat you to death for it!”

At this moment, Prince looked absolutely embarrassing as he laid on the floor bruised and battered.

He wiped the blood from the corner of his lips and stared at Henry with utter hatred. He clenched his teeth as the internal anger and resentment he felt filled him with the urge to eat Henry alive.

However, the man’s last remaining shred of logic stopped him from saying anything harsh.

Prince himself knew that saying something rude would only lead to him getting another heating from Henry.

Prince rose to his feet with great difficulty and grit his teeth. “Fine, then. You people are cruel!

“But the future is unknown. Just you wait!”

Prince then limped away, intending to return to the room.

“Did you forget, Your Highness? That the three listed companies under your name don’t belong to you anymore?”

Jasper’s words had Prince’s expression paling immediately.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1223

“Are you really going to go so far to get rid of me, Jasper?!”

Prince stared at Jasper and shrieked pitifully. Prince was completely humiliated.

There was nothing wrong with the son of a wealthy family like him losing once. It was only slightly embarrassing.

However, to be completely beaten up by Henry just now was truly humiliating.

Even so, according to the unspoken rules of trust-fund children, you could utterly humiliate them but you could not touch what made up their power.

He did not expect Jasper to ignore this unspoken rule. Who was he kidding? Jasper had spent over 1.3 billion funds on this and even promised ownership of two of these listed companies to others.

Jasper would suffer a huge loss if he did not take his share from Prince's foundational powers.

There was no way Jasper, a man who considered breaking even as a loss, would make such an unprofitable trade.

“And you're not afraid that my dad will make you pay for this?!”

Jasper replied calmly to Prince's frantic threat, “If I choose to back off now, would the crown prince give up on your revenge?”

Prince was completely stunned.

His threat was just a formality, for he already felt hopeless.

However, upon hearing Jasper's words now, it seemed like the threat worked on the man.

A huge gush of hope surged in his chest and Prince frantically answered, "Definitely! There's never been any deep resentment or hatred between us anyway, right?"

"If you're willing to let me go, then we'll put this matter to bed. I promise I'll never cause you trouble again."

'Motherf*cker. Once I catch my breath and my dad comes home, you'll be the first one I'll get rid of!'

'Not only will I kill you, but I'll kill your whole family too!'

'I'll kill everyone that's got connections with you!'

Despite what Prince thought internally, his expression was still extremely sincere.

Jasper nodded and smiled after he heard Prince.

This caused Prince's hope to grow, and the man could not help but smile in relief as well. Yet, before Prince could continue making promises, Jasper wiped the elated expression clean off of Prince's face.

"You made it sound very sincere. But I don't believe you."

Prince would not be this disappointed if Jasper had rejected his plea for mercy in the beginning.

Utter hopelessness was when someone lit an ember of hope within you during your time of desperation, only to smother it right in front of you. This was how Prince felt now.

The abundance of hope Prince once felt now turned into despair and fury.

"Hahaha. Look at this f*cker's face. Did he actually believe you?" Henry pointed at Prince and laughed out loud.

Grinding his molars, Prince stared at Jasper and roared, "How dare you play me like a fool, Jasper! F*ck you! Kill me if you think you're so powerful, then! But if you don't kill me now, I'll make you regret it in the future!"

“Kill you?”

Jasper said calmly, “Murder is illegal and people like you aren’t worth committing a crime over. I’m a law abiding citizen, you see.”

“Not only do I obey the law, I even have the duty to report any illegal behavior I see.”

Jasper then clapped his hands. The clap seemed to be a signal, as a group of people walked over from behind right after this.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1224

Timothy was in the lead. Behind him was a large group of people.

Prince was stunned. When he saw Timothy again, a horrible feeling filled his chest

He looked at Conrad subconsciously, only to see an expressionless face.

“Prince Chavez!” Timothy shouted, resentful and furious.

“You killed my son! I’ll make you pay for this!”

At this moment, despite the extreme unease he felt, Prince mustered the bravery to argue, “What kind of f*cking nonsense is that? Henry was the one who killed your son! It has nothing to do with me!”

Timothy scoffed and replied, “The incident’s already been investigated! You threatened my son and pushed him while he was drunk, causing his head to knock against the coffee table! That’s how he died! You’re the murderer that killed my son!”

At this moment, the color drained from Prince’s face and even White Glove’s expression changed. Everything could still be negotiated if this was merely a struggle of interests.

However, there was nothing to be done once homicide was involved.

Looking at the group of people staring Prince down, for the first time ever, White Glove felt lost about what to do.

No matter how loyal he was to Vere, or how powerful he thought himself to be, he still could not help Prince fend off this murder charge.

The Chavez family's status was too high, and there were just too many people with their eyes on this family!

No one could endure the result of this murder.

At this moment, all White Glove could do was hope that Prince genuinely had nothing to do with this murder. Unfortunately, his heart sank when he spotted Prince's colorless complexion.

Prince... was truly frantic now.

No matter how powerful their family was, there were a few red lines trust-fund children in the country could not cross.

Poison, arms dealing, and murder. The first two resulted in the death penalty while the latter ensured a tragic end.

"Cut that bullsh*t! I never did anything to your son! You think you can frame me?" Prince struggled for the last time, like a gravely injured lone wolf.

"Prince Chavez! Don't think that just because your family's powerful that it means everyone will be afraid of you! My Burke family might not be as wealthy as your Chavez family, and your family might be able to get rid of me easily, but what do I have to fear for when my only son's dead?! I'd risk my own life if it means I'll make you pay!"

Timothy shouted in extreme fury as he stared at Prince with bloodshot eyes.

Prince took an instinctive step backward and turned to look at Conrad again. He was about to say something when he heard Conrad tell Timothy with a smile, "Your enemy is right before your eyes, Mr. Burke. What are you waiting for? Make him pay his price."

Conrad's words had figuratively kicked Prince into the abyss.

"F*ck you, Conrad! You were the one that came up with the idea but you're also the first to sell me out once there's a problem?!"

Conrad looked at Prince and said calmly, "I don't know what you're talking about. Also, please don't spout nonsense. You're already carrying the weight of murder. Do you also also want to face defamation charges?"

Prince wanted to say more but the sound of a police siren suddenly cut through the room.

Jasper watched the chaos in front of him expressionlessly. He did not know what Timothy would do in his bout of rage, so it would always be better to hand such incidents to the police instead.

A group of uniformed officers rushed to the scene as the man leading them walked over to speak to Prince. “Prince Chavez, you’re suspected of being involved in the murder of Halbert Burke, and are the prime suspect. I hereby summon you according to the law, please cooperate with our investigation.”

Then, he waved his hands as two of his subordinates immediately came over to restrain Prince.

Prince did not stop struggling while he roared, “Let me go! My dad is Vere Chavez! You wouldn’t dare to arrest me!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1225

Jasper shook his head when he heard Prince’s words. This man had gone completely crazy. He would not have said something so stupid if he this was not the case.

As expected, the middle-aged man shouted, “I don’t care who your dad is! You’ll have to face legal charges if you committed the crime! Cut the nonsense and bring him away!”

A few officers then began to drag Prince to leave.

At this moment, White Glove had no other choice but to step forward. "Wait. "

The middle aged man looked at White Glove warily and asked in a solemn tone, "Who are you?"

White Glove replied, "An employee of the Chavez family."

The middle aged man responded expressionlessly, "Even if you were his employee, please don't obstruct us from performing our official duties."

White Glove replied, "I'm an employee of the Chavez family, not his personal employee. I have no intention to obstruct your official duties either. I was just hoping that you would let him make a call to his father before you bring him away."

Prince seemed to become enlightened when he heard White Glove. He struggled and shouted, "That's right! I need to call my dad! You have no right to prevent me from calling my dad!"

Jasper arched his brow slightly.

It had to be said that in terms of intellect, White Glove was much more capable than Prince.

It would be an extremely unwise choice to protest against an arrest at that moment. The best course of action would be to immediately contact Vere.

Still... there was nothing that could be done.

White Glove's plan would be doomed from the start. As expected the middle aged man remained unmoving as he replied, "My apologies. But Prince Chavez is currently a huge suspect, and according to our regulations, he's not allowed to contact anyone for the moment except his lawyer."

White Glove frowned slightly and glanced at Prince exasperatedly. Then, he took a silent step backward to state that he would not hold them back anymore.

The middle aged man's expression eased slightly at the sight and waved his hand. "Bring him away."

Before Prince left, the man turned his head to stare at Jasper and Conrad before he said resentfully, "Just you two wait! You two will die once I get out!"

Prince was then pulled away before he could finish threatening them.

After Prince left, White Glove walked over to Jasper and said expressionlessly, "Jasper Laine, right? I've read a lot about you."

"It's an honor," Jasper replied calmly.

White Glove tugged at the corner of his mouth and said meaningfully, "What happened on the stock market could be regarded as child's play. The old master did not care about that. But I don't think he'll let this matter so easily anymore."

"Is this a word of advice or a warning?"

White Glove narrowed his eyes at Jasper and replied, "Depends on how you interpret it."

"Sorry, but I'm horrible at understanding things." Jasper shrugged. With a smile, he asked warmly, "Or perhaps you're implying that these are things Prince can do, but I'm not allowed to?"

“Prince was the one who framed Henry. All I did was reveal the truth behind the incident. Comparing the nature of these two behaviors, my actions are countless times better, no?”

White Glove harrumphed and gave Jasper one intense look before he turned to leave.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1226

Standing next to Jasper, Julian stared at White Glove's back and said, "I can make him stay if you want, Jasper."

Jasper waved him off and replied, "No need. He's just Vere's subordinate, and getting rid of him won't change anything. Vere Chavez is our main concern."

Julian did not say anything anymore when he heard this. Julian knew nothing when it came to power and planning, but he did not fear anyone when it came to physical fights.

The only person who ever posed a threat to him was the man beside the little prince. White Glove was skilled, but Julian would not lose against him.

After White Glove left, Timothy walked over to Jasper and Henry before bowing deeply to the two.

"I'm really sorry, Mr. Laine, Mr. Law. It was all a misunderstanding before and I was blinded by my hatred. Thank you two for discovering the truth behind my son's death, otherwise the true culprit would've gotten away with it."

Jasper clapped Timothy's shoulder and said softly, "Nothing is too far when a father is taking revenge for his son. Since it was a misunderstanding, all that matters now is that the misunderstanding's cleared up. There's no need to feel guilty about it anymore."

Jasper then glanced at Henry and said, "How about you two shake hands? Fatherly love is something we all have to understand."

Henry was not an unreasonable man and said tensely, "It's fine. You lost more than I did in this incident, so I won't hold this over your head either."

Timothy smiled wryly and replied, "Thank you two for your generosity."

"Mr. Burke, both of us are well aware of the truth here. While Prince was involved in your son's death, it was still an accident."

"Prince is in the wrong, but their family's power and the circumstances of the case means that he won't be in too much trouble. He might be out after some time, so what do you have planned?"

The corner of Timothy's mouth twitched and he sighed deeply. While it brought immense joy to say something cruel, Timothy had to admit that he was powerless against a figure as powerful as the Chavez family.

The man seemed to age a dozen years at this moment as she replied, "Let's see what the charges are first. From what I can tell right now, it'll most likely be a bit of financial compensation and some simple punishment."

"After all, he didn't intend to kill my son, but my son still died because of him. Therefore, it'll simply be a matter of when I take my revenge against him!"

Timothy then bowed to the two again. "I'm not in the mood to dwell here any longer, gentlemen. So, if you'll excuse me."

Timothy then turned and left. No matter how one looked at it, the man's silhouette appeared desolate.

Jasper turned around after sending Timothy away and realized that Conrad was nowhere to be seen. "When did Conrad leave?" Jasper asked.

"He left while you two were talking to Timothy. He told me to give this to you before he left." Julian handed Jasper a document.

Jasper chuckled when he saw that it was a company stock transfer agreement with Conrad's signature on it. The debt was officially between Conrad and Prince, so Conrad still had to liquidate it himself. The transfer of creditor rights was just a little performance they had put on for Prince.

It would be truly troublesome to carry that transfer out. After Conrad transferred the other two company's stocks over to Jasper, he saved the one for himself.

After Conrad transferred the other two company's stocks over to Jasper, he saved the one for himself.

Both of them remained silent and tacit. They took their respective benefits and moved on. Whether they would be friends or foes the next time they met would be up to fate.

"Now that this is finally over, let's go. I'm paying, so let's eat something good and relax." Jasper stretched his back and said with a large smile.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1227

Jasper and Prince's battle came and went quickly, like a tremendous gust of wind.

People within the industry were still watching the situation and predicting whether Clear Seas' huge capital would enter the market to help their crown prince when the battle had suddenly ended.

Jasper walked out away with complete victory. Of course, everyone was smart and they knew that the matter was far from over.

“Vere’s currently being held back by something outside the country. To old crafty people like him, a small issue or some trouble their child was facing is far less important than some huge partnership they were formally negotiating.”

“To a group as huge as Clear Seas, these three listed companies can hardly be considered important businesses, so it’s not worth making a big deal out of losing them.”

“The only thing that probably rattled him would be Prince involvement in a homicide.”

Jasper analyzed the current situation with Henry in the restaurant.

More than combing through the situation, Jasper was trying to guide Henry into understanding the thought process of someone from a higher status as well as their perspective.

Henry also realized that this incident had indeed affected him to some degree. It taught him that in front of true bigshots, the simple identity of the Law family’s third generation was far from enough.

In the end, having a powerful background when fighting someone of a high enough rank only ensured that he would not be killed off. After all, no one would want to risk a full out war with the Law family by killing Henry.

“What should we do next, then?” Henry asked.

Jasper shook his head but did not engage on Henry’s topic. Instead, he grabbed his wine glass and clinked it with Henry’s before he asked, “When are you going back to Harbor City?”

Henry looked at Jasper as if the other was a ghost. “How did you know I’m going back?!”

“After what happened this time, there’s no way you can still fool around here in the Mainlands. Either you get your life together once you go back this time, or you stay in Harbor City obediently for the rest of your life.”

Henry’s expressions darkened. Jasper’s words had hit him where it hurt.

While Harbor City was still much more developed than the Mainlands, and there were many better places to enjoy one’s self there, the problem with Harbor City was that the place was too small. Henry had long enjoyed his fill of Harbor City, so the Mainlands were comparatively much more attractive to him.

More importantly, he and Jill’s relationship was still at its early stages. While the two were currently in conflict, every relationship had its ups and downs, and he would not give up on Jill over something so insignificant.

“I’ll go back and see what my dad says. I’m bored of Harbor City already, so worse come to worst, I’ll just agree to some condition that involves losing autonomy, but I’d be my own man.” Henry was very confident.

Jasper smiled and replied, “There’s another month or so before I have to start setting up for the huge and profitable plan. Stay in Harbor City before then, and I’ll have your dad let you out once the time’s right.”

Henry’s eyes lit up and this good news immediately diluted most of the dejection he felt from being dragged around and locked at home by his dad.

“Deal!”

“Deal!”

Once he decided to leave, there was no point on dwelling around any longer. Thus, after lunch that afternoon, Henry bought a ticket back to Harbor City from Waterhoof City.

After Henry left, Jasper started communicating with Jake.

This was a huge opportunity Jasper had had his eyes on since he reincarnated. The biggest chance to earn big money within the next five years.

Jasper had also hoped to win big with this opportunity, and had already accumulated all the capital JW would require in its inception. It was never too early to plan for something this big.

“Clear all my securities accounts in the United States’ share market.”

Jasper’s first sentence stunned Jake in Harbor City.

“Mr. Laine, the economy is stable worldwide right now, and the plummet brought by the bursting of the dot com bubble from before has also begun to recover. According to our predictions, we’re still very far from the peak.”

“To sell the securities now would be to give up all the interest we could gain in the short term...”

As Jasper’s subordinate, and an important figure in the investment Learn, Jake had the right to propose his opinions to Jasper.

Despite this, Jasper shook his head and took a sip from his teacup. “Let me ask you. How many assets do I have in the United States share market?”

Jake immediately replied, "You currently hold six stocks in the United States Securities Exchange, four stocks in New York Securities Exchange, and twelve stocks in Nasdaq Securities Exchange. The total amount from all three exchanges adds up to..."

After a small pause, Jake continued, "Adds up to 1 billion and 468 million Somer Dollars. In addition to the 200 million reserve funds, you have a asset pool of 1 billion and 668 million Somer Dollars."

Jasper nodded, satisfied with this amount.

Jasper had control of less than 1.2 billion worth of assets in the United States' stock market when he first had Jake start managing them.

After more than half a year, thanks to the exciting recovery of the economy, he had managed to earn a profit of 500 million. This was a wonderful result no matter how he had invested it.

"Do you think it'd be that easy to liquidate so many stocks when the stock market becomes bearish?"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1228

Jake was stunned when he heard Jasper's question.

Everyone's dream when trading stocks would always be to buy in at the lowest point and sell out at the highest price.

This might not be difficult for retail investors, since all they needed was a sharp eye, a bit of luck, and courage.

However, a portfolio as huge as Jasper's almost 1.7 billion worth of funds was a huge sum in comparison to the countless retail investors who operated on a smaller scale.

It was impossible to pull such a huge sum out of the market when the prices were highest.

Not when the volume of this investment was big enough to interfere with a small portion of the market.

To Jake, the most important thing was Jasper's judgment of the stock market's future development.

“Mr. Laine, do you think that the stock market will drop in the future?” Jake asked impatiently.

As an extremely professional trader, Jake believed in numbers and data above all else.

However, there was no sign of a drop in the current data or the overall market. He had no idea what Jasper’s judgment was based on.

However, Jasper’s glorious records urged Jake to take the man seriously.

‘Drop?’

‘The markets are going to plummet!’

Jasper thought to himself, but he could not explain his thoughts to Jake.

He could not possibly tell Jake that a group of powerful terrorists would drive two planes into New York's World Trade Center in one and a half months, thus resulting in the biggest, most tragic, and most impactful terrorist incident in the entire world.

"You can take this as an intuition of mine. Don't think too much about it, just do as I say. Pull out from the market slowly and try your best to not attract attention."

"At the same time, open positions in the gold futures market. Open many positions but keep every market order small. As I said, keep a low profile."

Jake's brow twitched at Jasper's words.

Global trade was growing in this new millennium, and no country could close its borders and order a national lockdown. As a result, the global economic situation was deeply intertwined with worldwide stability.

The rise and fall of the financial securities market might not represent much in and of itself, but a fall in stock prices coupled with an increase in gold prices could only mean an international conflict was about to occur.

'Does Mr. Laine have intel on some outbreak of war somewhere in the world?!

This thought terrified Jake.

However, the man did not dare to ask further. Jake had always known his limits when extremely important and secretive information was involved.

“I understand, Mr. Laine. I’ll get to it immediately.”

Jasper nodded after receiving Jake’s reply, then ended the video call.

As of this moment, Jasper’s business in Waterhoof City was pretty much completed. Counting the days, Jasper realized he had stayed in Waterhoof City for almost a month.

Jasper was just about to start planning his return to Southeast Province when he suddenly received a surprising phone call. It was from Stephen.

“Mr. Laine.”

Stephen sounded very courteous over the phone.

“My new movie Monastery Soccer’s about to be released in the mainlands for the first time tomorrow. Its first stop is in Waterhoof City. I was wondering if you’d have the time to join the premiere.”

Stephen was an extremely talented man.

Coupled with the fact that the man had made extremely little progress in the early years of his start up, Stephen ended up seeming aloof and cold most of the time.

His character meant the man did not have many friends, while bad rumors about him also began to circulate.

However, this did not stop the man from shining. If he was involved in the movie, the movie was basically set to be a blockbuster.

Moreover, Stephen was not an idiot either. He knew to whom he had to act high and mighty in front of and who to remain humble and honest toward.

Jasper was currently the biggest mogul in Harbor City and the Mainland’s entertainment industries. The man’s resources could easily decide which artist would flourish and which could wave goodbye to their careers. It did not matter how many fans you had or how many big bosses you knew. If Jasper shook his head, then you had nothing but a blacklist waiting for you. A blacklist on all aspects, too.

This was the range of Jasper's influence in the Mainland's and Harbor City's entertainment industry.

Capital was what determined the king in the entertainment industry; A ruthless reality truer here than in any other industry.

This was also why businessmen with resources and contacts had never lacked women, and were constantly being fawned over by female celebrities that civilians considered of superior status.

After much difficulty from Scarlet's side, Stephen had managed to get in contact with Jasper and gotten the man's investment. With that, Stephen's career began to pick up as well.

Thanks to Jasper's investment, Monastery Soccer was the first film Stephen's filming company produced after its establishment. With Jasper's support, Monastery Soccer's box office sales in Harbor City was even more impressive than they were in his past life. Here in the Mainlands, Stephen needed Jasper's support even more.

While Jasper... in all honesty, the man would have forgotten about his investment in Stephen's film company had the man not taken initiative to call him.

There was nothing that could be done. Jasper's business spread too far. If not for the quarterly financial evaluation his company ran, there was no way Jasper would remember all the assets and projects he invested in.

With this result, Stephen's box office sales would certainly do well in other places around the world in the future.

Not to mention that Monastery Soccer could not be shown in mainland cinemas in his past life. Thanks to Easy Media's help this time, there seemed to be no issue with showing the movie in the Mainlands.

Tomorrow would be its premiere.

"As expected. Film productions really do make a lot of money."

Jasper thought back to the 10 million US Dollars he had invested into Stephen. From this film alone, after paying production, advertisement, theater distribution, and sales channel expenses, he would be able to gain back more than half of the principal sum.

Jasper was soon in a good mood as he had a great feeling about the entertainment media's future.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1229

The following day, Jasper first went to fetch the gentle and soft Tiffany from Hoofmorn University.

This lady loved watching Stephen's movies in his past life and she always used to complain about how one needed to watch Steph's films in the cinemas. Thus, every time Stephen's films premiered in cinemas in his past life, she would always drag Jasper along to watch it with her.

This was a feeling shared by a majority of eighties children in the mainlands.

Therefore, Jasper did not forget her this time.

"Really? Do you mean it, Jasper? Can we really go to the premiere?"

"A few of my classmates and I have already heard about this long ago. This is the first time Steph's film is launching in the Mainlands and a lot of classmates are planning to line up overnight to buy tickets once it's released in the cinemas!"

Jasper smiled when he heard Tiffany's excitement. Everything was worth it if it made Tiffany happy.

Not to mention, Jasper could tell from Tiffany and her friends' reactions that Monastery Soccer would earn a lot of money this time.

Whether it was due to the production quality of Monastery Soccer, Stephen's branding, or the Mainlander's appreciation for Stephen, a miracle was destined to happen with the box office sales.

"Of course I mean it. Since when have I lied to you?" Jasper asked with a smile.

"Jasper, will there be a lot of celebrities there?" Tiffany asked worriedly.

Jasper gave it some thought before he replied. He had never attended a premiere before, but he had seen the scene from all sorts of entertainment news channels before. The host would normally invite good friends and formidable figures they knew in the industry to hype up the premiere.

Not to mention that both the mainland's Easy Media and Harbor City's Advent Entertainment Group valued this premiere greatly. This film was the first attempt Harbor City was making to introduce their films to the mainland market, so there would almost certainly be a lot of fuss surrounding it.

"There should be," Jasper nodded and affirmed.

"I'm so nervous," Tiffany said softly.

“Celebrities are people too. There’s nothing to be nervous about. Who knows, maybe they’ll be the ones trying to please you when the time comes,” Jasper said with a crescent eyed smile.

Due to Jasper’s current status in both territories’ entertainment industries, the man was not showing off when he said this.

However, Tiffany did not know that, so she thought that Jasper was simply joking with her.

The car soon arrived at the booked venue, Golden Exchange International Cinemas.

As a state own enterprise, Golden Exchange was the first national theatre chain and currently the most high-class cinema in the country.

At this moment, the cinema had already been decorated for the premiere of Monastery Soccer.

Many reporters were conducting interviews on both sides of the carpet as a bunch of excited movie fans who had been chosen to watch the premiere lined up outside the venue.

Before they could enter though, the more important agenda on the itinerary was the arrival of celebrities. Quite a few celebrities had already arrived by the time Jasper brought Tiffany to the scene.

One had to admit that both Easy Media and Advent Entertainment Group were unrivaled in the entertainment industry.

Every celebrity, regardless of status in the Mainlands and Harbor City, had tried their best to participate in this premiere.

Attending this premiere would give them a chance to meet Stephen and potentially work with the man. More importantly, luckier celebrities might even get in contact with senior executives of Easy Media or Advent Entertainment Group, at which point they would be set for life.

When Jasper and Tiffany got out of the car, the sight that met them was the grandiose of an extremely sophisticated award ceremony.

“Ms. Flowers, could I ask...”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1230

“Mr. Williamson, I heard that you and...”

“Ms. Barlow, your recent project in...”

All renowned and top-notch celebrities in both the Mainlands and Harbor City seemed to have arrived as well.

Jasper had not informed Easy Media or JW Entertainment Group that he was attending. Jasper had even told Stephen that he wished to come in a relatively low profile manner.

Thus, Jasper’s attendance was completely incognito such that no one was aware of his arrival.

Jasper and Tiffany had just gotten out of the car when cameras began to flash and blur his vision.

“Relax a little. These reporters are only taking pictures of celebrities. All we have to do is ignore them and walk in.”

Jasper comforted her when he saw how Tiffany tensed slightly.

Tiffany grabbed Jasper's hand tightly and nodded. She looked on with shock at the celebrities that were being surrounded and interviewed by reporters.

"There are so many people clamoring after them for interviews, Jasper. It's so majestic."

Jasper followed Tiffany's gaze and looked at these so-called prestigious actors and actresses. He naturally thought back to how humbly and courteously these people bowed, toasted, and spoke to him when they ate together before.

Jasper said with a crescent eyed smile, "I can raise you to their level if you want. You could be as famous as them."

Tiffany beamed into a smile in response. "No thanks. I can't sing and my acting skills aren't that great either. I won't be able to do it."

"When it comes to the performing arts, it all comes down to money. If the money says yes, then you'll get it no matter how unskilled you are. If the money says no, then you'll never make it big regardless of your capabilities," Jasper said meaningfully.

Tiffany blinked. Innocent and unaccustomed to the harshness of reality, she did not really understand what Jasper meant.

As the two conversed and were about to enter the venue, a voice rang out from behind.

“Those in front! Don’t you two know that this is a red carpet for celebrities only? Get lost immediately!”

An ear piercing shriek caused Jasper to turn around. Only to see a woman, dressed to the nines with decent features and a slim figure.

“This is where the guests enter. I’m here to attend the premiere as well, so it’s only natural I enter from here.

You can walk first if you’re in a rush, but what’s with your aggression?” Jasper asked calmly.

The woman scoffed and looked Jasper and Tiffany over. After confirming that they were not from within the industry, she said, “You guys are guests? Bullsh*t!”

“All the guests here are huge celebrities, and I don’t recognize you two. What right do you two have to walk in here?”

“With one look I can tell that you two are just nobodies non-famous artists trying to take advantage of this opportunity to walk the red carpet! Either that or you two are mindless fans! Stop acting already!”

The woman then pointed at the car behind her arrogantly and said, “Do you even know who’s in the car behind? It’s Terra’s idol prince! You’d get lost and not block the roads if you knew what’s good for you! Otherwise, I’ll make life a living hell for you two! ”

The woman’s arrogant and domineering attitude had even Tiffany infuriated, let alone Jasper.

“You, you’re being too unreasonable!” Tiffany said angrily.

The mockery on the woman’s expression deepened. “Are you getting lost or not? Did I not make myself clear? This isn’t a place for questionable people like you!”

“Run off to the back if you’re here for a celebrity’s signature. They might give you one if they’re in a good mood. Otherwise, I’ll call security to throw you out right this instant!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1231

This woman's tone made it sound like Jasper and Tiffany had it coming.

The woman's arrogance had Tiffany flushing red in anger. However, while this innocent girl was angry, she did not know how to refute the other party.

Jasper pulled Tiffany behind him and said calmly, "Who are you to tell us to move away?"

Jasper had totally angered this annoyed woman now.

"What did you say?! Do you even know who I am? How dare you talk to me like this!"

"Who the hell are you? Why do I need to know who you are?" Jasper shouted, his gaze cold.

The Jasper of today was no longer the same small businessman that had to be careful while dealing with everyone.

This man currently held an astronomical amount of resources and had companies in all sorts of huge industries.

He might not be the most powerful person in the world, but no one in the industries he was involved in would dare to ignore his words.

Jasper could forget about his businesses if he bent to the will of this woman who had just jumped out of nowhere and boasted inexplicably.

The woman did not expect Jasper to be so strong willed and her complexion paled in infuriation. She pointed at Jasper and shrieked, "Fine then! You want to be shameless, huh? Then I'll forcefully move you away!"

"Security! Where are the security guards!"

A few workers in suits in charge of maintaining order at the venue arrived with the woman's scream.

"What happened?"

The woman pointed at Jasper and Tiffany and replied, "These two want to harass an important guest invited to the premiere!"

“Do you two guys know who’s sitting in the car behind me? It’s Show Long, Terra’s idol prince!”

“Piss him off and he’ll tell your managers! He can destroy both our careers at anytime!”

The man’s words caused the workers’ expressions to change.

“Show Long?”

Jasper chuckled. He was very familiar with the name.

A meme regarding Show had spread all over the place in his past life. The master of time management.

A god level celebrity who managed to have a date with three or four different girls’ during the same night, all while not getting discovered by any of them.

“What are you implying?! What’s with that weird tone of yours? Show’s name isn’t something you can say out loud, okay!” The woman stared at jasper and scolded him.

“Who are you to Show?” Jasper asked calmly.

“I’m his manager,” The woman said arrogantly. Then, she looked at Jasper from the corner of her eye, “It’s still not too late to be afraid. Show’s fame and status isn’t something people like you can ever fathom! Get lost!”

The conversation between the manager and Jasper seemed to have dragged on for too long, as the backseat window of the unmoving car was soon rolled down.

Despite the dark night, Show was wearing a pair of sunglasses as he asked calmly, “What’s going on, Selena?”

The woman immediately walked before Show and pointed at Jasper to say, “Show, I don’t know if this is a paparazzi or some perverted fan, but they’re standing in the middle of the road and they refuse to move away.”

Show seemed to be used to such behavior as he pulled out a signed photograph from his breast pocket and threw it at Jasper’s feet. “I know you just want an autographed picture. Here you go. Now, move along.”

Jasper narrowed his eyes slightly as he looked at Show’s signed picture at his feet.

As far as Jasper was concerned, Show's career was over.

"What are you still doing standing there?" Selena shrieked at Jasper again. "I'd have chased you away if not for the amount of paparazzi here! You already got what you want, so leave!"

Jasper stepped on the picture and said coldly, "No, I don't think I'll be going anywhere today."

Show frowned slightly as well.

He looked at Selena with displeasure. "Look at the venue. There are too many reporters here, and everyone will definitely say that I'm being harsh to my fans if pictures are taken."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1232

After reprimanding Selena in distaste, Show remained seated in the car and smiled, though his tone was slightly annoyed when he said, "What more do you want? Will you only leave after taking a picture with me?"

Jasper shook his head. These so called celebrities made him want to vomit

At that moment, Tiffany stepped up from beside Jasper.

She told Show impatiently, "I used to like your songs a lot. I thought you were filial and an easy to approach celebrity! Who'd thought that you were actually like this? So disgusting!"

Show's expression darkened at Tiffany's words. However, upon seeing Tiffany's youthful and pretty features, Show's eyes lit up behind his sunglasses. "You're a fan of mine too, pretty girl?"

Tiffany replied angrily, "You wish! You're not worthy of being a fan of!"

Show chuckled and replied, "Don't say that. I think we can get to know each other a little better."

"Do you want to die?"

The sudden sentence stunned Show.

Even Selena's expression froze on her face.

The duo looked at Jasper in disbelief. They did not expect Jasper to say such a thing at this moment.

“What the f*ck did you say?! ” Selena screamed.

Show’s expression completely darkened as well. “What are you waiting for, Selena? Call security to chase that man away! I don’t want to see him again!”

Selena was about to instruct the confused workers when a group of people ran out from the cinema entrance.

Leading the group was Stephen and Easy Media’s president, Ted Swanson.

“Why didn’t you tell me you were coming, Mr. Laine? I’d have made sure to prepare for it.” Ted called out to Mr. Laine from afar.

Stephen would not have believed you if you told him Jasper would attend in person.

As far as Stephen was concerned, Mr. Laine was a busy man who did not have the time to attend his movie premiere.

Even Jasper himself only decided to attend in person because Stephen was representing Harbor City and introducing Harbor films to the Mainlands for the first time. The man would have just sent a senior executive over if this were not the case.

Therefore, when Stephen saw Jasper at the door, the man was shocked and he immediately rushed over to greet him.

“You’re here, Mr. Laine.”

Even Stephen greeted Jasper courteously.

Behind the two of them were a group of Mainland and Harbor City superstars.

Ms. Flowers, Mr. Williamson, Ms. Barlow, and other renowned celebrities followed behind Stephen and Ted as they greeted Jasper respectfully.

This was a grand sight to behold.

In contrast, Selena and Show’s complexions were pale.

“Who invited this man?” Jasper pointed at Show and asked indifferently.

Both Ted and Stephen’s hearts skipped a beat, and they immediately realized that something had happened.

While Show and Selena were dazed. An exceptionally terrifying shadow engulfed their hearts.

The duo felt their mouths dry up as they stared at Jasper, surrounded by a group of celebrities.

‘Just.. Just who was this person?!’

‘Why did Easy Media’s President Ted, who was sought out by countless celebrities and superstars, greet this Mr. Laine so politely?’

‘Why was Steph, a man of extremely high status in Harbor City’s entertainment industry, so careful as to not offend this man?’

Life at The Top – Chapter 1233

“About that...”

Ted mustered the courage and approached Jasper to whisper, “Mr. Laine, this man is Show Long and he’s a rather famous celebrity from Nawait.”

“We’ve been in a partnership with Nawait’s entertainment industry lately and the other party hoped that Show could use this chance to enter the Mainland market. That’s why we invited him over today.”

Jasper nodded.

Nawait’s entertainment industry mainly followed a Sunrise-philia style and there were quite a few outstanding celebrities.

However, these celebrities whom ordinary folk regarded as high-class and sophisticated were no more than a source of income for Jasper.

If they stayed in line, then everyone would have a great time.

If they stepped out of line...

“Have him leave.”

“And tell the entertainment company in Nawait that neither Easy Media nor Advent Entertainment Group will partner with people like him.”

Jasper’s words were an informal blacklist.

He had completely banned Show from the possibility of entering the mainland or Harbor City’s entertainment industry.

Because of Jasper’s status and resources in the entertainment industry of both these areas, the man was certainly qualified to say such a thing.

Ted did not dare to go against Jasper’s words and immediately tensed up while replying, “Yes, Mr. Laine. I’ll pass on the instructions immediately!”

Ted then glared at Show and Selena, who were still dazed, and shouted, “Didn’t you hear what Mr. Laine said? Get lost already!”

Show and Selena were the ones who kept telling Jasper to get lost earlier.

Yet, now they were the ones who truly had to leave.

“Wait! Please, wait!”

Show was truly frantic now.

He realized that this Mr. Laine, who he did not recognize, had the power to destroy his future in the Mainlands and Harbor City’s entertainment industry with just one sentence. He instantly paled with fear.

“It’s all a misunderstanding, Mr. Laine! It’s all a misunderstanding! It’s this woman that’s spouting sh*t She’s the one that got us into trouble! It has nothing to do with me!”

Show pushed Selena away and ran toward Jasper frantically. The man’s expression was filled with remorse as he begged.

Selena, who had been pushed away, looked at Snow in disbelief and said with a tremble in her voice, “Show! How... how could you do this to me?!”

Selena went mad, as if she had suffered some extreme duress, and shrieked, “I resigned from a great job for you! I resigned so I could be your manager for free!”

“I took my own savings to pave your way. I apologized for your mistakes before you got famous! You also said that you’d marry me in the future!”

“How can you treat me like this now?!”

Despite this, Show did not seem to hear Selena’s wails. Instead, the man continued to beg Jasper for mercy.

“You heard her too, Mr. Laine. She’s the one that overthought everything, I have nothing to do with her! Please, if you have to chase someone away then chase her, just give me another chance. Please!”

“You’re a great man but I’m nothing more than an insignificant bed bug! You do not need to sink to my level, right, Mr. Laine? Please, I’m begging you!”

Frankly speaking, if one were to focus on Show’s pleas only, the man’s behavior was rather touching.

Innocent little Tiffany was about to forget how arrogant the man was before and was about to cave in.

Yet, Jasper looked at Show coldly.

He suddenly thought of something.

'It's all an act for money.'

When the incident that coined the nickname 'Show the master of time management' was exposed in his past life, the man had also begged the public with the very same expression.

With this thought in mind, Jasper lost any remaining interest in saying another word to him.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1234

“I don’t want to see him.”

Upon hearing Jasper’s comment, Ted immediately reacted and called over a few security guards to drag the two away.

Show was limp in the security guards’ hold while Selena seemed despondent. She let the security guards drag her away while she glared at Show sinisterly.

A short while later, the bright eyed paparazzi immediately swarmed over once they realized that there was conflict. A large group of them soon surrounded the escorted duo.

Not even legitimate entertainment news reporters could hold back from taking pictures of Show as the man got dragged away.

Since Show had yet to completely enter the Mainland market, this man was not as famous as he was when he was exposed for the master of time management incident.

However, he was still one of the superstars in Nawait, and the reporters were no stranger to his face.

Upon seeing these reporters, Selena mustered the courage she did not know she had and struggled out of the security guard's hold. She told Show resentfully, "You used me, Show! So I'll destroy your reputation too!"

With that, Selena rushed to the reporters who flushed in excitement and shouted, "I'm Selena, Show Long's manager. Show might seem like a serious man, but he's an utterly insatiable pervert!"

"Not only did he maintain amorous relationships with five to six girls at the same time, but there was one night where he ran between a few consecutive girl's beds too! And I have proof!"

Small acts could result in huge consequences. Selena's words instantly caused an uproar among the reporters. It was Christmas for the reporters. They were all surprised and immediately pointed their cameras at Selena.

At this moment, Selena turned around to observe the man's reaction. Only to see Show with an expression of fright, hatred, and a hint of a threat.

"You b*tch! You wouldn't dare sell me out!"

Show's behavior and words caused Selena to give up her last shred of hope.

Taking a deep breath, she turned around to tell the frenzied and gossip hungry reporters, "I can guarantee everyone, especially with my character, that what I say is true. I also have proof..."

Not too far away from the messy scene, Jasper watched intriguingly.

He did not expect a mindless act of his to expose Show's scandal more than a decade in advance.

That was alright. Since by completely crushing Show now, fewer girls would fall prey to him.

Not that those girls who willingly sleep with him were anything good to begin with.

"Not bad, it's free hype. As long as news gets out, there's no way Monastery Soccer won't blow up."

Ted's eyes lit up at Jasper's reminder as a complete operating plan immediately appeared in his mind. Instead of keeping it under wraps, Easy Media would further spread this scandal today. The more people who knew of it, the better.

“Come on. The premiere’s about to start, it wouldn’t be wise to delay the show.” Jasper said with a smile.

“Yes, yes, of course. This way please, Mr. Laine,” Stephen immediately reacted and invited Jasper into the cinema.

“Are, are you really Steph?”

Just then, a timid voice with barely concealed excitement rang out from the side.

Stephen looked over in confusion only to see Tiffany staring back at him with a slight flush.

Stephen had seen many fans like this before, so he was unfazed.

The only difference was that Tiffany was currently clinging to Jasper.

“This is a little sister of mine. She loves your films and she came here to see you,” Jasper explained with a smile.

Stephen lit up in understanding and gave an extremely enthusiastic and gentle smile as he said, "Hello! I'm Stephen Cole!"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1235

Signing an autograph, taking pictures, chatting about the filming process, and a bit of insignificant gossip regarding renowned celebrities.

This was what Stephen and Tiffany proceeded to do. Stephen would not pay any ordinary fan the time of day for this, let alone during the premiere. As the main cast and the director, Stephen had a lot of things to do.

However, Tiffany was different. From Jasper's introduction just now, Stephen understood that it was worth it for him to leave everything else aside to talk to Tiffany.

Tiffany was elated as she continued to ask Stephen more questions.

"Alright, Tiff. Let them get to work, there's always time to talk more after this is all over," Jasper told Tiffany.

Tiffany nodded obediently and gave Stephen an apologetic smile. "Sorry, Steph, I was too excited. You don't need to fuss about me, don't let me hold you back from what you need to do."

'I wouldn't dare.'

Stephen thought with a wry chuckle and waved Tiffany off. "You don't have to call me Steph like other people. I know I'm much older, but you can call me Steve if you'd like."

Stephen glanced at Jasper carefully when he said that. He let out a sigh of relief when he saw that Jasper neither agreed nor disapproved.

The simple minded could not possibly make a name for themselves within a hellishly difficult place like Harbor City's entertainment industry.

Stephen might have a more withdrawn and cold character, aloof even, but he knew how to read the room.

Jasper was currently his biggest source of support, and the man gave him more than just the 10 million US Dollar investment.

Upon witnessing the hyped advertisement of Monastery Soccer in both Harbor City and the Mainlands after it was filmed, Stephen understood Jasper's power in the entertainment industry.

More importantly, the Mainlands market! The Mainlands' film industry had a strict review process.

It should have been extremely difficult for Monastery Soccer to air in the Mainlands, but thanks to his connections with Easy Media, the review was easily passed and done with.

Other directors in Harbor City envied Stephen greatly because of this.

Every director and actor knew that the Mainlands market was truly profitable. Whoever entered first would gain the upper hand.

This was why Stephen did not dare to offend Jasper.

If anything, the man kept thinking of ways to gain Jasper's favor.

Tiffany's appearance was a shortcut for Stephen. Tiffany might be innocent, but she was not stupid.

She could tell that Stephen was trying to win her over and by extension of this, be in Jasper's good books.

Thus, Tiffany turned her head to look at Jasper before she gave Stephen a bright smile. "I think I'll call you Big Brother Steve, then."

Jasper was the only one she would greet so familiarly. No one else.

Not that anyone knew what went on in this lady's mind.

Stephen laughed out loud and handed his name card to Tiffany. Then, he said, "If you're free, you can talk to me anytime."

"Okay," Tiffany took the name card happily.

After that, Stephen turned to Jasper and asked, "Mr. Laine, could you say a few things on stage at the premiere later?"

Jasper was stunned for a moment before he waved Stephen off. "Have Ted do it instead. I didn't participate in any of the filming processes so I'm not clear about what happened either. just treat me like a normal member of the audience and ignore me."

Stephen hummed his understanding and did not press the issue.

After the slight delay, the premiere started immediately after Jasper and the rest entered the cinema.

Stephen brought his team over for the opening while Ted went to look for people who could further blow up Show's scandal.

Hence, Jasper brought Tiffany to the VIP seats below alone.

However, that did not mean he did so in peace. After all, only superstars could sit at the VIP seats.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1236

Superstars from both Harbor City and the Mainlands all recognized Jasper.

A spectacular situation immediately unfurled. Superstars, each more famous than the last, immediately lined up before Jasper to greet him.

The male actors were still fine since they just greeted him and introduced themselves before they turned and left happily.

However, female stars all seemed moments away from falling directly into Jasper's arms.

Tiffany ground her molars at the sight.

'These vixens are too annoying!'

Tiffany felt the urge to kick all these vixens as she watched these celebrities purposefully pull their tops down and lean toward Jasper coquettishly. Some even leaned in to whisper into Jasper's ear.

'How shameless can you be?'

Jasper did not show distaste in the face of these celebrities, even though most of them had ulterior motives.

Regardless of how famous they were, he would talk to each of them for a short while.

Jasper did not act unnecessarily arrogant and treat these celebrities like trash either, as there was no need to do so.

However, soon after, the appearance of a particular woman surprised Jasper.

She was the female lead of Monastery Soccer, Vicki Bird. She was a strong and rare woman who had a strong business prowess in the entertainment industry.

"Hello, Mr. Laine. I'm Vicki Bird."

Vicki was beautiful since she was now blooming with youth. As the female lead of the film, she had also enhanced her appearance with makeup such that she looked absolutely stunning.

“Hello,” Jasper crossed his legs and replied with a crescent eyed smile.

“Aren’t you going to participate in the premiere event?”

Vicki smiled beautifully and replied, “There’s still a bit of time before it starts, so I came over to say hello.

“Furthermore, I established my own studio recently so I was hoping I could get a partnership with you if possible, Mr. Laine. I would like an investment as well.”

Vicki handed Jasper her name card cautiously.

After taking the name card, Jasper became speechless when he saw the address and room number of a hotel on the back of it.

The implications were clear.

Vicki scratched a finger against Jasper’s palm softly and asked, “Is there any chance for a partnership, Mr. Laine?”

Jasper put away the name card and smiled softly, "Don't let me hold you back from work. I'll consider a partnership should the opportunity arise."

When someone of higher status said that they would 'consider should an opportunity arise', it usually meant 'no'.

Vicki was a smart lady, so she was instantly disappointed when she heard him.

She had truly wanted to gain Jasper's support. That way, she would be both wealthy and powerful. She was willing to let go of all inhibitions for that. Her body was nothing more than a bargaining chip to her.

However, Jasper's rejection was also very clear.

Vicki did not pursue the matter further. With a small smile, she traded a few more pleasantries before leaving.

Vicki had just left when Jasper threw her name card away.

Tiffany felt extremely pleased when she saw how Jasper did not keep Vicki's contact information in his pockets as he did for other celebrities. Still, she asked confusedly, "Why did you throw her name card, Jasper?"

“There’s no point in keeping an ambitious but ignorant and presumptuous actress,” Jasper replied calmly.

Mr. Laine did not fancy people who lived luxuriously thanks to their fans, yet wanted to escape fundamental tax obligations.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1237

Monastery Soccer was indeed made well.

Not to mention that Stephen wanted to use this premiere to prove himself after the establishment of his own company. Thus, the man had poured countless effort into its production.

Coupled with the results and achievements from Harbor City’s box office sales, its premiere in the Mainlands was destined to garner a lot of attention.

The premiere event plus the movie lasted for a total of almost five hours.

After it was over, Jasper and Tiffany then followed the flow of people out of the cinema. The latter looked extremely pleased.

“Indeed. You really need mature and experienced actors when it comes to films. Also, Harbor films really are much better than those you see in the Mainlands,” Tiffany said genuinely.

Jasper smiled. “You seem interested in developing further in the entertainment industry.

“If you are, I can help you connect with people.”

Jasper was not bluffing. Considering his current status, Jasper could easily raise anyone, including a nobody with no experience like Tiffany, into another superstar actress.

Despite this, Tiffany shook her head and declined, “No thanks. I still prefer my current major.”

What she did not say was that being a celebrity meant she could not help Jasper out anymore.

This mattered more to Tiffany than anything else. Jasper smiled and ruffled Tiffany’s head before he said, “Come on. I’ll send you back to school.”

“Yeah,” Tiffany agreed softly before she followed Jasper into the car.

...

While Jasper and Tiffany participated in the film premiere event.

A black commercial vehicle secretly came to a stop at the doors of a unit. After a short moment, the locked gates opened and a despondent looking Prince walked out expressionlessly.

White Glove got out of the car and opened the car doors for Prince.

The Chavez family was indeed very powerful. While Prince did not intend to kill anyone in this incident, the man still had to pay the price.

However, the Chavez family had immediately bailed Prince out through special procedures.

"I want to go home. Is my dad back yet?" Haggardly, Prince asked with a dark expression in the car.

White Glove replied softly from where he sat in front, "The old master will return the day after tomorrow. He had no choice but to give up a lot of important negotiations because of you, so he's extremely furious. It's best you don't anger him further, Your Highness."

“As for the matter of returning home, you’re currently under bail, Crown Prince. So while there’s no restriction over your personal freedom, you’re not allowed to leave Waterhoof City.”

Prince fumed, “Then what’s the difference with being locked up in jail?”

“At the very least, you’re free to move as you wish within Waterhoof City.

“This incident is rather troublesome, Crown Prince, and the government’s stance on this is firm as well. Since human life was involved, it’s inappropriate for us to do anything that would anger the government. Otherwise, we won’t be able to salvage the situation even after the old master returns.”

“F*ck!”

Prince kicked the chair in front of him harshly and scolded resentfully, “Where the f*ck are those b*stards, Jasper and Conrad? I want them to die!”

“Conrad’s gone missing and Jasper’s currently still in Waterhoof City.”

White Glove glanced at Prince's twisted expression through the rearview mirror and said, "Your Highness, perhaps you should first consider how to face the old master's fury."

Prince clenched his fists tightly and said icily, "Face what? Why do I have to face anything? Are you telling me that the old man will beat me to death?"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1238

"The three listed companies under your name have been completely liquidated. They no longer belong to Clear Seas, let alone to you. Coupled with the fact that this incident had pitted us against the Law family, quite a number of Clear Seas' shareholders have voiced their doubts to the old master. This puts the old master in an extremely passive role. You should grow to be more mature, Your Highness."

Prince's expression paled further at White Glove's words.

"You're just a servant! Who are you to teach me anything?"

Prince scolded angrily. Staring at the receding night scenery of Waterhoof City, Prince heaved and said harshly, "What kind of human would I f*cking be if I don't take revenge?!"

White Glove shook his head slightly but did not say anything more.

As far as he was concerned, Prince was no different from a useless person.

After the fight between Jasper and Prince settled down, the situation became clear to many powerful people who had been watching on attentively.

Far away in Harbor City, Fabian immediately received the news after having just returned from abroad.

The person reporting the news to him was Conrad, who had just returned from Waterhoof City.

“Mr. Atticus, Prince has already lost.”

Conrad reported courteously on the windy parking apron.

Fabian stretched and replied, “Something would truly be wrong if that f*cking idiot managed to beat Jasper. So what if he lost? He’s just a moron.”

“I really don’t get it. How did a man as smart as Vere manage to give birth to such a stupid son? Haha.”

Conrad followed Fabian toward the car calmly.

Next to the car stood a line of expressionless suited bodyguards. One of them domiing white gloves saw Fabian approach and opened the car door respectfully. The bodyguard put a hand over the top of the car as Fabian entered.

After climbing in, Fabian waved Conrad in as well.

“Come in as well. Tell me what happened in detail.”

Conrad got into the car and soon began to recall the entire incident alongside the whirring of the car’s engine.

“According to your instructions, after Prince rejected your offer for a loan, I remained impartial and watched from the sidelines. Jasper’s teamed up with the Law family and Colossal Investments, but there was also a mysterious force behind it all.”

“The Law family was responsible for keeping an eye on Clear Seas so that the main force did not dare to support Prince.”

“Perhaps there was also infighting within Clear Seas. After all, many shareholders are very pleased to see Prince cause trouble to his father.”

“Colossal Investments also coordinated with Jasper’s funds to destroy three of Prince’s listed companies in the shortest time.”

“It should still have been a difficult feat to completely destroy all three listed companies even with Jasper and Colossal investments working together, but a mysterious power suddenly appeared, after which all of Prince’s defenses fell.”

“I’m still investigating the source of this mysterious power.”

Fabian waved him off when he heard this, “No need. It’s the little prince.”

Conrad was stunned.

The corner of Fabian’s lips curled and he continued, “There are only a few youths in the Mainlands worth my time. The little prince is one of them. I already got wind of it before he made his move, so there’s no need to dwell on the matter.”

Conrad suppressed his emotions and asked, “Mr. Atticus, what if the little prince chooses to stand with Jasper?”

Fabian scoffed and replied, “The smarter the person, the more they understand to follow the flow. We’re the ones in control of the situation now.”

“You might not know this, but Jasper’s funds in the United States stock markets have started to move. The opportunity we’ve been waiting for has arrived.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1239

Conrad’s brow twitched when he heard Fabian.

Fabian had always been very wary of Conrad.

Therefore, all Conrad knew was that Fabian had a huge trap waiting for Jasper, one that involved many people by Jasper’s side.

However, Conrad had no idea what the specifics of this setup were.

Right now, he had gained another important piece of information.

Fabian had his eyes on Jasper's foreign stock market investments since the beginning. There was a huge possibility that this setup was related to these funds.

"Jasper really isn't an easy opponent to deal with. Otherwise, we wouldn't have failed in every test we gave him."

"But as difficult he is to deal with, he's also easy to get rid of. You just have to find the weakest part of this kind of person, after which you can deal with them in one swift attack."

Fabian narrowed his eyes slightly. The man must have been in a great mood as he was so willing to tell Conrad more.

"I analyzed the entire structure of Jasper's business plan. To be honest, seeing Jasper's detailed road to wealth makes me suspect he has the ability to see into the future."

"It's as if he was able to grab ahold of every important detail and gain the biggest benefit from each of them."

"He earned his first big windfall from domestic futures, then really kicked off his business with money made from international petroleum futures. With this huge amount of funds, the man decided to invest in businesses like Terizone instead of making more money in the financial stock market."

“Jasper realized the potential of these enterprises before anyone else did, and he managed to successfully acquire them. I admit I cannot hold a candle to his courage.”

Conrad gave a small smile and interrupted Fabian at this moment, “But he’s still lacking in comparison to you, Mr. Atticus.”

“I didn’t know you apple polished too.”

Fabian glanced at Conrad and laughed out loud, “But I like it.”

“After looking at the components that make up Jasper’s empire, he seems to be relying on his own prestige to gather Hudson and the rest to his side.”

“The advantage of this is that their impression of him will be glowing. As long as he manages to maintain that, then no one will doubt his decision, and his say within the group will go unchallenged.”

“But the disadvantages are clear too. All it takes is one tragic failure, one that tells everyone around Jasper that he isn’t a god and can still be defeated, then their trust in Jasper will also crumble.”

“The moment this trust crumbles... well, take a look at how horrifyingly fast Jasper’s subsidiaries are growing.”

“Hudson, Wayne, and even the real estate company. Everyone in charge of his subsidiaries will begin to doubt him.”

“That moment is when the tower falls.”

Conrad’s expression changed slightly, and he asked, “Mr. Atticus, so we’ve chosen to target the... foreign funds?”

Fabian chuckled and patted Conrad’s shoulder. “At least 60% of Jasper’s current funds are overseas. He’s in dire need of a lot of money. When it comes to his subsidiaries, the more important they are, the further they appear to be from turning a profit.”

“I can already tell that Jasper’s planned a business roadmap that will last a decade or even two. But before this plan truly becomes profitable, he’ll need an astronomical sum of money.”

“That’s why he’s willing to throw all his funds into what he sees as a chance, regardless of the consequences or risk. By moving his money in the United States stock market, it must mean he’s found a good opportunity to make money.”

“All we need to do is wait patiently for him to move all his funds somewhere else. Then, we’ll crush him while he’s happily waiting for profit. That is when we’ll truly push him to the brink of desperation.”

Fabian’s words were still echoing in Conrad’s ears, but the man felt his heart shake in awe.

At this moment, he had to acknowledge the difference between him and Conrad.

This difference was more than just status. Fabian’s scheming mind and ability to plan were also much greater than his.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1240

The last few times Conrad had fought with Jasper, the former had always planned around the idea of defeating Jasper.

However, Fabian did not. Ever since the man began to plan, he had never thought of destroying Jasper completely on the first attempt. Instead, the man was trying to destroy Jasper’s reputation as the undefeated god of war and plotted around the idea of tearing apart Jasper’s business framework.

This was completely ruining Jasper’s future!

Fabian had a small smile when he saw how Conrad fell deep into thought.

“Once Jasper’s screwed, everything he has in Southeast Province will belong to you. You have my word.”

Conrad chuckled and replied courteously, “Thank you for taking me in, Mr. Atticus.”

“That’s because you’re capable and you have potential...”

...

With the matters in Waterhoof City done and dusted, Jasper decided it was time to return to the Southeast Province.

He was about to call Wendy to arrange for a time to meet when she called him first.

“Jasp, are you still in Waterhoof City?”

Jasper arched his brow at the woman's unusual tone and replied, "I am. What's wrong?"

Wendy sighed and replied, "Do you still remember Ms. Tiana?"

"Of course. Didn't we arrange for her to host some charity funding?" Jasper asked confusedly.

Wendy replied angrily, "Things were still fine before this charity, but this funding brought Ms. Tiana more trouble."

"We invested to help Ms. Tiana start up a charity foundation and things were going smoothly in the beginning. But Ms. Tiana's children must've heard from somewhere that Ms. Tiana suddenly got her hands on a huge amount of money, and they're all here to ask Ms. Tiana for cash."

"Ms. Tiana explained that the money was for the foundation and she's not allowed to use them for anything else, but her children refuse to listen and continued to pester her. Ms. Tiana ended up being sent to the hospital for emergency treatment. I was afraid that medical treatment in Southeast Province wouldn't be good enough, so I sent her to Waterhoof City's hospital instead."

"Go visit her if you're still in Waterhoof City. One reason is to ask how she's doing on behalf of both of us, and another is that I heard Ms. Tiana's children are there too. I'm worried that they'll continue to bother Ms. Tiana."

Jasper asked grimly, "Which hospital?"

"Mid Mount Hospital."

"Alright. I'll be there immediately. I'm coming home once I've dealt with this."

Wendy replied softly, "There's been a lot to do at the headquarters lately so come back soon. You need to personally handle many of these issues."

"Alright."

Jasper rubbed his temples after ending the call. Something dark flashed through his eyes.

He had heard that Ms. Tiana's children were snobs in his past life, but he did not have many opportunities to encounter them back then.

However, Jasper would not allow them to target his business.

“Drive, Jul. To Mid Mount Hospital.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1241

Mid Mount Hospital, the Cardiovascular Department.

Jasper saw Ms. Tiana on the ground floor of the inpatient area.

It had only been a few months since they last met but Ms. Tiana looked much frailer.

Despite being forced to move, threatened with the demolition of her house, and being in bad health back then, Ms. Tiana had still seemed rather energized.

However, Ms. Tiana looked exhausted and despondent now when Jasper saw her again.

Under the cold breeze of the deep autumn, Ms. Tiana sat alone on the bench next to the inpatient department. She held a stack of invoices in her hands while her expression was troubled.

“Ms. Tiana.”

Jasper greeted softly and sat beside her.

“Huh? Jasper? Why, why are you here?”

Ms. Tiana was surprised by Jasper’s arrival.

“Wendy told me what happened. Why didn’t you take the initiative to contact me when you needed help?” Jasper chided.

Ms. Tiana waved him off and replied with a smile, “There’s no need to bother you. I can deal with this myself. You’re a busy man. How could I bother you over this small issue of mine?”

“Sigh. The wind’s rather strong here, Ms. Tiana, and your body’s too weak to be subjected to the elements. Let’s talk about this in your room, okay?” Jasper suggested, instead of directly asking about her children.

Ms. Tiana looked rather embarrassed. “Uh, there’s no need. You’re a busy man, Jasper. Don’t let me hold you back from work. I’m fine here.”

Jasper frowned slightly and asked, “Are you hiding something from me, Ms. Tiana?”

Ms. Tiana replied awkwardly, “I’m still lining up and waiting to be given a room.”

Jasper arched his brow,

Mid Mount Hospital was a renowned hospital beside Hoofmorn University. The hospitalization process in big hospitals like this was difficult and normal patients often needed to line up before they could be assigned a room. This was common knowledge and Jasper was well aware of it.

However, Ms. Tiana was transferred from Southeast Province to Waterhoof City’s Mid Mount Hospital. Wendy had been in charge of the procedures, so there should have been nothing wrong with the documents.

‘So why was Ms. Tiana lining up now?’

Jasper was about to probe further when a man and a woman walked out of the inpatient building.

The man was in his forties and donning a lab coat. He was a doctor at Mid Mount Hospital. Meanwhile, the woman was dressed alluringly and held the car keys to a BMW in her hands.

The couple smiled as they chatted, looking extremely intimate.

“Yo, you’re still alive, old woman?”

The woman saw Ms. Tiana sitting on the bench and said with a sneer.

She crossed her arms and walked over, then stared down at Ms. Tiana disdainfully. “Oldies like you are going to die soon anyway. What’s the point of coming to the hospital? Just find somewhere else to die in if you’re sick. Why come here and waste society’s resources?”

Ms. Tiana’s lips trembled in anger and replied, “How could you be so cruel, young lady? You already stole my hospital room, and you’re still cursing me to die?”

The woman scoffed and said, “All that matters in this society are connections, old woman. Don’t think that just because oldies like you found a channel to stay in the hospital that it means you’re suddenly very powerful. I have the power to make you leave immediately if I want!”

“You were arguing just now, weren’t you? Go on, then. Keep arguing. But after all that arguing, you’re still lining up downstairs, aren’t you?”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1242

“I refuse to believe that there’s no order!” Ms. Tiana said in distress.

Just then, Jasper reached out to place a hand on Ms. Tiana’s shoulder. He pointed at the other woman and asked, “Did this woman stole the hospital room Wendy arranged for you?”

Ms. Tiana did not hide from Jasper anymore and told him, “I already had a room the first day I transferred over, but then this doctor suddenly told me to move out. I thought something was wrong, and turns out they wanted to give this woman a place.”

Ms. Tiana pointed at the middle aged doctor next to the woman when she said ‘doctor’.

“I told them I came first, that my illness is severe, that I have to do surgery soon, but they refused to listen and immediately asked people to throw my things out. I was alone against them, so I had no choice but to wait here.”

Jasper suppressed the anger he felt and turned to look at the expressionless doctor to say, “Give me a reason.”

The middle aged doctor slowly pushed up his glasses and replied, "Reason? For what?"

"Why you threw out a patient from their room. Who gave you the courage and right to do that?"

Jasper shouted forcefully.

Being of high status, Jasper dealt with society's most sophisticated people every day. He was no longer the immature and small businessman from before.

Thus, the doctor was stunned by Jasper's shout. However, he reacted immediately.

As if feeling embarrassed by the fact that Jasper shouted at him, the doctor replied tensely, "I'm the deputy director of the inpatient department. I decide who stays in the hospital and who doesn't! Who are you to demand a reason from me? Why do I have to give you any reason?"

"Do you even know anything about the hospital? What can you say if I claim that her illness is even more severe?"

The middle aged doctor pointed at the woman by his side as he sneered and taunted.

The woman snorted and said, "You're from the villages, aren't you? How unsophisticated. You think that just because you can shout, that it makes you powerful?"

"Society is rather straightforward. People with authority have special powers. Don't like it? Then become someone with authority. Ridiculous foreigner."

"So, to you people, authority is what allows you to disregard a patient's health?" Jasper asked icily.

The middle aged doctor snorted and said, "Are you crazy, young man? Don't think that just because you've read a few books and know a bit of knowledge, that suddenly you have the right to argue with me.

"Do you know where you are, right now? This is a hospital!"

"Not a place where people like you can solve problems through shouting!"

"Look at how many patients there are outside! All of them are lining up to be hospitalized, and all this? I..."

The middle aged doctor then pointed at his own nose and said arrogantly, "Get to decide!"

“This old woman would still have been allowed to line up for a room before this, but let me tell you right now! She can die here for all I care, and I still won’t give her a hospital room!”

The doctor then pointed at Jasper and scolded, “You unsophisticated outsider! This is a lesson for you. Don’t start shouting wherever you go, it’ll only tell people how low classed you are! Understood, outsider?”

“That’s right! You’re nothing more than a dog! You know nothing and yet you dare to shout at Mr. Wheatley?” The woman agreed.

“Jasper.”

Ms. Tiana tugged Jasper’s clothes and sighed. “It’s alright Let’s just go to another hospital. I wouldn’t dare to let such an unethical doctor treat me either.”

However, Jasper held Ms. Tiana back and said, “No, Ms. Tiana. We will stay here tonight. He’s just a deputy director of the inpatient department. He doesn’t have the right to treat you. Don’t worry.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1243

Both Mr. Wheatley and the woman reacted as if Jasper had told them a hilarious joke.

“I know! said you didn’t know anything, outsider, but I didn’t expect you to be so stupid.”

“Did you not hear me correctly? Mr. Wheatley is the deputy director of the inpatient department. He’s the one that decides who gets to be hospitalized or not. If he says this old woman can’t stay in the hospital, then no one can help her at all. Who do you think you are?”

The woman pointed at Jasper and laughed out loud.

Mr. Wheatley also scoffed and looked at Jasper pitifully. Then, he turned to the woman. “Forget it. He’s just an idiot, let’s leave him alone. He’ll just make a fool out of himself if he starts shouting until nightfall.”

“Let’s go. Hoofmorn University’s leadership team is coming to inspect the hospital with the hospital’s heads. I have to reach there before they do.”

The woman nodded and turned to Jasper proudly, “You have a plan, right? Then try and get this old woman a hospital room. Now I’m curious how you’re going to do that. Hahaha...”

As they spoke, a group of people was ushered over from afar.

There were a few men in suits and a few others in lab coats, all looking majestic as they walked over.

Among the group of people were Hoofmorn University's leaders and Mid Mount Hospital's president, all walking over while chatting happily.

Jasper saw one of them and put away his phone that he had previously pulled out.

At the same time, one of the middle aged men also saw Jasper.

Dorian was rather surprised when he saw Jasper.

He did not expect to see Jasper at Mid Mount Hospital. Hoofmorn University's professional team had met JW Electronics' professionals over the past two days while their partnership over the stepper had also been officially reviewed and approved by Swallow Capital's education bureau.

Dorian had his own sources of inside intelligence which told him that the higher-ups seemed to value this huge project greatly.

One of the higher officials in the education bureau even praised this partnership between an academy and an enterprise with three consecutive 'good's.

Dorian also understood, from the change in the dean's attitude lately, that Jasper was Hoofmorn University's true VIP.

"Mr. Laine! Why are you here?"

Due to the various reasons, Dorian immediately pushed his way through Mid Mount Hospital's president and vice presidents to run toward Jasper.

Dorian's rare courteous and enthusiastic attitude, as well as tone, immediately made the hospital's group of leaders understand the situation.

Each of them now looked at Jasper politely.

Mid Mount Hospital was a hospital under Hoofmorn University. This meant that Hoofmorn University's leaders had the direct authority to direct Mid Mount Hospital.

As the dean's secretary, as well a high ranking employee from Hoofmorn University that was close to the university's core authority, Dorian was extremely valued by the hospital's leaders. Therefore, they became extremely careful when interacting with someone Dorian respected greatly.

Seeing Dorian's enthusiastic smile, Jasper did not speak to the man as usual. Instead, he replied coldly.

"An elder of mine had to line up for a hospital room. She's alone and very ill, but she even got thrown out of her hospital room. As a youth, it's only right I wait here with her."

Dorian was stunned by what he heard.

The hospital's group of leaders who rushed after Dorian were dumbfounded as well.

"An elder of mine had to line up for a hospital room." This alone was fine.

Since it implied how noble Mr. Laine was and how he did not demand special treatment because of his high status.

But the next thing he said, "even got thrown out of her hospital room". This statement slapped awake the group of seventeen to eighteen leaders.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1244

There has never been an incident where a patient was chased out of their hospital room!

This would be a huge scandal if word got out.

“Mr. Laine. What... what happened?”

Dorian asked confusedly. He had no idea what Jasper was talking about.

Jasper pointed at Mr. Wheatley, who was stunned by the scene before him, and said, “How about you ask Mr. Wheatley? He emphasized to me quite a few times that he was the one who decided who stayed and who left the hospital. He also said he wanted to see what I could do about it.”

Dorian’s expression darkened after he heard Jasper. Technically speaking, this was an incident of poor management in the hospital. As such, this incident reflected on the medical ethics of the entire hospital.

When a doctor made a mistake, the hospital had to take responsibility. But if the hospital made a mistake? Then it would be Hoofmorn University, the parent organization, that would have to take responsibility! Dorian glared at Mr. Wheatley harshly.

However, due to the huge difference between the two's identities, Dorian could not possibly recognize a mere deputy director of the inpatient department. Therefore, he turned his head and shouted, "Please explain what's going on, Mr. Knowles!"

Mr. Knowles walked out from behind Dorian. Sweat could be seen on this old man's forehead.

"Explain yourself, Hadwin!"

With no other option, Mr. Knowles could only interrogate Mr. Wheatley.

Mr. Wheatley was close to tears.

The tables had turned too quickly, and he had not come to terms with what was happening yet.

"I... I... I didn't mean it that way."

Everyone understood when they heard Hadwin.

The people present were either from Hoofmorn University's or the hospital's managerial ranks. They were considered imposing figures to ordinary people. Those who assumed such positions and roles were not idiots.

From Hadwin's reaction, they instantly understood that Mr. Laine had told the truth.

Hadwin had surely said something similar.

"You... How powerful of you, huh! You even get to decide who stays and leaves this hospital, hmm?" Mr. Knowles was infuriated as he wanted nothing more than to slap Hadwin.

"Our hospital cannot afford to have someone as powerful as you in here. You're suspended with immediate effect, and I'll suggest for your dismissal to be reviewed at the hospital admin office!"

Mr. Knowles' statement confirmed Hadwin's future. Hadwin had put in a lot of hard work and made plenty of sacrifices to assume this greatly desired position as the inpatient department deputy director of a big hospital like Mid Mount.

He was reluctant to give it away now that he was used to the benefits it brought.

He immediately sobbed, “No, Mr. Knowles, Mr. Clem! Please listen to me, that’s not what I meant!”

“It’s all this woman’s fault She’s the one who lied to me and said that this old madam’s all alone and still able to run and walk. She said this old madam was pretty much recovered, that’s why I arranged for her to give up the room.”

“How about this? I’ll arrange a room for this old madam immediately. The best ward with the best treatment I won’t make the same mistake again!”

Hadwin was moments away from kneeling and begging at this point.

Dorian looked at Jasper.

“Why are you looking at me?”

Jasper said indifferently, “This falls under your internal affairs, Mr. Clem, so as an outsider, it’s not my place to interfere. But I am a little disappointed in your management regarding this incident.”

“The hospital is a place to treat and save patients, not a place where people can rule with absolute authority.” Jasper had essentially decided the outcome with his words.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1245

Without needing to see Mr. Clem's gaze, Mr. Knowles immediately replied, "You're right, Mr. Laine. We'll make sure to reflect on this."

"Since all important leaders of the hospital are here, then I'll make it clear now. The hospital will undergo rectification over the next few months and we will not allow black sheep like Hadwin to remain in our hospital's ranks!"

The other vice presidents and directors of the important departments were smart and they all patted their chests and promised to carry out the president's instruction. They also stated that this would affect the hospital greatly.

Under the applause and praise, Dorian saw Jasper's expression smooth over. Only then did he let out a sigh of relief.

In all honesty, this was a small issue, it was just that it was so vile.

Thank goodness this elder who was somehow related to Jasper was alright. Dorian would be at a loss if something had happened to her.

He would be implicated if Jasper wanted to blow this incident up and the school decided to investigate further.

Dorian's eyes flickered over at that thought.

Since he already started, then he might as well do everything thoroughly so that Jasper was satisfied. "This person too."

Dorian pointed at the woman next to Hadwin. She had remained quiet the entire time and even wished that she was transparent as the scene unfurled before her eyes.

"Find out how she got in. If there's been any contact between her and Hadwin in private, then sue them for corruption."

The woman exclaimed when she heard Dorian.

She was smarter than Hadwin, after all. So instead of begging Mr. Knowles and Dorian for mercy, she knew that Jasper, the man she looked down on and called an outsider, was truly the formidable person she needed to plea to.

She disregarded her image and dignity as she immediately fell to her knees in front of Jasper. "Please, Mr. Laine. Forgive me, please. I was blind, I didn't know who you were. I didn't know how powerful you were."

“I’ll immediately give back the hospital room back and leave. I’ll run far away, so please don’t let them sue me.”

Jasper looked at the sobbing woman before he glanced at the BMW car keys in her hands. Then, he said calmly, “You have authority and connections, and that’s why you think you can do whatever you want in society, right?”

The woman shook her head frantically and replied, “No, that’s not true. That’s all nonsense, it’s bullshi*t.”

Jasper replied calmly.

“This is how society works now. The only difference is that I’m more powerful and have better connections than you do. That’s why when you’re running rampant and accidentally knock into me, you’re the one that falls.”

Jasper then looked at Hadwin, whose expression was colorless.

“You asked how I’m going to get a hospital room. Do you see how now?”

Hadwin shivered and did not dare to say a word.

Not in the mood to care about these two, Jasper helped Ms. Tiana to her feet and said, "Come on, Ms. Tiana. Let's go to your hospital room."

Dorian immediately shouted, "Quick! Arrange the best hospital room for Ms. Tiana!"

Jasper looked at Dorian with a subtle smile. "Mr. Clem, would this be considered a backdoor method?"

Dorian was a smart man and he recognized that Jasper had said this to shut the mouths of people who would comment on the matter upon witnessing it.

Therefore, he replied cooperatively, "No way. Didn't you say Ms. Tiana already had a hospital room? We're just changing her room for her right now. This isn't a backdoor method. Not at all."

It sure was easy talking to smart people.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1246

Jasper nodded and walked into the inpatient department with Ms. Tiana.

“Will this cause more trouble for you, Jasper?” Ms. Tiana asked worriedly.

Jasper looked at the president and vice presidents that ran over to prepare a room for Ms. Tiana and smiled, “Something this small isn’t any trouble at all, Ms. Tiana.”

“Favors and connections are necessary in many aspects of our society right now, and this isn’t something we can change. However, I’m sure that the situation will improve in the future. All we can do until then is do our best to protect ourselves.”

Ms. Tiana nodded thoughtfully at Jasper’s words.

After the group of people left alongside Jasper, Hadwin and the woman’s legs completely gave out.

“Mr, Mr. Wheatley. What do we do now?” The woman sobbed to Hadwin.

“What else can we do?!”

Hadwin was enraged and he looked like the devil.

“This wouldn’t have happened to us if you weren’t so high profile and you didn’t mock that woman after taking her ward! We’re both screwed now! Screwed!”

The woman shivered up and said with a wail, “My uncle is an old officer in Waterhoof City’s education bureau and he has some connections with Hoofmorn University’s leaders. Maybe I should talk to him?”

“About what? The Waterhoof City education bureau is only in charge of high schools and primary schools at most! Hoofmorn University’s ranked on the same level as Waterhoof City’s City Government!”

“Besides, that uncle of yours won’t even be considered a subject chief if he were placed in Hoofmorn University! Do you know who Mr. Clem is?”

“He’s Hoofmorn University’s dean’s secretary! In terms of rank and power, your uncle doesn’t even have the right to tie Mr. Clem’s shoes. Let alone Mr. Laine, who Mr. Clem might as well worship at this point! This is all your fault for looking down on people! Your fault!”

The color drained from the woman's face after what she heard.

If Mr. Clem were personally helping Jasper, then even the president and his aides did not have the right to help Jasper set up the hospital room.

However, thanks to these leaders of the hospital, Ms. Tiana was arranged to stay in a special care VIP hospital room with the best professionals in the hospital soon gathering to diagnose her.

A treatment plan was produced within a day.

"Don't worry, Mr. Laine. The professionals have already looked at her. It's not too problematic and it's easy to treat. There's no life-threatening danger and she'll be able to move around like a normal person after resting a bit post-surgery."

Mr. Clem told Jasper in the hospital room's VIP reception area.

Having either money or power during such times brought plenty of benefits and privileges.

The VIP hospital room was an example. Normal hospital rooms contained at least three other patients, where the scope of the patient's activity was limited to their small hospital bed.

However, the VIP room not only had a private for the patient to rest in, but there were also a bedroom for care workers, a reception area for guests, and an independent bathroom. There were also 24-hours on call nurses.

"Alright."

Jasper nodded, finally smiling at Dorian.

"Thank you for the trouble, Mr. Clem."

Dorian sighed and replied, "There's no need to thank me. What happened today was the result of our negligence."

Jasper waved him off, not wishing to further dwell on this matter, and said, "The partnership with Hoofmorn University has already officially begun, and the first batch of funds will arrive immediately."

“However, I am a businessman at the end of the day, and profiting is still my goal. Therefore, I do hope that research results can be produced as soon as possible.”

Dorian nodded and replied sternly, “Don’t worry, Mr. Laine. Not only will our university do our best, but the officials at Swallow Capital really support us as well.”

“We can request Swallow Capital for governmental technical support when the time comes. Considering all this, I’m sure we’ll be able to produce good results as soon as possible.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1247

Jasper and Dorian chatted for another thirty minutes or so before the latter had to leave. Dorian had business to attend to, so he got up and excused himself after they arrived at an understanding.

Jasper did not hold him back and walked him out of the hospital room himself.

Jasper returned to the patient’s room and pulled out an apple from the fruit basket sent over by the vice president of the hospital. Peeling the skin off the apple, Jasper joked.

“How important of us, Ms. Tiana. Other patients come into the hospital and think of ways to win the doctors over, while the vice president himself brings fruit over for us.”

Ms. Tiana leaned against the headboard and told Jasper gently, “All thanks to you.”

Jasper saw how healthy Ms. Tiana appeared, and took the initiative to ask, “Ms. Tiana. What about your kids?”

Ms. Tiana’s expression changed and she replied after sighing, “There’s no point talking about that unfilial son.”

“Tell me anyway.”

Jasper handed Ms. Tiana a peeled apple.

“I heard that he angered you so much you had to be sent to the hospital’s emergency room.”

Ms. Tiana replied sorrowfully, “He said he’s too poor and he can’t afford to pay his child’s school fees. I gave him my old house and he said it wasn’t enough. He knows that I’m managing the money from the foundation, so he wants me to transfer the money to him secretly.

“I rejected him immediately, but he won’t leave me alone. Sigh, what misfortune to have such a child.”

Speak of the devil.

The hospital room door was pushed open and a man appeared at the doors to the patient’s room.

“Mom!”

Donned in a suit and looking like serious salaryman, he shouted at Ms. Tiana from the entrance to the room.

Ms. Tiana was stunned for a moment before she replied darkly, “Don’t call me mom! I don’t have a son like you!”

Jasper was the one by her side when times were most difficult.

Not only did Jasper solve many of her troubles, but despite his status and role as the owner of a huge business, Jasper even came to take care of her himself. Not to mention that Jasper was passionate when it came to charity.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1248

“But I’m not wrong.”

Jeff shrugged then sat on the sofa bossily and continued, “That’s what he did all those years, he’s a poor student that ate and drank from our house. Besides, if I don’t have a sense of propriety, isn’t that your fault?”

“If I’m being real, Mom, you had this coming, no? You’re in charge of so much money, so what’s wrong with pulling out a few hundred thousand for me? You wouldn’t need to come to the hospital if you just listened and gave me the money at the start.”

Ms. Tiana replied painfully, “How many times do I have to tell you? This money is from the foundation to be used to support poor children who cannot afford to go to school. The only property I have is my house and you already forced me to give it to you. I don’t have any more money.”

“Tsk tsk.”

Jeff's expression was one of disbelief and mockery. He turned his head and looked at the hospital room to say, "Don't give me that nonsense, Mom. I already asked before I came here, this VIP room alone costs a good few hundred bucks a day."

"Tsk tsk. I'm only earning 1100 Somer Dollars a month, and you're telling me that you don't have money?"

"How'd you manage to stay in such a nice hospital room if you didn't have money?"

"So you're telling me that your mom is supposed to live in those normal hospital rooms with other people? Whilst the better alternative she is enjoying must be because she took money from the foundation?" Jasper asked icily.

Jeff laughed out loud and replied, "That's not what I said. I also don't have the time to waste on reasoning with you people."

"Don't think that I don't know what you're thinking, Jasper. A poor student like you definitely haven't achieved anything yet, right?"

"You must've got your eyes on the money my mom is in charge of and you're here to get a piece of it too, right?"

“You wish, I’m telling you! She is my mom! Only I have the right to ask her for money. You’re just her student, so how do you have the gall to ask her for money?”

Jeff then pointed at Jasper and turned to tell Ms. Tiana, “I told you long ago, didn’t I, Mom? I told you that as long as you have a bit of money, these f*ckers will all have their eyes on you! Don’t be softhearted and fall for their lies. Especially not the lies of broke f*ckers like him!”

“Do you really have the heart to watch me be forced to live on the streets? Ava’s going to divorce me if I don’t bring money back! Do you want to see your son live single and alone for the rest of his life?”

Ms. Tiana heaved heavily and hit the hospital bed as she said, “You’ve disappointed me too much, Jeff! Go away, leave right now! I told you I don’t have a single cent to spare for you!

“Your wife is your problem. If she wants to divorce you, then that’s your own issue to deal with. I’m old and about to go for surgery. Have you ever even asked about my health?”

“All you did is ask for money since you first walked through those doors. Is this how you treat your mother?”

“Get out! I don’t have a son like you!”

Jeff felt rather embarrassed when he heard Ms. Tianas' fierce shout.

He immediately stared at Jasper.

“Hey, Jasper, did you say something to my mom?!”

Jeff then warned Jasper wretchedly, “I’m telling you, you’re just a poor f*cker and an outsider. Don’t think that just because my mom cooked you meals for two whole years that you get to pull connections with my mom. Interfere in this again and I’ll kill you!”

Jasper narrowed his eyes slightly at Jeff before he told Ms. Tiana, who had disappointment written all over her face, “You’re right Ms. Tiana. He is a rascal. You might as well not have a son than have one like this.”

Jeff was enraged by what Jasper said.

“Motherf*cker, what did you say?!”

“Don’t forget who you are! Without my mom, a poor b*stard like you would’ve died on the streets long ago from starvation! You’ve been eating from my house freely like a stray dog and this is how you treat me now?”

“Look at this group of ungrateful children you taught, Mom. He’s been eating our food for years and this is how he acts now! What kind of repayment is this?”

Then, Jeff seemed to have remembered something and shouted at Jasper, “My mom is your teacher and she even fed you all those years. Now that my mom’s sick, you’re coming here empty handed?”

“Don’t you even understand that you need to come with money?”

“I want 500, no, at least 1000 bucks!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1249

This sentence had emphasized just how shameless Jeff was.

Normal people did not take the initiative to ask someone to pay back a favor in cash.

Let alone in such an arrogant and matter of factly way. Ms. Tiana was the first person to object. She could not accept her son’s shamelessness.

“Unfilial! What an unfilial son I have!”

Ms. Tiana pointed at Jeff, her complexion pale with anger.

“How did I give birth to such a b*stard like you? You’ve brought disgrace to our whole family!”

If not for Jasper, Ms. Tiana might have lost her life when she had to deal with the demolition team before. Not to mention that Jasper was the reason she now laid in the best hospital room in Mid Mount Hospital with the most elite team of professionals treating her.

Ms. Tiana had long felt extremely grateful to Jasper for all of this.

However, Jeff’s behavior now made Ms. Tiana want to bang her head against the wall and kill herself.

Jeff harrumphed and ignored Ms. Tiana, who was about to die from infuriation, and instead stared at Jasper in disdain. “You don’t even have that money, do you?”

“Stop acting like you’re some sli*t in front of my mom. Who the f*ck are you? You can’t even take 1000 bucks “out and you’re shouting at me?”

“I’m telling you, you better get lost if you knew what’s good for you. Otherwise, forget this 1000 bucks, I’ll make you pay for the food you ate in my house too!”

These two sentences made Ms. Tiana explode. She raised her hand to throw the apple Jasper peeled for her at Jeff.

Taken aback, the apple hit Jeff square in the face as juice spurted all over his head. He shouted at Ms. Tiana angrily, “How dare you throw things at me, old woman?!”

“How dare you throw an apple at me because of an outsider?”

“I call you mom because you gave birth to me and took care of me. But if you’re treating me like this, then I won’t even call you ‘Mom’!”

“Why do I have to acknowledge you as my mom when you’re throwing things at me because of an outsider? Give me 500 thousand and I’ll sever all familial ties with you!”

Ms. Tiana panted and pointed at Jeff from where she sat on the bed and said, “Get out! Forget 500 thousand, I won’t even spare you 5 cents! You rascal!”

“Yes, don’t acknowledge me as your mom at all! I don’t need a rascal like you for a son anyway! Get out right now!”

Jeff scoffed and raised his hand to wipe the juice off his face. “Fine, then! You want me to leave, right? Then I’ll go back and tell the world about how horrible you treat me, old hag!”

“Don’t you cherish your reputation the most? I’d like to see how you plan to live with your head held high once I ruin your reputation!”

“You keep saying that you can’t use the foundation’s money, so where did you get the money for such an expensive hospital room, then? You must’ve used that money!”

“You’re already a dead woman walking at this point, so what’s the point in holding on to that money? You’d rather hold on to money you won’t have the time to enjoy instead of giving it to your son, me.”

“How’re you going to face my dad once you die, huh?”

“Are you done? ”

Jasper interrupted Jeff’s maddening shouts coldly.

Jeff immediately glared at Jasper and chuckled wretchedly, “Who are you to talk here, stupid f*cker?”

“You’re right, I am an outsider.”

Jasper did not seem to care about what Jeff said as he continued on his own.

Indeed, people like Jeff were nothing more than an ant in comparison to Jasper’s current self.

No matter how sensitive or petty a person was, they would not care about an ant boasting in front of them. Thus, Jasper was completely unfazed and calm in the face with Jeff’s venomous words.

However, what truly chilled Jasper to the core was Jeff’s attitude toward his mother, Ms. Tiana.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1250

Everyone had parents. Jasper thought of his own and could not help but ask Jeff a question.

“But I have parents too. So, I’m really curious just what kind of b*stard child you have to be in order to say something like that to your mom.”

Jeff’s expression darkened at Jasper’s questioning.

The man’s words had touched the little shred of dignity he still had in him, and it made him feel mortified.

“As an outsider, I really didn’t plan on interfering in your family issue, but there’s something I have to tell you since it’s the foundation you’re targeting.”

Jasper looked at Jeff and chuckled.

“The money in the foundation you have your eyes on belongs to me. It’s my investment that your mother’s managing, and she does not have the right to use this money as she wishes. Every single cent taken from this foundation has to undergo a professional review before it can be transferred.”

“Of course, telling a rascal all this is pointless because people like you will never understand the management of a foundation’s funds.

“All you know is probably the insignificant amount before your eyes that you equated with your mom’s hard work.”

As that moment, Jeff was too shocked to even get upset at the disdain in Jasper’s tone.

He felt his blood vessels were about to burst.

Jeff was only so aggressive to his mother because he came to know that she was managing a total investment of 10 million worth of funds.

As far as Jeff was concerned, an amount of 10 million was pretty much beyond his imagination.

He did not think there was a problem in taking a small amount out of this mountain of funds.

However, he had never expected this investment to belong to Jasper.

‘Doesn’t this mean that the poor boy Mom brought home to feed every day before is already the owner of a huge business and has at least 10 million worth of assets?’

Jeff shuddered as if electrocuted when he thought of this.

“Bullsh*t! You haven’t even seen so much f*cking money in your life before! You think you’d get to pull out that much money so easily?”

Jeff said in disbelief.

Jasper shook his head and replied calmly, “Whether you believe me or not doesn’t matter. Why do I have to prove it to you?”

“All you need to know is that I speak the truth, and your mom’s right not to give you any money. That’s all.”

Then, Jasper shouted at the door.

“Jul.”

“Right here!”

Julian, who had been waiting outside the room door, was immediately energized as he pushed open the door to respond courteously.

“Have this rascal kneel at the door.”

Julian immediately entered the room upon hearing Jasper’s instruction.

At the end of the day, Julian was a human too and still held human emotions. Therefore, he had nothing but distaste for the rascal Jeff who scolded and swore at his own mother.

“What, what are you doing?”

Jeff shouted in fright. His physique was not that bad, so he had planned to struggle and fight back. Unfortunately, not even 100 Jeffs were a match for one Julian.

More than ten seconds later, Jeff screamed pitifully as Julian forced him to kneel at the door.

After having all four of his limbs dislocated by Julian, Jeff wailed tragically.

“He’s hitting me! I’m getting beaten up! Is there no sense of order around here?! How dare you beat me up in broad daylight!

“Mom! Are you just going to watch me get beaten up?”

The man had just finished speaking when the hospital room opened again to reveal Mr. Knowles and a group of professionals.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1251

“Huh?!”

This was the first reaction of the group of professionals collectively, including Mr. Knowles, when they took in the scene in the hospital room.

It was rare to see someone kneeling to another considering the current time and age. It was a curious and eye catching sight to see an adult male kneeling at the door of a patient's room.

Something flickered in Jeff's eyes when he saw the large group of people enter the room.

“Quick! Someone help me! I'm getting beaten up and harmed in broad daylight!”

“Doctor, doctors! Don't treat my mother's illness, the money she's paying you is something she stole from a charity foundation! It's not her money! You people will be in trouble if investigation traces back to you!”

Everyone was shocked when they heard him.

Ms. Tiana sighed deeply and closed her eyes before she leaned back into the hospital bed. She really did not want to look at Jeff anymore.

At this moment, the forgiving and generous teacher that treated all her students like her own children had completely lost hope in her son.

Mr. Knowles and the other doctors were all looking at Jeff as if the latter were a madman.

Ignoring the fact that Jasper was the one who personally arranged Ms. Tiana's hospitalization and there was no need to worry about him not paying the fees, Mr. Knowles and the other doctor would happily treat Ms. Tiana for free even if Jasper refused to pay.

Money was a non- issue here. What was more important was being in favor of someone as powerful as Jasper.

Not to mention how impossible it was for Jasper to refuse to pay.

Plus, the person lying in bed was Jeff's mother. How could he request doctors not to treat her?

Mr. Knowles shook his head and gave Jeff one last disdainful glance. Then he walked around Jeff as if he smelled horrible and entered the patient's room.

Jeff thought his important statement would attract the doctor's and hospital's attention, so he was stunned by their reaction or lack thereof.

"What's wrong with you people? I already told you that my mom's money is from a questionable source! Didn't you hear me?"

A professional who happened to be walking past Jeff glared at him and said unkindly, "You still have the gall to call her your mom? It's a misfortune for her to have a son like you."

"Mr. Laine had personally arranged for her hospitalization, payment isn't an issue at all. The man in front is the president of our Mid Mount Hospital and we're all specialists in our fields. Mr. Laine was the one who asked all of us over."

"Plus, even if the patient can't afford medication, there's still no way us doctors could just watch as a patient dies before our eyes, okay? Their health is our first priority."

“I really don’t know what I should say about you.”

‘Mr. Laine!’

Jeff acutely caught on to this title.

Coupled with being told that Mid Mount Hospital’s president came over personally, Jeff was completely dumbfounded.

Jeff looked at Jasper again instinctively. This time, there was no more disdain in his eyes, replacing it was a deeply instilled fear.

In his narrow minded vision, Jeff could not even imagine how powerful a man’s status had to be in order to request for the personal attendance of the president from such a prestigious hospital like Mid Mount.

This was already beyond his understanding.

Jasper nodded slightly when he heard this professional’s words.

Whether this professional had purposefully said such a thing so Jasper could hear him, the latter was inclined to believe that the professional was an ethical doctor.

After all, people like Mr. Wheatley were a minority.

“Mr. Laine.” Mr. Knowles greeted Jasper promptly once he entered the room.

Jasper smiled and reached out his hand to say, “Apologies for the scene, Mr. Knowles.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1252

Mr. Knowles immediately smiled and replied, “You’re too kind.”

Jeff felt extremely uncomfortable as he saw this hospital’s president, a man who was already of extremely high status in his understanding, behave humbly in front of Jasper.

After what he saw and heard with his own eyes and ears, Jeff had to admit that he was blind and looked down on the wrong person.

“Mr. Laine, I’ve gathered the best specialists from Cardiovascular Surgery, Neurology, Thoracic Surgery, and other fields to come up with a treatment plan and we’d like to discuss it with the old madam herself before we implement it.”

Jasper nodded at the man's words and replied, "Sure. I only have one request, and that's to ensure her safety and health, and treat her as quickly as possible."

The professional that chided Jeff smiled and replied, "Don't worry, Mr. Laine. We might not dare to promise everything, but there shouldn't be any issues working together to perform surgery."

"Not to mention that the patient's situation isn't too severe either. We can start preparing for the surgery today, for example, the infusion and the fasting. If we're fast, we should be able to perform surgery the day after tomorrow."

"Then depending on the patient's personal recovery situation, ideally, she should be able to be discharged within the week."

Ms. Tiana finally brightened up when she heard this and replied gratefully, "Thankyou, doctors, thank you."

These professionals have heard countless similar thanks before.

They were long used to the thanks of patients and their families since they received many after treating a patient.

The specialists shared a look and a smile, before collectively swallowing down the words, 'You should thank Mr. Laine the most.'

After Mr. Knowles and the other professionals asked Ms. Tiana some detailed personal questions, they left to prepare a more in depth surgery plan.

Jasper did not understand the specifics, so naturally, the man would not speak out of line. After the group left, Jasper then looked at Jeff who was still kneeling on the floor despondently.

"What are you still doing here? Go."

Jeff shivered when he heard Jasper.

His mind had already caught up with what happened in the short amount of time the professionals were here.

He had accepted the reality of the situation. Once he understood what kind of situation he was in, Jeff who was filled with utter remorse was in agony.

'Jasper's current status and identity allowed him to simply invest 10 million for Mom to establish a charity foundation.'

‘As my mom’s son, wouldn’t it be easy to gain benefits from Jasper?’

‘But there’s no chance for that anymore.’

Filled with regret, Jeff’s eyes reddened.

He knelt on the floor and sobbed to Jasper, unable to do anything else due to his disjointed limbs. “Jasper, ah, no, Mr. Laine! Oh, Mr. Laine!”

“I did go overboard this time, you’re right! I am a b*stard son!”

“An absolute rogue who deserves to die!”

“I shouldn’t have treated my mom like that! I’m sorry! I really am! Please just give me another chance! I’m begging you please!”

Jasper’s expression turned playful as he looked at Jeff, sobbing in regret.

“You keep saying you’re sorry to your mom, but why are you begging and apologizing to me?”

Hope reignited in Jeff’s gaze and he turned to Ms. Tiana on the hospital bed, knocking his head against the floor vigorously.

“I’m sorry, Mom! Please forgive me!”

“I’m still your only son! Please forgive me for this once! I’m really sorry!”

“I promise I’ll be filial from now on and I won’t anger you again! Mom, you need someone to take care of you now, don’t you? Let me stay and do that! Ava too, I’ll bring Ava over so she can take care of you as well.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1253

Jasper smiled but did not say anything when he took in Jeff’s behavior.

This was Ms. Tiana’s familial matter, after all, and he did not want to say anything to interfere with her decision.

The truth remained that Ms. Tiana was still too soft hearted.

Or perhaps, this was still her son, her own flesh and blood.

Jeff might be heartless, but Ms. Tiana could not bring herself to do so.

“Don’t kneel anymore.”

Ms. Tiana sighed softly and said tiredly.

Jeff was elated and he quickly shouted, “You forgive me, mom?”

Ms. Tiana waved him off. “Just get up first. Go home. I’m doing fine here and I don’t need anyone to be at my beck and call.”

Jeff wanted to get up, but his dislocated limbs caused him to fall flat onto the ground with a thud.

Jasper glanced at Julian to cue him.

Julian walked over and reset Jeff’s limbs while the man wailed.

“Mom. Thank you, thank you so much.”

Jeff ran over and pounced at the side of the bed once he got up and took Ms. Tiana’s hand to thank her.

“But mom, Ava, and I don’t have a cent to our name anymore. We also don’t have a job so we were wondering if Mr. Laine could help us with that?”

Ms. Tiana’s expression changed once she heard Jeff. Jeff quickly spoke in response, “Just several ten thousand is good enough. Once Ava and I repay our debts, we’ll get a good job so we can support your retirement.”

“You even owe people money?!” Ms. Tiana exclaimed in shock

Jeff replied regretfully, “Mom you know how we have a lot of expenses to pay. That’s why we went to borrow several ten thousand bucks from someone.”

“I’ll pay that for you.”

Jasper pulled out a 50 thousand Somer Dollar check from his breast pocket and tossed it before Jeff.

Jasper pretended not to see the glee and pride in the other's expression and continued, "Don't worry, Ms. Tiana. I'll arrange a job for them too."

Ms. Tiana felt uneasy and quickly replied, "I've already troubled you too much, Jasper. Plus, it's not worth it helping this rascal."

Jasper smiled and shook his head to reply, "Don't worry too much, Ms. Tiana. It's still not too late for them to reflect and become a better person from now on."

Ms. Tiana saw Jasper's determination and sighed. "I owe you even more now."

Jasper smiled. "The me right now wouldn't exist if not for you back then. I'm just repaying the kindness you showed me."

"Plus, I also hope that you'd get better soon so you can continue managing the foundation. Without you, the foundation's development has to be put on hold."

Ms. Tiana smiled brightly and replied, "Alright. I'll make sure to recover as quickly as possible."

Ms. Tiana then turned to Jeff and said, "Quickly go back and return the money you owe people. Try not to look for me if possible. Live your own lives, I don't want to be disturbed by your family either."

He had both money and a job.

Jeff did not care about what Ms. Tiana thought anymore.

"Alright," Jeff replied casually then turned to Jasper and bowed.

"Thank you, Mr. Laine."

As far as he was concerned, Jasper was the formidable figure he needed to gain the favor of. Only by flattering the man could he blatantly continue to ask for money and benefits.

"It's no big deal. Go back first," Jasper replied calmly. Jeff left elatedly.

Jeff had just left when Jasper told Ms. Tiana, "Stay here and get your treatment, Ms. Tiana. I'll send someone to fetch you back once you've recovered. Don't worry about anything else. No matter how important something is, your own health should still take precedence."

“Alright, I know.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1254

Ms. Tiana’s wise gaze seemed to have seen through something when she looked at Jasper but she did not say anything.

Instead, she nodded and smiled gently as patted Jasper’s hand. “If you’re busy, Jasper, then go get to work first. I’ll be fine here.”

“And do what you want to do. I’ve lived quite a long life and I know what’s real and what’s just an act.”

Jasper was stunned for a moment before he nodded and responded, “Then rest well, Ms. Tiana.”

Jasper walked out of the hospital room and spoke to Julian calmly, “Jul.”

“Go run after Jeff and get the money back. Then tell him to run as far as he can. Warn him not to come and disturb Ms. Tiana again. I’ll tell the hospital too not to allow Jeff to visit”

“Alright!”

Julian immediately turned to carry out the instruction. Jasper shook his head as he stared at Julian’s back.

Jeff was too naive.

Jasper had initially planned to pretend in front of Ms. Tiana so that she would move on from Jeff and recover properly from treatment.

However, Ms. Tiana had lived for decades and she could see through his intentions.

Her heart had gone completely cold and that was why she cooperated with his play.

Jasper was reassured by this.

He had nothing to worry about as long as Ms. Tiana was not affected.

People like Jeff can keep dreaming if he thought he could take Jasper's money and rely on Jasper to get a job!

Half an hour later, Julian returned to Jasper's side casually.

"I got it back, Jasper."

Julian said with a smile as he passed the check written less than an hour ago to Jasper.

Jasper waved and did not take the check.

"Keep it."

Julian did not insist. After being by Jasper's side for so long, he knew that Jasper was generous enough not to care about something so insignificant. It was not out of charity or reputation that Jasper gave him money, but more out of convenience.

Julian put the money in his breast pocket and asked, "Are we going back now, Jasper?"

“We’re done with everything here, so we can return directly.”

Jasper exhaled softly and chuckled as he pulled open the car door. “It’s Wendy’s birthday tomorrow. She thinks I’ll forget just because she didn’t tell me.”

“She’d nag me for the next few decades if I really forgot about her birthday.”

“Hmph. As if I’d let her catch on to such a fatal weakness.”

“Let’s go, straight back to the Southeast Province. Return quietly and try not to alert anyone. I’ll go decorate a bit first and give her a huge surprise tomorrow night.”

Julian got into the driver’s seat and started the Bentley’s engine. As he pulled on his seatbelt, he chuckled and said, “Jasper, Mr. Law had me remind you before he left that Miss Anna’s birthday is next week. She’s been staying overseas for a long time and she’s hoping to meet you again.”

Jasper’s expression darkened and knocked on the back of Julian’s head. “Drive the car and shut up!”

Julian drove with an evil chuckle but did not say another word.

While Jasper rubbed his temples frustratedly.

Wendy's and Anna's birthdays were just one month apart. This was something too important for him to forget.

However, according to the timing, next month should be the most crucial time of his plan. His head hurt at the thought.

Thank goodness that this headache could still be solved. Jasper might truly go crazy if both their birthdays were on the same day.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1255

It was fortunate that Waterhoof City was not too far from the Southeast Province. Still, since they left overnight, it was already two am. the next day when Jasper arrived at Nauritus City.

Jasper did not return to the villa or his own home since he wanted to prepare a surprise, instead, the man decided to check in and rest at a hotel until morning came.

The sky brightened and with the rising of the morning sun, the city awoke as well.

The streets began to bustle and steam from breakfast restaurants joined the cacophony of cars and birds whistling. Everyone could feel how Nauritus City was flourishing with every day.

On both banks of the Southface River, white collar elites appeared in various commercial buildings.

Some were on the phone and some held coffees or laptops in their hands as they began a new day of work. It was time to clock in and in JW Capital's office in Southface River Tower, people all got back to work. Wendy sat in her CFO's office and frowned as she stared at the report in her hand.

She did not say a thing, but the middle ranked manager who stood beside her table was too terrified to take a deeper breath.

With the expansion of JW Capital and its growing business, Wendy's prestige also began to grow.

Not only was Wendy in charge of all of JW Capital and its subsidiaries' finances, but she was also the female owner of JW. Excluding the owner, Jasper, who rarely appeared in the office, everyone in the company feared Wendy.

The lone fact that the company's second highest ranked officer, COO Malcolm Malibu, had also been subjected to a harsh reprimanding from Wendy due to a mistake in the operating funds.

The most audacious part of this incident was that Wendy was half a rank lower than Malcolm.

However, thinking back to how this female owner had also rejected the owner Jasper's suggestion over a financial expense, this manager suddenly realized that Malcolm, this foreigner's incident was not too big of a deal.

The middle ranked manager peeked at Wendy who was currently going through the document and suddenly felt regretful.

He should not have sought Ms. Schuler out to review his document today.

According to a few colleagues, Ms. Schuler seemed to be in a bad mood these days.

"Not too bad."

Wendy finally closed the document sometime later and commented.

The manager let out a deep sigh of relief at those three words. Happiness and gratefulness for fate engulfed him.

'Thank goodness, I did put enough effort into this document...'

"But the expenses on Article four, section three and Article five, section two are unnecessary."

What Wendy said next had the manager's heart lurching to his throat.

"About this, Ms. Schuler. These two sections are budgets for increased staff and allocation cars to employees of and above middle ranked deputy managers. Both these budgets were suggested by Mr. Laine before..."

"So what if it's Mr. Laine?!"

Wendy stared at the manager emotionlessly at the mention of Jasper.

The pitiful manager felt his butt squeeze and was about to pee himself in fright.

'Ms. Schuler's gaze reminds me of the one my wife would give when we're fighting and refusing to talk to each other.'

'Did Mr. Laine and Ms. Schuler get into a fight?!'

This thought had cold sweat trickling over the manager's skin.

'What the f*ck. I know this company belongs to you two and you can do whatever you want, but why is insignificant little me suffering when you two are fighting?'

"So what if Mr. Laine suggested it? I won't approve of unrealistic and inappropriate suggestions. Do you know what the situation is now?"

"The company is broke, we need more money!"

"I can approve of the budget for more staff, but allocating cars to anyone of and above the deputy manager position is easily an expense of millions of Somer Dollars! It's completely unnecessary!"

"The company's still in its start-up stages and it's got a long way before we can start being ostentatious. What on earth is Jasper thinking? I'll talk to him about this later. Get rid of that section and add a new section with a proposal to increase the standard of reimbursement for business travel."

"Alright, that's all I have. Revise the report and hand it over for approval on three days."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1256

Wendy then told the man to leave after she finished speaking.

The little manager did not dare protest. Facing the female owner of the business that had revoked the owner's orders, the little manager took the document and ran out immediately.

Wendy tossed the gilded pen in her hand angrily after the manager left, and she crossed her arms huffing where she sat on her office chair.

Wendy subconsciously glanced at her phone and felt even angrier at the lack of activity.

Today was her birthday and it seemed like this man had completely forgotten about it.

'B*stard! How can you forget something so important!'

Wendy felt it was unfair. Deep in thought, Wendy took her phone sub consciously, as if driven by some deity, and dialed a number.

The last time she talked to Jasper was about Ms. Tiana. She did not have the time to talk about her own issue and she still held hope that Jasper would 'realize' on his own. From how things looked now, the man seemed like a hopeless case.

"Where are you?"

Wendy asked directly after the call connected.

"Still working. I've already dealt with Ms. Tiana's situation, what's wrong?"

Jasper's voice drifted over through the phone.

Wendy clenched her jaw silently and said tensely, "Were you the one who suggested allocating cars for everyone of and above deputy manager?"

Jasper seemed to be stunned by what he heard.

He did not remember such small matters.

“It rings a few bells I think...”

“It’s a waste of money so I revoked it. We can reconsider it when we’re not as tight on cash,” Wendy harrumphed but explained herself anyway.

Jasper smiled. “That’s alright. Our funding issue should be solved after the month.”

“When are you coming back?” Wendy asked casually.

“In another two days, I think. I still have a bit of work to do,” Jasper sounded slightly apologetic.

“Alright, then, there’s quite a bit of work at the company as well. But do come back soon. As I said, there’s quite the accumulated workload for you at the office,” Wendy replied, suppressing her unhappiness.

“I Will...”

Wendy tossed her phone away after ending the call.

Wendy tossed her phone away after ending the call.

As if they had just fought, Wendy could not help but think that she could have handled the situation better. Wendy felt that she was too nice to Jasper, to the point where the man would forget her birthday.

Yet she could not state it outright either.

She was concerned about how busy Jasper was, but she also did not tell him directly because the more girly part of her wanted him to remember it himself.

Yet... this rascal!

Wendy grabbed the office landline frustratedly and connected a call with her secretary.

“Jenn, inform our colleagues of the department to get ready for a meeting in half an hour. We’ll do the fourth quarter financial review in advance!”

Turning her frustration into motivation, Wendy began to pressure her subordinates.

In the other end of Nauritus City, Jasper sent away a few people in charge of the venue he needed for the surprise tonight with a crescent eyed smile. He stretched and suddenly laughed out loud.

He certainly could hear the despondence in Wendy's voice. Used to Wendy's gentleness and meekness, Jasper suddenly found that he quite enjoyed pranking her from time to time.

"Oh, Wendy. How could I possibly forget something so important? It's because it's important that I keep this a secret."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1257

Time passed before she knew it as Wendy began to busy herself with work.

It was only when the night lights lit up, the lamps under the office switched on, and the sound of colleagues walking out the corridor that Wendy realized it was time to clock off.

Wendy rubbed her sore neck exhaustedly. She was about to turn her computer off when she received a call from her father.

"Are you still at the office, Wendy?"

Dawson's gentle voice put a smile on Wendy's face. "Yeah. I'm about to clock out. Why, is there something wrong, Dad?"

Dawson laughed out loud. "It's your birthday today. Why, are you so busy..? You forgot?"

Wendy felt her heart warm.

Indeed, all men were trash and could not be relied upon. The only man who could was one's own father.

"Did you get me a gift, Dad?" Wendy asked happily.

"Haha. I was thinking I'd treat you to dinner today. Since it's been a long time we've eaten together."

Wendy felt slightly confused about Dawson's suggestion.

'Dad's always been the one who cooked when we celebrated my birthday before.

'So why's it different this time?'

Still, Wendy did not think too much of it and agreed immediately.

"Sure. Where are we eating?"

Dawson replied, "Come to the North Bank. There's a new restaurant with Fac cuisine that opened recently. I heard a few business friends say the food and view are great. I'll wait for you here."

"Is it the New Garden House? I heard of it too and they've made quite the reputation for themselves, but I never had to time to try."

"Yup, right there. They have a balcony of the river view and it's right above the bank of Southface River. It's pretty nice that you get to see the bustling nightlife of South Bank and the river. I'll be waiting for you here."

"I'll be right there!"

After ending the call, Dawson then called Jasper from Schuler Group's office happily.

“You little brat. I can’t believe you asked me to cooperate with you and prank my own daughter,” Dawson chided smilingly.

“Sigh. The lengths I go to make your daughter happy,” Jasper joked with a laugh.

“Alright. I’ve already done my part so what’s next will be up to you,” Dawson replied.

Jasper asked, “Do you want to eat with us, Uncle Schuler?”

Dawson replied with a huff, “At least be sincere if you’re going to treat me to dinner. An old man like me will only disturb you two, you two have fun.”

“Haha, alright. I’ll bring Wendy home for dinner tomorrow,” Jasper said with a smile.

Dawson chuckled and ended the call.

Wendy took her purse and left the office happily.

Even if the man had forgotten her birthday, Wendy still decided to forgive him for now and only teach him a lesson when he returned.

Wendy drove over the Southface River Bridge and arrived at the North Bank. In less than twenty minutes, Wendy had already arrived at the New Garden House that was lately hugely popular in Nauritus City.

Since JW Real Estate had successfully developed the South Bank of Southface River, the North Bank's development had also begun.

However, due to the topography of the land, there was no way the North Bank could become another commercial district. Not to mention that there was already a South Bank that fulfilled the developmental needs of Nauritus City for the next few decades, the North Bank was more suited for the service sector of the economy like food, beverages, and entertainment like businesses.

Thus came the appearance of New Garden House.

However, New Garden House seemed desolate today when it was supposed to be bustling with business. There were no cars in the parking lot at all and Wendy was confused by what she saw.

“Isn’t business here doing great? Why isn’t there anyone at all?”

Wendy frowned and walked into New Garden House puzzled.

She had just walked into the vintage dining hall when she saw two neat rows of professionally dressed servers, in white suits, black pants, and white gloves, greet Wendy courteously.

“Welcome, Miss Schuler.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1258

Shing.

Wendy’s eyes lit up.

It explained why New Garden House’s reputation was as good as it was. Even if you ignore how their food tasted, their service was already much better than other restaurants.

“Hello...”

Wendy nodded with a smile and walked toward the open air balcony her father Dawson talked about amidst the servers' shocked gazes.

Wendy was used to such looks because her beauty had always attracted the gazes of men and women alike.

'What a shame that the rascal did not know to cherish it!'

Wendy pushed open the door on the second floor and was stunned by the gaze before her eyes.

The sizeable open-air balcony was decorated and filled with petals.

The entire ground was filled with her favorite flower lilies.

There were pink, white, and green petals and various kinds of lilies bloomed beautifully all around. Not even the light river breeze could disperse the subtle scent of lilies in the air.

Among the sea of lily petals left one small path that led to the middle table in the open air balcony.

On the round table was one opened bottle of red wine, a few small dishes, and a covered candlestick so the flame would not be extinguished by the breeze.

A candlelit dinner.

The slight glow shone on the back of a young man, currently staring at the South Bank of the Southface River and against the door.

As if feeling something, the man turned around and smiled at Wendy.

Wendy swore that at this moment, the girliness within her had exploded.

Every girl had once wished for their prince charming to surprise themselves on their birthday.

Tonight's sea of petals and candlelit dinner had completely surprised her.

"You, I... I thought you had things to deal with in Waterhoof City?!"

Excited and surprised, Wendy stuttered as she asked.

Jasper chuckled and crossed the sea of petals to the small path. He took her hand and pulled her directly to the balcony railings.

“There’s nothing more important than the birth of my treasure twenty- three years ago today,” Jasper whispered by Wendy’s ear.

The chilly river breeze coupled with the subtle scent of flowers and the man’s warm breath by her ear felt like a dream to Wendy.

“But...”

Wendy wanted to say more, but she had only uttered one word when Jasper stopped her with a finger on her lips.

Under the glow of the candle, Jasper’s youthful and defined side profile held an indescribable tinge of mysteriousness and manly charm.

The finger over Wendy’s lips pointed at the sky above the South Bank and Jasper’s eyes resembled the brightest star in the night sky.

“Don’t say anything and look over there.”

‘This sea of flowers and candlelight dinner isn’t all? There’s more?’

Wendy turned over, suppressing her excitement, and proceeded to see a view she would never forget in her entire lifetime.

At this moment, two kilometers around the South Bank of the Southface River, huge fireworks were shot into the sky every 100 meters apart.

Bang bang bang.

The explosion of fireworks woke half of Nauritus City. The colorful shimmers were akin to God’s miracles on earth, and bursts of fireworks continued to unfurl in the sky above the Southface River.

This was a dreamy and heart stopping view.

Countless citizens of Nauritus City looked up in awe and they watched the following scene with Wendy.

Neon lights lit up at the same time on a total of 21 buildings above 10 stories across kilometers of the commercial area in the South Bank of Southface River. Thousands of neon lights cooperated to form one sentence.

“Happy Birthday, Wendy Schuler! ”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1259

Despite the various methods widely used in the year 2020, there was no more exciting or more shriek provoking method to show love than to write your lover’s name with neon lights on the city’s buildings.

There was also buying all the taxis in the city and using the advertising panel above to show their love.

These methods could easily feed every woman’s girly heart or materialistic desire.

However, it was rare for anyone to go as far as Jasper did tonight.

This was because his plan required all the buildings in the entire business district of a city to cooperate with him. Jasper needed more than just money to show his love through neon lights.

All buildings above ten stories were decorated with neon lights across the entire Southface River's South Bank, stretching across several kilometers.

Thanks to precise calculations and control, every neon lightbulb had contributed to a part of the sentence. This wish had stretched across the most flourishing place of Naurituc City.

At this moment, this grand sight had the entire city becoming a background in Jasper's control, one that only emphasized how special Wendy was.

Countless ladies must be screaming while young men smiled wryly at the sight.

On the North Bank, Wendy felt her heart melt at the awe striking sight before her eyes.

No woman could possibly defend herself against such a sight.

Let alone when the man behind all this was someone she had already decided to be with forever.

Wendy put her hand over her mouth and her throat felt like it had been blocked off by something.

She turned to look at Jasper. There were a thousand things she wanted to say but nothing came out of her mouth.

“Dumbfounded?”

Jasper chuckled and reached out to hug the beauty in his arms adoringly.

“Thank you, for staying by my side. For supporting me and helping me without asking for repayment.”

Jasper was never someone who took other’s kindness for granted.

He might never have confessed to Wendy officially, nor did the two ever had a strict conversation involving similar words like ‘Be my girlfriend’.

However, what they meant to each other was mutual recognized through their tacit understanding to stay by each other’s side each day.

More than each other, but it was recognized by both their families as well.

It was just that Jasper kept to himself when it came to relationships. The man believed that instead of confessing how much you liked or loved a person, it was more realistic to show his feelings and being by her side instead, Jasper had always trusted Wendy the most.

Be it out of business or personal feelings, he would trust Wendy without holding back.

While Wendy had always been putting in the effort by his side to help him, and she had never asked for any repayment.

With Jasper present, she would stay by his side quietly as a kind partner.

If Jasper was absent, then she would take up Jasper's responsibilities and work in the office and help him take care of the business.

A long term relationship required more than mutual affection. More importantly, both parties had to be each other's support and shoulder to lean on.

Wendy did not say anything when she heard Jasper. Instead, she quietly buried her face into Jasper's chest and reached out to hug him back.

"I thought you forgot."

Wendy finally said unjustly after a long while.

“I would never.”

Now that Wendy’s emotions calmed down, Jasper pulled her to the chair and sat opposite her. Then he raised his hand to pour Wendy a cup of red wine.

“Today’s an important day and I’ve planned a long time for this. Everything else, no matter how important, will be postponed.”

It did not cost Jasper anything to say sweet things, and considering the setting, the man would say whatever was sweetest.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1260

As expected, Wendy was very pleased with Jasper’s performance... In truth, Wendy was already extremely content with today’s sea of petals, firework show, and neon light confession.

Most importantly, Jasper had returned and he did not forget what day it was today.

This was what mattered to Wendy the most.

“You didn’t need to put so much effort into this. I’m happy enough that you’re back,” Wendy said softly.

Jasper chuckled and replied, “There’s no such thing as too much effort. Anything to make you happy.”

“I am happy... but won’t this hold you back from work?”

Most women were like this. If you were too busy with work to take care of her feelings, then she would be unhappy. However, once you put effort to make her happy, she would then worry that she was holding you back from work.

Of course, the basis of this was that this woman was willing to spend the rest of her life with you. Or she would not care about that at all.

“Tonight’s about us. Let’s not talk about business,” Jasper waved her off and said.

“What nonsense is that!” Wendy’s meekness and grace had her flailing at Jasper’s straightforwardness.

“I can’t believe my dad worked with you to lie to me. There’s no way I’d let him go so easily...”

Still, Jasper's delicately planned celebration was a complete success.

The two did not return to the villa that night. After dinner, they decided to stroll by the riverbank.

It was as Jasper had said before. Tonight was about them, not business.

After strolling, Jasper then brought Wendy to watch a late night film in a cinema. It was already early morning when the movie was over.

While the two had long started living together, they had never gone all the way.

No man would ever let go of such a great opportunity. So Jasper directly brought Wendy to his home in Nauritus City and did the last step according to plan.

The next day, Jasper arrived at the office refreshed and alone. While Wendy caught up on lost sleep at home.

This was strictly Wendy's first time but Jasper was an experienced man in this field. He had only let her rest once the sky was starting to brighten and she had suffered quite a bit as a result.

So Mr. Laine decided to be generous and let his partner rest for the day.

“Hello, Mr. Laine.”

“Good morning, Mr. Laine.”

In a great mood, Jasper greeted everyone back with a smile and nod.

As the company flourished, personnel also began to grow. Jasper spent most of his time away outside of the office, he did not recognize most of his new employees. However, this did not prevent the employees from recognizing Jasper through pictures.

Not to mention that Jasper’s move last night had shocked the entire Nauritus City. Others might not know the mastermind behind the neon lights and fireworks, but JW Capital’s employees knew very well.

Excluding their owner, no one else in Nauritus City would go to such lengths to profess their love for Wendy.

The first thing Jasper did once returning to the office, was seek Malcolm and the rest out to talk about the company’s latest situation.

While Jasper did not spend his time at the office, most important incidents were still reported to him through phone or video calls. So Jasper had always had good control over JW Capital's development. This talk with Malcolm and the rest were mainly for formalities' sake.

Then, Jasper returned to his office to personally deal with the accumulated documents required.

It was almost noon and Jasper still had more than half of the original pile of documents left unread. The man rubbed his sore eyes and decided to eat lunch first before he continued later

He had just put his pen down when Chad, the company's Director of Human Resources rushed into the office.

"Something's happened, Mr. Laine. Six of the company's deputy managers suddenly collectively resigned."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1261

No matter when or how big an organization was, personnel was always a major issue.

This organization could be a company, government or a non government organization.

Among various employment issues, the most severe act of protest by the lower ranks against their superiors would be collectively resigning.

Huge trouble would arise if this incident got out of hand.

Therefore, Jasper immediately frowned when he heard Chad's report.

"What happened?"

Various middle-ranked deputy managers would not collectively resign unless something huge had happened.

Under Jasper's insistence, JW Company as well as its branches' currently provided the most significant employee benefits as compared to the other businesses in its industry. Many people made getting brought into any of JW's subsidiaries their career goal, let alone JW capital, which was the parent company.

This was due to the fact that JW gave a salary 30% higher than their competitors for the exact same position and role. JW's employee benefits also included things that had yet to become the norm in this time and age, such as insurance and paid leave.

Therefore, there was much to wonder about when a group of employees collectively resigned despite these benefits.

Chad chuckled wryly and replied, "It's because Ms. Schuler rejected the proposal to allocate cars to the deputy managers yesterday.

"Since this was a proposal you personally suggested, many people knew about it, so everyone was anticipating its execution. But word got out yesterday that Ms. Schuler rejected the proposal. A lot of people were upset about this and they're throwing a fit.

"I knew that there were a few employees conspiring yesterday, but I didn't think too much of it then.

"However, six deputy managers of various departments gathered at my office to hand in their resignation at noon just half an hour ago. From what I know, there are more considering doing the same."

Chad then told Jasper seriously, "Mr. Laine, this is the first personnel issue our investment company has faced since its establishment. There's already been quite a bit of an uproar and I'm afraid that we'd face a bad response if we don't deal with this well."

Jasper felt slightly confused after hearing Chad's report.

'Have I lost my prestige or are these b*stards getting too arrogant?'

'Resigning just because I'm not allocating cars for you?'

Jasper chuckled intriguingly and asked, "Where are the people who handed in their resignation?"

"They're still in my office," Chad replied embarrassedly.

As Director of Human Resources, any issue regarding personnel would always be under Chad's jurisdiction. The fact that the situation had grown beyond his control and required Jasper's help to solve it was, to some extent, a sign of his incompetence.

However, Jasper waved his hand and did not blame Chad.

This issue did not reflect too badly on Chad, it was just poor management at most.

Not to mention that even if Chad was at fault, the most important thing now was to deal with the collective resignation rather than punishing Chad.

“Let’s go, then. They’re waiting for me to go over too. Let’s not make these important men wait too long.”

Jasper scoffed as he got up and strolled out with his head held high. He opened the office door and walked out.

Chad shivered inexplicably when he heard Jasper as he looked at the man who was suppressing his anger.

Chad shivered inexplicably when he heard Jasper as he looked at the man who was suppressing his anger.

He had a feeling that this incident would involve a widespread network of people.

More than half of Southface River Tower was occupied by JW Capital’s office.

The Department of Human Resources was an important entity within the company, which led to the department occupying an entire floor of the building. Naturally, they also had their own specialized meeting room.

At this moment, despite it being lunch break, almost no one had left the department office.

Each of them sat by their own workstations as they stared at the silent meeting room not too far away and discussed quietly amongst themselves.

As employees of the human resources department, they had immediately learned about the six deputy managers that resigned at the same time.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1262

Among them was another deputy manager, the one from the human resources department in charge of employee appraisal and performance evaluation.

Just as everyone was busy wondering about how the situation would develop, Jasper appeared at the elevator doors with Chad following behind him.

“Mr. Laine!”

“Hello, Mr. Laine!”

The employees stood up and greeted him instinctively. Jasper nodded slightly and said, “Thank you for all your hard work. It’s break time, so those who haven’t eaten or need to test should go ahead.”

Jasper then pushed open the door to the meeting room.

Chad glared at his subordinates and said unkindly, “What are you all looking at? Get back to work!”

Then, he rushed to follow Jasper into the meeting room. With a click, the meeting room doors closed.

The employees exchanged a look. They did not know if they should have listened to Mr. Laine telling them to eat and rest, or if they should have listened to their immediately superior and get back to work.

Only a few braver employees decided to slink over and eavesdrop by the meeting room doors.

Jasper stood at the front of the meeting room with a calm look on his face.

He did not say anything. The man already oozed absolute strength just by standing in place.

As the founder and owner of JW Capital and its subsidiaries, Jasper's prestige was undeniable.

The deputy managers sat quietly in the meeting room, with three on each side of the table. There were six of them in total, both men and women. Most of them were familiar faces that Jasper recognized.

This meant that these six were old staff that had been in the company since the early stages of JW Capital.

For some unknown reason, these six angry employees began to feel guilty when Jasper entered the room. Some of them did not even dare to look Jasper in the eye.

"What's this? Too afraid to look at me?" Jasper chuckled and broke the silence before sitting down.

The conference room was pin drop silent as everyone stared at the tabletop before them as if it were some valuable treasure.

“Didn’t you guys want to resign?” Jasper continued indifferently.

“Just because the company didn’t allocate cars to you? That’s why you want to resign?”

Still, no one dared to meet Jasper’s gaze.

Jasper took the folder from Chad’s hand next to him, which contained the six resignation letters.

With a loud ‘bang’, Jasper slammed the folder on the meeting room table.

The few deputy managers shuddered at this loud bang.

“Chad, immediately approve these six’s resignations. If anyone continues to hand in their resignation, then approve every single application that they hand in. Everyone that resigns today will be given special treatment!”

“Applications handed in today will be approved and their salary calculated and adjusted, so that they can leave today!”

“My JW Company will never beg anyone to stay. When it comes to those who don’t know better... well, the earlier they leave, the better!”

Jasper’s angry voice resonated throughout the meeting room.

Four of the six deputy managers instantly paled. These four then looked at the remaining two at the same time.

Evidently, the incident had progressed very differently from what they had imagined.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1263

This was a small detail, but it did not go unnoticed by Jasper.

Jasper was familiar with the remaining two.

One of them was June Parham, the deputy manager of the internal purchasing department, while the other was Hannibal Tate, the deputy manager of the budgeting and auditing department.

These two were old staff that had been working in JW Capital since its foundation.

The company could not employ any elite talents during its initial stages, so most old staff were employed as expedients.

However, as JW Capital developed, most of these initial staff could no longer keep up with the company's development in terms of efficiency or capability.

Even so, Jasper did not try to get rid of these people after all the hard work they had put in for him. On the contrary, the vast majority of them were given rather generous benefits.

As someone else's employee in his past life, Jasper knew that to be a successful entrepreneur in this life, he had to treat his own employees well if he wanted the business to develop healthily.

The employees were the heart and soul of the company.

If not for this, it did not matter how many more times Jasper reincarnated or how talented the man was he would not be able to set up JW Company alone.

Therefore, ever since the beginning, JW Capital and its subsidiaries had always treated their employees the best within their respective industries. JW's care for their own employees was also the most genuine.

This was not something written for the sake of attracting employees but was truly executed and carried out.

However... all sorts of people came along when the company started to grow.

If JW Company wanted to continue developing into something great, then Jasper had to fend off more than just external enemies. It was only a matter of time before infighting occurred, and this was what truly placed a halt on JW Company's development.

"Mr. Laine, we can't take all the blame for this either." The deputy manager of the internal purchasing department, June, mustered the courage to stand and speak to Jasper under the gazes of the other deputy managers.

Jasper looked at her indifferently. Instead of getting angry, the man asked calmly, "Did I say I blame you?"

"You're the ones requesting to resign. I did not reject your application and instead gave you a more convenient escape. What's there to explain to me?"

June's expression soured at what she heard.

She took a deep breath and replied, “Mr. Laine, you don’t actually need to pretend. Everyone can tell that you’re angry, but we’re all adults, so I think I should make the issue here clear.”

“Issue?”

Jasper smiled and sat back down on the chair to say, “Sure. If you say that there’s an issue to be cleared up, then I’ll give you the chance to do so. Go ahead, what’s the issue?”

June glanced at her colleagues as if she found strength in them before she looked up and replied to Jasper, “The company promised us before this to allocate a car to every deputy manager.”

“But then Ms. Schuler shot down the suggestion without a second thought. We put in a lot of hard work in the lower ranks each and every day, and we’ve been looking forward to this benefit for a long time already. Now that it’s gone so quickly, we’re upset about it.”

“Alright. If you want to talk about employee welfare, then let’s discuss this issue.”

Jasper looked at June and said expressionlessly, “You’re the deputy manager of the internal purchasing department. With the internal purchasing department being a level two department, according to the ranks of your administrative post, your employee welfare should likewise follow the G4 guidelines, correct?”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1264

June nodded.

“Chad, tell me what the salary and employee welfare and benefits my company provides G4 administrative posts and what other companies in the industry are offering for the same position.”

Chad immediately reported in response, “Within JW Capital and its subsidiaries, employees of G4 administrative posts are considered first line managers. According to our regulations, these employees are provided five insurance packages and two funds. They also enjoy annual paid leave and an additional 3000 Somer Dollar family travel subsidy.”

“Including the various subsidies, each employee is paid a monthly salary of 5000 Somer Dollars and annual salary is counted based on 14 months. Meaning by the end of the year, disregarding year end or performance bonuses, each employee receives an additional 10 thousand.”

“When it comes to other company’s welfare standard for the same industry and position, and taking Waterhoof City as an example since it is the most economically developed region, employees are only provided five insurance packages and one fund, and they receive a statutory annual leave. Monthly salary does not exceed 3000 Somer Dollars, and year end bonus will be calculated separately according to the company’s benefits plan.”

“Meaning if we disregard JW Company’s employee bonuses which is several times more than other companies in the same industry, salary alone is already 1.8 times more than in other companies.”

Jasper nodded. He looked at June and the other five deputy managers and asked, “Did you receive these benefits Chad listed?”

“If you weren’t given the salary or the benefits that should have been assigned to you, then I’ll fire Chad immediately if it’s his fault, or review Wendy’s position if it’s hers.

“So tell me, did you get them or not?”

The six deputies paled when they heard Jasper.

June nodded with difficulty and replied, “We... we received them.”

“Very good. Looks like the company didn’t mistreat you in this aspect, then.”

“Let’s not count the monthly salary or the bonuses. Let’s talk about the five insurance packages and the two funds. It’s compulsory for every enterprise to give buy their employees social insurance now, but let’s not talk about how many enterprises don’t follow through on this regulation in this time and age. At the very least, my company provides you this coverage.”

“Current statutory law requires five insurance packages and one fund. Not only did I give you all that, but I also added an annuity for you. This is something rare even within international companies.”

Jasper stared at June and the other five deputy managers as he continued firmly, “From the moment I founded JW, I told you on the very first day that I will not mistreat those who work for me. And I did as I promised!”

“But what about you six? You enjoy benefits beyond the industry standard and because you’ve grown used to the kindness the company extends you, you want to take advantage of it?”

“I did indeed plan to allocate cars to those of and above the position of deputy manager, but that was just my suggestion.”

“The company has its own regulations, bylaws, and protocols. The CEO has the authority to reject my suggestion should she believe it to be against the enterprise’s interest.”

“There is no rule within any of the company’s regulations, bylaws, and protocols that states that the company must allocate a car for you!”

Jasper harrumphed and spat with an icy gaze, “Therefore, if the company allocates these cars to you, then it does so an act of affection. If the company does not, then it is a logical response. Yet, you’re choosing to threaten me with resignation over this?”

“In that case, then I’ll approve of all your applications today. I’d like to see if JW can still function without you six and if you six can find a company which offers you better benefits after leaving JW!”

The other few deputy managers could not take it anymore when they heard this.

“Mr. Laine, I... I’ll withdraw my resignation. I must’ve been crazy to be persuaded by June and Hannibal. They wanted to fight with the company because they’d already negotiated with the car dealers, but I never planned to resign at all!”

A deputy manager shouted frantically.

Both June and Hannibal’s expressions changed when they heard this.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1265

It would be unwise to believe that bribery only occurred in government bureaus.

Without good supervision or regular inspections, corruption could be even more toxic in private enterprises.

International financial groups like Colossal Investments had their own internal inspection department that reported directly to the board of directors.

This showcased that as long as interests are involved, cases of corruption and bribery could still appear in companies of any size.

Jasper had long prepared himself for this.

Despite this, it did not stop his heart from growing cold when he encountered situation.

Jasper had always operated his business with the concept of paying high salaries to prevent corruption. After all, once employees had enough money to live a comfortable life, most of them would not be willing to risk breaking the law by taking bribes.

However, a high salary was not a fool proof plan against greed.

At this moment, even Chad's expression changed, much less June and Hannibal.

Not that Chad had anything to do with this incident, but as the director of human resources, the recruitment, appraisal, appointment, and more of all employees in the company were his direct responsibility.

Before Jasper established an independent investigation department, the handling of employee corruption still fell under Chad's job scope.

The current case of bribery and colluding with outside sources was a disgrace to Chad's professionalism.

"The internal purchasing department and the budgeting and auditing department. How fitting."

Jasper commented meaningfully, and looked up at June and Hannibal, whose complexions were void of color. "Let's talk about it, then. What's the situation here?"

Neither June nor Hannibal had expected to be exposed by the very same protest they planned.

The two exchanged a look, but neither of them dared to reply to Jasper first.

Meanwhile, the deputy manager who pleaded for forgiveness just now let go of all inhibitions and exposed them.

Perhaps he saw this as a chance to make up for his mistake as he immediately replied, "Mr. Laine, these two are deputy managers of the Internal Purchasing and budgeting and auditing departments."

"When news of purchasing cars for employees of and above the ranks of deputy manager got leaked, these two immediately contacted a few car dealerships."

"Naturally, rebates and bribes were involved. After all, if the company truly decided to purchase cars, then the other party would certainly have a degree of influence on their superior's decisions."

"With how much they stood to gain, they would have to carry out their job without a second thought. But since Ms. Schuler rejected the proposal yesterday, there's no way the car dealers would still agree. Thus, the agency pressured them."

"Because of this, the two of them then came to look for the rest of us and persuaded us to collectively resign. They said that you'd compromise, be it to soothe the employee's emotions or to prevent a negative response. That's why we dared to work with them."

Jasper rapped his finger on the tabletop after hearing this deputy manager and looked at June and Hannibal expressionlessly.

Under the man's heavy gaze, the two deputies in question, who both only held junior high school diplomas and were only employed in JW thanks to sheer luck, could not bear the pressure.

The first to bend to the psychological pressure was June.

"Mr... Mr. Laine. I... I was blinded by the thought of these benefits..."

"It's all Hannibal's fault! Hannibal was the one who sought me out first and told me that this was easy money, that's why I got into this! Please forgive me this time, Mr. Laine! I'm sorry!"

Hannibal's expression changed and he shouted at June, "Are you f*cking human, June?"

"You were the one who sobbed to me about how your son fell into a large debt. You asked me how to make some extra money and that's why I introduced this method to you. Not to mention, you're the one who chose this path yourself! Yet, now you're blaming me after you get in trouble?"

June would not back down so easily as she immediately refuted the man, "Don't try to make yourself sound like an angel, Hannibal. Did you think I wouldn't know?"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1266

“The agent you chose was actually your relative. How much rebates did you enjoy, hmm? All I got was a small taste of the benefits! It would’ve been fine if no one found out, but now that the cat’s out of the bag, you definitely will have to suffer more consequences since you took the lion’s share of the profits!”

Hannibal clenched his jaw angrily. “I only helped you because I pitied you, b*tch! That’s why I gave you a chance!”

“Enough!”

Jasper said, interrupting the two’s fight.

June and Hannibal immediately fell silent, and they did not dare to say anything more.

“Chad, how do you think this incident should be resolved?” Jasper asked indifferently.

Chad glared at the duo harshly and replied, “Strictly, and according to the law. We should investigate the incident and then sue these two!”

“Go ahead, then,” Jasper waved his hand.

As far as Jasper was concerned, what mattered most was to understand the truth of the situation. How the situation should be dealt with was a small matter.

June and Hannibal were just first line managers, G4 administrative employees. No matter how much trouble they caused, it was not worth Jasper's headache.

What truly posed a problem to Jasper was that if June and Hannibal could enjoy rebates over purchasing cars today, then another pair of July and Lectors could gain similar rebates over something else somewhere down the line.

Agents were not stupid, and there was no way they would give benefits out for free.

These benefits would naturally be earned back from JW Company.

Therefore, in the end, their corrupt behavior still interfered with the company's interests.

It was impossible for Jasper to completely prevent corruption. All he could do was try to minimize the possibility of it happening through strict regulations while rectifying the nature of his employees.

He did this by greatly increasing the cost of committing these acts. If the price to pay for breaking regulations was too huge, they would then be deterred from committing the crime.

It was unrealistic for Jasper to request that every employee treat the company as their own home.

Both June and Hannibal were horrified when they heard Jasper and Chad.

“Mr. Laine, I really only made the wrong decision because I was tempted by money! Please, considering how long we’ve worked with you, please forgive me this once!”

“Yes, Mr. Laine! I’m willing to return all the money I took! Please just forgive me this once! I promise! I will never, ever do this again!”

The duo’s pleas were extremely pitiful and their voices were filled with fright and remorse as they begged Jasper for mercy.

They were both well aware that once they were sued, they would lose this widely envied job and be forced to go to prison.

The other four deputy managers could not help but feel pity as they took in the sight before them. More than pity, they also felt relieved.

Their mistake today might lose them their job at most, but at least they did not break the law and would not have to be thrown into prison.

Unfortunately, Jasper was not in the mood to think about those four.

He got up and walked toward the meeting room door.

“Mr. Laine, how should I deal with these four?” Chad chased after and asked.

Jasper replied calmly, “Give them one last chance. This is also my last act of tolerance. But both Hannibal and June have to be dealt with sternly. Make this matter widely known within the company. I want all the employees within the company to know about what happened to them.

“I hope this deters the others from following in their footsteps.”

Chad replied courteously, “I understand, Mr. Laine.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1267

As far as Chad was concerned, all he had to think of was how to best carry out Jasper's instructions.

However, as the highest-ranking member of his business, there was no one to tell Jasper what to do.

Because of this, it was unreasonable for Jasper to personally handle every single problem or matter within the company.

Instead, he needed to find the source of the problem and get rid of it at its roots.

Coincidentally, this was also what made this situation so difficult. The source of this problem was human greed, something impossible to get rid of altogether. "You're being stubborn, Jasper."

Sitting in front of a mountain painting, Dawson told his confused future son-in-law in his large Schuler Group office with a crescent eyed smile.

JW Company's overall ability had long surpassed the Schuler Group.

Thanks to the memory Jasper had of his past life as well as his extreme talent for management, the man was capable of pushing JW to even higher heights.

However, Jasper had to admit that Dawson's experience from a lifetime in this business world was something Jasper could not match right now.

Hence, he decided to go to the Schuler Group in the afternoon to ask Dawson for advice.

"I've never thought of myself as perfect and peerless. I have my weaknesses too and there are problems that I don't know how to deal with. But an elder will always have more experience than me, which is why I come to ask you for help."

Jasper told Dawson sincerely.

Dawson waved his hand and got up to pass Jasper a cup of tea.

"I've met a similar issue a few years ago, too.

"You should know that the Schuler Group's main business is the supermarket industry. Supermarkets have many constantly-changing supply channels, from daily products, to snacks, to electronic appliances. It ranges from the cheapest products worth a few cents to the expensive ones costing thousands.

“Because of how big, famous, and recognized Schuler Supermarkets are, many commercial products will try their hardest to get a contract with us.

“But when it comes to the same product, take potato chips, for example, I’ll only sign contracts with two to three brands at most. No more than that.”

“I used to supervise this myself, but with the increasing number of outlets as well as range of products, I had no other choice but to let go of this control.”

“By doing so, I was also giving the opportunity for people to exploit loopholes.”

“Bigger problems might involve choosing suppliers while smaller issues could involve missing payment settlement deadlines. During the most severe period of Schuler Group’s corruption, a mere shop owner of a small area made me lose 100 thousand in a year.”

“This was 100 thousand during the nineties.”

Dawson told jasper matter of factly, his tone gentle and calm.

“I was furious when I discovered this, and I ordered for a complete internal inspection to smoke out all the ongoing corruption within the group. Can you guess how that ended?”

Jasper smiled and replied, “You must’ve caught countless mice and dealt with them strictly.”

Dawson smiled and said, “You’re half right.”

“I did indeed catch many mice, but I only dealt with a small portion of them.”

Jasper was stunned for a moment before he frowned in deep thought.

“Yes. Because I realized that there were too many mice. Getting rid of them all meant losing at least half of the Schuler Group’s employees.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1268

“The group was growing then. It shouldn’t matter if people left since there would be more trying to get employed.”

Dawson then clapped Jasper’s shoulder and said meaningfully, “But so what?”

“The fright from completely cleaning the business might last a few years at most before the same situation occurred again. Am I supposed to get rid of half my employees every year? The group will crash after I do this a few times.”

“I didn’t know what to do at that point, but Wendy’s mom gave me an idea.”

“Half a month later, the group set up a tidiness department. The department worked with the government to advertise the common law, mainly to induce fear and to increase the psychological cost of committing the crime.”

“I let them know that they would be safe if the group did not catch them, but would be in huge trouble if they did.”

“Then I got rid of the most severe cases and left the rest alone.”

“From then on, this tidiness department would catch and punish a few cases every year, but would turn a blind eye toward the majority.”

“Up until now, even as we talk, I’m confident that there are still people gaining rebates and being bribed within the Schuler Group. This seems to have become a publicly known secret within the group.”

“If I know it, then they must know it as well. We have a tacit understanding that small cases are write offs, but anyone who does anything that might severely interfere with the group’s interests will be in great trouble.”

Dawson did not say anymore after this. He knew that with Jasper’s intellect, the man only needed a small nudge and he would understand everything by himself.

“So, Jasper. As someone of higher status, what we need to do is control the balance and not the actions of our employees. Give them a baseline and let them know where the boundaries lie. Whoever oversteps this will face dire consequences.”

“If you want to control everything your subordinates to, then not only will an owner like you die from exhaustion, but you’ll end up alone as well.”

“No one will want to stay when you’re too controlling. As people of higher ranks, we have to remember to punish only those who cause bigger issues and forgive those who make smaller mistakes when we deal with internal conflicts. Our forefathers say that ruling with both kindness and ferocity is the way to go. There must be a reason why ‘kindness’ comes first.”

Jasper fell silent for a long while before he slowly nodded. “I understand what to do, then.”

“That’s good. So, are you two coming home for dinner tonight?” Dawson changed the subject to a lighter and homely one.

“Yeah. I’ll go fetch Wendy then go home,” Jasper replied with a smile.

“Okay. Go then, I still have a meeting. I’ll go home right after it’s done.”

Jasper left the Schuler Group and was about to fetch Wendy when he found out that she had headed to the company.

Wendy stood in the company with a frosty look on her face.

“You found out already?” Jasper asked with a smile when he walked in and saw her icy expression.

Wendy replied angrily, “They’re going too far! How could they work for outsiders?”

“I wouldn’t call this working for outsiders, per se. This is just the result of human greed.” Jasper waved his hand, acting much more open minded than Wendy was.

“We have to catch all of them and deal with them strictly!”

Wendy had always been a black and white person. There was even less of a reason to tolerate these people when they were harming the company's interests.

"I plan to establish an independent supervision department in the future. This department will be independent of the administrative body and report to me and me alone. What do you think?" Jasper sat down and asked.

Wendy agreed, "I think that's a pretty good idea. It's just... it's very important who you choose to take charge of this department. Do you have any candidates yet?"

Jasper rubbed his temple and replied, "No one in the company right now is suited for this kind of work, so I don't plan to transfer existing employees but instead bring in somebody from outside. That way, I'd be able to avoid any ongoing connections they have with other company personnel."

Wendy sighed and said guiltily, "Maybe I shouldn't have rejected the proposal for allocating cars so forcefully. The entire situation could have been avoided."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1269

Jasper walked over to Wendy when he heard her blame herself.

Jasper ruffled Wendy's hair and said, "What are you talking about, I haven't even thanked you for helping me bring this issue to light yet.

“From the way things look now, various issues have already occurred within the company since a long time back. I just didn’t realize them before. It’s great that we discovered them this early since it means we can deal with them early too.

“It’d be too late if the situation was already unsalvageable once we found out.”

That afternoon, Jasper took time out to call Jack, who was far away in Swallow Capital.

As Weresoff’s ex-senior executive, Jack was very experienced in this field.

To the point where Jasper was initially inclined to appoint Jack as the person in charge of this supervision department.

After all, Jack was the company’s most senior executive. He was the first senior executive Jasper invited and employed at the early start up stages.

Both Jack’s experience and prestige qualified him to keep people in line.

However, Jasper considered how Jack still played a role in Sena’s current smooth operations and had no other choice but to give up that thought.

Despite this, Jack agreed with the introduction of this supervision department.

However, he had a question about it.

“Mr. Laine, will this supervision department be part of the parent company itself or will it manage JW Capital and its subsidiaries?”

This was a very important question.

When it came to the large subsidiaries like Terizone, Abbylon, and even Sena, Jasper had promised not to interfere with the specific operations of the company.

Still, even though there was nothing wrong with suddenly introducing a supervision department right now, Hudson and the rest would certainly have some reservations about them.

Thus, after a short moment of pondering, Jasper replied, “The supervision department will only manage the investment, electronics, and the real estate development company for now. When it comes to Terizone, Abbylone, Sena, and the entertainment companies, I’ll leave it up to you guys to deal with it yourselves.”

Jack exhaled in relief when he heard Jasper.

“Alright. I’ll comb through Sena first.”

Jasper waved to dismiss him. “Don’t make too big of a deal about it either. After all, problems like this are still less prominent in Internet companies. It’s mainly physical companies where these problems easily arise. You have relevant experience, so I’m sure you know what to do.”

Jack nodded and suddenly asked, “Mr. Laine, do you have any particular person in mind to head this supervision department?”

“Do you have recommendations?” Jasper arched his brow slightly and asked.

Jack smiled and replied, “Of course not.”

Jack was not stupid. He knew that this supervision department was something extremely sensitive. It might not have been officially established yet, but this department would surely turn into a sharp weapon Jasper wielded in the future.

For a position as crucial as this, Jasper would still be wary no matter how much the man entrusted him.

Nor could Jack willy-nilly suggest a candidate to take charge of such an important department. It would not be worth it to attract Jasper's suspicion for no reason.

Jack knew that Jasper was not someone who doubted people easily, but at the end of the day, they were still superior and subordinate before anything else. As an experienced man, Jack would not do anything to garner unnecessary suspicion.

"But I do suggest that you employ someone who has experience in the government judicial branch. That would be best."

Jasper nodded when he heard this suggestion and replied, "I'll give it some thought."

After ending the call with Jack, Jasper contacted Zachary next.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1270

Jasper did not have too great candidates for this position so the best solution now was to see if the Law family could help.

Jasper did not expect Zachary to actually provide him an exceptional individual.

“I have a junior who resigned from the Anti-Corruption Bureau as first deputy director half a year ago. He’s in his early forties, and the best age to start his career in a company.”

“After half a year of rest, he’s been planning to start his new career lately. I could introduce you two if you’d like?”

Jasper’s eyes lit up.

From an experience perspective, this man who had just resigned from being the first deputy director of the Anti-Corruption Bureau was the perfect candidate.

“He’s got a great future ahead of him if he became the first deputy director in his forties. Why did he resign?” Jasper asked.

Zachary replied slightly wistfully, “He was a sacrificial lamb in political fights. The judicial system wasn’t the place for him. Just keep this to yourself, but he’s definitely got a clean background.”

With Zachary’s guarantee, Jasper nodded and replied, “That’s great, then. I’d like to see him as soon as possible if I could.”

“Alright. I’ll send you two each other’s contact information and you two talk it out amongst yourselves.”

With the head of this supervision department now identified, the most important factor behind the setting up of this department was settled as well.

Jasper let out a sigh of relief once he had completed this first step.

Clocking out that afternoon, Jasper then brought Wendy back to the Schuler villa for dinner. Since there was nothing for him to do, Jasper stayed over at the Schuler villa that night as well.

His parents were both working at the shipyard in Brac County, so Jasper normally would not think to return to the empty house. Instead, he opted to stay at the Schuler villa, which was less quiet.

After dinner, Jasper received a call from Harbor City.

“Hello, is this Mr. Jasper Laine?”

A middle aged man’s gentle voice sounded over the phone.

There was a very strong Harbor City accent in the man's tone. Thankfully, Jasper had known Henry for a long time, or he might not have understood this accent at all.

"I am. Is this Mr. Mortimer Higgins, whom Uncle Schuler had introduced?"

Mortimer replied on the other end of the line, "That is correct. I heard that you have plans to employ someone to be the person in charge of the supervision department. I'd like to try for the position."

Jasper chuckled and replied, "It's not very convenient doing this over the phone, Mr. Higgins. Perhaps you could come to Nauritus City over the next few days? We could talk in person. Regardless of how our discussion ends, I'll pay for your traveling expenses."

Jasper's detailed and cautious behavior gained the favor of Mortimer, who normally dealt with judicial work. The latter quickly replied.

"Sure. I'll take an early flight tomorrow morning and we can talk in person... Coincidentally, I also received an invitation to a Legal Exchange Conference in Nauritus City as well. So I might be a little late."

"That's alright. I'll await your grand arrival tomorrow, Mr. Higgins."

Wendy walked over with a cup of tea from behind Jasper as the latter ended the call.

“Was that a candidate to lead your new supervision department?”

Jasper nodded and replied, “He’ll be here tomorrow. Then we can both interview this ex-first deputy director of Harbor City’s Anti-Corruption Bureau.”

“Is he someone of such high status? That status is almost equivalent to the Deputy Attorney General’s of the Supreme Procuratorate! Would he want to work in our company?” Wendy was shocked.

Jasper chuckled and replied, “Don’t underestimate our company either. We’re very strong too, so who says we aren’t worthy to have someone so powerful work for us?”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1271

The following day, since Julian had taken Jasper's Bentley in for periodic maintenance, Jasper sat in Wendy's ordinary and low profiled BMW to work. They two were chatting happily and were a few hundred meters away from the office when a few men suddenly ran out from the roadside to stand in front of Wendy's car.

Wendy gasped. Thanks to her quick reflexes, she managed to turn the steering wheel and avoid knocking into these people.

However, the BMW still ended up crashing into the foliage by the roadside.

There was a loud bang, and a dent appeared in the bonnet of the car as smoke simultaneously began to pour out from the hood. The car's engine then turned itself off automatically.

Jasper shielded Wendy with one of his hands to protect her. Without caring about himself, he quickly asked Wendy, "Are you okay? Are you hurt?"

Wendy shook her head and replied shakily, "I'm fine. Just shocked."

Jasper's gaze sharpened. Those men who ran out must have a death wish.

He was about to get out of the car angrily when he heard those men shout.

“Wendy! Get the f*ck out right now!”

Jasper narrowed his eyes at what he heard.

From the way the men acted, this incident was not accidental. They were blatantly targeting Wendy.

“What do you want her for?”

Jasper alighted the car and asked directly.

Considering the current situation, as a man, Jasper had to come out and deal with these hooligans while keeping his woman safe behind him. Regardless of what conflict Wendy had with them or who was in the wrong, there was no way Jasper would let them hurt Wendy.

If he did not do this, then he might as well not be a man at all.

“What for?!”

The man in the lead was a rather skinny person in his forties. He scoffed and replied, “That stupid b*tch screwed my business over, so I want her to compensate me for my losses!”

“Keep your stinking mouth clean.”

Jasper narrowed his eyes and looked at the man icily. “I am not against beating the stupid teeth out of your mouth.”

Ward’s burned at Jasper’s words.

“Who the f*ck are you, brat? Who are you to jump in front of me and cause trouble?”

At this moment, Wendy got out of the car as well.

“Do you know them?” Jasper asked.

“No.” Wendy shook her head, the shock still evident on her frightened expression.

Ward’s eyes lit up when he took in Wendy’s beauty.

“Yo, who’d have thought that JW Capital’s pretty female president was so beautiful?”

Wendy frowned in disgust at Ward’s distasteful words and asked in annoyance, “Who are you? Are you not afraid that I’d run you over when you suddenly rushed onto the road?”

“Who am I? I’m here to f*cking look for you!” Ward scoffed.

“You’re the b*tch that rejected the car purchasing proposal, weren’t you? I gave your company’s employees more than one hundred thousand Somer Dollars! You better f*cking pay me back!”

The man’s claim told them his identity.

This must be the car agency June and Hannibal had conspired with.

Jasper looked at Ward like he was stupid.

'Both June and Hannibal should be in detention centers now. Yet, instead of hiding away, this idiot actually came here to seek out compensation?'

"I don't think you know giving and taking bribes are equally severe crimes, do you?" Jasper said calmly.

Ward laughed out loud and replied, "You're talking about the law with me, stupid?"

"I've been dealing cars for more than a decade here in Nauritus City! You think I'd be able to stand my ground in this industry without some skills? At least ask around who Ward Benson is first!"

"Oh? So who are you?" Jasper asked calmly.

"Hmph! All you need to know is that I'm not someone you can afford to offend!"

Ward glared at Jasper fiercely, not wanting to waste his time on him. Then, the man turned to look at Wendy and sneered evilly, "Ms. Schuler, was it?"

“I already heard about the whole incident. The purchase contract would’ve been approved and signed long ago if you minded your own business, b*tch. I spent so much f*cking money on this and now it’s all gone because of you!”

“Either pay me 300 thousand for compensation now or...”

Ward snickered and stared at Wendy avariciously. “You could spend a few nights with me and I’d take that as payment.”

The moment he finished speaking, a leather shoe had lodged itself in his stomach.

Ward did not expect such a seemingly calm person to get physical.

Let alone start with such a painful attack.

The kick landed square in Ward’s stomach, causing him to shout in pain. He felt his insides get squashed and his organs intertwine.

The subordinates he brought over immediately ran forward to support him.

“Are you okay, Mr. Ward?” The subordinates asked in concern.

“Motherf*cker!”

Ward looked up and glared at Jasper harshly before shouting, “How dare you kick me, brat! You’re screwed! “I’ll kill you today!”

“What are you guys waiting for? Get him!”

Ward ignored his pain and flung a his subordinates off before pointing at Jasper and shouting.

The few subordinates immediately stared at Jasper unkindly as they began to surround him and prepared to attack.

Jasper’s expression was calm, but he was prepared to fight. Jasper was no match for Julian when it came to fighting, he was not even as good as Henry.

Coincidentally, Julian was not present today and his senior, the bodyguard Jasper assigned to Wendy, Fallon, had taken a leave today as well.

Still, as a man, Jasper refused to remain silent when another man had set their disgusting eyes on his woman.

Some opponents could be quietly tolerated and later dealt with through plans and schemes. Like Jasper's enemies, Conrad and Prince.

However, as a man, some things simply could not be tolerated. For example, Ward's behavior.

This was not because Ward was stronger than Conrad or Prince. In terms of status, a mere car agent did not even have the right to shine the other two's shoes.

Despite this, Ward had crossed Jasper's boundaries.

If this were not the case, then would have had no need to fight Ward right now, especially considering his status. Doing so would only lower Jasper to the other's level.

Wendy saw how the situation was about to get out of hand. There was no way she would watch as Jasper fought a good number of opponents without Julian by his side. After all, Jasper would surely lose and get hurt.

“Enough! JW Company’s main entrance is right ahead of us! What do you think you’re doing?” Wendy looked at Ward icily.

“JW Company’s security guards will arrive right away, and if you dare touch a single hair of his head, I’ll make sure you regret it!”

Wendy’s air of dominance at this moment was incomparable to any other woman’s.

Ward and his subordinates were stunned by it.

Ward narrowed his eyes and stared at the office entrance not too far away. He knew that this was the entrance to JW Company, which was why he had waited for Wendy here.

Weighing his options, Ward ignored the pain he felt and sneered. “Fine! I won’t hurt your stupid f*cking boy toy today, but you have to pay me every single cent of compensation!

“It was 300 thousand before, but I’ll need at least 350 thousand now! Not a cent less or I’ll kill him!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1272

“Oh? So who are you?” Jasper asked calmly.

“Hmph! All you need to know is that I’m not someone you can afford to offend!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1273

Wendy’s expression grew even colder at Ward’s words.

“You’re the one that acted criminally by bribing the company’s personnel!”

“How can you ask for compensation after you got caught?”

“I’ll tell you right now, not even in your wildest dreams!”

Ward’s gaze was icy as he said, “You’re going to have to give me the money whether you want to or not!”

“My brother’s the president of the Southeast Province Lawyers Associates and he’s currently entertaining someone very important from Harbor City! One call is all it takes for me to spread what happened in JW Company all over the place. when that happens, my brother will sue you until you're broke!"

Ward proceeded to arrogantly reveal to them why he was so fearless.

"I heard that you and the owner of JW Company have an affair, Wendy. I might not be able to offend a powerful person like him, but for you to protect this boy toy next to you, this kid must mean a lot to you, doesn't he?"

"Haha! And you're not afraid that your boss will find out about what's happening between you and your boy toy?"

Ward's expression was sinister as he snickered. "To be the CFO of JW Company at such a young and beautiful age. Tsk tsk, do you think I don't know how women like you get to this point to possess status, fame, and money? Everything you have now is all gained from spreading your legs!"

"If you don't compensate my loss, then I'll destroy your reputation!"

Both Jasper and Wendy's expressions changed when they heard him.

'Not only did this idiot have no idea of JW's internal personnel relationships, but he also doesn't know how Jasper looks?'

However, it made sense since he was just a simple car agent. He was the owner of a small business with a total asset value of a few million at most. After all, current economic conditions did not allow every family to own a car, and the car dealing business had yet to flourish as much as it would in the future.

The owner of a small business like him had no right to know who Jasper was.

Ward did not realize Jasper and Wendy's pitiful gazes as she continued to talk proudly. He spoke as though he had caught onto Wendy's weakness.

"Wendy, when someone as important as JW Company's owner realizes that you're cheating on him, you'll lose a lot more than 350 thousand! It'll be your life that'll be on the line!"

Ward snickered and replied proudly, "Of course, I don't want things to have to get to that point either. All I want is money, so pay me or spend a few days with me and I'll let you go this once."

"Well, choose now!"

At that moment, a few security guards rushed over.

As the company's employees who were responsible for greeting and sending people, the most important part of these men's work was to remember their bosses' cars.

Wendy's BMW was one of the most important ones. The security guards' attention was attracted after the car crashed over here. By the time they gathered a few colleagues, the issue had already developed to this point.

"Ms. Schuler!"

The leader of the team of security guards immediately came to greet Wendy.

Their eyes widened when their gaze flitted around and fell on Jasper.

"Mr..."

Not wanting the security guards to expose his identity, Jasper waved and interrupted them.

“These people harassed Ms. Schuler. Throw them out.” Jasper instructed before pulling Wendy away.

Before he left, Jasper glanced at Ward and said calmly, “Go ahead and use whatever tricks you have. Try to be as interesting as possible, because you’re only going to have one chance.”

Then, ignoring Ward’s shouts, Jasper brought Wendy away.

They left the car there as well since someone from the company would naturally come to deal with it later.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1274

‘The company’s owner and his partner are being harassed by thugs?’

This was the security guards’ first thought. They were immediately pumped up as they stared at Ward and the rest unkindly.

“Didn’t you hear them? Get lost right now!” The leader of the security guards was a veteran. When it came to employing security guards for the company, Jasper would always consider these veterans first.

Not only to give these virtuous people a chance to assimilate back into society, but also because they were much more reliable than most regular folks.

This coupled with JW Company's extreme employee benefits meant it was not at all unkind to employ them to be security guards of the company.

Ward stomped his feet in frustration when he saw the few burly guards.

He shouted at Jasper's back, "You b*tch and boy toy! You two won't surrender until the last moment, huh! You really want me to blow this thing out of proportion, huh? Fine then, just you wait!"

He had just finished shouting when the leader of the security guards began to instruct his team to manhandle these people and physically move them away from the company.

"Motherf*cker! Let go of me! I can walk on my own!" Ward struggled out of the grasp of the security guards before ducking around the corner of the street with a dark expression on his face.

The leader of the security guard looked at Ward and sneered. "At least take a look at where you are. How dare you come and cause trouble here? Just who do you think you are?"

The leader of the security guard then led his team away.

“F*cking Hell. That was too shameful, Mr. Ward. What do we do now?” A subordinate asked darkly.

Ward replied harshly, “We might not beat them when it comes to playing dirty, but don’t worry. I’ll call my brother.”

“He’s the president of the province’s Lawyers Associates, and a renowned barrister. He even has a meeting with the former high official of Harbor City’s Anti-Corruption Bureau today, so I’ll blow up this matter as much as possible!”

“To the point that JW Company’s owner knows about this. I’d like to see how that b*tch’s going to explain herself to the man when that happens!”

Wendy was upset as she took the elevator upstairs.

“I even crashed my car today. What bad luck!”

Jasper consoled, “It’s just a car. I’ll buy you a new one later. I promised to buy you one long ago but never got the chance, right? Looks like this is an opportunity to get you a new car.

“But this car was fine as it was... what about those people just now? Won't they cause more trouble?”

Buying a new car was no big deal since all it took was one word from either Jasper or Wendy to do. She was more worried that Ward and his men would cause more trouble for them in the future.

“It's alright Just focus on work, I'll deal with it,” Jasper said with a crescent-eyed smile.

He did forget how Ward said that his brother was the president of the Lawyers' Associates. This was nothing much since it was still a relatively minor position.

What Jasper was more interested in was that off handed statement Ward made about the entertainment of an important person from Harbor City.

The news Mortimer gave him last night coupled with this Lawyers' Associates... Jasper had a feeling that his meeting with Mortimer was about to be brought forward.

This was also a great chance for Jasper to observe Mortimer's character.

As the person in charge of the supervision department, the man's character was much more important than their capabilities.

Jasper would not be completely assured just because Zachary had recommended him.

Ward did not make him wait too long.

In a little over an hour, while Jasper was still going through a backlog of documents, he received a report. Apparently, a group of people currently waiting in the legal department wanted to sue the company.

“Let’s go take a look, then.” Jasper got up and went toward the floor of the legal department

Life at The Top – Chapter 1275

“Stop f*cking acting stupid with me!”

“It’s written in black and white on the purchase contract! Not to mention that it’s signed by your company’s employees!”

“Don’t think that just because JW is some famous enterprise that it means we’re afraid of you!”

“I, Ward Benson, will be the first to complain!”

“It’s written in black and white on the contract, and it’s signed by your employee. Either follow the contract and buy the cars according to the contract or pay three times the compensation amount! Do it or I’ll sue your company until you go bankrupt!”

Jasper had not even walked through the doors to the legal department when he already heard Ward’s familiar shout.

Just then, the general manager of the legal department also received news of Jasper’s arrival and walked out to greet him.

The manager of the legal department was a man called Eugene Rowse. He was a capable person, had a Law degree, and was extremely knowledgeable in public and commercial law.

However, the man’s expression seemed rather sour right now.

“You’re here, Mr. Laine,” Eugene greeted Jasper.

“What’s the situation now?” Jasper asked.

Eugene smiled wryly, “That Ward Benson person is the car agent who we apparently signed a contract with for the allocation of cars for employees of and above the rank of deputy manager.

“He brought his brother today. I know that man, Edie Benson. He’s a renowned lawyer in Southeast Province, and the president of the Lawyers’ Associate.”

“I already know all that,” Jasper replied calmly, “Tell me the legal issue the company’s facing now.”

Eugene sighed and replied, “The most troublesome part of this is that the fired employee, June, actually did sign her name on the contract. This puts us in a precarious position.”

“Does it count even though there’s no company seal?” Jasper asked with a frown.

“This is only a small blunder we can pick on, but it won’t hinder the legitimacy or validity of the contract. And June did sign the papers on behalf of the company, so it falls under apparent authority this complicates the situation a lot.”

“The contract’s never been approved by the company in the first place and June signed it at her own volition. Now, she’s being fired for corruption and our company’s about to sue her. The corporate world would be lawless if such a thing could be pulled off.”

“I’ll go inside and review the situation first. But remember that our company will not concede on this lawsuit no matter what. We’ll go all the way to Swallow Capital if we have to.”

Eugene nodded at Jasper’s reminder. “I understand.”

After speaking to Eugene, Jasper then entered the legal department’s meeting room.

Inside the meeting room was Ward and another man that looked like Ward but was much more gentlemanly, Edie.

Finally, there was another middle aged man with a curious look on his face as he took in the environment around him. This man seemed elegant and there was a special aura about him.

The man seemed gentle but was actually fierce and firm. There was a certain ferocity hidden deep within him that sent shivers down others’ spines.

With one look, Jasper could see the unique aura people from Harbor City possessed.

... No matter how much a mainlander wanted to act cool, it was still rare to see them putting a white pocket square in the fake breast pocket of their suit jacket.

Mortimer Higgins.

Jasper immediately recognized the man.

It was likely that he came over so he could understand JW Company's business in advance.

The two locked gazes and despite this being their first meeting, they recognized each other as if mentally connected.

"Mr. Laine?"

Mortimer stood and asked tentatively.

Jasper smiled and extended his hand. "Mr. Higgins. I thought it'd be another few hours until we met."

Mortimer shook Jasper's hand and smiled. "I heard Mr. Benson say that he had to come to JW to deal with a few things, so I thought I'd come with to better understand the company. I'm not intruding, am I?"

“Not at all,” Jasper shook his head, “Since they’re also here, then I’ll have to trouble you to give me a moment first, Mr. Higgins. We can talk more after I’ve dealt with this issue.”

“Alright,” Mortimer naturally agreed.

Still, this first meeting had left both of them a great impression of the other.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1276

Their conversation stunned the Benson brothers.

No one expected anything from Ward since he was an idiot anyway. The same could not be said about Edie.

As the president of the Southeast Province's Lawyers' Associates, he knew which enterprises he could not to offend within the province.

Thus, he had come today for two reasons. Firstly, Ward was his brother, and secondly, Ward had guaranteed him that he had evidence of JW Company's owner's woman cheating on him behind her man's back.

The second reason was the most important piece of information since Edie wanted nothing more than to use Mortimer's identity and status to climb higher up the social ladder. He also wanted to use this opportunity to show his ability in front of Mortimer.

However, not only did Jasper, the owner of JW Company, appear in person, but the man was also acquainted with Mortimer?!

This had Edie's heart thumping erratically.

At this moment, Ward still had no idea of the deeper implications of their little ploy. He was just confused about how Jasper and Mortimer knew each other.

“Mr. Higgins, don’t let this stupid f*cker lie to you! He’s just a boy toy and a piece of trash that relies on his woman’s paychecks!”

“You might not know, but he has an affair with Wendy, JW Company’s owner’s mistress!”

“JW Company’s owner will definitely kill him once he finds out!”

“He’s nothing more than a liar and a b*tstard!”

Ward felt refreshed after scolding Jasper, thinking that he had exposed the man’s true form.

He looked at Jasper and was waiting to see a frantic expression on the man’s face before he realized that everyone in the room was looking at him like he was insane.

Jasper’s gaze was the most unique of them all. It was playful but also carried a hint of pity.

“Why are you guys looking at me like that?!”

Ward’s chest tightened in fright, and he turned to a pale faced Edie as he repeated, “Ed, I said that boy toy over there is a f*cking idiot!”

“Don’t be afraid of him, I told you before already. We won’t offend JW’s owner at all. All we have to do is tell him the news and he’d even thank us!”

All he got in response was a huge and heavy slap.

Edie slapped Ward harshly across the face.

Taken aback, Ward’s entire face was twisted sideways by the force.

“F*ck you, stupid moron!”

Furious and frantic, Edie opened his mouth to scold Ward. He did not have the mind to keep up the demeanor befitting of the president of the Lawyers’ Associates.

“Do you know who he is? That’s Jasper Laine, the owner of JW Company! If you have a death wish then go kill yourself somewhere else, don’t drag me into this with you! I don’t have a stupid f*cking brother like you!”

A slap and a harsh round of scolding. This was a metaphorical bolt of lightning.

It metaphorically struck Ward right on his head. The man was stunned, and he felt half his soul get shocked out of his body upon hearing the news.

“How could that be?!”

Ward shouted raspily.

Ward pointed at Jasper and said frustratedly, “How can he be JW’s owner?! He’s still so young! You’re lying to me!”

“You’re really an imbecile!” Edie’s tone was frigid. At this moment, he even felt the desire to eat Ward alive.

No one dared to offend Jasper in Southeast Province. He truly regretted being tempted by Ward into coming to cause trouble in JW right now. He even pitifully wanted to show his capabilities in front of Mortimer, and perhaps become acquainted with Jasper too.

All his plans were screwed now.

Ward also felt screwed.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1277

Ward sat on the chair limply and looked at Jasper with fear.

His mouth twitched a few times as he wanted to beg Jasper for mercy, but nothing came out despite the words being on the tip of his tongue.

In the end, Ward simply looked at Eddie and said with a sob.

“Ed... Save me...”

Eddie clenched his jaw. He wanted nothing more than to beat Ward to death now, but despite all this, the man was still his brother.

At this thought, Edie mustered the courage to tell Jasper, "This is really a misunderstanding, Mr. Laine."

Jasper sat at the front of the meeting room and placed his interlocked fingers under his chin. He replied with a crescent eyed smile, "A misunderstanding? I thought you two came to file a lawsuit against JW?"

"After all, as you said before, it's written in black and white on the contract. Either JW pays the compensation according to the contract, or you'll sue us until we're broke. What misunderstandings can there be?"

The corner of Edie's lips twitched twice at Jasper's words.

He chuckled wryly and replied, "There's no point in hiding this from you since it's gotten to this point, Mr. Laine. My brother was the one who urged me to come here, and we did discuss it among ourselves. However, we only did that to seem threatening. There's no truth behind the statement."

"We thought that you'd compromise because didn't know about what happened and wouldn't want to blow up the issue so as not to affect your employees."

"Still, this incident was caused because my brother and I were tempted. My brother's told me about this before and I've been thinking that since it's just a bit of rebate, perhaps we could all just turn a blind eye and move on. I didn't expect this incident to develop to this point."

After hearing so much from Edie, Jasper asked calmly, “Then are you going to sue us or not?”

Edie quickly replied, “No, definitely not. ”

Edie kicked Ward harshly and scolded, “Mr. Laine asked you a question! Did you go dumb?”

Ward replied to Jasper with a sob, “I was blind, Mr. Laine, I’m sorry for starting a conflict and offending you. Please forgive me, I promise I won’t dare to sue you anymore. I’ll stay far far away, and I’ll never anger you again.”

Jasper took in the sight and turned to Eugene, “Send them out, Mr. Rowse.”

At the end of the day, Edie was the president of the Lawyers’ Associates, and the company would have to interact the Judicial Bureau many times in the future.

Jasper would gain nothing out of offending the legal industry.

Jasper’s company did business, and peace was a key aspect in that.

Not to mention that this was never a huge problem and Jasper had planned to let them go to begin with.

Ward and Edie were elated when they saw how Jasper decided to forgive them.

They thanked him and followed Eugene out.

After they left, Jasper got up and smiled at Mortimer. "Let's talk in my office upstairs, Mr. Higgins."

Mortimer got up and replied with a smile, "Since you've invited me, then please lead the way."

Jasper called Wendy over too once he arrived at his office upstairs.

Since this was an interview of the first person to lead the supervision department, Jasper did not plan to involve the opinions of Malcolm, Chad, or the others. Only his and Wendy's opinions mattered.

After a brief introduction, Jasper sat on the sofa in the reception area and told Mortimer straight forwardly.

“To be frank, Mr. Higgins, I am in great need of outstanding talent like you to build a supervision system for the whole of JW.

“If you’re willing to join us, then I’ll be open to giving you what you need, be it subordinates, money, or authority. You will only answer to me within the entire company and you’ll work independently of the administrative system. You will not be affected or disrupted by anyone else.”

A few sentences were all it took for Mortimer to feel Jasper’s determination and sincerity.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1278

His eyes lit up and he replied, “I also wish to continue my career in a position where I can best show my strengths. But before that, there’s a lot of questions I need to discuss with you, Mr. Laine.”

“Do tell. Let’s not leave any thought unsaid today.” Jasper smiled.

Two hours later, Mortimer walked out of JW Capital with a wide smile on his face.

In the presidential office, Jasper told Wendy, “Call Malcolm, Chad, and all other decision makers of large departments over for a meeting. We’ll start transferring suitable employees from the whole company and start employing new ones too. The supervision department will be officially established once Mortimer starts working.”

The establishment of the supervision department meant that JW was taking another big step in developing into a more modern group.

This was a significant step to take, be it for the development of JW Capital or JW as a whole.

JW Capital’s decision makers were in a meeting for the entire afternoon.

The establishment of the supervision department would surely infringe upon everyone’s interests. Some people would be forced to give up much of their authority, which would undoubtedly lead to conflicts.

All the departments hoped that the supervision department would be laxer with them. After all, no one hoped to have the guillotine dangling over their necks.

Meanwhile, Jasper, the most important decision maker, remained silent and watched.

Leaving Chad, Malcolm, and the others to flush in agitation and fight amongst themselves.

This was quarrel and compromise between small interest groups in the company. It was a virtuous circle so Jasper would not interfere.

Not to mention that this was the appearance of a new system, and a supervisory one at that. Too many moving parts were involved, and by the time the meeting was adjourned and everyone came to a mutually agreeable decision, it was already seven pm.

“Alright. Since everyone’s fine with this, then we’ll do it this way. People from the presidential office will draft out the document tomorrow and it can be officially sent to all the subsidiaries after I sign it.”

Jasper clapped his hand to announce the end of the meeting.

Everyone left except for Chad, who remained unmoving in his seat.

There was something he wanted to tell Jasper personally.

“What’s this, Chad? Do you not want to hand some of power over to the supervision department?” Jasper chuckled as he asked Chad.

The supervision department's authority overlapped with the human resources department's right to review employees. Chad had made a huge concession on this point, so Jasper understood if the man was displeased.

Despite this, Chad chuckled wryly and replied, "The decision's already been made, I won't disrupt the company's natural development because of my personal desire. The supervision department will do the company more good than bad, and it's worth losing a bit of my human resources department's authority to pursue it."

"The main thing is... Do you still remember Baz Willis, Mr. Laine?"

This question Jasper stunned while the latter gathered his meeting documents alongside Wendy.

'Isn't that my past life's superior that I sought out in Waterhoof City?'

Jasper left Baz alone after he arranged for the man to learn about investments in the company. Jasper was busy with work, so it had been a long time since he heard anything about Baz.

"Yeah. Why, is he not doing well?" Jasper asked.

Chad replied weirdly, “Not exactly, it’s just... he’s creative and I arranged for him to work under Albion. It’s only been a while but Albion’s already sent me two reports.”

“He handed in a proposal directly today and Albion didn’t know what to make of it so he threw it to me. I thought about it but I thought you should be the one to decide on it, Mr. Laine.”

“What proposal? If he’s under Mr. Harper, then Mr. Harper should still hand the proposal to the head of the Investment department if he couldn’t decide. Why did he give it to you?”

Chad smiled wryly and replied, “That’s the thing. Even the head of the Investment department couldn’t decide. Since this is someone you especially employed, Mr. Laine, none of us feel right making the final decision. Baz requested that we acquire a business with a market value of 30 million Somer Dollars!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1279

Chad immediately pulled out the proposal in question.

After handing it to Jasper, Chad continued to say, “According to normal protocol, Baz is still no more than a small employee in the investment department. He doesn’t have the qualifications to lead a team yet, and this proposal would’ve been discarded by the manager once it was handed in if he was anyone else.”

“But everyone knows that you especially approved his employment Albion also checked it out and found that this proposal actually seems pretty legitimate, so preliminary market research was also done. Therefore, he didn’t really dare to reject it outright”

“He gave it some thought and handed it to me, most likely so I could pass this to you, Mr. Laine.”

Jasper looked down at the proposal in his hands. After a short moment of thought, he chuckled out loud. History sure does repeat itself.

Jasper wondered that Baz would end up living a new life due to him employing the man. He did not expect Baz to retrace the steps he did in his past life, be it by coincidence or due to fate.

This superior of his had accumulated his first big sum of money through the stocks and the financial market when he was young.

What truly started the man’s business and changed him from a common retail investor to the president of an investment company, and gave him the chance to climb the ranks of the social ladder, was the acquisition of Tefa City’s Downstream Investment Company.

‘It was a profitable purchase.’

That was what Baz frequently told Jasper in his past life.

Thanks to all sorts of boasting from Baz, Jasper came to understand the process of this acquisition as well.

Downstream Investment Company was the first investment company in Tefa City funded by the state. However, due to horrible management and the Tefa City City government deciding to reduce state owed liabilities, the company decided to be put on sale.

No one could see into the future, so while many people knew of this offering, not many people were actually willing to acquire it.

Baz had then taken all his savings, back then a total of 11 million, and acquired Downstream Investment Company.

Then the economy in the mainlands skyrocketed and the stock market faced a bullish trend. Downstream Investment Company's market price grew tenfold in just a few years.

This was how Baz joined the line of top notch wealthy businessmen in Tefa City and became a true multimillionaire.

"Is he still in the office?" Jasper asked.

Chad nodded. "He should be. I heard that he's a workaholic who always does overtime. He's the most diligent and hardworking person in his department. This is something Albion told me many times. He's got great potential."

"Tell him to meet me at my office."

Jasper stood up and said.

Wendy then spoke to Jasper in dissatisfaction as they rode the elevator, "How important is this matter that we have to deal with it today instead of tomorrow? It's already very late and you still haven't had dinner yet. You're going to get a stomach ache later."

Due to a long history of irregular eating times, Jasper had recently suffered from stomach aches. It was nothing severe, but it had gotten Wendy attention. Therefore, Wendy could not accept Jasper not eating when he should.

"It's fine. It'll only take around half an hour. Just wait for me for a while and we can go eat together," Jasper comforted.

Wendy glared at Jasper but had no other choice than to conform.

She understood Jasper the most, so she knew that he did not care about something as insignificant as eating once he was in the business headspace.

Jasper had just entered his office when Baz arrived as well.

Opening the door for Baz to walk in, Jasper first gave the man a good look before he chuckled, “Not bad. You’re skinner but you look much more energized.”

In comparison to how Baz looked back in the audio rental shop then, the man looked completely different. He was now with vigor and energy.

Baz chuckled and replied, “Now that I have a goal to strive for, it’s only normal that I’d look different. After coming to work here, I found that I really like the investment industry. I was wasting my life away before this.”

Baz was truly grateful to have met Jasper.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1280

During this time, Baz had come to know just how wealthy Jasper was. He also understood the full extent of Jasper’s influence in JW Company and even the whole of Southeast Province.

This made him even more grateful to Jasper. This man was of extremely high status, yet was willing to help his ordinary self.

Afraid that dallying would evoke Wendy's nagging, Jasper moved on from small talk and waved the proposal in his hands. "Did you do this proposal?"

Baz replied embarrassedly, "They already handed it to you? I was the one who wrote it. Am... am I being overzealous?"

Baz knew his current level within the company, and how inappropriate it was to hand in a proposal on such a huge project.

He regretted it once he handed the proposal in, thinking that he would have to face a harsh scolding.

After all, JW Company had a strict employee hierarchical system and he had overstepped the boundaries of his position by handing in that proposal. Like a security guard doing the task of a director general. It would be weird if he was not chided.

"I'm more curious about why you think so well of this Downstream Investment Company. It's in Tefa City, but most of JW Company's main business is in the provincial capital, Nauritus City," Jasper said.

Baz's eyes lip up and he began to speak without stopping.

"Trust me, Mr. Laine. This Downstream Investment Company's definitely been undervalued. If the company acquires it, then it'll definitely be a profitable purchase. I've done market research too and I found that..."

Baz spoke for a whole ten minutes.

Jasper listened quietly while he looked through the report in his hands.

After Baz was done, Jasper replied, "You're right. But did it occur to you that companies and owners local to Tefa City also have their eyes on this cash cow? We're from Nauritus City, and to suddenly enter the competition would surely evoke hostility."

Baz was stunned for a moment before he replied solemnly, "All I see is that this is a worthy investment. It might cost more than 10 million but it'll definitely bring even bigger returns. I didn't think about the other factors, but doesn't every business have competition?"

Jasper did not say anything after this.

Baz was a little nervous as he stood in place.

He realized that his words were too impulsive.

'Would this invoke Mr. Laine's ire?'

Baz felt unsettled.

He was just a normal employee, after all. He had no right to tell Mr. Laine how to do business.

While Baz simmered nervously, Jasper spoke up. "Prepare your things and come with me to Tefa City tomorrow."

Baz was overcome with joy when he heard Jasper.

"You agree to the acquisition, Mr. Laine?" Baz asked excitedly.

"Don't look so happy just yet," Jasper said with a crescent eyed smile, "Since we're interfering with the purchase of Downstream Investment Company, we'll surely be attacked by Tefa City's local powers."

“I’ll keep an eye on your performance and if I realize that you’re performing below standard, then I’ll give up on this investment and you alongside it.”

“Yes, Sir! ” Baz knew that this was a great opportunity and he immediately shouted.

A moment later, Jasper pressed his palm against the proposal as he watched Baz leave the office happily.

He knew that it had not been easy for Baz to acquire Downstream Investment Co., Ltd. in his past life. Back then, the man had almost been tossed by Tefa City’s huge family, the Covingtons, to feed the dogs.

However, as Baz had said just now, Downstream Investment Company was a profitable acquisition and business had always been filled with competition.

Jasper had no reason to give up on a business that would bring him ten times the profit in the future.

‘So what if you’re the Covington family?’

Life at The Top – Chapter 1281

Tefa City was considered Jasper's hometown. Faith County, where he currently stood, was one of Tefa City's counties.

However, due to multiple reasons, be it now or in the year 2020 more than a decade into the future, Tefa City's economy had always been rather bleak and they had not met too many business opportunities.

That was why Jasper decided to start the most important pillar of his business in the provincial capital, Nauritus City.

As a result, he did not pay Tefa City too much attention.

This day, Julian drove Jasper and Baz over to Tefa City. The trio first checked in to a hotel. Since the main goal of the trip was so that Jasper could train Baz, the man immediately had the latter go and gather all information he could on Downstream Investment Company once they arrived at the hotel.

Baz had already come here before for preliminary market research, so he knew his way around.

However, two hours later at the pre-arranged time, instead of the man's return, Jasper received a call from Baz

"I got beaten up, Mr. Laine."

Jasper immediately rushed to the entrance of Downstream Investment Company with Julian and saw Baz sitting on the staircase with a tissue over his forehead from afar.

There was blood on his hands and face, as well as droplets of it all over the floor in front of him.

Jasper's expression immediately turned cold when he saw Baz's situation.

According to what Baz told him during his past life, Jasper knew that it was not an easy process for the former to acquire Downstream Investment Company. However, Jasper did not expect Baz to get beaten up on the first day.

No matter what, Jasper had to stand up for Baz.

"I'm sorry for being so useless, Mr. Laine."

Baz got up to tell Jasper remorsefully when he saw the other.

Jasper waved his hand and said grimly, "Don't talk about that now. How are your wounds?"

"I have an open wound on my forehead. It looks a little scary but it's not too big of a deal," Baz grinned.

However, due to the huge amount of blood loss, Baz's complexion did not look very good.

Jasper had Julian inspect Baz's physical condition.

During this time, a group of people led by a young man walked over.

"Yo, you really did come."

Scott snickered and pointed at Baz as he asked Jasper, "So this f*cker Baz Willis is your dog?"

“Look, brat. Before you let your dogs out next time, make sure to teach them some manners. Don’t just start shouting when you see people, or you’ll only get killed before you even know it.”

“And you, the trouble your dog caused is still your problem to solve. Don’t be so high profile, or it’ll only get you killed. You get me?”

Jasper narrowed his eyes and looked at the young man in front of him before asking calmly, “Were you the one that hit Baz?”

At that moment, Julian walked over to Jasper and whispered, “There’s nothing major, Jasper. Just a flesh wound. A few stitches from the hospital later should solve it.”

Baz walked over as well.

“Mr. Laine, that man is Scott Covington, the son of Tefa City’s Covington family. He’s also got his eyes on Downstream Investment Company.”

“He warned me before not to interfere with his purchase of this company when I came to do preliminary market research. I’ve only been here for a while today when I met him again, then he immediately called his lackeys to beat me up.”

Jasper nodded and told Baz, “Go sit by the side and take a break. I’ll deal with this.”

Scott laughed out loud when he heard that and said, “You’ll deal with this? What kind of nonsense are you spouting here? Who do you think you are? What makes you think you can deal with this?”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1282

Scott then pointed at Baz and sneered. “What happened to your dog is a lesson for you. This company will belong to me, and whoever wants to take it from me can prepare to die.”

“What a bold claim.”

Jasper’s tone was indifferent.

Ever since Jasper started his business, he had destroyed tons of trust-fund children like Scott. Jasper did not even want to waste time talking to the person in front of him.

“Sure. Originally, I didn’t really care if I bought Downstream Investment Company or not. But since you’ve made such a claim, then there’s no way I’m leaving without it I’d like to see how you plan on killing me.”

“What the f*ck! How can you talk to Mr. Covington like that?!”

A lackey beside Scott jumped up and pointed at Jasper as he scolded.

Then, this lackey who wanted to please Scott said flatteringly, “Mr. Covington, why waste time talking to stupid f*ckers like him? Let me crush his head, I’d like to see if he can still act arrogant them.”

Scott snickered wretchedly and replied, “You’re right. Go and make this brat bleed, let him know that the Covington family is king here in Tefa City!”

With Scott’s approval, this lackey scoffed at Jasper and strolled over.

“Watch out, Mr. Laine. He’s the one that beat me up just now,” Baz stood in front of Jasper subconsciously.

Only for Jasper to pull him to the side. “Jul..!”

Julian heard Jasper call him and immediately went to fight that lackey.

“Motherf*cker, you even dare to call for help? I’ll kill you all today!”

This lackey was a fighter too, as he roared and continued to march forward when he saw Julian approach. He raised his fist and aimed it at Julian’s face.

Julian’s gaze was indifferent and he watched the man’s actions after the latter raised his hand. Then, he directly grabbed the lackey’s wrist.

The lackey was stunned and instinctively tried to pull out of Julian’s grasp. However, no matter how he struggled, Julian’s palm clamped on his wrist like a set of pliers, making it hard for him to move at all.

As if feeling embarrassed, the lackey roared and scolded, “Motherf*cker, let go of me!”

Julian’s gaze was cold as he backhandedly twisted his wrist and pulled the lackey’s arm backward, causing the latter to let out tragic yelps.

With a painful cry, the lackey bowed in front of Julian.

Julian raised his leg and slammed his knee into the other’s face.

Blood instantly splattered everywhere.

The sound of the nose bridge fracturing accompanied by the lackey's sorrowful scream rang out across the area. After this, the lackey fell backward onto the ground, his face a mix of tears, snot, and gushing blood.

His vision went dark as he wiped the blood from his face. Half his face felt numb, and upon looking at the terrifying traces of blood on his hand, the lackey shouted and was about to get up to fight Julian again.

However, before he could completely get to his feet, Julian sent him flying far away with a kick.

The lackey hit the side of the staircase like a rolling pin and he did not even have the strength to yelp or scold any more. All he could do was place a hand over the fractured areas of his body and whimper.

The fight might have sounded complicated, but everything occurred in a flash.

The whole thing from beginning to the end was over in a few blinks.

Seeing how one of his best fighters was instantly defeated by Julian, Scott's pupils contracted and he stared at Jasper warily. He shouted angrily, "F*ck! Who the hell are you? How dare you hurt my men here in Tefa City?"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1283

"I'm just a normal businessman, nothing in comparison to the Covingtons, the biggest family in Tefa City."

Jasper replied coldly.

"But if this is all you can do to make me give up on acquiring Downstream Investment Company, then I'm afraid it's not enough."

Jasper's words caused Scott to flush in embarrassment. Scott glared at Jasper and suddenly began to laugh. With his hands behind his back, the man narrowed his eyes and walked over to Jasper slowly.

Meanwhile, his lackeys stared at Jasper and Julian warily, especially Julian.

After all, everyone had clearly seen how Julian fought.

Baz was nervous as well. He was afraid that Scott would do something to hurt Jasper.

However, Jasper remained unfazed and stood in place as Scott walked over to him.

Scott leaned into Jasper's personal space slightly and said, "Interesting. Quite interesting indeed."

"You're from outside, aren't you, brat?"

"After all, no one would dare to talk to me like this in Tefa City."

"Oh well, it's been too long since I've had any rivals. I suppose a moron jumping out from time to time is part of the flavors of life. Rather interesting, I'd say."

"You want Downstream Investment Company, right? Sure, then. The company's having an auction tomorrow and I'll be waiting for you here. I'd like to see how you plan to fight over this with me."

Scott then scoffed wretchedly and poked Jasper's chest as he said, "Word of advice, don't go around asking about me. Otherwise, I'm afraid you'd flee overnight and I wouldn't get to have any fun tomorrow."

With that, Scott chortled loudly and turned to leave.

“Stand still.”

Jasper said calmly from behind.

Scott did not walk further and turned around to look at Jasper with a snort. “Why, are you afraid? Do you want to beg for mercy? Too late.”

“Unless you have your dog break his own arm.” Scott pointed at Julian when he said that.

“You hit my employee and you want to leave just like that?” Jasper asked calmly.

Scott scoffed and replied, “You hurt my men too, didn’t you? What more do you want?”

“Jul,” Jasper called out.

“This Young Master Covington put a wound in Baz’s head. Go put the same wound on his head. An eye for an eye.”

Julian immediately pounced once Jasper finished talking.

Scott did not expect Jasper to have Julian attack him. There was no way this man did not fear Julian after everyone saw how ferocious the man fought.

Scott chose to back out temporarily because he was afraid Julian would attack.

The arrogant expression disappeared and Scott shouted, “What are you people waiting for? Come f*cking protect me!”

His lackeys had yet to act when Julian arrived before Scott.

No one saw what Julian did specifically. All they knew was that Julian closed his fingers and slapped Scott’s forehead before he immediately left.

Scott felt his head ache, followed by a searing pain on his forehead.

He did not even have the time to look at his forehead wound when a layer of red dyed his vision.

The fresh blood streaming from his forehead was what blinded him.

Scott closed his eyes instinctively in fear and both his hands began to grab around mindlessly.

“Aah! I can’t see! What happened to my eyes! ”

Scott shouted frantically; His lackeys were also in chaos. “Mr. Covington’s been hit! He’s injured! Quick, protect Mr. Covington!”

A few lackeys shouted frantically.

One slightly smarter lackey took some cloth to wipe the blood from Scott’s face. Now Scott could open his eyes as well.

Scott was relieved when his vision returned.

During the chaos, Scott almost thought that Julian had blinded him.

After the relief came deep mortification and hatred. Scott glared at Jasper and roared, "You f*cking called your dog to hit me?!"

"Just an eye for an eye. Watch your choice of words, or this won't be the end of the lesson I'm about to teach you." Jasper said calmly.

Scott's anger was immediately quelled by the words.

He glanced at Julian beside Jasper fearfully. After seeing Julian's strength, Scott knew that the man could easily defeat all his men.

Scott might be arrogant, but he was not an idiot.

He knew that he could not fight Jasper physically at such a time.

"Fine, then! An eye for an eye, huh!"

Scott glared at Jasper resentfully. He placed a hand over his forehead no one knew if this was out of pain or anger and said angrily, "Just you wait! You want Downstream Investment Company, huh? F*ck you! In your dreams!"

"I'll kill you at the auction tomorrow!"

After uttering this threat, Scott was also afraid that Jasper would have Julian continue to beat him up, so he immediately fled with his lackeys.

The lackey that Julian had beaten up before had gotten up a time long ago and also fled.

Not that Jasper cared.

When it came to people like Scott, they had to be completely overwhelmed both in terms of power and wealth. It was unrealistic to have Julian kill the man now.

Since the auction was the next day, Jasper could naturally defeat the man then.

"Come on, let's get you to the hospital," Jasper turned and told Baz.

Baz flushed and stuttered, “Mr. Laine, I, I... Thank you!”

Jasper smiled. “What are you thanking me for? You’re my employee and you got beaten up for no reason over company matters. What kind of boss would I be to just watch as they bully you?”

Baz replied worriedly, “But the Covington family is very powerful here in Tefa City. If we offend them today and they plan to target us tomorrow, I’m afraid that we’d have to face a lot of trouble.”

“Why, are you afraid?” Jasper asked playfully.

Baz quickly shook his head and replied firmly, “I’m not afraid. Just worried that Scott will make us pay more than necessary just to screw us over.”

“Don’t worry. We’re acquiring this Downstream Investment Company no matter what. As for Whether we’ll have to pay more and how much more, Scott will still have to reimburse us in the end.”

Baz was stunned. He did not know where Jasper’s confidence came from.

“Alright. Don’t think too much about this, now. Let’s get your wound stitched up. It won’t be good to delay this for too long as it might leave a scar.”

Jasper clapped Baz’s shoulder and told Julian to drive the car over.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1284

Julian drove the car over in no time and Jasper had Baz get into the car. Then, they immediately went to the nearest hospital to stitch the wound up.

At the same time, Scott has also gotten into his car with a dark expression.

“Are we going to the hospital first, Mr. Covington?” A lackey asked carefully.

“Bullsh*t! Do you want me to be a laughing stock as I walk the streets with a huge wound on my head?”

Scott pointed at the wound on his head angrily and shouted at his lackey.

His face now coated with Scott's saliva, the lackey did not dare to say anymore and kept his head down as Scott scolded him.

"So stupid. What's the f*cking point of having you people, huh? None of you can do anything and all you know is to take my money. Any lackey under that f*cker can easily beat all of you up! F *cking embarrassing!"

Scott felt angrier the more he thought about it and slapped the back of his lackey's head.

The lackey cupped his head but did not dare to argue. Instead, he replied grimly, "You can't blame us, Mr. Covington. That man's trained to fight, there's no way we're any match for him."

"That's why I said all of you are useless!"

After scolding them, Scott felt the indignance stifling his chest disperse slightly.

Scott tugged on the collar of his shirt and said venomously.

“Go dig around and find out where who that f*cker is. Then go and talk to a few people we prepared for just these situations. Have them act according to the situation tomorrow. I’ll humiliate that f*cker harshly when the time comes!”

“Auction? Motherf*cker, I’ve got enough money to absolutely crush him!”

The time passed in the blink of an eye.

Early the next morning, Jasper and Baz walked out of the hotel with Julian in tow.

The three went straight to Downstream Investment Company’s meeting room once they left the hotel.

This was where the auction that would decide this company’s future was being held.

The auction was about to start when Jasper arrived. Jasper immediately realized that a few idle people were standing at the door and looking at him weirdly once he arrived.

They pointed fingers as if there was much to chat about. It seemed like Scott had already released the news.

Jasper had no idea of what was happening, but he also did not care.

Tefa City alone was still too small.

If not for the fact that Downstream Investment Company was an extremely profitable purchase and was related to Jasper's arrangement for Baz in the future, he would not be here at all.

These people who were speaking among themselves about him would not have the right to see him anyway.

Naturally, Jasper would not need to apply and pay the deposit by himself. Instead, Baz immediately went to look for the relevant employees to complete their registration.

At the same time, Scott and the others arrived late. Scott's head, like Baz's, was also wrapped in bandages such that he looked rather pitiful.

They say people's eyes redden when they see their enemies. Scott immediately glared at Jasper the moment he saw him.

"Hey, brat. You really did dare to come!"

Scott said icily as he approached Jasper.

“Why wouldn’t I dare?” Jasper asked with a smile.

Scott scoffed and said, “Don’t act so arrogant yet. Don’t think that just because your dog bites, that you can do whatever you want. This is an auction, not somewhere your dog can cause a ruckus. We’re talking about business here!

“As I said before, at least take a look at yourself first before you think about stealing from me in Tefa City.”

Jasper looked at Scott, his expression still calm. “As I said as well, I’m not leaving without this company.”

Anger flashed through Scott’s expression and the man harrumphed. “Fine, then! Let’s wait and see!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1285

After this, he brought his people into the meeting room. At the same time, Baz walked over.

“Mr. Laine, I’ve already completed the necessary procedures, but as the legal representative, we need you to go and sign.”

Jasper nodded and walked over to the office window. A few curious people surrounded him.

“That’s him? The person that challenged Mr. Covington?”

“Haha. Didn’t you see just now? Mr. Covington doesn’t like him at all. Who the hell does he think he is? Tsk tsk...”

“Exactly. I’ve never seen anyone who managed to walk out unscathed after they offended Mr. Covington in Tefa City. What a shame, so young and ignorant Now he’s doomed.”

“I’d like to see how rich this person who dared challenge Mr. Covington is. Who knows if his company is even worth 1 million?”

“Haha, even Downstream Investment Company’s opening price is at 3 million. 1 million? Are you kidding me, man?”

“To have 1 million at his age is already a lot. Why else would he be so arrogant?”

Jasper ignored the comments thrown around him. "Hello, please show me your business license."

The officer did his part and said numbly, neither polite nor enthusiastic.

Baz immediately pulled out the business license he had brought over.

It was JW Capital's.

The officer took it and compared it with the documents one by one.

"Alright, JW Capital LLC. The company's office, Southface River Tower in the developmental area of Southface River in Southeast Province's Nauritus City. Legal representative is Jasper Laine, is that you?"

Jasper nodded and replied, "I'm the legal representative."

The officer jotted a note on the registration document and was suddenly stunned when he looked back to the company's registered capital."

“1... 1 billion?!”

The officer might have lowered their voice, but the surrounding people still heard it.

The crowd was immediately in an uproar.

‘This was the year 2001!’

While it was no longer the age where people with thousands of Somer Dollars could be considered wealthy, it was still rare for someone’s wealth to be counted in the billions.

The business owners who came to watch the auction were successful people in suits, but their assets did not exceed more than a few million.

People whose assets were in the ten millions were considered huge business owners.

Even so, these people were considered the highest ranking businessmen in Tefa City.

This was not exclusive to Tefa City. Considering the country's current economic state, this was the case for most cities.

Therefore, this 1 billion the officer read out made Jasper into a dragon amidst a group of small chicks.

"Mr... Mr. Laine, please sign here."

The officer was startled and instinctively straightened his posture to be as professional as possible. He pulled out a document for Jasper to sign.

Jasper took the pen and signed his name quickly, then he brought Baz and Julian into the meeting room.

He was not interested in sparing the dazed crowd another glance.

Just like how Jasper had ignored their mockery, he did not care about the fright and envy on these people's faces now that he had shown his strength.

As he had said before, the difference between them was too big.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1286

Almost everyone had already arrived and were seated when Jasper entered the auction venue.

There was around twenty groups of people within the hall.

Every group had around two to three members, so, coupled with the officers around the room, sixty to seventy people were currently packed into the meeting room.

The majority of people took their seats, while the most attention grabbing person was Scott.

The man sat with a high profile in the middle of the room with both arms placed over two empty chairs by his side. He also had someone pouring and offering tea as well as someone giving him massages.

Upon seeing Jasper enter the room, Scott raised his eyes lazily to glance at the man. He scoffed but did not say anything provoking.

After all, this was an auction venue and not even he dared to make a ruckus.

Not to mention that Julian was right beside Jasper, and the wound on Scott's head had not recovered and still ached.

Scott retracted his sinister gaze once he saw Jasper sit down.

Scott took the coffee from his lackey's hands and asked, "Did you talk to those people we asked yet?"

"Yeah. Everyone will go according to plan when the time comes," A lackey quickly replied.

Scott nodded in satisfaction and asked, "What about that f*cker? Did you find out who he is?"

The lackey looked embarrassed and said, "Mr. Covington, we weren't given enough time to investigate. We need more time."

"Useless! "

Scott glared at him and waved him off annoyedly, "You people can't even do anything properly. Go ask the company hosting the auction later since he's definitely registered his company if he came to participate in the auction. You'll be able to learn about the man through them."

The lackey's eyes lit up and he praised, "I knew you'd have a great plan, Mr. Covington. I'm sure that'll work"

"My life would've been over long ago if I had to count on you people," Scott said with a sneer.

"The auction's about to start so do that later. How powerful can this f*cker be anyway? Hmph, he's got much to work on before he can beat me."

A short moment later, the auctioneer walked up to the stage and said energetically, "Thank you for coming today. There's only one item on the agenda today, and that's Downstream Investment LLC!"

"Now, before the auction begins, let me describe the situation we have today."

"We've currently received a total of twenty two valid applications, which corresponds to the twenty two families or companies present who applied to participate."

“Downstream Investment LLC is Tefa City City Government’s first investment company operating on state funds. According to the higher ups’ policy, we will now begin the auction for this company market valued at 16 million.”

“I’m sure everyone seated already understands the specifics of this company, but just to emphasize, we are auctioning the ownership of Downstream Investment LLC as a whole. This includes existing office building equipment, various financial investment qualifications, and licenses.”

“The opening bid is at 3 million Somer Dollars.”

“Without further ado, let the auction begin!”

“At an opening price of 3 million, interested bidders can start calling their bids now.”

The auctioneer had just finished speaking when someone raised their bidder card in the corner of the room.

“Number 11 calls for 3 million, are there any higher bids?”

“Number 9 calls for 3.1 million!”

“Number 13 calls for 3.3 million!”

Under the steady stream of bidders, Downstream Investment Company’s price rose from 3 million to 8 million.

Seated in the middle of the room, Scott stared sinisterly sideways at Jasper, who had yet to bid. He scoffed.

The people calling out prices now were all helpers Scott invited. If Jasper did not call a price, then Scott would get the company at a low cost. If Jasper raised his bidder card, then Scott would make his move as well. Everything depended on Jasper now.

At this moment, the man’s eyes were slightly narrowed. He caught onto something the auctioneer had said.

This company was being auctioned along with its financial investment qualifications and licenses!

This benefit did not exist in his past life.

The official financial investment license was something extremely rare in the country, both now and in the future.

Ninety five percent of the listed investment companies, regardless of size, did not have formal qualifications.

They either relied on, or borrowed from, another company that did.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1287

With the rapid development of the mainlands' economy, the importance of formal qualifications and licensing also began to grow.

With this license, it meant that the company could legally issue bonds to society and collect investments from the public. This was of great importance. Lately, this kind of license could only be held by enterprises which received state funds.

This immediately increased Downstream Investment Company's worth by a hundred fold!

“Baz...”

Jasper turned his head to call on Baz. The latter was slightly nervous since this was his first auction.

“Mr. Laine,” Baz replied courteously. He was rather excited because he knew that Mr. Laine was about to make a move.

“Call a price of 16 million.”

Baz was stunned when he heard Jasper.

The highest price at the scene was 8 million, yet Jasper immediately bid double the price.

While Baz had never attended an auction before, he knew that people did not normally bid for things like this.

However, Baz saw how Jasper showed no signs of changing his mind and did not dare to ask more. He ignored the excitement he felt and raised his bidder card.

“Number 22 calls for 16 million!”

The auctioneer’s excited voice resonated throughout the venue. The hall was in an uproar.

They immediately turned to look at Jasper, who called for such an astronomical price.

It was not just Scott and his helpers, the businessmen who heard Jasper's registered capital at the door just now were looking at the man too.

The former thought that Jasper did not know any better, while the latter understood that Jasper had the capability to do this.

"You think you can beat me with this?" Scott tilted his head and grinned cheekily.

"Number 1 calls 17 million!"

The auctioneer's voice rang out after Scott raised his tablet.

"17 million going once, is there anyone willing to offer more?"

Downstream Investment Company had a revaluated value of 16 million. However, auction revaluations were normally 10 to 20 percent lower than the market value, otherwise there would be no point in an auction. Therefore, it was not shocking to see the price reaching 17 million.

Scott sneered at Jasper after calling his price.

“Weren’t you rich? Didn’t you want to challenge me? Come one then! Did you lose your voice?”

Scott laughed out loud.

Jasper was currently telling Baz something.

The former looked casual and calm, while the latter had an expression of shock and disbelief.

After talking, Jasper immediately stood up.

He straightened his clothes and told Baz, “I still have a few things to do so I’ll be leaving first. Do you remember what I told you?”

Baz gulped and nodded excitedly.

“Then I’ll get going. I’ll leave this to you.”

Jasper then walked toward the doors with Julian in tow while everyone watched.

“He’s running away?” Scott was stunned and laughed out loud.

“Here I was wondering how powerful you are. But you’re just running away like that?!”

Before Scott could act proud, Baz rose his tablet. “Number 22 calls for 100 million!”

Everyone present was dumbstruck by what they heard.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1288

100 million!

That was a nine digit number, a 1 followed by eight zeroes.

Somerland had a population of more than one billion, but ninety nine point nine percent of its people could never get their hands on so much money within their entire lives.

As everyone sucked in a cold breath, the meeting room door coincidentally creaked as Jasper opened it.

His footsteps slowly moved further away, but the sound of the attendees' thumping hearts in the room only grew louder.

Once the door closed, the venue erupted into chaos. Everyone began talking among themselves.

'100 million!'

'That's 100 million Somer Dollars!'

'Not even the net worth of everyone in the room equals such a sum!'

Even Scott was stunned.

He did not even have the chance to wipe the prideful expression off his face before his expression froze.

He even doubted if he had heard correctly.

Scott shot to his feet and shouted, "What the f*ck! How much did you bid?"

Jasper had already left, so Scott could only stare at Baz and ask.

Baz was completely unafraid.

He shrugged and touched the bandage over his head. Seeing how Scott looked pretty much the same as he did, Baz replied calmly, "I bid 100 million."

Scott's heart raced and his breath quickened. The Covington family would have to sell everything they had to take out 100 million Somer Dollars.

Yet, Jasper had so easily taken this money out to acquire Downstream Investment Company.

'What? Was he kidding?'

At this moment, Scott felt like some bigshot had destroyed his plans while he and his group of people were playing house.

"What did your boss tell you, brat? Don't play around, you're going to have to pay the price you called out! Otherwise, both you and your boss will die tragically!"

Baz thought back to what Jasper told him when he heard Scott's sinister tone and replied with a smile, "My boss told me that he doesn't have time to waste with you people here. He's calling 100 million right off the bat to deter you people."

"Of course."

Baz added with an extremely domineering smile.

"My boss also said that if you continue to raise to price, then we'll also call for 200 million. Up until you cannot take it anymore."

Everyone present exchanged a look when they heard him.

'There's more?'

'This 100 million is already beyond our capabilities, okay?!'

Scott ground his molars.

He had originally planned to crush Jasper with money during this auction.

However, before he could do anything, Jasper immediately pulled 100 million out to completely overwhelm him.

Indignance, disbelief, and fear flooded Scott's chest. He only had one thought in mind now.

"Find out who he is! Right now! He's got to be someone powerful otherwise he can't possibly pull out 100 million just like that!"

"I don't care who he is, but I'll make him pay for humiliating me!"

In the quiet room, the auctioneer gulped and asked carefully, “100 million going once. Is... is there anyone willing to offer more?”

This sentence had everyone who was shocked by Scott’s wretched expression snap back to reality. Everyone shook their heads and sighed. Who were they kidding? This was 100 million! No one could afford to call for a higher price.

This was an auction of Tefa City City Government’s assets. No one would dare to risk angering the government by joking about this.

Was 100 million a lot?

Life at The Top – Chapter 1289

Not really.

Jasper was in a great mood as he rode back to the hotel. There was a reason why JW Capital only did angel investments and had rarely been involved in the country’s securities financial market.

This was because JW Capital, whom Jasper was the majority shareholder of, did not have a financial license.

It was almost impossible to get such a thing.

Most importantly, there was no way anyone could get their hands on it without the support of state funds. Supervision over this licensing would only be founded slightly later on, after 2008.

Jasper could involve himself in the securities market secretly, and like a majority of financial companies, the government would normally turn a blind eye.

However, Jasper did not plan to take this risk. Fortunately, while he was picking up scraps in Tefa City, he had managed to come across this license.

He had hit jackpot with this opportunity.

Forget 100 million, Jasper would be willing to pay 500 million for this company and license.

However, Jasper was now curious about why Downstream Investments had a license this time despite it not having one during his past life.

Jasper had no idea of what had changed in these two timelines. He had just gotten back to the hotel when Baz arrived soon after.

It had cost 100 million.

While it was not his money, Baz still felt extremely giddy to be the one to call out the price. It was a great feeling.

“Scott didn’t raise the price?” Jasper asked.

Baz laughed out loud and replied, “Raise the price? Mr. Laine, you didn’t see how sour he looked then. It’s like he swallowed a fly. 100 million crushed him completely, he doesn’t have enough money to raise the price even if he wanted to.”

“That’s good, then,” Jasper nodded and said in satisfaction.

After the excitement passed, Baz sat down and said, “Mr. Laine, I originally thought that we’d be able to acquire this business for around 10 million, but we ended up spending 100 million. I’m afraid we’d make a loss.”

Jasper shook his head and replied, "It won't be a loss. We'll make huge profits with this acquisition."

Baz was stunned and he did not understand what Jasper meant.

However, before he could ask about this, a round of fierce knocks was heard at the door.

Baz immediately got up to open the door.

Before Baz could see who was at the door after opening it, someone outside kicked Baz back into the room.

Baz yelled and staggered backward, cupping a hand over his stomach. He turned to shout to Jasper, "Mr. Laine, Scott has brought some people over!"

Jasper's gaze grew cold, and he went to help Baz into a chair.

At the same time, Scott entered the room.

He looked at Jasper sinisterly.

“Wow, Jasper, how could you lie to me like that? JW Company’s owner?!”

Jasper looked at Scott expressionlessly and asked calmly, “Who kicked him just not?”

Scott had a group of burly lackeys behind him as he shouted, “Motl1erf*cker, I’m talking you! How dare you change the subject?”

“I’m asking you, who kicked him?”

Jasper stared at Scott and shouted fiercely.

Scott was stunned. He did not expect Jasper’s voice to be louder than his.

Just then, a strong man move forward from behind Scott and snickered. “I kicked him. Why? You don’t like it? Then come and fight me!”

Scott sneered and said, “You’re so arrogant because your lackey can fight, right, Jasper? This is the best fighter in Tefa City’s Tiger Head Gang. Let’s see who the better fighter is, hmmm?”

“Julian, break his legs!” Jasper said icily.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1290

When it came to Jasper Laine’s character. This man was easy to talk to most of the time.

This was true so long as you did not step over the line. Such was the case with Henry before and Baz now. Henry was one of the few true friends Jasper had in this life.

Therefore, Jasper valued him a lot.

As for Baz Willis. Jasper more so wished to repay the man for the kindness he had showed in Jasper’s past life.

Jasper might not have survived until he got reincarnated if not for Baz. He might have chosen to kill himself after being hounded by online loans and loan sharks asking for repayment.

For a long time, Baz had also counseled Jasper as an elder. Because of all this, Baz was someone of unique importance to Jasper as well. There was no way Jasper could tolerate it when he saw Baz get beaten up by the people Scott brought over.

Meanwhile, Julian did not think twice after he received Jasper's instruction.

Once Julian moved, the scene immediately turned into a mess.

It took less than two moves from Julian for this number one fighter of the Tiger Head Gang to be kicked onto the ground.

Julian placed a foot over the man's right leg and pressed down.

They heard the crack of bone fracturing followed by the man's tragic wails. A split second later, the room erupted into utter chaos.

"How dare you, Jasper!" Scott was terrified. He did not expect Jasper to be so protective and fierce.

It was just his subordinate. A kick for a kick should have been enough, yet Jasper broke the attacker's legs!

Scott did not understand. Someone like him would never understand how much Jasper valued the people beside him.

This was also why Scott would never have any subordinate who was truly loyal to him.

“So what if I dare?”

Jasper’s voice was strong.

He looked at Scott sinisterly and said, “Be it you, Scott, or your Covington family, I urge you to do your best. I’ve seen more tricks than you can think of since I started my business and paved this path of mine.”

“But if you touch the people beside me, then I can tell you right now. An eye for an eye? I promise no one will be able to stop me and protect you!”

Baz heard Jasper say this as he stood behind the man. Despite the hand over his stomach and his face paling in pain, the man’s gaze was filled with gratitude.

At this moment, Baz would not f hesitate to do whatever Jasper asked.

“F*ck you, Jasper!”

Scott shouted and stamped his feet.

“This is Tefa City, not Nauritus City! Don’t think that just because you’re rich, that it means you can do whatever you want! The Covington family’s power in Tefa City is beyond what you can possibly imagine! Do you really want to go against me?!”

Jasper sneered and replied, “Go against you? Did you only just realize? Or did you think we could be friends? Who are you to be my friend?”

Scott’s complexion paled at Jasper’s words.

In all honestly, while he had come to the hotel room thinking victory would soon be his, he did actually feel afraid once he witnessed Jasper’s ferocity.

More importantly, Jasper was not the slightly wealthy businessman he initially thought the man was.

Jasper was a businessman, yes, but the man was truly wealthy. This wealth could completely destroy the Covington family.

Scott's only advantage was that Tefa City was the Covington family's territory, and he had home advantage.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1291

However, this advantage meant nothing to Jasper.

Scott's expression changed and he suddenly took a deep breath to say, "Look, Jasper. I admit that I shouldn't have hurt your men. Now we're even."

"I came here to talk business with you. How about we negotiate, hmm?"

Jasper replied calmly, "Business? I've never seen anyone who claims to be here for business start beating people up once they walk through the doors."

"Jasper!"

Scott raised his voice.

"You might be rich and JW Company might be powerful, but you spent 100 million to acquire Downstream Investment Company in Tefa City! You'll gain nothing from making an enemy out of me! Don't you at least know that?"

Jasper arched his brow.

Scott's mind was racing right now.

It seemed like he was not a complete newbie.

"Sure, then. How do you want to do business?" Jasper asked calmly.

Scott's expression turned excited when he saw that Jasper willing to negotiate.

"Simple. I want half of Downstream Investment Company's shares. Then I'll make sure that Downstream's business goes smoothly here in Tefa City and no one will dare to cause us any trouble."

Jasper chuckled when he heard Scott.

Scott felt his heart quake in fear at Jasper's chuckle and asked darkly, "What are you laughing at? What is the meaning of this?"

“I’m laughing at how unrealistic your dream is.” Jasper had never planned to partner with Scott since the beginning.

He understood trust-fund children like Scott too well. All these people thought of all day was how to lie and scam. The only reason they succeeded was that the people they negotiated with before were terrified of their familial background and strength. As time passed and the number of businesses under their control grew, these trust-fund children began to take their success for granted.

However, this act was useless in front of Jasper.

“I spent 100 million to acquire that company and you’re just going to ask me for half the shares just like that? Who do you think you are?”

Scott’s expression grew cold when he heard Jasper’s sentence.

“Jasper, don’t forget that Tefa City still belongs to my Covington family. If my family disagrees, do you think you’ll be able to do business here as you wish?”

Jasper chuckled and replied coldly, “That’s an easy problem to solve. If you disagree, then I’ll get rid of you. If the Covington family disagrees, then I’ll get rid of them. Won’t all my problems be solved then?”

Scott widened his eyes at what he heard.

“Are you f*cking crazy, Jasper? Who do you think you are? Do you really think you’re some kind of god?”

“I’m not God, just a normal businessman.” Jasper stared at Scott and said firmly and strongly. “A businessman that refuses to be exploited by you!”

“As I said just now, I’ve already acquired the company and I will start doing business. There’s no way I’d give you half of the shares just because you asked. Go ahead and show me what other tricks you have then, I’ll be waiting!”

Scott raised his hand angrily and pointed at Jasper, “Fine! Fine, then! You win this time!”

“But I’ll tell you too. I won’t let that stupid company of yours do business here in Tefa City, otherwise I might as well f*cking die!”

Jasper narrowed his eyes and looked at Scott icily before he said calmly, “Alright, then. Let’s fight.”

“From what I remember, the Covingtons are in the real estate business, right? Half of Tefa City’s buildings were constructed by you. Good, I also have business in the real estate industry and I have a few buildings here in Tefa City.”

Jasper then pulled out his phone to call Sean, the person in charge of the real estate company.

“Check all our real estate yet to be sold in Tefa City. Any customer willing to purchase housing contracts will be gifted renovation worth 10% of their housing price, it can be used as a discount off the base housing price or redeemed for free renovation and electrical appliances.”

“And if our customers coming to buy our real estate come with their contracts with the Covington family’s real estate company, pay their compensation fee and raise the renovation bonus to 20%.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1292

Sean was stunned for a moment when he heard Jasper’s instructions.

However, Sean was a smart man and he knew one thing. The company was Jasper’s, so the man had complete say over what happened within it.

After understanding that, Sean immediately replied. “I understand, Mr. Laine! I’ll get to it immediately!”

After hanging up the phone, Jasper then turned to look at Scott’s wretched expression and said calmly, “The Covington family doesn’t only do real estate, right? It’s also one of the top three suppliers of non-staple foods in Southeast Province, hmm?”

Then, Jasper made another call. This time to Dawson.

“Uncle Schuler, please take all non-staple food provided by the Covington family off the shelves in the group’s supermarkets.”

Far in Nauritus City, Dawson was in a meeting when he received the call and smiled as he replied, “Alright. I’ll send word immediately.”

As the largest chain supermarket brand, Schuler Supermarkets had way too many suppliers begging for a partnership.

It had gotten to the point where any product of an enterprise would surely be profitable the moment it was sold on Schuler Supermarkets’ shelves.

Hence, it was no problem to pull one brand of non-staple food off the shelves.

Jasper put the phone down and looked at Scott, the man's face devoid of color. Jasper demanded calmly, "Tell me what other industries this dominating Covington family in Tefa City is involved in."

The corner of Scott's mouth twitched. He could not say anything, but cold sweat began to bead over his forehead.

He was just the third generation of the Covington family. His grandfather and his dad still presided over the family.

The person in charge now might be his dad, but even his dad was just a junior in the elder's eyes.

Scott had never imagined he would bring his family so much trouble.

"Mr. Laine, the Covington family also does food and beverages, and they have a few big restaurants and hotels in Tefa City."

Baz suddenly spoke up.

He wanted nothing more than to screw Scott over, so he naturally would not pass this chance up.

Scott shivered when he heard Baz.

He looked at Baz resentfully as if he wanted to rip the man to shreds.

“F&B and hotels, huh? I’m not involved in those two industries.”

Scott felt relieved when he heard Jasper, but this relief had only lasted a few seconds before Jasper continued to talk.

“But I’m close with a few restaurant owners in Nauritus City. It shouldn’t be any problem to invest in them and ask them to start a trade war with the Covington family’s food and beverage enterprise.”

“As for hotels, the person in charge of Hilton Hotels in Southeast Province contacted me a few days ago and asked if I wanted to work together. I planned on declining, but now that I think about it, it doesn’t seem like a bad idea to open a JW Hilton here in Tefa City, wouldn’t you say?”

Scott lost all hope when he heard this.

“You’re crazy, Jasper!” Scott shouted.

“Just what did I do to offend you, to the point that you’re willing to go so far and target the Covington family?! Even if you succeed, you’re still going to end up paying a lot of money!”

Jasper chuckled and asked, “Is this a lot of money?”

“If I manage to completely get rid of the Covington family from Tefa City, then the space you will leave in the market will easily earn me back everything I initially paid.”

Scott’s eyes were filled with fear as he shouted at Jasper, “So you’re going to fight the Covington family to the death over something so insignificant?”

Jasper replied calmly, “You think that this is something insignificant. You also think it’s only right that I give you half of Downstream Investment Company’s shares, don’t you?”

“ ... ”

Scott had nothing to say now. At this moment, Scott’s phone rang.

Seeing his dad’s phone number on the display, Scott shivered as a bad feeling engulfed him.

Scott ignored the strong desire to throw the phone and hide, then mustered the courage to pick up the phone.

“Scott, who the f*ck did you offend?!”

Scott’s dad, Emmet, the current spokesperson of the Covington family, shouted over the line.

Scott’s heart shook and he asked palely, “Dad, how... How did you know?”

“How did I know?! How long more do you plan on hiding this from me? The people below me say that you’ve offended the owner of JW Company, Jasper Laine!”

Scott wailed and replied, “Not just offended. He called his subordinates in front of me just now. Not only is he fighting us in the real estate industry, but he also wants to take our company’s products off the supermarket shelves. He also said he’s going to attack us in F&B and the hotel industry.”

“Dad, he’s trying to uproot the Covington family!”

Emmett immediately roared when he heard Scott.

“You b*stard! I always told you to keep a low profile, didn’t I? Don’t think that because you’re born in the Covington family that it means you’re on top of the world. There are tons of people outside more powerful than the Covington family. Who gave you the courage to offend JW Company?!”

“Do you even know what JW Company controls in the Southeast Province?!”

Scott shivered and replied, “I didn’t think the consequences would be so severe. I was just thinking of gaining some benefits.”

“Where are you now?!” Emmett asked icily.

Scott glanced at Jasper guilty and replied, “I’m in Jasper’s room in Tefa Hotel.”

“You f*cking went to look for him?! How bold of you!”

Emmett wanted to beat Scott up.

“Give Jasper the phone!”

Scott did not dare to take his own sweet time and immediately passed the phone over to Jasper.

Jasper took the phone and said calmly, "This is Jasper Laine."

"Mr. Laine, I'm sure there's got to be a misunderstanding in this," Emmett immediately humbled himself as he spoke.

"I'm Scott's Dad, Emmett Covington. I'll make sure to teach that useless son a lesson for offending you, so please go easy on him."

Jasper replied calmly, "Your son tried to scam me and hit my men twice. Am I supposed to just move on from that?"

Emmett fell silent for a moment before he replied, "Mr. Laine, there are some things that cannot be said clearly over the phone. How about this? I'll set up a feast at my house tonight just for you, Mr. Laine. Our old master is also very interested in talking to a young entrepreneur like you, Mr. Laine. What do you think?"

'You're involving your old master?'

Jasper smiled and replied, "Since you've invited me, Mr. Covington, then it's only right I attend."

Jasper ended the call and tossed the phone back to Scott before saying calmly, "You can leave now. I'll go to your house tonight."

Scott's expression changed and he wanted to threaten Jasper further, but he did not dare to do so after he thought back to how furious his dad was. The man must have wanted to skin him alive.

"Then I'll wait for you at home!"

Scott said before running away without looking back.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1293

After Scott left, Jasper brought Baz to the hospital.

Baz felt despondent, having gone to the hospital two days in a row.

Thank goodness that a checkup revealed that there was not too big a problem.

“Don’t try to take the hit head on if it happens again in the future. Protecting yourself is the most important thing here,” Jasper reminded.

Baz smiled wryly and replied, “I didn’t know that Scott would have his people start attacking me the moment he walked through the door. He caught me off guard.”

Jasper frowned slightly and said, “I’ll do my best to get rid of the problem with the Covington family so that you will have a good environment to work in.”

Baz was stunned for a moment before he quickly replied, “Mr. Laine, do you want me to stay in Tefa City?”

“Why? Do you not dare to do so?” Jasper smiled.

Baz frantically replied, “It’s not that I don’t dare. I’m not afraid of anything, except screwing this up.”

“You were the one who found out about Downstream Investment Company and you’re the one who acquired the company. Now that I’ve bought it, I’m not going to let you run away so easily.”

Jasper joked, then told Baz about what he had been thinking these days.

“I plan to hand Downstream Investment Company over to you for management.”

Despite already guessing that this was the case, Baz still instinctively rejected Jasper when he heard the man’s proposition.

“No can do, Mr. Laine. I don’t have enough experience and I’m just a normal employee at the company. I won’t be able to suddenly manage a whole company.”

Jasper might not have trusted anyone else, but Baz was different.

In his past life, Baz had completely transformed Downstream Investment Company into something big on his own with no one else to guide him.

Not to mention that throughout this period of observation, Jasper had also asked Chad and the investment department what they thought about Baz’s performances. Jasper was certain that Baz had the potential to be successful again.

“Don’t worry, I’ll transfer some people over to help you to manage the company. Talk to whoever you need to bring over from the investment department. As long as they’re willing then they can immediately come to work here.

“As for experience, no one is born with the knowledge on how to manage a company. This is something you have to slowly familiarize yourself with.

“I can give you money.”

“I can give you manpower.”

“I can also give you time.”

Jasper then patted Baz’s shoulder and said, “But confidence is something I cannot give. Confidence is something you need to develop on your own. I trust that you can do well, but you have to trust yourself too.”

Baz looked at Jasper excitedly. He opened his mouth, and after much hesitation, finally asked the question he held in his heart.

“Mr. Laine, why do you value me so much?”

Baz knew he was not some genius. In fact, he had been on the receiving end of harsh words since he was young, and he was not someone who was loved by all.

However, everything changed after he met Jasper. Jasper seemed to value him more than others. Not only did Jasper give him, someone with no capability, experience, or academics, the best job opportunity, but Jasper was also handing a company he acquired with 100 million over to him to manage.

Jasper's act of kindness was so great that Baz could not help but doubt. 'Why?'

'I'm just a normal person, what about me is so worthy of Jasper's admiration?'

In response to this question, Jasper narrowed his eyes and replied with a fleeting tone that Baz did not quite understand, "There's no specific reason, actually. If I had to come up with one, then I can only say that it's fate."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1294

When Jasper lost hope due to his poverty, after he fought with Penelope and was left in disdain and humiliated, or forced to desperation because of his debtors in his past life, it was always Baz who helped him financially and physically.

He had previously asked Baz about he did this as well. To which Baz answered, 'because of fate'.

Jasper could not confirm if it was truly fate, but he knew that as a person, he had to repay this kindness. Even if it was kindness from his past life.

It still had to be repaid.

“Alright Rest well and go back to the hospital after you finish both bags of saline drips. Remember to eat dinner, I can’t eat with you since I’m going to the Covington family,” Jasper looked at the time and got up to say.

Baz immediately looked up and said, “Are you really going to the Covington family house, Mr. Laine? They’ve got a bad reputation.”

Jasper pointed at Julian gleefully and said, “Don’t forget that even if they choose to fight, there’s no one in Tefa City who can hold Julian back.”

With Baz settled, Jasper left the hospital and immediately had Julian drive them to the Covington family residence.

Rose Garden, Tefa City's largest community for the wealthy, also belonged to the Covington family. The Covington family had taken out a large portion from the best area of land in Rose Garden and left it for themselves.

Jasper had just arrived at the villa entrance and gotten out of the car when he saw a middle-aged man waiting with Scott at the door.

"Mr. Laine, I've heard a lot about you."

With frays of white hair around his temple, Emmett looked authoritative. He wore a cashmere sweater over his shirt and looked like an experienced middle-aged businessman.

Emmett walked over with a large smile, reached out to shake Jasper's hand, and engaged in small talk.

Seeing how polite Emmett was, Jasper did not put on a dark expression nor act arrogant in front of him. With a gentle smile, Jasper greeted, "It's nice to meet you, Mr. Covington."

The two shook hands and began to chat among themselves.

From afar, Scott's gaze darkened at the sight. His lips pulled into a disdainful sneer.

He hated these people the most. Despite knowing that they were enemies, these people still smiled and pretended to be friends. How sly.

"The old master isn't young anymore and it's not easy for him to move around, that's why he didn't greet you outside. The wind's strong out here, so perhaps we could talk more inside?" Emmett told Jasper happily.

"Who am I to request an elder to welcome me at the door? It's only right I meet him inside."

Jasper then followed the Covington father-son duo with Julian in tow as he entered the villa.

The villa was decorated luxuriously, with expensive furniture and ornaments everywhere.

Jasper was not the same poor boy he used to be. One glance was all it took for him to get a rough idea of how much everything cost. As expected of Tefa City's wealthiest family, the Covington family's renovation on this villa had to cost at least four to five million. Four to five million during the year 2001.

Emmett brought Jasper into a small tea room. Upon entering, Jasper saw a skinny but energetic old man sitting behind the coffee table.”

“Greetings, Old Master Covington, I am Jasper,” Jasper took the initiative to greet the fellow.

Gerard laughed out loud and pointed at the chair before him, “Come, young man. Come sit and drink tea with this old man.”

Jasper narrowed his eyes slightly at Gerald’s lack of movement before taking a seat opposite him.

At this moment, Emmett gave Scott a look and the two walked out of the tea room together.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1295

The father-son duo walked out from the tea room together and arrived at the study room upstairs.

“Close the door.”

Emmett's expression now no longer showed any traces of the casual smile he had on when he chatted with Jasper downstairs. Instead, it was dark and sinister now.

Scott felt his heart drop as a bad premonition filled his heart. However, he had no other choice than to muster the courage and close the door.

He had just turned back around after closing the door when a large hand struck his face. Scott did not have the chance to say anything.

Slap!

A clear slap landed square across Scott's face.

Scott was stunned by the slap and cupped his face. Ignoring the ringing in his ear, he shouted angrily, "Dad! What'd you hit me for no reason? Are you crazy?"

Emmett glared at Scott and scolded, "I'm hitting you for no reason?"

"The trouble you brought me is currently sitting downstairs and your grandfather and I have to come out and deal with him for you! We don't even know if we can resolve this issue yet! And you're telling me that I hit you for no reason? Even when you're the one who caused this mess?"

Scott's hand still cupped his face and he said indignantly, "You guys looked fine when you talked, though? How much trouble can it be? Do you have to exaggerate?"

Emmett became even angrier when he heard this, and he wanted to slap his son again.

"Looked fine when we talked? What the hell do you know?"

"JW's subsidiaries have already begun a combined attack on us! I've already received negative reports due to the activities of their real estate projects in targeting us!"

"We've already lost a few dozen customers people were willing to disregard the deposits they had given us and opt to buy property from JW Real Estates instead! A few of them even purposefully put their deposit with us, only to take the contract to JW Real Estates and ask for a discount!"

"Just today, we lost dozens of customers and a few million Somer Dollars! News will begin to spread, and soon, the entirety of Tefa City will know about this too! Who's going to buy our housing then? Everyone's going to run to JW Real Estates!"

"Schuler Supermarkets also sent us a statement saying that they've taken all our products off the shelf in their supermarkets all over the country. They're requesting that we ship our products back within three days, so that's at least another ten million worth of loss!"

“Let me ask you, do you still think that it’s no big deal?!”

Scott was stunned when he heard Emmett.

Scott felt relieved when he saw Jasper make the calls earlier today, since he thought that Jasper was just trying to scare him.

“How... how could that be? He’s losing money too by doing this. Isn’t he afraid that he’ll make a loss?” Scott gasped.

Emmett sneered, “You moron. Who cares about that once the fight truly begins? With Jasper’s wealth, he can afford to attack us at the cost of his own money.”

“How long do you think the Covington family can survive against Jasper in terms of wealth? Less than a week I tell you!”

“That b*stard! And to think that despite how happy go lucky he looks, he’s actually so cruel! How can he even laugh and smile?” Scott clenched his jaw and said.

“This is what a scheming person looks like! Unlike you, who shows every single emotion you feel on your face. You’d only get screwed over once you go outside!”

Emmett glared at Scott harshly. "I told you before to do some business and stop playing around with your idle friends. How capable do you think you are?"

"What are you without the Covington family, your grandfather, or me, your dad? You think those useless friends of yours would still pay any attention to you?"

"Jasper's almost your age! He's younger, in fact! But look at him now. He makes a move and, forget me, even your grandfather has to talk to him nicely. This is what a capable person looks like. You bringing your idle friends around and stirring up a ruckus wherever you go is an embarrassment!"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1296

“I... I didn't think it would turn out like this either. What do we do now?”

Scott was truly terrified now.

“Your grandfather is talking to him in person now. Let's see how it goes first. If he's willing to compromise, then the Covington family is willing to share some of our profits. But if he truly wants to fight us to the end, then the Covington family will not surrender so easily either!”

In the tea room downstairs.

“Drink some tea whenever you're free, young man. Tea clears the mind and soothes the soul, there's no need for so much anger all the time.”

Gerald passed Jasper a cup of tea.

“People are all driven by interests. There's no need to go to such extreme lengths.”

Jasper took the cup of tea and had a small sip before he replied calmly, "Mr. Covington, I never intended to oppress people with my power. Most of the time, my actions are merely a form of self defense when I'm forced to fight back. The same goes for this particular incident."

Gerald's eyebrow twitched and he said solemnly, "Scott's been spoiled rotten. But isn't a small lesson enough when a child's made a mistake? There's no need to strain our relationship."

Jasper smiled and replied, "Mr. Covington, what if I was a poor man, then? Or perhaps only had a few million Somer Dollars worth of assets. Would I still get the chance to drink tea with you here after Scott threatens me?"

Gerald's smile slowly disappeared and he said, "You're just making excuses."

Jasper replied calmly, "Excuse or explanation, the situation's already occurred. The Covington family invited me today and I agreed to come. So, let's get straight to the point."

"Alright."

Gerald nodded and said expressionlessly, "I've already seen the extent of your capabilities and I admit that you are powerful. Frankly speaking, the Covington family cannot afford to continue fighting like this. What are your demands for you to stop attacking?"

“Simple.”

Jasper looked at Gerald and said, “I don’t want money, nor do I want your family’s property. All I ask is that from today onward, Scott leaves and never returns to Tefa City again.”

Gerald was enraged by what he heard.

“You’re going too far, Jasper!

“The Covington family only ever has a sole heir. Right now, Scott is the only son. What difference would it be between having him leave Tefa city and uprooting the Covington family entirely?!”

Jasper replied calmly, “I don’t care whether the Covington family gets uprooted or not, nor does that have anything to do with me. But I don’t want to see Scott in Tefa City again.”

Gerald clenched his jaw and looked at Jasper icily. “I can put in a word to pay you 5 million worth of compensation. I also have a plot of land by the borders separating the South Mountain area and Nauritus City. It’s quite an expensive plot of land, and I can gift it to you.”

“If you’re willing to sell a portion of Downstream Investment Company’s shares, then I can double the price I suggested just now.”

Jasper looked up gleefully and asked, “Mr. Covington, do I look like someone who lacks money?”

“ ... ”

“Jasper, the Covington family might not be as wealthy as you, but we’ve been in Tefa City for years. Even if we were to be destroyed, you would not come out unscathed. I’ve been in business for decades and I still have a few old friends and acquaintances. Do you truly not plan to show me any respect?”

Jasper furrowed his brows slightly and replied calmly. “I already gave you respect. Otherwise, there’s no way I’d accept the invitation to come to the Covington family villa.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1297

“I’m warning you, Jasper. Downstream Investment Company isn’t something the Covington family wants to buy. There’s someone ever more powerful behind who’s interested in it! You’re only going to get yourself screwed over if you keep acting so stubborn!”

Gerald stared at Jasper and said.

Jasper arched his brow slightly.

Jasper believed what Gerald said since it was likely true. Downstream Investment Company did not come with a license in his past life.

However, it did in this.

Usually, the acquisition of a state fund investment company should not come with a license.

Someone probably pulled a few strings throughout all this.

Only someone with very powerful contacts could include a priceless license along with the sale of a state-funded investment company.

Therefore, Jasper could believe that someone extremely powerful had pulled the strings in question.

The Covington family was certainly not qualified enough to do so.

They were basically an agent in this situation.

Both Scott and Gerald had now brought up purchasing shares of Downstream Investment company.

Hence, it intrigued Jasper when Gerald straightforwardly told him about a more formidable character's involvement.

"I've already acquired Downstream Investment Company, and this is a fact that no one can change. Be it you or this formidable figure you speak of, no one will be taking a dollar of profit from this company. Let alone invest and become a shareholder."

Jasper looked at Gerald and continued calmly, "I'm sure this formidable person has already pulled the strings. But instead of acquiring the business himself, he decided to have your family act as a middle man. So, either this formidable person's got a sensitive identity and cannot appear in person, or he doesn't actually want the company itself. Correct?"

Gerald did not say anything but his heart shook in fear. This Jasper was truly skilled, a few sentences were all it took for him to recount the whole truth.

“No matter what the situation is, the only reason I’d give you what I have is if I don’t want it. If you want to steal it from me, then come and get it.”

Jasper then got up and walked toward the door.

“Either accept my conditions, Mr. Covington, or go and look for this powerful person supporting you. If he manages to defeat me, then there’s nothing I can say. But I, Jasper Laine, have never surrendered to anyone since I started doing business.”

“Just come and try me...”

Jasper did not look at Gerald’s sour expression and immediately left with Julian in tow.

Jasper had just left when the doors to the tea room opened and Emmett entered the room carefully.

“Dad, how’d the talk go?” Emmett asked.

“Horrible,” Gerald replied expressionlessly.

While he had been prepared, Emmett's expression still darkened when he heard the result.

"He doesn't want money or land. The only request he has is for Scott to leave Tefa City forever."

Emmett was enraged when he heard Jasper's condition.

"Bullsh*t! All of the Covington family's foundations are in Tefa City! There's no way we can move elsewhere. We've only got one heir, so what's the difference between that and completely destroying the Covington family?"

"Why would he care?"

Gerald sneered. "If not for your great son, this incident would never have developed to this point. I already asked around, and it was your son who offended others first. This wouldn't have happened otherwise."

Emmett asked bitterly, "Then what do we do now?"

"What else can we do?"

Gerald clenched his jaw and said grimly, "Prepare the car. I need to visit the Marquis."

Emmett was stunned. "Are we really going to tell the Marquis about this? He told us to acquire Downstream Investment Company on his behalf, but not only did we screw up, we even offended Jasper. I'm afraid the Marquis will think that we're incompetent..."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1298

"Do you have a better plan?" Gerald looked at Emmet icily, "Do you plan to fight Jasper head on, or send Scott away?"

Emmett stammered but did not say anything for a long time.

Gerald sighed deeply and said, "Go prepare the car. At least the Duke of the Northwest and I have some history."

"Instead of looking for anyone else, the Marquis came to ask our help on his trip to pay his ancestors respect in Tefa City. This means that there's still a level of closeness to our relationship. We have no one else to turn to but the Marquis right now."

Emmett's eyes lit up and he replied excitedly, "Dad, are you planning to have the Marquis attack Jasper? We'd have nothing to worry about if that's the case! We might not win against Jasper, but he's trash in comparison to the Marquis. The Marquis would be able to get rid of him easily."

The Covington family seemed to have completely given up on negotiating with Jasper over the following few days.

They began to fight back strongly against JW's subsidiaries and Schuler Supermarkets' coordinated attacks.

One had to admit that the Covington family certainly exercised a degree of power and skill as the wealthiest family in Tefa City.

However, JW Company was no longer the weak and cautious company that was too afraid to offend others anymore. In fact, a huge number of people in many industries had to make sure not to anger JW Company.

Not to mention that this fight occurred within the Southeast Province.

To quote a formidable and high status person in Southeast Province, "JW has already made a name for itself."

The Covington family's defense appeared strong, but everyone knew that defeat was only a matter of time. However, both attacking and defending parties had to pay a price whenever there were these business wars. JW Company had used up quite a lot of money during the past few days as well.

Not that Jasper cared.

Ignoring the benefits Jasper would earn once the Covington family was destroyed, the benefits brought by the financial license from Downstream Investment Company alone could replenish ten to twenty times the value of the money lost.

Not to mention that getting rid of the Covington family was a must if he wanted Downstream Investment Company to develop well in Tefa City. These were prices he had to pay.

"Jasper, there's an invitation for you."

Jasper had just ended a video conference with the people over at Nauritus City when Julian brought a bronzed invitation over.

Jasper took it from the man.

It was an invitation to a meal.

Jasper immediately frowned when he saw the sender's name.

This was not a famous name at all, and only a small amount of people knew of him.

However, anyone who heard this name knew what it entailed.

Lionel Alvarado.

Lord Alvarado, the oldest grandson of the Alvarado family, under the Duke of the Northwest.

Jasper only knew of him because he heard his boss Baz boast about him while drunk during his past life.

Within Somerland, the Duke of the Northwest was publicly recognized as a powerful person. The Northwest Alvarado family was extremely powerful and kept a low profile.

The reason why Baz, the owner of a small business, knew about him was because Tefa City was the Alvarado family's ancestral land. Baz had also been lucky enough to see Lord Alvarado from afar when he acquired Downstream Investment Company.

Coupled with the understanding Jasper had of upper class families in this life, Jasper recognized that both the identity and status of Lord Alvarado were on par with Waterhoof City's little prince and Swallow Capital's Brown family's crippled son. They were the outstanding individuals from this younger generation.

These three together were known as the three most brilliant young leaders of Somerland's new millennium. This Lord Alvarado simply kept a lower profile than the other two, so fewer people knew of him.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1299

“Jasper, is there something wrong with this invitation?”

Julian had been following Jasper for a very long time. One could even say that Julian was the person Jasper spent the most time with.

It had gotten to the point where Jasper had the habit of bringing Julian wherever he went.

Therefore, Julian knew Jasper very well, and when he saw how Jasper's expression turn solemn at the sight of the invitation, Julian immediately realized that the situation was more complex than he had initially thought.

"Nothing much." Jasper shook his head.

He did not have the intention to hide things from Julian, but the situation here involved too many people and Jasper did not know where to start with his explanation.

Lord Alvarado's appearance caused Jasper to realize that Tefa City's waters ran deeper than he thought.

He did not have much contact with Lord Alvarado in his past life. Therefore, this sudden invitation was most likely related to his fight with the Covington family. This was coincidentally the worse kind of news for Jasper.

"Tell Baz to speed things up with the headquarters and the staff arrangements. Have him take control of Downstream Investment Company as soon as possible," Jasper said grimly.

Julian grunted his acknowledgement and left to look for Baz.

When he heard the sound of the door closing, Jasper placed the invitation to the side.

This meal would certainly be a dangerous one to attend, but Jasper did not plan to decline.

Many things could not be avoided. Therefore, he might as well attend generously and decide his next course of action after he better understood the situation. Exquisite House was a renowned private kitchen in Tefa City.

Its superior dishes were also accompanied by superior prices.

With an average meal price of 2000 Somer Dollars per person in the year 2001, one would never see a regular salarymen appear in the restaurant.

This meal was arranged to begin at seven pm.

Unlike the bustling everyday restaurant, Exquisite House was completely empty, as it had been bought out for the night.

It took more than just money to buy out a restaurant of such sophistication.

Jasper got out of the car and found a few suited men, who were evidently not servers, staring at him intently from the entrance of Exquisite House.

One of them walked over and asked courteously, yet still conservatively, “Are you Mr. Jasper Laine?”

“I am.” Jasper nodded.

“The Marquis is waiting upstairs, please follow me.” The suited man turned around and pushed open the door after saying this.

There were no traces of any servers in Exquisite House’s dining hall. In place of them were men in black suits standing around casually despite being extremely alert. Each of them occupied strategic points of the Exquisite House and stood protectively at the entrance of the staircase.

On the second floor, at the entrance to a private room, two ladies in elegant traditional clothing reached out to open the door at the same time when they saw Jasper and Julian arrive.

The strong scent of hotpot invaded their nostrils.

A young man was sitting at the end of the round table in the large private room, clearly focused on his food in front of him. There were also two alluring and beautiful women on either side of him, one with a bottle of red wine and the other with a towel.

There was an expressionless man in a suit at each of the room's four corners. It was a grand scene.

Jasper arched his brow slightly.

“There are two good fighters, Jasper.”

Julian whispered quietly.

Jasper nodded. There was nothing surprising about a few good fighters protecting someone as important as Lord Alvarado.

However, the scene did seem rather extravagant.

“You’re here.”

Lord Alvarado said calmly from behind the table. As he was served by two beautiful women, Lord Alvarado did not look up at all as he continued to cook the slices of lamb in the hotpot.

“Come take a seat and eat since you’re here.”

The man’s tone sounded like he was greeting an old friend.

Jasper did not decline, and while the grandiose downstairs and outside the room did not quite match with a hotpot meal, he settled in any way. He walked over to the seat opposite Lord Alvarado and sat down casually.

Even though he sat down, Jasper still did not touch his cutlery.

Instead, he looked at Lord Alvarado closely.

To be honest, Lord Alvarado might be the most attractive man Jasper had ever seen.

With exquisite features, sharp brows, and starry eyes, the man's facial features were arranged in beautiful symmetry. What caught his attention the most was the beauty mole under his left eye, which added a feminine touch to the man's delicate appearance.

The two dressed up women behind him were also extraordinarily beautiful, but they paled greatly in comparison to Lord Alvarado.

'What a shame.'

'That such beauty is found on the features of a man.'

This was the first thought Jasper had when he saw Lord Alvarado.

"Why aren't you eating?" Lord Alvarado realized that Jasper had been staring at him for a long time. However, he seemed used to it and did not express any displeasure. Instead, he asked Jasper kindly.

"I prefer my food spicy," Jasper felt slightly embarrassed and simply picked an excuse.

"My bad, it's an oversight on my part."

Lord Alvarado smiled at Jasper. Even Julian felt slightly defenseless against the beauty of the man, let alone Jasper.

Lord Alvarado turned around to instruct the woman beside him, "Go and ask for a plate of spices."

The woman acknowledged courteously, then she turned and left.

At the same time, Lord Alvarado placed a cooked piece of lamb into his mouth. Lord Alvarado made such a simple action seem completely in tune with his aura.

The man managed to make hotpot seem like a noble delicacy. Lord Alvarado's appearance and charm were genuinely off the charts.

"I don't have a lot of time." Lord Alvarado said as he ate.

"I can only spare some time to talk to you while I eat."

"Let's get straight to the point. The Covington family is just a medium, I'm the one who wanted Downstream Investment Company."

Jasper nodded and replied, "I thought as much."

Lord Alvarado smiled and continued, "I don't like people interrupting me when I speak."

Jasper shrugged.

Lord Alvarado might seem like an easy person to talk to when Jasper walked in, but there was no powerful trust-fund child that was truly easy to talk to.

One would be dead before they it if they fell for a simple façade so easily.

The woman returned and brought Jasper a plate of spices.

Jasper grabbed a piece of lamb to cook it, then dipped it in spices before placing it into his mouth.

'F*ck. I miscalculated. It's really f*cking spicy.'

Life at The Top – Chapter 1300

The hotpot soup bubbled as steam permeated the air. In what seemed like a harmonious environment, Jasper and Lord Alvarado's first meeting was taking place.

“Continuing where I left off, I don't really care too much about Downstream Investment Comp any or the Covington family. They're both toys and insignificant to me.”

Lord Alvarado focused on the hotpot in front of him and said slowly.

“But someone from the Covington family came to complain to me today that you're being too domineering, that you're vying to kill them after you stole their company. I had someone check and the situation's pretty much as they claimed.”

Jasper arched his brow. He did not say anything. Arguing or explaining himself now was not a smart move.

Not to mention that explanations were futile in the adult world. When you had enough power, you could call a deer a 'horse' and someone would still praise you for having great eyesight.

If you were not powerful enough, someone would still call you an idiot no matter how much you explained yourself.

Lord Alvarado was satisfied with Jasper's behavior and continued, "They think that if they complain to me, then I would get rid of you angrily. But they thought wrong."

Lord Alvarado shook his head and said regretfully as if he could not understand the stupidity of the Covington family.

"Think about it. I came back to pay my ancestors respect and rarely got my attention piqued. I even paved the way and all I needed was for someone to help me get it. This was something even idiots could accomplish, yet they still managed to screw it up. Don't they deserve what they have coming?"

Jasper did not say anything.

"Why are you so quiet?" Lord Alvarado asked after a moment.

"You said you don't like being interrupted. And I couldn't be sure if you've finished saying your part," Jasper replied sincerely.

Lord Alvarado was stunned for a bit before he replied, "Interesting. You're a very interesting man."

“Everyone lives for a useful purpose. Even a beggar or a crippled man has something of use. If someone’s completely loss their usefulness, then them staying alive would only be a waste of resources, wouldn’t you say?”

Jasper nodded in agreement in response to Lord Alvarado’s question after he laughed out loud.

“So I won’t care about what happens to the Covington family. Just kill them, I quite like watching scenes like this.”

Lord Alvarado said with a crescent-eyed smile, yet Jasper could not help but feel a chill run down his spine. Under the extraordinary beauty was a truly selfish and cold blooded man.

The Covington family had helped him here and there, yet once they screwed up, he completely disregarded their history.

People like this were the last people you wanted to offend. Jasper had given the matter some thought before he arrived.

Lord Alvarado might interfere and threaten him into ceasing his attack on the Covington family. Or the man would be enraged and turn against him directly.

However, not only did this man allow Jasper to attack the Covington family, he even seemed to anticipate it. This was the last thing Jasper wanted to see.

This showed that Lord Alvarado was an extremely ruthless person and was very difficult to deal with.

“As for you.”

Lord Alvarado chuckled and reached out his hand.

The woman behind him immediately passed him a hot towel.

Lord Alvarado took the towel and wiped his mouth before he tossed it on the woman's hands. Then, he said slowly, “Reputation and image is something that matters to me a lot, and I hate it when someone doesn't want to act accordingly. Jasper, you know you're damaging my reputation here, right?”

This entire time, Jasper had listened as Lord Alvarado talked.

Now that Lord Alvarado was done, it was Jasper's turn to speak.

However, now a choice had suddenly been thrust in front of Jasper.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1301

Either act according to Lord Alvarado's reputation, or completely make an enemy out of him.

Jasper did not say anything nor did Lord Alvarado rush him. The man looked at Jasper patiently with a crescent eyed smile.

Slowly, Jasper took his cutleries and speared a piece of lamb. He dipped it in the spices and slowly put it in his mouth.

A moment later, Jasper frowned slightly.

"It's spicy."

Lord Alvarado's crescent eyed smile did not disappear as he replied, "You were the one who chose to dip the lamb in spices, there is no room for regrets."

Yet Jasper took the dish and poured it all into the hotpot.

This action had Lord Alvarado narrowing his eyes slightly.

Seeing Lord Alvarado narrow his eyes, the four men in the corners of the room turned to look at Jasper icily at the same time.

As if they were about to rip Jasper apart the next second. Behind Jasper, every muscle in Julian's body tensed up and he prepared himself to attack any time.

However, right in the eye of the storm, Jasper took a spoon and a direct sip of the hotpot soup base.

It was aromatic and refreshing. A superb hotpot soup.

"Look, isn't the problem solved now?" Jasper told Lord Alvarado with a crescent eyed smile.

Lord Alvarado stared at the hotpot with a layer of chili oil over it and said calmly, "You're the only one drinking this pot of soup, though."

Jasper shook his head and replied, "Marquis, the hotpot soup is right here. Everyone can drink it if they wish, I won't stop anyone."

“But I don’t like sharing with others,” Lord Alvarado said indifferently.

“Marquis, this spice dish was mine. I poured it into the soup, now everyone can take a share. If I didn’t pour it, then no one can take it from me,” Jasper said calmly.

Staring at Jasper, Lord Alvarado suddenly laughed out loud. “You’re very arrogant.”

“This isn’t arrogance.” Jasper shook his head as he refuted.

“I’m not you, Lord Alvarado, nor am I the little prince, let alone the crippled Brown. I’m just Jasper Laine, someone of insignificant birth. I don’t have powerful uncles to support me, nor capital to inherit from my wealthy parents. Everything I have is something I fought for myself.

“If I didn’t do this, I’d have died on the streets long ago.”

“Haha...”

Lord Alvarado gave a fake chuckle but looked at Jasper indifferently.

“Looks like there’s not much to talk about then. I said I was busy, so with the end of this dinner, comes the end of our conversation as well.”

Lord Alvarado then got up.

Jasper sat in his seat and watched as Lord Alvarado walked toward the door.

He waited until Lord Alvarado was just about to leave before he spoke up.

“Marquis, this is a spice dish worth at least 5 billion. Are you sure you don’t want to try?”

Lord Alvarado suddenly turned around when he heard this and looked at Jasper expressionlessly.

While there was no expression on the man’s face, his utter beauty and attractiveness had Jasper immediately averting his gaze and apologizing for his sins internally at one glance.

“This was still a matter of my reputation until this point. But if you lie to me, it’ll involve my capabilities and this won’t be resolved so easily,” Lord Alvarado said calmly.

Jasper gave a small smile and replied, “In 1 month, there will be a huge ripple throughout the west’s economy. With at least 2 times the return.”

Seeing Lord Alvarado stand motionlessly in place, Jasper smiled and stood with a spoon of slightly red soup and said, “The soup’s right here. Whether you choose to drink it or not depends on you, Marquis.”

Lord Alvarado smiled, one as ethereal as delicate flowers blooming. He waved his hand and said, “Pour the wine.”

The man returned to his seat as he spoke.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1302

An alluring lady strutted over to Jasper’s side and bent forward to pour him wine.

With both glasses poured, Lord Alvarado looked at Jasper in interest as if he was admiring a new toy.

“How sure are you?” Lord Alvarado narrowed his eyes and asked.

“Ninety percent,” Jasper replied.

Delicately defined brows arched and Lord Alvarado smiled. “This isn’t a funny joke.”

“I don’t have the habit of throwing my entire fortune and life out like a joke,” Jasper said.

As if satisfied with this response, Lord Alvarado said with a crescent eyed smile, “Good. This is an offering that suits my reputation. If this succeeds, then you and I can be friends.”

Jasper gave a small smile. “It’s an honor.”

“Interesting.” Lord Alvarado was in a great mood.

He knew that Jasper did not dare to lie to him. Otherwise, instead of being treated to a good round of hotpot, Jasper would be facing the possibility of being cooked in the hotpot

The Northwest Alvarado family had the power to make that happen.

Jasper was a smart man and he knew what choices to make.

So Lord Alvarado did not ask Jasper where his confidence and guarantee came from.

All he wanted was to see was results when the time came.

If it meant Jasper had to manifest it with magic then so be it.

“I’m in a good mood, so here’s a gift from me.”

Lord Alvarado waved his hand. “Bring him in...”

One of the suited men in the corner of the room left courteously.

A moment later, the private room doors were opened and a terrified Scott walked in.

Once he saw Jasper, Scott’s gaze immediately exploded with resentment.

“Jasper, you’re f*cking dead this time!”

Scott shouted arrogantly.

All prior worries he had disappeared once he knew that his family was acquainted with Lord Alvarado.

‘This was Lord Alvarado we’re talking about!’

‘An extremely formidable man!’

‘No matter how low a profile the Alvarado family kept, they were still called the Duke of the Northwest for a reason!’

‘All it’d take is the twitch of a finger for him to get rid of someone like Jasper!’

Thinking that Lord Alvarado had his back, Scott walked over to Jasper with his back straight.

“F*ck you! You probably never expected the Covington family to be Lord Alvarado’s men, huh? Don’t you regret your actions now?”

“Haha! I’m telling you, it’s too late to regret anything now! ”

Jasper looked at an extremely prideful Scott and said calmly, “Why didn’t you tell me you were Lord Alvarado’s man before? We wouldn’t have to get to this point if that were the case.”

Scott took Jasper’s meaningful words as fright.

So he became even more gleeful.

“Who the Hell do you think you are? Who are you to know of Lord Alvarado?”

Scott had a wretched expression on his face. “I’m going to make a fool out of you and kill you! Weren’t you acting prideful just now? Weren’t you arrogant?”

Scott then pointed at Julian behind Jasper and laughed out loud. “Hahaha! I thought your dog was a good fighter? How about you try and bare your teeth in front of Lord Alvarado, huh?”

Scott chuckled pridefully before he ran to Lord Alvarado's side flatteringly and said in a sycophant manner.

"Marquis, this man is a moron. Not only did he steal the company you wanted, but he even said he wants to destroy the Covington family! If I were you, I'd just drag this f*cker out to feed the dogs."

Lord Alvarado turned his head to smile at Scott with crescent eyes.

"Do you know what I hate the most?"

Scott was instinctively stunned when he heard Lord Alvarado.

However, seeing how Lord Alvarado was still smiling at him, Scott did not think the situation could be too bad.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1303

He shook his head dumbly.

Lord Alvarado reached out and waved over the woman behind him.

She immediately handed the bottle of red wine to the Marquis.

It could be seen how familiar she was with what the Marquis was about to do next.

Lord Alvarado took the bottle of wine and suddenly smashed it against Scott's head.

Bang!

The thick bottle shattered and the wine within it splashed, accompanied by Scott's tragic yelp and fresh blood.

Scott cupped a hand over his head as Lord Alvarado took the hot towel from another woman to wipe his hand. The alluring smile on his face did not disappear as he said gently, "I hate it when people swear in front of me."

"Ah! Lord Alvarado, I, I'm sorry! I won't do it again!"

Scott almost got a concussion from the smash and he wailed and begged for mercy, ignoring the splitting pain in his head.

Lord Alvarado then scooped out a bowl of hotpot soup before slowly pouring it over Scott's head.

As the wound met the boiling hot hotpot soup, Scott immediately began to struggle violently like a fish out of water.

“What I hate second most, is when people interrupt me!”

Lord Alvarado did not look at Scott who was wailing in agony after he was done. Instead, he turned to look at Jasper mirthfully. “I've already brought him to you. You decide what to do with him.”

Jasper glanced at how pitiful Scott looked before sighing internally.

Scott was an example Lord Alvarado was using to warn others.

As to who he was trying to warn, who else but Jasper? Lord Alvarado was warning and telling him that he would only meet a more tragic end if he lied.

“Take him away.”

Jasper shook his head.

“He’s already harmless.”

These words had sealed Scott’s fate.

A suited man proceeded to drag Scott who only had the strength to whimper away. The private room was still permeated with the scent of hotpot, but it was no longer as harmonious as it used to be.

Lord Alvarado stood up and said, “I’m very busy, so I’ll be returning once I pay respects to my ancestors tomorrow morning. Someone will pass you my contact information later, understood?”

“I’ll contact you once the time is right, Marquis.” Jasper nodded.

Lord Alvarado smiled in satisfaction, his extraordinary beauty looking utterly alluring.

Without saying more, Lord Alvarado turned and left. An intrigued look flashed through both women's eyes and one of them gave Jasper a name card.

"Mr. Laine, this is the Marquis' personal contact information."

Jasper took the name card and nodded. "Thank you."

With a chuckle, the woman said, "It's the first time I've seen the Marquis so willing to negotiate. You must be very capable, Mr. Laine."

Then she reached out to touch Jasper's chest before she left with the smile of someone who had gotten away with something bad.

The private room immediately was left empty. The corner of Jasper's lips twitched.

Not only did this Lord Alvarado act unusually, but even his maids were uncommon.

"Jasper."

Julian called out and arrived by Jasper's side.

"If we were to fight, I have faith in getting you out unscathed."

Jasper was stunned before he asked with a smile, "Do you think that I've been mistreated because I had no other choice but to bend to Lord Alvarado's will?"

Julian's gaze was murderous as he replied, "Worse come to worst, I'll kill him at the cost of my own life. No matter how powerful he is, there's nothing he can do if he's dead, right?"

Jasper shook his head with a smile, though he was moved by Julian's desire to protect him. He patted Julian's shoulder and said, "Nothing's ever so simple in this world."

"We aren't part of a fairytale where we can do things without consequences. With a company as huge as JW, so what if we manage to flee? The company will still suffer."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1304

"You think that he's too powerful and I have no other choice but to surrender to him."

Jasper had a playful smile on his face.

“It might seem like that, indeed.”

“But what I’m about to do might result in a very severe outcome, and I alone can’t affect the entire market.”

“If not him, I thought about asking the little prince instead. I just didn’t have an opportunity before.”

“But now that we have Lord Alvarado willing to join in, someone just as powerful as the little prince. It might seem like I’m surrendering to him, but aren’t we also using his strengths at the same time?”

Jasper patted Julian’s shoulder again and said intently, “Things are rarely as simple as they seem.”

“Think about it. Sometimes taking a step back and enduring it doesn’t mean I’ve surrendered and admitted defeat. Maybe I’m just leaving more room to run up so I can jump even higher heights.”

Julian fell into thought when he heard Jasper. After a long while, he suddenly realized something.

“I don’t understand these things, but if you say it’s good then it’s good.”

Jasper felt helpless.

...

Since Jasper’s and Lord Alvarado’s dinner, the situation in Tefa City had immediately changed drastically.

The Covington family continued to lose in every fight against JW, and they did not seem to have any ability to defend themselves.

Unlike what passer-by expected, the Covington family’s resistance was not effective, and no one even tried to help them.

The Covington family that once dominated and controlled Tefa City was now facing grave danger with no one to support them.

People more attentive on the matter realized that Scott, the fuse leading to this conflict, had disappeared.

Some said that Jasper had employed hitmen to kill Scott, while some others said that the Covington family had decided to send Scott away to safety. After all, even if the Covington family was defeated, they still needed Scott to continue the bloodline.

Outsiders continued to guess and create rumors of what happened, but no one knew the true specifics.

This conflict lasted for an entire half month.

The Covington family was still fighting with everything they had, but everyone could see that they were doomed to fail. It was only a matter of how soon.

This day, Downstream Investment Company resumed business. More accurately, it should be JW Financial Investment Co., Ltd.

This company was established with JW Capital as its parent company and would take on all investment businesses from JW Capital. Thus leaving JW Capital to be in charge of fundamental businesses like angel funds and risk investment.

“With the establishment of the financial investment company, you’ll be responsible for all JW’s investments in the financial industry, including stocks, securities, funds, bonds, futures, and more.”

In the meeting room, Jasper looked at the group of confident senior executives of the new company in front of him intently.

A majority of these senior executives were capable employees transferred from the investment department in Nauritus City. The others were talents brought over from hunting companies.

After a short pause, Jasper continued, “You all should know how much money the company spent for this, so I have high expectations for all of you.”

“I hope that under Mr. Willis’ lead, you are all able to truly make this company into something great in the future. As I said before, everyone present will benefit from having good business. But if the company makes a loss, there’s not much of a point making do with basic salaries, correct?”

The meeting seemed to affect the people positively on the first day this new company was established.

After a few simple sentences, Jasper handed the stage to Baz.

He was the newly employed person in charge of this new company. Logically and emotionally speaking, Jasper had to give the man enough respect and power. How the company would actually develop depended on Baz now.

Jasper walked out of the meeting room and planned to return to rest when Julian reported something to him. The Covington father-son duo had asked to see him.

Jasper chuckled before he had Julian bring them to the receptionist room.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1305

In the receptionist room, Jasper had not sat down for too long when the Covington father-son duo arrived. This duo was made up of Gerald and Emmett.

As for Scott, he should not have too many chances to appear before Jasper if nothing went wrong.

It had only been half a month, but both Emmett and Gerald looked much older.

This father-son duo that once controlled and dominated the entire Tefa City looked more like old men in their twilight years.

Gerald lost the condescending aura and sharpness he had when drinking tea with Jasper that day. While Emmett's entire back was already hunched forward.

"Mr. Laine."

Gerald greeted him first when the two entered the room. Gone was the elder and youth of that day, replaced now with a respectful 'Mr. Laine.'

"Please sit."

Jasper did not humiliate them as the victor but rather talked to them respectfully and gently.

Gerald and Emmett sat opposite Jasper.

Jasper had someone make a pot of tea. After the hot tea was brought over did Jasper tell Gerald with a smile, "The facilities here are simpler, Mr. Covington, nor do we have tea as good as the ones you serve. I hope you don't mind."

Gerald chuckled wryly and replied humbly, "It's an honor for homeless people like us to drink tea with you, Mr. Laine."

Jasper leaned against the sofa and said calmly, "There's no need to insult me like this, Mr. Covington. Everything that happens today is the result of a prior cause."

Gerald sighed and replied, "I didn't mean to insult you, Mr. Laine. My words are genuine."

"Mr. Laine, I bring my son Emmett over shamelessly today to beg for mercy and our lives."

Emmett then continued, "Yes, Mr. Laine. There was never any deep hatred between us, to begin with, and Scott's already gone crazy. We've suffered our losses, so please let us go. I promise I'll immediately arrange for him to leave Tefa City and never appear again."

Jasper sipped his tea and replied calmly, "Did Lord Alvarado give up on you?"

Both Emmett and Gerald's expressions darkened at what they heard.

They would not have met such an end if Lord Alvarado stepped in to help them.

"We're sorry, Mr. Laine."

Gerald suddenly stood up and bowed to Jasper deeply. The man had tears down his face when he looked up again.

“I’m already old and I have no regrets. But I hope that you could let my son and grandson live, Mr. Laine. I have no qualms against losing all my fortune, I only wish that the two of them can live peacefully for the rest of their lives.

No matter how innately crafty Gerald was, he meant everything he said now.

Jasper looked at Gerald and felt pity for the man with a head full of white hair.

“Dad!”

Emmett stood up regretfully.

Jasper remained silent.

Gerald and his son did not dare to say anything when Jasper did not, so they waited for his verdict.

After a long moment, Jasper finally said calmly, “Today marks the end of JW’s attack on the Covington family. I’ll allow the Covington family to keep their properties in the food and beverage and hotel industries within Tefa City.”

“Sell everything else. You’ve worked your whole life, Mr. Covington, it’s time you took some of the money and lived the rest of your life in retirement.”

Both Gerald and his son deflated when they heard Jasper, feeling extremely pathetic. They knew that doing so would remove them from the list of wealthy families in Tefa City. They would be nothing more than a slightly rich family in the future.

While they would not be living in grandeur anymore, they would definitely be able to live comfortably. At least, their bloodline was saved.

“Thank you, Mr. Laine.’

Life at The Top – Chapter 1306

A moment later, the Covington father-son duo left the receptionist area and immediately walked out of JW Financial Investment Co., Ltd.'s office.

“Dad, is there really nothing we can do? What, what about Scott? Is he useless now?” Emmett asked sorrowfully.

Gerald waved his hand lethargically and despondently as she said, “This is already the best result we can ask for. At least Jasper isn't going to completely kill us off.”

“Do as he says and don't pull any tricks. There's no point. The Covington family is alone now, we're no longer as we used to be.”

“If you're willing, then give birth to another son. If you're not, then find a wife for Scott. Her family might not be as well off, but it's enough if she's willing to accept a crazed Scott.”

“It won't be difficult to find a girl like that. But no matter what, we have to continue the Covington family bloodline.”

“These properties might be able to still keep on for a few more years after I pass, but everything in the future will depend on the karma of our ancestors and if our descendants are hardworking. I’m already old, and I can’t manage so much anymore.”

“I understand.” Emmett looked at his old father who had lost all energy and resembled a walking corpse. He replied while suppressing the sorrow he felt.

Tefa City’s number one family for the past few decades, the Covington family, now completely walked off the stage of history.

From today onwards, Tefa City had a normal Covington family that did not bother themselves with others’ businesses and only managed their own small ones and lost a domineering Covington family.

This would continue until Gerald passed and Emmett’s second son grew into an adult and took over his father’s business with the ambition to further develop it, but this was another story to be told.

With the Covington family dealt with, it would still take a bit more time before the new company was able to operate on its own.

This marked the end of Jasper’s business in Tefa City so he left and returned to Nauritus City. The first thing Jasper did once he returned to Nauritus City was to gather the company’s cash flow.

“The company’s book of accounts shows a current cash flow of 569 million. To not interfere with the company’s operations, you can take our 300 million worth of funds at most.”

Jasper felt his heart squeeze at Wendy’s words.

Wendy replied exasperatedly, “There’s nothing we can do about it. You spent 100 million on acquiring the financial investment company, then the follow up investments that company made also cost us quite a bit. More importantly, the business fight with the Covington family also lost us quite a bit of money. 300 million is already the maximum amount of funds you can take out after setting aside the necessary cash flow to run the business.”

Jasper rubbed his temple and was too embarrassed to meet Wendy’s chiding gaze. He spoke up, “It’s still not enough. What’s the situation with the other subsidiaries and branches?”

Wendy replied, “The real estate company definitely won’t be able to spare any. Sean even sent me a report some time ago asking for 30 million from the headquarters. He said that there’s a plot of land in Waterhoof City that’s very worth investing, but I considered how you need money immediately so I told him to take a loan from the bank.”

“The real estate company’s got a high return on profit, but they’ve also got a high demand for cash. If we take funds from them, it’ll likely result in the halting of construction in more than ten construction sites. This will affect JW Real Estates’ business reputation, so never mind.” Jasper weighed his options and shook his head, giving up on the real estate company.

“The entertainment company’s situation is a little better, they can spare 50 million.”

Jasper widened his eyes. “50 million only?”

“The artist’s package, production of films and dramas, and the opening of new cinema chains all cost money. 50 million is already a lot,” Wendy said.

Jasper rubbed his temple again. The entertainment industry in the year 2001 had yet to get to the point where he could sustain the company by making money off of fans. The industry was still at its initial stages and it would be at least 2008 when the industry truly matured. This was not something to be rushed.

“The electronics company is doing quite well, there’s 600 million extra to spare.”

Jasper finally heard some good news.

“But they also said that since they’re researching on the stepper, they’ll need an astronomical amount of funds each day and the second round of funds have to be sent to the lab. So it’s safest that you leave some funds and only take out 400 million.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1307

Jasper’s expression darkened. “Those brats. They’re best at asking me for money but now that I need funds to spare, each of them comes up with all sorts of excuses to say no.”

Wendy looked at an amloyed Jasper and could not help but chuckle. “Weren’t you the one who sought them out and have them work for you? Stop complaining already, they’re doing their best.”

“Additionally, Abbylon is the only one out of the three Internet companies that haven’t made enough profit to spare yet. Terizone can spare 200 million and Sena has 400 million.”

Jasper’s eyes lit up.

As expected, the dot-com industry had begun to bare its fangs.

Sena’s starting to make more money.

“Including that, we’ve got 1.35 billion in funds. I can add the 500 million from my account but that’d still be 1.9 billion in total.”

Jasper rubbed his temple again. He felt like he was about to go bald around his temple with how he kept rubbing it.

“That’s still not enough.”

Wendy could not help but suggest, “How about we ask my dad?”

“He has 1.2 billion remaining funds on his accounts and we can take 1 billion out any time.”

Completely standing on Jasper’s side, Wendy sold her dad out without hesitation.

“Every time I don’t have enough money, I ask your dad.” Jasper did not know if he should laugh or cry in response to Wendy’s suggestion.

“But you return it every time, don’t you? Plus, he’s the one who said he’ll put his business in our hands in the future.” Wendy’s cheeks flushed.

“Alright, then. I’m pretty certain about succeeding this time. Ask your dad for 1 billion, I’ll pay back with at least 1.5 billion after a month,” Jasper said with a crescent eyed smile.

Jasper knew that as long as he asked, Dawson would surely lend him money.

With that all together, Jasper currently had 2.9 billion available in funds. 1 billion from Dawson, 1.35 billion from the company, and the rest from his own bank accounts and were already given to Jake to open accounts.

These were enough funds, but Jasper wanted to be greedy.

So Jasper called Vita who was far away in Waterhoof City.

“What’s up, Jasper?” Vita accepted the call quickly and asked cheerily.

After everything that happened, their friendship no longer required any small talk

Jasper went straight to the point. “I have a credit of 12 billion from your bank, right? I need to use that money now.”

Vita's aura grew serious and he asked, "How much do you need?"

There were of course limits when it came to credit from such a huge commercial bank.

The first regulation was that this sum of funds could not be used for financial investment, but only business operations.

However, there was a way to deal with every policy and Jasper had long talked to Vita about this. So the bank could not dictate how Jasper wanted to use this money. Jasper's assets were available to them so the ICBS mostly turned a blind eye. However, if Jasper was about to use a huge amount of funds for financial investment, it was only natural that the bank grew concerned about not getting their money back.

So after weighing his options, Jasper gave a number.

"At least 4 billion."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1308

Vita's heart skipped a beat at the number.

He lowered his voice and asked, "Tell me the truth, Jasper. Are you using this money for business operations or other purposes?"

Jasper replied with a smile, "Other purposes of course."

The two had a tacit understanding that this 'other purposes' meant Jasper was taking this money for investment.

Vita's suspicion was confirmed and he said, "Then I'll be frank with you too, Jasper. For such a huge sum of funds, the headquarters will definitely supervise you."

"So if you're going to use the money for other purposes, then you have to deal with it carefully. I can have your back here, so this 4 billion shouldn't be a problem."

Then Vita was afraid that Jasper would misunderstand him, so he explained. "After all, this isn't a few hundred thousand or a few million Somer Dollar loan that ordinary people apply for. The bank wouldn't care even if a majority of people took their loans for investment since the loans are all mortgaged."

"But a group of people will lose their jobs if a problem arises with a loan worth a few billion Somer Dollars. So no one's willing to take this risk."

Jasper smiled. "I understand. Don't worry, I just want 4 billion."

"Alright, then. Come over later to go through the procedures, the money will be transferred within three days," Vita said.

Jasper ended the call, energized.

With this 4 billion added to the original 2.9 billion, Jasper had almost 7 billion Somer Dollars on hand now. Jasper gave it some thought before he dialed another number.

"Yo. Does Mr. Laine finally have time to think of me?"

John laughed out loud on the other end of the line.

"There's something I need your help with John."

Jasper went straight to the point.

If Vita was someone close enough to forgo unnecessary pleasantries, then John could be considered Jasper's confidant. There was no need for any small talk or flattering comments.

Unsurprisingly, John's demeanor immediately fell stern, and took back his mischievous smile to reply seriously, "Shoot."

This one word reply was much more reliable than any promise.

Jasper smiled. "There's no need to be so serious. It's not too big of a deal. I just need a 3 billion Somer Dollar loan. I'll use the ownership over the entire Southface River project as collateral, with Schuler Group as a joint guarantor."

John was stunned. "Your company is the most outstanding asset there is and there should be no problem at all with the Schuler Group as your guarantor. Forget 3 billion, you can apply for 10 billion and it'll still go through."

Jasper told him directly, "I'm taking this money for investment. And I need it done within 3 days. I've also taken 4 billion from Vita."

John sucked in a cold breath when he heard Jasper's request. "Are you preparing for a global financial battle?"

What John believed was a joke was actually the truth.

“Just tell me if it’s possible or not.” Jasper did not explain further to him.

John gave it some thought before he replied, “It’s possible. It’s just that three days might be a little tight. How about this, send someone over to the provincial branch right now and I’ll apply it for you myself. There shouldn’t be too big of an issue using special procedures for special cases. I’ll have your back for this 3 billion.”

“Nice. I’ll treat you to dinner afterward.”

“Don’t give me this bullsh*t. Just be careful with the money. I’ll be the first to lose my job if anything goes wrong.”

“Since when have I failed in terms of investment?”

“Haha. Just have someone come and get the procedures done now.”

Jasper put the phone down and smiled at Wendy. “It’s done. A total loan of 7 billion, coupled with the 2.9 billion we have at hand. That’s around 10 billion Somer Dollars, this should really be enough this time.”

Yet Wendy could not find it in herself to feel happy.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1309

Up until now she still had no idea what Jasper was planning to do.

She was just suggesting methods to him out of her unconditional trust and support.

“Jasp, what are you planning to do with so much money?”

Wendy could not help but ask. As she was in charge of the company finances, she was very sensitive when it came to loans. “This 7 billion worth of loans increase our liabilities exponentially. JW will crash if anything goes wrong.”

“Don’t worry,” Jasper patted Wendy’s hand and said gently, “I’ve got my reasons and guarantee before I chose to do so.”

“I established JW on my own and it’s a fruit of both our efforts and hard work. There’s no way I’d make a joke out of it.”

“I will succeed this time, and there won’t be a better opportunity than now in the next ten or even twenty years.”

“If this goes smoothly, not only will we solve our funding issue, but we’ll also get to officially change JW into a group.”

Hearing Jasper, Wendy nodded. “I believe you.”

Then, knowing Jasper was fighting against time, Wendy personally went to the provincial branch of the Agricultural Bank to look for John and proceed with the procedures.

Jasper let out a soft breath as he watched Wendy leave. This was a battle Jasper bet everything he had on. Unless those terrorists suddenly decided not to follow their plan, victory was in Jasper’s hands!

With this thought, Jasper called Jake who was in Harbor City.

“How’s the situation going?”

Jake replied courteously, “We’ve already opened the short positions you requested for the stock index.

We've lost 80 million as of this moment.”

“Good,” Jasper nodded.

“Keep opening positions to sell short the index and long positions for gold. I'll arrange for the funds later, so all you have to do is open the positions. Don't worry about making a loss now. The more the loss now, the more we earn by then.”

While Jake was completely confused about Jasper's plan to lose money, he still replied loudly, “I understand, Mr. Laine.”

The funds in Jake's control began to move after he received Jasper's instruction.

At almost the exact moment the funds moved, a gaze pinned on these funds realized the abnormality.

Harbor City.

“Mr. Atticus, Jasper’s funds moved and he’s starting to open huge positions.”

“They’re currently selling short the indices but selling long for gold. We don’t know if this is a smokescreen to divert our attention or not.”

Fabian’s brow twitched when he heard his subordinate report, drinking tea with someone in the garden.

“Did he go crazy? What, does he have too much money to waste?”

Opposite Fabian, Mitch said with a sneer before the former could say anything.

Fabian gave a small smile and said, “We’ll sell if he buys and we’ll buy if he sells. Keep reporting follow up situations.”

The subordinate left courteously and Mitch proceeded to apple-polish Fabian.

“Looks like Jasper’s really gone crazy, Mr. Atticus. The market’s doing so well yet he’s choosing to sell short and buy gold. Does he think that World War Three is coming? Haha. You’ve really got an eye for these things, Mr. Atticus.”

Fabian replied with a crescent eyed smile, “Whether he’s truly crazy or if he’s just pretending to be, the people I sent to keep an eye on Jasper will send word over very soon. The truth will come to light by then.”

Mitch’s gaze shone with maddening delight and he said, “Mr. Atticus, don’t forget me when you have the chance to destroy Jasper and split his properties.”

Fabian patted Mitch’s shoulder and laughed out loud. “We’re friends, aren’t we? How could I possibly forget you? Go prepare the money, we’ll completely defeat Jasper this time!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1310

An excited flush spread across Mitch’s cheeks when he heard Fabian.

After losing countless times to Jasper, Mitch had even grown to fear the sight of the man now.

However, looking at Fabian beside him, Mitch felt at ease.

With Fabian’s support, there was no way Jasper could turn the tables around no matter how powerful he was.

“Jasper, I’ll make you suffer painfully this time!”

“All the humiliation you made me go through, I’ll make you pay for them ten, no, hundred times over!”

Fabian chuckled, looking at Mitch who was drowning in his extremely exciting delusions. A meaningful look flickered in Fabian’s eyes.

In a rather private kitchen not open to the public in Waterhoof City.

Jasper was currently drinking and talking happily with Vita and John. Jasper had come here solely to go through the loan procedures.

It was a huge sum of funds and while Vita, the most authoritative vice president, was in charge of it personally, many procedures involved signing and identity confirmation. So Jasper had to do it himself.

“It’s rare that the three of us get to meet and eat together. Let’s drink until we drop tonight!”

John grabbed a bottle of brandy and shouted, intoxicated and his cheeks slightly flushed.

The private room was not big, but it was the perfect size for the three of them to sit together. On the table before them were many rare types of meat.

The six extremely expensive royal crabs alone were something so exquisite that not even the rich could always get.

“Here, Jasper. Come try this royal crab. This is something I had an old friend buy. There’s only one royal crab in two thousand crabs, and only one superior royal crab in every ten royal crabs.”

Vita took a royal crab and spoke as he placed it in front of Jasper.

Jasper had just touched glasses with John when he heard Vita and smiled. “That must really be something great. I’ve got to try it, then.”

Born from poverty, Jasper was not picky with food at all. All he requested was that the food be edible.

This was the year 2001 and the issue with food and health had yet to be as severe as it would in the future. Most of what was consumed now were healthy. However, when it came to treasures like the royal crab, it was a delicacy that ordinary people might ever get to try regardless of era.

“Hehe. This royal crab isn’t the main dish. We’ve got better food coming.”

As the host, Vita lowered his voice and told the two, pretending to be mysterious.

John looked at Vita and said, displeased, “That’s enough, Vita. I already know that you’re the foodie of your bank, the great banker of the gourmet industry. Stop hiding things from us and get to the point.”

Vita laughed out loud and replied, “The main chef of this private restaurant is one of the best chefs in Waterhoof City. The best dish here also happens to be a chef’s specialty, the blowfish!”

John was stunned. He might not know gourmet as Vita did, but he still had some common sense. He frowned and asked, “The blowfish is poisonous, isn’t it?”

“The saying that goes ‘The most poisonous food is also the freshest’ is precisely about the blowfish.”

Vita said with an exaggeratedly shocked expression, “From their organs to their bloodstream, the blowfish is full of poison. One blowfish’s poison alone is so potent that it can kill ten thousand people.”

“But while it is poisonous, there’s also a way to cook it. In the hands of a chef that knows how to cook it, this dish then becomes the best dish in the whole world.”

“Don’t worry. The main chef here’s made their name for more than a decade thanks to this dish and nothing’s ever happened before. Everyone who’s tried it misses its taste.”

“This main chef makes five portions of blowfish every week, and some wealthier people even book flights all the way from the north over to order in advance. It wasn’t easy but I pulled some strings and managed to order a portion today. It’ll be brought up shortly.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1311

Both Jasper and John shared a look and smiled when they heard Vita praise the food.

Vita's only hobby was eating good food, and this was something the other two had experienced firsthand. Upon hearing the man praise this blowfish dish, Jasper's interest grew.

As the three drank and chatted, the private room door was knocked on and subsequently opened.

A middle aged man in a suit then entered.

“Mr. Layne. I heard my subordinates tell me that you've come to eat today. I didn't believe them but here you are.”

Drogo entered the room and greeted Vita passionately. As the economy flourished, privately-owned enterprises normally require a hefty bank loan to grow. Drogo's behavior right now clearly showed his reliance on this simple fact. This was also proof that Vita's status in Waterhoof City was still quite considerable.

Vita smiled reservedly. Both Jasper and John were here, so he would not put on a big show of things.

“Mr. Rice. I brought my friends over today and we’re all greatly anticipating the restaurant’s blowfish dish.”

“This is Mr. Jackson of the Agricultural Bank, and this is Mr. Laine, a business friend.”

Vita knew that Jasper preferred to keep a low profile, so he did not introduce the man grandly.

As someone who had been working in the business field for years, Drogo could tell from Vita’s behavior that these two guests were special.

However, most of his attention was on John, who Vita claimed was from the Agricultural Bank. He merely assumed that Jasper was the one paying and trying to please the other two. He assumed that Jasper was just a small fry.

After all, the man was too young.

“Hello, Mr. Jackson. This is my name card. Please do come more often, I’ll make sure to give you a discount.” Drogo handed the name card with a wide smile.

He watched how John took the name card happily first before Drogo turned around to give Jasper one respectfully.

“Hello, Mr. Laine.”

The wrong sequence of greeting John and Jasper, combined with the difference in words he used to greet the two showed that Drogo’s attention was mostly focused on John.

Jasper took the name card with a smile, nonchalant about the man’s difference in attitude.

It was evident that Drogo really valued Vita. After greeting everyone passionately, Drogo took a glass of wine and toasted everyone before he downed two glasses.

With a smooth and slick personality now present, everyone ate at ease.

In less than twenty minutes, Drogo’s easy going personality had livened up the private room’s atmosphere.

Just as Drogo planned to excuse himself, someone who looked like the manager rushed in from outside.

“Something’s happened, Mr. Rice.”

Drogo felt embarrassed to see his manager in such a rush and shouted angrily, “What’s with the franticness? Can’t you tell that I’m busy entertaining guests?”

The manager replied embarrassedly, “It’s Mr. Heron, Mr. Rice. Mr. Heron’s throwing a tantrum outside and he’s demanding to see you.”

“Mr. Heron?”

Drogo looked shocked and slightly frantic when he heard the name. Before he could say anything, the private room doors were kicked open loudly.

A young man stood at the door and looked at Drogo sinisterly as he said, “Look, Drogo. I have guests to treat today and we want that blowfish dish. Those f*ckers said they don’t have any, so I’m here asking you if you do!”

“Do you want to humiliate me or not? Think carefully before you reply. Do you have the dish?”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1312

Mr. Heron’s sudden arrival was akin to a bucket of ice water in winter completely ruined the private room’s warm and toasty atmosphere.

The corner of Drogo's lips twitched, and while he was evidently trying to suppress his anger, it appeared that he was also terrified of this Mr. Heron's familial background and history.

Drogo suppressed the anger he felt and smiled apologetically, "You misunderstand, Mr. Heron. I'm sure you know the restaurant's rules and that every blowfish is prepared on the spot. There are only five blowfishes for five portions. We don't have the ingredients for more."

Mr. Heron scoffed and looked at Drogo before he said ambiguously, "So you want me to embarrass myself in front of my guests, then?"

Drogo's expression changed and he quickly replied, "How about this, Mr. Heron. I'll immediately have someone gather new ingredients and make one for you. But this might take some time."

Coincidentally, two waiters pushed over a cart of food just as Drogo spoke.

On the cart were plates of exquisite food, including the renowned and rare blowfish dish.

When he saw the path the cart was taking, as well as and the private room number on the cart, Drogo knew that this was the plate of blowfish Vita had ordered.

Mr. Heron's eyes lit up when he saw the cart and he immediately raised his hand to stop it.

"Isn't there one here? I want this one."

Drogo's expression turned bitter at the words, and he looked at Vita instinctively.

This time, Vita was the one whose expression changed. It was rare for him to have the chance to treat others, and now that both John and Jasper were here, Vita refused to be humiliated in front of them.

"That is the blowfish I ordered."

Vita said calmly.

His tone was light, but the implications were clear.

Mr. Heron scoffed and looked at Vita before he snorted disdainfully, "Where the f*ck did you come from? How dare you take what's mine!"

“You...?!”

Vita was enraged.

He was still someone of high status. Due to his special identity and the fact that he was an authoritative senior executive of the bank, people were almost always kind and respectful toward him.

However, Mr. Heron was just in his twenties, around the age of Vita's nephews and nieces. Therefore, Vita immediately flushed red when he was scolded without warning.

“Don't, don't!”

Drogo quickly interrupted Vita. He put his hands together with a pleading expression and said, “Both of you are extinguished guests. Business is good when there is peace, right? Let's not strain any relationships and end up appearing like fools to other people, yeah?”

Vita glanced at Drogo angrily but changed the words he wanted to say. “You decide how to deal with this issue then, Mr. Rice.”

This sentence was brash considering the setting.

Drogo could understand this. Moreover, the man's expression looked bitter.

Yet, Mr. Heron scoffed and told Drogo, "Look, Drogo, you know who I am, don't you? Do you still want your restaurant or not? If you don't, then I'll have someone demolish it for you tonight."

Veins bulged on Drogo's forehead.

After a long moment of hesitation, he turned to Vita and said pleasingly but with great difficulty, "Mr. Layne, perhaps, we could give Mr. Heron this plate of blowfish first? I'll have someone prepare new ingredients and send another plate over immediately. And all your expenses tonight will be free."

Drogo made his decision.

After weighing his options, he chose to stand on Mr. Heron's side.

After all, Vita was just the vice president of a bank. If he could not ask ICBS for loans, then he could always seek out another bank.

Mr. Heron, though, was different.

As far as Drogo was concerned, Mr. Heron was more powerful than Vita.

Vita's instantly complexion flushed dark red.

Drogo's decision made him feel like he had been humiliated in front of John and Jasper.

"Hahaha!"

Mr. Heron burst into laughter and said, "Good, very good. So you still do know what's good for you, Drogo."

Delighted, Mr. Heron glanced at Vita and the other two before snorting. "Who are you to challenge me? You think f*ckers that came out of nowhere can steal what I want? Go home and eat bread. F*cking idiots."

Jasper frowned slightly in displeasure.

Drogo's way of handling problems alone doomed him to a life of small businesses.

However, John could see Vita's embarrassment and he immediately told Vita, "It's alright, Vita. It's just a dish, we don't have to eat it."

"No!"

Vita suddenly shouted, startling John.

Vita glared at Mr. Heron and Drogo, and said icily, "I ordered this plate of blowfish so it must come to my table. I'd rather feed it to the dogs than give it to someone else!"

"Motherf*cker! You're taking advantage of my kindness, huh?" Mr. Heron accused disdainfully.

Drogo's expression was also dark. He felt extremely conflicted before he made the decision.

However, now that a decision was made, Vita's insistence annoyed him.

"Please don't make it difficult for me, Mr. Layne," Drogo said icily, "My business is small and I can't afford to offend anyone."

“Is that so? So, you think I can easily be offended, then?” Vita asked Drogo frostily.

Drogo took a deep breath and replied, “If that’s what you think, Mr. Layne, then there’s nothing I can do but apologize.”

Drogo then turned to stand by Mr. Heron’s side.

Mr. Heron laughed out loud and told Vita proudly, “Don’t think that just because you’ve lived a few years longer that it means you’re powerful, old f*cker. If you’re doing business in these times, then open your eyes and take a good look at who you’re talking to. Or you’ll be the one who ends up getting embarrassed.”

Vita clenched his jaw and balled his fists. He looked extremely humiliated and furious, but also exasperated. He knew that there was nothing he could do now that Drogo had chosen to side with Mr. Heron.

He was just a vice president with a lot of authority within ICBS. However, his range of influence outside the banking industry was small.

These businessmen only flattered him so they could get a bank loan, but people like Drogo could easily seek out other banks if ICBS was no longer an option.

For the first time, Vita felt like he held too little power, and his face burned in embarrassment. He felt like he had been completely humiliated in front of Jasper and John.

John could tell that his old friend was furious, but there was nothing he could do.

He understood the humiliation Vita felt since he was also a member of the banking system.

John sighed deeply and thought about how he should comfort his friend when he saw Jasper put his chopsticks down slowly.

At the same time, Mr. Heron was also about to leave pridefully alongside Drogo who was fleeing the scene.

“Stay right there.”

The two words were spoken clearly and powerfully.

“You can leave.”

“But the dish stays.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1313

Both Drogo and Mr. Heron were stunned when they heard him.

Even Vita was shocked.

He did not expect Jasper to speak up.

The only one unsurprised was John.

After all, John had known Jasper for a long time and he knew that Jasper was a man who did not like being disrespected, nor did he like the people around him getting disrespected.

If he spoke up and interfered with this tonight, it at least meant that he saw Vita as a great friend.

Vita could understand this as well, so after the initial shock, he felt was touched.

“Yo, which moron is it this time?”

Mr. Heron turned around and looked at Jasper icily. Drogo’s expression was one of complete annoyance now.

He already planned to offend Vita, so who cared about the young man beside him?

“Enough. Are you done yet?”

Drogo shouted at Jasper, “I’m the owner here. I already said I’ll send you the same dish later! Don’t take advantage of my kindness!”

If Drogo was conflicted before he made his decision and guilty after deciding, then he was completely annoyed now as he faced Jasper.

He thought that Jasper could not read the room.

“Can you stop causing trouble? Do you want all of us to turn against each other and become enemies? Is that what you want? ”

Mr. Heron was elated when he heard Drogo and snickered icily. He was in no rush to join in just yet; “It’s just one dish. I don’t care whether I get to eat it or not.”

Jasper said, then he looked at the table full of dishes and exotic food before continuing calmly, “I also don’t care whether this table of food is free or not.

“But if we ordered something and you don’t send it over, then of course I’ll ask you about it.”

Drogo scoffed and replied darkly, “Don’t think too highly of yourself, young man. You’re just a youth, what right do you have to talk here?”

“Ask me about it? It’s not like I’m looking down at you or anything, but if I’m not even going to entertain Vita, then why would I entertain you?”

Jasper looked at Drogo intently but ignored him.

Drogo was enraged. He felt furious to be ignored by Jasper, the supposed weakest person present.

Jasper’s gaze had fallen on Mr. Heron instead.

“Heron’s not an extremely common nor extremely rare surname, but there aren’t many in this small land of Waterhoof City that can be considered powerful. Who is Gerry Heron to you?”

Jasper’s words caused Mr. Heron’s expression to change immediately.

Beside him, Drogo was also stunned.

He was terrified of Mr. Heron because his father was Gerry.

A renowned old thug in Waterhoof City.

To be honest, Gerry was a lowly person.

Ever since the Strike Hard Against Crime Campaign, Waterhoof City’s gangsters had diluted, while Gerry, a boss from the days before the campaign, had also successfully changed industries and started doing legitimate business. Nevertheless, the man had quite the reputation within Waterhoof City’s underground.

Therefore, no one dared to offend young Mr. Heron. After all, his father Gerry was a cruel man that could not be reasoned with.

When Mr. Heron threatened to demolish his shop tonight, Drogo had not doubted him.

However, when he saw this so called Mr. Laine call out Gerry's name so easily, Drogo felt uneasy.

“Who the f*ck are you?! How dare you refer to my dad by his name?”

Mr. Heron did not think too much into it and pointed at Jasper's nose while scolding.

“What's wrong? Isn't the point of your dad's name is so he can be referred by it?” Jasper asked calmly.

He had already dialed Gerry's number while talking.

He did not want to waste time over brainless trust-fund children like young Mr. Heron.

Jasper put his phone on speaker and out came Gerry's utterly courteous and surprised voice.

“Mr. Laine? Why’d a busy man like you spare the time to call me? Is there something I can help with? Just say the word, I’d gladly go to extreme lengths to get it done for you!”

Ever since the incident with the little prince, Jasper’s status in Gerry’s eyes was that of a god’s.

He would do anything just be on Jasper’s side, but the man had never given him any chances to do so. Therefore, he was elated to receive Jasper’s call today.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1314

He had no idea that his voice resonated through the private room and reached everyone’s ears because he was put on speaker.

Vita and John still seemed fine, but Drogo looked like he had just seen a ghost.

The most terrified person present was Mr. Heron.

He did not expect Jasper to know his father, let alone hear his father talk to Jasper like a servant to their master.

“I’m having dinner at a private kitchen with a very famous blowfish dish,” Jasper said calmly.

While confused, Gerry still replied pleasingly, “That restaurant? I know of it. I’ve eaten there twice. The blowfish dish is pretty good. Hehe, are you there too, Mr. Laine? Could I come and toast you?”

‘Gerry, the ex- gang leader, wanted to come over to toast Jasper!’

‘And this was suggested by Gerry himself!’

From his tone, it did not seem like Gerry was kidding. At this moment, both Drogo and Mr. Heron had sweat beading over their forehead.

They both looked at Jasper as if they had seen a ghost.

Jasper replied slowly, “There’s no need to toast me. But there’s a Mr. Heron here who pointed at my nose and gave me a scolding. This blowfish dish sure does seem delicious, but it doesn’t seem like I have to right to eat it becomes this Mr. Heron wants it instead.”

Gerry’s breath immediately turned heavy on the other end of the line.

He was also surprised by what he heard.

“Mr... Mr. Laine, could I ask if this Mr. Heron is my son Geoffrey?”

Gerry's voice was shaking when he asked this.

From anger, but more so from terror.

He knew Jasper's methods and understood his son's character well.

If his stupid son had offended Jasper, then Gerry should start packing to leave Waterhoof City that night itself.

“Let him tell you himself.”

Jasper directly handed Geoffrey the phone.

Geoffrey shuddered and took the phone. Putting it to his ear, he said sorrowfully, “Dad, it... it's me.”

Geoffrey was not stupid, for he immediately turned the speaker off once he received the phone.

No one knew What Gerry said over the phone, but Geoffrey's entire body shuddered and his complexion paled as well.

He then looked at Jasper with utter fear in his eyes.

A moment later, Geoffrey walked over to Jasper shakily and...

Thud.

Geoffrey directly knelt before Jasper.

He did not actually fall to his knees too hard.

Yet, it made Drogo shiver from where he stood at the door. His legs felt weak and he almost knelt onto the floor himself.

“I’m sorry, Mr. Laine!”

Without another word, Geoffrey began to slap himself. His face was swollen after four to five slaps, and his nose began to bleed. He looked both pitiful and tragic.

After slapping himself, Geoffrey handed Jasper the phone with both hands courteously and wailed, “Please forgive me, Mr. Laine!”

Jasper crossed his legs and looked at Geoffrey with a crescent eyed smile. He did not take the phone back nor did he say anything.

Geoffrey clenched his jaw and put the phone on the table in front of Jasper, then raised his hand to slap himself another seven to eight times.

Slap slap slap.

The sounds of flesh smacking flesh rang out continuously.

He did this as if he showed no desire to stop as long as Jasper did not ask for it.

A dull thud rang out and Jasper looked up to see Drogo's legs going limp and him finally falling to the floor.

At that moment, a figure also appeared at the door.

It was a young and energized man with quite a dignified aura around him. One glance was all it took to tell that this was the son of a wealthy and renowned family.

The man glanced around the room before his gaze fell on Geoffrey, who was slapping himself as he knelt in front of Jasper. Something instantly flickered in the man's eyes subtly.

Then a smile graced his features as he spoke to Jasper calmly.

“My friend, Geoffrey is here to treat me to dinner today. Aren't you humiliating him and me by doing such a thing?”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1315

Geoffrey was stymied when he heard the voice.

He froze for a few seconds.

Jasper's gaze fell on him, and Geoffrey clenched his jaw before continuing to slap himself.

Jasper was rather satisfied with this.

However, it caused Ainsley's expression to darken from where he stood at the door.

"Alright, you can stop."

Jasper's words were like a great gift of mercy to Geoffrey, but his face was already as red and bloated as a pig's.

The words Gerry said over the phone echoed in Geoffrey's head like a curse.

Geoffrey might be an arrogant trust-fund child, but what made him different from the others was that he was slightly smarter.

His father's attitude told him that Jasper was someone too powerful for either him or his dad to offend.

His father knew who he was treating to dinner today, yet the man still warned him not to worry about anything else. He told Geoffrey that if Jasper chose not to forgive him, then not even God could save Geoffrey.

This terrified Geoffrey.

“Look, friend. It's always better to be kind to people when you're outside. You'll gather many enemies by being extreme, and it'll result in a lot of trouble.”

Ainsley looked at Jasper from the doorway and said calmly.

Jasper had ignored Ainsley since the start, while Geoffrey did not dare to stop slapping himself. This truly embarrassed Ainsley.

There was no way people from the Royal family could be humiliated outside.

Not to mention that this was Waterhoof City, the Royal family's territory!

'Who would dare to offend the Royal family in Waterhoof City?'

Ainsley came up blank.

Therefore, he was confident that he could make Jasper pay for looking down on him.

"Who are you?"

Jasper asked calmly.

Ainsley instinctively thought that Jasper was asking a question, so he gave the man a small smile.

He wanted to show off the reserved and arrogant aura of someone from a renowned family. He was about to introduce himself and enjoy Jasper's fear and subsequent flattering words when he heard Jasper continue.

"It's doesn't matter."

What started as a question became a statement.

The second half of it only came out after a slight pause. With his words already at the tip of his tongue, Ainsley almost choked on his saliva. His cheeks flushed red in embarrassment and anger.

Before a mortified Ainsley could say anything, Jasper continued indifferently, "I don't need you to tell me how I should act outside either, understood?"

Ainsley looked at Jasper in anger and sneered. "What an arrogant piece of sh*t. Karma will get you one day, and being too arrogant in a place like Waterhoof City will only cause you to be trampled to death!"

"And before you act arrogant, at least ask around and understand who you're acting arrogant toward! I'll give you a hint, my surname is Royal!"

Drogo, whose presence had been ignored for a long time, suddenly changed his expression when he heard Ainsley say this.

John did not work in Waterhoof City, so he was not acquainted with such powerful people. He did not know too much about the Royal family in Waterhoof City, so he did not react to this.

The same thing could not be said about Vita.

Since he made a living in Waterhoof City, he was very sensitive to the Royal family name. His expression immediately changed when he took in Ainsley's dignified aura and heard him state that he was from the Royal family.

At the same time, Vita became silently regretful. It seemed like tonight's incident would result in great repercussions.

He would never have spoken up to protect his dignity if he knew that Geoffrey was treating someone from the Royal family to dinner.

At that moment, Vita looked at Jasper and felt the need to urge Jasper to let the situation go.

While he was not the cause of the problem, this incident did start because of him. He did not want Jasper to offend someone from the Royal family because of this.

"Does being a Royal make you better than everyone?" Jasper tilted his head and asked curiously.

This reaction was beyond Ainsley's expectations.

He was stunned for a moment before he laughed out loud, “And here I wondered what kind of family you came from. When in fact, you’re just a stupid young man. The last person you can offend here in Waterhoof City is a Royal, do you understand?”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1316

“It makes sense, since the Royal family’s of such highstatus. How could someone as insignificant as you have the opportunity to come into contact with us?” Ainsley laughed out loud.

“Jasper, it’s fine.”

Vita immediately said this, afraid that Jasper did not know the implications of offending the Royal family.

“Let’s just forget it.”

Despite this, Jasper shook his head and gave Vita a reassuring look.

“I also happen to know a friend that’s also a Royal. Do you know him?”

Jasper tossed out a name card as he asked.

It was a rectangular shaped card, that flew from Jasper's hand before landing right in front of Ainsley who was laughing out loud.

"You have a friend that's also a Royal? What a hilarious joke. Do you even know what the Royal family name means in Waterhoof City..."

Ainsley said mockingly while his gaze fell on the name card in front of him.

It was a simple snow white name card without any unnecessary decorations. On it was just a name and a number.

The name was Dominique Royal.

Ainsley suddenly halted mid speech like a duck whose throat has been seized mid quack.

His eyes widened and he stared at the name card in disbelief.

Dominique Royal!

The little prince!

The Royal family's direct heir!

Both Dominique's identity and status were far beyond his, the latter just a child of the insignificant extended family.

Ainsley might still be able to show off to the public as a member of the Royal family and be fawned over by trust-fund children like Geoffrey, but when it came to the internal members of the family, Ainsley had no right to even speak to Dominique.

It would be easier to think of it as an international group. The person manning the doors was technically still the group's employee, but he was no match for the president of the group.

One of them belonged on the ground while the other was destined for the skies.

Most importantly, this was Dominique's personal name card.

Only people the little prince valued were allowed to contact his personal number!

This was a treatment not even Ainsley would dare to dream of, let alone outsiders.

Eyes wide and expression shocked, Ainsley looked at the name card in disbelief as all four of his limbs shook slightly.

This was done out of fear.

He knew that in comparison to this name card, an insignificant relative of the Royal family was nothing.

“I... I...”

Ainsley could not say anything.

All the dignified, confident, arrogant aura he wore a moment ago completely disappeared now.

All that was left was fear and terror.

“Do you recognize this friend of mine?” Jasper asked with a crescent eyed smile.

Naturally, Jasper did not know of the Royal family’s strict hierarchy, nor did he know what Dominique represented among the younger generation of the family.

However, from Ainsley’s behavior, he could tell that this name card was quite powerful.

Jasper’s voice had Ainsley quaking in his boots. Without another word, he quickly took the name card and handed it back to Jasper respectfully.

While he did not kneel on the floor as Geoffrey did, the look of superiority in Ainsley’s face had totally vanished.

“I’m sorry. I was blind to look down on you. Could I ask for your name?”

The stark contrast between before and after had Vita’s eyes blown wide open as his tongue tied in disbelief.

‘This was someone from the Royal family!’

'How could he be so terrified of a mere name card?'

Then, a stinky smell permeated the room. Drogo who had seen the contents of the name card from where he sat on the ground by the door, and had peed himself in fear!

Life at The Top – Chapter 1317

"There's no need to be so courteous, my surname is Laine," Jasper replied calmly.

"Young Master Laine, I see."

Ainsley instinctively took in Jasper's age and referred to him in the same way the youths liked to refer to each other as of late.

Despite this, Jasper chuckled.

Ever since he started his business, Jasper had always been referred to as 'Mr. Laine', with the occasional 'president' or 'sir'. This was the first time anyone had called him a young master.

It sounded weird and embarrassing.

“I’m not a young master, nor do I come from a renowned family.” Jasper shook his head. He did not like this title that was filled with negative connotations.

“Mr. Laine!” Ainsley immediately changed the way he addressed him while wearing a flattering and apologetic smile on his face.

“My sincere apologies. I did not know that you were good friends with the little prince, Mr. Laine. Let me go set up a new table next door to apologize, Mr. Laine.”

Ainsley said sincerely.

However, he had no idea of the ‘damage’ his words caused Vita and John.

Just because John did not think of the little prince when he heard the surname Royal did not mean he was oblivious to the implications of that three word title.

Now that he understood what was going on, John immediately looked at Jasper.

'Since when did this young friend manage to get in touch with the little prince without my knowledge?'

'And this Ainsley is from the Royal family too?'

'From his behavior, it's almost like Jasper and the little prince are close!'

He thought back to the time when Jasper first went over to Faith County to settle some business. The man's status was so insignificant then, and most people thought he just enjoyed a bit of luck to go along with his stock trading capabilities. Yet, the man was now a wealthy businessman John could not quite recognize anymore.

John could not help but feel stunned to know that the people Jasper dealt with now are of the same status as the little prince.

Vita was even more shocked.

Since he worked in Waterhoof City, he was even more aware of what the title the little prince implied.

That man was held a status that ordinary people could never achieve no matter how hard they worked throughout their entire lives.

‘Even multimillionaires and billionaires are no more than nouveau riche to the little prince.’

‘But Jasper is good friends with him?’

‘People only make friends with those within their circles.’

‘People of different ranks do not belong in the same circle.’

At this moment, both Vita and John thought of the same thing.

‘The reason why Jasper remained in contact with them is because they’re friends.’

In terms of social circles, Jasper was already miles away from them.

“I’ve already eaten dinner. Nor is there a need to apologize.”

Jasper's rejection caused Ainsley to feel slightly awkward and afraid, but the man did not dare to get angry.

Jasper, who had the little prince's personal name card, was no longer someone Ainsley could afford to offend.

At this moment, someone rushed into the room.

Gerry had dashed over.

Gerry entered the room and saw Ainsley standing courteously by the side. Something flickered in his eyes as he caught sight of this.

Among everyone within the room, Gerry had the most profound awareness of how terrifying Jasper could be. He had watched with his own eyes how Jasper managed to get his hands on Norman and his daughter.

This was despite the fact that these were people that the little prince said he would protect.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1318

Now, Norman and his daughter were long gone while Jasper, on the other hand, was completely fine. Therefore, despite knowing his son was supposed to treat Ainsley to dinner, he still had his son immediately apologize to Jasper upon offending him.

As for Ainsley, he could go screw himself.

While he was also a Royal, he was nothing much in comparison to the little prince, let alone Jasper.

Having made this smart decision, Gerry did not dare to dwell on the topic anymore, and after glaring at his son's bloated face, he made a beeline for Jasper and said sincerely.

"I won't say too much, Mr. Laine, but please forgive my stupid son this once! I'll take any punishment you have in mind!"

Gerry knew Jasper's temper, so he made sure not to create any complications at such a time. He had to be sincere and just hope that Jasper would overlook this incident. Otherwise, both he and his son would have to flee Waterhoof City tonight.

It must be said that Gerry had a good understanding of Jasper's temper.

Jasper glanced at Gerry. He had not planned to torment the man at all.

Still, Gerry was not his friend, per se. The two of them started on bad terms, but Gerry had chosen to join the right side in the end. He had also extended Gerry a few opportunities, of which he had made good use of.

“Alright.”

Jasper stood up.

“Don’t put on this tragic act for me. If your son didn’t know better, then go home and teach him well. I’m sure you’ve seen your fair share of a businesses that had been built for decades only to be destroyed by a lone ignorant descendant.”

Gerry began to sweat when he heard Jasper.

As a councilperson of the ex-Haddock Chamber of Commerce’s Waterhoof of City branch, he knew that both the Hull and Gardner family had met their destruction by Jasper’s hand because of their incompetent children.

“I understand! I’ll definitely teach my son well!” Gerry said with a forehead full of sweat.

Jasper looked at Ainsley and asked calmly, "I plan to invite the little prince for a meal in two days, should I bring you up in conversation?"

Ainsley's buttcheeks squeezed tightly and he immediately replied, "No, no need, Mr. Laine. I'm just an insignificant child of the Royal family's extended family. I'm sure what you and the little prince discuss are all important matters. Someone as insignificant as me has no right to be brought up by someone as dignified as you."

Jasper smiled but did not say anything, then he walked out the room with hands behind his back while Vita and John trailed after him.

Gerry, Geoffrey, and Ainsley let out a long sigh at the sight of this.

Thank goodness this was over.

By the time their minds processed what was happening, the three of them, including Gerry, felt their backs drenched with sweat.

Jasper walked to the door and glanced at Drogo, who was sitting in a puddle of yellowish pee.

Drogo shuddered. He did not have the headspace to think about how embarrassing he must have looked when he forced an ugly smile and stammered, “Mr... Mr. Laine. The blowfish, I... I’ll send it to you...”

Before Drogo could finish talking, Jasper had already turned his head and left.

Drogo’s complexion immediately paled.

Behind Jasper, Vita sneered at Drogo. He was not as forgiving as Jasper.

“Looks like we’re not fortunate enough to get a taste of the blowfish, Mr. Rice. How about you leave it for yourself!”

Vita then stepped over the pee stain on the floor and left.

John, the last of the trio to leave, looked at the plate of delicious blowfish and shook his head with a smile before sighing, “What a waste of such a good dish. Tell me, why did this blowfish have to be so blind? He just had to get caught, now he loses his life just to be someone’s dish.”

Then John left.

Drogo was about to cry from fear.

He looked at Geoffrey and Gerry palely, then shouted, "Mr. Herons, please, help me put in a word. I only offended Mr. Laine because of you two!"

Gerry glared at Drogo sinisterly and said with a wretched smile, "Don't worry, Mr. Laine is too important to waste time over being calculative with trash like you."

Gerry then continued before Drogo could relax, "But none of this would have happened if not for a stupid f*cker like you! I'll demolish your restaurant tonight!"

Drogo felt his body go limp. He wanted to cry but no tears came out.

He wanted to flatter Geoffrey, but it did not occur to him that Jasper was the truly powerful person in the room.

He had no other choice but to accept his fate now.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1319

After walking out of the restaurant, Jasper bid Vita and John goodbye.

“Well, since we didn’t get to eat the blowfish today, looks like you’ll have to go and look for something else to eat, Vita,” Jasper joked.

Vita smiled wryly and said in a slightly embarrassedly tone, “The dinner was supposed to be something great. Who’d have thought that this incident would destroy everyone’s good mood.”

“What do you mean destroy?”

Jasper glanced at John and said with a smile, “I was in a pretty good mood tonight. Weren’t you, John?”

John understood Jasper’s intention and internally exclaimed to himself how smooth and slick a person Jasper was. He told Vita, “It’s fine, Vita. Don’t worry about something so insignificant. We’re all friends here, so let’s not dwell on what’s already happened.”

Vita nodded, feeling much less conflicted as he replied, “You’re right. I’ll owe you guys this meal then, and invite you out again when I find something good later.”

“You better tell me in advance. I’ll eat less for breakfast so I can eat more out of your wallet,” Jasper said.

The three exchanged a look before laughing out loud. Jasper had originally planned to talk to the two a little longer before his phone suddenly rang.

Seeing that it was a call from Jake, Jasper knew that the other would not contact him so late at night unless it was something important.

“Alright. I still have a few things to do, so let’s talk more in the future,” Jasper said as he opened the car door.

Neither John nor Vita asked him to stay. The two each promised to meet again before they watched Jasper’s Bentley drive away.

“Sigh. I remember the first time I saw him when he wanted to buy a plot of land in Waterhoof City. He was just a slightly wealthy businessman back then.”

“But he’s reaching higher and higher heights now.” Vita lamented.

What he saw and heard today had truly shocked him. It also made him understand that Jasper’s level had long surpassed his imaginations.

Patting Vita's shoulder with his large hand, John said, "Don't think about it too much. Jasper has the rare trait of someone who remembers his roots. Now that I think closely about it, excluding the brief times when we helped him at the very beginning, he's been helping us the whole time after that, right?"

"From an ordinary bank president of the Faith Country subbranch, I've become the vice president of the Agricultural Bank's Southeast Province branch. Your achievements are even better. From a normal office manager to Waterhoof City branch's second in command.

"While we did get promoted thanks to our achievements and business capabilities, there are also tons of people better experienced, from better families, and more capable than we are. Yet, out of all of them, we're the ones that got promoted."

"All because the higher ups value our relationship with Jasper. Furthermore, Jasper's always helped us when it came to bank business."

"He's a worthy friend to make, and we shouldn't feel uncomfortable about the huge gap between us. If he doesn't mind it, then who are we to care?"

Vita nodded in understanding and agreed, "You're right. I was just lamenting... But John, I had a thought."

"What is it?" John asked curiously.

“I want to leave the banking system to pursue politics!” Vita replied seriously.

John’s expression changed. He knew that what happened tonight had changed Vita’s life plan, so he replied solemnly, “This is a huge decision. Come on, let’s go to your home and talk about this seriously.”

“Alright. I’ll have my wife make a few dishes and we can talk about it. We can ask Jasper what he thinks later on. Everything should go much smoother with his support.”

As he sat in the car, Jasper had no idea that tonight’s incident had changed Vita’s life. After all, the man was currently busy on a call with Jake.

“Mr. Laine, from how the current situation looks, I can confirm that there’s someone, or a group of people, who has their eyes on our movements. They’re also targeting us, causing us to lose a lot of money.”

“According to our original predictions, our current orders might go against the market trend, but we shouldn’t lose more than 160 million. But as of this moment, we’ve already lost 220 million!”

“As we increase the amount of our investments, our losses will also only continue to grow since they’re actively targeting us.”

“According to our finance guys, we might lose an extra 400 million after we’ve fully opened all the positions, amounting to a total loss of 1.04 billion.”

“Does that mean this opponent’s appearance will cost our losses to increase by 70%?” Jasper asked calmly.

The original budget estimated a loss of 600 to 700 million by the time the incident occurred. This was an amount that Jasper and Jake had calculated together. However, the 600 million had suddenly become 1 billion. This additional 400 million loss was not a small amount in comparison to the original 600 million.

“Yes,” Jake replied clearly.

After a slight hesitation, Jasper rolled the windows down so that the icy wind could blow away the scent of alcohol around Jasper and clear his mind a bit.

“From your previous description, you don’t know whether this is one person or a group of people targeting us, let alone who this entity is, correct?”

Jake felt slightly embarrassed when he heard Jasper's question.

"I'm sorry, Mr. Laine. The opponent is very crafty and they're only targeting us. They're hiding within the market and we're still in the process of eliminating suspects now. All I can say is that the opponent came prepared, and that we're not capable enough."

"Since they're intentionally targeting us, then they must've come prepared. There's no point in being calculative over your incompetence now either. Follow the original plan. A loss of 400 million is nothing in comparison to the profit we'll make in the future, but you have to find out who this group of people are as soon as possible."

"Otherwise, they might cause us quite a bit of trouble during the last mile of our plan."

Jake immediately became stern and replied, "Yes, Mr. Laine. I'll do my best."

"Go ahead, then. Contact me again if there's more news."

Jasper's expression was solemn when he ended the call. While he did not seem like he had much of a choice, using this opening to involve Lord Alvarado was the correct decision.

The situation did not look good now, and someone had already started to target him.

However, Jasper thought about the earth shattering incident that was about to happen and he understood that this group of people would surely set their eyes on him during the chaos.

While Jasper was confident of his victory, he was not arrogant enough to believe himself peerless.

God did not exist in the financial market. Not to mention, Jasper was trying to profit off the entire western capitalist market this time.

It would be a waste of Lord Alvarado's power if Jasper did not ask for the former's help.

Not only was Jasper going to ask for their help, but he would do it blatantly and broadcast it loudly.

Thinking of this, Jasper pulled out the little prince's name card and looked at it with intrigue.

He had asked the help of one Lord Alvarado, and he would ask the help of another little prince.

Perhaps the dinner with the little prince that he had casually brought tip was going to become reality.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1320

Waterhoof City's Tomson Clubhouse.

The Tomson Clubhouse was the only high end clubhouse in Waterhoof City with a bowling alley, a golf course, and horseback riding grounds. It simply wasn't a place ordinary people could afford to visit.

This was where Jasper and the little prince agreed to meet.

At the horseback riding grounds, the little prince could be seen lying on a recliner idly. Dressed in professional riding gear, the handsome and casual man oozed with a dignified aura.

Not too far away were a few well mannered members who would glance over from time to time. While each of them looked at man with desire, none of them dared to walk over and greet the little prince.

Thus, a few hundred meter wide radii formed itself around the little prince, with the entire area becoming a vacuum in which no one dared to enter.

Jasper laid on the recliner beside the little prince casually, oblivious to Coffey's intrigued gaze beside the little prince.

"I'm very busy."

The little prince replied lazily without looking over. Jasper said with a smile, "I can't say you look busy with how idly you lie here, Little Prince."

"Being lazy is also serious business."

The little prince chuckled and looked at Jasper, "At least to me, it's a very serious and important business. I don't normally like being interrupted when I'm doing something serious and important."

Jasper replied, "Trust me. I'm sure the reason I'm here today will be worth you taking the time out to meet me."

The little prince yawned lazily but did not follow up on Jasper's topic. He did not even ask Jasper why he claimed such a thing, but instead said, "Someone also laid here as you did half a year ago."

"That man."

The little prince raised his hand and touched his chin before he suddenly snorted, “I don’t know if he turned stupid from all the sandstorms he’s experienced in the great northwest or something else, but he said he wanted to challenge me in horseback riding. Do you know what happened afterward?”

“I’m sure you beat him by a country mile, Little Prince,” Jasper replied calmly.

“I lost,” The little prince sounded slightly resentful.

“He did grow up in the great northwest, after all. That’s a place that produces great horses in abundance.”

The little prince smiled gleefully as he continued, “The reason why I wondered if he’d gone stupid from all the sandstorms in the great northwest is because he came all the way from the northwest to Waterhoof City just to make a fool out of me. If that’s not an idiot, I don’t know what it is.”

While they talked, staff at the riding grounds not far away cautiously led two horses over.

The one in the front was a handsome and extraordinary horse with well-proportioned and slender limbs. It trotted over as its solid muscles moved under its shiny black hair. Despite being a mere horse, it felt extremely majestic.

Jasper did not know much about horses, but he could tell that this one was special.

“There. Look at that horse, that’s the one that idiot left for me after he won. There wasn’t any fancy pedigree certificate, but it’s a true purebred.”

The little prince became animated and stood up to take over the reins. He patted the horse’s neck and boasted to Jasper with a smile, “This horse eats a daily meal worth more than 1000 bucks, and he needs to be professionally maintained every week. Each maintenance session requires four people and lasts for three hours.”

“Not only that, but this horse also needs to listen to music. Therefore, there’s a twelve man musical team who do nothing but serve it ”

“And that white horse?” Jasper asked about the white horse behind.

Despite being compared to the extraordinary black horse, the white horse no less impressive. At the very least, it did not lose to the black one in appearance.

“A truly great horse certified by the International Equestrian Association. There are less than 3000 of them in the world and they cost more than 6 million each.”

The little prince tossed Jasper the white horse’s reins uncaringly and disgustedly.

“This was still my ride half a year ago.”

“We’ll talk on the horse.”

The little prince climbed onto the horse professionally and handsomely, then told Jasper while he pulled on the reins with practiced ease.

Jasper’s brow twitched.

This Mr. Laine might be able to drive cars and motorcycles, but this was the first time he was trying horseback riding in both his past and current life.

However, Jasper was no longer a troublesome person. He might not have known how to ride it, but he still openly and humbly asked the staff what he should do and what the instructions were before he got onto the horse with their help.

While his posture was rigid and his actions were awkward and not as practiced as the little prince’s, the white horse was obedient and respectful as it did not tum Jasper into a fool.

The little prince laughed aloud when he saw how cautious Jasper looked on horseback and said, "Seriously, you're already a somewhat powerful person. It'd do you good to learn things like this."

"Owners of small enterprises will go to bars and entertainment clubs while owners of huge enterprises might have yachts, luxury cars, and villas. However, true businessmen ride horses."

Jasper did not reply to the little prince, instead focusing on balancing himself on horseback. After ensuring that the white horse would not suddenly throw a tantrum and throw him off, Jasper asked the little prince, "Why did Lord Alvarado agree to leave his horse here after beat you?"

Unsurprised about the fact that Jasper knew that it was Lord Alvarado who came half a year ago from the great northwest, the little prince shrugged and replied, "This is Waterhoof City. What I say goes."

Jasper understood.

"By telling you this, you should also know that I don't really like partnerships. Are you sure you want to continue your earlier discussion?" The little prince asked meaningfully.

The white horse began to slowly walk forward and Jasper narrowed his eyes above it to say, "I'm not Lord Alvarado."

“But I’m still the little prince,” The little prince replied with a crescent eyed smile.

“Lord Alvarado came to race horses in Waterhoof City with you, so a winner and a loser could be determined. But I’m different.”

Jasper turned to look at the little prince.

“I came here to look for you, Little Prince, because I want to win with you.”

The little prince chuckled and replied, “Go ahead and tell me, then. Don’t ask if it’s a small deal, as I don’t have the effort for such a thing. You know how busy I am.”

“I want the US Stock Market index to drop by 3000 points.”

Jasper said.

“Neigh!”

The black horse’s head tilted upward and let out a long neigh in pain.

The little prince loosened the reins that he had suddenly tugged too hard in shock. Then, he turned to look at Jasper and said neither coldly nor warmly, "It's not a good habit to always be such a sensationalist."

Even someone as dignified as the little prince felt his heart tremble when he heard Jasper.

Not because the little prince was not educated enough or weak at masking his emotions, but because Jasper's words were just too extreme.

If Jasper was not such a formidable man, then the little prince would surely have asked Coffey to throw this madman out of the club grounds.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1321

“Lying to the little prince is most certainly not a good habit,” Jasper’s tone and attitude were sincere, “And I don’t like doing things that are all effort but bring no benefits.”

The little prince arched his brow and chuckled, “You mean it?”

Jasper replied sincerely, “Why would I amuse you with such a huge lie?”

The little prince narrowed his eyes and asked, “Do you know what damage 3000 points will do to the US stock market?”

“I do. As of this moment, the Dow Jones Index is at 10982 points. A drop of 3000 points means that humanity will face the biggest financial crisis in history, and more than 1 trillion US Dollars will be lost.”

The little prince narrowed his eyes but did not say anything.

“Why would I ask you to join if the market wasn’t so big?”

Jasper chuckled, his tone casual as if he was discussing the porridge he had that morning.

“Before I came to look for you, Lord Alvarado, who left you the horse, already agreed to work with me.”

“Your plan?” The little prince asked curtly. His expression was serious and... excited in a way Jasper had never seen before.

Yes, excitement.

For people with an identity and status like the little prince's, they would not feel interested in incidents that were normally seen as earth shattering to ordinary people.

Money?

The little prince would not even bat an eye at the transaction of more than a billion or even tens of billions.

Power?

There was no one more powerful than the Royal family in Waterhoof City.

Women?

Discussing this was an insult to the little prince.

Only a game involving hundreds of billions or even trillions of US Dollars, a setup that would affect the current strongest country in the world and even the entire western financial ecosystem, had the ability to excite him.

“No plan.”

Jasper’s two word reply was like cold water on Lhe little prince’s flame of excitement.

“Are you kidding me?” The little prince harrumphed.

Jasper sighed lightly and replied, “If you don’t mind me being bold, what kind of plan do you think I have to come up with to achieve such a result, Little Prince?”

The little prince frowned silently.

Indeed, this plan had to guarantee that the economy of the strongest country in the world had to suffer greatly, thus resulting in the Dow Jones Index dropping by 3000 points. Only a madman who would want to stir up trouble in the world would dare to come up with such a plan.

If not a madman, there were only so many countries who hated the United States to such an extent.

This was something not even the government could attempt, let alone a single person.

“All I can say is that there’s an opportunity.”

“And from what I see, this opportunity will arrive very soon. Once it’s here, then everything will run smoothly,” Jasper said vaguely.

He could not tell anyone about the 9/11 incident, or this Mr. Laine might get dragged to the lab to be researched on.

“What kind of opportunity will cause the entire index to drop by a third?” The little prince asked coldly, not believing Jasper at all.

Jasper had been prepared to face this question.

“Finance is like the sea, and there are always signs of ups and downs. Since the concept of macroeconomics was put forward, human economics and finance have thus faced its own set of regulations.

“I can open a door for you to walk through, Little Prince, and all you need to do is promise me something.”

“That you can transfer enough funds over so I can do what you want me to do. That’s all, Little Prince.”

The little prince smiled when he heard Jasper.

“Jasper, do you know that no one’s ever dared to talk to me like that? What do you take me for? A lackey? A money provider? Or an accountant?”

Jasper shrugged and replied, “We’re partners.”

“Interesting.”

The little prince's smile did not change.

"Alright, then, Since I don't need to do anything but promise you, I can give you my word. "

"But Jasper, even an untouchable promise comes with consequences. You have to know that I won't like it if I feel that you're lying to me."

Jasper nodded. "You have the right to feel that way, Little Prince."

"Good," The little prince chuckled then tapped the black horse under him with both legs lightly.

Professionally trained, the black horse immediately understood its master's command and began to gallop "Follow me. If you manage to stay on the horse for two rounds, I'll agree to the partnership."

Jasper copied the little prince and tapped the white horse under him with both legs lightly. He was hoping to follow the little prince, only to awkwardly realize that the white horse refused to move.

"Please? Won't you trot a bit?" Jasper asked carefully.

The beautiful white horse neighed but did not seem to understand Jasper.

The horse was confused, but not more than the man.

Two hours later, with a sore waist and the skin around inner thighs about to peel off from all the friction, Jasper winced as he got into the Bentley.

“Jasper, do you want to go to the hospital?” Julian asked concernedly when he saw how much pain Jasper was in.

Jasper waved his hand and replied, “No need. The horseback riding instructor inside said that this is the case for all new riders. I just need to soak in a hot bath for half an hour and sleep it off tonight and all will be fine.”

Jasper then began to grumble resentfully, “How did those people from ancient times do this? Transport back then was either on feet or horses.”

While in great pain, Jasper was in a good mood. Despite the small inconvenience, the objective of this trip was completed.

Just as Jasper’s car left the horseback riding grounds, the little prince walked out in a new set of clothes.

“Oh, right”

The little prince seemed to suddenly remember something.

“That Jasper fled too fast. Send him this diamond membership card later and tell him to practice more. What a country bumpkin.”

The little prince could not help but laugh out loud when he thought back to how Jasper winced and grimaced today.

Coffey followed him from behind and replied softly, “I understand... It’s rare to see you so happy, Little Prince.”

“How can I not be happy when I’ve met such an interesting person and thing?”

“Oh, and send that black horse to him.”

Coffey was stunned and replied in shock, “But Little Prince, that’s your favorite horse from the few that you took from Lord Alvarado.”

“It’s just a horse. If what he said today was true, I wouldn’t even mind giving him the entire equestrian grounds.”

The little prince said before his smile slowly faded.

“Have a few trustworthy men look in on the United States stock market to check what the actual situation is.”

“Jasper might be a country bumpkin, but he’s never done anything non-beneficial to him since he started his business. He has no reason to risk offending me and make a joke like this.”

“I understand, Little Prince.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1322

Upon leaving the horseback riding grounds, Jasper immediately returned to Southeast Province.

He had come to Waterhoof City for two reasons. One was so he could complete the loan procedures, and two, to invite the little prince to join him.

Now that both these things were over and done with, and Jasper still had much to do in Southeast Province, Jasper had no reason to further his stay in Waterhoof City.

It was already night by the time he returned to Southeast Province.

Jasper had underestimated the strain from riding a horse for the first time, and his legs were so sore he could hardly move them.

“The little prince definitely did this on purpose. Oh, that little rascal, I’ll make him pay for this next time!”

Jasper’s shouts stunned Dawson when the man came to greet him.

“You went to meet the little prince?” Dawson asked solemnly.

“Yeah. I went to talk about a partnership with him,” Jasper slowly made his way into the villa with Dawson’s support.

“I even rode horses with him the entire day today. I’m in so much pain right now.”

Dawson let out a sigh of relief when he took in Jasper's attitude and tone. Then, he said, "The little prince's familial background is too powerful and his identity is too high up. You have to be careful when dealing with him."

Jasper was about to reply when Julian ran over from behind him and announced, "Jasper, Mr. Schuler, Coffey, the little prince's right hand, just called to say that the little prince gave you a diamond membership card to the horseback riding grounds as well as the black horse, Jasper."

Jasper snorted. "I am not going to make myself suffer that again!"

Dawson was stunned.

He was extremely surprised to know that the little prince also sent Jasper a gift.

After all, the little prince's identity and status was just too high.

"Looks like you two are quite close."

After a long time, Dawson sighed.

Jasper replied, "Don't worry, Uncle Schuler. I know my limits. These people aren't actually too difficult to talk to. They're just a bit higher on the social ladder. But so what?"

"As long as they have desires and wants, then they'll partner with you. The smarter the person, the more worthy of a partner they are, and the easier they are to talk to."

Dawson nodded and asked, "It's related to what you told me before, about the United States stock market, right?"

"This might just be the only thing that can interest him," Jasper nodded and admitted.

He would not keep secrets from Dawson, let alone when his further father-in-law had just lent him 1 billion dollars. Logically speaking, he had to explain what he needed the money for.

"Jasper, if this is about making money, then you don't need the help from so many other forces. As long as there's an opportunity, your capabilities are more than enough."

"But now that you've accumulated so much, and even enlisted the help of Lord Alvarado and the little prince, you're going to be in a lot of danger once you make too big a movement," Dawson reminded vaguely.

Jasper nodded and replied, "I know, Uncle Schuler. But the west's capitalist market isn't that easy to deal with. I could get rich easily, but it won't be easy to get out in one piece after."

"What I need to do now is ensure that I can get the money and come out unscathed. I alone am not strong enough. If someone's actively targeting me, then instead of me exploiting the situation to gain wealth, I'll end up being the one who is exploited."

Since the beginning, Jasper's plan had been to confirm the damage the 9/11 incident would deal to the United States' and the western economy, much like the crude oil incident from years before. He planned to earn money from this incident before fleeing immediately. However, things were different now.

He was no longer the insignificant retail investor with just a few million in capital. His accumulated funds alone amounted to 9 billion, and he could turn it to 10 billion if need be.

However, these funds were nothing in comparison to the entire United States financial system. Still, as the leader of the western financial bloc, the United States would not go down without a fight.

Not to mention that the conflict between the East and the West was the most crucial worldwide conflict since the World War Two.

All international political events had stemmed from this conflict.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1323

He was an easterner, and of Somer descent, so naturally, the west was his enemy.

More importantly, Jasper had already realized that someone was targeting him so he had to deal with this issue extremely carefully.

Dawson patted Jasper on the shoulder when he heard the man and did not say anymore.

As of this moment, Jasper no longer needed to be reminded at every turn.

“Alright, then. Go take a bath and rest, we’ll eat dinner in a few.”

Jasper soaked comfortably in the bathtub upstairs.

He could not help but think that the rich had nothing better to do. ‘Instead of enjoying life as it is, why do you have to make yourself suffer with horseback riding?’

The next day, Jasper and Wendy went to the office together.

Jasper arrived at his own office and began to chisel at his pile of work.

While Malcolm had managed to help shoulder a large portion of his responsibilities, there were still a lot of things Jasper had to deal with himself.

There had been many accumulated matters that had to be dealt with immediately. Many of which were forced to be put on hold since he did not sign his agreement.

A day passed before he knew it.

By evening, the large stack of documents had finally been completely dealt with.

Jasper rubbed his sore neck and called someone to take out the pile of documents and distribute them to their respective departments.

“Come on, let’s go eat dinner.”

Wendy walked through the doors and saw Jasper massaging his neck. So, she naturally made her way over and raised her hands to give him a massage.

Jasper exhaled in comfort and asked, "Why are we eating out?"

"Dad went to do business outside and he's only coming back in three to five days. It's just the two of us and it'll be a trouble to ask the auntie at home to cook. So we might as well eat out," Wendy replied.

"Alright. You choose the place, my treat," Jasper took Wendy's hand and said with a smile after getting up from the chair and grabbing his jacket.

Ever since the successful development of the South Bank of the Southface River, Nauritus City's development seemed to have sped up as well.

The most evident change was that there were more shops selling luxury items on the street.

As long as you had money and the desire to spend it, shopping areas, restaurants and cafes, shops of different varieties could be all over the place.

Jasper and Wendy had originally planned to have something simple, but when they passed by a new and chic restaurant called New Garden Residence, Jasper brought Wendy in.

The servers were respectful and polite as they asked how many people were dining. When Jasper requested somewhere quiet, they immediately brought the two to a private room.

The room just happened to be a two-pax room, designed for couples or guests who needed some privacy.

After ordering and their waiter leaving, Jasper turned to Wendy who was taking the cutlery out, and said, "My first dream was to open a restaurant with average business, then I'll spend the rest of my life running that business with my wife and kids."

"I did not see that coming." Wendy glanced at Jasper and smiled mesmerizingly.

"Forget the situation back at school, when I met you again in Faith County, the impression you gave me was of someone who wanted to make money. A lot of money."

Jasper smiled but did not explain himself to Wendy.

The dream he brought up just now was real. It was just a dream he had in his past life.

The restaurant was not too busy so the food came quickly, its taste was not bad.

While he ate and chatted with Wendy, Jasper suddenly heard the sound of cutlery smashing in the adjacent private room.

Followed by shouting.

These things were not worth Jasper's attention, but the extremely familiar voice of a woman had him frowning.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1324

“Calvin! I thought that you would change for the better once you got out of jail, but you didn't change at all! I'm so disappointed in you!”

Jasper could not tell himself to ignore the woman's voice, especially when she called the other man Calvin. It was Penelope.

Jasper did not forget what Penelope's voice sounded like.

'But didn't I ask John to arrange some work for Penelope in ICBS?'

'Why's she suddenly in Nauritus City?'

Before Jasper could think about this, another voice rang out from the adjacent private room.

"Enough, Pen. I'm your brother. You know that I went to prison and people end up looking down on me because of this. Stop reminding me about the fact that I've spent time there. Don't you know that our mom will be sad if you keep saying that?"

This was Penelope's brother, Calvin's, voice. The man who was once the source of the so much misery in Jasper's past life.

He was still uncaring and casual.

"How do you have the shame to bring mom into this? If not for you, she wouldn't have gotten so angry that she got Alzheimer's! She doesn't even recognize me now."

"Not counting the first few days, have you visited and taken care of her even once since you came out? I'm the one who's been taking care of her this whole time, so how do you have the shame to talk about her?" Penelope said angrily.

Calvin was also mortified and he shouted, "Enough! Are you done yet? You think I alone am the sole cause for how mom is now?"

"If it weren't for you stupid f*cking boyfriend Jasper Laine, she wouldn't be so angry now either! You bear at least half the responsibility here!"

Even Wendy's gaze changed when she heard the man, let alone Jasper's.

Meeting Wendy's meaningful gaze, Jasper replied with a wry smile, "It should be Penelope and her brother. I don't know why they're here, though."

"Do you want to go say hi?" Wendy suggested courteously.

She did not have an ex, and her dating history was empty. Jasper was her first, and he would be her last too. However, she did not mind the fact that Jasper had dated before.

She knew that Jasper had long since moved on from Penelope.

"It's fine."

Jasper shook his head.

Since their relationship was already in the past, they were just strangers now. There was no need to see each other again.

Just as Jasper was about to move on from this topic, the quarrel in the adjacent private room grew louder.

The noise was loud enough to be heard outside, and it was evident that their dinner was doomed to become a disaster.

As Penelope and her brother fought at the private room doors, a waiter came to bring Jasper his dish.

The private doors opened and two pairs of eyes locked. The shouting instantly stopped and Jasper put his chopsticks down as well.

Calvin stared at Jasper with wide eyes and a curious expression on his face.

He had just come out of jail, so Calvin naturally had no idea of Jasper's sudden change. He still believed that Jasper was just a poor boy.

Calvin scoffed and stared at Jasper to say, “What a small world we have here. You probably never expected to meet me here, huh?”

Penelope’s expression changed immediately. She stood beside her brother as she dragged him away. “Let’s go!”

Calvin flung Penelope off, then pointed at Jasper while telling her, “Are you kidding me, Pen? Why’re you so afraid of him?”

“You’re already the owner of your own company now. Your status is much higher than his! It’d be a disgrace to your identity now not to humiliate this f*cker when you see him!”

Penelope was both angry and frantic. She raised her hand to slap Calvin.

“You’re taking this too far, Calvin!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1325

Calvin cupped his face and looked at Penelope in disbelief. He shouted at Penelope angrily, “How dare you hit me!”

Calvin's eyes were filled with anger as he raised his hand to hit Penelope back.

Suddenly, Jasper grabbed his hand.

"No matter what, she's still your sister and she hit you for your own good. You hitting her is disrespectful," Jasper said indifferently.

Calvin glared at Jasper harshly and tried to pull his arm back and fling Jasper's wrist off, but his struggle was to no avail.

"F*cking let go of me!" Calvin shouted wretchedly.

"Don't assume that I have no idea what you're thinking of! Now that Pen is rich and has her own company, you want to get back together with her, don't you? You f*cking wish!"

Calvin pointed at Jasper's nose and shouted, "I've seen too many people like you! You have no f*cking right to be called a man! I'll beat you to death!"

Jasper ignored Calvin's crazed clamor and turned to Penelope, "This is your brother, you bring him back and teach him some manners."

Calvin wanted to say more when Penelope stared at him icily. “Leave this place right now, Calvin! If you keep causing trouble, then I’ll never give you another cent again! I swear!”

Calvin’s fury was immediately replaced with fear.

He had just gotten out of jail, and he did not have any income. Even if someone was willing to give him a job, the man was still too lazy to take up any manual labor. Not to mention, Penelope was rich now, and ran her own company. All Calvin wanted to do was to take money from Penelope.

This was why they had fought tonight.

Calvin could tell that Penelope was not joking. He clenched his teeth and told Jasper resentfully, “Look, you piece of crap. I don’t care what kind of tricks you have up your sleeve, but there’s no way I’d let you come back and be with Pen now that she’s rich!”

“Calvin!”

Penelope shouted.

“Do you even know what you’re talking about?!”

“Go out there and ask around who Jasper is! The entire JW Company is his. Ask any businessman here in Nauritus City if they know about JW Company!”

“What do you take my small company for? In comparison to JW, my company can’t even be considered a workshop!”

“Jasper is extremely wealthy here in the Southeast Province and his character isn’t something any normal person can compare to, let alone me. Do you even know how hilarious and embarrassing your words just now were?”

Calvin was stunned when he heard Penelope.

From the beginning, his impression of Jasper had always been of a poor boy from the village.

His family was in the county, and it was a blessing to Jasper that Penelope had wished to be with him in the past.

Yet, Jasper had turned things around and became someone with overwhelming wealth in the province. Calvin looked at the man before him. Ignoring the fact that he had previously spent time in prison, even his sister, the only person who could back him up, was nothing in front of Jasper.

The huge difference caused Calvin's expression to turn into something extremely interesting.

"What are you still waiting for? Get lost!"

Penelope shouted, waking Calvin from his daze.

The man glanced at Jasper with resentment and fear before he clenched his jaw and turned to leave. No one knew what he was thinking of, but his eyes shone with ferocity and envy.

Jasper did not stop him from leaving.

Looking at Penelope, Jasper said calmly, "Looks like you're doing better than I thought."

Penelope smiled sadly.

Only she knew her own suffering.

At that moment, Wendy also walked over from behind Jasper.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1326

Women look at each other differently from how men look at them.

This was not the first time Penelope had seen Wendy, but the two did not interact much back then.

Every time Penelope saw Wendy, she would feel inferior and embarrassed.

Wendy's pose and appearance were something ordinary girls did not have.

Penelope was aware that her features were above average, but she was like an ugly duckling in front of Wendy.

Thinking back to Jasper's current identity, Penelope suddenly realized how well these two complimented each other. They were a match made in heaven.

The spot next to Jasper once belonged to her.

This thought had always caused a rush of regret to fill her heart. This time was no different, which made her feel extremely uncomfortable.

“Hello. We’ve met before, I’m Wendy.”

Wendy extended her hand generously and greeted Penelope.

A man’s current and ex-girlfriends were innate enemies.

Despite this, Wendy did not show any hostility and behaved very generous and kind.

This was also why Penelope felt inferior.

She reached her hand out and replied rigidly, “H-Hello...”

“Entertain her for a while, Jasp, I’m going to the bathroom.”

This act was a testament to both Wendy’s EQ and IQ. She knew that Jasper and Penelope would not be able to talk freely if she was there.

Jasper might not have anything to tell Penelope, but Wendy did not care about that. In fact, she was willing to give Jasper and Penelope space to talk.

She knew that there was no way any relationship would blossom between the other two. Jasper might seem kind, but deep inside, he was more arrogant than anyone else.

At this moment, Jasper was no longer the man he used to be, and there was no way he would forgive Penelope who had once looked down on himself and get back together with her.

Thus, Wendy generously gave the two the chance to talk.

“Alright, come back soon, ” Jasper told Wendy with a gentle smile.

Wendy beamed and left gleefully.

“She’s very pretty.” Penelope stared at Wendy’s slim and gentle figure. As a woman herself, she could not help but praise Wendy’s beauty and elegance.

“Come sit.”

Jasper had Penelope return to the private room and sit down.

The Penelope before him was dressed in a female suit and her long hair was tied up. She looked drastically different from before.

The woman now looked more like a successful businesswoman. Gone was the city woman who only knew of the small world around her.

“I originally thought introducing a job for you at the ICBS was the best possible decision at the time, but it looks now like I was wrong,” Jasper said.

Penelope replied frantically, “I was in the middle of doing the job when there... there was a small accident.”

Jasper waved his hand and replied, “There’s no need to explain anything to me. It’s enough that you’re doing well. We can’t be lovers again, and being friends doesn’t seem very realistic either. But that doesn’t mean I don’t wish you a comfortable life from here on out.”

This sentence seemed to have broken through Penelope’s last defenses, as her eyes suddenly turned red and she said, “Only after everything that happened did I realize that you were genuinely good to me back then.

“All my mom cares about is my brother, and all my brother cares about is himself and money. You were the only one that truly cared about me.”

“Why say all this now?”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1327

Jasper shook his head and said softly, “We can’t be together again.”

Penelope took a piece of tissue to wipe the corner of her eyes before she said, “You don’t have to remind me, nor will I entertain those unrealistic delusions again.”

“What business are you doing now? If possible, there might be a chance for a partnership.”

Considering Jasper’s status and wealth in Southeast Province, the man was evidently trying to help Penelope.

Any businessperson within Southeast Province knew that partnering with JW company would lead to very healthy profits. It would be difficult not to make any money with JW.

“I mainly import clothing and make up from Harbor City,” Penelope replied honestly.

“Harbor City?” Jasper arched his brow slightly.

He was rather surprised that Penelope had contacts in Harbor City.

Penelope looked at Jasper sincerely and mustered the courage to say, “Someone took the initiative to contact me. They gave me funds and a team, basically set up an entire company and gave it to me to manage for free.”

“I did not know that such saints existed in this world.” Jasper narrowed his eyes. The situation felt peculiar to him, while Penelope also looked like she had more to say.

“They only had one request, and that was to approach you and gain your trust,” Penelope said suddenly, as if letting go of all inhibitions.

Jasper’s expression was solemn and unfazed.

“I don’t know what exactly I’m supposed to do after gaining your trust, but they weren’t too strict with me either. They even let me get close to you slowly, but I can’t but help think that they’re targeting you. You have to be careful.”

Penelope finished talking and suddenly got up to say, "I can't stay here for long. You have to be careful, Jasper. Especially of Mr. Atticus."

Jasper looked at Penelope and suppressed the shock and anger he felt before asking, "Did it occur to you that these people won't let you go after you tell me all this?"

Penelope chuckled wryly and replied, "But so what? Worse come to worst, I'll just return everything they gave me. It was never mine to begin with anyway."

"I originally thought that I'd be overjoyed after I became rich, I even thought that I'd do as they asked, but I changed my mind just now, Jasper. You're a good man, and you don't deserve to be hurt by horrible women like me."

"I had all this coming."

Penelope turned to leave after saying this.

Just as she grabbed the door handle, she heard Jasper speak up from behind.

"You can contact me if you need help."

Penelope's body froze and a flicker of joy flashed through her eyes. Then, she opened the room door without looking back.

Just as Wendy returned.

"You're leaving already?" Wendy asked in surprise.

Penelope forced a smile and replied, "Yeah. There's nothing much for me to say anyway. Good... goodbye."

Penelope rushed away and Wendy returned to see Jasper with a solemn look on his face.

"What's wrong? You just talked to your ex-lover for a bit and you look so solemn. Don't tell me she gave birth to your child without your knowledge," Wendy joked.

"What is that nonsense?" Jasper glared at Wendy.

"I just realized how I've been underestimating how vile my enemies can be. I don't think I'll be able to sleep peacefully at night if I don't completely get rid of him."

Jasper did not expect this move from Fabian at all. He naturally would not accept Penelope again since that was unrealistic.

However, Fabian did not seem to care so much about that, since he invested in Penelope anyway.

This proved one point.

That Fabian was willing to do anything just to deal with Jasper, and that the man's methods were cruel and vile. This thought made Jasper lose his appetite. He stood up and said, "Wendy, let's go back first. I need to contact people in Harbor City."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1328

Naturally, Wendy would not hold Jasper back if he wanted to head home.

The two got up and called the server over to pay the bill before they left the restaurant.

By then, Julian had already driven the car over and was waiting for them. The two of them got inside and the Bentley immediately started to head toward the villa.

At the same time, a taxi had also driven out from a dark corner and started following the Bentley from afar.

In the taxi.

“Faster! Follow them, don’t let them get away!” Calvin’s expression was wretched as he sat in the passenger seat.

The taxi driver looked hesitant.

“Seriously, man, that’s a Bentley. A car that costs two to three million Somer Dollars. I can’t afford to offend someone with that car. How about we don’t do this and you hail a different taxi instead?”

Calvin’s expression darkened. He did not know what a Bentley entailed, all he knew was that he had never seen a luxury car like Jasper’s before in his life.

When he heard that this car was worth a few million, Calvin went mad with envy.

Jasper, that b*stard. To think that he was so wealthy but kept the money all to himself. The man was not even willing to give him a few hundred thousand before this!

He would not have been left to rot in prison if he had gotten the money back then.

Calvin's chest twisted in anger when he thought of this. Heart aching, Calvin pulled out a one hundred Somer Dollar banknote from his pant pocket and said icily, "Just follow them already! Cut the nonsense!"

While the driver was still unwilling, he immediately shut up when he saw the hundred Somer Dollars.

The taxi soon followed the Bentley out of the city center. The Bentley was a short distance away from the villa now. In the quiet car, Julian glanced at the rearview mirror and saw a familiar car following them from a small distance away. He narrowed his eyes.

He had been aware of this car since the beginning. Julian had initially thought that the person coincidentally happened to be taking the same path as them. After all, there was no rule that only he was allowed to take this route.

However, Julian had also purposefully made a detour and, after realizing that this familiar car was still following them, immediately that this was not a coincidence.

"Jasper, someone's following us."

Julian informed Jasper of the situation.

Jasper frowned slightly and said, "Let's find out who it is."

Julian nodded and made a turn, driving the car into a small alleyway.

"F*ck! Chase after them, quickly!"

Calvin was impatient when he saw the Bentley make a sudden turn, afraid that he would lose track of it.

His goal tonight would be to find out where exactly Jasper lived. Then, he would gather the friends he made in jail to teach Jasper a harsh lesson.

It would be even better if he had managed to get money from Jasper.

Calvin felt his body burn up, especially when he thought about Wendy's alluring appearance and figure he had caught sight of today.

It was unfair that such a pretty woman would be so blind as to stay with Jasper. If he had the chance to kiss such a beauty...

“Quickly follow them!” Calvin urged impatiently.

The driver had no other choice. On behalf of that one hundred Somer Dollar banknote, he stepped on the accelerator and followed.

Only to see the Bentley stopped by the road once they turned the corner.

“F*ck! We’ve been found out!”

The driver was frantic and also silently regretful.

It would be best if the people they were tailing did not discover them, but now that they did, he began to regret his greed.

It was a stupid decision to offend some formidable figure who could afford a Bentley over a hundred bucks.

“What... what do we do?” Just as the driver was frantic, a tall, well-toned, and expressionless man suddenly appeared before the taxi.

“Holy sh*t!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1329

Like a ghost, Julian’s appearance startled the taxi driver, causing him to instinctively turn the steering wheel.

Screech.

The taxi drifted and came to an emergency stop in the middle of the street.

Julian walked over to the side of the car expressionlessly and opened the door to pull Calvin out.

“Who told you to follow us?” Julian grabbed Calvin by his throat and asked coldly.

Calvin felt like his throat was clamped up as he struggled to breathe. His eyes were filled with fear and shock.

He wanted to struggle, but that only caused the hand around his throat to tighten. In the end, Calvin's eyes rolled back as he struggled like a fish out of water.

"Let him go, Jul."

A voice rang out, and Calvin immediately felt the hand around his throat loosen.

The first thing he did was cup his painful neck and take big gulps of fresh air.

For the first time, he realized how lucky he was to be able to breathe easily.

Jasper, who had alighted the car some time ago, felt disappointed when he realized that it was Calvin who had been secretly following him.

He thought that it would be Fabian's men.

“Why did you follow me?” Jasper asked Calvin.

Catching his breath, Calvin looked at Jasper resentfully and scolded, “Do you own this street? What if I just so happen to be here, huh?”

Jasper requested indifferently, “Slap him, Jul.”

Julian raised his hand to slap Calvin across the face without hesitation.

Even though Julian had already controlled his strength and ‘lightly’ hit the man, the slap almost stripped off a layer of Calvin’s skin.

Slap!

Calvin cupped his cheek. Half his face felt numb.

His eyes were bloodshot as he stared at Jasper and Julian in utter resentment. He roared, “How dare you hit me?!”

“Slap him again,” Jasper said calmly.

Slap!

He got smacked again.

This time across the other cheek.

The two slaps caused both of Calvin’s cheeks to turn red and bruised, making his face resemble a pig’s head. These two slaps also deterred Calvin from causing further trouble.

The man cupped his face but did not shout any more, opting to stare at Jasper angrily instead.

“Can you talk normally now?” Jasper asked.

Calvin did not say anything, but the fury and indignant he felt internally made him want to swallow Jasper alive.

“My relationship with your family is already in the past. There’s nothing between us, not now, not ever. What happened tonight is just a small lesson, and I hope this deters you in the future.”

Jasper walked over to Calvin and said expressionlessly. “You know how horrible my temper can be sometimes. So, let’s not have a next time, understood?”

Calvin shuddered.

He kept his head down and balled his fists. After a long while, he seethed out, “Understood.”

“Very good.” Jasper nodded and turned to leave.

Julian glanced at Calvin to remember the man’s face before he turned around and left as well.

The engine soon started and the Bentley drove away. Meanwhile, the taxi had also dashed off like a frightened animal.

Leaving Calvin in the middle of nowhere.

Calvin clenched his jaw and stared at the vanishing taillights of the Bentley with bloodshot eyes. With a wretched and devilish roar, he shouted, “Just you wait, Jasper! Don’t act so f*cking proud! I’ll kill you one day!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1330

After a round of crazy screaming and venting, Calvin sat down on the curb despondently.

No matter how unwilling he was to admit it, Calvin knew deep inside that he and Jasper were of drastically different statuses. He belonged in the mud while Jasper lived high up in the skies.

He was unable to destroy Jasper on his own.

Therefore, he had to employ a more special method. Calvin then pulled out a small slip of paper from the innermost pocket of his pants and looked at the cursive phone number written on it.

After he was released from prison, he realized that his sister Penelope had managed to turn her life around and become the owner of a company. Calvin knew his sister too well. She might be able to play cards with a bunch of married women and talk to parents about homely matters, but Penelope was not equipped to start up a company.

Under Calvin's close observation, he finally found out that Penelope would contact someone from time to time.

Calvin first thought that this was a new lover Penelope had found, but he slowly realized that Penelope was terrified of him.

After a period of observation, Calvin realized that this mysterious man was the reason Penelope now had her own company to manage. The other party had provided resources, products, and sales channels, and all his sister had to do was be the company's owner.

Calvin had also discovered a huge secret.

This person seemed to be asking his sister to deal with Jasper.

"So, you're not going to help me as Jasper steps all over me, huh, Pen? Fine! Then you two have no right to blame me for being cruel!"

Calvin said to himself before he dialed the number he secretly copied from Penelope's phone.

A moment later, the call connected.

No one said anything.

Calvin's breathing was heavy as he ignored the excitement and pain in his cheek to say, "I'm Penelope's brother."

The person on the other end of the line finally replied.

"Penelope wouldn't dare to give you my contact number. How did you find me?"

Calvin chuckled and said, "That's none of your business. I'm just telling you that my sister has never carried out any of your orders. She doesn't even dare to deal with Jasper."

The other end of the line fell silent for a moment before he said indifferently, "And how does that concern you?"

"Of course it does! "

Calvin raised his voice suddenly, his aura seeped with resentment and heartlessness.

“I’ll do the things she’s too afraid to! And I’ll definitely do it better than she can!”

After a long while, the person on the other end replied, “Interesting. I originally planned to get rid of you, but if you’re this confident, I might just be willing to give you a chance.”

Calvin was overjoyed. “I won’t disappoint you.”

Having immediately returned to the villa, Jasper naturally had no idea of what happened after he left. As far as he was concerned, whether Calvin gave up or tried to take revenge in the future was an insignificant matter to him.

The higher his status and the greater his wealth, the more people would hate him.

Jasper would not have time to do anything if he spent effort and time dealing with insignificant people like Calvin all day.

His true enemies were people like Fabian.

Just then, his video call with the Law family also connected.

“Hello, Uncle Law. How are you doing?”

Jasper smiled at Zachary on the monitor and said as he sat in the study.

Zachary waved him off and took a sip of tea idly before he said, “You don’t contact me unless there’s something you need. Go ahead, then. What is it?”

Jasper laughed out loud. Considering his relationship with the Law family, there was no need for too many unnecessary pleasantries, so he went straight to the point, “Uncle Law, do you still remember when I said I’ll show you an opportunity to make a large sum of money?”

Be it Jasper, or the Law family, personal interest was always the strongest bond in a relationship.

The Law family admired Jasper greatly and had been helping him all this while. Whenever Jasper asked, they would always help him without holding back.

However, Jasper had to eventually repay them for their help.

From the very beginning, Zachary and Old Master Law had greatly admired Jasper's capabilities. In this way, their help could be understood as a form of investment in him.

This was especially true after the Harbor City stock crisis whereby the Law family and the whole of Harbor City had seen Jasper's capabilities. Due to this, the relationship between them only grew closer.

Now was finally the time for Jasper to repay their kindness.

"Of course I do."

Zachary's eyes lit up in interest and he put the teacup in his hands down.

"Why? Has the opportunity arrived?"

Jasper grunted in affirmation and informed him that in these two months, this bull market has been showing signs of a dwindling, and that there would be a huge pullback.

"Our analyst team has also caught on to what you just said long ago, but this is a technical pullback Do you think that there's a huge opportunity here?"

Zachary frowned slightly and asked in confusion.

Jasper smiled. No one would expect the earth-shattering 9/11 incident to happen at such a time.

It would turn this technical pullback into a horrifying plummet on the market. However, Jasper would not tell him that.

“It’s not that I don’t believe you, Jasper, but you have to consider this very carefully.

“If we misread the direction and trend and put in more than a billion Somer Dollars, not only will we lose the money if something goes wrong. But we’ll also anger Wall Street’s capitalists.”

“More than a billion?” Jasper chuckled and proceeded to say something that stunned Zachary.

“Uncle Law, my funds alone amount to 9 billion and I even contacted the little prince and Lord Alvarado. The three of us together will amount funds of at least 20 billion.”

“So much?!” Zachary was an experienced man, but he was still dazed by what he heard.

“You know me, Uncle Law. I wouldn’t make such a big move if I wasn’t sure.”

Zachary’s brows knitted together, and three wrinkled lines appeared between them.

He had more to consider than Jasper did.

“Tell me, Jasper, how sure of this are you? We’re hitting hard at what is essentially Wall Street’s artery, the center of the global economy. There are countless wealthy capitalists there.”

“We’re no match to their money and capabilities. If we fail, the entire Law family could potentially fall.”

Jasper smiled and replied with a fiery gaze, “The western capitalists have been making money off of people all over the world for centuries. Their roots are most certainly too deep and unreachable.”

“I’m not planning to use this opportunity to do anything to them either. But I’m certain I can make them suffer a little. I’m ninety percent sure of my success!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1331

Jasper's tone was calm, but it was filled with a lot of confidence.

Zachary's expression was solemn.

After some time, Zachary finally asked, "How much funds do you need from the Law family?"

"At least 5 billion, but with no upper limit."

Jasper's reply had Zachary's brow jumping again. According to what Jasper said before about amounting a total of 20 billion with Lord Alvarado and the little prince's input, another 5 billion meant that Jasper would have 25 billion to use.

25 billion in the year 2001.

That was enough to win an economic war of an underdeveloped country!

Even in the future, when Internet companies would have valuations of tens and hundreds of billions, only people who truly worked in the industry knew that market evaluations were much more exaggerated than they ought to be.

This market value was only a number to scam retail investors of their money. Not to mention that this 25 billion now was physical money.

There were no companies or people in the world now who could take out such a large amount.

“I can give you 7 billion.” Zachary clenched his jaw as his eyes shone with a sharp glint.

Harbor City’s economy might be flourishing, but it had already shown signs of weakening.

For no other reason than the fact that Harbor City was too small and there were no more resources to continue developing.

This was also why the four richest families, lead by the Law family, were planning to further development in the mainlands. This was even though the most renowned families had long since diversified their investments to areas like Southeast Terra and the Golden Peninsula.

However, Harbor City was still where their most important roots laid, and the moment Harbor City loses all potential for future development, then the Law family would start heading on a downward trend.

There had already been signs of limited potential.

In the face of such an opportunity, Zachary chose to risk it and trust Jasper.

This 7 billion worth of cash was the maximum amount the Law family could take out without affecting the daily operations of their properties.

After all, the Law family had still yet to recover from the fallout of the stock crisis. Had Jasper not helped the Law family earn a huge amount from the bursting of the dot-com bubble back then, the Law family might not even be able to take 7 billion out.

However, looking at the bigger picture, even if Jasper failed this time, the Law family still had their roots to fall back on.

“Uncle Law, victory is ours.”

Jasper told Zachary sincerely.

The Law family had a total asset of almost a hundred billion, but Jasper understood that total assets and liquid were different things.

Just like how Jasper would not sell JW Company to gather funds, the Law family would not liquidate their core properties.

This 7 billion had already surpassed Jasper's expectations.

This was trust that not even ordinary family members could give each other, let alone Jasper and the Law family, who were completely unrelated.

Zachary smiled generously and said, "I trust you. If you think you can do it, then I have no reason not to make use of this opportunity."

"Uncle Law, there's one more thing."

Jasper proceeded to tell Zachary about Fabian's control over Penelope.

"Fabian's setup is more detailed and deeper than I thought. I don't know how many backup plans he has waiting in the dark."

Zachary turned solemn again when he heard this and asked, “Do you need the Law family to step out?”

Jasper shook his head and replied, “The situation in Harbor City isn’t stable right now. Even if the Atticus family isn’t part of the four richest families, it’s not any weaker than the four. We’re about to do something huge and it would be unwise to involve the entire family at such a time.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1332

Hearing Jasper, Zachary nodded in approval and replied, “You’ve become much more mature now, Jasper.”

The four richest families in Harbor City were deeply intertwined, and most of the time, their relationship was not as simple as mere friends or enemies.

While the Atticus family was not among the four richest families, it held an extremely unique position.

As Jasper said, the Atticus family was not weaker than any of the four richest families.

In reality, the fact that the Atticus family was not one of the four made it much more convenient for them to conduct their operations.

Take the stock crisis before, for example. When Harbor City's economy took a huge hit, the citizens and Harbor Government placed all their hope on the four richest families. They did not expect much from the Atticus family.

When it came to Fabian, anything the Law family did to him would be understood as a move against the entire Atticus family. The Atticus family was not an easy opponent either, and they might not surrender to the Law family.

The Law family, of course, did not fear the Atticus family, but Harbor City's current situation was a mess, and the whole Atticus family could potentially be triggered by a small move. Since the situation was already less than ideal, it was better not to create any more issues.

This had always been the Law family's reasoning.

As far as Jasper was concerned, it was important to recognize that the Law family and himself were different entities. This was a personal issue between Fabian and himself, and it was evident from the man's setup that he intended to kill Jasper.

With this premise in mind, unless the Law family completely destroyed Fabian, he would not give up on attacking Jasper.

Otherwise, Fabian would not have plotted against him so openly despite knowing Jasper's relationship with the Laws.

Not to mention that Fabian was also the Atticus family's only heir, and unless the Law family was ready to fight the Atticus Family to the death, they would not completely destroy Fabian.

"Uncle Law, I just need you to keep a close eye on Fabian. Especially the transfer of the Atticus family's or Fabian's personal funds," Jasper said.

Zachary frowned slightly and asked, "You're worried that Fabian will see through your plan?"

'He most likely already did.'

Jasper sighed internally.

When he found out that someone was targeting him on the United States stock markets, Jasper's first guess was Fabian.

The man had the motive and the capability.

Fabian was certainly the most difficult opponent Jasper had ever encountered.

It was either Fabian or a capitalist from Wall Street, but the latter was not very likely.

The only Wall Street capitalist Jasper had crossed paths with was Quantum Funds, but they should be busy profiting off retail investors in the European financial market. They could not keep an eye on him all the time. Therefore, Jasper was more inclined to believe that Fabian was behind this.

“Harbor City is too far away for me to do anything, especially if its something as subtle as the transfer of funds. Without your help, Uncle Law, there’s no way I’d be able to keep an eye on Fabian. Thus, I’ll have to ask for your help with this considerably important matter, Uncle Law.”

Zachary nodded solemnly and replied, “Alright. You have my word. I’ll contact you right away if I have any news.”

Jasper replied in relief, “I can rest assured with your promise, Uncle Law.”

“I also hope to have Henry by my side during this incident. It’s also a chance to let him feel the risks of a fight involving huge sums of capital.”

Jasper's suggestion had Zachary laughing out loud. Within the family, Henry, who previously refused to take up any form of business, was the thing that worried him the most.

However, Zachary had watched how his son matured ever since he became friends with Jasper. He was also very impressed with the old master's insistence on having Henry stay by Jasper's side since the very beginning.

Therefore, Zachary was overjoyed to hear this suggestion.

"I'll have him leave tomorrow."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1333

"But remember to keep a good eye on him this time. Don't let him fool around with his useless friends. He almost got involved in a murder last time and that's not a small issue."

"The Law family is powerful, and that's why we're very strict with who succeeds the family business. The moment his record is tarnished with a charge like that, it'd be a huge hit to him and the Law family."

Jasper nodded and replied, "I know what to do."

“Right, and Uncle Law? If possible, perhaps you could release news of this to two of the other four richest families, excluding Wallace Langdon’s family.”

“You want them to join..?”

“I don’t have such plans in mind yet, but like I said. It’s just a precaution.”

“Alright. I’ll invite them out for tea.”

After a few more idle exchanges, the video call ended since Zachary had some other business to attend to.

While Jasper began to plan in the mainlands, his operations against the market trend in the United States financial market finally attracted the attention of some forces, particularly due to his astronomical amount of funds.

Somer Descents might be the most hardworking and smartest people, but that did not mean they could overlook the western world’s power.

After all, the west had been the true rulers of the world for the past few centuries.

The west was led the world almost all aspects, be it modern economies, finance, governments, and armed forces.

The blood filled sufferings of Somer descents a century ago was a lesson to them not to look down on these blond haired and blue eyed men.

“Mr. Rogers, according to the evaluation report, Jasper’s began to operate against the market trend 11 days ago. He first sold a majority of the stocks under his name and gained no less than 200 million US Dollars.”

“Then, he gathered his funds from mainland Somerland and began to short-sell the Dow Jones Index while buying gold futures.”

“As of this moment, he has a total position worth 530 million US Dollars.”

As the chief of Quantum Funds’ think tank, Vincent had a scholarly air about him. The elegant gentleman had a pair of gold-rimmed glasses sitting on his nose and he looked like a university professor.

The man spoke calmly and at a normal pace, but his words were clear and his gentle voice sounded very friendly.

Sitting behind the office table, Rogers looked at the evaluation report in his hand expressionlessly.

“Vincent, tell me. What do you think Jasper’s intentions are?” Rogers asked.

Vincent replied calmly, “We don’t have sufficient material and data yet to profile him or logically predict what he’s about to do.”

Rogers put the report down and got up to take a bottle of red wine from the wine cabinet in his office. He poured Vincent a glass first before he said, “My old friend. Forget the data, why do you think Jasper’s doing this?”

Vincent sipped the red wine and replied with a shrug, “Maybe he’s crazy.”

“The Dow Jones Index might be oscillating, but anyone with more than six months of investment experience could tell that this is just a technical pullback of the market.”

“This alone is something our Quantum Funds as well as the other financial companies in Wall Street have arrived at a consensus of.”

“But based on Jasper’s current operations, we can tell that he thinks a stock crisis is about to happen and he wants to profit from the United States citizens.”

Rogers chuckled and replied, "That's impossible unless there's suddenly war on United States grounds, and the United States loses."

As the president of Quantum Funds and one of the main financial forces of Wall Street, Rogers had the qualifications to say something like that.

"What do you think we should do, Vincent?"

Vincent glanced at Rogers and replied, "This Jasper Laine from Somerland might have achieved extraordinary success according to our intelligence, but he's still nothing in comparison to Quantum Funds, let alone strong enough to go against Wall Street."

"There's no entity in Somerland powerful enough to challenge Wall Street's capital."

"So I think we should do nothing."

Rogers shook his head and replied, "No, Vincent. I've fought Jasper before, and he... the feeling he gives me is that we can't look down on an opponent like him."

Rogers' words caused something to finally flicker across Vincent's gentle expression.

One was the president of Quantum Funds and the other was the chief of the funds' think tank. The two had been working intimately together for more than a decade, so they were both very familiar with the other's character.

This was also why Vincent was so shocked about Rogers's high regard for Jasper.

"From what I know, this is the highest praise you've ever given a youth."

"Even Winston Bennett admires him a lot, so it's only natural that I don't underestimate him." Rogers clapped Vincent's shoulder.

"My old friend, there's a saying in Somerland that goes 'Don't overlook the young for their inexperience.' This sentence teaches you not to underestimate an opponent just because they're young and not as powerful as you. Because one day in the future, he might just become someone extremely formidable."

"So, as the chief of Quantum Funds' think tank, I need you to give me a more comprehensive evaluation and counter suggestion."

Vincent put the glass down and got up to say, "I'll need more information and intelligence on him."

“I’ll grant you full authority.”

“Three days.”

“Okay.”

A similar situation was also happening in the investment banks Layman, as well as Colossal Investments.

The situation in Layman was similar to the one in Quantum Funds. While Colossal Investments was reacting differently because of their partnership with Jasper.

In Colossal Investment’s Terra regional branch headquarters, Harbor City.

Celine crossed her legs where she sat on the chair in the conference room.

In front of her was a huge electronic display, separated into six portions with a video feed playing out on each of them.

This was a managerial meeting of Colossal Investments' headquarters and the large regional branches around the world.

Without question, this was an extremely high profile video conference.

At this moment, Celine voiced her opinion to the president

"President Paulson, I think the investment bank's senior executives are overreacting to Jasper's actions."

Celine's first sentence immediately had Paulson, the president of Colossal Investments, frowning slightly.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1334

"Miss Maynard, you have to understand that Jasper's actions have already attracted the attention of a portion of Wall Street's financial companies. His high risk operations against the market trend require the investment bank to reevaluate our partnership with him."

Paulson's voice was calm but powerful.

Not that it affected Celine.

“Pardon my boldness, President Paulson, but excluding our involvement in Sena’s listing, does the investment bank have any other important partnerships with Jasper?”

Paulson fell silent

The other presidents of the other major regions around the world fell deep into thought as well.

“As far as I know, there isn’t. Jasper has only entrusted the investment bank to manage a portion of his portfolio.”

Faint mockery and disdain graced Celine’s exquisite features.

“So what do Jasper’s actions have to do with the investment bank? Or perhaps I should rephrase myself, can the investment bank even control Jasper?”

Paulson answered with displeasure, “Please watch your choice of words, Miss Maynard. You are now on the video conference involving presidents of Colossal Investments’ large regional branches from around the world. Everything you say and do is recorded.”

“I will take responsibility for my behavior, President Paulson.”

Celine replied strongly.

“But I stand by what I said. Jasper will take responsibility for his own actions, he is just one of our many customers.”

“At the same time, the investment bank is also one of the many options Jasper can choose from. There is no binding relationship, we are but customer and service provider.”

“The investment bank can choose not to help in times of need, nor does it have to add salt to his wounds.”

“Because of all this, I greatly disagree with the reevaluation of our partnership with Jasper.”

Paulson looked at Celine calmly, as if his gaze could traverse half the globe and fall on her.

“Alright. The head quarters will consider your opinion.”

“I’ve said my part,” Celine stated calmly.

An hour later, the conference ended.

The first thing Celine did when she returned to her office was to call Jasper.

“What have you been doing lately?”

Jasper smiled when he heard Celine’s question and replied, “Let me guess, your superiors gave you a hard time?”

The corner of Celine’s lips lifted beautifully.

“I really can’t hide anything from you. But there’s no way you can hide your actions from Wall Street or the investment bank, it’s unrealistic.”

Jasper gestured for his subordinate, who was sitting and reporting some information in front of him, to leave the office before he smiled and replied, “I never intended to hide it from anyone.”

Celine sighed and asked, "Can you tell me what you have in mind?"

"I'm investing! I think that the United States economy will go downhill, so I'm setting things up to make some money. What's wrong with that?" Jasper asked calmly.

"Even an idiot can tell that the current drop in the United States Stock Market is a technical pullback. The ratio isn't anything major and you've lost at least 100 million US Dollars over these past few days. Everyone's wondering what you're trying to do!"

Celine said in displeasure when she heard Jasper's perfunctory reply.

Jasper rubbed his temple and replied, "I have my own reasons."

"The investment bank's senior executives are very confused and our think tank might be analyzing your every move as we speak They'll be trying to find your true intentions," Celine told him.

Jasper replied playfully, "Since when did I get so influential? It's just a small sum of funds and Colossal Investments' already engaging their think tank to analyze me?"

“Jasper, you might not be aware of this, but you’ve already got quite the reputation after the fight over Harbor Stocks. Many people have information on your path to wealth, and they know that you started your business operating in financial markets.”

“That’s why your irregular operations now is attracting the attention of many people.”

Celine then paused for a bit before continuing, “I don’t know what you’re thinking, but trust me when I say that it’s extremely difficult for you to profit from the United States stock market.”

“It’s always been the United States capitalists profiting off other people, be it the Plaza Accord with Sunrise Land or the siege on the European Union. Right now, no one can challenge Wall Street’s absolute authority over the financial system.

“Because these people are the founders and rule makers of the modern financial system.”

“That’s what a lot of people think.”

Jasper did not refute Celine.

This was what everyone around the world thought, including people from the United States.

The US citizen's arrogance and sense of superiority was the main cause of the subprime crisis in 2008.

At the time, the powerful Layman Investments would fall, while countless financial enterprises of various sizes collapsed alongside it. This was accompanied by the loss of trillions of US Dollars.

With memory and experience of the next 20 years, Jasper knew that while the United States citizens were powerful, they were not untouchable.

"Don't worry. There's no way I'd risk making an astronomical mistake and do something irrational. I know my limits and what I can or cannot do."

Celine finally relaxed slightly when she heard this.

"But if possible, I do hope you can use your contacts and help me keep an eye on the movements on Wall Street," Jasper said.

Celine harrumphed and replied, "I'm not powerful enough to keep an eye over the wealthier capitalists in Wall Street."

Jasper smiled and said, "I'll treat you to dinner next time."

"Don't think that just because I grew up overseas that I don't know what you mean. Words like I'll treat you to dinner next time, another day, one day, all mean I won't see you again."

Jasper laughed out loud when he heard Celine.

"Alright, I know what you're thinking, but I really can't explain the details to you. Just give me some time and you'll understand what I'm doing without needing me to explain it further," Jasper said.

Celine fell silent for a bit before she whispered, "You think that the United States will go into war?"

Other than war, there was nothing that could result in the United States' economy plummeting suddenly.

“But that’s not possible. The United States systems have decided that capital can affect the will of the country.”

“Ignoring the other titans on Wall Street, Colossal Investment alone has a great influence on the entirety of Congress. There’s no way we wouldn’t know if something like war was about to break out”

Jasper replied mysteriously, “There’s no way I’d be able to predict war. I just think that the United States Stock Market is in for a huge change soon.”

Celine harrumphed when she realized she could not get Jasper to speak about his plans and replied, “Alright. I’ll stop wasting my time as you put on your mysterious persona, but there should be a lot of people in Wall Street waiting to watch you make a fool out of yourself.”

“Your slightly famous title as the Somer Genius might soon turn you into a laughing stock. Do what you believe benefits you most.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1335

After ending the call with Celine, Jasper called Jake next. Not for anything else but to tell him to keep opening positions without hesitation.

The 9 billion Somer Dollars Jasper had gathered yesterday had been converted into 1.1 billion US Dollars which he had transferred to Jake.

Jake immediately started opening more positions after Jasper instructed him to do so.

Wall Street, which was already closely monitoring Jasper's funds, immediately caught on to this.

Everyone was confused.

'Did Jasper really go crazy?'

Everyone could not help but think this.

The current situation was too calm, and after the latest technical pullback ended, the market began to grow again.

The increase of every point in the index meant Jasper lost one hundred thousand US Dollars.

Not even a mountain of gold could last two days with the way the money kept disappearing.

“Looks like the legendary Somer Genius has been blinded by victory and praise.”

Someone sat in their office in Wall Street and shook their head while sighing as they stared at the steadily climbing market trendline.

“I really wonder who gave him so much confidence to think that he could challenge the United States’ financial system on his own.”

Someone drank champagne and began to mock him. Shock at the very beginning turned to confusion. Meanwhile, Jasper continued ignoring the questionable gazes of everyone around the world as he continued to open more positions. Due to this, the people who had their eyes on Jasper soon began to target him.

Whenever Jasper sold stocks, they would snap it up. Thus profiting from the money Jasper invested.

The feeling of earning money just by issuing buy orders had countless people mocking Jasper and calling him a money gifting child from Somerland.

In Harbor City, Fabian had also immediately received news that Jasper had opened more positions.

“He’s already invested 600 million US Dollars.”

Fabian narrowed his eyes and said.

“Coverting that back to Somer Dollars, he’s basically deposited all the liquid funds JW Company holds. According to our evaluation of his company, JW’s already tight on cash, and doing so will only increase the pressure on them. Did he really go crazy?”

Mitch was utterly dumbfounded.

“What’s the situation over at Wall Street?” Fabian asked.

Mitch snorted and replied, “What else? The bigshots there all think that he’s looked at the trend incorrectly. They were nervous in the beginning and did a thorough investigation, but after realizing that there was genuinely nothing wrong, they left him alone.”

“After all, it’s just 600 million US dollars. It’s not enough to do anything at all.”

“Not to mention that as things stand, he’s losing more than 10 million US Dollars a day. He’ll get himself killed after a short while without us needing to do anything.”

Mitch felt overjoyed.

After losing to Jasper a few times, he was extremely relieved to see Jasper actively screw himself over.

Even better, he had earned quite a bit for every cent Jasper lost.

“It’s all thanks to you targeting him in advance, Mr. Atticus. Now we earn 3 million from every 10 million he loses every single day. Haha, he might just vomit blood in infuriation if he found out about this.”

Fabian glanced at Mitch and swallowed the curse at the tip of his tongue.

Mitch was still a useful pawn now and Fabian did not mind letting him act prideful for a little while longer.

“Jasper won’t hand out money for no reason. I still think that he has an ulterior motive that no one knows of yet.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1336

Mitch shrugged when he heard Fabian and said, “Mr. Atticus, maybe we really are being too sensitive. After all, Jasper isn’t some god, and he can misinterpreted the trend. Didn’t we also think that he had some ulterior motive before as well?”

“But there’s no way war could break out in the United States right now, and unless aliens attack tomorrow and causes the global financial system to crash, there’s no way he’d get to turn the tides.”

“We’ve investigated for so many days but came up empty handed. Not only us, but even the people on Wall Street are confused as well. Maybe it’s really as the others’ think, maybe he did go crazy.”

“Misinterpreted the trend?”

Fabian scoffed and said, “If the situation was a complicated one, then I’d believe you if you tell me he made the wrong decision. But even an idiot can tell that the market is booming. There’s no way this can be explained as a simple mistake.”

Mitch was stunned for a moment too and asked instinctively, “Then, what should we do now?”

“Nothing.” Fabian’s expression turned indifferent.

“We continue with the original plan. If he invests more, then we’ll follow. I’d like to see how much money he can take out!”

It was 9th September 2001 when Fabian and Mitch decided on this plan. It was a sunny day and there were no clouds in the clear sky.

The following day, Henry arrived at Southeast Province.

“Hey hey hey! Young Master Law is here!”

Henry stood in the airport in high spirits.

When he saw Jasper standing far away and looking at him with a crescent eyed smile, elation graced Henry’s features and he immediately grabbed his bag before running over.

“Don’t say anything, here is all my money!”

Henry handed Jasper a bank card excitedly.

Jasper was shocked. “100 million? How did you get your hands on so much money?”

It was an open secret how ‘broke’ Henry was, so Jasper was shocked to discover that he could amass 100 million.

“Hehe, I mortgaged my plane, yacht, and a house,” Henry said with a grin.

Jasper could not help but ask, “And you’re not afraid that you’ll lose your money with me?”

“What’s there to be afraid of?” Henry did not care and waved Jasper off generously, “I bought the plane with the money I earned from you. If anything happen, I’ll just pretend I never made any money with Sena before. If that’s not enough, then I’ll start working in my family businesses. I’ll leech off my dad.”

“Not bad. This mindset is commendable,” Jasper praised.

Henry's expression immediately fell and his true nature showed, "I'm just saying that for the sake of it. Don't you dare make me lose my money, or I'll be mocked to death by others when the bank takes my plane."

"Don't worry. There's no way I'd let you lose your money when you'll be needing it to marry the love of your life," Jasper joked.

Henry shook his leg as he sat beside Jasper in the car.

"I heard my dad say that Fabian's been causing you trouble?" Henry asked.

Jasper nodded and replied, "His methods are crueler than I thought."

"Don't worry. After this is over, I'll screw him over with you," Henry said energetically.

Jasper replied heavily, "Fabian's not like other people. Don't act rashly."

Henry arched his brow and said, "What's with that? Are you looking down on me? I'm known in Harbor City as a n evil trust-fund child, but ordinary people don't hate me. Do you know why that is?"

“Why?” Jasper was curious.

Harbor City’s gossip did not follow the mainland’s strict guidelines, so Harbor City reporters confidently dared to report every bit of news they could get their hands on. Scandals involving wealthy families were always more interesting than the last.

Yet, it seemed like Henry had never been put in a bad light by these entertainment reporters.

“Because while the other trust-fund children bully ordinary people, I only bully these trust-fund children. Hahahaha...”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1337

Henry’s tone was arrogant, but upon further thought, one would realize that he spoke the truth.

Henry might have a horrible temper, but he was easy to communicate with for the majority of ordinary people. He would not vent his anger on ordinary people.

However, when it came to other rambunctious trust-fund children, Henry would not hesitate to slap them across the face when they pissed him off. More often than not, there was nothing these people could do in retaliation.

After all, the world of trust-fund children was a competition of familial backgrounds. Henry had never lost in this aspect since his father and grandfather's identities were a direct display of their capabilities.

After checking Henry into the hotel, Jasper specifically told Henry not to cause any trouble before he left.

Henry agreed in annoyance, only to leave and seek out some fun after Jasper left.

Jasper did not worry too much about this.

Henry might seem flamboyant, but he was a smart man. Not to mention, they were in the Southeast Province and not Waterhoof City, so Jasper would cover for Henry no matter what.

After he returned, Jasper contacted both Lord Alvarado and the little prince separately.

In no time at all, two sets of funds were transferred to his account.

It was a total of 10 billion.

Jasper was unsurprised to find that both Lord Alvarado and the little prince could give him 5 billion each.

If anything, Jasper was very aware that they could take more out if necessary. The only reason they were cautious was that this was everyone's first time working together, and Jasper had been vague on the details of the operation.

These two individuals were the type to only act when victory was in sight. If Jasper wanted more money from them, then he had to show a big enough guarantee that they would profit.

The fact that they could provide 5 billion each during their first time working together was in line with their identities as the children of top-notch families within the mainlands.

Following that, the Law family's 7 billion had also been transferred over.

All the funds sitting in Jasper's capital pool accumulated to more than 26 billion now. Among the 26 billion was 9 billion of Jasper's own money, 7 billion from the Law family, and 5 billion each from Lord Alvarado and the little prince.

Jasper had even entertained the thought of inviting the crippled Brown of the Brown family in the north.

The only issue was that the crippled Brown was too mysterious an entity, and Jasper had never encountered the man. He could find a way to contact him if he wanted to since Lord Alvarado or the little prince had to have a way of contacting the crippled Brown.

However, Jasper did not do so. After all, there was still no certainty as to how this fight would play out, and the crippled Brown, who was rumored to be insanely smart, might not necessarily agree to work together.

The day was the 10th of September 2001.

All Jasper did was wait patiently for the earth-shattering incident that was destined to be remembered in history.

However, before this monumental moment arrived, Jasper first received news that almost drenched him in a cold sweat.

Someone had tampered with Wendy's car.

After the accident that occurred at the office entrance in the past, Jasper had planned to buy Wendy a new car, but she insisted on repairing it and proceeded to drive her BMW into the car dealership shop.

Because of this, the purchase of a new car was postponed.

He did not expect an accident to almost happen right after the car was repaired.

“The brakes were sabotaged. From what we can tell, the car’s brake system will fail when the car is driven at more than 80 kilometers per hour.”

Julian’s senior and Wendy’s personal bodyguard, Fallon, said.

In comparison to Julian, Fallon possessed a more comprehensive set of skills. It was only after he employed her that Jasper learned that Fallon was not only a great fighter but also a professional auto racer.

What was even more impressive was that she also had a helicopter license, and a seafarer’s passport, and a boating license.

“Did you catch who did it?” Jasper’s expression was frosty.

Standing next to him, Wendy was still in shock.

Thankfully, Fallon had found out beforehand, otherwise some huge accident might have occurred.

Fallon chewed her gum and sat down casually before replying, "The cameras caught someone sneaking around the car park, and Jul's gone to catch him now."

"Thank you ," Jasper thanked Fallon earnestly.

Fallon had essentially saved Wendy's life today.

Fallon snickered and replied, "Don't worry about it. I'm just doing my job. You're the one paying me, after all."

JW Company currently had a huge influence in not just Nauritus City, but the whole of Southeast Province.

No matter who the culprit was, Jasper would not forgive him for threatening Wendy's personal safety.

Wendy was more than Jasper's significant other, she was also the future co-owner of JW and Dawson's daughter.

Considering Wendy's multiple powerful identities, whoever still dared to hurt Wendy definitely had no fear for Jasper.

Still, that did not matter.

Jasper would flip whoever dared to hurt Wendy upside down, even if it was God Himself!

Soon enough, Julian caught the man and dragged him over.

Jasper was also shocked when he saw the man Julian brought over.

"Calvin Hunt!" Jasper looked at Calvin icily and shouted his name. He did not expect Calvin to be so bold.

Calvin knew that he had been found out, so he said harshly, "What a shame I didn't manage to kill her."

Slap.

Jasper got up to slap Calvin across the face harshly. "You come at me if you want! But if you touch Wendy, then I'll make you regret ever being born!"

The whole of Southeast Province, and even Jasper's enemies, knew that involving Wendy was a taboo when it came to attacking Jasper. Whoever hurt her would have to face Jasper's mindless revenge.

Calvin was very bold to do what he did!

He had done something countless people wanted, but did not dare, to do.

Calvin took the slap and glared at Jasper with bloodshot eyes. He roared, "Beat me to death if you can, Jasper! Do you even dare? You wouldn't dare to kill me!"

"Kill you?" Jasper sneered. "As if you're worth my time and effort."

Jasper grabbed Calvin's collar and said icily, "But don't worry. I have more than enough ways to make you suffer without killing you."

At this moment, even Calvin panicked when he took in Jasper's icy gaze.

"Think before you act, Jasper! I'm telling you, this is a just society we live in!"

"You, an attempted murderer, are talking to me about what's just?" Jasper sneered.

Calvin clenched his jaw but did not say anything.

"I'll torture you first, then send you to the police. By then, this attempted murder charge will be enough to lock you behind bars for the rest of your life. I've always just let you be, Calvin, because I thought that you wouldn't be able to cause too large a problem."

"But thank you for letting me understand that while trash like you can't bring me actual trouble, you can still threaten the people around me. I'll make sure to be extra careful in the future."

"So, to thank you, I'll definitely teach you an unforgettable lesson. I'd be a horrible excuse of a human being if I let you live a single day in comfort until you eventually die!"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1338

Calvin started to feel regretful when he heard this.

He did not regret troubling Jasper, but rather not achieving anything out of the bad things he had done. This was what he felt the most indignant about

It was too late now to say all this, and the most important thing to Calvin was to come up with a plan on how he to escape.

“You wouldn’t dare hurt me, Jasper! Pen’s been with you for so many years, and you’re going to ignore the history both of you share? Are you even human?”

Jasper chuckled annoyedly at Calvin’s words.

“Ignore the history we share? My kindness to you was what gave you so much courage to do what you did today!”

“Julian!”

Julian immediately straightened his back when he heard Jasper shout for him and replied, “Right here!”

“Are there any untraceable ways to put him in extreme agony?”

Julian looked at Calvin, who resembled a frantic mouse caught by a cat, and replied, “There are. And more than 10 methods at that.”

“Good. I want him to try every single one of them.”

Jasper’s gaze was cold. “He says that I’m ignoring the kindness I was given before. So, let’s have him understand what it truly means to ignore the past.”

Calvin’s last psychological defenses failed when he saw Julian reach out toward him.

He had experienced Julian’s attack before.

Like the action movies in television dramas, he could not find any desire to fight back against Julian. He was doomed to die once he was put in Julian’s hands.

“Wait! Jasper, wait!”

Calvin shouted frantically.

Jasper's expression was cold and unfazed.

Anyone who dared to attack his lover would be decisively gotten rid of. This was so that they could not cause any more trouble in the future. Even if it was God Himself, Jasper would still flip Him upside down. Let alone Calvin.

"Jasper, I did it because I was ordered to!"

Calvin shouted frantically just as Julian grabbed his collar and was about to drag him away.

This sentence had Julian freezing as well.

Jasper looked at Calvin icily and said, "You'll only end up in a more tragic situation if you lie to me."

Resentment flickered across Calvin's features, but he did not dare to act on it. He clenched his jaw and said, "I'm already in such a sorry state. Why would I lie to you?"

“I can tell you who the mastermind is, but you have to promise not to hurt me. I don’t care about going to prison, but I won’t say a single word if you torture me.”

“You’re in no position to negotiate with me right now.”

Jasper looked at Calvin and said indifferently, “Tell me everything you know and I might consider being merciful. But if you try to lie or hide anything from me...”

“Trust me, I’d still have a way to make your life a living hell even after you’re put in prison.”

“As someone who’s been inside before, I’m sure you know what kind of world prison is. All I need is a bit of money, and the people inside will do almost anything.”

Calvin looked terrified when he heard Jasper. Indeed, having been in prison before, Calvin knew how the inside of the jail was a completely new world.

The best fighter was king in prison, fighting and the bullying of the weak was a daily occurrence.

As long as nothing too horrid happened, the prison guards did not care either.

Calvin shivered at the thought and told Jasper everything he knew.

Calvin then proceeded to spill the beans to Jasper about how he and Fabian got into contact and the process by which Fabian passed him the order.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1339

“Jasper, I admit that I hate you to your bones and I want you to die, but you have to believe that Fabian was really the person who ordered me to do this. He even taught me how to mess with the brakes. How else would I know how to do something like that?”

As if terrified that Jasper would not believe him, Calvin explained sincerely.

Jasper replied calmly, “I knew that you’re telling me the truth when you said it was Fabian.”

Calvin exhaled in relief. He did plan to hide the truth or lie to Jasper, but he gave it some thought and realized that there was no way Fabian would be willing to save him right now.

Since that was the case, then he might as well tell Jasper everything in return for his safety.

At least he would be sent to prison safely now.

Having been in prison once, Calvin did not mind returning. However, he did care about whether he was carried in or if he would be able to walk in himself.

“Jul, report him to the police and let them deal with him.”

Calvin was about to cry from joy when he heard Jasper.

After Julian brought Calvin away, Jasper sat in the office chair with a solemn look on his face.

Fallon observed the situation and left the office as well, having remained silent the entire time.

She knew that she was no longer needed here.

Wendy stayed.

She walked over to Jasper and squatted down to put her face over the back of his hand as she said, "Don't be angry anymore. I'm fine now, aren't I?"

Jasper chuckled, the gloomy cloud over him disappearing, and he pulled Wendy up. Ignoring her gasp and embarrassment, he pulled her down to sit on his lap.

"I'm just afraid of what might have happened."

Jasper hugged Wendy and said, "What if Fallon didn't find out about this? What if something happened to you? I could rip my enemies to shreds and that still wouldn't bring you back to me."

Wendy chided, "Nonsense, nothing's going to happen to me."

"Yes, yes, nonsense..." Jasper smiled.

Wendy was not just an ordinary girl, after all. While she was scared of what-ifs, the incident had already passed, and she had already let it go and moved on.

“Fabian is powerful. You have to endure this a little longer.”

Wendy told Jasper seriously.

“Now isn’t the time for you to turn against him.”

Jasper gave her a small smile, “Don’t worry. I know my limits.”

Wendy pouted when she heard Jasper.

She knew that every time Jasper wore this expression or said something like this, it meant that he had already made his decision. More often than not, the man would not change his mind.

Therefore, Wendy did not linger on the topic and said gently, “Then I’ll get back to work first. Promise me you won’t be angry anymore.”

“Okay,” Jasper watched Wendy leave the room.

A short moment after the office door closed, the silence was suddenly broken by the loud crash of a shattered teacup.

Julian opened the office door after finishing his part only to see Jasper sitting silently and alone behind the office desk

“Jul, go find out who else Fabian has here in Nauritus City. He’s got to have men here, find all of them,” Jasper demanded.

After Julian left, Jasper grabbed the office phone and called a number he had gotten from Henry a long time ago but never contacted.

A moment later, the call connected.

“Hello? Who’s this?”

A young man’s voice sounded on the other end of the line.

“Fabian Atticus. You’ve targeted me both in secret and in the open many times, but you’ve truly angered me this time.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1340

Fabian must’ve been surprised to hear Jasper’s words, for he chuckled after a moment of silence.

“Jasper Laine, hmm?”

Fabian spoke in standard Somerish.

“I’ve been waiting for this call for a very long time. If I’d known doing so would have you act so furiously, I’d have done it long ago.”

Jasper narrowed his eyes and replied, “Agreed, doing so would also get you killed much earlier.”

“Haha, do you know, Jasper? I’ve asked around about you and I got two very extreme descriptions”

“Some say that you’re gentlemanly and kind.”

“But some say you’re heartless, brutal, and cruel.”

Jasper replied indifferently, “The former are my friends, and the latter are my enemies.”

“So, what I’m seeing now is the heartless, brutal, and cruel Jasper?” Fabian chuckled.

He seemed to admire Jasper’s fury a lot.

Jasper’s tone suddenly turned calm and he said, “Fabian, this call today isn’t to vent my anger. Since both of us know how pointless that is.”

“Of course, it’s not to reconcile either. Perhaps there was still a possibility for reconciliation before today, but there is no turning back from this moment onward.

“Between you and I, only one will remain standing.”

Jasper’s claim infuriated Fabian.

“Jasper Laine! Watch your tone, who are you to say something like that?”

“Who am I? And who are you?” Jasper arched his brow, the corner of his eye filled with an rage rarely seen on him.

“Hahaha,” Fabian laughed out loud.

“Good, then. Very good. No one’s ever dared to talk to me like this.”

“I guess someone does now.”

Jasper said icily, “Keep your sense of superiority to yourself. You’ve been targeting me this entire time, be it in secret or openly. Since what happened has already passed, then there’s no more fear on my part.”

“Execute whatever plan you have, Fabian, but you just tried to hurt my significant other. Forget Harbor City, I’d drag you over and skin you alive even if you were on Mars.”

“F*ck your sense of superiority, you think that just because you come from a wealthy family that suddenly you’re better than everyone? How are you different from the other trust-fund children I’ve screwed over before this?”

“Let me tell you, there is no difference. You think that you can be considered a scheming man because you’re hiding in the dark and you can come up with sinister plans? It’s so ridiculous I pity you.”

Fabian’s gaze was extremely icy after hearing the other person speak “Fine, then. Come over, come to Harbor City and let me see how you plan to skin me alive!”

“Just you wait. It won’t be too long until then.”

Beep beep beep...

Fabian clenched his phone sinisterly as his gaze became extremely dark.

Mitch was too terrified to speak when he saw Fabian’s expression.

Everyone knew that when Fabian was on the edge of exploding, any person or thing could become a fuse that ignites him.

Mitch refused to be subjected to Fabian’s venting.

“Insolent! ”

Fabian suddenly shouted and threw the phone in his hand harshly at the wall across him.

The phone shattered into pieces with a bang.

It was a loud bang which terrified Mitch.

He knew that Fabian was furious, but he did not expect it to be to such a degree.

This was Fabian Atticus.

The openly recognized most scheming youth among Harbor City’s wealthy children. He was also the one with the brightest future.

Not even Kayden from the Langdon family was as valued by the elders as Fabian was.

Therefore, Mitch had only ever seen Fabian's gentlemanly and generous side this entire time.

It was as if the man could not be affected by anything in the world like he had predicted everything in advance. Nothing could affect the man's calm nature.

So, what did Jasper tell Fabian?

How did one phone call manage to get through all of Fabian's defenses?

"Increase our attack!"

Fabian's expression was terrifyingly frigid.

"Keep a close look on him on the stock markets. I want him to die tragically!"

Mitch asked cautiously, "Mr. Atticus, what did Jasper say?"

Fabian glanced over and Mitch immediately shuddered. He felt endless horror descend upon him.

“Just... pretend I didn’t ask at all,” Mitch quickly said.

Before Mitch finished talking, the sinister and icy look on Fabian’s face suddenly vanished.

It had only been one second and the man’s expression had completely changed. The stark contrast between then and a second before that was almost awe inspiring.

“Something very interesting.”

Fabian’s tone also became gentle.

Yet, Mitch’s fear only grew.

“Of all the years I’ve lived, this is the first time I’ve been cursed at and threatened to be skinned alive.”

Fabian tilted his head up and laughed out loud as he spoke. It was as if he had heard a hilarious joke.

Mitch quickly replied, "This Jasper is crazy. He's always been like this. He's just a country bumpkin from the mainlands, but he looks down on everyone. There's no need to sink to his level, Mr. Atticus."

"Plus, this also means that we've hit a sore spot."

Fabian's hand fell on Mitch's shoulder, causing the other to shiver as Fabian said softly, "Interesting. I've never thought that I'd be pointed at and scolded one day. It's an interesting feeling."

"Don't be gloomy about it, Mr. Atticus. Perhaps I could find someone to beat him up." Mitch suggested carefully.

"You think that there'll be another good opportunity to do so after this? The reason sinister plans are hardly anything to be proud of is because they can only be used once."

Mitch chuckled dryly at Fabian's gaze, the latter looking at the former as if he was an imbecile. He said, "I just wanted to take revenge for you, Mr. Atticus."

“I don’t need you to take revenge for me.”

Fabian said calmly.

“Jasper’s got no one to blame but himself when he’s actively trying to screw himself over. In the beginning, I thought I’d just have to destroy his wealth, but right now? You are so good, Jasper, so very good that I’m going to destroy you and your wealth!”

“Take out the funds you’ve prepared. I’ll completely crush him this time.”

Mitch did not dare to protest and immediately replied, “Alright. I’ll transfer them to you immediately, they’ll arrive in an hour.”

Fabian did not reply. Something flickered in his eyes and he sneered.

“Motherf*cker!”

After returning from having fun outside, Henry was even more agitated than Jasper when he found out what happened.

“That f*cker’s playing dirty, huh? Fine, then! I’ll immediately have someone screw with him! He messed with your car, right? Then I’ll mess with his car and kidnap him!”

Jasper instantly raised his hand to stop Henry.

“Doing so will only turn this situation into a low class fight between rascals. Plus, you’ll be putting your dad in a dangerous spot if you break the rules so blatantly.”

Henry glared at replied angrily, “He’s the one that broke the rules first! How can you just let him go like that? How can you just move on?”

“Who said I’m letting him go?” Jasper said indifferently.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1341

Henry was about to ask Jasper what he had in mind when the request for a video conference rang out from the computer.

Henry had no other choice but to swallow the words he wanted to say and wait until after Jasper was done with the call.

It was a video call from Jake.

Jasper did not mind that Henry was present and answered the call immediately.

“Mr. Laine, as per your request, we’ve already begun to increase the number of our positions and funds invested. We have a total position worth 1.89 billion US Dollars, with a 5 million US Dollar increase every hour.”

“And our losses?” Jasper asked calmly.

Jake paused before replying difficultly, “We’ve lost a total of 230 million US Dollars right now. Every 1 million we invest amounts to a loss of 380 thousand US Dollars, and this loss percentage shows signs of a steady increase.”

“The entities targeting us since the beginning have increased their attacks, so most of our losses are going to them.

“Besides this, we’ve also realized that many financial organizations are starting to operate against us as well. Due to our continuous investment of funds, they seem to plan to benefit from us.

“As of this moment, we have sufficient evidence showing that most of these organizations are from Wall Street. A minority are from Europe, and there’s one from Sunrise Land.”

Jasper was unsurprised to know the involvement of Wall Street and European organizations, but he was shocked to find that an organization from Sunrise land was also among them.

However, in no time at all, Jasper could guess who it as.

Except for Softwin, which Jasper had previously had a feud against, no other organization would be willing to involve themselves in this matter while the situation had yet to be made clear.

Jasper nodded calmly and replied, “Keep it up. We need a position of 2.5 billion US Dollars before the market closes today.”

While expecting this, Jake was still shaken when he heard the amount.

Jake took a deep breath and said, "I'll get to it immediately, Mr. Laine. But I must remind you that according to our current rate, our percentage of loss will become extremely high."

"Because once we amass a huge enough amount, our operation against market trend will essentially become a flame to the moths in the market. It might not have been tempting enough before this, and the organizations might not have set their eyes on us yet, but once the funds breach 1 billion US Dollars, there will be signs of herd behavior.

"The moment the organizations against us groups together, all our funds will get consumed."

Jasper waved him off. "Don't worry, let them consume what they want. Before the day of reckoning arrives, it doesn't matter even if the accounts show a complete loss."

Jake sighed and replied, "Alright, Mr. Laine. I'll get to it right now."

"Good..."

After hanging up the call, Jasper looked at Henry, who had his eyes wide and his jaw gaping.

“Holy sh*t, so we’re losing hundreds of thousands of Somer Dollars every minute?”

Jasper nodded and replied, “That’s pretty much the rate.”

Henry sucked in a cold breath and asked, “The risks here are huge, aren’t they?”

Jasper smiled and replied, “Short selling is considered a trade of futures, and they have a settlement date. Therefore, everything we and our opponents make are all on paper for now.

“Even if we manage to hold on and not liquidate our accounts, if the situation doesn’t turn around in our favor before the settlement date, then we’ll still lose everything.”

“That is when our money will truly be gone.”

Henry felt lightheaded.

Despite being the next successor of the Law family and having no understanding of the concept of money since he was young, which were just a bunch of numbers to Henry, he still felt stricken when he realized that he was in a situation where he lost hundreds of thousands, or even millions, every minute.

“When’s the settlement date?” Henry asked.

“In three days.”

“Motherf*cker!” The corner of Henry’s lips twitched.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1342

“What happens if we lose everything and have to liquidate?” Henry asked.

“Then you go back and leech off of your dad, while I live here with my little bit of money in Nauritus City,” Jasper replied calmly.

“So the person targeting us is Fabian?” Henry hit jackpot with his question.

“Most likely.” Jasper sighed.

Jake’s investigation all this while had not come up empty handed. No matter how good Fabian was at hiding himself, Jake could still find a few leads. While there was no concrete evidence, the funds were proven to originate from Harbor City.

With this point confirmed, Jasper could also be certain that the mastermind behind this was Fabian and no one else.

“Who are the other organizations, then?” Henry asked.

Jasper replied, “I can confirm that that the organization from Sunrise Land is Softwin. But as for those from Wall Street, there are too many of them for me to lock onto. And I have absolutely no idea about those from Europe.”

Henry clenched his jaw and said, “ So we’re literally sending Fabian money, then?!”

“This money is pretty much a hot potato.”

Jasper closed his eyes slightly and murmured to himself.

Originally anxious, Henry took in Jasper's calm behavior and suddenly relaxed.

Throughout their time together, the man in front of him had always been able to turn what everyone believed was an impossible situation around.

The fight in Harbor City alone was something most people would boast about their entire lives.

Henry had involved throughout the entire process back then.

"Are you trying to fish someone out?"

Henry's question had Jasper laughing out loud.

"While the entire world thinks that I've gone crazy, you're the only one who thinks I'm fishing."

Henry shrugged and replied, "Maybe I'm crazy too." Then, his expression turned crazed.

“F*cking Hell, it’s just money, isn’t it? Worse come to worst we’ll just lose everything. We’ll still have enough to sustain ourselves and isn’t that good enough? What’s the point of so much money anyway? We win, then we’ll go to clubs and look for pretty girls, lose and we’ll get back to work!”

“Don’t worry. Even if you lose all the money, I’m sure with your title as Young Master Law, you’d still have pretty girls to sleep with at any club you go.” Jasper chuckled.

“Hahaha!”

Henry guffawed. “You’re not wrong.”

As Jasper and Fabian officially turned against each other, murmurs of a strange financial war were heard. Despite physically being in the mainlands and Harbor City, the two decided to make the United States’ financial market into their battlegrounds.

Funds worth 2 billion US Dollars was like a drop in the ocean in this market, but this drop of water had coincidentally decided to operate against the clear market trend. In this case, it was as obvious as a drop of water in the desert.

2 billion US Dollars was not a small amount either.

A huge short sell order that ran against the Dow Jones Index would appear every 10 minutes, and would also be snapped up immediately.

Everyone knew that this was a blatant gifting of money. Jasper knew that among these purchasers were Fabian and Softwin.

What he did not know, was that Layman Investment Bank and... Colossal Investments were also involved.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1343

Capone was the office manager of Colossal Investments Headquarters' advanced investment department.

He was mainly in charge of a sum of funds from the headquarters, and his job was to help this sum of funds grow on the securities market.

The more profit he made, the more his bonus was. There were many advanced investment office managers like himself in Colossal Investments, and they would all undergo a performance evaluation every month. The only metric to this evaluation was the amount each investment manager earned the investment bank, with the most profitable person gaining the largest benefits.

Therefore, Capone was under a lot of pressure to perform.

He was in a great mood today.

“Mr. Morrison, thank you for your information. I’ll make sure to remember your kindness.”

Capone held the phone with his legs crossed. His shiny leather shoe twirled around slightly as he spoke flatteringly.

“You were our closest classmate during university. How could I possibly forget you when there’s such a great opportunity before us?”

Morrison’s tone was calm on the other end of the line. “I’m sure you know this Capone, but I hope you do as you promised.”

Capone smiled in response and replied, “Rest assured. As long as I receive any news from the senior executives about Jasper, I’ll tell you immediately.”

“Thanks to your information, I’ll be able to dominate all my opponents during this month’s performance evaluation. I’ll have much greater chances of being the deputy manager of the investment department, and I'll be able to source information from the higher ups."

"There's a Somer phrase saying 'take as you need'. I believe that our partnership will be a merry one, but I do suggest that you keep a low profile.

"After all, according to the information I have, the president of Colossal Investment's Terra regional branch, Celine Maynard, had defended Jasper during the senior manager conference. This caused your senior members to feel rather concerned."

"Don't worry, Morrison. You work in the investment bank business as well, and I'm sure you know that when it comes to the senior executives, profit is always the most reliable partner. Any lesser partnerships, for example, when it comes to the defense of a single person, are pointless."

After ending the call, Morrison, the president of Layman Investment Bank's Terra regional branch, sat in his office with a joyful smile on his face. The monitor before him showed the overall market trendline for the Dow Jones Index.

Another of Jasper's orders had been devoured.

Knock knock knock.

Someone knocked on the door.

Morrison called for them to enter and in walked a shrewd looking middle aged man.

“Mr. Morrison, according to our comprehensive investigation, we’ve found no leads at all.”

“The think tank has produced two reasonings for Jasper’s actions. One being that Jasper had gone crazy, or that Jasper believes that the Unites States stock market will suffer a huge blow very soon.”

A dark look flashed through Morrison’s gaze and he replied, “We aren’t the only ones. Many people have been investigating him, but everyone’s come to the same result.”

With a scoff, Morrison said, “Everyone is reading too much into this. Jasper’s made a severe mistake in the most fundamental decision. This reason that everyone believes to be impossible just so happens to be the closest to the truth.”

The middle aged man asked, “So what do we do now?”

“Continue with our original plan. We’ve entered the market too late so there’s not much we can profit from him. But as long as Jasper continues to short sell, then we’ll continue to issue buy orders. All of Jasper’s orders now are extremely profitable hot pockets.”

“We have no reason not to profit off such easy money.”

The middle aged man bowed slightly and replied, “Yes, Mr. Morrison. I’ll get to it immediately.”

As Jasper continued to sell, more people also began to enter the market.

No one would reject money when it was handed over to them on a silver platter.

Softwin, Layman, Colossal Investments, and other organizations from all over the world also came to know that a Somer idiot was crazily handing out money in the United States stock market thanks to the exchange of intelligence and the ticking of time.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1344

Since great opportunities like these were rare, everyone originally wondered if Jasper had an ulterior motive in the beginning. After all, the situation was too good to be true.

However, as time passed, everyone also began to draw their own conclusions.

Jasper had gone crazy.

They no longer cared what the man's original intentions were, and they took the money he provided on a silver platter.

With that, more organizations began to enter the market to snap up Jasper's orders.

Every order Jasper listed would be purchased within a few seconds.

As time passed, everyone started to feel impatient.

This situation had, after all, attracted the attention of many.

Jasper's phone was similarly bombarded with calls. Even Winston Bennett called Jasper himself to ask why Jasper did such a thing.

Jasper told him the same thing.

He had a bearish View of the United States stock market. That was it.

“Tsk, tsk. Just how many people have their eyes on us?”

Henry lamented in Jasper’s office, staring at the account’s startling unrealized loss on the screen.

“The total investment already amounts to 2.5 billion US Dollars.”

Jasper looked at the screen and exhaled softly.

While he had always been very confident, Jasper could not help but feel frantic at this moment.

Jasper would truly be screwed if the world played out different after he reincarnated and the two planes did not crash into the Twin Towers.

Jasper sounded carefree when he talked to Henry about it before, but he knew that it was more than an issue of money if he lost this time.

Both Lord Alvarado and the little prince had each invest 5 billion into this.

The two would be the first to come after him if he screwed up.

It could be said that Jasper was betting his whole life on this incident.

It was impossible for him not to feel nervous.

“All of the outside worlds is doubting you. Some of my friends in Harbor City that know of our relationship even called me in the beginning when they learned that you were making a move. They told me to pull them in if I had a chance to make big money.”

“But now they’re all telling me to quickly distance myself from you.”

“I’ve completely lost contact with them now. I don’t think there’s anyone in the world who truly believes in you.”

Henry hit the nail on the head.

Lord Alvarado and the little prince had not questioned any of his decisions.

However, Jasper knew this was because they were waiting.

The moment Jasper screwed up, Lord Alvarado and the little prince might just be the first to hurt him.

After all, this was 5 billion Somer Dollars, and not even the wealthy would just turn a blind eye at such a huge loss.

Jasper looked at the clock and whispered, "8 more hours to go."

Henry was stunned and asked instinctively, "8 hours?"

"Nothing," Jasper shook his head and stood up with a smile, "We might not be getting any sleep tonight. Do you want to go out and get food? Only when energized can we enjoy the show to its fullest."

Henry was stunned for a moment, but Jasper's expression told him that the man would not reply to any of his questions. Hence, he put the thought in the back of his mind. "Let's go, time to eat!"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1345

Due to the time difference, Somerland was 13 hours ahead of the United States.

It was 1 PM in Somerland, which was around midnight on September the 11th in the United States. The night was quiet, as if needing a shocking change to wake its people.

Jasper and Henry had just gotten out of the office and were about to go eat lunch when Julian suddenly came over with a report.

“Jasper, there’s already a result regarding Calvin’s situation. His sentence will be around 8-10 years and the officials wish to get the victim’s opinion and ask if they agree with the standard sentencing.”

Jasper replied calmly, “Just follow the legal provisions available. We might be the victims, but that doesn’t mean we’re above the law.”

“10 years is long enough. By the time Calvin is released after 10 years, the world would’ve changed as well.” Julian nodded understandingly at Jasper’s reply.

The man’s intention was clear. Any criminal sentence had an upper and lower limit. The final decision on the length of jail time would be affected by the details of the crime and whether the defendant repented.

If Jasper decided on 10 years, then it would be the maximum of 10 years.

There was nothing anyone could harp on.

“I’ll pass your intentions along. Oh, and, Jasper, there’s one more thing…”

Jasper exclaimed in shock, “Jul, you’re even speaking long windedly now. Just get to the point.”

Henry then snickered and made a joke, “Did you set your eyes on a girl and now want Jasper to be your wingman?”

Julian replied awkwardly, “Stop making jokes about me, I’m talking serious business here.”

“After what happened to Calvin, a huge crisis appeared at Penelope’s company suddenly. Her supply channel from Harbor City seemed to have collapsed, but Penelope already signed contracts with many of her underwriters. Now that she can’t provide the goods, the underwriters are stirring up trouble for her.”

“Coupled with the fact that Calvin was caught and sent to prison, Penelope’s under a lot of stress and she tried to kill herself last night.”

Jasper furrowed his brows at what he heard.

“How’s Penelope doing now?” Jasper asked.

Julian replied calmly, “She was discovered in time and she’s already been treated in the hospital. She’s in MidHeart Hospital right now but her suicide attempt was also what pushed the underwriters into a panic.”

“They’re worried that if Penelope dies, they won’t be able to ask anyone to repay her debts... basically, the situation isn’t looking good at all.”

Jasper sighed lightly.

Logically speaking, he did not want to involve himself in Penelope’s matters anymore.

The point of having John arrange her a job before this was so that he could completely let go of her and move on from the past.

Whether she did her job well or if she started her own company had nothing to do with Jasper anymore. However, she ended up being used by Fabian. Even so, Penelope had not sold Jasper out, but instead told the man everything at a crucial time.

Moreover, Jasper was the one who put Calvin in jail, not that Jasper thought he handled the situation inappropriately. Still, Jasper could not help but feel slightly remorseful toward Penelope.

“Let’s go to MidHeart Hospital, then,” Jasper instructed.

“Alright.” Julian immediately turned the car around.

Henry asked playfully, “Lingering feelings?”

Due to the situation with Anna, Henry was very sensitive about the women by Jasper’s side.

No matter how ingenuine Henry was, he still did not want to see other women appear and fight with his sister over Jasper. One Wendy Schuler was enough of a headache.

“Nonsense!”

Jasper glared at Henry. “This is putting an end to any last remaining debts I owe her. She helped me but at the cost of her company threatening to close down. Not to mention, I’m the one who sent her brother to prison as well. No matter the reason, it’s only right I go visit her.”

Henry grinned in relief.

Jasper's character had always been upstanding in this regard, and he would never lie about this.

In the advanced hospital room in MidHeart Hospital. Seven to eight chubby men were glaring and blocking the entrance to the door. Each of them looked fierce and with a bad temper.

There was also a man in a suit standing sinisterly in the hospital room.

Bang!

Suddenly, there was the sound of a water jug being kicked and shattering within the hospital room.

"Penelope, I'm warning you right now. In the whole of Nauritus City or even Southeast Province, there is not one person who dares to scam me, Martin Monty, of my money!"

Martin stood in front of Penelope's hospital bed and roared. He ignored the sickeningly pale complexion she had and the fact that tubes were sticking out of her everywhere.

Penelope's body was extremely weak and the frantic beeping of the monitoring device beside her showed how agitated she felt.

Her blood pressure was skyrocketing and her heartbeat beat erratically.

"Give me some more time, Mr. Monty. I'll definitely come up with a way to solve this," Penelope said weakly.

"Solve this? Solve my f*cking foot!"

Martin raged, pointing at Penelope's nose to scold, "You said you'd solve it yesterday too! And look what happened, you got brave and tried to commit suicide! Is this how you plan to solve it?"

"I'm telling you, Penelope, according to the contract, you have to pay three times the compensation because you don't have the goods. That's a total of 6.5 million and not a cent less. Otherwise, I'll sell you to brothels so you can pay your debt with your body for as long as there is still blood in your veins!"

"Don't think that dying will solve everything. You still have a bedridden mother, don't you? I'm sure you don't want an old woman like her to still get beaten up, scolded, and tortured, right?"

“You also have a brother, yes? But I heard he was put in prison. Haha, that’s alright. I’ll just use some money to have the people inside teach him a good lesson.”

Penelope immediately struggled in the hospital bed when she heard the man.

Yet, no matter how she tried, her body was too weak to do so.

Beep beep beep.

The ear splitting alarm rang out from the monitor. Penelope’s heart rate and blood pressure had reached a critical level.

“Don’t you dare, Martin! Otherwise, I’ll make sure to haunt you even after I’m dead!”

Martin said icily, “Dead? I’m not even afraid of you when you’re alive, let alone when you’re dead! Even when you’re dead you’re still going to have to repay what you owe me!”

Penelope opened her mouth widely to pant, but as she tried to breathe, the air suddenly seemed too thick to enter her lungs.

Jat that moment, the alarm from the monitor also changed to become more ear splitting and frantic.

Martin looked at Penelope, who was struggling for her life icily and sneered, “Pretending to die again? F*cking Hell, go ahead then! I’d like to see if you really die this time.”

Just then, an angry roar suddenly sounded from outside the hospital room.

“Julian, throw them all out! ”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1346

The yell with a wild rage that spooked Martin.

He did not get a chance to turn around and look at the person when he felt someone behind him grab the back of his collar. The next second, his body was being lifted into the air as the world around him started spinning. Then, there was a loud bang as pain started to flood his body.

In the blink of an eye, the muscular Martin who weighed more than a hundred pounds was like a little chick being grabbed and thrown out of the ward by Julian.

As for the several big fellows outside the room, they all encountered the same situation as him.

Almost ten of them were lying down, scattered around on the hospital's corridor outside the ward. It was a spectacular scene.

“You got something coming, little dumb*ss.”

Martin lifted his head and saw a young face brimming with an aura of stubbornness.

He was familiar with this kind of aura. Second generation with extraordinary backgrounds often possessed this overwhelming aura, himself included. However, the young man who was in front of him was emanating a certain stubbornness that was overwhelming.

Due to the sharp senses the second generation possessed, Martin had managed to stop himself from blowing up in time.

“If she dies, you can’t get anything from her. Haven’t you seen her condition? You’re still trying to make her pay, but are you even able to get a cent from her right now?”

Henry gave Martin a look as though he were an idiot and said.

“You... Who the f*ck are you!?”

Monty grit his teeth and asked while he endured the pain and got up forcefully.

“Who am I?” Henry smiled broadly, “You’ll know soon enough, dumb*ss.”

At this moment, Jasper had already strode into the ward.

When Julian was throwing Martin out of the ward, he noticed Penelope's abnormality. He went out and called the nurse immediately without saying anything else. The doctor and nurses had previously been chased out by Martin, and none of them were willing to risk getting beaten up to rescue the patient.

When Jasper walked over to the side of the bed, Penelope had already lost consciousness.

"Penelope?"

Jasper called out Penelope's name gently, but she was unresponsive.

At this moment, the doctor and nurses hurried in. Jasper immediately took a step to and let these professionals do their work.

Jasper did not blame them for not saving her in time. It was obvious that Martin gave them a warning.

"Sir, can you please leave? We have to rescue the patient, and we might need to undress her... Are you her lover?"

A doctor turned his head and asked Jasper.

Jasper shot a glance at Penelope, who was pale white with her eyes closed as she laid on the bed. Then, he shook his head and replied, "I'm her friend... I'll wait outside."

Jasper left immediately after he said this.

"Her blood pressure is 60, her heart rate is dropping, and she's in shock. Hurry, inject 0.5mg of adrenaline into her veins, it's an emergency!"

The indistinct chatter of the frantic medical staff in the ward were muted after he closed the door gently.

Jasper turned around and stared at Martin expressionlessly. His finger was raised to point at the closed ward door, and said, "Last night, she tried to kill herself, and she just got saved. Yet, you're here to ask for money. If she had that money would she had committed suicide?"

"If anything happens to her today, I'll hold you responsible!"

Martin was stunned for a moment. He would never have thought that someone other than a certain young man could exude an aura that made him nervous. Even so, the unknown man before him was doing just that.

Martin sneered and said, “Who the f*ck are you to yell at me? Kid, how dare you interfere with what I’m doing? Are you not afraid of dying?”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1347

”I don’t give a sh*t about you, but I’m interfering if you’re making her kill herself.” Jasper said coldly.

Martin sneered and replied, “You’re interfering? Well, you can get your money out and pay the debts for her then. I’ll leave right away with the money. Do you think I like being here?”

Martin poked Jasper as he saw his sullen eyes, and scolded, “You don’t have it? If you can’t f*cking pay then why the f*ck are you bluffing here?”

Smack.

It was a loud and sharp slap.

Martin squealed as he took a few steps back, covering his face.

Henry flung his arms and made a spitting sound, “F*ck, what an oily face you got there, it’s disgusting.”

As he said that, Henry gave Martin a grin and said, “You better watch your words, be careful cause you might get yourself in trouble, dumb*ss.”

Martin glared at Henry and yelled while covering his face, “Who the f*ck are you exactly!?”

At this moment, the men that Martin brought along with him surrounded him, each of them eyeing Jasper, Henry, and Julian.

If not for Julian, who had single handedly thrown him out, and Henry, who looked dangerous in his own right, Martin had already ordered his men to tear them apart.

“I’m warning you, you’re all going to die for offending me in the Southeast Province.”

Henry grew excited when he heard this.

It sounded familiar.

“Is that so? How amazing is that? I’m scared.

“Let’s see, tell me what your father does, what your grandfather does. Maybe after I know that, I’ll start trembling and begging for my life.”

Martin looked hideous as he shouted, “The Monty family of Southeast Province! Kids, although I don’t know what your background is like, you should never offend anyone from the Monty family. You’re dead meat!”

“Is the Monty family that impressive?” Jasper asked coldly.

“The Monty family is nothing crazy.” Martin smiled in a creepy way as he stared at Jasper. “But crushing a piece of sh*t like you is still a piece of cake!”

“The Monty family had kept themselves low key this entire time. Didn’t the three of you ever hear about us? It’s alright, hurry up and go home to your elderly to ask about it. Then you’ll know how scary the Monty family really is!”

Martin believed that it would be the same this time.

He was already thinking about how to punish the three of them.

“As far as I know, Conrad Monty is the family chief of the Monty family. He doesn’t have any children, and his father is Steven Monty. It seems like you had nothing to do with the Monty family at all.”

What Jasper said snapped Steven back to reality.

“How do you know so much about the Monty family?”

Something crossed Steven’s mind after this, and he sneered, “Looks like you’re not dumb after all. So, you heard about us from your elders at home, huh? Hah, if you know that much about the Monty family, then you will know we have an extraordinary background in the Southeast Province.”

“Despite knowing this, you still dare to offend me?”

“Let me give you a little clarity on the situation. I’m Mr. Monty’s cousin while Steven Monty is my uncle. My grandfather and Mr. Monty’s grandfather are brothers!”

Martin thought that right after he exposed his identity, both of them would be dumbfounded and terrified. However, all he heard was an enigmatic voice coming from Henry instead.

“That’s barely related. You have almost nothing to do with the family, yet you’re saying that you’re one of them. How shameless.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1348

What Henry said caused Martin’s face to turn a dark reddish purple.

He was embarrassed, angry, and ashamed. Those intertwining emotions caused his eyes to become bloodshot as he so badly wanted to swallow Henry whole.

“Good! Very good!”

Martin turned shame into anger. He pointed at Jasper and Henry as he yelled and stomped his feet, “No one dares to talk to me that way in Southeast Province! You’re looking down on the Montys, huh? Alright! Just you wait!”

After he said that, Martin took out his phone.

When Jasper saw Martin calling for backup, Jasper said insipidly, “Are you calling your elders?”

Martin chuckled coldly and said, “Are you scared? If you kneel, beg for mercy, kowtow three times, and then crawl out of here, I might consider forgiving you.”

“I mean it’s useless even if you call those irrelevant people. Why don’t I help you call them instead?” As Jasper said that, he dialed a number.

When Martin saw Jasper making the call, he was immediately bewildered.

He did not know who Jasper was calling.

He merely saw Jasper talking to the person on the phone before tossing the phone over to him.

Martin put the phone to his ear suspiciously.

Then, he heard a familiar yet foreign voice.

He was familiar with it because he would have the chance to meet the owner of this voice whenever he went to the family gathering at the end of the year. Every time, the owner of the voice would be in the center of attention, and everyone would flatter and fawn over him.

It was also foreign because Martin only had one or two chances to hear his voice a year, and it was always in a public setting. Unfortunately, he was still unqualified to speak with Conrad in a private setting yet.

“You’re Martin, right? I don’t remember you.”

The first thing Conrad said on the phone shook Martin’s heart.

He did not expect Jasper to get through to Conrad with just a phone call.

“From now on, you’re not a Monty anymore.”

This statement caused Martin to feel as if his soul had left his body and he had fallen into a bottomless abyss.

As the head of the Montys, Conrad had the right to remove his name from the genealogical record completely unless the seniors in the family rejected the idea.

However, Martin knew that nobody in his family would offend Conrad because of a nobody like him.

Therefore, Conrad's statement was equivalent to stripping Martin of his family crest that he was always so proud of.

"S-sir, I... I... Why?"

While he was still reeling in shock, Martin subconsciously asked this stupid question.

"Because you offended someone I can't afford to offend!"

Conrad, who was initially calm, blew up suddenly. "Who gave you the courage and the balls to offend Jasper Laine? Huh? Tell me!"

Martin felt as if he had been struck by lightning.

The name 'Jasper Laine' was no stranger to anyone who had any semblance of status and reputation in Southeast Province.

To the Montys, this name was also like a nightmare.

Jasper's presence caused the Montys to suffer more than once. The Montys were like royalty in Southeast Province, so not only did they suffer huge losses, their reputation also plummeted over and over.

If the Montys did not have enough experience in dealing with this kind of matter, they might have suffered horribly in Southeast Province. Right now, Jasper and the Montys were in peaceful coexistence.

Of course, Martin knew Jasper's name, but he had never met the man in person.

He even fantasized multiple times about Jasper going all out so that his position in the family would increase. However, at this moment, as he stood in front of Jasper, Martin could only quake in fear.

"If you want to die, go ahead. Don't drag the family into this."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1349

Conrad's icy voice pulled Martin back to reality.

"Sir, I had no idea," Martin said, his voice breaking.

"Do you think it matters whether or not you were aware of this?" Martin said coldly.

Martin shivered and he was speechless.

"Give the phone back to Jasper."

After Conrad's order, Martin did not dare to hesitate. He handed the phone back to Jasper with both hands shaking.

Earlier, he was very arrogant, but now, he was as timid as a mouse as he did not even dare to look Jasper in the eyes.

At this moment, he was feeling extremely remorseful. He just wanted to get out of this scary place as fast as possible.

However, he knew no matter where he ran to, it would all be the same. His life was over!

After he took back his phone, Jasper said with a grin, “How are you going to take care of this, Mr. Monty?”

Conrad said calmly, “I don’t need to do anything. Martin is not a Monty anymore so you can do whatever you want with him, Mr. Laine.”

“Savage,” Jasper said half grinning.

Conrad chuckled and said, “This is just one of the ways I’ve grown after considering your caring pointers.”

Jasper narrowed his eyes. After Conrad’s secret collaboration with Jasper, the latter felt that the current Conrad had become much more powerful than he was back then.

It seemed that Conrad was not the same person he was before.

“I am in Nauritus City now. Will you do me the honor of having a chat with me, Mr. Laine?” Conrad asked all of a sudden.

“I don’t think I have much time.”

Jasper was not evading Conrad.

It would be time for the main event soon, and Jasper still needed to go back and wait.

At this moment, Penelope was still being resorted. Therefore, Jasper naturally did not have the time nor mood to chat with Conrad.

“I just need half an hour. If you’re busy right now, I can wait. It’s fine. I’ll be waiting in Brew Splash Teahouse until you show up, Mr. Laine.” Conrad sounded very sincere.

“I’ll try my best.” Jasper thought about it and agreed.

His relationship with Conrad right now was a little complex.

They were not friends.

They could not resolve the grievances between them, and now that Conrad was on Fabian's side, so they could only be rivals.

However, they were not enemies.

They had a pretty pleasant collaboration before this, and the only person who walked out of it unhappy was Prince.

Jasper could sense that Conrad had some ulterior motives for asking to meet him.

However, Jasper did not know what it was as he was not a god and he could not predict the future.

He would only know if he went to meet Conrad.

Martin was petrified when he saw Jasper's gaze. Then, he immediately quivered.

After contemplating about it, he gritted his teeth and knelt in front of Jasper with a sudden thud.

Then, he started begging for mercy as he cried.

“Mr. Laine, I really didn’t know who you are. I was so blind to talk back to you just now. Please forgive me. If I knew who you were, how would I have the balls to talk back to you?”

Henry was disappointed when Martin admitted defeat so decisively.

He still wanted to make Martin dance.

“You idiot, weren’t you pretty arrogant just now? Continue being arrogant! I feel bad for bullying you when you’re like this,” Henry said in a conflicted tone.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1350

“S-sir, I know my mistake. Please forgive me!”

How would Martin dare to argue with Henry again? At this moment, he only wanted to run away.

Henry scoffed and did not even bother to look at Martin. He was not interested in lowly children of wealthy families anyway.

“Monty...”

Jasper said calmly and walked in front of Martin.

“Do you know why most families aren’t able to stick around for a long time?”

How would Martin dare to answer such a sensitive question? He lowered his head timidly and did not dare to say anything.

“Because there are too many people like you.”

Jasper sounded cold.

“Every founder of a family has great skill and strategy, if not, they would not be able to create a foundation that would be worthy of being called a family. However, there are always good and bad people sprouting up within the descendants. Aside from a surname, what do people like you have that you’re so proud of?”

Jasper's words caused Martin's face to burn painfully. However, he did not dare to talk back.

"Yes, you're right, Mr. Laine. Trash like me is everywhere. One rotten apple spoils the barrel. I deserve to die, and I am trash. I am the rotten apple."

When Jasper saw Martin's horrified face, he shook his head and did not want to say anything more.

"What's with your contract with Penelope?"

Martin shook his head and said, "What contract? I don't know. There's nothing like that. Penelope..."

"No, Miss Hunt has a very pleasant collaboration with me, and our contract just ended, so I was just about to extend the contract with her. However, Miss Hunt's sick so we can only talk about this next time."

Henry started laughing when he heard Martin's clever words.

Jasper was smiling as well.

“Don’t worry, I won’t force you. A breach of contract is a breach of contract. How much money does Penelope owe you? Tell me and I’ll pay for her. Not just you, I’ll also hear the compensation of the other dealerships.”

After Jasper said that, Martin shook his head fiercely.

What a joke. He was lucky to be alive, so how could he dare to ask for money?

Obviously, he misunderstood what Jasper meant.

“Mr. Laine, I’m serious. There is no breach of contract. As for the others, I know who they are, so I’ll talk to them. There must be a misunderstanding.

“Miss Hunt’s company is in a bit of a crisis, so we’ll just wait patiently. It’ll be best if she has the goods, but if she doesn’t, we’ll just wait until the day she does.”

Jasper looked at Martin ruminating. This kid was pretty smart when he needed to be.

Martin became more confident after Jasper looked at him. He figured he said the right thing to please Mr. Laine. If Mr. Laine was happy, then he would be safe.

When he thought about this, Martin made a solemn vow and promised, “Don’t worry, Mr. Laine. Leave this to me. You’re an important person and you have so many things to handle in one day. The matters you have to attend to are all of great importance.”

“You don’t need to meet those immature bosses from those lousy companies yourself. You’ll just be lowering your status.”

“I promise no one would cause trouble anymore. It’s impossible to breach the contract, and I guarantee there will be no breaches for the rest of her life. We’ll just wait until Miss Hunt feels better and provides us with the goods. We’ll talk about the goods when Miss Hunt recovers.”

At the same time, the door of the hospital room opened suddenly. Thus, Jasper did not want to waste time talking to Martin anymore.

He did not care whether Martin wanted the money or not.

If Martin did not want it, he would not force the money into his hands.

However, since he was sensible, Jasper would not teach him a lesson while he was being troubled by so many others things.

Jasper turned around to look at the doctor. Meanwhile, Henry turned around to shout at Martin, "What are you still standing here like an idiot for? Scram!"

It was as if Martin had gotten a pardon. He was gleeful as he bowed, nodded, and ran away.

"Doctor, how is she?" Jasper asked the doctor who had just walked out of the room.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1351

The doctor took off his mask and said, “It’s not too bad, she’s fine. However, the patient lost a lot of blood, she’s pretty weak now. If you’d like to visit her, please limit it to ten minutes.”

“And, the patient can’t be disturbed, please don’t excite or agitate her.”

Jasper nodded his head and said, “I understand, thanks, doc...”

Although the doctor who had been busy rescuing her in the ward did not know what happened on the outside, he shot a glance after he came out from the room. He saw the way the arrogant and bossy Martin and his men, nodding and bowing modestly at Jasper, looking like a pug.

Martin’s arrogant behavior contrasts with the mysterious aura and power of Jasper’s. The doctor spoke politely spontaneously.

“It’s alright. That’s my responsibility, will you excuse me, I have some paperwork to do. If you’re paying a visit, make it fast.”

After the doctor left, the nurses came out one after another from the room. Jasper then entered the room. The concentrated smell of the sanitizer in the ward was slightly piercing.

Jasper stepped over to the side of the ward bed, he saw Penelope was staring weakly at him.

“I am sorry...”

Jasper had no idea why the first word that came out of his mouth was those two words after seeing Penelope.

Penelope’s eyes reddened at once, and spoke softly, “I should be the one to apologize... Martin, are they still here?”

“They’re gone.”

Jasper sat down.

“The next thing you should be doing is to recover. Don’t think about these matters, they won’t be coming for you anymore.”

Penelope choked and said, “Never had I thought that you’re the one to help me again.”

“The doctor said you should keep calm.”

“These are just a piece of cake.”

Jasper thought for a moment, and said, “Get well and wait until you’ve recovered. If you’re looking for a job I can help you to get one, if you’d like to continue your business and manage your company, I’ll help to get in touch with the business channels.”

“There’s a company under my name, Abbylon. The company focuses on the e-commerce platform. It’s doing quite well now, the future prospects of the company are good too.”

“I’ll help to contact them then. You can distribute your stocks to the e-commerce platform, it’ll be best to go in the future.”

Penelope was biting her lip, and replied without continuing to talk about Jasper’s topic, “I already knew about my little brother’s matter, I’m sorry...”

Jasper saw Penelope's eyelids were getting heavier, knowing that the anesthesia was working, he stood up and said, "Get some sleep, I'm leaving. I'll visit again when I'm free."

Jasper turned and walked toward to door while saying that.

Penelope's voice came from behind all of a sudden.

"Jasp, I, we..."

Jasper turned around, gave a smile to Penelope, and said, "We're friends."

Penelope fixed her gaze at Jasper, at last, she nodded with tearful eyes. Eventually, the other half of the sentence was left unspoken.

Jasper was in a bad mood after he came out of the ward. "Let's go to Brew Splash Teahouse."

It suddenly came to his mind that Conrad was still waiting for him. Jasper looked at the time, there was still time to talk over a meal."

“To meet Conrad?” Henry asked.

“Yes.” Jasper nodded.

“Hey, that kid, he’s kind of popular in Harbor City.”

Henry gave a cold grin, his eyes were slightly gloomy. This was his prelude to punch someone.

“Did he provoke you?” Jasper was surprised.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1352

“Do you know Fabian opened a luxurious nightclub called the Empire Meet in Harbor city?” Henry spoke in an annoyed tone.

“Yes, I thought that was some time ago?” Jasper asked curiously.

“Humph, humph.”

Henry snorted in an enigmatic manner, then continued, "It certainly was some time ago, but after Conrad went there, he became the deputy of Empire Meet, and he's causing a lot of trouble in Harbor City."

"Now the Empire Meet's influence is getting stronger, it was all because of Conrad."

"Needless to say, this is none of my business, but this b*stard created something called the Harbor City's top ten grandmasters. Although they told the others that it was based on the club member's ranking, everyone knows he's trying to establish the Empire Meet's authority."

"As time goes by, people like us who didn't join the Empire Meet are going to be outsiders."

"There's also another series of actions. After all, their purpose was to strengthen the fame and status of those who joined the Empire Meet, and to weaken those who didn't."

Jasper heard this and said, "It was a good move indeed."

"Your generation is already in the twenties. Those who are slightly elder are in their thirties, which is a critical period for them as they're starting to take over their family business."

“It’s hard to see the consequences now, but wait until ten or twenty years later. After this generation took over, there’ll be tons of resources for the Empire Meet.”

“Think about it, out of ten there’s six or seven of the family heads are the members of Empire Meet in the Harbor City. Even the four richest families wouldn’t dare to underestimate them.”

Henry’s facial expression turned darker at once.

“Well, it’s fine. You’re able to realize the problem now, which means you improved a lot.” Jasper smiled and complimented.

Henry was a little embarrassed, and replied, “My sister reminded me about it when she called me last time when I was being brought back home.”

“Has she been busy these days?”

Jasper recalled that he called Anna the day before but ended the conversation shortly.

“Don’t even mention it, she’s planning to open a workshop in a foreign country. She’s been terribly busy, she’ll be free after this. Her birthday is just around the corner, don’t you forget that.” Henry reminded him.

Jasper recalled back the previous conversations with Anna, it seemed like she was hinting at something. He could not help but smiled and said, "Don't worry, I got it."

Brew Splash Teahouse had the best quality tea in Nauritus City, yet it kept a low profile. The owner never put up any advertisement as if 'whatever will be, will be' was its business management style. Had it not been for the tea ceremony experts, no one would have known that there was a place like this.

It was Jasper's first time here.

Brew Splash Teahouse was located in a remote place, and so it was a quiet place. It was quite a scene walking along with the shadows of bamboo in the inner courtyard."

"Mr. Laine, Mr. Monty is already in the private room waiting for you, please follow me."

It was a woman with an attractive figure, wearing a pale blue-colored cheongsam, speaking gently.

Jasper and Henry walked toward the private room together, following behind her. As for Julian, he stayed outside waiting for them.

“Tsk, the boss here is smart enough.”

Walking beside Jasper, Henry spoke while he stared at the woman’s wriggling waist and booty who was leading the way ahead.

“Look at this figure. Tsk tsk, I wonder where he found her. Well, I’m starting to like here. I wonder if there is any club membership available here?”

The woman in front turned around all of a sudden, gave Henry a charming smile, and said, “Young Master Law, I’m Adele, who’s in charge of the Brew Splash Teahouse.”

Henry was startled for a moment and felt awkward.

“This little teahouse was meant for a bunch of fellows who loves tea ceremony, it’s not particularly profitable. Young Master Law can visit more often if you like it here. As for the member system, we don’t have one here.”

“Yes I will, I’ll visit often...”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1353

Henry was the expert among the experts in fooling around at nightclubs, and he chuckled after he heard her reply.

Jasper who was beside him slightly raised his eyebrows, and said, “Looks like our lady boss Adele knows a lot.”

Ranging from the Southeast Province to the Mainland, only a few would have known Henry.

However, it was unusual that she exposed Henry’s identity once she spoke.

Adele gave a faint smile and said, “Even though there aren’t many customers here in the Brew Splash Teahouse, but tons of information were gathered here. I’ve heard about Young Master Law occasionally, and that’s how I know the Young Master Law looks like.”

“I didn’t know I’ve grown in such popularity.” Henry was pleased.

Adele flattered him further. “Young Master Law is a virtuous and talented person, and of course, you’ll attract attention no matter where you go.”

“Hahaha, I’m starting to like you.” Henry gave out a big laugh.

Jasper slightly narrowed his eyes, looking at Henry and Adele talking and laughing while they were walking.

It seemed like Adele was flattering Henry, but there was some leaked information from within.

The one thing that Jasper could confirm was, the Brew Splash Teahouse, and the lady boss Adele was not as simple as they looked.

‘Does she have anything to do with Conrad?’

Jasper kept that question in mind, and asked as if it was unintentional, “Is Mr. Monty a regular customer here?”

“Not really.” Adele chuckled, her bright eyes turned to look at Jasper, it was stunning.

“Mr. Monty and Mr. Laine are too busy, it looks like there’s no spare time for them to visit my teahouse that often. If Mr. Laine likes it here, you’re always welcome.”

Jasper nodded his head and smiled. "Sure."

Adele brought them both to a private room, excused herself to prepare tea then left.

Henry's eyes were shining while he watched Adele's graceful figure walking away from behind. "This is such a good place."

"What about Jill?" Jasper replied.

Henry glared at Jasper. "Can they be the same?"

"Adele, the prettiest wildflower, that's how we called it in Harbor City. You see, two flowers are essential for a man a wildflower and a garden flower. I can't find anyone else other than Adele to be that particular wildflower."

"Normal people wouldn't be able to handle it."

Jasper shook his head as he pushed the box's entrance door.

It was not big a small winged room structure, the decorations, and furnishings were the pseudo classical style. It made people felt like they've transmigrated to some ancient courtyard house's guestroom after entering.

The materials used for every piece of furniture were luxurious.

All of them were made from scented rosewood, it was being used as a material for large areas on the furniture, which was something that could not be done by just having enough money.

The small room was suffused with the aroma of wood, and the thin wisp of incense curling up, made them felt relaxed.

Conrad was sitting beside a round table, pouring tea. Seeing the two of them, he smiled and stood up. His hands reached out and gestured to the two seats opposite him, and said, "Mr. Laine and Mr. Law, please take a seat."

The moment Henry saw Conrad, he pulled a long face immediately.

However, he did not lose his temper as Jasper was there too. Instead, he snorted and sat down.

Jasper sat down at the same time and glanced toward Conrad, smiled, and said, “How free is Mr. Monty, having the time to enjoy a cup of tea here. Well, too bad I didn’t know it’s such a nice place here.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1354

Listening to what Jasper said, Conrad then smiled. “I’m just an ordinary person, and exquisite hobbies like tasting tea don’t suit me. This is my father’s favorite place to go, I came to know this place before long.”

“The lady boss Adele is a sophisticated woman, and so is her social status. That’s why her Brew Splash Teahouse is the best place to talk about business.”

Unusual social status?

Jasper narrowed his eyes.

While his facial expression showed no sign of changes.

“What’s the matter that Mr. Monty invited me here to talk about?”

Conrad chuckled and said, "I'd like to form a united front with you, Mr. Laine."

Not to mention that Henry was shocked, even Jasper raised his eyebrows after listening to what he said.

"Fabian wouldn't have agreed on this, right?"

Conrad laughed and said, "Can't the matters that he disagreed with be hidden away from him?"

"Give me a reason," Jasper replied coldly.

"There's no such thing as a free lunch, you have your reason for doing this. Stop giving false excuses, I'd like to listen to the truth." Jasper added.

Conrad spoke expressionlessly, "A few months ago, I talked to my father. He told me that it took more than twenty years for the Monty family to make their fortune, which started with my grandfather. Within all these twenty years, given that the few chances, there's only one reason that strengthened the Monty family."

"My grandfather didn't put all his eggs in one basket when he was making important decisions last time."

Henry scoffed once he heard it.

“Nonsense, sounds nice but isn’t that being a fence sitter?”

Conrad did not lose his temper, instead, he nodded and replied sincerely, “Yes, it is.”

“Although fence sitters were always being cast aside, you can’t deny that no matter you’re standing on the left or the right side of the wall, you need that fence sitter to exist. Otherwise, who’s going to rebuild that wall after the wall came tumbling down?”

“Winners disdain to do such things, so this is why fence sitters exist.”

Jasper replied calmly, “Mr. Monty seems to forget about something else. Fabian and I only need a steadfast ally in the battle of life and death. Of course, this character could be one of those Fabian’s loyal attendants.”

“It doesn’t matter if he’s an ally or an attendant. I’m afraid that once the fence sitter has any second thoughts, he’d be the first to die.”

Conrad replied blandly, “Mr. Laine, maybe we should change our perspectives regarding this matter.”

“Looks like you’re sure that I’m going to say yes.” Jasper laughed.

Conrad lifted his hand to pour tea into the cups and served Jasper and Henry a cup of tea each personally in a humble manner.

When the tea was served in front of Henry, Conrad smiled. “Mr. Law, you don’t have to detest me. Working with Mr. Atticus, there are many things I had to do in that position, otherwise, I’m useless to him.”

“You know how Mr. Atticus’s behaved, If I don’t show how useful am I to him, I’ll out of luck.”

“You’re good in smooth- talking.” Henry sneered, his face was still unhappy.

Conrad got back to his seat, looked at Jasper, and said, “I’m sure because there’s no reason for Mr. Laine to reject someone who working beside Mr. Atticus a spy who’s able to obtain first hand information from Mr. Atticus’s right?”

“How do I know this wasn’t Fabian’s plan?” Jasper asked.

Conrad’s facial expression was cahn, he then answered, “Fabian has already teamed up with Softwin’s Mr. Welch and Mr. Morrison from Layman Investment Bank. Three of them combined and collected not less than 1.2 billion US Dollars, and were planning to liquidate all of your stocks on Jow Dones Index.”

“And they’re planning to do it...”

Conrad lifted his hand and shot a glance on his watch, then said, “Five hours later when the US Jow Dones Index stock market opens.”

Conrad looked at Jasper, and continued, “Does this prove my sincerity?”

Henry’s facial expression slightly changed when he heard these words, then he turned and looked at Jasper.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1355

However, whether it was Henry or Conrad, both of them looked at Jasper who was as calm as still water.

“Yes.” Jasper nodded his head and gave a reply.

Conrad said, "This is the core of what Fabian is doing now. It wasn't long before I heard the news. I decided to contact you when I knew about it."

"Reason?" Jasper asked.

Conrad shook his head and said, "The reasons Fabian teamed up with Softwin investment and Layman Investment Bank, one of them was to fight against you, but I have yet to know the other one which is the true secret."

"As for the reason that you asked for, it's still the same. Fabian doesn't seem to be sharp enough, but I'm not sure if you can win either, so I'm betting on both sides."

Jasper replied, "When the whole world thought I was crazy for investing in the US stocks, you're here thinking that there's a chance for me to win?"

"They haven't played against you, they don't know how scary you can be."

Conrad gave a mocking smile, and said, "But I sensed it, even if everyone out there is crazy, I know that you're not."

"I didn't know I portrayed such an image in your heart." Jasper laughed.

“If I can, I’ll kick you away without hesitation when you fall, but I’ll not be the one who’s going to make you fall.”

“Does that mean if I don’t fall, you’ll side with me?” Jasper was trying to figure it out

“Something like that...”

Conrad smiled and answered.

“Deal,” Jasper uttered the word slowly.

Conrad smiled while he raised his teacup, and said, “Then we shall celebrate our partnership in advance, let’s toast with our cup of tea.”

Clink.

It was the sharp ringing sound of expensive porcelain cups clinking together.

After finishing the tea, Jasper stood up and spoke. "Please excuse me, I'll have to leave."

"I'll have to go back to Harbor City immediately," Conrad replied.

Jasper turned around all of a sudden when he reached the door, and asked Conrad, "The money that Fabian invested, do you have a share of it?"

Conrad stared at him blankly for a moment and shook his head. "No, but if you lose, everything in Southeast Province will be mine."

"You believe that?" Jasper was amused.

80% of his assets were within Southeast Province, it was unexpected that Fabian went so far as to make a declaration like that.

Conrad shrugged and said, "No."

"Interesting, I'm glad you don't have a share of that money. As a gift for my new partner, I suggest you start short selling now. Better be quick, there'll be no chances left if you're late."

Jasper left with Henry after saying those words.

In the box, Conrad slightly creased his eyebrows and thought deeply of what Jasper told him.

He knew that Jasper planned strategically in everything he did, then he would make each move with confidence. However, he certainly did not expect Jasper had so much confidence this time.

As far as he could see, even if it was Fabian, Layman, or Softwin, they meant nothing to him, it was as if they couldn't harm Jasper.

Conrad gave out a light sigh, and muttered, "Jasper, where did you get that confidence from?"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1356

“Leaving so soon, Mr. Laine and Young Master Law?”

Both of them had not walked far away from the private room, Adele’s voice came from behind.

Jasper stood still and turned around, smiled at Adele, and said, “We must leave, there’s still work to do. Lady Boss Adele, is there anything I can help with?”

Adele smiled faintly and shook her head. “Nothing, but Mr. Laine, you can just call me by Adele. I wouldn’t dare to address myself as a lady boss in front of you. Not to mention that it sounds old fashioned being called that way.”

Jasper gave out a laugh. “Sure, I’ll take note of that.”

“Take care, Mr. Laine, do visit here often, ” Adele spoke gently.

“I will.” Jasper nodded.

Henry grinned and said, "I'll come more often too."

Adele gave a faint smile and replied, "That's great. I'll personally make tea for both of you the next time you're here again."

"Hey, I don't feel like leaving anymore." Henry gave an evil grin.

Adele chuckled. "It is an honor that Young Master Law likes it here, but my teahouse isn't big enough to provide accommodation, only enough to have tea here."

"Let's go."

Jasper spoke before Henry caught the chance to flirt with Adele again.

Adele was a tricky person, her background was unknowingly mysterious too. Jasper did not plan to rub shoulders with her too much, not until he figured out her background.

Adele held a gentle and faint smile while watching them disappear at the end of the aisle.

Not long after, Conrad came out too.

“Miss Adele, I’m leaving.” Conrad showed great respect for Adele.

Adele nodded and smiled. “Take care, Mr. Monty.”

Something came across Conrad’s mind and he asked, “Miss Adele, people have been calling you by your name, but none of them know your family name. I’ve heard from a friend that Miss Adele’s family name is Browns, from the swallow capital in the North, is that true?”

Adele was still smiling and replied, “Indeed, my family name is Browns, but it has nothing to do with Brew Splash Teahouse. I’m just the owner of this teahouse.”

Conrad suppressed the uneasy feeling in his heart, nodded, and said, “I understand, Miss Adele. Please wait a minute.”

On the way back, Henry looked at Jasper and asked, “Do you trust him?”

“He didn’t lie,” Jasper answered.

“It wasn’t about trusting him, it’s a mutual benefit partnership, so why not?”

Henry was unhappy. “He gives me that enigmatic feeling.”

“It was as if he’s not the same person I knew in the past.” Jasper narrowed his eyes and said, “Speaking about how much he has grown, he’s changed the most among the people I’ve ever met...”

“Hey, are you afraid?” Henry laughed.

Jasper shook his head, and replied, “Not really, I have my ways of dealing with him. It looks like we should review his identity, this man might surprise us.”

Right after Jasper reached his home, Jake called his phone.

“Mr. Laine, US stock market will be opening in a few hours, we only have less than 500 million US Dollars in hand. We’ll go into liquidation if Dow Jones Index increase more than 10 points.”

Jasper answered, "I know, just wait for it."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1357

Jake lowered his voice and said, "Mr. Laine, the rumors were not in our favor. If anything goes wrong, we'll have to pay at least 1 billion US Dollars in deposit for this heavy stock which costs 2.5 billion."

"Are you afraid?" Jasper laughed.

Jake forced a smile and spoke honestly, "I'm kind of nervous."

"Don't worry."

Jasper who just walked into his office looked up at the clock hanging on the wall, and said, "3 hours till the market opens, and we'll see who the winner is."

The trading hours of US market stock opens from 9:30 AM. until 4 PM. every trading day without closing in between. However, that incident occurred at 8:40 AM, so it would happen in less than 2 hours.

It was already nighttime in Summerland.

Jasper asked his men to get him a television equipped with a satellite receiver in this office. He would be able to watch the US live broadcast in this place.

After adjusting the channel, Jasper threw a bottle of drink to Henry, sat down, and said, "Let's wait for it."

Henry could not hold back, and asked, "You're still watching the news? Is there any breaking news today? One that can influence the stock market?"

Jasper stared at the news anchor who was live broadcasting, and replied calmly "Yes, there must be."

Henry suppressed the impulse to ask for more answers and waited patiently.

"Things have come this far, just relax and wait."

Far away in Harbor City, inside the chairman's office of Law's Corporation, Zachary spoke blandly to his assistant who was looking worried.

"But Mr. Law, a few shareholders disapprove that you're releasing funds for Jasper."

"Yesterday, the Dow Jones Index closed at 11650 points, if it climbs up to 11660 points and above, there's a risk that Jasper's stocks will be fully liquidated, it'll be a big threat to our capital."

Zachary looked up at him straight in the face when he heard his assistant.

"Are you Mr. Law or am I?"

One word from Zachary and the assistant was terrified, he lowered his head immediately, and said, "I'm sorry Mr. Law, I shouldn't question your decision."

Zachary replied with his face slightly darkened, "The Law's Corporation belongs to the Law family, the shares that those shareholders were holding were not even 10% of it, if they have any opinions, ask them to talk to me. I've released 7 billion of capital, who's objecting? Who's eligible to object?"

"I'm sorry, Mr. Law."

“Leave and do your work.”

“Yes, sir...”

In Harbor City, the thick and fragrant smelling cigar smoke was curling up, Fabian was laughing out loud with Morrison. “Mr. Morrison, my father, and your father, Mr. Robin were good friends for such a long time. I had dinners with Mr. Robin a few times, but I’d never thought that I’d hit it off quite well with you instead of him.”

Mr. Morrison fiddled with the cigar in his hands and smiled. “By having the same goals, we talked about the same topics. Wall Street believes in teamwork, I think Mr. Atticus and I will become good partners.”

Fabian patted Morrison’s shoulder heavily and laughed. “3 more hours till the market opens, we’ve already spread the rumors that we’ll trample Jasper to death once the market opens today. But no one knows that we had already put our funds into it, once the market opens, Jasper will be dead!”

“2.5 billion US Dollars, what a huge amount. The higher the amount, the faster Jasper will be dead. Once it opens, I wonder about Jasper’s remarkable facial expression when he comes to realize everything has been arranged last night.” Morrison was delighted.

“Too bad Mr. Welch is far away in Sunrise, he’s unable to celebrate with us.” Fabian smiled.

Morrison shrugged his shoulders and said, “Perhaps he’s waiting for the stock market to open too.”

Countless people, organization and capital, were waiting silently. The moment when the stock market index opened, it would be a moment of the earth cracking and heaven falling.

A big war was about to erupt!

Life at The Top – Chapter 1358

Time passed by as they waited.

Everyone thought today was just another ordinary day. None would have thought that such an ordinary day would be written into history.

Tommy was a backpack traveler. In the year 2001, all he had was his traveling backpack on him. He got his clothes and camping tent, some electronic devices in his backpack, and a portable DV camera. That was all the equipment he got.

Tommy made a living by recording down the beautiful sceneries and his travel stories in different countries all around the world with his DV camera and uploaded it to the internet.

Today, Tommy came to the World Trade Center. It was New York City's landmark in the US, not only it was the pride of the nation, it was one of the icons that represented the World's Economy Center.

Tommy stood on top of another skyscraper which was opposite to it, facing the camera, the Twin Towers of World Trade Center stood tall behind him.

"Hello everyone, it's me, your old friend Tommy. I'm currently in New York City, one of the greatest and the most modern cities on this planet.

"Behind me, that's the famous Twin Towers of the World Trade Center, the pride of New York City and the might of US."

Tommy was busy introducing the building behind him. Before uploading the video, he would need to edit the video after he finished recording.

When he was recording halfway, all of a sudden Tommy heard the tourists beside him were in panic and screaming loudly.

Tommy was startled, he turned around and saw something he could never forget in his whole life.

An aircraft appeared in the sky, it was diving through the clouds. The aircraft was moving fast, at first it was a tiny black shadow, then in a blink of an eye, it was clear enough to see its outline.

At this moment, all the witnesses did not realize how serious it would be, including Tommy. Tommy sensed something was wrong at the first moment.

“Why is this plane flying at such low altitude?”

Other than backpacking, he was an aircraft enthusiast. Although he was not a professional flyer, he knew that in New York City, where tall buildings were everywhere, the flight routes across the airspace were highly restricted.

It was obvious that the aircraft was flying so much lower than the altitude required.

For some bizarre reason, Tommy focused on the aircraft with his DV camera. At the same time, he shouted to the voice recording equipment, and said, “Friends, look what I’m seeing. An aircraft flying low...”

It was more than ten seconds after the aircraft appeared.

It continued to fly at low levels with increased speed, the aircraft became clearer and bigger as it in their eyes.

“Oh my God, this plane is flying way too low. It’s dangerous, I can even see the windows and emblazoned design on the plane clearly, it’s a US aircraft!”

“Oh God, it’s flying toward the Twin Towers, what’s going on!?”

As the distance got closer, the stronger the impact flying in full throttle.

At this moment, countless witnesses including Tommy were able to hear the roaring engine of the plane approaching.

Along with the humming of the machines, neither did the aircraft slow down nor fly up. With countless people’s dumbfounded and disbelieving gazes, it crashed into one of the Twin Towers!

Boom!!!

A loud roar with a massive explosion, followed by a strong trembling of the ground as if there was an earthquake.

The unseen impact from the crash on the tower spread out, Tom fell and sat on the floor, the DV camera was dropped from his hands.

Without hesitation, Tommy picked up the DV and focused on the crashed tower as if he was possessed, even if he felt that tingling in his scalp which made his hair stand on end.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1359

At this moment, there were loud explosions continuously ringing in his ears, and the horrified screaming of the people around him.

Crowds were streaming out onto the streets, fleeing. Looking from above, it was like ants fleeing for their life after their nest was stirred up, countless people were fleeing.

High above, there was smoke billowing from the tower of the trade center, a fiery red fireball exploded instantly at the crash site.

Rolling clouds of smoke streamed up, covering up the higher floors of the tower, it was unknown that how many people had lost their lives in a second without knowing what happened.

The most tragic thing that happened was when some of the survivors who were trapped in the higher floors of the tower were suffocated to death by the smoke, while some opened the windows, tried to jump off the building, but it was a skyscraper of hundreds of meters high, completely cutting off their way out.

“Oh my God!!! Sh*t!!!”

Tommy yelled so loud that he almost lost his voice, causing hoarseness in his voice.

“What the hell happened, is there a war?!”

The whole city was in chaos, the sirens of the fire engines were wailing from every corner of the city. The people in New York City were able to see the plume of black smoke billowing from the tower, covering up the skies once they lifted their heads from every direction.

All of a sudden, it was as if the horrendous fear of the apocalypse had shrouded New York City.

People were screaming and running around like a headless chicken, looking for shelter.

Before this happened, the US nation would have never thought that being a resident of the world's strongest country would be enveloped by such terrifying trauma one day.

There were continuous explosions and trembling of the ground, Tommy finally realized that it was dangerous for him to remain there.

He even saw an office worker jumping out from the window from the Twin Towers, hundreds of meters above, and disappeared in the black smoke and fiery blaze.

He could feel the ground shaking as if the skyscraper he was standing on was not safe anymore.

Again Tommy heard another familiar humming sound, he lifted his head, and another aircraft came diving from the skies above, piercing through the clouds.

Tommy was frozen with horror at that moment. "There's, there's another one!"

Tommy screamed in fear as if he saw the devil's face. Without hesitation, he turned around and ran.

After a few minutes.

Boom!!!

The second plane smashed onto the second tower.

The two crashes hit through the sixth floor within the Twin tower thoroughly destroyed from the inside to the outside.

The explosion took hundreds of lives in a second, the most terrifying was the aftermath, the fire, and smoke which caused the death toll and the number of injured to escalate.

Running away from the building, Tommy was trapped in the escaping crowds. Suddenly, he heard a roar as if the sky had fallen.

He turned his head over, the horrendous scene of the 12th floor of the Twin Towers, World Trade Center collapsing was reflected in his pupils.

Tommy shivered, his heart almost stopped beating, and there was nothing more tremendous than what happened right in front of him at this moment.

“The US... is doomed!” Tommy groaned.

He had no idea that, at the very same time, there was a third aircraft crashing onto another building.

Here was the military base of the US.

The Pentagon!

Life at The Top – Chapter 1360

Three loud smashes sent the whole world in terror.

Before this happened, the US nation would have never thought that there would be a horrendous terrorist attack happening on the land of the US.

There was not even a gunshot during the world war, but after the new millennium, New York City and the US capital had suffered from the worst terrorist attack that had never happened in world history.

The aftermath of the explosion had quickly spread across the whole world at the speed of light.

There were slight yet complex changes happening to the whole world in a second.

Jasper was not aware of anything but Henry was giving him that death stare.

“You, d*mn you...! F*ck!!! What the hell?! Are you a human or a ghost?!”

Henry looked at Jasper in disbelief, he was short of breath and slightly frightened.

He could not help himself being terrified.

At this moment, on the television screen in the room, it was an image of a reporter holding the microphone standing in front of the debris of the Twin Towers, reporting about this incident on the live news stream. It was a piece of emergency news that just came in 4 minutes ago.

Although Henry was a rich kid, he was from the Law family after all. Even if the Law family's nature was doing business, they are still somehow connected to politics.

Henry acquired that political mindset after many years of upbringing by his family.

When he saw the apocalyptic scene with his own eyes, he knew what serious aftermath the incident would have caused immediately.

There was no doubt that the US would take revenge after being provoked, no matter who was the mastermind, none of the countries in this world would be able to deal with their anger.

Henry could not be bothered about those matters, at least he understood that the US stock market was going to explode.

As the evolution of globalization is getting developed, economies, politics, and the military were associated in every modern country. The terrorist attack in the US would cause significant economic damage to the country.

In the immediate aftermath, the stock market would be the first to be affected.

The stock market was meant to be doomed.

“You were planning this. Everyone thought you were crazy until this happened. You, how do you know this would happen!?”

“Do you have anything to do with the mastermind of this incident?!”

Henry asked from the deep of his heart.

“Nonsense...”

Jasper’s mood was swirling up and down now.

In the past life, he was one of those countless onlookers, but this time, he was the witness.

Even though he was only playing strategy games in the stock market, it was considered as participating in this significant matter in history.

The anxiety and nervousness that he felt before were all finally gone at this moment.

“Even if I’m given ten more lives I’ll still not get myself involved in this.”

Jasper gave his answer straightforward.

Jasper knew that this world was dangerous.

All this time he had been reminding himself that to control everything he needed and wanted to do within the economic sector. Going as far as playing political games with countries, no thank you, Mr. Laine was not interested in that.

Attacking the US , Mr. Laine was not mad.

“Then how is it possible that you know this is going to happen?” Henry asked, surprised.

If he had not seen with his own eyes, Henry would not have believed that.

He could not help feeling suspicious when he saw what happened.

“I can only tell you that, something happens for a reason in this world. Where there is a cause, there will be a consequence. It would be the same in the opposite.”

There must be a reason why this happened today, it was because of all what they had done before.

“If you would like to know more about it, I suggest you start with the policies that the US implemented in the Middle East countries three years ago.”

“Only after you’ve seen it all, and think about it, then you’ll know. There must be rebellion when living under such stressful policies and exploitation by oppressors.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1361

“It’s impossible for them to fight against the United States in the local war.

“With a single strike, nothing would be left, and their homeland would be destroyed. Therefore, it was reasonable that they targeted the United States’ territory.”

Jasper did not talk much about this. He thought for a while, then he stood up.

“Alright, enough with the entertainment, it’s time to look at our good harvests.”

A video call request rang out loudly right after.

Jasper accepted the call, and, as he expected, it was Jake. On the screen, Jake was exhilarated to the extent that his face had reddened.

“Mr. Laine, you won’t believe it. Oh my God, there was a plane collision at the World Trade Centre and the Pentagon in the United States. Two more minutes till the stock market opens!”

Jasper was in a good mood, and replied, “I know, this is our long-awaited chance. Quickly get everyone ready, we don’t have to do anything, just wait to get paid.”

“Yes, yes Sir!”

Jake was so excited that he could not even talk properly.

Before this, most of the traders in Jasper’s team were pessimistic toward his actions at the time.

Any one of them would have been aware of the current economic situation, so the fact that Jasper predicted that the United States stock market would drop drastically was as unbelievable as announcing that the aliens were going to invade the Earth the next day.

But!

It happened right before their eyes.

When they received the news of what happened in the New York City of the United States, the first thing that came into their mind was fear. Was their boss a human or a ghost?

How was he able to predict this?!

Even so, there was no time to think too much as the stock market was opening soon.

Everyone shared the same thought.

They had planned the deployment strategies for half a month and amassed a total sum of 2.5 billion US Dollars. How much could they stand to gain this time? Those were numbers that no one could have ever imagined.

Counting down till the market opened, in Harbor City at Atticus's home.

Fabian sat on the sofa, his face expressionless. However, anyone was able to see that he was agitated from the slight tremor of his hands resting on his knees.

In front of him was the outraged Morrison.

“F*ck!”

“F*ck!”

Morrison was swearing with distorted facial expressions, like a hideous demon.

“How is this possible? Jasper was going to die, then this happened!”

“Unbelievable!”

“Is even God helping Jasper?!”

A whole load of ranting and cursing got on Fabian’s nerves.

“Enough!”

A loud yell shut Morrison up.

Fabian took a deep breath, calmed himself down, and spoke to Morrison, “I’m sorry for being rude, but yelling can’t change anything now.”

“What now?” Morrison asked and gritted his teeth, suppressing his anger.

Regardless of the situation, Morrison’s confidence recovered a little when he saw Fabian’s calmness.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1362

“There’re two things we have to do now.”

“First, get in touch with all the connections you have in the United States, find out the how serious the aftermath of this incident is.”

“Second, I’ll ask my men to place a stop-loss order to limit our losses as much as possible.”

Fabian was slightly parched by the time he stopped talking. He had just set aside his nervousness and anger, but now they suddenly returned with a vengeance. "All of our funds were invested in the hedged orders that ran against Jasper. It was natural for the stock market index to fall since something big just happened there."

"What we can do now is to sell it off, and sell as much as we can. We can't afford to lose that much money."

Morrison's face took on a ghastly expression when he recalled the disastrous amount of funds he had invested in the stock market.

"I made calls, but I either couldn't get through, or they didn't know the answer."

"But I can confirm that the President of the United States is already aware of the incident."

"The United States is on high alert, the military forces deployed three fleets of fully loaded aircraft carrier while six fleets of combat aircraft are already on guard. One third of the entire country's missile silo were on standby to be launched."

Morrison, given with his high social status, shuddered with fear after he said that.

Fabian closed his eyes when he heard this, at this moment, he felt as if the whole world and his eyes fell into darkness.

Fabian opened his eyes once his trader reminded him.

Fabian’s and Morrison’s gazes fell onto the big screen at the same time.

“New York Securities Exchange, Nasdaq Securities Exchange, and the United States Securities Exchange are opening at the same time.”

“When the three largest stock exchanges opened at the same time, thousands of stocks began falling sharply at the same time!”

“Drop! Drop! Drop!”

“As we can see, every stock is falling. A dismal performance by the stock market that is filled with red, nothing is moving upward!”

“The wealth is gone. Wealth that the United States had accumulated over hundreds of years is disappearing rapidly every single minute!”

“This is the darkest day in United States’ history! A painful point in modern economic history!”

“The wealth of the United States stockholders are declining while the massive numbers are rippling through the whole world’s economy. This means global wealth is decreasing as a whole!”

The financial reporter’s pessimistic voice was aired on the television.

However, Jasper and Henry were celebrating.

“Indeed, one of the easiest way to get rich is from war.” Henry was still excited and thrilled.

It was none of his business that the United States was losing their money. He even wished that more of their money was lost.

The more they lost, the more profit Jasper and he could gain.

“Mr. Laine, here’s the data!”

The video call had not ended, and Jake’s voice was filled with excitement as it resonated through the phone.

“Five minutes after the market opened, Nasdaq fell 1200 points and Dow Jones lost 1800 points. It’s still falling rapidly!”

“The whole stock market is selling off stocks now. Everyone is selling crazily, but no one is buying them!”

After Jasper heard his, he opened his backstage account. He saw the unified management backstage managing hundreds of trading accounts clearly displaying that the overall process had turned his losses into profits. It took only five minutes to gain back the losses of billions of US Dollars that he had previously deployed. He even gained a few millions of profit!

Moreover, the numbers were still rolling. Each shift was quickly credited into the account.

If Jasper wanted to, he could choose to close the position at any time, and the profit gained would be credited into the account immediately.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1363

However, Jasper was not foolish enough to sell it off now.

“Phew.”

Jasper let out a sigh of relief as he laid his back on the executive chair.

It was undeniable that he had been under a lot of stress during this period.

At last, everything came to light, and there was rainbow after the storm!

“F*ck! Money, tons of money!”

Henry’s eyes shone as he stood beside Jasper and watched the numbers roll. He could not help but feel his heart racing.

Born into the Law family, Henry had no idea about the concept of money. They were just numbers to him. However, he knew that when the numbers reached a certain level, qualitative changes could happen. No one would have rejected an increase in wealth, or the number of digits getting longer.

“How much is being put into my account every minute?” Henry asked Jasper excitedly.

“Based on the one hundred million that you invested, approximately 50 million gained every minute.” Jasper smiled.

“F*ck! f*ck! f*ck!”

Henry whined.

“If I knew about this earlier, I’d get a loan from the loan sharks!”

Jasper’s profit was coming in insanely quick. Meanwhile, Fabian, who bought orders before the market opened, was suffering massive losses.

“Liquidation!”

“Mr. Atticus, another account is being liquidated!”

Since he was acting against Jasper, Fabian needed more than one account to control so many funds. Hence, he created hundreds of account to hedge by betting against Jasper.

Hedging was a process whereby Fabian bought everything Jasper sold.

In essence, they were offsetting each other on the book.

Now, the profitable position which could gain profit every single minute and second that he had bought a day ago had turned into a deadly poison.

Five minutes after the market opened, 28 of Fabian’s accounts were liquidated.

“Son of a b*tch!” Fabian cursed in rage.

At this moment, Mitch’s face was pale white. He hurried over once he received the news.

He crumpled on the sofa, and spoke to Fabian suddenly, “Mr. Atticus, what should we do? The Dow Jones Index fell 1800 points since it was opened. Based on the situation, it’s possible that it might fall to 3000 points in a day. What, what should we do?”

“Once it drop more than 2000 points, all of our funds will be liquidated. Mr. Atticus, it’s a total of 30 billion of Harbor Dollars!”

“I’m not f*cking blind, you don’t have to remind me about that!”

Fabian snapped his head around and yelled in annoyance as if a human eating demon was glaring at Mitch.

Fabian was unable to hold back his emotions anymore. His trembling hands showed that he was panicking too. Morrison, who was beside him, had just ended the phone call and walked over, his face pale white.

“My father just called me. He told me he’s at the headquarters attending a meeting discussing the measures against this incident now. He didn’t have the time to tell me more about it, he just warned me to get away immediately. No one can stop the plunge of the stock market.”

“Get away!?”

Fabian sneered, and gritted his teeth, “How...?!”

“Everything is falling apart now and we’re standing right in the middle of it. There is no way we can get away!”

“Deposit additional funds!”

Fabian suddenly yelled, his bloodshot eyes as he shouted crazily, “I don’t believe that the officials in the United States and Federal Reserve will simply watch the stock market crash. They’ll definitely bailout the stock market. I’m betting on this! Deposit funds into the margin account to prevent a margin call!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1364

Fabian’s decision caused Mitch to fall into a state of despair.

“H-how much?”

Fabian’s stock traders were extremely qualified, and they were able to calculate the figure in the shortest time possible.

“If you want to prevent the position from collapsing, according to the trend of the call, I think you have to add on about 500 million US Dollars.”

“Moreover, this is before the United States government and Federal Reserve fall to 2500 points on the Dow Jones Index, and before a successful market rescue.”

When Mitch heard this, his face turned pale.

“500 million US Dollars is 4 billion Harbor Dollars. I-It’s so much money...”

Back then, Mitch had already thrown in 2 billion Harbor Dollars, so he had nothing left.

He only got that sum because he went behind his family’s back and put up some of his family assets as collateral.

Now, he would need so much money just to stay afloat. Even though 4 billion Harbor Dollars was the total amount, and he would not need to spend so much himself, he still could not gather that much money.

At that moment, Mitch was looking at Fabian as if he was asking for help. He said, “Mr. Atticus, y-you can’t leave me to die.”

Fabian looked at Mitch coldly. Even though he wanted to kick this useless thing away, his instinct told him that this was not the time to have internal strife or abandon his allies.

Even if his ally was useless, he still had to think of a way of helping him.

“After the division, you’ll need to take out about 700 million Harbor Dollars for the cover up. How much can you provide?”

Fabian’s words gave Mitch a spark of hope. However, he blushed soon after and said in embarrassment, “I-I think I can take out 50 million at the most.”

“50 million?”

Fabian started laughing out of anger.

“Mitch, I have to put in at least 2 billion Harbor Dollars. Is that 50 million a joke?”

Mitch said with a lamentable look, “Mr. Atticus, I’m not you, nor I do not possess remarkable abilities. You know how much money I have. The money I put in is the money I got from putting up my stocks as collateral.”

“This is too much. I can’t help you with this.” Fabian gritted his teeth.

Fabian was betting that the United States Government and Federal Reserve would save the market.

However, he did not know if, when, and whether they even could.

If they failed, he would lose the money that he put up as a cover up.

Besides this, he would also lose the money that he set aside to help Mitch.

“Mr. Atticus, you have to help me. If my family learns about this, I’ll be dead meat!” Mitch was panicking and he yelled.

Fabian gritted his teeth and took two steps forward. He said, “Conrad will come back in a bit. When he’s back, go to him and dissect this issue with him. I think he should be okay with paying for you.”

“That Mainlander?” Mitch was stunned.

“You’re in such a horrible position, yet you’re looking down on people from Mainland?” Fabian chuckled coldly. “He has the most money now and I think he should help you out of respect for me.

“However, he’s a businessman, so he won’t give money without some benefit on his side. If he has any requirements, just agree to them so long as they are not too extreme.”

“When we turn this situation around, you’ll be doing whatever you want, right?”

Fabian’s hinting statement caused Mitch’s eyes to brighten.

Yes, he was at a dead end now. He would definitely run out of money unless he was honest with his family.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1365

However, if he told his family the truth and they discovered that he put up the stocks his family gave him as collateral, his family might very well kill him.

On the other hand, it would be different with Conrad. Mitch would say yes no matter what the requirements were. He was just Mr. Atticus’ dog, so once he turned this situation around, it was unlikely that Conrad would trouble him again.

When Mitch thought about this, he looked much better. “I understand. Thank you, Mr. Atticus!” Mitch said with gratitude.

“Go contact Conrad and tell him to come back as soon as possible.”

Fabian turned around and ordered his subordinates. After saying that, Fabian walked to Morrison and said through gritted teeth, “The situation right now is challenging, so we have to cooperate whole heartedly. If not, no one will be able to walk away from this unscathed.”

Morrison also had an unpleasant look on his face. Morrison and Fabian contributed the most money this time. Meanwhile, a lot of the money Morrison used were funds from his investment bank.

If this matter came to light, he would lose his position as the president of the Terra regional branch; Layman Investment Bank might even throw him into jail.

If Layman Investment Bank was enraged, the fact that his father was the president of the Quantum Fund would be irrelevant.

After Morrison took a deep breath, he gritted his teeth and said, “That bastard, Jasper! How did he predict this?”

Celine wanted to ask this question as well. When she got the news, she was in a meeting.

This major event caused Celine to end her meeting immediately. She knew the higher ups from the investment bank would immediately want to start discussing countermeasures for dealing with the situation.

The stock market plummeted and the ones who would bear the brunt of it would be the investment banks that held investments everywhere.

This was a very serious crisis for investment banks. After all, investment banks would make money from investments, and those properties they invested in would lose money when they were faced with a financial crisis.

Sure enough, when Celine got back to the office, she received a special purpose phone call from Paulson, the president.

“Miss Maynard, I believe you’re already aware of what happened in the United States.” Paulson’s tone sounded serious.

Celine nodded and said, “Yes, but I don’t know the details. Sir, how bad is it this time?”

Paulson removed his glasses and wiped them with a piece of cloth. He said, “The higher-ups are in an emergency discussion right now. The country is in a state of emergency. I can only tell you that this is even more serious than anyone can imagine.

“Let’s not talk about this. Right now, our investment bank is starting to lose money. Moreover, the loss will only grow as time goes by. The chairman is preparing to host a meeting. In ten minutes time, I’ll report the situation to the board of directors and also the shareholders.”

“Before that, I hope you can do something for me, Miss Maynard.”

Celine nodded, “Please tell me...”

“I hope to meet and talk to Jasper.”

Celine frowned slightly and said, “I don’t think he has the time for such a thing during this critical period.”

“That’s why I need your help. You have to know that the shareholders are suddenly very interested in Jasper. I think the only person in the world who’ll benefit from this might be your friend.”

“According to the investment bank analysts’ predictions, Jasper could make a profit of at least 10 billion US Dollars from this.”

Even though Celine had been prepared for such a thing, she was still shocked to her core when she heard the figure.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1366

Before the market opened today, the fellow who was being mocked and called insane by half of the Wall Street had quietly accomplished such a scary and big capital deployment strategy.

An astounding comeback, with a profit of 10 billion US Dollars!?

What kind of idea was this?

Converted, it would be 80 billion of Somer Dollars! Celine would not have believed it if she did not see it for herself. However, Celine felt as if she was dreaming.

‘That guy... how he did that!?’

“You have to know, the seniors in the Investment Bank, myself included, were not optimistic toward Jasper’s stupid behavior before this. But his countertrend strategies are now known as him seeing into the future.”

“I wish to talk to him. When you speak to him, please let him realize how important this matter is. You have to understand, it happened in the land of the United States, and they are suffering from the biggest terrorist attack ever.”

“Yes, there’s nothing wrong in making money, but making too much of it will result in a series of repercussions. The senior officials of the United States are being sensitive, and you know what I mean by that.”

Some time after the call ended, Celine had yet to recover from Paulson’s cautionary statements.

She knew what Paulson was implying.

Jasper making so much money would attract the attention of Wall Street and the senior officials of the United States.

Getting this kind of attention during such a sensitive period was probably not a good idea.

Currently, Jasper, who was in Nauritus City, certainly had no idea things were escalating quickly.

The television was broadcasting the rescue efforts after the incident The location was a scene of horror, with bodies and debris everywhere.

The surrounding skyscrapers were still standing, but no one would have believed that this was the world's most important financial center, the New York City. They would have thought that such a chaotic scene was taking place somewhere else.

“Mr, Laine, the Dow Jones Index plunge is slowing down, but the stock market is still in free fall.”

Jasper nodded and told Jake, “Before the officials release the news and response measures, the stock market will not stop plunging. All you have to do now is observe if anything happens on the stock market.”

“More than 2 billion US Dollars gained.”

Suddenly, Henry who was beside him, let out a cry of excitement after suppressing it for so long.

Jasper turned around and look at the computer screen which displayed that the accounting system profits. Right now, it had officially exceeded 2 billion US Dollars.

He blinked his eyes and another 280 thousand US Dollars were added.

Converted into Somer Dollars, and based on the housing prices there, a oceanfront property could be bought in the blink of an eye. There was no other way one could make money any faster than this.

Jasper let out a sigh.

With a capital of 3 billion US Dollars, 2.5 billion was invested, and now the profit gained was 2 billion, which was nearly a 70% increase.

“Covering position! Mr. Laine, those who were against us are covering their position!”

In the situation where everyone was selling off their stocks, the buy order stood out like a sore thumb. Besides, Jake and his team were keeping a close eye on the changes in the stock market, so the moment when Fabian began covering his position, they spotted it.

Jasper pulled out the relevant data immediately.

On the display panel, the buy order stood in clear defiance to the hundreds of others who were desperately selling. Jasper smiled. “Looks like this 200 million US Dollars is just the beginning. There’s more to come.”

“Let them cover it.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1367

Jasper chuckled and said, “They’re pinning their hopes on the United States government and Federal Reserve, assuming that they will bail out the stock market. They’re betting on this.”

“Aren’t they going to do so?” Henry asked curiously.”

“They will. The officials from the United States and Federal Reserve will not sit by and watch the capital wealth of the United States disappear.”

Jasper slightly narrowed his eyes, and thought of what he had experienced in the past life, then said, “If my predictions are correct, the bailout plan will come out latest by tomorrow, but it’ll be difficult to stop the trend.”

Usually, only the United States was able to play others for suckers, but now it was different.

A terrorist attack that shocked the whole world had exposed the weak nature of the United States financial system.

Rapid development and economic prosperity that came from plundering others was nothing more than a façade.

However, the United States was still a strong country at the end of the day. Even though someone else did realize this, no one would take the risk of offending the United States and Wall Street to exploit them.

It was because Wall Street covered up for the United States, so in a way, Wall Street itself was the biggest exploiter in the world.

Despite this, things were different now. The terrorist attack had caught the United States off guard, it was like drilling a wound into a giant's body.

The leeches that had long been oppressed would give their lives to pounce on the wound to take a sip of the blood. Jasper was the first one to do so.

His early entry allowed him to take the best position, destined to drink up the sweetest of the blood.

“Ordinary people would see this as a terrorist attack, but the financial and political game behind the incident was the real chaos. We had nothing to do with the politics, but you can understand the financial games just by looking at it.”

“Oh, sh*t, my father is calling,” Henry shouted and ran to the other side to pick up his phone call. Looking at his excited face, he probably was going to show off.

Jasper smiled and ignored him, then discussed the current situation with Jake.

While he was talking, Jasper’s phone rang. It was an unknown number. Jasper picked up the phone.

“I’m Jasper.”

Conrad’s voice came from the other end of the phone line.

“Congratulations.”

Jasper replied coldly, “You’re using the secret number just to congratulate me?”

“Sure enough, I was right. Everyone looked down on you. From now on, I’m afraid that even mentioning your name will cause terrible nightmares for the financial titans.”

“That’s a stretch,” Jasper replied blandly. “I’m just making some money. I never thought of becoming anyone’s nightmare.”

“Let’s get down to business. Are you interested in planting a secret agent in Harbor City?”

Conrad’s words made Jasper raise his brow.

He did not respond. Meanwhile, Conrad continued to chatter away.

“Mitch called me for a loan. He borrowed a sum of 1 billion Harbor Dollars to prevent the margin call. He got some shares in Fabian’s investment, and you know the current market situation. The hunter has now become the hunted.”

His agreement was that he would transfer over 3.5% of his family’s core assets that were under his name.“

Jasper thought about it and said, “The value of 3.5% of main assets shares of the Langdons family is only 1 billion Harbor Dollars?”

“Based on the total sum 3 billion Harbor Dollars, I’ll have to pay 2 billion of the bank’s mortgage loan on behalf of him,” Conrad said.

After Jasper heard this, something caught his interest. This was a rare opportunity.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1368

Everyone knew that money could buy many things, but some things could not be bought with just money. Not when the premium reached a certain point.

For example, the stocks in Langdon's foundation that by Wallace Langdon created could not be measured with the market price. It was because the Langdon family would not sell their shares.

It was like if someone came to buy the JW's shares, Jasper would probably answer them with a simple sentence f*ck off. This was not about the money, but the title of the core assets could not ever be put at risks.

It was not much with 3.5% of the shares, not enough to influence any decisions made by the Langdon family.

However, it would forever be a thorn that was embedded deep within the Langdon family's decision. Usually, a chance like this would never surface, but the opportunity was now presenting itself to Jasper.

"Don't you want it?" Jasper asked.

It seemed like Conrad had expected Jasper to ask something like this, as he replied honestly, "If you're in my position, would you take it?"

He did not wait for Jasper's answer before he continued to speak, "The waters are deep in Harbor City. Owning the Langdon family's core assets shares is a good thing, but it also depends if you're destined to have it. In my opinion, it's not a glass of wine but deadly arsenic.

"I don't have any background in Harbor City, and even the rich people in Harbor City would not simply take the shares of the Langdon family."

"The ones that are truly interested are the ones who can talk to the Langdon family, and clearly, I'm no such person. That's why I'm thinking of selling it to you as a favor."

What Conrad said was reasonable. Jasper could not see any loopholes in his argument.

Jasper laughed. "Do you think of me that highly? The Langdon family is one of the four richest families in Harbor City, the shares are a hot potato for me too. "Jasper shared Conrad's concern.

The point was, it would be useless even if Jasper took it. He was not interested in the Langdon family's assets. The Langdon family's assets were all over the Golden Peninsula. They made their fortune through producing rubber, and were one of the five biggest rubber making companies. With this commodity as their core, they spread out to property, logistics, construction, and financial securities, and other markets.

Jasper had nothing to do with all those sectors except for the last two.

Holding shares of the Langdon family was stepping on the Langdon family's tail, there was no doubt that the family would turn against him.

Considering all this, the benefits were low while the short term risk was too high. Although the long term returns were good, it required too much investment, which did not make it worthwhile.

However, Jasper was still interested in it.

As Jasper thought of the reasons why it would be trouble for him to hold the shares, he realized that these problems would not exist to other individuals. Jasper unconsciously looked at Henry who was not far away as he excitedly bragged on the phone.

Conrad's voice interrupted his thoughts.

"It's your business whether or not you regard it as a hot potato. Now you'll only have to give me an answer, do you want shares or not?"

"Do I have to pay for it?" Jasper asked.

“Easy, 3 billion Harbor Dollars. These are not for me, they’re for Mitch.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1369

“Deal.”

Jasper said yes without hesitation.

Conrad seemed to be relieved on the other end of the call, then replied, “Alright, I’ll send a contract to you as soon as possible.”

After hanging up the call, Jasper stood up and patted Henry’s shoulder, smiled, and said, “Give me your phone, I’d like to discuss something with your father.”

Harbor City, inside a car parked at the entrance to Fabian’s villa, Conrad put away his phone and let out a sigh of relief.

“Finally getting rid of the hot potato.”

Sitting on the driver seat, Valentine turned his head around and asked, “Mr. Monty, why didn’t you reject Mitch just now since he’s putting us on the spot?”

Conrad sneered, and replied, “Mitch appears to be polite, but look at his attitude, are we allowed to say no? To be honest, he’s just hard selling, regardless of whether we want the shares or not, we still have to get the money for him.”

“Mitch’s purpose was not to sell the shares, he just wanted the money.”

Valentine gasped and recalled the scene from half an hour ago. The harshness in Mitch’s normally gentle attitude was unlike someone who came looking for a loan. Instead, he looked like someone ready to commit robbery.

At the thought of this, Valentine spoke, “If we said yes, would Mitch be willing to transfer the shares?”

“What do you think? Does Mitch have the guts to sell his portion of the Langdon family’s core asset?”

“The situation is critical now, if he doesn’t cover his position, all of the funds he invested would be gone, and Fabian wouldn’t even give a sh*t about him. Therefore, he had to cover it, it’d be easy if Fabian turn it around and beat Jasper, but will Mitch let go of his shares so easily if they lose?”

There was a gleam in Valentine’s eyes. He complimented Conrad, “Looks like it’s a wise choice leaving it to Jasper.”

“We’re the weakest one out of all of them, so that’s what we had to do. If I were strong enough, would I have given Jasper something as precious as the 3.5% shares of the Langdon family’s asset?”

“Unfortunately, I’m afraid there’ll be no such chance again in the future.” Conrad stared at the brightly lit villa and gave out a long sigh.

“Mr. Monty, I believe you’ll rise one day.”

Valentine’s determined words made Conrad let out a laugh, his heart slightly warmed.

“For example, look at the others. Mitch came from an extraordinary background while Fabian is good at investing, but that doesn’t mean anything. After all, they’re suffering more than us now.”

Conrad chuckled, his worries were set aside. Then, he opened the car door and said, "Let's go, we have to finish our act."

Inside the villa, the table was full of dishes but nobody was sitting there.

Fabian sat on the sofa, his face dull and sullen while Morrison was on his third bottle of red wine. The drinking was not for celebration, but rather to soothe his frustration.

"Mr. Atticus, the Dow Jones Index is still failing. More than half of the funds that we deposited were used up. If this situation continues, we won't be able to defend ourselves anymore."

He took a glance at the falling trend on the screen. It looked like the sky was falling as if it was an endless decline, as if it would continue to fall until it burst out of the screen.

Morrison was growing more frustrated. He lifted his head and gulped down another glass of wine.

"Continue to maintain it. Place sell orders, and trade to stop our losses. We must hold on until the bailout plans is announced!" Fabian growled with reddened eyes.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1370

"Jasper, is this true?"

Zachary's surprised tone was heard on the phone. Jasper had told Zachary about Mitch selling off his 3.5% shares of his family's core assets a moment ago.

Jasper smiled. "Of course it's real. I can't do anything with these shares, but I suppose it'll come in handy for the Law family. Therefore, I took the liberty to say yes for you. You won't blame me right, Uncle Law?"

Zachary laughed. "Not at all, I would have to thank you first."

The gift Jasper brought for Zachary made him rejoice internally.

The Langdon family's core assets were not valuable to Jasper, as the costs they bore were way too troublesome. Based on the current situation, it was unrealistic for Jasper to be tempted to do anything with the Langdon family's assets while owning just 3.5% of the shares. However, it would be different if it was in the Law family's hand.

They were among the four richest families, while the Law family's wealthy heritage was deeper than Langdon's family. They ate from the same bowl, and even though it appeared that they were harmonious, they always had to remain cautious of each other.

Considering the four big families' situation, it was almost unrealistic for them to obtain each other's core assets.

However, Jasper gave him the chance to do just that.

"After the Law family infiltrates them, they'll be forced to act defensively. Things will be hard for that fellow, Kennedy." Zachary was laughing out loud.

Jasper chuckled and said, "That's good, I'll arrange the transfer of shares after this. I'll personally deliver it to Uncle Law once I get it."

Zachary was a sharp person, Jasper only briefly explained to him what happened, but he instantly recognized that things might be trickier than they first appeared.

"I'm afraid that Mitch isn't going to give the shares away so easily."

Jasper answered, "It'll be fine as long as this doesn't involve the elders of the Langdon family. It'll only involve Mitch, so there won't be a problem."

Zachary nodded and said, "Fine, Mitch is the younger generation. I shall not intervene, but if Kennedy steps in, I won't sit by and do nothing."

Obviously, the Law family would not sit back and watch, they were the biggest beneficiary of this deal, after all.

For so many years, the Law family did think of infiltrating the other three families, but this was simply because the chance never presented itself.

Now that it was set before him on a silver platter, Zachary was not going to pass it up.

It was worth it even though he would have to fight against the Langdon family.

After ending the call with Zachary, Jasper turned and sat in front of the computer.

“Jake, please tell me how our opponents are doing now.”

Jake’s cheerful voice came out from the computer. “They’re still covering their positions, but they’re obviously running out of funds. They’re currently giving up some accounts with less valuable stocks. They are constantly being forced to liquidate before closing the positions. They’re saving their funds to protect the heavier stocks.”

“Based on our analysis and calculations, their invested funds were more than we had expected. They invested a total of 600 million US Dollars before the market closed yesterday without anyone noticing. We just found out about it.”

“It was clear that the 600 million US Dollars was used to defeat us in a one off today, but after the crashing of the Dow Jones Index, this 600 million US Dollars soon became their biggest burden.”

“Their overall trading volume was around 2.4 billion US Dollars. After amending the errors which should be no more than 200 million US Dollars, and adding in the funds that they’ve used to cover their position, their total trading volume was nearly 3 billion. Today they lost 1 billion US Dollars in total.”

Jasper shot a glance at his accounts system.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1371

Fabian had lost 1 billion US Dollars in a day, while he had gained 8 billion US Dollars of profit.

It did not seem like... enough.

“There are 30 minutes left till the market closes, I’m giving you 20 minutes to close one of their positions worth 5 billion.”

Jasper smiled impudently and said, “He’s been proud for a very long time, I want him spitting blood today.”

What Jasper said lifted the fighting spirits of Jake and his team.

Since the planning of deployment, due to strict Jasper’s orders, Jake and the others had to endure being bullied by Fabian.

Fabian would be the first to buy whenever they placed the sell order.

Although Jasper intended to watch the funds flow into his opponent's pockets, Jake and the others were holding back so much anger after all those humiliations.

Even though the situation had reversed today, Jasper did not initially command them to strike back. This was because gaining back their losses and making a profit was the most important thing.

Now, Jasper had finally commanded Jake and the others to strike while the iron was hot.

"Yes, Mr. Laine. It won't take up 20 minutes, 15 minutes will be enough for them to suffer heavy losses!"

Jake gave his guarantee excitedly, then turned around to order his trading team to launch their attacks.

The games in the financial war were treacherous and uncertain most of the time. However, this always depended on the timing.

For example, in the situation that was taking place at that moment, the whole market was falling, so it would be too easy for Jasper to attack Fabian.

Not to mention that Jake and his team had plenty of experience in trading. Right now, even a beginner who only knew how to click with a mouse to buy or sell would know how to fight this war.

Taking aim at a target and crushing it as forcefully as you could. That was that easy.

It made Fabian, who was sleepy and exhausted, jump up as if he had just been electrocuted.

Morrison, who was sleepless but had reddened eyes, joined Mitch to surround Conrad after the latter jumped up.

Fabian was the first to rush over to the side of the computer. The fingers of the person seated in front of the computer were dancing on the keyboard, pulling out a set of data.

“Mr. Atticus, there were a large number of trade orders that intentionally targeted us.

These orders look disorganized and hidden among the numerous normal trade orders, but the accounts were all under Jasper’s name.

“This wave of attacks cost us a few million US Dollars.”

Bang!

Morrison slammed the table with his palm and spoke with a hideous expression, "Is Jasper planning to make things worse!?"

Fabian's facial expression was gloomy and scary. He glared at the screen without saying anything.

Once the attacks were launched, Fabian immediately took notice.

Fabian's men were well trained too in their own right, They were pretty much equal to Jake's team. Therefore, in such a chaotic situation, they were able to sense something wrong almost immediately.

"Mr. Atticus, someone is attacking us!"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1372

"Mr. Atticus, they're still attacking us. What do we do next?"

While they were talking, Jake's attacks battered them fiercely. The trader was unable to withstand it anymore, so he turned around and asked with an awful look on his face.

He was afraid that the furious Fabian would treat him as the whipping boy.

Although Fabian was angry to the extent that he could kill someone, he was still keeping his rationality.

"How much do we have left for cover ups?" Fabian asked a crucial question.

The man replied immediately, "Only 200 million left."

"200 million left..?" Fabian gritted his teeth. He felt something heavy on his chest, as if he was unable to breathe.

Morrison looked at Fabian's pale white face and said, "Atticus, don't fall apart just yet."

“I know...”

Fabian sneered after he gasped for air, “Well done! Well done, Jasper!”

“I expected him to take revenge earlier, but he did not move until the next day. I didn’t expect him to strike when it’s almost the closing time when we’re running out of funds.”

“He purposely did that.” Conrad suddenly spoke, attractive Fabian’s and Morrison’s attention.

Fabian looked at Conrad, and spoke in a low voice, “You faced Jasper the most often. Tell us, based on how much you understand him, what is Jasper going to do next?”

“He’s going to beat us until we’re in pain.” Conrad’s answer was simple and clear.

Mitch could not hold back his sneer. “He doesn’t even know how much funds we have left. How is he going to hurt us?”

“He doesn’t need to know. All he has to do is evaluate our total funds and the funds we invested to cover up today, and he’ll be able to estimate how much longer we can withstand it.”

Conrad continued to speak calmly as he ignored the slight provocation hidden in Mitch's words.

"Besides, he didn't strike throughout the entire day because he wanted the plunging market to consume our funds as much as it could. Now that trading hours are ending soon, he has achieved his goal."

"Nothing happened when he didn't do anything, but once he starts to take action, all we can do is to bear it. He'll stop when he wants to."

What Conrad said infuriated Mitch.

He had just got the capital from Conrad to cover the positions, and now he could only watch his money being swallowed by Jasper. He was enraged by the situation.

He was going to break down emotionally after listening to what Conrad said.

"F*cking bullsh*t!"

Mitch pointed his fingers at Conrad and scolded him.

“Are you here f*cking misleading us? You’re talking about how impressive Jasper is, as if he’s a God destroying our aspirations. Why are you here kissing my feet if Jasper is that capable? If you don’t know how to talk just shut your mouth and f*ck off!”

“And you’re f*cking tell me that Jasper is the one who decides when to end this. Do you think he’s God?! F*cking mainland bumpkin, piece of sh*t!”

What Mitch said was extremely rude.

However, there was no change in Conrad’s facial expression.

As if the person who got scolded was not him. He turned his head around and looked at the angry Mitch.

“Mr. Langdon, if Jasper were an easy opponent to deal with, he would have died by your hands. So, why is he alive until now? Why are you lingering around Mr. Atticus, without the guts to fight against Jasper personally?”

“Yelling at me will not help anything. I’m just voicing my opinion. Mr. Langdon can choose to listen or not. If you don’t like it just treat it as a bullsh*t. Is there a need to be so unpolite?”

Mitch's face reddened when Conrad said this.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1373

No one had to tell him that what Conrad said was reasonable. Thus, Mitch was left to burn up in embarrassment.

Comparing his agitated attitude with Conrad, there was no doubt that Conrad was way more elegant. The more reasonable the argument, the angrier Mitch was.

“Who are you dare try to teach me a lesson? You're just a f*cking bumpkin from the mainland. Believe it or not, I'll...”

“Enough!”

Fabian interrupted Mitch's conversation.

When Mitch lifted his head to look at Fabian, he saw those emotionless cold eyes and fell silent immediately. He did not treat Conrad as a person in the first place. Similarly, he did not dare to treat himself as a person in front of Fabian.

“What Conrad said was reasonable.”

Fabian spoke calmly.

“Continue to give up the positions that are not high value and those which are less important. Allow them to be liquidated. I can still afford all those losses.”

Morrison and Mitch’s lips twitched when they heard Fabian’s instruction.

The amount of money burned every minute did not just belong to Fabian, they owned a share of it too. This was especially true for Morrison, his share was only slightly less than Fabian’s.

This command was to sacrifice the rest to protect the king, meaning that at least a few billion US Dollars were about to be given up.

Indeed, when Fabian took a step back, Jasper came charging forward. Twelve positions were liquidated at once.

“Mr. Atticus, he’s, he’s not stopping.”

The man was terrified when he reported this.

“He’s going too far! ”

Fabian growled in a low voice. He grabbed the ashtray beside him, turned around, and smashed it on the floor.

“Continue to retreat, as long as the core positions remain, I’ll allow all the other losses!”

“Conrad, inform the members of Empire Meet, the first Empire Meet meeting with all members will be held at dawn. I, Fabian Atticus, am going to give them a big present!”

Conrad’s expression appeared calm, but his heart was surging like a stormy sea after hearing this.

“I’ll arrange it immediately,” Conrad replied. In his heart, he was thinking about immediately telling Jasper about this important news.

“Wait...!”

Fabian suddenly called out for Conrad.

Conrad stood still and turned around to look at Fabian.

“Uncle Gale, follow him.”

An aged old man who looked like he was in his sixties or seventies walked out after Fabian called him. His hands respectfully overlapped in front of his body. He appeared well mannered as he bowed to Conrad and said, “Mr. Monty, I’ll be by your side to assist you.”

“Uncle Gale is my confidant, most of the young masters in Empire Meet are bad tempered. I don’t have to worry much if he’s with you.” Fabian said blandly.

Conrad smiled, nodded his head, and said, “That’ll be best. It’ll be easier for me too.”

Conrad turned around and walked toward the door, his body tensing up but showing no sign of any unnatural behavior.

“Atticus, you’re planning to use the Empire Meet’s power?” Morrison glanced at Conrad’s retreating figure as he left, before shifting his gaze back and asking.

“After spending so many resources, those young masters reaped so many rewards. Now it’s time for everyone to contribute. Not to mention that it’s something they can all benefit from, so wouldn’t they agree?”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1374

”Mr. Atticus, Jasper stopped attacking.”

Fabian slowly let out a sigh of relief after he heard his men’s voice.

“How is it? How much did we lose?”

Fabian walked up and asked.

The man’s face was pale white. Although Jasper had stopped attacking, there was no sign of relief on his face.

He swallowed his saliva and spoke in a cautious tone, “Jasper’s attack caused us to lose 180 million US Dollars. Totaling up the others, today we lost a total sum of 1.5 billion US Dollars.”

Fabian's facial expression froze at once.

There was a wave of indescribable anger building up within his chest.

No matter how wealthy Fabian was, losing 1.5 billion US Dollars within a day was unbelievable. Converting it to Harbor Dollars, it would be a sum of 12 billion Harbor Dollars!

The whole Atticus family would be in pain dealing with such heavy losses, much less Fabian himself.

It was fortunate that the initial sum of money had been contributed by multiple parties. However, even so, Fabian lost at least 7 billion Harbor Dollars. He was the fund's largest shareholder after all.

7 billion!

The raging fire within his chest was flared up as if it had been doused with a bottle of gas.

"A*shole! Jasper, I'll make you pay for this!"

Fabian could not hold back any longer after suppressing it the whole night. He eventually erupted.

“Mr. Laine, mission accomplished!”

Jake’s voice resonated from the computer.

“They’ve lost at least 1.5 billion US Dollars. The last wave of attacks caused them to lose 8 of their positions. They couldn’t cover up anymore! Hahaha...”

Jasper smiled after listening to Jake.

“Well done!”

Time flew, and in the blink of an eye, the market was already closing.

A whole day of continuous downward trendlines finally stopped as trading hours ended. However, everyone knew that when the market reopened the next day, it would resume plummeting.

The wise could see that NASDAQ and the US stock market were doomed.

There was no way to stop the downtrend of the market. The more it dropped, the higher the rate of decline, and the more intense the selling off process became. This was all because the stockholders were following the market trend.

One day was not enough to stop the sell orders. It had not even reached the climax yet. Most of the stock prices hit the limit down before the stockholders managed to sell them off today.

Today was just the beginning. When the stock market reopened, the prices would open at the limit down price, sealing the fate of these doomed stocks.

The situation would be even more violent the next day.

“Total profit gained today is 2.864 billion US Dollars. Our total funds reached a sum of 5.9 billion US Dollars!”

Jake's unbelieving tone came from the computer. Although he had witnessed it himself, the situation was too exciting and thrilling. When everything had ended, Jake took a look at the accounting system and realized the profit number had reached a terrifying point.

"Total trading hours was 7 hours, but there was a total of 2.9 billion profit. That means we were able to make 410 million each hour, or 7 million US Dollars every minute!"

"Converting to Somer Dollars, it'll be 56 million!"

Jake's voice was trembling with excitement.

"Mr. Laine, we definitely broke the world's record with this profitability and speed. It's scary!"

Jasper was slightly excited when he heard those numbers.

A capital of 26 billion, of which 9 billion was his own. The 9 billion generated him a profit of 8 billion.

Now the 26 billion had grown to approximately 47 billion, while his 9 billion had become 17 billion. There was only one word to describe it, terrifying!

“F*ck! F*ck! F*ck!”

Henry was even more excited than Jasper.

“What about my 1 billion, how much is it worth now?”

Henry was busy asking while his face turned red from his nervousness.

Jake answered him immediately.

“Mr. Law, your 1 billion has become 1.8 billion.”

“Hahaha..!”

Henry burst out laughing with his hands on his waist.

“I’m so f*cking awesome. It took a while for me to get those profits, I’m going back to tell my father. If he tries to discipline me anymore, I’m going to branch out on my own, hahaha!”

Jasper clapped his hands, smiled, and said, “Alright, dawn is coming, everyone take a rest. A bonus equal to your annual salary will be given to everyone here. Jake, you did well, and you worked hard. Bring home double your annual salary as a bonus later.”

There were always rewards for good performances and punishments for mistakes. Although the matter had not fully ended yet, it did not stop Jasper from giving some benefits to his men to let them taste the sweetness of hard work. Hopefully, with this, they would put in more effort while working for him.

The sound of Jake and his team cheering loudly was heard on the other end of the video call.

Jake smiled too. Although he had already achieved financial freedom, his net value was not anything over the top. Therefore, Jasper’s reward was undoubtedly generous.

No one would ever complain about having more money, and Jasper’s reward was recognition of their hard work.

“I’ll help the others to thank you, Mr. Laine...”

“Alright, take a rest. The US stock market is opening tomorrow afternoon, and we’ll have to stay up the whole night again. Get enough rest, take some supplements, and order as much as you like I’m paying the bill.”

Jasper hung up right after he finished talking. He ignored the cheering and howling from the other end of the line.

He turned around, planning to celebrate with Henry, but found that the fellow had fallen asleep on the sofa. Jasper smiled bitterly and shook his head. Then he walked toward the window and saw that the sky was getting brighter.

A time difference of 13 hours. The United States closed the stock market at 4.30 PM, which was 5.30 in the morning in Somerland.

However, Jasper could not sleep just yet. He covered Henry with a blanket, went to another room, and switched on the computer to follow up with news from United States officials.

Jasper knew that the officials would respond, and the responses would affect the stock market forcefully and rapidly.

The victory from the first day was just the beginning. It was his return from accumulating all the funds and releasing it little by little. The real game would come be after the first day.

This time, the amount that Jasper could gain depended on how long the market continued on a downward spiral.

The memories from his past life were still inside his head, but Jasper would not rely too much on them, as he was unable to confirm the differences that would occur in this lifetime.

When Jasper opened a United States news website, his phone vibrated for a brief moment. It was not a phone call, but a message.

He had gotten a message from Conrad's secret number.

"Be careful of the Empire Meet!"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1375

Those few words set Jasper on guard.

Conrad must have been stuck in a situation where it was inconvenient for him to make a phone call. Even if he was in such a perilous situation, he still took the risk to send Jasper a message.

This indicated that the contents of the message were extremely important.

Jasper knew about Empire Meet.

A luxury club that Fabian had been operating and planning since back then had become the primary network for the rich young master of Harbor City. To join, one had to either be a wealthy man or lead a big clan of some sort.

It was a place for everyone to gather and pass the time, a place to broaden one's network when it was not in use. However, when all these connections pooled together, they would form a great power.

'How will Fabian use them, and what is he going to do to him with their collective power?'

Jasper narrowed his eyes and remained motionless while holding his phone.

He remained still until the sound of the door being opened was heard.

"I knew you hadn't sleep."

Wendy was holding a thermos bottle and scolding him. Jasper smiled while he eased his troubled mind away and said, "I still have some things to do. They can rest but I can't. I'll have to keep up with the latest news. Why are you up so early?"

“I can’t sleep, I was worried about you, so I got up early to make you some soup. You can’t keep on staying up like this. Take some to replenish yourself and go rest later.”

She sat down and nagged Jasper seriously after putting down the thermos bottle in front of him.

Wendy was waiting for Jasper’s response after she finished nagging, but she turned around and instead saw Jasper looking at her with a smile.

“Why are you looking at me like that?”

Wendy was embarrassed and uncomfortable after seeing Jasper looking strangely at her. Thus, she asked fiercely.

“It feels like you’re becoming a good wife and mother.” Jasper opened the thermos bottle and smiled.

“Hey, I already am.” Wendy snorted proudly.

Their relationship had come to a point that Wendy was no longer embarrassed to refute what Jasper said as he attempted to ‘take advantage’ of her with his words.

Jasper grinned and lowered his head to take a sip of the soup.

'Hmm, its red dates with ginseng stew bird's nest.'

It tastes like saltwater.

"Why, does it taste awful?" Wendy asked nervously. Jasper took another sip, smiled, and said, "No, it's good."

Wendy let out a sigh of relief.

"It's my first time drinking a salted stew bird's nest."

"Huh!? I thought it was sugar!"

Forget the taste or the nutrients.

A small bowl of soup needed to slow cook for at least an hour.

What time was it?

Wendy must have woken up around three or four in the early morning to prepare this, and she had to deliver it to the office.

Just because of that, Jasper finished the whole bottle of soup, until not a drop was left.

“Don’t drink if it tastes awful. I, I’ll make a better one next time.” Wendy was embarrassed.

She had thought of making something for Jasper to replenish himself, but she felt remorseful after making such a careless mistake.

“It was quite refreshing.” Jasper put down the empty bottle and winked at Wendy. “Make more of your hand made stew. I’d still drink even if it were arsenic.”

“You’re bluffing!”

Wendy replied sweetly in a spoiled manner.

Women and men were the same, and they had similar natures.

'There is no such thing as a free lunch in this world, if I treat you well, it's because willing to give you my all, but I hope you know that I'm sincere toward you.'

'Every act of kindness has to be returned. If not, it'll be unequal and won't last long.'

At present time, Jasper never neglected the people beside him. Not to mention that this person was Wendy.

"How's the situation today? You look like you're in a good mood." Wendy asked.

She knew Jasper was stressed out these days, even if Jasper did not tell her anything. However, being one of the closest people to Jasper, Wendy was able to find traces and clues about what led to Jasper's unusual behavior.

During situations like this, she was unable to help with anything. All she could do was to support Jasper from behind.

"Not bad at all." Jasper gave her a smile.

“Really?”

Wendy’s mood brightened up too after confirming that Jasper was genuinely smiling from his heart rather than blindly comforting her.

Jasper hinted coyly for Wendy to come nearer to him, then he switched on the system display on the computer.

“How... how much is this!?”

Wendy’s eyes were wide open. The shock and disbelief on her face was cute.

No matter who it was, after seeing such heart racing digits of numbers, their reactions were almost always the same.

“Almost double.” Jasper took the opportunity to hug Wendy, putting her head on his shoulder and enjoying the fragrance of the girl’s hair. It was truly relaxing.

“Let me put it like this, if the funds were withdrawn, not only could we pay off all of JW Company debts and also the funds that we took out from JW Electronics, but we also won’t have any financial problems for a long time into the future, to the extent that we’ll be worried that we have too much money.

“If we were willing to make the information public, those magazines would include us amongst the wealthiest figures in the country.”

The magazines he meant were the Hurun rich list and Forbes billionaires. It was because of the traditional culture of the country that many low profile businessmen refused to expose themselves. No one would print their names on it if they refused to allow it.

For example, the Spencers, the Shanghai stock market king, and the Zhaos from the North. Any one of them would easily break into the list of richest figures in the country.

The billionaires that were known by most people had reached a level that surpassed 99.999% of the one billion population of the country.

“Then what are we waiting for? Let’s run!”

Wendy was excited, her eyes were shining with golden rays of light that Jasper had seldom seen before.

“There’s so much money that you don’t have to work that hard anymore. Withdraw it and focus on our business. We can work when we want to, or we can travel the world.”

Jasper laughed and said, "You little petty thing, is that all you want?"

Wendy tilted her head, then leaned on Jasper's chest with a blushing face. "As long as I'm with you, I don't care about anything else, no matter if I'm rich or poor."

Jasper smiled warmly, he hugged Wendy tight and said, "I know, but when there's too much money, it's not easy to just leave and retire. In fact, it's impossible."

If Jasper set aside everything to enjoy himself today, Fabian would strike back and push him into the abyss tomorrow.

Empire Meet... it was a poison needle in Jasper's heart.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1376

Jasper held Wendy as they whispered sweet nothings to each other. Most of the conversation was just idle gossip. Whenever they were in this state, they would not kill the mood by talking about work. Instead, they would just ramble on and on mindlessly.

However, this was the very thing that would strengthen their relationship.

As Jasper chatted with Wendy, he focused on the news about the United States.

As expected, the United States government released a detailed news report about this terrorist attack immediately. Even though they did not have the final number of casualties, the number of people who were rescued and the number of corpses that were discovered had reached a terrifying number.

From this official announcement, most people could feel the extreme rage of the United States government. After what happened today, the United States was on high alert. Everyone could sense that the United States would not let this rest easily.

Meanwhile, Jasper did not pay much attention to the news about politics and the military.

Instead, he noticed a statement on the announcement.

“Now, regarding the time of this terrorist attack and the huge impact it had on the economy of the country, the joint conference of the financial heads invited the chief economic team, as well as the Federal Reserve’s president, Greenspaner, to discuss the next steps.”

A huge storm was hidden behind this statement. Moreover, there was also the battle that was caused by authorities fighting and scheming against each other in the dark.

“We can’t be sure how long the discussion on the appropriate countermeasures will be.”

Jasper murmured as he felt Wendy breathing steadily in his arms. When he lowered his head, he noticed that she had fallen asleep while leaning her head against his shoulder without him even realizing.

After Jasper chuckled lightly, he lifted Wendy gently and stood up to walk out of the room.

Because it was still early, he saw that some of the employees who came early had already started working. When the employees saw their boss carrying his wife to the office carefully, they broke into smiles.

The male employees were mostly simple minded and naive, so when they saw this scene, they forgot to walk away, and instead, they just stood there dumbly and watched.

Meanwhile, the female employees were heckling Jasper.

Even though they did not dare to make any noise to wake Wendy, the envy and mockery in their eyes was unconcealable.

Jasper was in a good mood too, and he chuckled inaudibly as he carried Wendy into the office with a smile.

Then, he carried her to the small lounge in his office. Jasper requested this lounge when they were renovating the office. There was a toilet and bed inside, so it could be treated as a small room that could be used at any time.

After Jasper placed Wendy in bed, he washed his face. When he felt refreshed, he went back to work.

The issue had not yet ended, so Jasper was still on edge. He needed to watch any movements, and simultaneously could not stop handling business in the office. He needed to take care of a lot of documents and could not delay the tasks any longer.

The sun rose in Harbor City. The bustling city was the liveliest when it was about 9 o'clock in the morning.

A villa district in Repulse Bay that was not open to the public was transformed into a high end club.

There was a swimming pool, a golf course, and also a standard racecourse. At one point, this was the place that all the paparazzi in Harbor City wanted to sneak into.

However, even the paparazzi that were known to be pervasive and daring in their reporting were not able to enter this place. Even if something were to happen here, it would not make it to the news.

Harbor City was heaven for capitalists. The capitalists were in control of this place, and they were also the same people who controlled the Harbor City media.

After this place was founded, its name was the only thing that was ever leaked to the public, Empire Meet.

Currently, inside the clubhouse of Empire Meet, luxury cars filled the area as almost half of the influential and reputable young masters and young mistresses from Harbor City gathered around.

These people were the children of the upper-class circle in Harbor City. Furthermore, they would be the successors of half of Harbor City's economy in the future.

Even so, this was the only time all members of Empire Meet were present since the club was first founded.

"Mr. Dormer, you're here as well! I thought you'll be slightly late. Shall we have a glass of Brandy?"

A young man in casual clothing greeted a slightly chubbier man.

Mr. Dormer yawned lazily, and he shook his hand at the alcohol that was presented to him. "I'm not drinking. I slept at about 3 or 4 in the morning last night after fooling around with some chicks from Nawait, then I was asked to come here early in the morning. I'll die if I drink any more."

The man in casual clothing did not force him. Consequently, he placed the alcohol on the table on the side and said curiously, "So many people are here, yet, we were not informed of anything before being asked to come here. I wonder what's going on and why they woke everyone up so early in the morning.

"A drinking party at 8 or 9 in the morning. Tch tch, this is the first time I'm attending something like this."

Mr. Dormer scoffed and said, "Don't try to figure out what Mr. Atticus wants to do with that pea brain of yours. He asked us to come, so we did. I didn't see that Hasting kid yet. He was just discharged from the hospital a while ago after his surgery and he didn't even complain. So what are you grumbling so much for?"

"I'm not. How would I dare make any noise when it comes to Mr. Atticus. I'm just curious," the casually dressed man said.

"Mr. Atticus will be here soon. We'll know what's going on after he gets here," Mr. Dormer said flatly.

Most of the people at the scene were having the same conversation as the two of them.

Even as everyone interacted with each other, they just could not figure out why Mr. Atticus had invited everyone here early in the morning.

Even though these young masters who were used to indulging in lives of debauchery were feeling annoyed, they did not dare to complain. Instead, they all waited patiently for Fabian's arrival.

Fabian did not make them wait too long. Soon, he appeared at the scene in a formal outfit.

He had a foreigner with blonde hair and blue eyes next to him, which was Morrison.

It was not rare to see foreigners in Harbor City and it could be said that they were everywhere. Besides, since the people at the scene were all descendants of the rich and famous, they were not unfamiliar with foreigners. As such, all of them could even converse with a standard British accent.

However, the appearance of this foreigner elicited gasps from the people whose family were in the finance industry.

“It’s the president of Layman Investment Bank’s Terra regional branch!”

“Why is he here?”

“Has he joined Empire Meet too?”

All kinds of assumptions could be heard as everyone started discussing among themselves while looking at Morrison.

At this moment, Fabian held a glass and tapped on it with a spoon, creating a clear ringing sound.

This was a typical gesture that people from upper class circles would do to tell others to quiet down.

Naturally, Fabian was invulnerable when he did that.

“Everyone, today I want to introduce my friend right here to you all. This is Mr. Morrison.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1377

“I believe that a lot of you are not unfamiliar with Mr. Morrison. However, in order to ensure that everyone here shares the same impression of him, I shall introduce him officially.”

“Mr. Morrison, who is standing next to me now, is the current president of one of the Big Four, Terra regional branch of Layman Investment Bank. His father, Mr. Rogers, is the president of the famous hedge fund, Quantum Fund.”

“Mr. Morrison and Mr. Rogers are very prestigious in the global financial industry.”

“That’s why it’s such good news to have Mr. Morrison here today in Empire Meet. I’m hereby announcing that Mr. Morrison will be taking the role of the vice president of Empire Meet.”

Fabian's words caused a huge stir in the people in front of him.

Some people were ecstatic, mostly the ones in the financial industry.

The club had been able to recruit a big shot like Morrison, so it would make things easy for them to go on about their business in the future.

All things aside, a connection like this was very hard to come by. At the same time, a minority of people were not too happy.

"Mr. Dormer," the casually dressed man approached Mr. Dormer quietly and said gloomily, "Didn't Mr. Atticus say that he'll only take people of Sommar descent as members?"

"And he also named the club as such."

"What is he trying to do here?"

Mr. Dormer smiled softly and said, "That's just an antic to get people to join when the club was first founded. You seriously believe that?"

“Also, I don’t think this is a bad thing.”

“Although Harbor City returned to the sovereignty of Mainland, you can’t underestimate the power of foreigners over here. We’ll benefit from harnessing their influence.”

The two of them talked as Fabian continued with his speech.

“I believe some of the more well informed individuals here already know that there was a terrorist attack in the United States yesterday. When that happened, I was discussing with Mr. Morrison about him joining Empire Meet.”

“Thanks to Mr. Morrison’s support, we now have a chance to make some money from this terrorist attack. I’m giving everyone this chance for free, and it’s up to you whether you utilize it.”

After Fabian said that, he gestured and invited Morrison to the front of the stage.

Morrison came forward. Then, he looked at the members of the club in front of him and said insipidly, “Hello everyone. From now on, I will be the vice president of Empire Meet. I just got here, so I didn’t bring any gifts for you guys. Therefore, this opportunity will be my present to all of you.”

“I plan to start a temporary funding team who’s main purpose will be to gather funds for us. Then, we’ll use these funds to enter the market in the United States to make a huge profit.”

“On principle, everyone can join, and the entry amount should be no less than 5 million Harbor Dollars. There will be no upper limit.”

After hearing what Fabian and Morrison said, the discussions in the hall grew even louder.

Some of them were very excited and they could not wait to hand in their money immediately.

At the same time, some of them showed signs of doubt and hesitation on their faces. Even so, their eyes lit up.

The people at the scene were all descendants of powerful families. Even though some of them were not very bright, most of them were well educated and they knew how to think independently.

Therefore, they instinctively figured that something was off about this.

“Mr. Atticus, Mr. Morrison, is there any income security for this fund?” Mr. Dormer asked suddenly.

Morrison’s blue eyes looked over and he answered, “If you need profit that comes with income security, don’t you think it’ll be more suitable for you to buy from a wealth management fund? This will be our private fund, so I won’t guarantee any of you anything.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1378

“Or perhaps, Atticus and my name will act as a guarantee.”

Fabian said insipidly, “Mr. Dormer, are you worried that I’ll scam you?”

Mr. Dormer was shocked when he heard that. He quickly smiled and said, “I didn’t mean that. Mr. Atticus and Mr. Morrison are leading this fund so I’m sure it’ll be fine.”

“Some people are more cowardly, just like his father. He only knows how to cower in fear and doesn’t dare to take the opportunity that is standing right in front of him. That is why he is destined to run small businesses selling building materials.” A voice could be heard suddenly.

The person who said that was Mr. Hasting, who was just discharged from the hospital after his surgery. He still looked a little pale and weak.

A lot of people were smiling mysteriously when they heard Mr. Hasting roasting Mr. Dormer.

The circle in Harbor City was not that big and something minor could also cause a huge stir.

Mr. Dormer and Mr. Hasting's families were business partners. However, after a failed collaboration, they were no longer as closed as before.

They also could not be in the same room as each other. This was a very public secret now.

When Mr. Dormer heard that, his face fell and he said coldly, "Mr. Hasting, please watch your tongue."

With a scoff, Mr. Hasting turned to Fabian and said, "Mr. Atticus, you and Mr. Morrison are giving everyone a chance to make money, and this is a good thing. The people out there can't even get it even if they beg for it. In case anyone wants to talk bad about me, I, Drew Hasting, will put in 60 million Harbor Dollars first."

Fabian's mood immediately improved.

"Very good, Mr. Hasting. Let's talk privately after the party."

This sentence caused Drew's face to blush slightly from excitement. It seemed that he was cured of all sickness.

Meanwhile, the rest of them were envious and jealous. They were secretly feeling remorseful that they were too late.

Even though they were all members of Empire Meet, they were categorized into different classes. For example, Drew and Mr. Dormer were in the middle class, while the casually dressed man from before was slightly below them.

Of course, Fabian was standing at the top of the pyramid.

Fabian's statement clearly proved that even if Drew lost his money, it would be worth it.

So, after he managed to stir up the emotions of the crowd, everyone started to put in money furiously.

After that, the fund that was founded a little more than ten minutes ago now contained about ten billion Harbor Dollars.

Some of the children of families in the financial industry had more than enough money than they would ever need. Therefore, to prove themselves to Morrison, they invested a few hundred million in one go.

After all, this was a proper investment, so they would not be stingy with their money.

When Fabian and Morrison saw that the fund was increasing, they looked at each other and noticed a satisfied glow in each others' eyes.

“Alright, everyone. If you want to invest, there will be people contacting you soon. You’ll just have to cooperate with them when it happens. Now, I have to announce something else.”

Fabian said once again.

The noisy room quieted down immediately. Everyone was looking at Fabian with wide eyes and waiting for him to tell them the next thing.

“Empire Meet never had such a huge event since it was founded. Back then, I aspired to build a platform for you guys to interact and build your connections. However, I still can’t stop people from coming to provoke us!”

“So now, I plan to gather all of the power in Empire Meet to destroy these who are provoking us!”

“This is to teach a lesson to the people who dare to challenge Empire Meet, but at the same time, we’re also announcing to everyone that Empire Meet is not a place of ecstasy where hedonists come to have fun. Rather, it is a genuine commercial power that can’t be neglected.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1379

“Mr. Atticus, who dares to provoke you? You just need to say a word and all of us who will get together and kill him!”

It was still Drew. He proved himself to Fabian just now, so naturally, he thought he was Fabian’s henchman. Thus, he immediately voiced out right after Fabian finished talking.

Coincidentally, Fabian desperately needed this kind of henchman right now.

Fabian was now looking at Drew with a friendlier gaze. He smiled and said, "You're right, Mr. Hasting. However, I need to correct you on one thing. This person is not provoking me, instead, he's provoking Empire Meet. Therefore, not only is he my enemy, but he's also the enemy of everyone in Empire Meet."

When Fabian said this, he looked at the members of the club that included people from backgrounds and families that spanned across all industries.

"Before Empire Meet was founded, I promised that everyone in Empire Meet would be my siblings."

"Moreover, Empire Meet would be our big family. Now that our family has been bullied, what we have to do is to kill that person who dares to provoke us. If anyone doesn't have the courage to do so, then they're not worthy to stay in the club."

This statement was heavy.

It seemed as if he was forcing everyone into a decision. It was either they listened to him or they got the hell out.

At this moment, no one would dare to talk back to Fabian. After all, if they did that, they would be painting a bright red target on themselves.

Besides, no one would dare to cross Fabian in Harbor City anyway.

Fabian showed a satisfied smile after taking in the silence.

“I guess everyone agrees. Now, I’ll contact Conrad Monty. The people here have family businesses that cover all industries. If we work together, then nobody can match us.”

“Mr. Atticus, who’s our enemy?” Someone asked the all important question.

What nonsense. It would be fine if their rival was an ordinary person. However, if Fabian short circuited and decided to bring everyone to fight the four richest families, what would they do?

“I’m sure most of you have heard this name before. His name is Jasper Laine,” Fabian replied insipidly.

Most of them in the room were familiar with Jasper’s name. They felt like they had heard his name before but they could not remember who exactly it was.

However, they could be sure that he was not from Harbor City.

No one in Harbor City would be so insane as to provoke Fabian.

“Do you mean Jasper Laine, the businessman from the mainland who also came up with the market rescue in Harbor City? I heard he owns JW Company and it’s doing pretty well.”

Some of their families would do business in the mainland so they were more well informed and thus asked.

“Yes, Jasper is a Mainlander. His businesses are all in the mainland too, and he has a very good relationship with Henry Law. JW Company is under his name, and it includes industries like entertainment, real estate, electronics, internet, and so on. He could be described as full of potential.”

Fabian narrowed his eyes and said coldly, “That’s why he’s brave and confident enough to provoke Empire Meet.”

“Now, Empire Meet needs all of you to target and shut out Jasper’s subsidiaries. Anyone scared can leave now. I won’t get angry.”

Even though Fabian said that, the members were not idiots.

Firstly, from what they could see, Jasper was from the mainland, so they were not scared of him.

Secondly, Fabian would take the lead and everyone else would follow. Fabian would be the one taking the risk if there were any, why should they be scared?

Lastly, if they ran away now, they would definitely fallout with Jasper. This was a given.

After all, even three years olds would not believe him when he said he would not get angry.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1380

“Good. Jasper has properties in Harbor City in the form of Advent Entertainment Group. Let’s start with this one.”

“From this day onward, I hope none of you work with the artists from Advent Entertainment Group. This includes endorsements, advertisements, venue rentals, cinema screenings, new song releases, and so on!”

“I want the artists under Jasper to not star in any movies or drama-even if they do, I want there to be no channels that will dare to play them. I want them to not have any industries looking for them for endorsement and advertising. I also don't want any cinemas to premiere their movies!"

"In other words, I want to completely shut them out!"

Right now, Fabian and Empire Meet had no idea what kind of storm this decision would cause.

Empire Meet was quick to react. The afternoon after the party ended, in just a few hours, some descendants who worked with Advent Entertainment Group immediately executed Fabian's plan.

They ended all collaboration with Advent Entertainment Group.

It was normal for one or two companies to suddenly stop their collaboration.

However, when more than ten companies ended their partnerships at the same time, this sudden change was instantly reported to the president of the company, Ryder.

"What's going on?" Ryder lifted his head and looked at the manager of the marketing department as well as the manager of the operating department with displeasure. Right now, the two managers were both looking fidgety.

“More than ten companies asked to terminate their contracts all of a sudden. Did something happen to our artists, or did something happen to the company?”

“However, these contracts involved five to six of our most popular artists right now. Among them are even the best actors and actresses. It’s impossible for something bad to happen to them at the same time.”

The manager of the operating department sighed and continued, “Also, I’ve asked the artists and they had no idea what happened. They’re just as confused as us.”

Knock knock knock!

The sound of knocking could be heard.

“Come in,” Ryder said in a deep voice.

The person who walked in was from the movie department and was in charge of cinema partnerships. He was drenched in sweat as he said, “Mr. Lawrence, bad news! 70% of the cinemas in Harbor City want to take down the movies our company produced!”

At this moment, Ryder finally realized something was wrong. Someone was targeting Advent Entertainment Group from behind the scenes.

“Damn it, who has the balls to do this? Our company includes 60% of the best artists in Harbor City. If they don’t screen the movies we produce, are they going to play cartoons for the movie goers?” Ryder said angrily.

The person from the cinema department said with a bitter smile, “They took down our movies and played movies produced by other companies. Mr. Lawrence, you have to think of something soon. Our company will get into big trouble if this continues.”

“Why are you in such a hurry?” Ryder growled.

“You guys should go back and comfort everyone while trying to find out who’s targeting us. I’m going to report this to the headquarters.”

The manager of the marketing department said in embarrassment, “Mr. Lawrence, we’re as confused as you are. The reasons these companies gave were the same. They said they have to terminate the advertisement and endorsement contracts due to a tactical readjustment within their companies. However, they were not willing to disclose more.”

“Strange...”

Ryder had many years of experience, and he immediately knew something was not right.

“Mr. Lawrence, normally when a company terminates their advertisement and endorsement contract mid way, it’s because of some huge scandal regarding the artists which might affect their brand image.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1381

When Jasper received the call from Ryder, he was busy listening to Sean's complaints.

"Mr. Laine, I am not crying about how poor I am. However, over the past few months of the second half of the year, most of land price in first tier cities rose by about 30%, causing the budget within our real estate company to become very tight."

"We're unable to buy the two pieces of land that we're after and had planned to buy after you took out the funds back then."

"After this period, the headquarters will have to consider our project department. We're not willing to abandon those projects just yet. You have to remember that the real estate industry requires a lot of money to play in. We won't be able to show you any results if we don't have any money."

Jasper took a sip of water and said bluntly, "Stop complaining to me. I know what you're thinking. Also, you're a little too late. The electronics company and the person in charge of Abbylon have already said something similar to me."

"If we're so well off, do you think we'll take out the funds from your company? Soon, some of the funds will be returned to the company, but all of you are saying right now is that you're in a difficult position and that this is hard on you. Money is tight, so who do you think I should help and not help?"

Sean gritted his teeth and said, "Lance looked cheerful all the time but I know he's a bad kid. And Wayne too! Damn it, he's so ugly and has so many tricks up his sleeves."

Jasper waved his hand in exhaustion and said, "Enough. Stop your act. All of the branches are growing right now so they all need monetary support. I know this very well. I'll allocate the funds after we procure more stable funds in the headquarters."

When Sean heard this, he grinned.

At this moment, the phone on the table rang. Jasper lifted his head to tell Sean to go out before picking up the phone.

"This is Jasper Laine."

"Mr. Laine, it's me, Ryder Lawrence."

When Jasper heard that voice, he lifted his eyebrow and smiled. He said, "Don't tell me you're here to cry about being poor too."

Ryder chuckled bitterly and said, "Mr. Laine, I have more important things to report to you."

Jasper stopped being playful and asked seriously, "What's going on?"

Ryder immediately told Jasper what was going on in Advent Entertainment Group in detail.

After he reported this to Jasper, Ryder told Jasper what he thought about this.

"Mr. Laine, from what I can see, someone is sabotaging us. Also, I've never seen such an aggressive attack before."

"I've collected information on some of the companies that terminated their contracts with us at the same time. They come from different industries, ranging from fashion, cosmetics, and sundries. There's also one that's in the aquaculture industry."

"According to my experience, either the other party is someone who has more power than the Harbor City government, or they are gathering a group of people from different industries to target us."

When Jasper learned about the attack on Advent Entertainment Group, he subconsciously figured that Fabian was behind it.

By pairing it with Conrad's text from a while back, he was able to connect the term 'Empire Meet' with the clues he was being given now. Thus, everything immediately made sense.

However, Ryder had no idea about any of this. Therefore, when Ryder deduced a conclusion that was not too far away from the truth, Jasper could not help but feel impressed.

This experienced entertainment manager from Hallavu was more competent than he thought.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1382

"It's Fabian," Jasper said flatly.

Ryder's voice paused for a while on the other end of the phone.

Obviously, Ryder, who had stayed in Harbor City for so long, could already be considered as someone from the upper class circle. Because of this, he was not unfamiliar with that name.

With a bitter chuckle, Ryder said, "Mr. Laine, if it's him, I'm afraid only you can settle this."

“I know Fabian will do something, but his speed and aggression surprised me. He’s truly a young master from the Atticus family. He’s so different from the ordinary people.”

Ryder could detect the complimentary tone in Jasper’s words, hence, he said sullenly, “Mr. Laine, we’re losing money with every minute that passes. Also, if we don’t take care of this soon, the company’s reputation will be greatly affected.

“You should know that the artists make money from their reputation. If they don’t have any publicity for a very long time, even the most popular artists will lose their jobs. How are you still in the mood to mock him?”

Jasper chuckled and said, ‘Don’t worry. This is not a big deal, yet you’re already so anxious.’”

“Do you already have a solution, Mr. Laine?” Ryder said in shock.

Jasper explained patiently, “According to our long term plan, we will abandon the market in Harbor City sooner or later.

“There’s nothing left in this market anymore anyway. It’s not stagnant yet, but the entertainment industry in Harbor City can’t support so many artists anymore.”

“Because of this, we’ve always been targeting the market in the mainland ever since the company was founded.”

“Total annihilation by Fabian’s hand right now might not be a bad thing. It’s just in time to prompt us and our artists to completely shift over to the mainland market.”

What Jasper said frightened Ryder. He could not help but say, “Mr. Laine, you’re right. With Easy Media helping us, we were able to do our jobs without any obstructions in the mainland for the past year.”

However, I’m afraid we’re still not prepared enough to leave Harbor City completely and enter the mainland.”

“Prepared? It’ll be too late if you need to be fully prepared before you do anything.”

“You have to go in steadily and strike hard when it comes to business. oftentimes, there’s nothing in this world that’s completely risk free.” Jasper shot down Ryder’s hesitation bluntly.

Ryder became more confident after he heard that.

In any case, the tall people would die first if the sky fell. Moreover, Jasper never made a wrong decision before this, and something great would always come from his leadership. For example, not only did they not fail when the company attempted to enter the market in the mainland before this, they even made a lot of money. This made everyone in the company, including Ryder, trust Jasper completely.

“So, Mr. Laine, what should we do now?” Ryder asked.

“There’s only one plan. If the cinemas in Harbor City won’t screen our movies, then we won’t go to them. What’s the use of those tens of millions of viewers in Harbor City? When are we supposed to make money if rely solely on them?”

“We should go to the cinemas in the mainland. Right now, the cinemas in the mainland lack high quality movies so you don’t have to worry about underperforming in terms of ticket sales.”

“If they don’t give us a venue for our productions, then we’ll do it in the mainland.”

“If they won’t endorse our artists, then we’ll go get endorsements from the businesses in the mainland. You can go and read up on the branches of JW. We’re all on the same team so it’s going to be much easier to negotiate these things.”

“The artists in Harbor City are more well known than the ones in the mainland. Moreover, they have more fans too. As long as the price is right, they’ll know what to choose.”

“In short, if Fabian won’t let us do business in Harbor City, then we won’t do it. We’ll do it in the mainland. After all, the mainland has more clientele and can provide us with a brighter future. Yes, Harbor City is Fabian’s territory, but he has no say when it comes to the alternative.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1383

What Jasper said caused Ryder to feel an intense and passionate fire in his chest.

That was right, even though Fabian was very influential in Harbor City, so what? His power was only limited to Harbor City.

Harbor City was too small, and Advent Entertainment Group was not interested in this place anyway.

The mainland was the future.

However, Jasper was not the one who wore the pants in the mainland. If Fabian wanted to put his foot in the mainland, he would be lucky if his foot was not chopped off by someone else, let alone if he wanted to cause trouble for JW.

“I understand, Mr. Laine. I’ll ask my subordinates to get on it now.”

“The change of our target market is a core strategic decision and it’ll affect all operations of the company. You’ve been managing the operations of Advent Entertainment this whole time, so I can only give this to you. You also have to be responsible for this, so I’ll be monitoring your performance.”

When Ryder heard what Jasper said, he answered loudly, “Don’t worry, Mr. Laine. I won’t let you down.”

“Good, call Ted after this and ask Easy Media to cooperate with us on all aspects. Advent Entertainment doesn’t have as many resources as Easy Media in the mainland. So, you guys will need Easy Media to lead you in the early stages.”

“I’ll ask Ted to work with you on this. We can keep the current business in Harbor City for now, but remember, it doesn’t matter what difficulties the people who abandon Advent Entertainment are facing right now, we will not consider working with them again in the future.”

Ryder hesitated when he heard the last sentence.

“Mr. Laine, there are multiple decision makers in a company’s hierarchy. Is it necessary to be so extreme? After all, we’ll still be able to make money if we continue working together in the future.”

“Are you trying to say that I shouldn’t give up on money because I’m frustrated?” Jasper said insipidly.

When Ryder sensed the dissatisfaction in Jasper's voice, he quickly answered, "I'm sorry, Mr. Laine."

"You don't have to apologize. I understand what you're thinking. You're considering this from the perspective of the company."

Jasper sighed.

This was the natural difference in mindset between an experienced manager and a boss.

The two of them would look at a problem from almost completely different angles. He had to remind Ryder about this.

"Ryder, you can never make enough money, nor all the money in the world. Of course, abandoning preconceptions and making sure all parties enjoy mutually profitable partnerships is what a mature company should do."

"However, have you ever considered that a company without moral integrity will never be respected?"

“If people respect you, you become an enterprise. On the contrary, a company is a place where profit is the only decision maker.”

“You’ll only be qualified to fight for the position of the head of the entertainment business department after you understand this problem.”

After Jasper said that, he hung up the phone.

When Ryder heard the beeping of a busy line, he became lost in thought for a very long time.

He thought deeply about what Jasper said. At the same time, he was surprised that Jasper was giving him a chance.

However, he was not the only one eyeing the entertainment company under JW. Ted from Easy Media was also eyeing it hungrily.

Currently, he had the resources of the entertainment industry in Harbor City, so he could defeat Ted easily. However, Advent Entertainment Group was going to enter the market in the mainland, at which point he might have to exchange positions in his relationship with Ted.

One had to know that Ryder and Ted had been longing for the position of the president of the entertainment company for a very long time.

Meanwhile, most of the major departments under JW, aside from the less experienced Lance, who was temporarily replaced by Chad as the president of the electronics equipment manufacturing company, already had individuals occupying their highest positions.

All except for the entertainment company.

Ryder suppressed the excitement in his heart and picked up the phone again. He said in a deep and steady voice, "Tell all of the people who are ranked manager and above to come to a meeting immediately."

Nauritus City in Southeast Province.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1384

After Jasper hung up the phone, he had an unpleasant look on his face.

He was not scared of Fabian shutting out Advent Entertainment. After all, the market in the mainland was so big that Advent Entertainment would fit in with no problems.

However, this could not change the fact that Fabian had forced him to exit the entertainment market in Harbor City while he was too helpless to stop him.

At this moment, someone pushed the office door open. No one in the company dared to enter Jasper's office without knocking.

Even Wendy would not do that because she placed a lot of importance on maintaining Jasper's authority and prestige in the company. Therefore, she would always knock before she entered the office, as was the established standards.

From this, one could tell that the person who did this must be someone that did not belong to the company.

After Henry entered the office, he sat opposite Jasper and crossed his legs. Then, he chuckled and said, "Fabian took action against you, huh?"

"You heard about it?" Jasper asked.

"Damn, I'm the top young master in Harbor City, okay? This is such a big piece of news which I only just heard about. I came to you the moment I understood what's going on."

“So what are you going to do? Are you going to go back to Harbor City to drag that son of a b*tch out to parade down the streets?” Henry said with excitement on his face.

“Go back?” Jasper chuckled coldly. “There’s another way to hurt him more, so why should we do so much?”

“Fabian only reacted so strongly because we hurt him too much yesterday. So, it’s up to him if he wants to use all of his tricks on us. However, we’re still the ones in charge when it comes to the stock market.”

Jasper had no expression on his face. Then, he grabbed his phone and called Jake.

After a short while, the call went through.

“Once the trading commences in the afternoon, watch Fabian’s funds closely and destroy them.”

Jake shuddered and answered immediately, “I understand, Mr. Laine.”

After Jasper hung up the phone, he grinned at Henry and said, “See, it’s that easy.”

Henry gave Jasper a thumbs up. "Very aggressive."

Throughout that day, Advent Entertainment Group was shut out by every establishment in Harbor City because of someone with bad intentions. This piece of news spread all over Harbor City like it had sprouted wings. This was the first time this had happened In Harbor City. After all, this was a place where the entertainment industry was booming.

Back then, shutouts would only happen to one specific artist.

However, this time Fabian was shutting the entire company out. Moreover, he was targeting Advent Entertainment Group, who was arguably the strongest figure in Harbor City's entertainment industry.

A lot of people were impressed by what Fabian was doing while all this commotion was going on.

Things were fine while he did not move, but the second he did, he caused an uproar.

"Mr. Atticus is really something else. A Mainlander is still too inexperienced to fight with Mr. Atticus."

This was what a lot of the people in the industry thought.

The sun set and it was soon nighttime in Harbor City. Meanwhile, it was the next morning in the United States. The trading had commenced.

“The Dow Jones Index is still falling drastically after the trading commenced!”

Fabian’s stock trader howled one minute after the trading commenced.

“Mr. Atticus, Jasper is targeting us!”

Fabian’s face turned cold and he said, “Hold on. We got 1.3 billion US Dollars from the fundraising yesterday, so it’ll be enough for us to fight back.”

“We can’t, Mr. Atticus. Jasper is like a lunatic! He’s coming in strong!”

“Gosh, Mr. Atticus, Jasper is taking the lead to attack us. A lot of the organizations are after our position. They want to devour us!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1385

The Dow Jones Index currently looked like a horrifying scene from a battlefield.

Under the influence of the market, the short selling party was making triumphant progress. However, the number of funds held would also make a difference on a battlefield like this.

Even though Fabian had tried everything to hide his position, he could not stop Jasper because Jasper had already thoroughly hunted him down.

The two parties maintained this intricate dance for a very long time. Both sides already understood each other inside and out.

Jasper soon led the attack as he began targeting all of Fabian's positions.

Jasper's attack left no means of escape, as Fabian's disguise was ripped off and he was left completely exposed.

In that moment, the eyes of all the hungry establishments that were busy looking for a free meal lit up.

They did not expect such a big fish to be hiding in such a chaotic battlefield.

To those agencies, they did not care if you were Fabian Atticus or Atticus Finch, as long as there was profit and returns, they would take you down even if Winston Benett himself was standing in front of them.

Which one of the bosses or stakeholders from those agencies was not a big shot that were in the top 500 of the world when it came to power?

Fabian was mighty in Harbor City and his family was powerful indeed.

However, if he was thrown into the Nasdaq's battlefield, the Atticus family was just a squire from a small town. It would be impossible to make those establishments halt their attack.

Thus, a smokeless financial massacre immediately skipped the mild prelude and leaped into the most exciting bit in which people suffered terrible financial losses.

They were competing to find out who had among them had the most money and most power.

"Mr. Atticus, this is too much, We can't hold on any longer!"

“Mr. Atticus, we have to come up with a plan soon! If Jasper was the only one hitting us, we might have been able to hold out, but the problem is that the entire market trend is plunging too violently.”

“Jasper keeps attacking us with such great fanfare and he has attracted at least six other organizations to encircle us. We won’t be able to hold on!”

“Mr. Atticus, the warning line of the position funds continues to fall below the critical value. If this continues, our funds won’t be able to take it!”

Fabian felt his head aching when he heard the panicked exclams of his subordinates.

“Alright, quiet! Shut up!”

Fabian roared, causing the noisy room to fall into an eerie silence.

What was left was muffled and rapid breathing.

“How much funds do we have left now?” Fabian asked through gritted teeth.

“About 1 billion US Dollars.” One of Fabian’s subordinates reported carefully.

“How long has it been since trading commenced? It’s only been 10 minutes and you lost 300 million US Dollars?” Fabian bellowed.

The subordinate that answered him just now did not dare to speak anymore.

At this moment, another subordinate said in a low voice, “Mr. Atticus, you can’t blame us. Jasper is too despicable. He purposely does this with great fanfare hoping to attract those organizations scrounging for a free meal to come attack us.”

“Atticus, let’s back away a little.”

At this moment, Morrison stood up from his desk. His expression was stern.

“As things stand, at least 6 agencies looking for free meals all over the world are taking aim at us. Their combined funds exceed 6 billion US Dollars. If this continues, all of our money will be gone in under 30 minutes unless we back away.”

“Damn it!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1386

Fabian was livid as he kicked the wooden sofa by his side.

The heavy and sturdy sofa did not budge. However, Fabian's face turned red before it went dark.

His toes hit the hard wood. Anyone would know how that would feel.

Fabian was in so much pain he could not speak. When Morrison saw this, he shook his head. He knew Fabian must have been on the verge of an emotional breakdown.

So, he spoke for Fabian, "Forgo the unimportant positions."

One of the subordinates said carefully, "Mr. Morrison, we already let go three positions in a row yesterday, so we are only holding the bigger positions now."

"Start letting go of the ones with the least amount of invested funds!" Morrison replied impatiently.

“The more positions we hold on to, the more funds we will need to cover up and the more pressure we’ll be under. If we spend everything, how are we going to make a comeback in the future?”

The group of elite stock traders did not dare to speak as they looked at Fabian. Fabian was their boss, so if he did not say anything, how would they dare to do anything?

When Morrison noticed this, he frowned slightly as a hint of displeasure flashed across his eyes.

“Atticus, we have to make a decision now.”

Morrison’s words forced Fabian to endure the pain in his toes and the anger in his heart.

“Do it then. Forgo the seven positions with the least amount of invested funds,” Fabian said helplessly.

His statement was filled with humiliation and dissatisfaction.

Everyone around him lowered their heads toward Fabian ever since Fabian finished his education and entered society. When had someone else ever forced his head down and made him suffer grievances before this? This person was even a Mainlander who came from an ordinary family.

Fabian could not bear this at all.

However, the news he was about to receive would soon cause him to break down.

“Mr. Atticus, the plan to target Advent Entertainment Group is not going too well.”

Conrad came back inside and reported to Fabian with no expression on his face.

As Fabian’s assistant, even though Conrad did not hold any substantial position in Empire Meet, everyone knew Conrad was one of Fabian’s dogs.

Therefore, Conrad was tasked to coordinate and lead everyone in Empire Meet in targeting Advent Entertainment.

Fabian’s face turned icy when he heard this. He said in a deep voice, “How so? Jasper is not in Harbor City, and even if he was, he wouldn’t have the power to fight Empire Meet. How can there be any obstacles to this unchangeable fact? Did the Laws do something?”

Aside from the Laws helping Jasper, Fabian could not think of any other reason for this fight between the two widely disproportionate powers to go wrong.

Conrad shook his head and said, “They didn’t do anything. However, Advent Entertainment made some strategic changes.”

“They are going to give up on all terminated contracts and they did not demand insistently about it. Also, they suddenly signed a series of contracts on endorsement, cinema, distribution, screening, and advertisement with some companies from the mainland today.”

Conrad paused after saying that. When he saw Fabian’s expression turning stagnant, he continued, “They want to leave the market in Harbor City and move to the mainland...”

“Mr. Atticus, please excuse my bluntness. This whole time, Jasper has focused his entertainment business on the mainland. You can see this when he purchased and restructured Advent Entertainment Group before also purchasing Easy Media from Swallow Capital.”

“I think our coercion this time might be playing right into Jasper’s hand. He’s able to use this chance to wipe out all remaining ideas of staying in Harbor City that the management and the artists from Advent Entertainment Group previously held. This way, they’ll be forced to change their mind and start focusing on the mainland.”

“If not for us, he would have needed to convince the management and artist to leave Harbor City, but now, I think he might even thank us.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1387

Smash!

The expensive coffee mug was thrown on the floor, shattering into pieces.

The porcelain pieces and coffee flew everywhere. The strong scent of coffee wafted across the room as this cup of kopi luwak that had cost at least 50 US Dollars was gone just like that.

No one knew how many times Fabian had lost his cool.

“I didn’t expect this at all.”

“When we were targeting Jasper’s conglomerate back then, I thought he was nothing special. I thought he was just good at problem-solving.”

“However, he’s starting to reel back his net now! Hahaha..! This kid made me suffer several serious injuries before. Good. Very good!”

Conrad spoke insipidly, as if he did not see Fabian’s face that was gradually turning sinister and maniacal, “Mr. Atticus, what should we do now? Should we keep going or give up? Everyone’s waiting for you.”

“Continue, of course. Why should we give up?” Fabian said sinisterly.

“So what if Jasper shifts his entertainment business from Harbor City to the mainland? Advent Entertainment Group is still rooted in Harbor City.”

“The artists’ business and resources are all concentrated in Harbor City. Can he move the entire Advent Entertainment in just one night?”

“Even if he moves his business away, can he shift the resources he has based in Harbor City away?”

Fabian’s gaze was malicious. He turned his head to say to Conrad, “Not only are we continuing, but we also have to go in with more force. Isn’t Advent Entertainment Group moving away? Alright then, spread the news!”

“Create all kinds of negative news. I want Advent Entertainment Group to become rats that everyone in Harbor City despises!”

“If their reputation is ruined, people in the mainland will think twice before working with them even if they shifted over there.”

“In short, I’m not scared of paying the price. I just want Jasper to hurt!”

Conrad could hear his ears ring when he heard Fabian saying that he would hurt Jasper even at the cost of his own interest.

“I understand. I’ll get on with it now.”

After Conrad left, Fabian sat on the sofa with a gloomy expression on his face. He settled down from his initial rage and said in a deep voice, “How can Jasper react so quickly?”

At this moment, Morrison walked over.

“Atticus, I’m going back to the United States tonight.”

Fabian lifted his head and looked at Morrison with a frown. "But we need you here."

Morrison said flatly, "You'll be able to handle this. I have to go back. On one hand, I need to report back to the investment bank's headquarters. On the other hand, I need to see my father and talk to him."

"About Jasper?" Fabian asked suddenly.

Morrison looked at Fabian with a half smile on his face. Then, he said calmly, "Atticus, will you tell your elders about this?"

Fabian's face fell.

Naturally, he would not complain about this to his family. He was not those useless second generations. This was a private matter between him and Jasper. If he went back and asked for help, it would be no different than admitting defeat.

"Atticus..."

Morrison patted Fabian's shoulder and said, "From my father's perspective, Jasper is a rather interesting young man whom I'll be able to train my skills with. That's all..."

“I think your family feels the same way too.”

After Morrison said that, he noticed Fabian staying silent, so he changed the topic, “However, I’ll still notify you whenever I see fit. I don’t want to ask my father for help now either. I think that would be no different from admitting defeat to Jasper.”

“I was too impulsive,” Fabian said flatly.

As a person that was respected by all of the first generation in Harbor City, Fabian was powerful in his own way. He hid his true feelings swiftly and admitted his mistakes magnanimously.

“However, I can give you a piece of advice.”

Morrison narrowed his eyes slightly and hid the cruel glint in his eyes.

“You haven’t utilized the advantage you have in Harbor City. We already know that it’s pointless to fight someone like Jasper from a business perspective. At the very least, we know it’s less than ideal.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1388

“Why don’t you use all of your connections and power to force Jasper’s business in Harbor City to close down?”

Fabian lifted his brow when he heard that.

He was a very smart man. If not, he would not be able to attack a formidable character like Kayden back then. Therefore, when Morrison reminded him of this now, he immediately understood.

“You mean...”

“Atticus, you know what I mean. Alright, I have to go now. Damn, I’ll have to get tortured with the long hours in the air and that damned jet lag. I always feel so horrible for a few days after. I hope the next time we meet it will be at a celebratory party.”

After Morrison left, Fabian sat in his room for a very long time.

By midnight, he had already made numerous calls.

“Hello, Mr. Ryder Lawrence, we’re agents from the Commercial Crime Bureau. We received a report and we also have concrete evidence proving that your company has committed huge business fraud. Furthermore, you’re involved in tax evasion.”

“Because of this, we have to sequester your company now and take away your computers for investigation. Please cooperate with us.”

Ryder looked angrily at the men in suits with serious expressions on their faces. He said coldly, “Let me see your warrant. ”

The agent who spoke just now took out the document immediately before handing it to Ryder.

Ryder glanced at it and he knew immediately that this document was genuine.

“What a good strategy.”

Ryder threw the document back at the agents after chuckling coldly.

“Mr. Ryder Lawrence, please get up. We have to take your computer away too,” the agent said strictly as per the rules.

Ryder got up with no expression and did not attempt to stop them.

He knew these agents were just carrying out orders. Or perhaps, they had no idea what the truth was.

It was meaningless to talk to these people.

However, Ryder was surprised by Fabian's power in Harbor City. Fabian was able to create so much falsify evidence to make it seem that he had committed a crime. Fabian was even able to make the government officials say something as incriminating as 'concrete evidence'.

It seemed that there were some bad apples in Advent Entertainment Group, and this was a simultaneous attack from both inside and outside the company.

When the agent saw Ryder cooperating, he let out a sigh of relief. Then, he waved his hand and asked his subordinates to dismantle the CPU from Ryder's computer.

After this, the agents grabbed the CPU and left immediately.

When Ryder came out of his office, he saw that the entire company was a mess.

The employees had been forced to one side and the agents from the Commercial Crime Bureau were everywhere. Some of them were dismantling the computers while some of them were questioning the employees.

When Ryder saw this, the corner of his eyes twitched. He called a manager over and told him, "Tell everyone to cooperate with the agents and please trust the company."

"The company never did anything illegal. This groundless claims is just a trick that can't be brought to the court. This matter will resolve itself after a few days."

The manager nodded like a chick eating grain and did not dare to say anything else. After that, he quickly left to spread the message.

Soon, Jasper heard about the incident. He hung up the phone after he said 'okay'.

Ryder understood what he meant, and he knew what to do.

After he hung up, Jasper turned his head and spoke to Jake, who was on a video call with him.

"Expose all of Fabian's heavy stocks."

“Also, take out 500 million US Dollars. I’ll trade it myself.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1389

Right now, the last thing Jasper lacked was money.

The mighty Mr. Laine, who was scared to live in poverty again, had never experienced this feeling for a very long time.

Even as he was making more and more money, his industries were rapidly expanded at the same time.

It was just like when normal people could not understand how those people with hundreds of millions of assets would be able to finish spending their money. However, what they did not know was that the people with hundreds of millions of assets would spend or invest millions of dollars in one go.

Right now, Jasper was easily using a hundred million as his unit of measure.

500 million US Dollars was transferred to his account a minute after he gave his order.

After pulling out of Nasdaq, Jasper set his eyes on international futures.

As international futures were traded, rubber had become an important manufacturing good. Therefore, it naturally became one of the traded goods.

Meanwhile, the Atticus Family was one of the kings of rubber in the Golden Peninsula.

In the context of globalization, the crash of the stock market in the United States influenced the normal operations of the other financial systems too.

For example, the futures market has been greatly disturbed.

The crash over these past few days caused the price of rubber futures to break the barrier of 1200 US Dollars.

Moreover, according to market trends, it could be clearly seen that the Atticus family, whose wealth depended on their rubber industry, had been desperately investing money in an attempt to raise the price of rubber futures.

Jasper did not hesitate. He immediately put 200 million US Dollars into the market and created a short-selling order.

The lukewarm rubber futures started to plummet drastically like a flaming barrel of gasoline after the tiger that was Jasper entered the market.

In every trading situation that followed the market's natural laws, there would always be dealers present who controlled the market regardless of it was rising or falling.

Today, Jasper was the dealer.

A short sale of 200 million US Dollars immediately made the price of rubber futures plunge.

The unit price of 1200 US Dollars fell to 1150 US Dollars within a few seconds.

When Jasper saw this, he injected another 100 million US Dollars into the market.

The price dropped to 1120 US Dollars.

This scene was directly transmitted to the computers of the countless buyers and sellers of rubber futures around the world.

Hence, countless people began to sell their rubber futures in horror.

They believed that rubber futures were likely to be buried along with the United States stock market. This violent decline caused many people to liquidate their positions.

Similarly, the Atticus family also heard this piece of news.

As one of the main producers of rubber in the world, the Atticus family's sensitivity to the price of rubber futures was well beyond what one could imagine.

Fabian's phone rang five minutes after Fabian entered the market.

"Father..."

Fabian held his phone and greeted solemnly.

"It seems that someone is attacking the rubber futures."

A voice that sounded as if it had been through the mill came from the other end of the line.

Fabian lifted his eyebrows.

“Is it Jasper?”

Fabian’s father, Sawyer Atticus, said, “You should back off.”

Even though Sawyer did not directly answer Fabian’s question, he had implicitly given him an answer. Fabian was furious after he heard that. He snapped, “Who does Jasper think he is? How can he ask the Atticus family to bow down to him?”

“You fool!”

Sawyer growled.

“Who is Jasper anyway? How can he have the power to shift the price of futures all over the world?”

“However, you have to know what the situation is right now. Something unexpected happened in the United States, and since yesterday, it has caused the United States to lose trillions of dollars.”

“Any small power would be able to cause a frantic dumping storm anywhere in this never-before-seen crash.”

“Just now, Jasper put in 300 million US Dollars, but do you know how many sell orders appeared after that? Tens of billions!”

“300 million moved the lever of tens of billions. This has never happened before. However, in this special situation, no one can stop the destruction of confidence toward the market. Once the plunge of the rubber futures causes an avalanche, who’s going to bear our losses?”

Fabian said through gritted teeth, “Father, I’m unconvinced.”

“You’re too irritable. You can’t be irritable if you want to do something big,” Sawyer said.

“You should calm down and think of another plan. I’ve asked someone to stabilize the price of the rubber futures. This was decided by the elders of the family. You have to follow it.”

Even though Fabian was angry and humiliated, his father had already given the order, so it would be meaningless if he continued to resist.

“I understand.”

Fabian took a deep breath and said.

“You should talk to Jasper personally about this.”

After Sawyer said that, he hung up the phone.

Fabian felt humiliated as he gripped his new phone tightly.

Jasper slapped him across the face, yet he still needed to beg the man for peace?

However, the will of a family was above everything else, and this rule was no different within the Atticus family. Fabian suppressed the anger in his chest and called the number that had contacted him back then.

Soon, the call went through.

“Jasper, our issues are between us. Aren’t you scared of infuriating the Atticus family by starting an attack on my family?”

Before Jasper could say anything, Fabian asked him coldly.

However, a chuckle was soon heard from the other end of the line.

Then... Beep beep beep.

Fabian growled when he looked at the call that had been hung up in disbelief.

Outside, Fabian’s stock traders heard Fabian’s growls and sounds of things smashing coming from inside the room. They did not even dare to breathe too loudly.

Back then, Mr. Atticus would have a neutral expression on his face no matter what happened. However, over these few days, he was like a mad dog with rabies. He would blow up whenever something did not go his way.

No one would dare to poke this hornet’s nest at this critical moment.

‘Just smash it. You’ll be fine after you smash something, you have money to pay back for it anyway.’

Even though Fabian wanted to jump into the phone and skin Jasper alive, after he vented, he still called Jasper again while feeling extremely aggrieved.

“Don’t hang up!”

This time, Fabian was smart. He did not say any meaningless threats to Jasper.

“I’ll stop all activities targeting Advent Entertainment Group, so you should stop too.”

Jasper said insipidly, “Mr. Atticus, you’re so calculative. All of Advent Entertainment Group’s prestige was lost and news about the investigation also broke out. Do you think you can end it with just one word?”

Fabian gritted his teeth and said, “What do you want?”

Jasper replied calmly, “Is this how you sue for peace?”

Crack.

That was the sound of a pen breaking after Fabian clenched it too hard.

“The Atticus family will raise the price of the rubber futures to 1400 US Dollars, and you will be able to earn at least 100 million US Dollars. Will that be enough?”

“1600,” Jasper answered insipidly.

“Jasper, don’t be too greedy!” Fabian roared.

Beep beep beep...

Fabian was dazzled once again when Jasper hung up on him. He only registered what had happened more than ten seconds later. He could not control himself from roaring hysterically and then, a loud smash could be heard.

This new phone could not escape its fate as it was thrown against the wall and smashed into pieces.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1390

The Atticus family kept their promise.

Half an hour after Jasper hung up on Fabian, a large sum of money suddenly appeared. Not only did it stabilize the plummeting rubber futures price, but the good news that accompanied the injection was also announced. With this, the rubber futures price started to rise slowly.

At this moment, Jasper was cunningly earning more money from this.

Hence, Jasper directly injected 200 million US Dollars. After Jasper put in the 200 million US Dollars to buy into the market, the huge amount of inflowing funds noticeably paused.

It seemed to be shocked by Jasper's shamelessness. However, soon enough, this fund ignored the greedy Jasper and started executing its own plan.

The rubber futures price stabilized at 1600 US Dollars very soon.

In conclusion, Jasper sold 300 million US Dollars when it was at 1200 US Dollars. Then, when the rubber futures price dropped to 1030 US Dollars, he closed the position. The price was subsequently increased from 1030 US Dollars to 1600 US Dollars.

This was the second time Jasper closed the position and this time, he completely withdrew from the market.

Even though the Atticus family was scared that Jasper would do something at this critical moment and crash the price of the rubber futures, there was still a limit to everything.

Furthermore, Jasper was not only touching the profits of the Atticus family, he was also touching the general market of the rubber futures around the world. If he went overboard, he was worried that it would backfire. Hence, he decided to stop before he went too far.

His idea of 'too far' took the form 370 million US Dollars in profit.

Even though he was happy, Jasper knew he could only do this seemingly impossible feat during this special occasion.

Normally, this fund of 500 million US Dollars would only cause a small rise in the rubber futures prices at most, and not have any huge influence.

Moreover, the Atticus family would be able to kill him with just a flick of their wrist.

When Jasper transferred the funds from the international futures market to the account Jake was controlling, Jake was dumbfounded.

“Mr. Laine, what did you do just now?”

Even though Jake was Jasper’s subordinate, he knew it was inappropriate to talk to the boss like this, but he could not help himself.

How long had it been since they withdrew the 500 million US Dollars?

It was less than 2 hours and it had transformed into 870 million US Dollars.

Jake did not think that Jasper had sourced some financing. Back then when Jasper asked Jake to withdraw the money, he had said he would trade himself.

“I took a spin in the futures market,” Jasper said with a grin.

Jake was genuinely impressed.

Even if the account Jake controlled held a large number of Dow Jones index short-selling orders and huge profits were being generated with every passing minute, Jake knew none of it was by his hand.

He was just executing Jasper's orders.

Jasper had started this portfolio a few months ago.

In other words, Jake only needed a pair of ears and a pair of hands to do his work.

However, after Jasper completed the portfolio comprising of funds from the Dow Jones Index, he made a 70% profit after he went to take a spin in the futures market for 2 hours with just 500 million in capital. No one would believe the speed at which Jasper made money even if he were to say it aloud.

Jasper received Ryder's call after talking to Jake for a while.

"Mr. Laine, we received an anonymous letter, and the evidence inside was enough to prove that we're innocent. Also, it named the traitors who faked the false evidence,

“We presented the concrete evidence and handed the list of those people to the agents from the Commercial Crime Bureau. They lifted the sequester order of our company and also returned the equipment they took away just now.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1391

Ryder sounded very excited over the phone.

Jasper said lightly, "That's good."

"The company will operate as usual. Just do whatever you need to do and comfort the employees so that they will not be affected by this incident. Similar things will not happen again in the future."

After hearing what Jasper said, Ryder asked hesitantly, "Mr. Laine, have you reached an agreement with the Atticus family?"

"Well, an agreement was reached, but the most important thing is to hurt them elsewhere so that they will be willing to come to the table and have a proper discussion."

Jasper's words sounded nonchalant, but Ryder could detect the shocking news hidden behind them.

Mr. Laine had a way to make the Atticus family bow down to him and he could even force them to come to the negotiation table?

One had to understand that the Atticus family was a properly established wealthy family in Harbor City. Although they were not one of the four rich families, everyone in Harbor City knew that they were not inferior to any of the four families.

While suppressing the shock that surged in his heart, Ryder's attitude subconsciously became more respectful.

"Mr. Laine, I'm going back to work. Don't worry, there will be no internal problems within the company."

Jasper laughed and said, "I can solve the external factors, but the internal is your responsibility, so this is your job. I'll leave them to you."

"Yes, Mr. Laine."

As soon as Jasper put down the phone, Henry rushed over.

"Just now my dad and I were on the phone, and he was called away suddenly. It seems that something major has happened. He asked me to tell you to watch the international news."

Henry showed a rare solemn expression. Jasper did not dilly-dally when he saw this, and he immediately turned on the television before switching to the United States live news channel connected via satellite.

A thin old man with gray hair appeared on the television screen.

He was standing on the podium while giving a speech. Jasper could recognize the old man without looking at the subtitles below.

Everyone who was involved in economics and finance around the world would know him.

Greenspaner.

The world's top economist and one of the founders of modern macroeconomics.

Compared to his academic title, the most terrifying thing about him was his job.

He was the economic czar, and the chair of the United States Federal Reserve.

Jasper, who was reborn, knew that the thin and humble old man in front of him would remain as the chair of the Federal Reserve System until 2006. He was the longest-serving chair of the Federal Reserve in the history of the United States, maintaining his position through six different presidencies.

It could be said that this thin old man had established the dominance of the dollar and set the stage for dollar such that it could not be challenged for at least the next 50 years.

Similarly, he was also the core builder of the United States economic empire.

He was the uncrowned king of the economic field.

At this moment, Greenspaner, who represented the economic hegemony of the United States, stepped up to give a public speech. The United States must have decided on a series of economic policies.

It was not unrealistic to say that all of the hot money from institutions scattered throughout the world were paying attention to this public address at the same time.

However, Greenspaner's expression looked solemn and grim.

“After a joint meeting, we have reached a consensus. We can’t just sit by and watch the United States’ accumulated wealth over the years evaporate into thin air.”

“Any person or institution that attempts to short the United States stock market in this trying time will be viewed as an attempt to provoke us.”

“And we will deliver the most painful counterattack to any such provocations!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1392

Jasper was very thankful.

Fortunately, Henry came in just in time to remind him of this. It allowed him to avoid a long series of platitudes, and capture only the important information.

“The United States is going to do a market rescue?”

Henry turned his head and asked Jasper.

When it came to economics, Henry knew that he would not be as good as even a single hair on Jasper's head even if a hundred of him were stacked together, so he did not even think about it before asking the question.

"This is a very strong indication, and he seemed firm about it."

Jasper narrowed his eyes and looked serious.

He knew that the United States officials would surely do a market rescue.

However, his memories regarding how and when the United States did this in the past life were a little vague. So what Greenspaner was about to say next would be very important.

Therefore, "Let's wait and see, he should announce the plans soon."

Sure enough, Greenspaner did not let Jasper and Henry wait too long before he directly announced a series of plans.

The tax relief and fee preferential policies to stimulate physical enterprises had little to do with Jasper. Therefore, he did not pay much attention to it. What really got Jasper's attention were the following two actions.

“We will improve the United States stock market’s review standards and requirements for foreign personnel and institutions entering the market.”

“Also, we’ll comprehensively reduce the benchmark lending rate and the statutory reserve requirement ratio by 0.3 basis points each.”

Although Henry did not know much about macroeconomics, he was aware of the importance of these two policies in the current situation.

“What is that old man saying?”

Henry maintained the good tradition of asking questions whenever he did not understand something. He immediately turned his head and stared at Jasper before asking.

Seeing that Greenspaner was now talking about some irrelevant policies whereby it seemed that there was nothing important, Jasper let out a sigh of relief as well.

After he said that, Jasper turned to explain to Henry when he saw that Henry appeared worried.

“The literal meaning is easy to understand. The first is to start controlling the amount of foreign capital entering the United States stock market. This was inevitable. Although the methods are rather extreme, it is understandable to use extraordinary methods in such extraordinary times.”

“As for the second one, it is to reduce loan and deposit interest, particularly the latter. This is to release social deposits. When people find that there is no nothing to be gained by holding money in the banks, they will naturally seek new investment channels. The stock market will be their best choice.”

“However, it’s a bit ruthless to reduce 0.5 basis points in just one go.”

Jasper remembered that in his previous life, the reason why this incident did not have a significant impact on the United States’ economy was that a series of rescue plans were very stable and timely.

However, they still caused some ripples.

For example, the United States Federal Reserve mistakenly underestimated the impact of this incident on the United States economy in the beginning, so the storm lasted nearly a week before they came up with a more effective rescue plan.

They then used the national reserves to enter the market.

However, Jasper had already forgotten the specific amount they used and what channeled they had entered from.

It seemed that this life was no different.

“Will it affect us?” Henry was most concerned about this.

“For sure...”

Jasper’s answer made Henry’s face fall suddenly.

“But it’s not that serious. It’ll just make us a little less efficient. We’ll know for sure when trading commences tomorrow.” Jasper comforted Henry.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1393

The sky became bright again. By then, Jasper had not rested his eyes for nearly 70 hours after staying up for two consecutive nights.

After sending Henry away, Jasper could not stand it anymore. Hence, he got 11p and went to sleep in the lounge.

Wendy dropped by halfway, but when she saw Jasper asleep, she immediately walked out quietly. Then, she told the people outside to not disturb Jasper's rest no matter who showed up.

While Jasper was sleeping, there was another person who had not closed his eyes for a few days but still could not sleep.

"Damn, that's it?"

Fabian looked malicious. He was staring angrily at the television that had ended the live report.

Why did he endure the torment over the past few days? He was holding on until the United States' market rescue plan was announced.

However, the market rescue plan was announced, but it was not as great as he expected. At this moment, he was a little restless.

It might have been because he had not slept for several days, but as things stood, Fabian had become very irritable, especially now that the market was not looking good. This made him even more irritable.

After contemplating for a while, Fabian suppressed his anxiety and called his father, Sawyer.

“Father, what’s going on in the United States? Do you have any updates?” Fabian asked straightaway.

“Hasn’t the rescue plan been announced?” Sawyer asked lightly.

“But what’s the use of such strength?” Fabian asked, dissatisfied.

“The officials have their reasons for doing things. They have to look at the big picture when making their decisions. It is impossible to make a plan that caters just to you, understand?” Sawyer said in a deep voice.

Fabian was still a little unwilling. He said, “But this kind of rescue plan will only serve to alleviate the current situation at best. It can’t do much.”

“You have to know that no matter how strong the United States is, it is impossible for them to fight the whole world. There is a basic rule to follow when it comes to exchanges between countries, and the same goes for exchanges between two individuals.”

“Raising the entry barrier for foreign investment is already a very risky move. For example, it is likely to cause a series of diplomatic backlashes... You don't need to know much about these things. In short, such a plan is just right for this current situation.”

Fabian gritted his teeth. His face was dark.

In this silence, Sawyer suddenly asked, “How much have you lost in your fight with Jasper?”

Fabian was surprised, and said hurriedly, “N-not much...”

“When was the last time you answered my question in such a panic?” Sawyer asked coldly.

Fabian sighed and replied honestly. “Currently, it is estimated to be about 1.2 billion US Dollars. This is only my personal loss.”

Sawyer was also breathing heavily at this moment. "You've disappointed me."

After a long time, Sawyer's voice could be heard.

"Father, I'm not to blame. I was about to destroy Jasper completely, but God helped him. Honestly, I was wondering if Jasper was colluding with those terrorists to plan this!" Fabian said in anger.

"You fool!" Sawyer yelled.

"If you lose, you lose. Is it meaningful to hunt around for reasons? Can it change the fact that you lost?"

Fabian refused to accept this, "I haven't lost yet! I'm only at a disadvantage for the time being!"

"Then do what you think you should do. Don't cry to me like a kid who lost a fight. The Atticus family doesn't need such a disappointing descendant," Sawyer said coldly.

Fabian gritted his teeth and asked coldly, "Any means?"

“In this world, the legality of your means will always be dictated by the winner.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1394

In the dim study, Conrad stood quietly at his desk. Fabian sat across from him and said nothing.

Fabian had been silent throughout the more than ten minutes since Conrad was called into the office.

There were several documents in front of him. Fabian’s gaze was focused on the documents as if he was making a major decision. His face changed with uncertainty from time to time.

“Look at this.”

Fabian finally broke the silence and threw a document toward Conrad.

Conrad took the document and looked at it, and his face changed.

Surprisingly, this document contained the breakdown of losses Fabian's funds suffered over the past few days.

Conrad had long known of Fabian's losses, but when he looked at the shocking numbers in black and white, he could not help but feel shocked.

"The total invested capital is 3.2 billion US Dollars. The current holdings are 1.1 billion US Dollars, and the loss is 2.1 billion US Dollars. It is estimated that over the next three days, we will continue to lose 700 million US Dollars, with the total loss ratio predicted to be as high as 90%."

This scalp-numbing information was conveyed in just a few sentences.

"What you're looking at is the situation I'm in."

Fabian looked up at Conrad blankly and continued, "In other words, if we hadn't raised funds from the members of Empire Meet before, we would be broke by now."

"The previous investment of more than one billion US Dollars and more than 10 billion Harbor Dollars are all gone."

After taking a deep breath, Conrad said, “Mr. Atticus, after the release of the first phase of the market rescue in the US, a lot of members have already asked about the profitability of the funds.”

“Make a report to them and say that the current expected loss is 10%,” Fabian said with no expression on his face.

Conrad said with a frown, “Mr. Atticus, it’s easy to make a fake report, but I’m afraid it won’t withstand an investigation.”

Indeed, the members of Empire Meet were not fools, and they all had channels and resources backing them up.

At present, the funds had been invested, and it would be fine if they did not release a statement yet, but once they did, these members could verify the authenticity after launching a small investigation.

After all, the market transaction data was there, and no one could steal it or fake it.

“I will promise them 30% of the final profit. As for the authenticity, does it matter?” Fabian sneered and said confidently.

Conrad shrugged upon hearing this.

Indeed, what if someone realized that Fabian was faking it?

As long as Fabian was shameless, no one would dare to risk their lives to expose him. Fabian was too powerful. At least within Empire Meet, no one would dare to challenge Fabian's authority. Conrad, who had always represented Fabian in handling the affairs of Empire Meet, had the most say.

"Don't worry about the matters at Empire Meet for now, I will arrange for someone else to take your place," Fabian said suddenly.

Conrad did not have the slightest expression on his face, but his heart skipped a beat.

He thought of the old man in disguise that Fabian had arranged to monitor him back then. It was just surveillance last time, but this time, he had straightforwardly let Conrad go.

Could Fabian have discovered something? The thought made Conrad very nervous.

He knew what Fabian was like. This was Harbor City, and he was not Jasper.

If Fabian found out that he was secretly colluding with Jasper, Fabian might really try to drown him in the ocean.

Meanwhile, his family's power in the Southeast Province was nothing to Fabian's.

"Tomorrow, I will fight Jasper, but at the same time, I need to visit an important figure. I can't go there myself, so I can only let you go and leave on the very same night," Fabian said suddenly.

These words made Conrad breathe a sigh of relief.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1395

At least for now, Fabian was not suspicious of him.

"Okay," Conrad replied calmly.

He did not ask where he was going, who he was meeting, and what they would talk about. Instead, he just agreed.

This also satisfied Fabian a lot. What he disliked the most was subordinates with a lot of questions.

This was also the reason why he gradually grew to like working with Conrad ever since he got Conrad to join.

“You’ll go to this address tomorrow. ”

Fabian handed Conrad a note and a plane ticket

“Sunrise Land?”

Conrad was surprised when he took the note.

“Yes, go meet Echo Welch.”

Fabian’s eyes flashed with a cold light. He pointed to the seat in front of him and said, “Sit down, I will tell you about your mission this time.”

When Jasper woke up, he felt refreshed.

It was great to be young. Even after he stayed up for a few nights, at least he could still make up for it with a night's sleep.

Jasper washed up and walked out of the lounge, but by this time it was already early evening.

Looking at the time, Jasper realized that he had actually slept for more than ten hours.

Jasper looked in the next room and found that the rascal, Henry, was playing games with headphones on.

"F*ck, you scum! How can you get blown up just like that? Get my boys to hack them to death now!"

"Everyone, gather at the alliance. Daddy's Dragon Slaying Sword is already hungry and thirsty!"

As he watched Henry playing excitedly, Jasper smiled and shook his head before leaving the room.

Some time ago, Jasper heard that Henry's game ID was already well-known on the Internet. Jasper wondered how many people were curious about this rich fella who had invested tens of millions into United Legends.

They certainly would not know that this rich kid was playing this game next door to his boss' office.

After sitting back down in front of the computer, Jasper answered the call for the virtual meeting with Jake.

Seeing Jake with red eyes and a greasy face on the screen, Jasper frowned and asked, "You haven't rested?"

Jake shook his head and said, "Before the Federal Reserve released the first phase of the market rescue plan, we had to immediately collect the important information and analyze the impact of this plan on the market. There was no time to sleep."

"Alright..."

Jasper did not say something pretentious like asking him to rest more. He also did not ask Jake to go to sleep.

Now, Jake was his direct link to the team of stock traders in Harbor City, and trading was about to commence. At this critical moment, he could not ask Jake, who had cooperated with him for a long time, to leave.

After the two exchanged some opinions on the possible impact of the market rescue plan, they finally came to the conclusion that while there would be some impact, it would not be large enough to stop the market from falling back to its initial inflection point.

During this discussion, the US stock market commenced trading.

“Mr. Laine, it’s starting.”

One minute later.

“Mr. Laine, is Fabian opening a position?”

When Jasper heard this, he immediately pulled out the relevant data.

Seeing the extremely conspicuous position opening data in the dense data stream, Jasper frowned.

“Fabian stopped covering short positions for self-protection as he did a few days ago at this critical moment. He even started to build positions against the trend. What does this mean?”

Jake’s bewildered voice came from the speaker.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1396

“Let’s not care about what his objective is.”

Jasper narrowed his eyes slightly.

“We’ll figure it out when it blows up.”

Jasper gave an order, and Jake immediately began to command the stock trader team to attack.

Before this, when Fabian was faced with Jasper’s several attacks, he was defeated as his defensive line retreated again and again.

This time, Fabian seemed to be determined to fight a decisive battle, so instead of retreating, he moved forward.

“Mr. Laine, the impact of the first phase of the market rescue plan has begun to take place. The decline in the market has slowed down, and it is gradually stabilizing.”

Since they were a mature and professional team, Jake's team included stock traders and analysts.

With such a huge war chest, it was only natural that they had multiple teams of specialist.

While Jasper and Jake were facing Fabian on the battlefield, the analysts were busy gathering and analyzing the data from the first hour of trading before sending it to Jake.

Upon hearing Jake's report, Jasper was already observing the trend of the market.

Currently, the Dow Jones Index was at 8100 points, and it had resisted breaking below 8000 points.

Meanwhile, the trading curve in the last 20 minutes showed that it was not plummeting anymore. Instead, it had begun to fluctuate sharply.

This was a signal that the market was changing.

"Mr. Laine, according to what we discussed before, such a situation was bound to occur. On one hand, the market rescue plan has indeed stimulated market confidence and has also released a large amount of capital into the stock market.

“Another part of the reason is that some investors believe that the stock market has reached an all-time low, and they have begun bottom fishing.

“Now that the trading volume continues to increase, there’s an intense fight for capital between the long and short sides. What are we going to do?”

Jake did not dare to call the shots without authorization in this kind of situation. Hence, he decided to consult Jasper.

Jasper said, “According to what we discussed earlier, the market will continue to fall as the market’s confidence will not be restored so easily. Did you not notice that the institutions are still waiting and watching?”

“Take down Fabian.”

Jasper’s three sentences determined the direction of the billions of dollars in Jake’s hands.

Jasper did not hold back anymore. Although Fabian’s abnormal behavior gave him a bad feeling, all he could do now was drain all of Fabian’s funds in the shortest time.

Now that the general trend was still on his side, time would not wait for him. If he wanted to kill the enemy, he needed to do it as soon as possible. Jasper's action on this front instantly put tremendous pressure on Fabian.

Not to mention that the current market was still generally pessimistic. Although the Dow Jones Index was volatile, it was slowly falling amidst the turbulence, and it did not show any signs of an upward trend.

Fabian was doomed to fall in the face of Jasper's attack due to the huge difference in the funds between the two of them.

"Mr. Atticus, the position has liquidated!"

Fabian did not know how many times he had heard this sentence from his subordinates.

Fabian was angry at the beginning, then, he became calm and finally. At this point, he was numb. He did not even want to say anything.

"Liquidated, liquidated, do you know how to say anything other than liquidation?"

Fabian's voice made all the stock traders under him feel a little ashamed.

“Mr. Atticus, the funds are not enough. If we continue to fight like this, we will lose too much.”

Finally, a stock trader endured his deep fear and anxiety, and said a sentence without mentioning the word ‘liquidation’.

Fabian inhaled sharply and felt that his vision turn dark.

Although he had decided to fight Jasper today, the speed of his defeat was beyond his imagination. Right now, he had no choice but to show his hand. When he thought about this, Fabian picked up the phone and dialed a number.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1397

A middle-aged man’s unsentimental voice could be heard on the other end of the phone, “Someone from the company will go to you to sign off on the mortgage agreement, Mr. Atticus.”

Fabian said angrily, “Are you afraid that I’ll renege on a debt?”

The middle aged man was still indifferent. He replied robotically, “Everyone will be treated the same. This is the company’s rules.”

“Hehe... Okay... We’ll increase the transaction value then. I’ll mortgage all the houses, cars, stocks, and funds under my name in Harbor City. How much can I get?”

“500 million US Dollars.” The middle aged man on the other end of the phone answered meticulously.

“What about 100% of Empire Meet’s stock right?” Fabian asked coldly.

This time, there was a moment of silence on the other end of the phone.

“Mr. Atticus, please wait a moment. We have not evaluated this asset for the time being. I will ask for further instructions immediately.”

“I’ll wait for you,” Fabian said with a cold smile.

The man did not hang up the phone. Three minutes later, there was the sound of the phone being picked up.

Then, Fabian heard the voice of the middle-aged man.

“This item can be valued at another 500 million US Dollars.”

“This is daylight robbery! The Empire Meet is only worth 500 million? Ask those people above you how strong the connections and resources of the Empire Meet are. Without me, how else will you find another Empire Meet?”

On the other end of the phone, the middle aged man replied without any emotion, “The value of Empire Meet will shrink significantly when you’re not in it, so that’s why it’s only worth 500 million US Dollars. Not to mention, it’s just a mortgage. As long as you pay back the principal amount and interest on time, everything will still belong to you, Mr. Atticus.”

Fabian’s face was dark and he gritted his teeth as he considered the offer for a moment.

“Deal! Send your people over right away! Once the contract is signed, I want to see the money immediately!”

“Mr. Atticus, rest assured that as long as the contract is signed and we hear back from the people we send over, I will arrange the payment immediately.”

Half an hour later, three men came to the door of the secret villa where Fabian was residing.

The three men were wearing black suits, and one of them was carrying a box that was password protected. The box would only open after three people entered their passwords. Therefore, the security of this box could be described as extremely rigorous.

After the box was opened, Fabian reviewed the documents and then signed it.

After they retrieved the documents, the three men immediately left the villa.

They never said a word to each other from beginning to the end.

As soon as the three of them left, Fabian received a transfer of 1 billion US Dollars.

After that, Fabian transferred the money directly into the securities account without saying another word.

“Get him. If Jasper wants to beat me, he has to be prepared to lose a piece of his flesh in the process,” Fabian said coldly.

Meanwhile, the team of stock traders under him did not dare to ask about the source of the money. They immediately acted out Fabian’s instructions.

Hence, the United States Dow Jones Index market began surging again.

The purchase order of 1 billion US Dollars was very conspicuous in this market where everything was declining. Moreover, it had a great rallying effect.

Many copycats, who had still been hesitating, saw this huge purchasing order and immediately gritted their teeth and chose to put in a portion of their funds to keep up with the trend.

Some brave entities followed suit as a show of force.

In short, the 1 billion spurred more money from the bottom fishers, causing the transaction data to surge in the blink of an eye. Ultimately, the entire Dow Jones index unexpectedly moved up by 3 points.

Even though these 3 points meant nothing in the scale of the overall stock market. However, it was a godsend for this particular market. Because this was the only index increase in the past few days since the incident occurred.

Even if it was only 3 points, it still evoked the greed of countless people.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1398

Everyone who traded stocks hoped that they could bottom fish and sell at the highest price.

It meant to buy at the cheapest cost at the lowest position and sell at the highest price at the highest position.

In theory, this was the ideal way to maximize profit. However, the stock market was unpredictable. Even Winston Benett dared not say that he could do it.

The number of people who wanted to bottom fish but ended up halfway up the mountain were unknown. Then, they would watch the stock price plummet as they were trapped in a high position, doomed to be played for suckers.

Even so, there would never be a shortage of adventurous and bold people in this world.

The 3 point rise had made people like this from all over the world restless.

Huge amounts of funds poured into the United States stock market instantly. The competition between the short side and the long side instantly became more intense.

“Mr. Laine, Fabian is adding to his positions!” Jake shouted.

Jasper stared at the computer screen. Wendy, who had shown up beside him without him realizing, was so nervous that she did not dare to breathe too loudly.

Although she did not know much about the stock market operations, she had heard Jake’s report just now.

So Wendy also knew that every decision Jasper made would affect the direction of at least 7 billion US Dollars. That was right. Over the past few days, Jasper’s total operable assets had doubled, reaching a terrifying volume of 7 billion US Dollars. Such a large amount was enough to fight a normal medium-sized agency on Wall Street.

And after this 7 billion US Dollars expanded to the overall index, other follow-up funds influenced by it would amount to at least 40 billion US Dollars.

If it was converted into Somer Dollars, that would be 320 billion!

In the previous year of 2000, such a large amount would be ranked 12th among the GDP of the 31 provinces and autonomous regions across the country. Even the 56 billion Somer Dollars under Jasper’s direct control would rank 29th. This was the comparison between the funds controlled by one person and the GDP of the province!

It was simply appalling.

Moreover, at this moment, this kind of terrifying amount could set off a huge wave in the world's largest stock market on the other side of the Pacific Ocean with just a single word from Jasper.

“Proceed as planned. You don't have to think about anything else now that we're at this stage. Even if more agencies begin staring at us, we must completely suppress Fabian.” Jasper made up his mind and ordered decisively.

“Roger!”

Sunrise Land.

Conrad ran into Echo at the headquarters of Softwin Investments.

“Mr. Welch, you're glowing.” The repeated trips and irregular schedules did not make Conrad look any worse for wear. On the contrary, he was still full of energy.

In the spacious and bright office, Echo smiled calmly and said, “Is Mr. Monty making fun of me?”

Even the blind could see that Echo looked pretty off-color.

Fabian led the plan to defeat Jasper, so he had also joined forces.

Although they worked in investment banks, Echo did not have a good father like Morrison. Therefore, he did not dare to embezzle public funds from investment banks and invest privately in Fabian.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1399

Therefore, Echo persuaded Softwin Investments to procure a large sum of money. He planned to personally trade with this money and would use it to snipe Jasper. The headquarters did not ask Echo what he would do with the money, but since it was public money, it had to be profitable.

Even if you lose, you could not lose too much.

However, the situation right now was very clear. Fabian almost spent all of his family’s money, so how much better could Echo fair.

When Jasper was being attacked left and right when he was down, Echo was very energetic, and he even felt confident as he walked into meetings. However, right now, Echo did not even want to see anyone. He almost lost all the money the investment bank gave him. He would be held responsible for it when it was time to submit the final report.

“Mr. Welch, you misunderstood. I really think you’re glowing.” Conrad ignored Echo’s eccentricity and said with a smile.

“If you weren’t Fabian’s man, I would have thrown you out of the office by now,” Echo said while feeling extremely unhappy.

He hated Fabian now. If it were not for Fabian’s instigation, he would not have fallen to this point.

With a slight smile, Conrad sat down calmly and said to Echo, “Everyone is very passive in the current situation, and that is why I came here today. Mr. Atticus asked me to talk about cooperating with you again. If we succeed, the current dilemma will be nothing.”

Echo sneered, “Cooperation? The cooperation this time has caused me to lose the 800 million US Dollars given to me by the investment bank. Not only will I lose my job, but I might also even go to jail! If I cooperate with Fabian again, will he take my life too?”

Conrad shook his head slightly and said, “Mr. Welch, Mr. Atticus told me before I came that you will lose your temper and I can bear with you twice, but if there is a third time, I am allowed to stand up and leave straight away.”

Conrad’s words made Echo narrow his eyes suddenly.

“Fella from Somer, do you know where you are and who you are talking to?”

Conrad laughed and said, “I’m sitting in the largest investment bank in Sunrise Land and I’m here to give you hope, Mr. Welch. Is there anything wrong with that?”

After staring at Conrad gloomily for a long time, Echo smiled and said, “Are people from Somer so difficult to deal with? Jasper is like this, and so are you.”

After he finished talking, he continued without waiting for Conrad to reply, “It seems that Fabian is lucky to have a good dog like you. Come, let’s talk about your plan.”

“The first step of Mr. Atticus’ plan is to let you take the initiative to report the loss of this operation to the higher-ups of the investment bank.”

Conrad’s words made Echo’s brow twitch fiercely.

After forcibly resisting the urge to throw Conrad out, Echo suppressed his irritation and asked, "And then?"

"Then, make every effort to promote the investment bank's determination to recover the loss from Jasper."

Conrad smiled.

Echo sneered and said, "What kind of plan is this? Are we little kids playing house?"

Conrad smiled slightly as if he was not surprised at Echo's reaction.

He said faintly, "At the same time, Mr. Atticus will contact Mr. Morrison and use all his connections to persuade most of the agencies on Wall Street into realizing that there is a man from Somer who is stealing the wealth of the west. He will inform them that Jasper is that robber."

The expression on Echo's face became extremely blissful as soon as he heard this.

"Use the power of the entire Wall Street to doom Jasper to eternal damnation? Hahaha, good! This plan is vicious, I like it!"

Conrad said calmly, “There is an important concept in this. We have to hide Jasper’s brilliance as much as possible, so that institutional decision-makers, including the higher-ups of Softwin Investments, will be convinced.”

“As well as the power behind Jasper that represents Somer’s domestic capital, so that they too will pay more attention to this.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1400

“Escalate this to a dispute between the East and the West?” The smile on Echo’s face dissipated and was replaced with a solemn expression.

Echo was not a fool, and that was why he was able to get to his current position. Such a huge thing would involve too many people. He could not involve himself in this.

Therefore, Echo’s primary consideration at this time was his personal safety if he raised this significant matter to the higher-ups.

He pondered for a long time. Suddenly, he smiled and said, “Interesting.”

Looking at Conrad, Echo said, “Do you know what will happen if Fabian does this?”

Conrad said calmly after nodding, "Of course, once the plan is successful, we will make Wall Street hate Jasper. Then, Jasper will inevitably be crushed into fine powder in the first wave of retaliatory attacks from Wall Street."

"No matter how powerful Jasper is, it is impossible to counter the strength of the entirety Wall Street. This power is enough to defeat any country in the world, let alone an individual."

"Well, Wall Street will not be satisfied with a nobody like Jasper. So, what do you think they will do later?"

Upon hearing these words, Echo narrowed his eyes slightly and he was silent for a long time. Suddenly, he laughed, "You've seen this through. The anger of Wall Street will spread to the entire East. We can benefit from such a huge capital confrontation."

"But you must also be aware that Fabian doesn't care about this. He has never considered himself as someone from Somer anyway."

"However, you are a native of Somer's mainland and your family is also residing in the Southeast Province in Somer. Are you willing to turn traitor?"

Conrad said with a blank expression on his face, "Mr. Welch, we're not in World War II 60 or 70 years ago. The global economy is now integrated and all of us must look forward. I'm just standing on the winner's side."

“Interesting, hahaha! Okay, you go back and tell Fabian that once he starts to act, I will follow up immediately. I accept this collaboration!”

Conrad smiled and said, “Now, I will discuss the specific process with Mr. Welch...”

An hour later, Conrad left the headquarters of Softwin Investments with a smile on his face.

While standing by the window of the office in the headquarters of Softwin Investments, Echo had his arms across his chest and a sneer on his face as he watched Conrad’s figure getting into a car after he left the building.

“Hehe, Somer descents. As expected, there is no shortage of such traitors in Somer at any time.”

At this moment, inside the car that was driving towards the airport, the smile on Conrad’s face disappeared and was replaced by a venomous coldness.

Valentine was driving the car after having snuck here. As Conrad’s most trusted, and only, confidant now, Valentine knew everything Conrad had done. Hence, naturally, he also knew the purpose of Conrad’s trip.

He noticed Conrad's icy face and the anger that was suppressed underneath his coldness. Currently, he looked like an iceberg on top of a volcano.

Valentine sighed.

"Mr. Monty, should we tell Jasper about this?"

Unexpectedly, Conrad shook his head and said, "No, at least not now."

Valentine was taken aback and subconsciously said, "But what Fabian is doing now is too vicious. He is willing to bury so many people just to destroy Jasper."

"Jasper is fine. Once the war spreads across the country, who will we become?"

"You're also scared that I'll become a traitor, right?" Conrad asked all of a sudden.

Valentine had a bitter look on his face, and he shook his head. He answered, "I didn't mean that."

“I know you didn’t.” Conrad thought long and hard before continuing, “Val, you don’t understand. I feel so helpless now.”

“I think Fabian’s plan will be succeed.”

Conrad looked at the View of street that was flying past at high speed and said, “Jasper doesn’t realize this. He’s doing too much and he’s too arrogant.”

“It’s fine if he was just starting because his capital was not as huge back then. He attracted so much attention because of his early performance. Coincidentally, this huge thing that shocked the world happened at the most critical time. Everything’s too coincidental.”

“However, back then, nobody would listen to Jasper. What effect would such a small sum of money have?”

“Now, how much money has Jasper earned? I don’t know if that money belongs to him, but at least he’s truly in control of it.”

“It’s such a huge volume and it was enough to attract some real attention. I can promise you that there must be information surrounding him on the desks of the big shots on Wall Street, the Federal Reserve, and even on the desks of the top officials of the United States.”

“Meanwhile, what does the United States lack right now? An opportunity and excuse to shift the people’s attention and grief away from this terrorist attack, and at the same time. to vent their anger.”

“What Fabian is doing right now is handing them this very reason they are looking for.”

“This is also the reason why I am afraid of Fabian’s foresight. Jasper and I underestimated Fabian.”

“At this point, Fabian’s foresight is more far reaching than any of ours.”

“The moment he provides this reason, Wall Street, the Federal Reserve, or even the United States government will easily start this war.”

While listening to Conrad’s voice, Valentine felt his body gradually turning cold. A great terror struck him, and he felt as if he was falling into an frigid cellar.

“M-Mr. Monty, you mean, this capital war cannot be avoided?”

Valentine did not even realize that his voice was shaking.

Conrad answered calmly, "It's meaningless to think too deeply about this. However, what I can be sure of is that if Fabian really does this, then his plan will surely succeed."

"Why can't we tell Jasper as soon as possible?"

Valentine said, aghast.

A cold smile appeared on Conrad's lips. "What's the use of telling him? Can he stop this?"

"Val, I told Echo something just now that is not against my conscience. I am just standing on the side of the winner. If this plan succeeds, Jasper can't win."

Conrad's words made Valentine feel as if he was suffocating.

"What should we do then?"

Conrad said calmly, "We wait."

“For what?”

This was the first time Valentine felt that he was not smart enough. Furthermore, he realized that he could not figure out what Conrad was thinking anymore.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1401

“Wait for an outcome between Jasper and Fabian before we decide.”

Conrad’s words confused Valentine even more.

“Didn’t you say that Fabian’s plan is bound to succeed and Jasper can’t stop it? Then why should we wait? Is Jasper definitely going to die?”

Conrad glanced at Valentine. Then, he reluctantly shook his head and said, “Val, your foresight is still too short. Look further.

“In Fabian’s plan, he used himself as an opening to ignite Wall Street Capital’s anger against Jasper and Somer’s capitalist. This plan cannot be stopped by Jasper and it is impossible to win against Wall Street. However, why didn’t Fabian use it earlier and only take this step now that he’s reached a dead end?”

Valentine frowned and thought deeply.

Without giving Valentine too much time, Conrad replied to his own question, “Because Fabian is a very arrogant person. He understands that if he does this, he would be admitting defeat to Jasper.

“Because when that happens, it doesn’t matter whether Jasper is crushed into fine powder or ashes, does it have anything to do with Fabian? He just opened the floodgates. After he ignited the anger of Wall Street, Fabian won’t be needed anymore.

“So at that time, Jasper will lose to Wall Street, not Fabian.

“When I come here, Fabian is ready to throw down and fight his last battle with Jasper. This is a fight to the death between Jasper and Fabian.”

After hearing Conrad’s words, Valentine suddenly came to a realization.

“I see!”

Conrad chuckled. “Val, people like us have to look at the big picture when we judge someone or do something. I didn’t understand this before, but the more I thought about it, the more I thought it was because I was too naive and young before. The reason I lost to Jasper so many times was that I didn’t have a good enough plan and nothing else.”

Valentine said sincerely, “Mr. Monty, I think you are no worse than anyone now.”

“Really?” Conrad chuckled. He turned his head to look out the window and said flatly, “That’s because I can’t afford to lose.”

“Mr. Monty, I still have a question that I can’t figure out,” Valentine said.

Conrad said lightly, “Go on.”

“Why are we waiting for the outcome of the battle between Jasper and Fabian before telling Jasper?”

“Who said I have to tell Jasper?”

Conrad answered rhetorically and Valentine almost drove the car into the ditch.

“Are we not?”

Conrad said faintly, “It’s not up to me whether to tell him or not, but it’s on the outcome of the battle between Jasper and Fabian.”

“If Fabian won and he didn’t die this time, naturally he won’t use the follow up plan. So, everything will be fine.”

“If Jasper won, Fabian would lose everything. He would go mad and someone like him would not allow other people to defeat him. So, he will execute his plan.”

“When that happens, we’ll be able to sell our information at a good price.”

Conrad narrowed his eyes slightly and said coldly, “So-called feelings do not exist in my eyes. Only interests matter.”

“I’m a businessman, an ordinary businessman who survives between Jasper and Fabian and I can’t even save my future. So do you think I will still be in the mood to talk about feelings?”

“We are not Fabian’s people, nor Jasper’s dog. I can sell this information to anyone as long as the price is right. I think when the time comes, Jasper will be willing to pay a certain price to exchange this information with me.”

“Mr. Laine, bad news.”

Jake's solemn voice came from the speaker of the computer.

"According to our analysis, Fabian's funds should be used up by now but until now, it doesn't seem that his funds are running out. He kept putting in more funds and we can't figure out how much he still has."

Jasper frowned slightly.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1402

While Jake was reporting this, he also watched the fierce battle between the two sides.

Indeed, according to Jake's analysis and Jasper's prediction, Fabian should have spent all the money he had by now.

However, from the perspective of the market, not only Fabian's capital chain was not broken, but on the contrary, it had become fiercer.

"He probably got a sum of money from the sidelines."

Jasper said in a deep voice, “We can’t judge right now because we have too little information. Do what we should do, no matter how many shows of hands Fabian has, it will still be used up.”

Following Jasper’s orders, 7 billion US Dollars began to launch a fierce attack.

This made the already fragile and congested market completely lose its ground and the Dow Jones Index began to fall further.

Once such a downward trend occurred, it would undoubtedly completely defeat the fragile psychological defenses of investors.

Panic selling reappeared.

It drove the Dow Jones Index to fall sharply downward like an avalanche.

“Mr. Atticus, this is bad. I can’t hold it anymore!”

“We are battling nearly the entire market now. Jasper is leading the attack and his capital is enough to influence the market trend.

“What’s more, now that market confidence is fragile, once it looks like it’s going to fall, stockholders will follow the trend. The more they follow the trend, the more it’ll fall, and the more it falls, the more will follow.”

“Mr. Atticus, the market has entered a vicious circle. If we continue like this, no amount of funds will be enough for the market...”

Fabian’s face was as dark as ink as he listened to the stock trader’s anxious report.

“Hold on first!”

Fabian said and picked up his third new phone.

“Have you found them?”

There was an unflustered voice on the other end of the phone.

“Yes. Should we take action now?”

Fabian grinned evilly and said, "Go ahead and kick them out of Harbor City!"

"Roger."

The call ended. In a villa on the outskirts of Harbor City, Jake and his team were busy operating. There were more than 20 people in total.

This was the base camp that Jasper arranged for Jake and the team in Harbor City.

All twenty-odd people lived in this villa and they did everything here. Hence, it was only right if there was someone to take care of their daily lives. No one thought that this villa under the name of the Laws would one day be suddenly broken into.

With a bang, the door was kicked open from the outside.

"Nobody move!"

A large group of men in suits rushed out and they immediately cut off the power and network ports of all computers.

Suddenly, amidst the noise, all the stock traders' computer screens went black.

Jake stood up angrily, and roared, "Who are you guys? Do you know where this is?"

The man in the lead walked up to Jake arrogantly. Then, he slapped Jake and sneered. "Heh, you are not qualified to know who I am. I only know that all of you have to come with me now."

Jake widened his eyes and roared, "F*ck you! You guys are playing dirty!"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1403

"You idiot."

The young man sneered, leaned closer to Jake's face, and said in a low voice, "Yes, I am playing dirty. What are you going to do about it?"

"You want to fight Mr. Atticus? Why don't you look at how many lives you have?"

Jake suddenly felt as if he had plunged into an icy lake. Sure enough, Fabian was driven to desperate action. Since he could not beat the rules, he directly used the underground power in Harbor City to begin to break the rules.

Jake calmed down when he thought this through. He wiped the blood on the corner of his mouth after he was slapped and said coldly, "I'll remember you. When my boss knows about the situation here, be careful because you won't hear the end of this!"

Panic flashed across the young man's eyes, but then there was firmness and rancor. He raised his hand and slapped Jake again. With a slap, Jake's head snapped to one side and his cheek swelled up.

The stock traders under Jake had good relationships with him. Seeing that Jake had been slapped twice in a row, two young men could not control themselves and they wanted to rush forward.

"What? Do you guys want to have a taste too?"

The young man shouted.

"Nobody move!"

Jake quickly stopped them too.

Fabian was obviously ignoring the rules right now. Hence, he started playing dirty.

Jake was not an idiot and he knew this was not the time to be impulsive. It was clear that they could not win against the men. Only idiots would allow someone to beat them up for no reason.

“All of you, stand over there. Just let them do whatever they want.”

Jake looked at the young man coldly and said to his team.

“Hehe, you’re pretty smart” The young man waved his hand and ordered. “Take all of them away.”

“I can cooperate but I have to make a call first,” Jake said suddenly.

The young man said in an icy tone, “Do you think you are qualified to talk terms with me?”

Jake replied emotionlessly, "You're just working for someone and we know this very well. So, you don't need to go overboard in some cases. If not, my boss will not forgive you."

"You have to think clearly. If Fabian is hiring you guys, it means that my boss is strong enough to take him down. When that happens do you think Fabian will save you?"

"Now, you're just Fabian's dog. After a dog goes out to bite someone, the victim will only go to the dog's owner and not the dog. However, if you go overboard in this, then I guess you might have to suffer the consequences."

The young man's face fell.

He wanted to slap Jake again.

However, when he looked at Jake's icy gaze, he gave up. He knew that Jake was right.

He narrowed his eyes and pondered for a few seconds. Then, the young man said frigidly, "I'll only give you one minute."

Jake let out a sigh of relief and immediately called Jasper.

“What happened? Why did the video call drop all of a sudden?” Jasper asked while frowning.

Jake did not have time to explain. He said immediately, “Mr. Laine, Fabian was driven to desperate action. He called a group of random thugs to take us away. We’ll be fine, but you have to immediately get someone to take over for me, Mr. Laine...”

Before Jake could finish, the young man grabbed Jake’s phone and hung up.

“Time’s up,” the young man said coldly.

Jake looked at him coldly after sneering. He said, “Okay, you’re taking us away, right? We’ll go with you.”

“Smart guy.”

Jasper had a dark expression on his face after he put down his phone that was hung up.

He took a deep breath and suppressed the anger and irritation in his heart. He grabbed the office's landline and made a call.

This call was directly connected to Baz, who had just established a firm foothold in Tefa City and was steadily developing his financial investment business.

"This is Jasper Laine."

After Jasper finished speaking, instead of waiting for the surprise and politeness of Baz on the other end of the phone, he said directly, "Assemble the most elite group of your people immediately. There is a very important task to be handed over to you temporarily. Leave the other businesses aside for now."

Although Baz was confused, he understood the seriousness of the matter from Jasper's tone and words. He immediately replied, "I'll be ready in ten minutes."

"Very good." Jasper was very pleased. At the critical moment, Baz did not let him down.

In fact, when something happened on Jake's side, all Jasper could use now is Baz and the team he just formed, otherwise he would have to do this himself.

However, the number of funds was too large and he would need to operate more than 10 accounts at the same time. He was not an octopus and it was impossible for one person to do the work of an entire team.

“In 10 minutes, I will start a video call conference with you.”

After speaking, Jasper hung up the phone. Then, he called Henry, who was playing the game happily.

“What? I’m cutting through the whole server alone. Why did you get me here in such a hurry?” Henry asked in dissatisfaction.

“My team in Harbor City was abducted by Fabian.”

Jasper told Henry what happened at Jake’s side with a dark expression on his face.

Jake and his team had always been very loyal to Jasper and they were extremely good. Hence, according to reasons and their relationship, it would be impossible for Jasper to abandon them.

However, Harbor City was beyond reach. The only person Jasper could use now was Henry.

When Henry heard this, he looked as if he was a stick of dynamite that had been ignored.

“Damn it to hell! That b*tch Fabian even knows how to play dirty? Damn, didn’t you teach him a lesson in the futures market and made the Atticus family more docile?”

“That’s not the same.”

Jasper shook his head and explained. “He used the Atticus family’s power to cause trouble for the entertainment group, so my counterattack hit the Atticus family directly. The Atticus family has already compromised once.

“This time, Fabian used his contacts to play dirty. So, we can only deal with him, not the entire Atticus family, otherwise, it will cause a backlash from the entire Atticus family.”

“So what? F*ck it, does he think the Laws are pushovers?” Henry said while feeling pissed.

“You can help me with this matter.” Jasper looked at Henry and said seriously.

Henry froze for a moment and said seriously, “Tell me. What do you need me to do?”

Jasper chuckled and asked ruminatively, “Do you have any friends in Harbor City that ordinary people cannot afford to offend?”

Henry’s eyes lit up and he said quickly, “I don’t have a lot but I do have a lot of friends. What do you need me to do exactly? Tell me and I’ll do it now.”

“Okay, I’ll tell you. Note this down. I don’t have much time and I only have 10 minutes at most... I only have 8 minutes now. Remember this.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1404

“Not just your friends, but the most important thing is that you have to personally go there in person. I will take you there by my plane so you can arrive in the shortest time. Then, cause as big of a scene as you can. It’s fine if you make such a fuss that the sky falls.”

Jasper’s words excited Henry completely.

“Damn, how long has it been? I finally waited for such an opportunity. Tell me what you want me to do, I can’t wait any longer.”

Causing trouble was Young Master Law’s talent. He had never been afraid of it.

“You should...”

Eight minutes later, Henry slipped out of Jasper’s office with a smirk. Then he ran all the way down the office building. Downstairs, Julian was already waiting in his car. After Henry got in the car, the car headed straight to the airport.

Henry needed to take Jasper’s Gulfstream plane to get to Harbor City in the shortest time.

Still, that was nothing. As soon as he got in the car, Henry had already started to call people frantically.

At this time, Jasper had already started the video connection with Baz.

At the same time, Jasper sent the account numbers and transaction passwords of more than a dozen accounts to Baz.

“Ask your team to immediately log in to these numbers in batches. The last account is the main account and you’ll be logging into that one.”

Baz, who was called up urgently, immediately began to operate according to Jasper's orders. Baz logged into the foreign market trading software proficiently. When the account was successfully logged in, Baz suddenly widened his eyes when he saw the total amount of funds held in the position.

He was not the only one. Although the other stock traders only saw the accounts they operated and could not see the main accounts, the terrifying numbers on the accounts they were assigned to have caused them to make a series of exclamations.

How many people who did financial transactions in the mainland had seen such terrifying numbers before?

"H-how much are there?"

Baz could only feel his scalp turning numb. A total of 7 billion US Dollars in total holdings.

Even the stock trading simulation software did not have so many numbers.

Furthermore, it was in f*cking US Dollars!

If it was converted into Somer Dollars, 56 billion!

It would not be too hard to drown their entire group of people with that much money.

Baz felt his heart almost jumping out of his chest. Then there was incomparable excitement. As someone in the financial industry, which stock trader did not want to easily have billions of dollars at their disposal?

Even if it did not belong to Baz, it would be enough to experience it once in a lifetime. The number of funds at this moment was far beyond his imagination. Before this, Baz's biggest dream was to conduct a 1 billion capital trade.

Now, he directly doubled his dream 56 times.

"The account you see now is the largest short seller account in the entire United States on the Dow Jones Index," Jasper said lightly.

"M-Mr. Laine, you... what on earth did you do..." Baz stammered.

After Jasper waved his hand, he said, "I will explain this to you later. Now, immediately track the data of the following accounts."

Jasper posted Fabian's account that Jake had investigated before.

“The opponent’s name is Fabian Attic us. Ten minutes ago, we suddenly disconnected so that we couldn’t follow up with the operations. Now report to me how the situation is.”

Baz suppressed his excitement and immediately asked his team to analyze the data.

However, their efficiency was not comparable to Jake’s team.

After waiting for several minutes and still not getting the report, Jasper sighed.

Sure enough, Baz and the team still needed a lot of training.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1405

Now that they were operating such a large external fund, it was really beyond the scope of their ability.

Baz obviously also understood that Jasper was examining their abilities. He was very anxious and he kept urging his team. Finally, they got the result.

“Mr. Laine, we have the data. Within the last 20 minutes, all of our accounts could not be actively managed. The Dow Jones Index continued to fall, but our profits have begun to shrink. The account of Fabian, our opponent, has been constantly trading, causing us to lose out quite a lot.

“We predict that we’ve lost 300 million US Dollars in these 20 minutes!”

Baz’s scalp was tingling.

Losing 300 million US Dollars in 20 minutes, which was 1.8 billion Somer Dollars.

If this happened in the country, it would be enough to directly bankrupt a leading enterprise in the province. However, right here, it only caused a small wave in a 20 minutes fierce battle.

“Integrate the transaction data of each sub-account and prepare to fight back,” Jasper said blankly.

“Fight back!?” Baz was surprised.

Were they going to fight for real now?

Neither he nor his team was ready yet.

“Baz, do what I said!” Jasper was dissatisfied.

“Financial transactions are the same as the battlefield. It even requires a higher efficiency in the implementation of orders. Because of the delays, the loss might accumulate into tens of millions of dollars!”

“Yes!” Baz’s heart beat wildly and he roared.

This time, Jasper did not hold back.

Fabian’s crazy counterattack and rule-breaking made him very angry. However, at the same time, he also saw the hope of victory.

Had Fabian not been driven to a dead end, he would not have made such a choice.

All funds were fully mobilized and they began to launch the most ferocious attack on all of Fabian’s funds at any cost.

“26 minutes. Just delay them for 26 minutes!”

Harbor City. Fabian looked at the data displayed on the computer with a gloomy expression. He was feeling unconvinced.

He really underestimated Jasper.

Initially, Fabian thought he would be able to disconnect Jasper for at least 3 hours but the actual effect was less than 30 minutes.

“Mr. Atticus, it’s different.” Suddenly, one of Fabian’s subordinates raised his head and said.

“Although Jasper’s attack is fierce and he is very determined, we can clearly feel that the pressure is much less. This group of traders has very little experience, and they’re making mistakes everywhere.”

“It seems that we will have a chance in this situation.”

After a few days, Fabian finally heard some good news.

“Very good. It seems that Jasper is also pushing someone to do something way beyond their ability. Okay, let’s fight to our deaths!”

Fabian’s eyes shone maniacally.

“Put in all the reserve funds and start spreading the news. Tell them that the Federal Reserve intends to directly fund a bailout and mess up the market completely. This time, I want Jasper to vomit blood!”

A storm was brewing in the capitalist market. Several days had passed since the attack, but the impact was far from over.

At least in the United State’s capital market, not only did it not calm down, but it became even more chaotic. The battle between the bears and the bulls vaguely formed two big groups headed by Jasper and Fabian.

The two groups had invested more than tens of billions of US Dollars in total, and they were driving their own follow up funds to start frantically fighting each other. The volume directly broke the record.

Everyone was paying attention to the index trend of the Dow Jones market. They knew that there would be a winner between these two maniacs soon.

In this stalemate, huge amounts of funds were evaporating and being consumed every minute and every second.

Just when countless people were clutching at their hearts to observe the situation, a Gulfstream plane landed at Harbor City Airport.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1406

Hong Kong International Airport.

Henry Law wore a trench coat with sunglasses. As he got off the plane, he let out a yawn and stretched languidly.

There were already two groups of people waiting on the tarmac.

Looking down at those people below, Henry was reminded of Jasper's orders before he left. The thought of that made him curve the corners of his mouth, giving out a gleeful expression.

Coming down from the escalator, a few young people dressed in luxurious clothing that exuded the arrogance of a second-generation villain in novels, came and greeted with a smile.

“Brother Henry, the brothers are all here, so let's talk about it first. This time you said you wanted to have some fun with your brothers. It's the middle of the night now. I even abandoned that young model at the bed to come for this. No matter what, if this isn't major and exciting, I won't listen to your deceiving words next time.”

Henry squinted at the young man and said, "If the fun isn't big and exciting enough, why would I call up you bunch of useless trash who can do nothing except cause trouble?"

"Each one of you, wait here. Let me have a chat with Charlie."

As he was talking, Henry left the group of young men who were bursting into peals of laughter and walked over to the other side.

There were only two black-suited bodyguards and an old man with gray hair standing beside the car. Surprisingly, the car was the Rolls Royce assigned to Zachary Law, head of the Law clan.

Everyone in Hong Kong knew that.

"Uncle Zhao, I haven't seen you in a few days and you already have more gray hair."

Henry smiled and greeted the old man who had his hands folded and placed in front of his lower abdomen.

The old man gave a kind smile and more his wrinkles could be seen.

He looked at Henry with indelible respect in his affection and said, “Young Master, don’t make a joke out of me. A man of my age, all my hair turned gray ten years ago.”

Henry casually held onto Charlie’s shoulders and told him, “Uncle, you were supposed to retire early but you wouldn’t listen.”

“Your son, grandson, daughter-in-law, granddaughter-in-law, so many of them are working for the Law clan. There’s no need for you to drag your old bones and work hard anymore. Outsiders will look at this and think that we’re treating you harshly.”

Charlie chuckled and said, “Alright then. I shall report to the old master and retire in a few years.”

“Now that’s what I’m talking about Look at how smart you are. My old man just started taking over a business but he immediately let go of the work to retire. Looking back, you were always fishing and having tea sessions with my grandpa. Wasn’t that great?”

Henry had quite a casual attitude toward this old man Charlie, but it was also this casualness that gained him a special status in the Law clan.

The old man seemed to just be a servant of the Law clan, but when you know him, barely anyone in the entire city dared to mess with him as he walked out of the door.

Let alone Henry Law. He was practically raised by Charlie.

The old master had bombs wrapped around his waist and a grenade strapped under his belt while carrying a gun back in the days. It was even during that era of flaming war when Charlie followed the old master.

For decades, almost every path the old master walked led to death, and only Charlie remained.

Henry was extremely naughty when he was a child. He once beat up the ship king's grandson until he was hospitalized. Back then Charlie was so furious that he almost killed Henry.

The old master was not home at the time. It was Charlie who stood before Henry and settled everything. Zachary did not make a mistake trusting Charlie.

It can be seen how high of a status Charlie held in the Law family.

It was not about how great and powerful the old man was, it was about how he was by the old master's side for all his life. The family had a lot of companies under them.

Charlie did not have a single job. He was merely an ordinary servant in the Law clan's household. He was not even paid any type of salary. Even so, each one of Charlie's descendants, young and old, lived a comfortable life and attended elite schools with all expenses borne by the Law family.

With such treatment, they were no different from the actual blood-related members of the Law family.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1407

Moreover, the Law clan showed much respect to old man Charlie who shielded the old master from bullets several times.

Henry chuckled, leaned toward Charlie's head, and said, "Uncle Zhao, where's my old man?"

Charlie smiled and replied, "Mr. Law has gone to Auma City. It will be a few days until he's back."

Henry rubbed his chin and said, "This is not going to be easy. My old man is quite sensitive, you know that. If I made this task too big of a deal, he'd come for rue. What would I do then?"

Charlie was able to read Henry's thoughts at a glance and said, "But the old master is back."

Henry's eyes lit up and his face was full of surprise. "Grandpa is back?"

"The old master arrived not long ago and he's resting at the courtyard. He told me to let you know that you don't have to go and see him. Just do what you're required to."

Charlie gestured to the Law clan's exclusive car next to him and said, "The old master is in charge. This car was brought over here, so if you need it, it is at your disposal for the next few days."

Those words immediately gave Henry great confidence. It was not just a normal car.

Even if it was a Rolls Royce, it was not that huge of a deal here considering it was Hong Kong, a place densely filled with the wealthy. However, the Rolls Royce was no ordinary car. It was a representation of the Law clan's status and symbolized their authority and reputation. It can be considered as such.

Whenever Henry headed out, everyone would know that he was the young master of the Law clan and their powerful heir. Truth be told he was merely a successor.

However, if Henry rode in the car, he would be a representative for most of the Law clan. He was the Law clan.

“Damn, grandpa sure is supportive. Unlike my dad who’s always holding everything back. He doesn’t exhibit how prestigious our Law clan is, and he’s always afraid of doing little things worrying it’ll affect this or that. So not domineering.”

Upon hearing this rant, Charlie patted Henry lightly on his shoulder and said, “Don’t say that about Mr. Law. He’s got more things on his mind than you.”

Henry snickered while he looked at the majestic black Rolls Royce, thought for a moment, and said, “Forget it, Uncle Zhao. You can take the car back first. As long as grandpa is around, there’s no need for the car.”

“Besides, I’m going out to settle these things on my behalf. There’s no need for me to invoke the level of the Law clan.”

“Well, I can’t oppose that. I’ll tell the old master right away.”

Henry’s words made Charlie smile. There was comfort in his smile.

“Young Master, you’ve grown a lot.”

As someone who had watched Henry grow up since he was a child, Charlie knew him all too well.

The old Henry would never let go of an opportunity like that to show off his prestige. Instead, he now knew how to weigh out the pros and cons.

At the same time, Charlie was also mourning for the other second generations in Harbor City.

An arrogant and boastful second-generation was not as terrible as a second-generation that was arrogant yet smart. This was not an easy thing to take on.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1408

“Can a person still be like a child and not know anything? I have to say I know quite a lot now.”

Henry said straightforwardly.

He subtly skipped mentioning the many things that Jasper told him before he came here, including the point made here.

Charlie gave a little smile and said, “Well then, young master, you should settle your business. I will head back first.”

“All right, Uncle Zhao. Do be careful. Walking too much is no good for you at this age. Take it easy on your way back”, Henry said with a smile.

Charlie bowed slightly to Henry, thanked him, and turned to get into the car.

Of course not in the exclusive Rolls Royce, but in one of the other cars that followed behind. No matter how high of a status Charlie possessed in the eyes of the Law clan, it was still impossible for him to ride in it alone.

The moment the motorcade drifted off, Henry had his hands put in his pants pockets and subconsciously put a cigarette in his mouth. With the cigarette dangling out of his mouth and his hands in the pockets, Henry squinted as he sauntered toward the group of young men.

“I have obtained the imperial decree from the old man in my family. Now it’s up to you guys whether you have the guts for it.”

Henry’s words stunned them.

“Brother Henry, what’s all this about? Even your old man was brought out? Are you going to head to the Harbor City government?”

The question made Henry lift his hand and struck the back of the man’s head. He cursed at him and said, “You pinhead! Do you think I’ve gone crazy enough to go to the Harbor City government? If I were to do that, my old man is gonna hang me somewhere and cut me into pieces. Let alone the others.”

These young people were the best of the best of the second-generation in Harbor City.

Although they did not have a status regarded as prestigious as the Law clan, they were the first few lines of descendants to some huge family names.

Besides, the Law clan had principles of family interests tied deeply among them. The bonds of family interests between them existed and relationships between the elders were naturally mutual. The situation was similar for the later generations where Henry was born in. Everyone generally was on good terms.

Many usually followed behind Henry’s footsteps. They caused trouble every day, always bullying and beating others. They were certainly a notorious bunch.

After Henry started working for Jasper, the notorious gang became extremely idle to a point where they got dragged by Henry to the United Legends and made a massive perpetual income for Jasper.

“Come on, Brother Henry, just tell us about it. Whatever it is, your old man approved of it. Surely there is nothing wrong with it. There’s no need to worry about no one supporting us if we get into trouble.”

The young man who was slapped by Henry said as he grinned.

Even though he was smiling in Henry’s face and doing fine after he got struck hard behind the head, everyone out there knew that Alex Jean, the young master of the Jean clan, was famous for his violence in Harbor City.

There was once because of a disrespect directed toward him, Alex beat the person up badly until he was admitted to the intensive care unit. The Jean family had to go to huge lengths to settle this case.

“Come here, my brothers. I’ll tell you what’s going on first, and what we’re going to do later.” Henry scanned across the group as he announced.

When everyone gathered around, Henry spoke, “First of all, let’s go scout some people.”

Henry had barely uttered the words and Alex quickly exclaimed, “Brother Henry, you said this wasn’t a big deal, but to scout for people? Are we gonna do that at Stanley Prison?”

As Alex was talking, a tall and burly man among these people immediately turned to leave and opened a car door and he took a massive knife out of there.

His height was over 6 foot 2 which made him look like a majestic gorilla. The size of his body put him extraordinarily out of place compared to the others.

“Stupid!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1409

Henry gave Alex a cold stare.

At that moment, a sense of superiority of intelligence emerged spontaneously.

These later-generation descendants were all stupid and did not have brains.

Henry came to realize for a moment that he was similar to them too. He felt somewhat ashamed.

“Howard, put that knife down.”

Henry sighed and he felt it was now more difficult to lead this younger brother.

Howard Branson was the worst person to stir up things with.

Alex was only bad-tempered and at least his family was doing serious legitimate businesses.

Howard, however, came from a family background of gangsters where his father, Morrie Branson, was their original gang leader. He stepped into Harbor City becoming the top ruthless man in the streets.

After the Handover, they were initially the first groups of people who were targeted to be wiped out. Fortunately, Morrie was smart enough to start anew and dived back into legal businesses two years before it happened.

Morrie later made a discreet deal with Zachary behind closed doors which needed a few discussions with the mainland. The deal turned him into a businessman who provided public safety to society.

However, no matter how much they tried to flip things around, their dark roots were still present.

Howard was the best fighter in the whole of Harbor City and was also the worst person to talk things out with. Perhaps it was because of their family matters or fate that made him and Henry have the best connection with each other. He was always the one ready to charge with a knife and shed blood for Henry.

Howard glanced at Henry, nodded, and quietly placed the knife back into the car.

“Damn it, guys, don’t interrupt me. My brother-in-law has a few important people under him. Now they’ve been taken by some people of dubious backgrounds.”

“We’ll go get him today. I don’t even care if God came down from heaven to stop us.”

“Not just that. We have to stir things up there to the best that we could. These people are just simply looking for trouble when they forcibly seized those who were helping to search for the items. They surely won’t dare to fight us head-on.”

“But speaking of it, these are Fabian’s people. The real reason we’re heading there today is to have a showdown with Fabian.”

Henry had not even finished his point and these men were already showing a change of mood in their facial expressions.

Despite Howard maintaining a straight face, Alex frowned with a solemn look.

Fabian was always like a huge mountain holding down this younger generation of Harbor City's sons.

They were more than their usual arrogant selves. The more arrogant a generation was, the more obvious that they were not the people for anyone to mess with.

Comparatively, Fabian was even more capable than them. Someone like him was enough to make everyone scoot and hide their balls away.

This second- generation had always been as one preying on the weak but feared the strong.

Between these men, everyone denied the fact that they were cowardly. Without the four major clans' background history, it was hard for them to even protect their own lives, not to mention provoking Fabian.

When he noticed their troubled faces, Henry sneered and said, "We're all friends here and we know each other through and through. Don't say I forced y'all into this."

“Think through this before you guys get on with it. After all, we’re fighting Fabian this time. If any of you don’t voice out your concerns or when things get out of hand later, it’s not gonna look pretty if our families get affected.”

“That’s why I’m giving you guys the chance to think about it. Whoever wants to back out, now’s the time. We would still be friends, I won’t bother about it, but once we’re out there and you’re not committed to it, don’t blame me for turning my back on you.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1410

“Bro... Brother Henry, I think I might have to discuss this matter with my family first.”

All these young men standing in front of Henry lowered their heads and murmured underneath their breaths. Saying this, the man did not even dare look at the eyes of the other people, and he was even more afraid to look at Henry’s expression. He was even prepared to get severely beaten up.

Surprisingly, their expectation of Henry’s thunderous cursing rage did not happen. Instead, he talked calmly and peacefully.

“Discuss? You’re right. This is such a huge matter, too big to even make your own decisions. It’s only right that you go home and talk it out with your mommy and daddy!”

Henry smiled at him and caringly said, "You better go back and discuss this right away. What's wrong? Haven't started the car? You need me to call you a ride?"

A thrill came into the man's body and his face was wild with joy.

He instantly shook his head and said, "It's fine, Brother Henry, it's fine. I drove here myself, I can go back myself too."

"Well, then. I won't hold you any longer. You can leave first, we'll have a drink some other day."

"Yes, yes, yes. Thank you, Brother Henry. Let me be the host the next time we drink."

This young man thanked Henry a million times and scurried on his way.

Following the sound of the roaring engine from the car, he disappeared from the tarmac along with the smoke. With his leadership and seeing how Henry did not even get furious, a handful of them started pulling out one by one.

At this point, their excuses were absolutely pointless, even saying that their girlfriends were about to go into labor was an acceptable reason. They gave all sorts of excuses.

Nobody cared if your reason was completely valid. Henry was convinced all the way. He did not hold back anyone who voiced out to retreat but instead sent each of them off.

It was up until the end where everyone was gone except for the two who have left behind: Howard the expressionless one and Alex the conflicted one.

The initial seven people were now left with only two. Nevertheless, Henry was not angry. He turned toward Alex.

“Hey there, Mr. Jean. You’re not leaving?”

“Why do you look so constipated with all that confliction in you? If you wanna leave, you can. They all left. Losing you wouldn’t be of much difference.”

Up on hearing this, Alex spat on the ground, gritted his teeth, and shouted, “Damn it! If I must die then it’s meant to be. I’m not scared of anything. I’m doing it!”

Those words had Howard take a good look at Alex, he grinned at his fierceness and muttered, “Not bad. He’s a man.”

Alex put on a sour face and said, “Come on, that’s Fabian we’re talking about. Whatever it takes, I’m ready to put my life on the line for this fight.”

Henry grinned and put his arms around Howard and Alex's shoulders, only to realize his height was a bit of a self insult to Li Wenwu who was 6 feet tall and famous for this gesture. He then let go of them.

"Those who left are unfortunate. What's wrong with Fabian? Would I abandon you guys to him if you followed me on this task? I doubt he'd kill me if he could."

Henry let out a sinister laugh as he said, "My old man is already in Harbor City. Would Fabian dare do anything to me?"

Alex forced out a wry smile as he spoke, "Brother Henry, Fabian's old man is also in Harbor City."

"His old man? Would his dad dare speak loudly in front of my grandpa?" Henry said resoundingly with a stare.

Alex's eyes widened and exclaimed, "Brother Henry, the old man you're referring to is the Old Master Law and not your dad?"

"Damn, I was talking about my grandpa all along."

Henry laughed.

Alex was immediately relieved. He smiled comfortably and said, "If the Old Master Law gave his approval to this matter then surely we're in safe hands."

After saying this, Alex smirked and spoke, "I knew those bunch of idiots weren't one with us, I could see it in them. They won't even know how to regret this after walking away like that."

Alex was indeed speaking some truth in that. The second-generation descendants were particularly haggling over every penny.

'If you honor me today, I will surely repay you tomorrow!'

Life at The Top – Chapter 1411

'However, if you were the one who disrespected me first, don't blame me for knocking you down, stepping on you, and spitting on your face.'

These children of wealthy families were originally Henry's good buddies. However, after trying out this touchstone tonight, great, their closeness was exposed immediately.

In Harbor City, Fabian was powerful and everyone was afraid of him. However, these children of wealthy families were the only ones who were afraid of him.

After all, everyone had elders. Therefore, Fabian would always to consider something an elder said. After all, the Atticus family was not invincible.

If their level was as sky-high as Old Master Law, then Fabian would really be rather insignificant. These descendants would also need to read the room before causing any trouble.

If they provoked someone powerful, not only would they get slapped across the face, they might get punished by their parents after they went home. However, if it was something the parents accepted tacitly, then it did not matter what you did, they would shoulder the punishment with you.

These were two drastically different outcomes.

This time, the person who ran away had lost the chance to join Henry. Unfortunately, he would never get such an opportunity ever again. One could imagine that when Henry took over in the future, Alex and Howard would become his closest associates.

“That’s their choice, so I can’t say anything, but I’ll remember all of them,” Henry smirked.

He said he would not split hairs about this, but was that really possible?

Who else in Harbor City did not know that Mr. Law was the pettiest person alive—a person who liked to bicker about the smallest things?

He would have all the time in the world to teach them lessons in the future.

“Alright, it’s about time. Let’s go and get them.”

Henry opened the car door as he said that. The car rumbled for a while before heading straight to the place where Jake was trapped.

The sky was already dark and there was no more traffic on the road.

Inside a dimly lit house, Jake was sitting on a chair as he glanced at the cameras around him. He looked exhausted and numb.

It had been six hours since he was brought here.

During these six hours, a group of people took turns to pressure him. Their goal was to make him admit to doing something illegal.

This way, they would have evidence to report and take action against Jake. This would in turn be a devastating blow to Jasper.

“As I said, all my actions are reasonable and legal. There are records and approvals for everything. There is no irregularity throughout my operations.”

Even though his voice was weak, his tone was very firm.

“Don’t try to use these dirty tricks to make me succumb!”

A man in a suit opposite Jake scoffed coldly. He had a cup of hot coffee in his hand and he lifted his hand to splash the boiling hot coffee on Jake's face.

The hot liquid caused Jake to scream in agony.

The young man grabbed Jake's hair and said sinisterly, "Jake, don't think we won't have a way to make you talk just because you're stubborn. You will only suffer more by keeping up this attitude."

"We're not from the police department, so we don't have to follow the rules regarding interrogation and torture. We have all kinds of ways to make you suffer."

Jake stared coldly at the young man. He opened his mouth and the coffee flowed into his mouth after trickling down his dry lips. Then, he spat some saliva that was mixed with coffee onto the man's face.

"Come at me if you have the balls!"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1412

"F *ck you!"

The young man who was spat on flew into a rage. He lifted his hand and punched Jake in the face. Immediately, Jake fell to the ground whilst still tied to the chair.

Then, Jake struggled to get up from the ground. He touched his swollen and red cheek with his tongue and then spat out some saliva that was mixed with blood before staring coldly at the young man.

“Kill me if you have the guts.”

It felt as if the young man was insulted as he faced Jake’s smirk. Hence, he lifted his leg to kick Jake’s head. If he managed to kick Jake, Jake would be seriously injured.

However, the young man was stopped and pulled away by his colleague.

“Don’t be so impulsive. If we kill him, you and I will be in trouble.”

The colleague’s intervention soothed the young man’s anger.

The young man pointed at Jake and said with a scoff, “Don’t be so f*cking pleased with yourself!”

“There is all the time in the world later. I promise that if you don’t cooperate with us, the remaining time will be the most torturous period of your life. You will never forget this for the rest of your life.”

Jake looked at him frigidly and did not say anything.

The young man pulled the chair back and sat down. Then, he slammed his hand down the table and roared, “Jake Cullen, tell us!”

“Did someone tell you to perform illegal financial transactions abroad? Do you know that such a huge amount is enough to make you spend the rest of your life behind bars?”

Jake chuckled coldly and said, “I told you, everything I did was legal. I have records of all the procedures so the illegal transaction you mentioned doesn’t exist.”

Now, the young man’s colleague came out to act as the good cop. He lifted Jake’s chair and helped him sit properly. He even placed a lit cigarette next to Jake’s lips.

“Jake, you have to know that you’re just working for someone else. Why are you holding on for him?”

“If cooperate with us, everything can be discussed. I promise you won’t need to suffer anymore and you’ll be escorted out of here by us comfortably. Why don’t you consider our offer?”

Jake took a drag of the cigarette with no trace of politeness and exhaled the smoke. Then, he scoffed, “Huh? You’re using a good cop on me after the bad cop tactic failed?”

“I’m still going to tell you the same thing. Everything I did was legal. Not only are you falsely imprisoning me, you even planted false evidence against me to claim that I broke the law.”

“Aren’t you scared that they’ll settle the score with you after this?”

“When you’re not useful anymore, do you think Fabian will protect you?”

Jake’s words caused their faces to fall.

“You were given a choice whether to do it the easy way or the hard way, but it looks like we have to do it the hard way!”

The young man who beat Jake up stood up. His eyes were cold and savage.

Jake was fearless. He replied calmly, "I'll still tell you the same thing. Come at me if you have the balls."

"Damn you to hell!"

The young man was livid. He lifted the chair to throw it at Jake.

At this critical moment, some noises came from outside. Then, there was a loud crash and the door was kicked open from outside. The sudden change caused the three men in the house to become startled.

The young man with the chair turned his head to look at the subconsciously. Unfortunately, he saw Henry striding in alongside Alex and Howard. Of course, he did not know these three top young masters from Harbor City.

"Who are you people? How dare you barge in here?" The young man roared.

Henry grinned and walked leisurely to the young man with his hands in his pockets. Then, he tilted his head and smiled.

"Oh, it's been such a long time since someone talked to me like that. I kind of miss this."

After he finished saying that with a grin, Henry's face instantly darkened. Then, he lifted his hand to slap the young man across the face.

Slap!

The slap was powerful, and it made let out a crisp sound.

The young man stumbled backward after getting slapped.

Henry was not forgiving now that he was the dominant one. He grabbed the chair in the young man's hand and slammed it down on the latter.

"You son of a b*tch, where in Harbor City can I not enter? Who the f*ck do you think you are? How dare you yell at me like this? Do you know who the Laws are?"

As Henry said that, he repeatedly lifted the chair before slamming it down on the young man.

Slam slam slam!

The chair made a muffled sound when it hit the young man. With a final thud, the chair broke into pieces.

The man lied on the ground while struggling to breathe.

“The Laws?”

Everyone was stunned. Henry started hitting him out of the blue and caught everyone off guard. When they heard ‘the Laws’, everyone in the house shuddered. Who else had this grandeur and this hedonistic vigor? One could figure it out with half a brain.

One of them saw that their partner was now unconscious after being beaten up by Henry. The pool of blood on the floor caused his pupils to contract and he started screaming in terror.

Henry threw away the chair that was now only a piece of wood now in his hand. He clapped his hand and stuck out his lips to Howard.

Howard chuckled and lifted the collar of the poor remaining guy. Then, with a roar, he tensed his arms that were as thick as a normal person’s thighs. With that, he lifted the man and threw him out the door while the poor guy screamed in terror.

Immediately, the human canon flew out and accurately hit the group of people who had run over. They were now in a pitiful state, and the scene looked extremely lively and sorry.

On the side, Alex swallowed his saliva as he fidgeted nervously. Even so, he looked more excited than anxious.

He walked to the door and stood in front of the people who were knocked down just when they were about to barge in. Then, he leaned against the doorframe and giggled, "I'm going to stand here and see which of you fools dare to take a step forward. I'll applaud any one of you who dares to get too close for having balls of steel, then I'll kill your whole family as a reward."

At this moment, Henry had walked in front of Jake. They had met before, so Jake knew Henry. However, how would Henry remember a nobody like Jake?

"Are you Jake Cullen?" Henry asked.

Jake said emotionally, "Mr. Law, it's me. Did Mr. Laine ask you to come?"

Henry chuckled and said, "That's right. Your wounds..."

“I’m fine. I was bitten by some dogs,” Jake said to raise his spirits.

“I knew Mr. Laine wouldn’t leave me to die.”

“Nonsense! I came here on his private plane. He’s shown you so much respect.”

Henry grinned and said, “If you’re fine, hold on for a little longer. I’ll settle this before sending you to the hospital.”

“Okay, Mr. Law. I want to watch how you teach these sons of b*tches a lesson.”

“Watch properly.” Henry laughed while feeling pleased with himself.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1413

While they were talking, the leader came over as well.

Matt Carlton was the leader of this gang. His family dabbled in some shady business and Fabian had contacted him this time to rough Jake up.

It was just some minor business, so Matt thought it would be an easy job that would earn him Fabian's respect. This reward would be truly valuable. However, he gradually realized that something was not right.

That guy named Jake Cullen was too tough. They were not able to make him say a word no matter what methods they used.

This was especially true when he learned that Fabian had a billion US Dollars in the account this man controlled. When he heard this, Matt understood that he had become involved in a matter that he could not afford to screw up.

Would a person that was able to fight with Fabian and even force Fabian to use dishonorable tricks because he was at a dead-end be so easy to handle?

While Matt was busy regretting his carelessness, the news his men delivered to him almost caused him to piss his pants.

Henry Law was here?!

Matt quickly hurried over. When he saw Alex and Howard at the door, his heart skipped a beat.

He was very familiar with these two young masters who were infamous in the upper-class circle in Harbor City.

“M-Mr. Law?” Matt looked at Henry, who was standing amongst the crowd, and said.

Henry peered at Matt and asked lazily, “Not bad. You know me?”

Matt quickly plastered a smile on his face and said, “Who doesn’t know you, Mr. Law? Mr. Law, is there a misunderstanding?”

“No!”

Henry pointed at the people who were beaten badly behind Matt and also at the young man who was lying in a puddle of blood. He said, “I beat up your men and that dead dog lying over there.”

“You have cameras here, right? So many people saw me beating them up as well, so how can this be a misunderstanding?”

Henry’s words caused Matt’s face to turn as unpleasant as if he had just eaten dog excrement. He realized this matter was not as simple as it first appeared. Also, Henry definitely came here because he was confident that he had support.

Innocent people would get into trouble on account of rich people's business.

Matt sighed and waved his hand to ask his men to back off. Then, he smiled bitterly at Henry. "Mr. Law, we are jus nobodies do not have the balls to interfere in the business of a person like you."

"I can only say that I have my own hardships as well."

Henry replied lazily, "What do I have to do with your hardship?"

As he said that, Henry's finger almost touched Matt's nose as he pointed at him. He scolded, "If you know that you're a nobody, then why the f*ck do you have the balls to interfere in this?! Now that you're in this, you have to be prepared to pay the price. If not, do you think I won't split hairs with you just because you're a nobody after you've gone around acting like a poser?"

"Are you f*cking stupid? Recently, I've been busy on the mainland and I didn't have the time to handle business in Harbor City. Did all of you forget that I am petty, vengeful, and love to splits hair? Huh?"

The corners of Matt's lips twitched after he was scolded by Henry while Henry pointed at his nose. He suppressed the anger in his heart and said, "Mr. Law, I don't dare to lie to you. Mr. Atticus asked us to do this, so what choice did I have?"

“What does your limited choices have to do with me?”

Henry tilted his head and scolded.

“Since you’ve done this and I am also here, let’s just go all the way. Do you want to cuff me too?”

Matt quickly replied in embarrassment, “I would never dare to do such a thing.”

“Do you not dare to, or do you not want to?” Henry asked with a smirk.

Matt said through gritted teeth, “Mr. Law, please don’t split hairs with a nobody like me. What could I do after Mr. Atticus requested for me to do this?”

“Alright, since you want to kiss that Atticus guy’s *ss so much, I don’t want to bother with you anymore. Now that I’m here, can I take my man away?”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1414

Matt thought about it. Now that he had completely offended Henry, if he still allowed Henry to leave with Jake, his respect from his subordinates would vanish. Most importantly, he would also offend Fabian.

He would offend both sides, which would be the stupidest thing in the world. So, Matt made up his mind quickly.

“Mr. Law, do you think you can talk to Mr. Atticus? Ask for his permission and if he nods, I’ll definitely be okay with letting him go immediately.”

Henry stared at Matt coldly and did not say anything. However, this cold gaze caused Matt to become extremely anxious.

Suddenly, Henry laughed. Even though he was laughing, his eyes were growing colder and colder.

“Oh, I get it. If Atticus doesn’t nod his head, I won’t be able to take Jake away, huh?”

Henry seemed to be throwing a tantrum, but he was satisfied.

Jasper asked him to come to cause a commotion, and even his grandpa approved of this. One of the reasons he came today was to save Jake, but that was not his only objective.

Most importantly, he had to cause a huge commotion. If Matt admitted defeat and let him take Jake away, then he would not be able to carry out his performance. However, this was good. This idiot was very cooperative. In order to reward this idiot, Henry slapped him across the face.

Slap!

This slap caused Matt to spin two and a half times on the spot. Finally, he fell to the ground on his bottom.

“Who do you f*cking think you are, you son of a b*tch? How dare you request that I ask Atticus for permission? Even if someone were to call him, it’d be you asking Atticus to talk to me!”

Matt’s ears were buzzing and his vision went black. Suddenly, he felt warmth in his nose as blood started flowing out. Matt decided to go all out after he was slapped silly.

“Henry Law, don’t go overboard! Do you think you’re ballsy for slapping me? Go and be arrogant in front of Mr. Atticus if you really have the balls!”

Henry squatted in front of Matt, who was sitting on the ground. He looked at Matt and grinned evilly, "Are you treating Atticus as your daddy now? Time's changed and Atticus can't even save himself. Do you think you can scare me with him?"

After Henry said that, he stood up and asked Jake, "Can you walk?"

Jake stood up and said, "Yes."

Henry nodded in satisfaction and glared at Matt, who looked fearful as he sat on the ground. Then, he said to Alex and Howard, "Bring this idiot too. We had the appetizer and now, it's time for the main course."

Howard walked up and grabbed Matt like he was grabbing a chick. Then, with Alex lifting Matt's other side, they carried Matt out of the house.

Matt struggled in terror, but Howard's hands were like pliers such that he could not move an inch.

"Where are you guys taking me?" Matt screamed in terror.

"To Empire Meet, to find your master," Henry said with a cold chuckle.

Henry had already thought this through. They were just a bunch of thugs who carried out shady business. Therefore, they were not worth his effort coming all the way here. The main purpose of this trip was to rescue Jake.

Even if they killed Matt right here, Fabian would not even frown. Instead, he would be delighted.

Thus, if he wanted to cause a commotion, he had to go directly to Fabian to stir up trouble.

The children of wealthy families in Harbor City were terrified of Fabian, as though he were a tiger. Back then, Fabian was scared of him, while he would also be reluctant to provoke Fabian.

However, right now, Henry wanted to see if he could skin Fabian alive and make him into a throw cushion.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1415

On the outskirts of Harbor City. There was no such thing as a cheap real estate in a place like Harbor City where land was extremely expensive.

This area with beautiful scenery that was next to the mountains and the sea was a good place for the rich to hide their mistresses.

This particular hidden villa was the residence of Empire Meet.

Although the outside world found the location mysterious, it was nothing in the eyes of Henry.

At this moment, it was already dark. Alex asked excitedly when they were at the entrance of Empire Meet, "Are we really going to barge in just like this?"

Henry ridiculed him, "Do you have an alternative? Do you think we need to send a greeting card and wait for Fabian to open the door for you?"

"Haha!" Alex laughed and took the initiative to say, "Let me call for someone to open the door then."

"Okay, go." Henry agreed without thinking.

Alex was also someone who was not afraid of causing trouble, but although his family background was strong, it was not really among the absolute elite. This severely limited him in his attempts to cause trouble.

Now, he finally had the chance to show his worth, so how would Alex let this chance to win success and recognition go to waste?

If he broke down the doors of Empire Meet and rumors of this spread throughout the circle of the descendants of wealthy families in Harbor City, Alex would be shot to fame overnight.

When he thought about this, Alex was so excited he did not even hesitate. He immediately slammed down on the accelerator.

Boom!

The sports car that cost over one million dollars crashed directly into the iron gates.

A villa with this level of extravagance only had a gate as decoration. After all, where was one going to find blind burglars who would try to dig their own graves at this place?

Since the start, they never considered the actual security of the front gate. They just wanted it to look pleasant to the eyes.

Now that a sports car had crashed into it, it immediately collapsed with a loud bang. Soon, the sports car drove straight into the premise of the villa with a low rumble.

Immediately, the lights of the villa were turned on as a huge group of bodyguards rushed out.

“Damn it, who dares to knock the gate down? Do you know where you are?”

One of the bodyguards roared at the sports car that had stopped at the entrance of the villa while feeling flustered and exasperated.

When he looked at the unrecognizable gate on the floor that had been crashed into and run over, the bodyguard’s heart began bleeding.

Mr. Atticus was in a bad mood over these past few days and now this had happened. The bodyguard figured that he would be in trouble once his boss got news of this.

The door of the sports car opened. After that, a brightly polished leather shoe stepped out onto the ground, before a black sock and black pants appeared.

Immediately after, Henry’s figure emerged in front of the bodyguards as he got out of the car.

“It’s me. What’s wrong? Am I not allowed to run over the gate of Empire Meet?”

Henry's statement immediately put pressure on everyone at the scene.

The security guards who looked so overbearing as if they were going to crush the car and the people in it a second ago immediately felt conflicted when they saw Henry.

Henry was well-known for being fierce in Harbor City. Hence, as Fabian's bodyguards, it would be impossible for them to not know who Henry was.

Soon, Alex and Howard appeared, causing the faces of the bodyguards to turn even more unpleasant.

Henry came prepared.

After the bodyguards realized that they could not handle this themselves, one of them quickly ran inside to inform Fabian.

At this moment, Fabian had just fallen asleep. The sound of the crash woke him up, and moments later, he heard the report from the bodyguard.

Fabian immediately put on his pajamas and walked out with a dark face.

The door of the villa opened and Fabian spotted Henry and the gang who were smoking by the car. They were completely ignoring the dozens of bodyguards.

“Henry Law, do you want to die?”

Fabian had not slept for a few days, and he had been tense this whole time. Hence, Fabian, who had already been quite off-color, looked even worse right now. His face was dark as he asked in a hoarse voice.

When Alex saw Fabian, he was a little scared. Thus, he turned his head to look at Henry.

However, he saw Henry chuckling coldly before saying, “Atticus, is this your dog?”

After he said that, he eyed Howard.

Howard turned around and pulled Matt out of the car. He was disheveled and his face was swollen and bruised. It was clear that he had been taught a painful lesson.

Then, Howard threw Matt on the ground as if he was a dead dog before walking back toward Henry.

Fabian's pupils contracted when he saw Matt gasping for air on the ground. Matt was also calling out to Fabian for help while tears and snot ran down his face.

"What is the meaning of this?" Fabian asked coldly.

Henry guffawed and said, "What is the meaning of this? Aren't you a bad*ss? You're the number one figure among the second generations of Harbor City. What an impressive title. I'm so envious and I want to have it too."

With a scoff, Fabian replied, "I never claimed to be number one. You can have it if you're interested. Is that all?"

"Are you stupid?" Henry tilted his head to look at Fabian as if he was looking at a buffoon.

"Do you think it's fun pretending to be ignorant? I'm not Jasper, so don't try to talk sh*t with me. I don't like it and I won't play along with your act."

"Your beef with Jasper has come to this point, and I'm obviously siding with Jasper. I came here tonight looking for trouble, so why are you being so eccentric?"

Fabian said calmly, "Henry, think things through. You will suffer the consequences if you provoke me."

"Oh, you really think you're the king just because you caused Kayden to suffer a bit, huh?" Henry laughed coyly.

Then, he strutted forward.

His action caused the bodyguards around them to become extremely nervous.

They were scared that this fiend in human form would impulsively do something to Fabian.

Fabian's eyes were calm and he called out, "Stay where you are. Do you think he has the balls to touch me?"

Henry giggled and said, "Yeah, everyone knows who Mr. Atticus is, so how would I have the courage to do so?"

While Henry said that, he had already walked beside Matt.

He lifted his leg to step on Matt's body. The latter yelled and laid on the ground. Right now, he could only cry and scream.

“Your dog is so lamentable. He's beaten up so badly and you didn't even speak up for him. Mr. Atticus, aren't you very f*cking powerful? What's wrong? I'm stepping on your dog in front of you and you don't even dare to breathe too loudly. Is this really the number one figure among the second generation of Harbor City?”

Even if Fabian was very sophisticated and wise, he was infuriated after hearing these taunts.

Henry was extremely arrogant and right now. He looked even more evil than any of the villains typically shown in movies.

Fabian looked frigidly at Henry and threatened, “Henry, you better use your brain before you speak. Don't think that no one will be able to touch you just because you're a Law. The Laws are not without equal in this world.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1416

“Yes, the Laws are not unequaled, but does it mean that the Atticus family is?”

Henry looked at Fabian from the corners of his eyes and scoffed. He looked extremely arrogant.

“Atticus, I’ve disliked you for a very long time. You always look so peculiar. Who are you putting on this show for?”

“Do you think you’re all that because you know how to plot and scheme? You’re always behaving like God’s number one and you’re number two. Why? Did those losers from the second generation circle in Harbor City flatter you so much that you’ve grown to have an exaggerated opinion of your own abilities?”

Henry’s words caused Fabian’s face to turn extremely dark. No one dared to speak to him this way throughout his entire life.

However, Fabian soon turned his anger into laughter and said while pointing at Henry, “Alright Very good, Henry. You’re ballsy. I hope you won’t regret saying those things!”

“Idiot!”

Henry scoffed and cursed.

“Do you think I came all the way here to talk sh*t with you?”

“Well, I want to see what else you’ll do,” Fabian replied.

“Look how thick-skinned you are. You really think you’re all that, huh?”

Henry smiled evilly and turned his head to look at Alex. He said, “Do you dare to have a go at him?”

Alex swallowed his saliva as his eyes filled with fear and excitement.

“Of course! Damn, we’re here anyway. It’ll be the same no matter if I have a go at him or not, no? I’ll be able to do whatever I want in the second generation circle in Harbor City if I win, and if I don’t, then I guess I’ll spend the rest of my life in bed.”

After Alex said that, he turned around and took out a container of gasoline from the trunk of the sport’s car.

“What are you doing?” Fabian asked coldly as he narrowed his eyes and stared at the container of gasoline in Alex’s hands.

“What are we doing?”

Henry laughed and said arrogantly, “I am not happy with Empire Meet, so I want to burn it to the ground.”

After Henry said that, Alex cried out and opened the lid of the container to splash the gasoline onto the villa grounds.

“Stop him!” Fabian yelled angrily.

Immediately, more than ten bodyguards surrounded Alex.

Fabian had a lot of loyal people under him. Therefore, when they saw Alex carrying the container, about to splash it, some of them who were brave even used their bodies to block the liquid.

Even the Fabian’s bodyguards knew that if Henry and Alex set fire to Empire Meet today, Fabian would not be able to show his face in the second generation circle in Harbor City anymore.

He would become a laughing stock.

Fabian was such a proud person. How was he supposed to endure this kind of humiliation?

He stared straight at Henry and said coldly, “Henry, I don’t have any beef with you. I only have grievances with Jasper so do you really need to stick your neck out like this?!”

“Do you think you can protect him just by doing this? You’re too childish.”

Henry grinned and said, “Protect him? You’re overthinking things.”

“You’re always plotting and scheming. I think you must have damaged your brain after doing all that, huh?”

“How much f*cking money did you lose to Jasper over the past few days? You’re even about to sell your underwear, right? Yet, you say I want to protect him when you’re in this state?”

“Let’s be honest, I genuinely think you’re a tough one to handle, but from the looks of things now, you’re not really anything special.”

“You won’t be able to win against Jasper when it comes to strategy. Now that I’m standing right in front of you, you’re telling me that there’s no need for me to stick my neck out like this.”

“Me. Atticus, if you’re scared, you can apologize to me. If I’m in a good mood, I might let you off the hook.”

Fabian looked at Henry as his eyes turned from angry to calm.

After Henry finished saying that, his eyes turned completely icy.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1417

“Alright, it’s just an apology. Mr. Law, I, Fabian Atticus, have made a mistake. I hope you can forgive me.”

What Fabian said felt like a bolt from the blue.

Fabian’s bodyguards at the scene looked at him in disbelief. Then, they a look of grief and indignation spread over their faces. It seemed as if they were willing to lose their lives for their humiliated master.

Alex was also stunned.

Meanwhile, Henry had an alarmed look on his face as well, much less Alex.

Henry was just fooling around and decided to ask Fabian to apologize spontaneously.

He never expected Fabian to actually do as he was told. However, who would have expected Fabian to admit defeat so quickly.

After spacing out for a while, Henry laughed and said, “Mr. Atticus, you’re really something else. Are you really going to throw away your entire image and all your prestige?”

Fabian replied flatly, “Image and prestige are usually the most worthless things.”

Even though he said that, Fabian was simultaneously hiding the anger in the deepest part of his eyes very well.

It was just like a volcano that was about to erupt, but Fabian used his strong self-control to stop it by sheer force.

If this was any other day, Fabian would have shed all pretense of cordiality with Henry.

Fabian was above everyone in the second-generation circle in Harbor City, and this was not by chance. Fabian's ability was far superior to his peers.

When Kayden suffered greatly that day and decided to let it slide, Fabian's ability was put on display for everyone to see.

However, that was then. Things were different now. Fabian pumped all of the resources and assets under his name into the United States stock market. After his dispute with Jasper over the past few days, he did not have much left.

At this critical moment, Henry came to him looking for trouble. It was as if they had based their fangs while he was at his weakest.

Therefore, Fabian could only suffer this grievance and endure it

The time was not right. Even if he wanted to avenge himself, he would have to wait until this difficult period was over.

Once he took care of Jasper, Henry would be nothing. After Fabian thought of this, he decided to admit defeat and apologize decisively.

In other words, he was scared!

However, he was not scared of Henry. He was scared to be affected by Henry, causing him to lose to Jasper completely during the main battle. It was clear which one was the priority now.

“I’ve given you the apology and respect you want. If you still feel that it’s not enough, you can do whatever you want with the dog under your foot I won’t have any objections.”

Fabian did not even look at Matt when he said that. Matt felt as if he had plunged into an icy cave after he looked at Fabian, who was being so cruel and heartless.

Fabian was his last shred of hope. He did not expect Fabian to abandon him when they were in trouble.

“Mr. Atticus, you can’t do this. I’ve been loyal to you and I’ve done everything you asked me to. If you abandon me right now, who else would dare to work for you in the future?”

Matt did not care about his fear toward Fabian during this critical moment, hence he started yelling.

“What did I ask you to do? Why am I not aware of it?”

Fabian looked at Matt frigidly and said, “Think before you speak. If not, you’ll not be the only one dead. Your family will be implicated too. Do you understand what I mean?”

After Fabian said that, Matt felt like a duck that was being grabbed by the throat. He could not utter a single word.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1418

His face changed.

Finally, Matt collapsed on the ground limply as if someone had removed his spine. He did not say anything, and he did not dare to blame Fabian for abandoning him. He knew that if he kept spewing nonsense, his family would be in trouble too.

Thus, Matt could only submit to his fate when he was faced with such firm threats. This was because Matt did not have the slightest capital to fight back against Henry or Fabian.

This was the sorrow of the weak. There was no right or wrong between the weak and the strong.

Matt, who was already on the ground, curled himself up like a dead dog. His body started shaking gently as he sobbed silently.

He was a man, and he was a man with some power, yet, he was reduced to this state when he faced with Fabian and Henry.

However, no one at the scene felt that this was inappropriate.

This was the reality of society!

“Is this enough?” Fabian said while looking at Henry.

“Yes, you’re so sincere.”

Henry smiled brightly.

It was not easy to make Fabian bow his head. However, after the smile, Henry’s face suddenly became cold.

“However, I still decided to do what I initially intended.”

Fabian flew into a rage after he heard that.

“Henry, don’t go overboard!”

Henry looked at Fabian with a cold smile. He taunted Fabian, “Why? I told you I might let you off the hook if I’m in a good mood after you apologize. However, I feel that I’m still in a bad mood!”

When Fabian heard that, he pushed the bodyguard in front of him away and walked straight to Henry.

He walked over slowly such that Alex, who was standing next to Henry, felt the hair on his body standing up.

It felt as if a primitive beast on the verge of killing its prey was walking toward them rather than a human. Alex, who was timid, took a step back subconsciously. However, he immediately bumped into Howard.

Alex was startled and he turned his head to see Howard’s disdainful gaze looking down on him.

Howard's gaze hurt Alex, the latter of which had only just been dreaming about shooting to fame overnight.

Alex soon spat on the ground, it seemed that he was also mad at himself for being such a disappointment. Thus, Alex lifted his head and puffed his chest out before standing his ground. A moment later, he grabbed the gasoline and stared straight at Fabian.

However, Fabian was not bothered by him at all. He did not even look at Alex as he walked toward Henry.

When he stood still in front of Henry, Fabian said faintly, "Henry, respect is very important if you want to stay in the circle."

"Tonight, you're the one who barged through my door. I've shown you the respect and recognition you wanted. However, if you insist on pursuing this matter further, don't blame me for having a fall-out with you."

Henry smirked and said, "Oh, Mr. Atticus is still not convinced, huh?"

As he said that, Henry got close to Fabian and said coldly, "Why don't you show me how you'll have a fall out with me?"

“I’ve seen an idiot fall flat on his face but I’ve never seen a fall-out before. Why don’t you teach me something new today?”

As he said that, Henry straightened his back and chuckled coldly while he looked at Fabian. He continued, “Stop being such a poser. Everyone knows who you are and who I am, so why are we still doing this?”

“If you genuinely decide to fight me to death, you wouldn’t have said that cowardly statement just now. Right, Mr. Atticus?”

Fabian looked at Henry and laughed suddenly.

“Back then, I only saw you as a brainless second generation, the kind that I could kill easy as pie. However, I guess I’ve underestimated you. Similar to Kayden, you’re one of the descendants of the four rich families.”

Henry was slightly stunned and then he laughed and replied, “You place regard me so highly, Mr. Atticus. “I’m just a normal lad. You need to thank the people around me for setting me up.”

After Henry said that, he tilted his head. “Alex, why are you still standing there? Go light the place up!”

“Splash the gasoline all over the villa. If anyone wants to stop you, let him. We’ll see who genuinely will risk their lives for Mr. Atticus when you light the fire. At the same time, we will be the good guys and help Mr. Atticus see which of his dogs are the most loyal.”

After Henry said that, Fabian looked at Alex suddenly. His gaze was as cold as a blade.

Alex kept swallowing his saliva. He wanted to move, but the container in his hand felt as if it weighed a ton. It was so heavy it was making it a little difficult for him to move his fingers.

To be honest, Alex was really scared. This was Empire Meet!

Before today, Alex would never imagine that he would bring a container of gasoline to this place to light Empire Meet on fire in front of Fabian.

A few seconds ago, he was still very vigorous as he was immersed in the beautiful dream of shooting to fame overnight. However, now that it was time to take action, he was a little scared.

Meanwhile, Henry was scolding this good-for-nothing for being a huge disappointment when he sensed Alex’s fear.

Right now, they were doing this because they were mad. If he was still mad, his awe-inspiring authority would be able to defeat Fabian.

However, if he was not mad anymore, he would revert back to his old self. Fabian would not need to do anything and he would get the upper hand.

Why did Henry drag this dead dog along today?

He wanted to criticize Fabian violently and pressure him while they were still riding that high.

From the looks of it now, the effect was pretty good.

Fabian did not have anything on hand to fight back, and that was why he was not so confident right now.

Regardless, now that it had come to this, neither Henry nor Fabian could turn back now.

However, Alex started to feel scared at this critical moment, which might screw everything up. This made Henry have the urge to go over and slap Alex heavily across the face.

Fabian started to display a cold smile on the corners of his lips.

He knew that Alex was terrified, and that this would be the key for him to turn the situation around.

However, at this moment, another hand pulled the container away from Alex's hand.

"Henry, if this coward doesn't dare to do it, let me."

At this critical moment, Howard stepped forward. After Howard said that, he did not wait for Henry's reply. He carried the container and strode toward the villa.

After he moved. All of the bodyguards started to move as well.

It was as if Howard could not see them. He grabbed the container and threw away the lid before splashing the gasoline around furiously.

A few of the bodyguards wanted to go snatch the container away from Howard in a moment of desperation. However, with Howard's figure, he was able to send two to three bodyguards flying with just a wave of his arm.

“Back away!”

Fabian roared and stopped his bodyguards who were starting to get restless and increasingly desperate to take action.

While Fabian said that, he was staring straight at Henry.

“I’m going to stand here today. I want to see who has the balls to light Empire Meet on fire!”

After he said that, Fabian turned around and walked to the door of the villa. He stepped on the gasoline that had flowed to his feet and looked at Henry coldly. Then, he curled his lips into a mocking grin.

“Henry Law, aren’t you the devil incarnate who’s not afraid of anything? Come, I’m standing here right now. Light me up!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1419

Fabian’s action caused the expression on Henry’s face to freeze for the first time tonight.

This was beyond Henry's expectations.

At this moment, he wanted badly to press pause and call Jasper to ask him what he should do.

Before he departed, Jasper told him so many things, including what he needed to do and say. Jasper instructed him on what he should do in all kinds of different situations.

Even though Jasper had not met Matt or Fabian, he predicted what their reactions would be.

That was why Henry was able to handle this matter so skillfully and easily.

Even though Henry's growth during this period also played a huge role in this, the key factor was Jasper's accurate predictions. It seemed that he had perfectly predicted how Fabian would react in every situation.

How was Fabian supposed to win in this kind of setting?

However, Fabian still did the unexpected after they managed to predict everything before this to a tea.

He stood in front of the villa and bet on the fact that Henry would not dare to light the fire.

If Henry lit the fire, Fabian would die right here.

Even if Henry had an impressive background and amazing abilities, he would need to suffer the consequences for this crime.

The Laws were powerful, but the Atticus family were no pushovers.

This would easily become a battle where the two families fought to the death. No one would be able to do anything to stop them.

The Laws would definitely protect Henry, but if the Atticus family lost Fabian, how would they be willing to just let this go?

Therefore, at this moment, his decision might just escalate to a battle of death between two rich families that would send the entirety of Harbor City into chaos.

As such, Henry was stunned. At the same time, he was impressed by Fabian.

This sudden action was indeed impressive.

Meanwhile, Fabian spotted all of Henry's expressions. As he stood in front of the villa with his feet in the puddle of gasoline, Fabian said calmly, "Henry, either you light me up along with this villa, or you get the hell out!"

Henry narrowed his eyes and did not say anything.

To be honest, he genuinely wanted to turn around and leave.

So what if it was embarrassing? The shame would not be that bad considering he managed to force Fabian into this state.

He had revealed the true form of this poser, and in this situation, no one would laugh at him if he turned around and left. Moreover, Henry believed that if Jasper were here, he would do the same too.

They would not go all the way if they were trying to do something. This was the hidden rule in the circle of the second generation.

None of the families would be able to bear it if they accidentally killed someone. They could argue and fight, but there was still a limit when it came to conducting their business.

Coincidentally, Henry had been a devil incarnate for so many years that he knew his limits very well. He would make people hate him, but they would not dare to risk everything to seek revenge against him because they were scared of the Laws' power. Even the before him worm did not retaliate, so what more those families?

However, so many years had passed as the number of second generations that Henry had bullied were numerous enough form a union. Even so, Henry was still fine.

This was not just because the Laws were powerful, but also because Henry knew his limits.

He never truly caused anything irreversible.

“Henry, why don't we just leave it at that?”

At this moment, Alex was terrified and felt remorseful.

Just a small spark would be able to cause a fire that would devour this villa and the entirety of Harbor City.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1420

He said to Henry carefully, “We’ve already won tonight. Who would have expected Fabian to act so shamelessly and take the bullet himself? We’ll applaud him for being ballsy, but we still didn’t lose. It’s not worth causing something major over this.”

After Alex said that, Henry’s face became dark, and he did not say anything.

However, Henry internally agreed with what Alex said, “Indeed, it would not be worth it.”

However, what Fabian said next caused Henry to stop in his tracks just as he was about to walk away.

“So what if you’re a Law? Old Master Law is a formidable character indeed. Everyone in Harbor City and even Somerland respects and admires him, me included. Even so, Henry, you still have a long way to go.”

“So what if he’s Jasper Laine? He’s just a nouveau riche with a little bit of power. He might be able to defeat me for now, but can he defeat me forever? Soon, he’ll kneel in front of me and beg for my mercy.”

“I heard that the Laws value Jasper a lot, and I heard your sister, Anna, has a special relationship with him? Haha, too bad, you got the wrong person.”

Fabian stared at Henry as he vented all of the dismay and anger he had accumulated in his heart over the past few days without restraint.

“Today, I can make you f*ck off. Tomorrow, the day after tomorrow, in ten years, or in twenty years, you will have to bow your head in front of me. Henry, if you have the balls, you’d light the fire. If you do, I’ll applaud you for having balls of steel.”

“If you don’t have the balls to do it, then don’t be so arrogant and don’t end up regretting it. You will only have one chance to do this in your life!”

“Do you really think you’re all that because you’ve grown? You’re just like Jasper, destined to be a loser under me!”

After Fabian said all of that, he felt much better.

Yet, Henry’s face was extremely dark.

It never crossed Fabian’s mind that he should not speak to Henry in such a disrespectful tone.

A young master like Henry was fearless when he wanted to be. He would even flip off God if he was blinded by rage. There was no expression on Henry's face; He looked so cold it was horrifying.

Alex could only feel a buzzing in his head right now.

At this moment, he really wanted to take out a piece of feces from the base of his pants to stuff into Fabian's mouth.

Other people might not understand Henry, but as his friend who grew up with him, Alex knew the man too well.

Whenever Mr. Law displayed this expression, it would mean something major was about to happen.

The last time Henry wore this expression was when a blind and foolish second-generation assailed Anna with Obscenities after she had just come back from studying abroad.

After Henry learned about this, he drove to that second-generation's home in the middle of the night and dragged him out of bed. Then, he beat that guy so badly that he became a paraplegic.

If Anna did not say anything that time, Henry might have even beat that wealthy second-generation to death.

Henry was severely punished by Zachary for two days straight after that incident, and he was also grounded for half a year.

Henry suffered a lot of beatings in his life, but at that time, he did not make a sound nor beg for mercy. He endured everything head on.

“H-Henry, don’t listen to him. Let’s go, okay? Please?” Alex sounded as if he was about to cry.

Henry looked at Alex coldly and said, “If you want to leave, you can leave yourself.”

After Henry said that, he pushed the dumbfounded Alex away and extended his hand toward Fabian.

Then, he slowly raised his thumb.

“Fabian, you’re such a badass.”

Unfortunately, something unexpected had happened as Henry was about to deliver a cool one-liner.

While he was knitting his eyebrows together, Henry slowly took out a cigarette and put it between his lips. As he was looking for the lighter, a large hand with a lit lighter approached him from one side.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1421

Henry had the cigarette between his lips as he looked at Howard.

Howard chuckled at Henry and said, “Henry, the wind’s pretty strong. Use mine...”

Henry nodded and said while feeling deeply moved, “From now on, you’ll be my second brother.”

One did not need to think to know who the first one was. Henry moved over to light the cigarette before taking a long drag. He had the cigarette between his fingers as he tilted his head to look at Fabian.

“Atticus, you’re such a badass, but are you afraid of death?”

Fabian’s heart skipped a beat when Henry looked at him. He immediately felt that something was not right. The matter did not develop as he had expected.

Before Fabian could think it through, Henry flicked the lit cigarette butt in his hand away.

The orange and red cigarette butt flew in the cold wind of the night. Then, it spun and flew toward the villa. The entrance of the villa was covered with the doused gasoline.

At this moment, Fabian's pupils contracted to become tiny dots.

He roared with fear and remorse that he had never felt in the past thirty years of his life, "Henry, how dare you?!"

Henry placed his hands in his pockets and smirked, "I am a brainless second-generation and I'm a simple hedonist. I can't do anything well but I am the best at causing outrage!"

"But so what? I can afford to do this!"

"I am proud of my name, and I stand by my actions. My name is Henry Law! Today, I will stand here and see if you are scared of death or not, Fabian Atticus!"

Fabian could not hear what Henry was saying anymore. His attention was on that cigarette butt that had fallen on the ground. It landed on the gasoline, and immediately, a deep blue flame that had tongues of orange and red started spreading toward him.

It was too fast.

It was so fast that Fabian did not even have time to run away.

He wanted to run but his legs felt as if they were filled with lead. He could not move them no matter what.

Then, numerous figures started charging toward him regardless of the danger.

“Mr. Atticus, run!”

He could only hear his bodyguards’ screams of terror. Fabian felt as if he had been hit by a truck. He suddenly flew backward.

While he was in mid-air, Fabian saw a glimpse of Henry’s maniacal face. A thought suddenly popped into his head.

His legs were not filled with lead, but he was so scared that he was unable to move.

Then, Fabian felt his head hit something hard. With a thud, his vision went dark. It was as if the lights in his world had been switched off as he lost consciousness.

The fire soon burned the villa to the ground.

The huge fire not only devoured the villa that represented Empire Meet, but also ignited a violent situation within Harbor City.

When Jasper received the call, it was already daybreak he was already seeing the first glimmers of sunlight. Meanwhile, Jasper was sleeping soundly.

However, the ringtone of the phone sounded abnormally urgent, and what the person on the other end of the line said got rid of all traces of Jasper's sleepiness.

A few minutes later, Jasper hung up the phone.

He called Wendy without any hesitation. Then, he woke Julian up and headed straight to the airport.

"Jasper, did something happen in Harbor City?"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1422

Julian asked as he drove.

He knew Jasper had been working on anything major these days, so he would not leave Nauritus City if it was not anything urgent.

Yet, he was suddenly asking to go to the airport to fly to Harbor City in the middle of the night. Something astronomical must have happened.

Judging from Jasper's expression, Julian, who had been his partner for a very long time realized this matter was not as simple as he initially thought.

"Something bad happened..."

Jasper let out a sigh and said while feeling annoyed, "I dragged Henry into this. If I don't handle this well, we'll be in huge trouble."

Julian was silent for a while before he said, "Jasper, it'll be fine. You can solve every problem that comes your way."

“I hope so...” Jasper shook his head and said, “Julian, ask the airport whether the plane is back from Harbor City or not.”

That was right. One hour ago, Jasper’s Gulfstream plane had already departed from Harbor City to come back to Nauritus City’s airport just to ferry Jasper over.

“Okay.”

Julian did not ask or say anything more. He immediately called the airport.

Half an hour later, the Bentley stopped in the parking lot of Nauritus City International Airport. Then, Jasper and Julian headed to the aircraft parking ground through the special VIP lane. They did not even have time to pack a single suitcase. A moment later, they got onto the plane that had been refueled and headed to Harbor City while zooming into the clouds with a loud rumble.

When Jasper’s plane took off, most of normal people were sound asleep. Meanwhile, the upper-class circle in Harbor City was in chaos.

The Law Manor.

Zachary, who rushed back from Auma City sat on the sofa in the middle of the room with no expression on his face. He was slowly smoking a cigar in his hand.

Meanwhile, two men were sitting next to him.

One of them was Alex's father, the head of the Jeans, Alex Jean.

Another burly man with an imposing manner and white hair on his temples was the current head and boss of Star Group, Merrie Branson. He had a domineering and powerful presence even though he was just sitting quietly in place.

"Mr. Law, Henry, Alex, and Howard are currently being detained by the police. I just contacted them, and I couldn't see them at all. The Atticus family must be involved in this, so we have to quickly think of a plan. If not, I'm worried those three kids will be doomed."

Phil lost his cool and broke the silence.

Zachary looked at Phil and said, "I called Sawyer just now."

"What did he say?" Phil asked quickly.

Zachary flicked the ashes of his cigar away and said faintly, "An eye for an eye."

The corners of Phil's lips twitched, and he said through gritted teeth, "Fabian is in the hospital and he's under so much protection. However, from what we could tell, the incident was not so serious that it would cost him his life. He only suffered some flesh wounds so how is he going to give them a taste of their own medicine?"

"The Atticus family got dirt against us now."

Morrie, who had stayed silent the whole time, finally said quietly.

Since Morrie came from the underworld, he was used to fighting and scheming against the others in the dark. The methods those dark entities employed were way worse than what the outside world were aware of, so he clearly understood what the Atticus family was thinking. He immediately knew what they wanted.

"So what? Should we just watch our children get locked up and suffer hardships? Everyone knows that the police chief is Sawyer's best buddy. Now that the three of them are locked up, how much are they are going to suffer?" Phil said angrily.

Zachary waved his hand and answered, "What are you so scared of? So what if the police chief was raised by Sawyer? Does he dare to kill my son?"

After Zachary said that, Phil did not say anything anymore.

At the same time, he let out a sigh of relief in his heart. The reason he deliberately behaved so restless back then was to make Zachary say that.

As long as Henry was fine, his son, Alex, would be safe and sound too.

This was how the big shots communicated. Their fights would be hidden in every small detail of conversation.

“Let’s just wait,” Zachary said suddenly.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1423

“What are we waiting for?” Phil asked subconsciously. Then, he immediately thought of something. He asked in a surprised and expectant tone, “Is the old master coming?”

Of course, the old master he was referring to was Old Master Law.

After Phil said that, Howard also looked over.

Obviously, even though this matter was very intractable, as long as Old Master Law came out to say a few words, there wouldn't be any major repercussions.

Zachary waved his hand and said, "I talked to my father before I came here. He said he doesn't want to get involved in this."

Phil started laughing in anger when he heard this. However, since he was fearful of the Laws, he could not show his dissatisfaction.

After he thought about it, Phil said sullenly, "The three kids burnt Empire Meet and we can excuse that, but they almost set Fabian on fire. There were two bodyguards severely injured and six lightly injured. Also, Fabian suffered a concussion, so I don't think they'll get away with this."

"It's like they're stepping on the Atticus family's crest as they slapped them across the face. Is the old master not going to intervene in such a huge matter?"

"The old master has his own factors to consider."

Zachary looked at Phil with a warning gaze. Then, he continued calmly, "Think about it. If the old master shows up to handle this, wouldn't that signal that the Atticus family can instantly raise their demands?"

Phil's expression froze and he could not utter a single word.

"It'll be good to let them suffer a little," Zachary said with a dark face.

"Those brats are getting more and more courageous. How dare they commit murder and arson? How are we going to control them if we don't teach them a lesson?"

Morrie laughed and said, "They're pretty brave. At least they're better than cowards who don't dare to do anything. Besides, Mr. Law, they only committed arson, not murder."

Zachary peered at Morrie and said bluntly, "You're so old, yet you also want to fool around with them?"

Morrie shrugged and said indifferently, "The Bransons got to this point because we dabble in illegal business. Big families like the Atticus family never have any respect for us. What's done is done, so what else can they do?"

"I can get some assassins for hire from Southeast Terra and then I'll use all of my family assets to kill off half of the Atticus family. After that, I'll run away without a care in the world. What can they do to me then?"

Phil chuckled bitterly and said, "You're all very powerful people."

“However, Mr. Law, since we’re not waiting for the old master, what are we waiting for?”

Zachary replied faintly, “That rascal caused all of this behind our backs and he still wants to live comfortably? No way! I’ve asked him to come over here and clean up this mess.”

Phil and Morrie exchanged a glance. They had simultaneously captured some key information from Zachary’s statement.

First, it was Zachary’s tone.

His tone when he said ‘rascal’ was similar to when an elder would affectionately refer to their juniors. Not everyone was qualified to be addressed by Zachary in that way.

Secondly, ‘caused all of this behind our backs’.

Did someone ask Zachary and the gang to do this?

Such a thought was simply too outrageous in Phil’s mind.

He knew Henry very well. He was not afraid of anything, and he was truly a fiend in human form.

Who had the power to tell him what to do?

Life at The Top – Chapter 1424

The scariest thing was that Zachary and even the Laws seemed to know this person was, and were even tacitly agreeing to this matter.

Even though Henry was a disappointment, he was still the successor of the Laws. Would they really allow Henry to be instructed by someone else?

While Phil and Morrie were racking their brains to figure out who this was, Jasper arrived at Law Manor.

Right now, the sky was just beginning to shine brightly.

After he pushed the door open, Jasper walked in with a cool breeze blowing behind him along with the first rays of morning sun.

Phil and Morrie lifted their heads to look over and were met with Jasper's exhausted yet confident and unflustered face. What Phil and Morrie focused on the most were Jasper's bright eyes that seemed to contain the entire galaxy.

His eyes were clear and did not look so special at the first glance, however, the more one looked at them, the more breathtaking they appeared.

Phil and Merrie were old foxes who had a wealth of experience. With just one glance, they knew this young man was not as simple as he looked.

"Uncle Law, I'm sorry for being late."

After Jasper walked in, he scrutinized Phil and Morrie without them noticing. Then, he walked in front of Zachary and said in a soft voice.

"That's good." Zachary finally had a smile on his face.

"This time, that rascal caused such a huge commotion."

Jasper nodded and said, "Uncle Law, we didn't talk in detail over the phone. Can you tell me what's the situation now?"

Zachary nodded but he did not immediately tell Jasper the situation. Instead, he pointed at Phil and Morrie at his side. He introduced them, “This is the chairman of Jean Corporation and the head of the Jeans, Phil Jean. He’s also Alex Jean’s father. The other man is the chairman of Star Group, Howard Branson’s father, Morrie Branson.”

“Alex and Howard are that brat’s best friends, and they grew up together. The three of them did this together last night”

When Jasper heard that, he turned and greeted Phil and Morrie, “Mr. Jean, Mr. Branson. Hello...”

“Essentially, this matter is between me and Fabian. However, Fabian used some tricks that did not follow the rules and took action against my men. Therefore, I asked Henry to come to Harbor City to teach Fabian a lesson.”

“I initially wanted Henry to waste Fabian’s energy so that over the next two days, I could take Fabian down myself.

“However, I didn’t expect this issue to blow up, nor did I expect your sons to be dragged into this. No matter what, this is my fault and I must apologize to you, sirs.”

Jasper humbled himself but Phil was not too happy about this.

Jasper was the one who masterminded all these shenanigans. It was fine if he asked Henry to do such dangerous things, but now Jasper had even dragged his son into this.

Now, not only his son, but the entire Jean family was going to end up being hated by the Atticus family.

It was not a joyous thing to be hated by the Atticus family in Harbor City.

Therefore, Phil did not care how much the Law valued Jasper. To him, Jasper was just a junior. He wanted to lecture, but Morrie was one step ahead of him.

Morrie started laughing and he got up to grab Jasper who was about to bow down. He said candidly, "You're Jasper, huh? I heard about you a long time ago, but this is the first time I'm meeting you in person. You're not bad at all. You're pretty eloquent and you have the look of a successful person."

Morrie's reaction caused Phil's jaw to almost drop.

He had known Morrie for more than ten years and this was the first time he had seen him praising a junior so much.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1425

To be honest, even Jasper was a little astonished, let alone Phil. However, the astonishment lasted less than a second. Then, Jasper immediately showed the respect and reverence a junior should have toward his elders.

“You speak too highly of me, Mr. Branson. I’m just lucky. There are a lot of people out there who are better than me. I don’t dare to look down on everyone in the world.”

Morrie chuckled and replied, “It’s good to have a fearful heart, but you don’t have to be too humble. If not, you’ll look like a hypocrite.”

Jasper nodded and chuckled. “Thank you, Mr. Branson. I learn something new every day.”

“Stop calling me Mr. Branson. I’m almost the same age as Mr. Law. Why don’t we refer to ourselves as uncle and nephew?” Morrie laughed and said.

Naturally, Jasper would not embarrass Morrie at this moment. After all, he was the boss of the underworld. Jasper would not be losing anything by being regarded as his nephew.

“Uncle Branson, it’d be an honor,” Jasper said with a slight bow.

Morrie guffawed and patted Jasper's arm. Then, he said affectionately, "Alright, let's talk about the situation at hand now."

After he asked Jasper to sit, Morrie turned to look at Phil.

Phil frowned.

'Damn it. This is such a critical moment, yet you're not worried about your son's safety. You even adopted a nephew first. Now that you're done and it's finally time for business, you're asking me to speak because you're too lazy to do it?'

Even though Phil was not happy, Zachary was sitting with them, and it was clear that he was allowing this, so Phil did not dare to object.

"Those rascals caused such a huge ruckus, and Fabian is still in the hospital. Even though we think Fabian is not hurt too badly, from the situation of the scene, he at least has a concussion.

"This is the first time the Atticus family has suffered such a huge loss after they suddenly rose to power. I'm sure they won't let this go so easily."

"Judging from their reactions, it seems that they do not intend to just let this go."

“Before you get here, Mr. Law called the head of the Atticus family, which is Fabian’s father, Sawyer Atticus. Let’s just say it didn’t go well.”

“The Atticus family plans to seek revenge. After that happened, the three rascals were taken away immediately. From the way things look, the other party has the upper hand so we cannot do anything. Right now, we don’t have an opportunity to see the three of them, and we don’t know how they are.”

“The only thing helping us is the fact that they are not ordinary people and we’re also all here. Therefore, they won’t dare to do anything over the line.”

Phil paused when he said that. Then, he looked at Zachary.

When he saw Zachary nodding, he smiled. After this, the way he looked at Jasper changed.

He had heard that Jasper was valued by Zachary and also Old Master Law. However, after what he experienced tonight, Phil knew those were not just rumors and that the truth was actually even more unbelievable. If he could tell Jasper what he was about to say next, it meant that the Laws had no secrets with Jasper.

“This is only what we can see on the surface. There is also something that we can’t see, or rather, something only people at a certain level can see it.”

“The Laws and the Atticus family are already locked in a conflict, and it’s a huge one.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1426

“Back then the Atticus family got rich from trading rubber when they were still in the Golden Peninsula. Their first business in Harbor City was stolen from the Laws.

“It happened back during the first year that Mr. Law took over the family. He was not familiar with the family business yet when he succeeded the first head of the family. That was why the Atticus family was able to take advantage of this.

“Of course, Mr. Law thought of a way to seek revenge against them after that. There was a lot of back and forth as this issue grew bigger and bigger. The worst one was about six years ago I think, right, Mr. Law? Sawyer worked with Kennedy Langdon to take down the Laws.”

Zachary nodded and replied faintly, “That’s right. Six years ago...”

“Back then, my father suddenly fell sick very and he was unconscious in the hospital for half a month. The hospital had given us a very thick stack of notices stating his critical illness. Back then, everyone in Harbor City including myself thought that the old master wouldn’t make it.”

Phil smiled and said, “Yeah, back then, while Mr. Law was worried about the old master’s condition, he still had to handle the attack from the Atticus family and the Langdons. He was so anxious and worried.”

“However, the old master was bold and good-natured, so he left a lot of good karma behind. Back then, the other two rich families sided with the Laws...”

“Jasper, what do you think happened back then?”

Phil asked this to purposely test Jasper.

Jasper answered insipidly, “The upper class in Harbor City formed two opposing sides surrounding the Laws and the Atticus family.”

“Very good.”

Phil nodded and praised.

“That’s what happened back then. When their conflict reached its peak, Mr. Law was ready to send Henry and Anna abroad. It was very courageous of him to fight to the death alongside the Laws.”

Zachary waved his hand and chuckled. He said, “Stop praising me. As the head of the family, I’ve taken over this responsibility from my father. If I lost the family, what dignity would I have left to continue living? I needed Henry and Anna to continue the bloodline of the Laws.”

Phil's eyes were shining as he relived the battle back then. He said slowly, "I can only say that there is providence in everything."

"During the most critical moment, Mr. Law battled courageously with the Langdons and the Atticus family. If any of them made a call, Harbor City wouldn't be the Harbor City you see today."

"The upper-class in Harbor City was split into two sides. The neutral ones were almost wiped out. Once everyone decided to join the fight, no god from heaven would have been able to stop them until one side was defeated."

Jasper nodded understandingly and said, "Yes, it's just like the two armies fighting each other. Once the commander gives the order and the soldiers start fighting, they can't withdraw the troops."

"Yes, that's exactly it," Phil said ruefully. "So, I guess it's providence. At that moment, the old master woke up."

"If he woke up, the battle would not continue. The Atticus family and the Langdons knew this. As long as the old master was still around, the Laws were here to stay."

"However, the outcome of the battle was unknown, so the grievances remained. All these years, we've lost track of how many public and private fights have sprung up between them."

Jasper said with a frown, “Does it also mean that in the worst-case scenario, the Atticus family might use this chance as a pretext to make a fuss, reigniting the confrontation between the two sides?”

“It’s not very likely, but we have to take this possibility into consideration.” Zachary answered.

He looked at Jasper and said, “Therefore, right now we can only communicate with the higher-ups for you. However, you will be the one deciding how to settle this matter. Furthermore, you have to do it with your power and not escalate it.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1427

Jasper frowned and then he said slowly, “Uncle Law, I caused this so I should take care of it since it’s my unshirkable responsibility. However, I am worried that if the Atticus family has some other motives, this might be very tricky.”

Indeed, if the Atticus family went mad and decided to start a family war that would mess up the entirety of Harbor city, then it whatever Jasper said would be meaningless.

Zachary smiled when he heard that. He said, “You don’t have to worry too much about this. You just have to do it. The Laws won’t be afraid even if the Atticus family wants to go there.”

“We still don’t know who the victor will be...”

“Most importantly, you shouldn’t forget.”

Jasper sighed in relief. He was indeed envious of the Laws for having an elder in the family. The old master was like a treasure to them.

Moreover, with the increased interaction between Harbor City and the mainland, Old Master Law, who the big shots in Swallow Capital regarded as having given outstanding service to the country during the Handover, would only gradually attain a higher position.

Indeed, with the old master around, the Laws were as safe as houses.

The Atticus family knew about this as well.

“Okay, I’ll take action now,” Jasper said after getting up.

“Wait, you already know what to do?” Phil asked in astonishment.

As he said that, Phil laughed and said profoundly, “Young man, it’s very complicated right now.”

“First of all, we tried to go over to see those rascals, but we couldn’t. So it’ll be meaningless if you go over as well. Or perhaps, do you intend to head to the Atticus family to personally see Sawyer?”

Jasper shook his head and said, “It’s meaningless to meet Sawyer. Aside from him refusing to see a nobody like me, even if he did see me, what would he tell me? I’m guessing that if he wants to say something, he’d say it to all of you.”

“Then what else do you have in mind?”

Phil thought Jasper was just being impulsive and wanted to act rashly before thinking things through. As he was about to advise him, he realized Jasper had already weighed the decisions out in his mind. Hence, he started questioning Jasper after his interest piqued.

He secretly knew he would not have any good ideas on how to handle this if he was in Jasper’s position.

“I’ll go see Fabian.”

While Phil was putting himself in Jasper’s shoes, Jasper’s statement sparked an idea in Phil’s head.

Indeed, all of this started because of the beef between Jasper and Fabian. Since Jasper was in Harbor City right now, it would be best if Jasper went to see Fabian.

Only Fabian would be able to solve this mess involving the Atticus Family and the three rascals that had been locked up.

“Good idea!” Phil praised.

“However, are you sure that Fabian will want to see you?” Phil asked.

Jasper smiled and answered, “He will.”

“Oh..? How confident,” Phil said mockingly. He felt that Jasper was being a little boastful right now.

Currently, Fabian was being guarded by heavy security in the hospital. It would be impossible for Jasper to barge inside forcefully. Thus, he could only make Fabian agree to see him voluntarily.

However, this was very challenging.

“Yes, because Fabian even dreams of defeating me.”

Jasper’s flat tone was filled with extreme confidence. Furthermore, the statement itself was incredibly overbearing.

A guy that Fabian, someone the elders speak very highly of, dreamt of defeating would not be able to say something like this if he did not have a certain level of conceit and ability.

“Okay...”

Morrie beamed and nodded. He looked at Jasper and said, “You should go soon then.”

Jasper gave him a brief reply, and after bidding farewell to Zachary, Phil, and Morrie, he left the villa politely.

Phil was sat speechless in his chair for a long time after Jasper left.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1428

“T-That brat...”

Phil pointed in the direction of the door from which Jasper had left and said without knowing whether to laugh or cry, “Back then I thought Kayden was the steadiest and Fabian was the most maniacal among the younger generation in Harbor City. From the looks of it now, this kid might defeat both of them.”

“The moment I saw him, I thought of something,” Morrie said.

All the people of their generation trusted Morrie’s judgment. He never made a mistake when it came to judging one’s character.

“This feels like the plot of Lolita.” Morrie let out a sigh gently and said softly.

Upon hearing that, Zachary stared blankly at Morrie before guffawing.

While he was laughing, his face was filled with the same sort of gratification and complacency that one would feel when his peers finally acknowledged the junior he had his set sights on.

Zachary's love for this young man was not to be outdone by his love for his biological son.

Phil shook his head. Although he was shocked by Jasper's finesse and wisdom, he felt Morrie was exaggerating when he said that.

The plot of Lolita?

Did this mean that Jasper was Humbert and all of the younger generations in Harbor City were Lolita?

What a joke.

Harbor City Sacred Heart Hospital.

Since this was the best private hospital in Harbor City, every patient here was either rich or famous.

Even in Harbor City, which ranked among the top in the world in income per capita, not everyone could afford to pay 3000 Harbor Dollars for a 15-minute consultation with a doctor.

However, the high price provided meticulous care. They had the top medical team in Harbor City. If they could not cure your disease, they would contact the top experts in various fields around the world for a co-consultation.

The officials and nobles in this land cherished their lives the most. Because on this, Sacred Heart Hospital always had the foundation to take root in Harbor City. Meanwhile, its majority shareholder was the Atticus family.

Therefore, when Fabian was hospitalized, he was naturally assigned the best care.

At this moment, Fabian was warded in the best VIP room. His head was wrapped in gauze, but some blood was still seeping out from it. It made Fabian's face look very pale.

"How's the situation?" Fabian closed his eyes and lay in bed as he asked faintly.

“Those three were subdued and the Laws called your father a few hours ago. However, he doesn’t have much to say to Zachary Law.”

“He asked me to tell you to focus on recuperating.”

A man in his fifties said softly.

Fabian slowly opened his eyes and replied coldly, “This is a chance that’s hard to come by. I want to call my father. No matter what, I want to make the Laws pay a painful price.”

“Your father is taking care of this so please don’t worry too much,” the old man said comfortingly.

“Does he think I won’t be able to handle this because I suffered so badly before this?” Fabian growled.

The old man immediately stopped talking.

At this moment, the door to the room opened.

The bodyguard in black said respectfully, “Mr. Atticus, there’s someone here to see you.”

Fabian roared, “Is it a mediator for the Laws? How ridiculous. Do they not see that I am recuperating? I don’t want to see anyone!”

The bodyguard answered awkwardly, “He said his name is Jasper Laine and he said you’ll want to see him after I tell you his name.”

Fabian eyes widened immediately.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1429

Because he was overwhelmed with emotion, Fabian started coughing before he said anything.

“Mr. Fabian...?”

The man in his fifties came over quickly to pat Fabian’s back.

After he finally started breathing normally again, Fabian took a few deep breaths. Then, he leaned back on his bed and laughed. He said, "Jasper is here? How great! How amazing!"

"He's indeed the rival that forced me into a dead end. I thought he would hide and stay away from all the quarrels in Harbor City. However, he has bigger balls than I imagined."

"Mr. Atticus, you don't have to see someone like him," the old man said.

Fabian smirked and replied, "I'm seeing him. Of course, I am. I've never lost ever since I was born. However, I lost to him. How can I not meet such an interesting rival?"

When the old man heard that, he frowned slightly. However, he did not retort. Instead, he said, "If that's the case, let me welcome this Mr. Laine, okay?"

Fabian waved his hand and said, "Fine. Thank you, Waterson."

"It's my duty." Waterson bowed slightly to Fabian and then turned around to leave the room.

After a while, Jasper spotted Waterson from where he stood at the end of the corridor.

“Are you Jasper Laine?” Waterson asked with no expression on his face.

Jasper nodded and replied, “Did Fabian agree to see me?”

“Mr. Fabian agreed. However, before that, I have to tell you something,” Waterson said.

“Mr. Fabian is the successor of the Atticus family, so his safety is our priority. So after you go in, please watch your words. Don’t make him angry and don’t purposely trigger him.”

“Also, even though you caused him to suffer some disadvantages in some aspects, you have to remember that Mr. Fabian’s future encompasses the entire Atticus family. His support is unimaginable.”

“He was just fooling around. I hope you don’t feel proud because of some small achievements. This was merely child’s play to Mr. Fabian and the Atticus family.”

“Lastly, you can go in, but the person behind you can’t.”

Waterson’s last sentence was obviously aimed at Julian, who was standing behind Jasper.

Jasper scoffed and looked at Waterson. He said calmly, "Sir, I have a question for you..."

Waterson replied faintly with a frown, "Since you're pretty polite, you can ask, but I might not answer you."

"May I know how the Atticus family built such a huge business when they had someone like you around?" Jasper's statement caused Waterson to lift his eyebrows instantly.

"You punk!"

Waterson roared and lifted his hand to grab Jasper.

Jasper looked at Waterson calmly and stood his ground.

Meanwhile, a gust of wind appeared from behind him. It was Julian.

Their arms touched a few times about 60 centimeters in front of Jasper. However, in the blink of an eye, they retracted their hands.

“I was wondering why a snotty kid like you would dare to come here. It seems that you have an expert with you.”

Waterson looked at Julian in shock as he said to Jasper. Only people in the same industry would know whether the other party was truly skilled.

After the small fight just now, Waterson was shocked by Julian’s ability.

Reality is not a novel and there were not so many fortuitous meetings. Therefore, the short fight just now was not enough to display any physical capability. Yet, Waterson was surprised. He had trained for decades and yet, he was not confident in besting Julian.

“Kickboxing from the Dragon’s Palm and the Twelve Road palm. Young man, who is Sid Welles from Pegasus City in the mainland to you?” Waterson asked Julian in a serious tone.

“He’s one of my masters,” Julian answered insipidly.

“Also, you’re using the Waterson style boxing. Mr. Bart Waterson is also one of my masters. I heard him saying that he had a cousin back then and he was kicked out of the family when he was young. After the cousin went to Harbor City, they lost all contact with him.”

Waterson smirked, "So you're that old beast's disciple." After Waterson finished talking, he did not care about seniority anymore. He started to brazenly throw punches again.

Once again, his target was Jasper.

A look of rage flashed across Julian's eyes as he lifted his hand to block Waterson.

After more than ten rounds, the outcome was evident.

Waterson stumbled three steps backward and was breathing heavily. Right now, he was gasping for air.

On the contrary, Julian's face was slightly red and he looked as if he had just finished warming up.

"It seems that you can't stop me," Julian said faintly.

"How arrogant!" Waterson growled. He wanted to charge at Julian again as he felt that he had embarrassed himself. However, a bodyguard ran over to them from Fabian's room that was at the end of the corridor.

“Waterson, Mr. Fabian said to stop immediately,” the bodyguard said fearfully.

When Waterson heard that, his expression changed. Finally, he forced himself to stop.

His expression made it seem as if he was unhappy that he had just been robbed of a victory. However, he let out a sigh of relief in his heart.

As they were fighting, he understood he was not Julian’s rival.

If they continued, he would be asking to be humiliated. Therefore, this escape path from such an embarrassing situation could not have come at a better time.

“Since Mr. Fabian said so, you guys should go in now,” Waterson said harshly.

“Julian,” Jasper called out faintly.

“Jasper,” replied Julian.

“You said he’s the traitor of your master and he even called your master a beast. You should be grateful to your teacher as if they were your parents. Teach him a lesson on behalf of your master.”

After Jasper said that, he did not look at the change of expression on Waterson’s face as he walked straight into the room.

Julian looked at Waterson frigidly before an extremely arrogant smile appeared on his lips.

Jasper ignored the sounds of the fight and Waterson’s grunts of pain behind him.

It would be fine so long as Julian was not disadvantaged. He knew nothing about boxing but he could tell that Julian was able to defeat Waterson.

As for those bodyguards, Julian was not worried at all. Julian was even better at fighting off a group.

On the contrary, Jasper’s meeting with Fabian might not be so easy.

While pondering, he had already lifted his hand to push open the door of the room.

After he walked into the room, he found that not only did the air not smell like disinfectant, it smelled faintly of flowers instead.

It was not like a hospital room at all. Instead, it was more like a luxurious suite.

However, there was only one bed in the middle of the room.

Fabian was looking at him icily from the bed.

Jasper and Fabian had fought numerous times. It was already clear who the winner was, but this was the first time the two of them had actually met each other.

“Jasper, you’re so courageous.”

This was the first thing Fabian said to Jasper after they met.

When he said the second sentence, his tone sounded more malevolent.

“Are you not scared that I’ll make you stay in Harbor City forever?”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1430

“Of course I’m scared.”

Even though Jasper said that, he did not look scared at all.

“Why don’t you do it now, Mr. Atticus? You have so many people out there. You only need to say a word and then I’ll die on the spot.”

Fabian looked at Jasper and smirked, “Interesting.”

Jasper strode to a chair beside the bed and sat down. Then, he took out an apple and started peeling it naturally.

He was like a normal caretaker as he lowered his head to look at the spinning apple and the apple skin that was growing longer and longer. Then, he said slowly, “Since you’re hurt, you have to rest more. You have to eat more fruits to replenish your vitamins. It’s good for the recovery of your wounds.”

Fabian frowned and looked at Jasper suspiciously. He started to look more impatient as well.

“Jasper, what are you trying to say?”

Jasper chuckled and said, “Are you getting impatient? This is not the Mr. Atticus I know.”

“What is your impression of me?” Fabian scoffed.

“I won’t say as steady as a mountain, but you wouldn’t be so easily frustrated. However, there’s no difference. You’re still someone I defeated.”

Jasper’s words clearly infuriated Fabian.

“Do you think you’ve won?” Fabian looked at Jasper with a mocking look.

“Judging from the timing of events, the time the fire started last night was also the same time I took down all of your positions on the Dow Jones Index.

“In other words, once you see your capital account when the Dow Jones market commences tonight, you will find a few red zeroes.”

When Jasper said this, he handed the peeled apple to Fabian. Then, he continued while grinning, “Fortunately, the index futures market will forcefully liquidate your assets if you don’t have any funds left. If you’re allowed to go into debt, you’d probably be a billion dollars in debt now, Mr. Atticus.”

The corners of Fabian’s lips twitched.

After he looked at Jasper grimly, he looked at the apple in Jasper’s hand.

An ordinary person would fly into a rage by now, but Fabian was not an ordinary person.

He laughed and then took the apple from Jasper. After he took a bite, he said, “If that’s not my apple, I wouldn’t dare to eat it.”

“If you won’t call your men to shoot me to death here, then I won’t be so stupid as to have the thought of poisoning you here,” Jasper shrugged and said.

As Fabian chomped down on the apple, he said profoundly, “Not bad. This apple tastes so refreshing.”

“Jasper, as things stand, I’ve lost half of all my funds to you.”

Jasper lifted his eyes and said, "So are you saying that there's more to come?"

"Of course." Fabian smiled coyly again. Then, he lifted his finger to point at the outside of the window. He said, "Henry is still locked up over there. What are you willing to risk to get him out?"

"He doesn't need me to risk anything to save him," Jasper shook his head and said.

Fabian scoffed and said faintly, "Jasper, you're too confident."

"Mr. Atticus, imagine if a normal person with a normal intelligence had two buttons in front of them. One could make someone else lose 1 million bucks while the other button could make themselves earn 500 thousand bucks, what do you think the average person would choose?"

"The 500 thousand button of course," Fabian said insipidly.

"That's right. This will reflect upon our negotiation."

Jasper clapped his hands and said with a grin, "Free Henry, Alex, and Howard and the Dow Jones Index won't change tonight. Even though you won't be able to get back everything you lost, you can preserve half of the one billion US Dollars you put in yesterday.”

Fabian immediately understood what Jasper was implying.

This was a blatant threat.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1431

It was either Fabian let Henry and the gang go or he would be left with nothing.

Jasper was confident because he knew that even if Fabian did not agree to let them go, Henry would still be safe. He would just need to suffer a few more days of hardship.

After all, the Laws were still around, and the Atticus family was not prepared to have a complete fall out with the former. Moreover, if they really fell out with the Laws, the Laws would go mad if Fabian targeted Henry. This would force the old master to show his face. This would bring no benefits to the Atticus family.

Hence, what was in front of Fabian right now was a deal. Jasper was willing to use 500 million US Dollars in exchange for Henry's early release.

It seemed that Jasper would suffer a huge loss from this, but this bold yet foolish behavior made Fabian feel extremely humiliated. Because this 500 million should belong to him! He even got this loan after he mortgaged 100% of Empire Meet's stock rights. Right now, Jasper was using his own money to bargain for Henry!

"Jasper, you're so calculative. This money should be mine! You don't even need to spend a dime and yet you want to take Henry away from me?" Fabian said coldly.

Jasper shook his head and said, “Mr. Atticus, firstly, you have to know that in this situation, if I say the money is yours, then it’s yours. If I say it’s not, then it’s not.”

This statement felt like a huge kick to Fabian’s ribs. He immediately exploded. “How dare you come to Harbor City and strut around in front of me?”

“I have the ability to do so.” Jasper shrugged and placed the fruit knife down slowly. He smiled softly at Fabian and continued, “If you’re the one who wins, I guess you’ll be even more nefarious than me, right?”

“Good! Amazing! Jasper, I lost so much money and I don’t care about this last 500 million US Dollars. Worse comes to worst, I don’t want any of it!”

Jasper grinned and replied, “Of course, you have the right to choose...”

“However, you’re no stranger to this thing, right, Mr. Atticus?”

As Jasper said that, he took out an agreement.

When Fabian saw the header of this contract, his eyes contracted.

'Mortgage Agreement'. And below that was his signature!

With just one look, Fabian was sure that this was the agreement he signed when he mortgaged 100% of Empire Meet's stock right to loan 500 million US Dollars.

"How did you get that?" This was the first time in this meeting that Fabian failed to control his expression.

Fabian had been deliberately showing Jasper when he was mad, or when he was mocking him, or when he was being calm.

When one got to this stage of life, no one would be so stupid as to show their true emotions on their faces. However, at this moment, Fabian could hold himself back anymore.

He could not imagine that the loan he got from the underground money firm would end up in Jasper's hands.

Jasper chuckled lightly. He recalled how when he got off the plane, he ran into Kayden's people. Kayden's present really helped him a lot.

That was why he dared to come here. It was because he understood Fabian's true condition from this agreement.

If Fabian did not use his family's power, he would have nothing.

This was exactly the confidence Jasper needed to pin Fabian down on the negotiation table.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1432

Jasper did not care how Kayden obtained this agreement. However, this did not stop Jasper from getting to know Kayden once again.

Indeed, the good guy with a smile always on his face was not a good person.

The Langdon father and son duo had almost the same temper. In order to seek revenge, he was able to suffer in silence for so many years.

Jasper also had reason to believe that Kayden had planted a lot of spies around Fabian.

He even had a bolder suspicion. He suspected that the ambition and preparation the Langdon father and son had poured into Harbor City was far beyond anyone's imagination. If not, how would one explain why Kayden's people had been waiting at the airport before Jasper even got off the plane?

The Langdon father and son were horrifying.

However, they shared the same enemy, so it was not the time to think of such a thing.

"Mr. Atticus, you have to know that all the lender needs is to recover the principal sum and interest on time. However, if someone is willing to pay a higher price to buy the mortgage, they would naturally be willing to trade," Jasper said flatly.

"You bastard!" Fabian was immediately infuriated.

"I know those heartless scoundrels from the underground money firm were god for nothings. For the sake of money, they'll even kneel and call a dog their father!"

Fabian had a malevolent look on his face and he did not realize he had just exposed another secret to Jasper.

He borrowed his money from the underground money firm.

After remembering this information, Jasper said, "To the Atticus family, it doesn't matter if it's 500 million US Dollars or even a billion US Dollars, those are all small numbers. They can accept it, no?"

"If you were to tell everyone about this, I think you'd be able to settle all of your finance problems, right?"

Fabian turned around and looked sinisterly at Jasper. He said, "Are you threatening me?"

Jasper shrugged and replied calmly, "I'm talking about a business deal with you, Mr. Atticus. I'm just analyzing the current situation for you right now."

"Do you think I need you to analyze this for me?" Fabian said with a cold chuckle.

"Perhaps not. So, Mr. Atticus, are you going to make the decision, or am I going to make it for you?" Jasper asked.

Fabian's expression was bone-chilling. He was looking at Jasper like he was going to eat him alive.

However, he did not reject Jasper's offer immediately. His family was loaded, so why did he put up collateral at the underground money firm?

Even if he used his name to put up collateral or ask for a loan in the bank, he would be able to get the money within the shortest time possible along with the lowest interest rate.

Do not think that rich people did not care about interest. With a loan of 1 billion US Dollars, the daily interest would be an astronomical figure. The rich were just smarter and more meticulous in planning and accounting than the poor.

If they could avoid any unnecessary expenditure, they would not spend a penny more.

However, the reason Fabian did such a thing was so that he would not become the talk of the town.

He was very famous and there were so many people looking at him.

If he took money from his family, then getting defeated by Jasper and losing a billion US Dollars would serve as the catalyst for the other families to attack him and his father.

Both he and his father, Sawyer, did not want to face a situation like this.

Meanwhile, it would be the same if he asked for a loan from the bank. There were no secrets in banking. Fabian knew if he put up collateral at the bank, everyone in Harbor City would know he was facing bankruptcy. If he handed the documents in the morning, his dirty laundry would be aired for everyone to see before lunchtime.

Now, Jasper was using this to threaten him.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1433

It was a blatant conspiracy. Fabian had to agree no matter what.

The helplessness and the humiliation caused Fabian to despise Jasper.

As Fabian looked at Jasper, he said, “So what if you get Henry and the gang out? Of course they have to pay the price after they did something like that.”

“Even if I agree to let them go free, do you think my family and I will forgive them?”

Jasper replied insipidly, “If you touch them, I will take action. If your family wants to touch them, the Laws will seek revenge. This is what’s going to happen.”

“I don’t expect us to completely eradicate our shared hatred with this trade alone. It’s not realistic. There’s no way that we’ll shake hands and be friends.”

“However, a long-term hostility shouldn’t affect our small collaboration this time. Also, this collaboration will be like swapping our chess pieces on a chessboard.”

“You’ll get back some of your losses so the damage won’t be so bad. Meanwhile, I’ll get what I want. It’s a win-win situation, no?”

Fabian looked at Jasper and burst out laughing all of a sudden.

“You abandoned the chance to easily defeat me just because you want to get Henry out of mere sooner.”

“You and I both know that if you expose the information you have in your hand, all of my positions on the Dow Jones Index will be liquidated. I will also become a laughing stock in Harbor City. I’ll also be put under huge pressure by my family.

“It’s such a useful card and you want to use this to get Henry out sooner, is it really worth it?”

“Some thing’s value can’t be measured on paper,” Jasper said calmly.

Henry caused such a huge kerfuffle, and this outcome aside, even if Henry did not come to Harbor City under his instruction, Jasper would still do everything to get Henry out after he was caught up in so much trouble. This was not something he could place a value on.

“How touching.”

Fabian chuckled coldly, but obviously, he did not believe Jasper.

In his opinion, either Jasper was stupid for doing this, or he was trying to use this chance to get on the Laws' good side.

Fabian was someone who simply would not do something that would not bring any benefit to him. Furthermore, he would also harm others to benefit himself. Hence, this was possibility not totally unimaginable to him.

And could Jasper, someone who would be able to defeat him, really be so stupid?

Even if Jasper was conceited, he would not have this thought right now.

Therefore, he immediately suspected that Jasper merely wanted to get something from the Laws.

Judging from Fabian's expression, Jasper knew what he was thinking. However, it did not matter. What Fabian had in mind was none of Jasper's concern.

As he said back then, they were enemies, so even if they worked together this one time, their rivalry on the chessboard would not change. Therefore, Jasper did not care about what Fabian thought.

Fabian did not say anything and Jasper did not urge him.

At this moment, the atmosphere was tense.

"This matter touched upon the family's profits. I can't let him go just because I want to."

After a long while, Fabian said slowly. Even though he did not agree immediately, he was more lenient now.

"That's your business to handle."

"If you agree, then I can give you some time to fix this. Perhaps three to five hours. I would think, Mr. Atticus, that this would be enough time to convince your family."

Fabian said indignantly, “Just a few hours? What do you think I am? Even if I’m the head of the family, I still have to consider how the elders and other family members feel. How is so little time enough?”

After he said that, the door of the room burst open. A body covered in blood crashed through the door and flew into the room alongside a cloud of sawdust.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1434

The sudden change surprised Jasper and Fabian.

The two of them turned around to see what was going on. Then, they saw Julian walking through the door that had crashed open while stepping on the sawdust.

At this moment, Julian’s entire body was hot. His skin was glowing abnormally red as if he had been burnt.

After they looked closely, they could see that his head was also steaming slightly.

However, Julian looked as if he was in great condition. He was breathing normally and his eyes were shining. Furthermore, he did not look like he was injured.

On the contrary, the person on the floor was almost unrecognizable. His body was covered in blood. The tastefully chosen clothes on his body had been ripped into pieces and were now hanging from his body.

His two arms were twisted in bizarre angles. They were like two knots by his side. He wanted to get up but the severe internal injuries and the wound on his arms prevented him from doing so. Hence, he could only turn his body and cough out blood while lying on the ground.

This person was Waterson, who had been accompanying Fabian.

The outcome was clear after the two of them fought.

Fabian narrowed his eyes, he was feeling extremely shocked.

Waterson had worked with the Atticus family for many years and been with them through many things. Fabian was even kidnapped by some kidnappers when he was in senior high.

However, at that moment, Waterson saved him while defeating six ferocious heavily armed desperados single-handedly.

Fabian had also seen Waterson severely injure an adult man who had constantly trained.

Because of all this, in Fabian's eye, Waterson was without equal. He knew Waterson was good with his fists.

Now that Fabian had gotten into trouble, the Atticus family asked Waterson to come here to protect him. However, Fabian did not expect that the unequalled Waterson would be beaten to the ground one day.

He lifted his eyes to glance outside the room. Even though he could not see the entire corridor, he could see the upper body of his bodyguard lying on the floor near the door.

There was no doubt about it, more than ten bodyguards outside had all been defeated.

Fabian's face turned dark and he said frigidly, "Jasper, is this one of the tokens of your discussion with me?"

Jasper shook his head and laughed, "No. Even if I were stupid, I wouldn't use force to threaten you in Harbor City. I still want to leave Harbor City alive."

“Stop talking nonsense. The Laws are so close to you. If my family or I want to touch you, we’d have to be prepared to start a battle with the Laws. We’re all smart people so stop pretending to be dumb.”

Fabian’s angry roars caused the smile on Jasper’s smile to become more radiant.

He looked at the time and said, “Mr. Atticus, we’re busy people so let’s not waste time.”

The corners of Fabian’s lips twitched. This was the first time he had felt so helpless. At this moment, even if he had a lot of tricks up his sleeves, he could not do anything.

It was obvious that Jasper would not stop until he reached his goal. Yet, Fabian could not say no to the terms he offered.

After taking a deep breath, Fabian said calmly, “Three hours. I need three hours.”

Jasper got up after he heard that. He said, “Then I shall wait for your good news.”

After he said that, Jasper turned around and walked to the door.

Julian did not hesitate and he immediately followed Jasper out.

Fabian looked at Waterson on the floor and said coldly, "I will remember this."

Jasper did not turn around and immediately walked out the door.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1435

After Jasper left, Fabian's furious roars came from the hospital room.

"Damn it!"

Fabian grabbed a vase from the side of the bed and smashed it against the television that was hanging on the wall opposite the bed. With a loud crash, the vase and the television both broke.

At this moment, Waterson struggled to get up from the puddle of blood on the floor. He lowered his head and said to Fabian, "Mr. Fabian, it's my fault."

Even though Fabian was furious, he hated that he could not kick this useless old thing to death. After he took a deep breath and suppressed the impatience and anger in his heart, he flashed a stiff smile.

Then, he said, "That punk is so wily and mischievous. He has someone powerful with him too, so how can I blame you, Waterson? You're so badly injured. Let me ask the doctor to come look at you. You have to recuperate now."

Anyone would be touched if they were cared for and not criticized after a serious failure.

After Waterson heard that, he was even more remorseful. He said, "Thank you for your forgiveness, Mr. Fabian."

'What a good-for-nothing!'

After Fabian cursed in his heart, he said faintly, "Waterson, you've worked in the Atticus family for so many years. Even if weren't able to contribute this time, you've worked hard for us. Therefore, this small failure means nothing. Jasper will surely regret this in the future. Waterson, you should go get someone to take a look at your wounds."

After he watched Waterson walking away with a limp, Fabian murmured coldly. "If I didn't feel that you're useful to the family, you won't be able to suppress my anger even if you died a hundred times."

After a while, Fabian picked up the phone and called a number.

“Father, it’s me. Jasper came over just now.”

There was silence on the other end of the phone.

After a long while, Sawyer finally said, “It’s easy to let them go, but it’ll be difficult to get such a good chance again in the future.”

“Father, a lot of the elders in the family don’t agree with us starting a battle with the Laws, right?” Fabian said calmly.

“Until that old thing from the Laws doesn’t die, those good-for-nothings won’t dare to do anything... However, we have to make the Laws pay.”

Fabian said coldly, “It’s of paramount importance that we fight the Laws. We still need some time to prepare for this. However, this is not the best time.”

“Even so, I can’t wait a second more to defeat Jasper!”

Sawyer was silent for a while, then he said, “This is your affair to handle. You’re not a child anymore so you have to make your own decisions. If you think this action will be more beneficial, then I’ll entertain you.”

“However, you have to be aware that your previous failure has led to the others in the family holding different opinions about you. “If you get defeated by the same person twice, then it’ll make us look very passive.”

Fabian thought about the price he had to pay and then the corners of his lips twitched.

“Dad, I don’t have another way out.”

Sawyer asked with a deep voice, “How much did you lose?”

“All of the assets under my name.”

Fabian’s answer caused Sawyer to start breathing heavily on the other side of the phone.

As Fabian's father and the head of the Atticus family, naturally, Sawyer knew how much money that was. However, what shocked him the most was not the money. The loss of this money was nothing to the Atticus family and Sawyer.

What truly shocked him was the fact that Fabian had lost everything this time. This had never happened before!

Life at The Top – Chapter 1436

For Sawyer, even though Fabian had lost everything, the money really did not matter. Rather, it was the fact that his son, who had never failed before throughout his whole life, was completely defeated when he faced Jasper.

“What is wrong with you? You were so amazing when you faced Jasper. Even the elders in the family had nothing to say about you. And that was the time you and I had completely established your position and strength in the family. How did you lose everything this time?”

It was only reasonable for Sawyer to be mad.

As the old saying went, these rich and famous families emphasized the honor the parents received when their children’s position rose. Even though they were not in a feudalistic era now, within the family, the performance of one’s offspring could affect the elders’ opinions of their parents to a certain extent. This was an age-old fact.

If Fabian was useless, then Sawyer might not get his position as head of the family.

After all, the previous head should not only consider the issue of the transfer of power to the next generation during the handover, but also the issue the third generation would have a hundred years later.

If Fabian was useless, and if Sawyer forcefully handed down the position of the head to his son upon growing older, he might cause turmoil. This was something that a wise head of a big family would never do.

When Sawyer criticized him, Fabian replied grimly, "I lost and there's nothing to justify the result. However, I didn't completely lose. I still have some cards in my hand. Once I play them, Jasper will die for sure."

"Are you confident?"

"I am confident!"

Sawyer thought about this for a very long while and then chose to believe in Fabian once again.

"Alright, what do you need me to do?" Sawyer asked in a deep voice.

"Continue to take action against the Laws. Even though we let Henry go, this doesn't mean we'll let this issue rest. Otherwise, it'll be hard to explain to the family."

"I need the family to distract the Laws for me. If not, it's going to be difficult for me to do this with the Laws helping Jasper unconditionally."

“Aside from that, I don’t need anything else. I can handle it myself.”

Sawyer said calmly, “As a descendant of a rich family, your starting point is a finishing line that a lot of people won’t be able to reach even in a few lifetimes. And because of this, you don’t have a lot of chances to make mistakes.”

“If you make even the slightest mistake, a lot of people will place you under a microscope. Therefore, you should consider the advantages and disadvantages of this carefully.”

“As for what you asked me to do, I will do it well.”

After Sawyer said that, he hung up the phone.

Fabian closed his eyes and thought for a long time after he put the phone down. When he slowly opened his eyes, his gaze was extremely icy. He knew what his father said just now was more like a warning than a reminder. He could not lose again. If he lost again, his biological father would abandon him, let alone his family.

Power was always more important than relationships in a family.

Besides, if he and his father let go of their power, what else would they use to maintain their relationship? Those elders in the family were not easy to deal with.

“How can I lose this time? Jasper, tell me, how are you going to win?”

Fabian’s icy gaze was filled with venom as he murmured to himself.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1437

Fabian was a man of his word. He said three hours, so Jasper saw Henry and the gang getting escorted out of the detention center not a minute more or a minute less.

Henry was grumbling as he strutted out of there. As he walked, he was boasting to Alex who looked very off-color.

“What did I say? So what if he’s Fabian Atticus? Does he have an extra ball hanging between his legs? Even if I f*ck him up, what can he do to me? He’ll still let us out obediently in the end.”

While he was being detained, Henry knew no one would dare to do anything to him. On the other hand, Howard’s hot temper and impressive body ensured the latter did not suffer much.

On the contrary, Alex, who was weaker and did not have a powerful family, suffered quite a lot. Therefore, he became the target for them to vent their anger. Those people were obviously venting the anger they accumulated from Henry and Howard onto Alex. Thus, Alex's face was swollen and bruised. He was even walking with a limp.

However, fortunately, he only suffered some flesh wounds. Even though Alex did not have a strong family like the Atticus Family or the Laws, he was still someone well-known and reputable in Harbor City. Even though those people listened to the Atticus family, they did not dare to go overboard with this.

“Mr. Law, you're fine, but I'm not. ”

Alex clutched his face and said with a sob.

However, after he said that, he did not hear Henry's response for a very long time. He lifted his head and saw Henry running toward a man on the opposite of the road while screaming on top of his lungs.

“F*ck me! I knew you wouldn't leave me to die!”

Henry ran toward Jasper and pulled him into a tight hug.

This action stunned Alex and Howard. Everyone knew Henry's temper and behavior, so who was worthy of being treated like that by him?

As Henry's two best friends, Alex and Howard never experienced this kind of affection before, even though they had gone through thick and thin with him. Alex started to feel a little jealous inside.

Meanwhile, Howard stared at Jasper while looking pensive.

After patting Henry's back heavily, Jasper said, "How are you? Did you suffer in there?"

Henry said cockily, "They wouldn't dare to even if you gave them balls of steel."

Jasper nodded and said, "This is my fault. I didn't think this through."

Henry grinned and said, "What does it have to do with you? I let it go to my head back then. I can't stand seeing that idiot Fabian looking pleased and arrogant. That's why I decided to stir sh*t up."

"Well, your father put all important matters aside and is waiting for you to go back home now," Jasper said.

Henry's expression changed and he said, "Damn, straight out of the pan and into the fire, huh? I can't go home now, if I do, that old thing will kill me."

"Don't worry, I'll be with you," Jasper said with a soft smile.

At this moment, Alex and Howard walked over.

"Let me introduce you guys, this idiot with the swollen and bruised face is Alex Jean, and that's Howard Branson."

Henry pointed at the two of them and said, "This is the boss. He's my brother-in-law, Jasper Laine."

When Alex heard Jasper's name, his eyes lit up. Not a lot of people knew what Jasper looked like in the circle of young masters in Harbor City. However, almost everyone had heard of him.

News of his work from the previous market rescue to the direct monopoly of half of the entertainment industry in Harbor City that almost disabled Mitch and the others had spread like wildfire.

Moreover, they knew that Henry was causing trouble for Fabian for Jasper's sake.

“Hello, boss!” Alex had no limits. He immediately went and greeted Jasper to try to suck up to him.

On the other hand, Howard merely nodded at Jasper and said stiffly, “Hello.”

Jasper had a good feeling about these two men who were willing to risk everything for Henry. Hence, he smiled and said, “Thank you both. I owe you one.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1438

Alex chuckled. His eyes were filled with happiness. Even though the second generations looked as if they were simple-minded and they did not need to consider anything other than thinking about how to have fun and cause trouble, in reality, they were all very stressed.

They were at the age where the burden of the task of succession had begun to subtly affect all aspects of their lives.

For example, Alex was the only son of the Jeans. Therefore, there would be no pressure for him to fight over the family property. Meanwhile, Phil was still healthy so he could still work for a few more years. However, Phil was not getting any younger, and Alex could not always be a second-generation who only knew extravagance.

Therefore, his instinct drove him to draw up a relationship with Henry and also win Jasper's favor.

Even though from the looks of it now, Jasper did not have any foundation in Harbor City, which made this feel like an empty promise.

However, smart people would know that it was only a matter of time before Jasper rose now that he had long list of glorious past achievements and also the unconditional support of the Laws in Harbor City.

Right now, if the families in Harbor City wanted to expand their business to the mainland, they would only have to do half the work to reap twice the reward if they had Jasper's help.

One would know this if they just looked at the Laws' huge investment in the mainland over the past year. One would have more ways out if one had more friends. Jasper was a young man with the Laws as support and he also had a lot of resources in the mainland.

This was a golden blue-chip stock.

"I hope I can use this favor now."

Howard suddenly spoke up. Henry, Alex, and Jasper were all stunned.

Soon, they came back to their senses. Jasper smiled and asked Howard, "Okay, what can I do for you? However, I might not have as much advantage as you guys in Harbor City, so I might not be able to help you with things that are too difficult."

Howard shook his head and said seriously, "You can definitely help me with this."

As he said that, Howard pointed at Julian, who was standing behind Jasper. He had an intense desire to battle shooting from his eyes. He said, "I want to learn from your bodyguard."

Jasper turned his head to look at Julian dumbfoundedly. Then, he answered Howard, "He's not my bodyguard but a brother of mine. If you want to learn from him, you can ask him yourself. If he's unwilling, I won't force him."

Julian's expression changed slightly upon hearing that. Then, the corners of his lips turned upward.

Henry chimed in happily, "Julian is kind of like my master. So, Howie, you're not strong enough to fight him yet!"

Howard ignored Henry as he looked heatedly at Julian. He said, "My friend, I can feel a power from you that makes me tremble. I want to fight you with everything I have."

Julian did not say anything. Instead, he just looked at Jasper silently.

Jasper shook his head. He had never seen such an odd request before. This guy was willing to get beat up voluntarily.

"Julian, you can decide for yourself. If you're interested, you can accept his offer," Jasper said.

Julian shrugged and said to Howard, "I won't go easy on anyone."

"That's good. If you are being cautious not to overdo it, it'll end up being a performance and not a fight which you can learn from. Only true men fight properly!"

Howard yelled in excitement. He was a man standing 1.9 meter tall, looking very much like a bear in human form. His entire body emanated a desire to fight.

"This place is not suitable. Come with me," Julian said flatly.

When the two of them disappeared from the corner of the road, Jasper smiled at Henry and said, "Your friend is pretty interesting."

"He's a sucker for kickboxing. He's on the brink of madness after so much training." Henry shrugged. Even though he was saying that, he had a look of admiration in his eyes.

"The bodyguards in my family and my father's private bodyguard fought with him before. Whenever he sees someone strong, he won't be able to hold himself back. However, those bodyguards said that kid is such a genius with his fists. If he started training ten years earlier, he might be a master."

Alex pressed his lips together and said, "I wonder why he doesn't want to enjoy his life and instead constantly hangs out with dumbbells. He either stays in the gym or the boxing ring. What's so fun about a life like that?"

"Everyone has their own interest," Jasper said insipidly.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1439

While they were talking, Julian returned.

His breathing was steady, and there was no indication that he had done any exercised.

Howard followed him with a limp. He looked quite embarrassed. However, Howard had a strange grin on his face. He looked as if Julian had beaten him stupid.

“Wow, that was f*cking amazing!”

Howard yelled. When he opened his mouth, Jasper and the others could see that Howard had lost half of his front tooth. Howard looked a little goofy like that.

“Can I still ask you for a fight next time?”

Howard looked heatedly at Julian. It was as if Julian was his first love that he simply could not forget.

Julian ignored him and stood behind Jasper silently.

Howard was a little disappointed when he saw this. He scratched his head and said, "I guess I am still too weak. When I become stronger, I will definitely look for you."

As he said that, Howard planned to return to Henry.

"Your physical stamina is still okay. I can see that you have been trained to use certain skills, but the way you exert force is weak and you don't have enough foundation in the bottom half of your body. If you want to make greater progress over a short period, I suggest you train the bottom half of your body more.

"Don't think about any fancy moves-you are only suited to using your fists. Stand on a stump and do the horse stance for at least five hours a day. Then, you can gradually increase the intensity."

Julian's sudden statement excited Howard.

He bowed deeply to Julian and said sincerely, "I'm learning every day. Thank you for your advice."

With a wave of his hand, Julian gestured at Howard to stop being so courteous. Then, he stopped talking. Jasper and Henry smiled at each other.

“Your elders are still waiting for you to go back to Law Manor. You should show your faces to them first,” Jasper said.

Henry was surprised. “Aren’t you going back together with us?”

“I’ll go to the hospital first. I’ll meet Uncle Law later,” Jasper said.

Henry instantly knew that Jasper was going to go visit his employees, so he did not say much. He nodded at the two of them and left directly after that.

Howard was very grateful to Julian when he left. Judging from his posture, it looked as if he wished he could ask Julian to take him as a disciple.

Jasper turned around and went back to the car. Then, Jasper smiled at Julian, who was currently driving. “It’s rare for you to take the initiative to advise someone.”

“He is not bad.”

Julian said, “It’s just that he did not have much innate talent. However, he has perseverance.”

Did not have much innate talent...

Jasper recalled how Henry once said that Zachary's private bodyguard praised Howard for being a genius with his fist, but to Julian, Howard was reduced to someone with not much innate talent. Jasper could not help but feel a little curious. Just how talented was Julian when it came to fighting?

However, this was all gossip. Right now, Jasper should go to visit Jake as soon as possible.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1440

Harbor City Heavenly Hospital.

This was a high-end private hospital in Harbor City. Only the rich in Harbor City could stay here.

When Jasper arrived at Jake's room, Jake was attached to the IV while he watched television.

"You're so dedicated to your job. You should rest since you're hurt. You should recuperate before you think about work."

Jasper pushed the door open to walk in. He said this when he saw that the television on the wall was showing the financial news of the United States.

When Jake saw Jasper, he started panicking. However, Jasper pressed him down on the bed right before he could do so.

“Don’t move. I’ve asked the doctor and he said you have a slight concussion. You can’t move too much as you need to rest well.”

Jake said emotionally, “Mr. Laine, why are you in Harbor City?”

“You’ve been abducted, so as your boss, how can I not come to rescue you? If not, who would want to work for me?” Jasper chuckled and replied.

Jake said shamefully, “Mr. Laine, I’m sorry for being too careless. If I had known about this, I would have moved our workplace to a more secluded place. Perhaps we won’t have run into this issue if I did that.”

Jasper shook his head and said, “This has nothing to do with you. Your previous workplace was a secluded villa provided by the Laws who found you that place. Where else can you go if you intend to hide again?”

If Fabian wanted to find someone, he would be able to unless that person was not in Harbor City. Moreover, Jake had so many people in his team, and they had been doing transactions in the Dow Jones market this whole time. As long as someone got the IP address of their system from the securities regulatory commission, they would not be able to hide.

“Mr. Laine, is it over?” Jake asked.

“Half of it,” Jasper replied faintly.

He had nothing to hide from Jake, so he straightforwardly told Jake what had happened afterward.

When he heard that Henry had wanted to burn Empire Meet to the ground, he was dumbfounded.

However, when he heard that Jasper had reached a deal with Fabian, he could not control himself and said, “Actually, we can completely crush Fabian this time.”

Jasper smiled and said, “It’s not like that.

“You’re only thinking about it from a financial angle. You forgot that Fabian still has his family behind him. Now, Fabian doesn’t want things to escalate to an unconcealable level, so he will still cling onto his last card. He is also willing to pay a price for this.”

“However, if we forcefully removed his last card, Fabian will totally embarrass himself in front of everyone. However, this will also give his family a reason to brazenly intercept and put their foot into this matter.”

“At the end of the day, the thing that people of our level need to do is compromise and exchange terms. If we were to completely crush Fabian, he wouldn’t die unless we could also get rid of his family’s power in one go.”

After hearing what Jasper said, Jake nodded thoughtfully.

Jasper wanted to remind Jake of this as well.

After all, he still needed Jake to stay in Harbor City to take charge for him. Jake needed to look at an even bigger picture if he were to stay in this position. After all, he would not just be a financial agent Jasper had appointed to stay in Harbor City.

“Mr. Laine, does that mean we are giving up the chance to completely take down Fabian?” Jake asked reluctantly.

“He only has half a life left. It’ll be the same whether we finish him or not. He only has 500 million US Dollars, which will be just enough to pay for his funeral. What damage could he possibly cause?” Jasper said flatly.

Jake frowned and said, “Mr. Laine, I heard a lot of rumors back then. It seems that Fabian still has more tricks up his sleeve. Also, looking at his performance on the Dow Jones Market toward the end, I still see a lot of abnormal behavior.”

“It’s abnormal indeed. Now that we’ve relented on our assault, based on common sense, he should rush to flee the market. Yet, he’s not moving at all.”

Jasper said as he narrowed his eyes and recalled what Baz told him while he was on the way here.

“No, there must be more to this. Does Fabian not want to give up yet?” Jake answered immediately.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1441

“Give up? How would a person like that give up so easily? You overestimate us and underestimate Fabian,” Fabian said calmly. ‘

While he was talking, his phone rang.

“Are you in Harbor City?”

Celine’s calm voice came from the other end of the line.

Jasper smiled and said, “You’re so well-informed. I am indeed in Harbor City.”

“Do you know you’ve caused a lot of trouble?” Celine asked.

Jasper was not worried. When he heard Celine’s calm voice, he knew this issue would not be as huge as he imagined.

“Aren’t I always causing trouble?”

Celine sighed and continued, "This time it's not the same. I'll be waiting for you in Gambino's Noodle on Queen Road. You better hurry up, I only have two hours."

After she said that, she hung up before Jasper could say a word.

After he placed the phone down, Jasper seemed to be lost in thought.

It seemed that Celine had something important to tell him. She could not say it through the phone, so she had to tell him in person.

Moreover, this had to be something sensitive, otherwise they would not meet in a noodle shop.

Was Celine hiding from someone?

"You should rest. Don't think about work for now. I'll manage it myself."

Jasper did not have the mood to stick around any longer. So, he got up and told Jake.

The matter was not over yet. However, Fabian and his team would not dare to do anything to Jake right now. If they wanted to target someone, they would target Jasper. Hence, he was not worried about Jake's safety at this point in time.

"Alright, I'll go back to my post as soon as possible," Jake said, raising his spirits.

Jasper smiled and nodded. "Rest well. Perhaps you'll be useful in other ways."

He said this spontaneously to comfort the man, but Jasper did not expect this to come true.

After he left the hospital, he asked Julian to drive.

Queen Road was easy to find, but Gambino's Noodle was not.

Julian was not familiar with the roads in Harbor City, and right now, there was no GPS on one's phone so it was not as convenient to find a hidden shop. Thus, an hour passed before Jasper finally found the place.

Gambino's Noodle was hidden in an alleyway next to Queen Road. The place was not big and it looked aged. The moment Jasper entered the shop, he heard Celine's familiar voice.

“F*ck off, I don’t have time to entertain you right now!”

“You!”

Two cheeky thugs were standing next to Celine’s table. They grinned and said to Celine, “Why are you so hot tempered, sweet cheeks? We’re with Machino, so if you’re willing to play with us, you can do anything you want on this street.”

Jasper frowned.

This was the first time he had run into the local specialty of Harbor City thugs.

Even though it had been many years since the Handover, scum like this would always exist where there were people and society.

“Julian, throw those two scumbags outside.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1442

“Damn, are you trying to be a hero?”

The two thugs turned their heads to look at Jasper as they cursed.

“Do you know that we’re with Machino? Watch out or we’ll call our friends to come and kill you!”

After the thugs said that, Julian, who received Jasper’s orders, walked over.

One knew what would happen if Julian decided to teach those thugs a lesson.

After just a few moves, the two grumbling thugs had fallen to the floor before Julian even exerted any force. Julian then lifted the two of them as if they were chickens.

“Just you wait! I’ll call the guys over to kill you all!” One of the thugs had blood all over his face as he cursed and scolded continuously.

Julian tilted his head and smashed the thug’s face against the stairway railing.

Bright red blood and pearly white teeth flew all over the place as the thug cried out in immense pain.

About half of his teeth flew out from his mouth after this.

Then, Julian dragged the other thug who had fallen silent out of the noodle shop.

At this moment, Jasper walked to Celine.

“If you were a few seconds later, they might have abducted me to become their boss’ wife,” Celine grumbled.

Jasper smiled and said, “I should have delayed myself a bit then. I’ve never seen such a beautiful boss lady before.”

Celine glared at Jasper and said, “The noodles here are good. Do you want some?”

While Celine said that, she did not give Jasper a choice. She immediately called the terrified shop owner over and ordered a bowl of noodles.

To a mainlander like Jasper, noodles were just something akin to spaghetti and pasta.

However, Jasper was not a picky eater. He was able to accept everything except for cilantro.

His experience proven that this place, which was particularly favored by Celine, did have its own unique features. The noodles were fragrant and tender, and the broth was also delicious, which made the noodles very good.

“You said I’ve caused a big issue, yet you invited me here to eat noodles with you?”
After Jasper took two bites, he asked before drinking the broth.

Celine picked up some tissue to wipe the corner of her mouth. She said, “Since it’s something big, we can only talk about this slowly after we’re full.”

“I feel relieved after seeing you taking your time. It doesn’t seem like a major issue,”
Jasper said.

Celine glared at Jasper and replied bluntly, “It’s such a big issue that it’ll be meaningless even if we’re anxious about it now.”

Jasper frowned and waited for Celine to continue.

At this moment, Celine had no intention of keeping Jasper waiting. She sighed and said, "I took a big risk coming out to inform you this time. If the investment bank catches me, I'm afraid that not only will I lose my job, I might also be prosecuted for leaking trade secrets."

"What the hell is going on?" Jasper asked.

"Layman Investment Bank, Quantum Fund, and Softwin Investments held an emergency consultation with the Federal Reserve regarding the current economic situation of the United States three hours ago."

"Two hours ago, the top leaders of Colossal Investments, Morgan Financial Group, and six other top financial institutions on Wall Street were convened at the same time for a meeting. This meeting was hosted by Greenspaner, the chairman of the Federal Reserve."

"After President Paulson ended the video meeting, he spoke to the presidents of investment banks all over the world, including myself. Do you know what was the first thing Greenspaner said during the meeting with the Federal Reserve?"

Every name uttered from Celine's red and beautiful lips belonged to titans in the global financial world. Their names alone were enough to scare most people. The combination of these consortia and investment banks was enough to overturn the global economy. If these giants were sitting together in a meeting, then something was definitely amiss.

Jasper frowned and was in deep thought. He looked at Celine and said nothing.

Celine sighed again. Knowing that Jasper had no intention of entertaining her riddles, she said directly, “Now, there are despicable enemies lurking in the dark trying to take advantage of this terrorist attack to steal the economic achievements of the United States gained over the past hundreds of years. They are first starting with the economy as they provoke the majesty of the United States!”

These words carried a lot of weight.

“They also came from Greenspaner, who laid the foundation for the modern economic system of the United States. This could almost be regarded as a speech before the declaration of war. However, this battlefield was the financial battlefield, not one of blood and gunpowder.”

“He’s treating this as a matter of principle right? They’re borrowing prestige to scare others,” Jasper said lightly.

Celine looked at Jasper deeply and said, “You are now their primary target.”

“Is it because I was the earliest to plan my moves? That when the whole world treated me as a fool, it was soon revealed that I was the biggest winner of this attack?” Jasper asked.

Celine said with a nod, "Yes, but this is only one of the reasons."

"Although you made a lot of money, this money isn't even a splash in their eyes. The real problem is that someone is consciously guiding everyone to focus on you."

"Layman, Quantum Fund, and Softwin have beef with me. Hehe," Jasper said with a cold chuckle.

"It's good that you're aware."

Celine showed an extremely solemn expression on her face and said, "You must pay attention to this matter."

"How? Do you want me to spit out the money?" Jasper said.

Celine felt resentful towards Jasper for failing to meet her expectations. Then, she said, "How can you be so stubborn? Your personal strength is insignificant to the United States. Even if you were Bennett, even if you were a stack of ten Bennetts, it would not be enough for them to ignore the prestige they have as a first world country and ignore you."

“Moreover, the person who secretly wants to deal with you is employing a very simple method. It is to paint you as a target and make the people of the United States believe that you are the leader who’s going to lead the East to start a financial war against the United States!”

“And that Sorner will be behind you!”

“Once this consensus is reached, you will be doomed!”

Celine’s voice lingered in his ears, and Jasper closed his eyes slightly.

Morrison from Layman Investment Bank, Echo Welch from Softwin Investments, and Rogers from Quantum Fund.

However, these people did not have enough power to fight him so brazenly.

These three looked completely unrelated to one another, but there was one common trait that they all shared.

A relationship with Fabian from the Atticus Family. Everything was clear now. He understood what Fabian was planning to do.

When Jasper opened his eyes, he said sincerely, “How cruel. How heartless. How savage!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1443

Ever since he lost the game with Rogers from Quantum Fund by half a stroke in the Harbor City stock market, Jasper repeatedly reminded himself not to underestimate any enemy. He could not rely on the advantage of his reincarnation to treat everyone else as sub-human.

In this world, there were two kinds of people who were the most indispensable. One was an extremely clever genius, while one was the fool who thought he was extremely clever.

However, after learning about Fabian's entire plan, Jasper realized that he had still underestimated and underrated Fabian. That guy did not show his most vicious side in the previous match with him on the Dow Jones Index. Even when he fought to the point where his net worth vanished, he did not show it.

He chose to bare his fangs only after. At this moment, he was also at his deadliest.

Since Jasper had invested everything that he could, his assets could not be withdrawn in the short term.

It could be seen that Fabian had used himself as bait. It would have been good if he was able to get rid of Jasper in the first stage, but if he could not, this counterattack would surely doom him to eternal damnation.

“What do you mean?”

Celine did not know that Jasper had figured out so many things in just a few short seconds. She frowned and asked inexplicably when he said something so vague.

“Nothing...” Jasper shook his head. It was not that he did not want to explain to Celine, but that the matter was too complicated and would simply take too long a time to explain.

“Fabian should be the one behind all of these...”

Celine raised her eyebrows and said in disbelief, “The entire Atticus family might not be able to do such a huge thing. You must know that Layman, Softwin, and Quantum Fund, are much larger than the Atticus family. Could he really make these three investment banks act for him so obediently?”

“In many cases, as long as there is interest, a transaction can be facilitated. This is largely irrelevant to the status of both parties-it work as long as they have common interests,” Jasper said lightly.

Celine frowned and said, “It doesn’t matter whether it’s Fabian or someone else, the most important thing now is how to deal with this problem. Is it too late for you to get out now?”

Jasper glanced at Celine and shook his head.

Was she kidding? This was not like storing a few hundred bucks in the bank and withdrawing it when you needed to.

It was almost impossible to withdraw such a large amount of funds.

“How much money do you have in the Dow Jones Index now?” Celine asked in a frightened voice.

“It’s not just the Dow Jones Index. I am shorting the Dow Jones while still longing on gold. Now the overall invested capital has reached 8.5 billion US Dollars.”

That was right, since Jasper handed over all accounts to the Baz’s team to operate, under Jasper’s command, he had earned another 1.5 billion US dollars from the original investment of 7 billion US Dollars.

Jasper’s words made Celine, the president of the Terra regional branch of Colossal Investments who had long been accustomed to treating money as nothing more than a series of numbers, feel a numb sensation on her scalp.

The funds approved by Celine every day were at least one billion US Dollars.

However, the money came from investment banks and investors, so it came and went frequently. Although the cash flow was large, the overall capital was nothing excessive.

Throughout the entirety of the previous year, the performance of the Terra regional branch of Colossal Investments had an effective transaction revenue of 10 billion US Dollars. However, what was the profit? Less than 1.8 billion.

Even so, the performance of the Terra region was already the largest and most profitable region for Colossal Investments aside from the headquarters in the United States.

Despite all this, it paled in comparison to Jasper's profit from a single investment.

Jasper's profits this time were so big that the entire Terra regional branch of Colossal Investments would need to work for three or four years to achieve it.

It could even be said that because of the losses incurred by this financial crisis, Jasper's profits might have exceeded the total annual profit of Colossal Investments as a whole.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1444

What a joke! Colossal Investments was the world's largest investment bank.

“Y-You are crazy!” Celine said in shock.

Jasper did not feel proud at all.

He had memories from his past life. Even if he was a pig, he would dare to mortgage himself in the slaughterhouse to easily make this money. It was just a matter of the size of one's balls and the size of capital that could be leveraged.

“The 8.5 billion US Dollars is enough for the whole of Wall Street to be jealous. I now know why the three investment banks and even the Federal Reserve want to target you now.” Celine sighed.

“What about Colossal's attitude regarding this matter?” Jasper asked.

Celine shook her head and said, “You have to know that in the eyes of capitalists, there are only interests. Since you obviously cannot show them any hope of winning in this case, Colossal Investments may be inclined to side with the Federal Reserve.”

“When that happens, it will not only be Colossal, other investment banks and financial institutions in the United States will come to attack you.”

Jasper sneered.

“During this financial crisis, the retail investors in the United States were hit the hardest, followed by these financial institutions and investment banks that had heavily invested in the United States stock market.”

“They suffered heavy losses and naturally want to make it back. Therefore, it would be right up their alley if they destroy me and blame the economic system of the country for it after.”

Celine said, “It’s good that you understand this truth. Now, what are you going to do?”

“Hmm, by the way, are you able to withdraw all the funds within three days?”

Celine’s sudden question stunned Jasper.

Then, he smiled and said, “Based on what you just said, are you saying that you can hold down the entire Federal Reserve for three days?”

Celine gritted her teeth. “My family has a certain strength in the northern part of the United States. I can persuade my family and make them come forward to lobby the presidium of the Federal Reserve.”

“I can even communicate with some veteran congressmen if necessary, but you can’t take too long. If you can withdraw everything within three days, I will find a way to make it happen.”

Jasper was really surprised this time.

The ability to hold down the entire Federal Reserve for three days was impossible even for the Laws, let alone himself. It seemed that the status of Celine’s family in the United States was no lower than that of the Laws in Harbor City.

However, Jasper shook his head at the proposal.

“No...”

Celine was stunned. “Is three days not enough?”

“It’s not that three days are not enough, but I don’t plan to withdraw.”

Jasper's expression calmed down as he continued, "The Federal Reserve wants to work with Wall Street to take action. Their actions won't be affected regardless of whether I withdraw or not. If I am still there, they will take care of me first, but if I run away, who will they vent their anger on? Who will they seek out to bear their losses?"

Celine frowned and said nothing.

Jasper proactively continued, "They will look for Somer."

"The domestic economy has just begun to develop, and we can't afford such a heavy blow." Jasper's tone was calm.

Celine said angrily, "So you're going to paint yourself as a target? Is your meaningless sacrifice necessary? Will anyone even be grateful toward you?"

"Jasper, I always thought you were a sane person. I didn't expect you to go mad!"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1445

“I’m not being a target.”

Jasper frowned slightly, refuting Celine’s words.

“On the contrary, staying will be the best choice.”

“If I retreat, let’s not even consider whether or not the United States Federal Reserve will let me leave with so much money, let’s just look at the stock market that has been in operation for the past few years since Somer was established. It can’t organize an effective resistance in such a short period. At that time, how much will you lose?”

“Once the national economy collapses, will my JW enterprises still have the possibility of survival? With the skin gone, to what can the hair attach itself?”

“There is another question. I am doing this and don’t expect anyone to thank me, but it will not be a meaningless sacrifice.”

Celine was speechless by what Jasper said.

She knew very well that what Jasper said was the truth. However, she was still unconvinced.

“Even so, do you have to bet everything you have on this? Even if you stand in front, can you stop the assault from all of Wall Street’s capitalists? When the time comes, you’ll have no room for resistance at all.”

“Who said that?” Jasper said lightly.

Celine looked at Jasper in astonishment and slowly asked, “What can you do?”

When she thought about this problem from Jasper’s perspective, Celine really could not think of any possibility of winning the game.

“The Wall Street capitalists are the combined force of many financial giants and even oligarchs. No one can fight the world’s most modern and mature financial coalition today alone. Only another equally powerful coalition can fight it.”

Jasper’s clear words made Celine understand Jasper’s plan.

She stared at Jasper in disbelief and blurted out, “You’re delusional. In the face of such a terrifying opponent, no one will stand by your side to help you.”

Even the very powerful Colossal Investments whom she represented did not hesitate to abandon Jasper when the senior investment bank executives noticed the entire Wall Street and even the Federal Reserve's intention to take action against Jasper.

History already showed him the proof of this, so how could Jasper believe that he could find an ally to help him?

Celine felt that Jasper was simplifying the problem.

"Why don't you understand?"

Jasper smiled and said, "We have analyzed this before, Wall Street or the Federal Reserve just need a suitable target to vent on, such as Somer. However, I'm just one of the reasons why they're able to brazenly take action against the country."

"It's something very simple. Even you and I can understand it, but you don't think Somer can?"

"As I said before, with the skin gone, to what can the hair attach itself? There are always smart people in the country who see it clearer than you and me."

"Besides, what about the United States? It's not like they've never been defeated by our country before."

“It’s just that it’s a different battlefield this time, but do they think the people of Somer are pushovers?”

Celine looked at Jasper and did not say anything.

Even though they were not close, they knew they were the same kind of people. Once they made a decision, they would not change their mind unless something major happened. This stubbornness was able to give you success, but it could also make you lose everything.

However, Celine knew it would be impossible to convince Jasper today no matter what.

“Whatever. Just do as you like.” Celine sighed. “After all, you won’t be losing your life even if you lose all the money you have. Besides, they’re not interested in your life anyway.”

“Don’ t be so pessimistic. Are you so sure that I’ll lose?”

Jasper lifted the bowl and drank some broth after he said helplessly.

“That much is obvious. Everyone can see it clearly except yourself. What else can I do if you insist on running into the wall?”

After listening to Celine's resentful words, Jasper smiled and said, "No matter what happens, thank you..."

Jasper understood how much risk Celine had taken to deliver this news to him. In other words, if news of this spread to Wall Street, Colossal Investments would not necessarily protect her.

In the modern financial battlefield, intelligence was even more important than on the real battlefield.

If Jasper did not know anything about it, he would not react until Wall Street reached a consensus and began to launch an overwhelming attack. By then, it would be too late.

At that time, even if Jasper could fly, he could only admit his fate.

Thus, it could be said that Celine had saved Jasper's life this time, taking a huge risk in order to do so.

Celine was unbothered. "What's the use of me taking this risk when you're still stubbornly insisting to give up your life?"

"At least I know what to do, instead of just waiting stupidly for the other person to come attack me."

Jasper grinned and got up. He said, "I'll pay for this as a way to express my gratitude."

"I've never seen someone so stingy! How much does it cost for two bowls of noodles?" Celine was annoyed.

Since she was young, she always had a continuous supply of the opposite sex surrounding her. Because of her charm and familial power, the opposite sex around her could be described as elite. Even so, none of them were as shameless as Jasper.

Yet, the shamelessness of this guy always interested her...

Just as Celine was wondering if he was being cheap, Jasper handed some Harbor dollars to the boss.

"Keep the change," Jasper said.

When the two walked out, they saw about twenty to thirty thugs standing in front of the small shop entrance. They were carrying knives and they had cigarettes dangling from their lips. They were all looking at the shop with hostility.

Meanwhile, Julian stood expressionlessly at the door with several thugs already lying beneath his feet.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1446

“Damn, they’re out!”

The appearance of Jasper and Celine caused a commotion among the thugs who were embarrassed by Julian but still did not dare to rush up to him.

The thugs were very arrogant when they first came, but right now, they were embarrassed. The most embarrassed one among them was their boss, Machino.

He thought that since his men had been beaten, the matter would just lead to an ordinary gang fight. Machino would easily take care of this kind of small problem. As usual, he immediately called all his men who could come over. In the end, more than twenty of them arrived.

Under normal circumstances, after so many people arrived at the scene and the bosses of the two parties negotiated, the matter would be resolved after they agreed to pay some medical fees and get some benefits.

However, when he brought his men to the scene, he only saw Julian.

Machino naturally did not think that such a person was his opponent, so he immediately asked his men to do something.

After this, the situation developed to become what Jasper saw when he walked Celine out.

“Are you his boss?” Machino stood several meters away from Julian. Obviously, he was quite afraid of Julian’s strength.

Even so, he still spoke harshly to Jasper.

“Boss?”

This was the first time someone gave him such a title.

Jasper glanced at Julian with a smile, and then said to Machino, “I guess so.”

“Are you also the boss of those thugs behind you?”

Proper behavior was dependent on reciprocity. Hence, Jasper asked back.

Machino suddenly became proud and said, "Yes, I am in charge of this street. You can call me Machino. You look very foreign. Are you from Sharp Promenade or Causeway Bay?"

"I'm from the Mainland," Jasper said with a smile.

"Mainland?" Machine's eyes lit up. He thought Jasper was also in a gang, but he did not expect him to just be a mainlander.

"Your guy hurt my men. Based on the rules of the gang, do you want to solve this civilly or with fists?"

"What do you mean by civilly or with fists?" Jasper asked curiously.

"You're indeed a mainlander. You don't even understand this."

Machino sneered and said more confidently, "If you want to solve this civilly, then it'll be the medical expenses of my men plus the cost of lost work and recuperation. It'll be fifty thousand bucks per person. But if you want to solve this by fist, then I'll pay you back double what you did to them."

“Sounds fair.” Jasper nodded.

Machino immediately became excited when he heard this.

This guy from the mainland did not understand the market at all. In normal fights like this, everyone would get a compensation of a few thousand bucks, and if their injury was severe, it would be about ten thousand bucks. After all, they were all thugs and they were very lowly.

As long as they did not lose their limbs or were severely injured, they did not even need to go to the hospital. They would be fine after buying some medicine.

When Machino thought about this, he rolled his eyes and smiled gloomily at Jasper. “Seeing that you are someone who plays by the rules, this will be easy. You only need to pay for the medical expenses of my men and I will forget this matter. If I report this to my boss, you will be in big trouble.”

“In this case, you should report to your boss,” Jasper said seriously.

Celine next to him burst out laughing.

Machino was stunned.

This was not right.

How come this guy from the mainland who had previously looked so gullible suddenly became so firm?

Life at The Top – Chapter 1447

Without giving him a chance to react, Jasper turned to Julian and said, “I will wait for you in the car.”

After speaking, Jasper left the scene with Celine.

“Hey! How dare you leave? You f*cking mainlander...”

Before Machino finished swearing, Julian’s big hand came down on him with an earth-shattering blow.

A cool man would never look back at an explosion. Jasper had never encountered an explosion before, but he would not look back at the cruel and bloody scene of Julian bullying these thugs.

It did not matter if it was Machino or a literal machine, for Jasper, they were not even qualified to occupy his time.

There was no reason other than the fact that they were in totally different social classes.

Even if the lion on the grassland wanted to have fun, it would go to the tiger in the jungle. It would be impossible for a lion to play with ants next to the ant hill.

This was the same concept.

After walking out of the alley, Jasper was about to speak when Celine shook the car key hanging on her finger. She said, "I will go back by myself. You don't have to send me."

"Is it inconvenient?" Jasper asked.

At this point, even if someone saw Celine with him, it would probably have negative repercussions on Celine.

Celine glared at Jasper and said bluntly, "I just don't want to have anything to do with a stubborn guy who is about to become a penniless fool!"

After speaking, Celine turned to walk toward a Porsche parked on the side of the road.

Well, this fitted action Celine's temperament very well. Jasper smiled bitterly and shook his head, knowing that he still could not make Celine understand his choice.

When she reached the car door, Celine pulled the door open and suddenly said to Jasper, "I will buy you as much time as possible. Just do what you have to as soon as possible."

After speaking, Celine did not wait for Jasper to answer and got straight into the car. After hearing the roar of the accelerator, only the two tail lights were left swaying in the darkening night.

Jasper breathed out softly. He figured that he would owe Celine a huge favor since she had confided the news to him and then tried her best to buy him time.

After he got in the car, it did not take long for Julian to walk out of the alley carefreely.

"Let's go back to Law Manor," Jasper said.

Julian responded and drove off.

As for the fate of Machino and his men, Jasper did not ask and Julian did not seem like he wanted to tell Jasper about it.

It was still the same concept their social classes were too different. Even if they wanted to seek revenge, it would be impossible for them to seek revenge against Jasper.

Inside the car, Jasper made consecutive calls to two important figures in the mainland and then tried to dial the number Conrad used to contact him privately.

As expected, it did not go through.

The corners of his mouth raised slightly. Jasper was smiling, but his eyes were a little gloomy.

He did not believe that Conrad would be unaware about this matter.

He learned that Conrad had left the country two days ago from the Laws' information source. In addition to that, it seemed that his destination was Sunrise Land.

However, Jasper was currently facing huge pressure and he had no time to care about what role Conrad played in this matter.

What he really needed to consider was how to deal with the situation over the next few days. If it was handled well, Conrad would not be a problem. If it was not handled well, everything would come to a sudden stop.

While he was thinking about this, the car steadily pulled to a stop at the entrance of Law Manor.

After getting out of the car, Jasper greeted Henry who was approaching him, and then said, "Please make the necessary arrangements. I want to see your father and your grandfather right away."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1448

Jasper's words made Henry realize that something was not right. Normally, Jasper would only talk to his father. If he proposed meeting with the old master and his father, it meant that something major had happened.

Suddenly, Henry wiped the grin off his face and stopped his buffoonery. He said, "Come with me."

Jasper did not see Alex and others, so he asked, "Are the Jeans and the Bransons gone?"

Henry was stunned. “What’s the matter? Do you want to call them along too? If it’s really something that needs the old master’s attention, then Branson will be fine, but I don’t think the Jeans will have the balls to interfere.”

Jasper shook his head and said, “I’m just asking. It would not be right for them to participate anyway.”

That sentence sounded a little cheap, but Jasper was too embarrassed to say it out loud.

Henry took Jasper to the backyard and came to a stop in front of an ordinary bungalow.

While knocking on the door, Henry explained to Jasper, “The old master usually doesn’t live at home.

“He’s old, so it’s a little inconvenient for him to live in the house because of his legs. He doesn’t like going up the stairs, so we built a house specifically for him. It was built based on the old master’s preference. He’s old now, so he’s nostalgic.”

Jasper smiled and nodded.

Moments after knocking on the door, the old master's old yet vigorous voice came from inside.

"Is that you, Jasper? Come in and talk."

Henry opened the door and brought Jasper in. Then, he said unhappily, "Old master, I'm your grandson, why did you ask if it's Jasper and not me when I knocked on the door?"

Old Master Law happily got up and said, "Do you think I don't know you? If nothing is going on, would you dare to come and loiter around in front of me?"

Henry was quite embarrassed.

Although the old master was kind, this depended on the timing.

He had always been very strict, unreasonable even, when it came to educating his descendants. Therefore, Henry had been most afraid of the old master instead of Zachary since he was a child.

Since he was more mature now that he was grown, Henry understood that the old master was doing this for his own good. Even so, how could one just get rid of childhood traumas so easily?

“You should talk, I’ll get my father.” Henry found an excuse to escape.

Zachary was not here yet, so Jasper did not rush into discussion. Instead, he greeted the old master and exchanged courtesies with him, “Old Master, I’m so happy that you’re still so healthy and strong.”

“I can still light the way for you youngsters for a few more years. After some years, I might not have the energy for that even if I wanted to. I guess I have to admit that I’m getting old.”

“When I met you the first time earlier last year, I could still do some farm work, but now, I can’t do that anymore.”

Old Master Law was very open-minded about birth, old age, sickness, and death. After Jasper sat down, he said with a smile.

“You’re going to live a hundred years, Old Master. Otherwise, I don’t know how many trouble will occur, ” Jasper said after sitting down.

“No one can escape death, and no one can really live to a few hundred years old. I am so old now, and if it is not for youngsters, it would be worth it to just close my eyes right now.” Old Master Law laughed.

Jasper and Old Master Law would always chat like this.

Jasper did not say why he needed to visit the old master so late at night, and the old master did not ask either. They simply waited for Zachary's arrival in tacit understanding.

Zachary did not make them wait too long. Within ten minutes, he arrived in the small bungalow.

“What's the matter? Is it very important?”

Compared to the old master, Zachary was much more straightforward.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1449

He was still busy with work. Although Henry was out, the Atticus family would not let this matter go so easily. In fact, the fight between the two families had not stopped until today.

In a fight of this level, it did not matter how small the impact would be to the two sides, it might even have just been an argument between two small companies that did not care about each other, but it would still be immediately conveyed to the respective heads.

After all, although the matters were small, they were greatly symbolic. In such a situation, there were currently too many things that Zachary needed to deal with in person.

“I have reliable information that Wall Street and the Federal Reserve want to take action against me.”

Jasper’s words were concise as he went straight to the point.

As soon as he said this, Zachary’s expression changed.

Meanwhile, the old master also frowned.

“Jasper, you can’t joke around about this.” Zachary frowned.

Frankly speaking, if Jasper were not the one sitting here and saying this, Zachary would have turned around and left.

What a joke! That was Wall Street and the Federal Reserve. They were the two cores of the world’s most developed economy.

The economic policy of the Federal Reserve was the official economic policy of the United States, and even a single decimal point deviation in a report would affect the global economy.

Would such a godlike entity take action against an individual?

This was as funny and nonsensical as hitting a mosquito with a missile.

“Since I’m saying it now, I am 100% sure.”

“Of course, I am the cause of it this time. The first target is me, but they certainly won’t muster large forces to take care of just me. I’d be dead the moment Wall Street or the Federal Reserve makes an announcement. They don’t even need to lift a finger.

However, their real motive is to carry out a devastating attack on Somer's domestic finance through their attack on me."

Jasper sounded calm but it sounded as if he was using the mildest and calmest tone to say the most terrifying part.

Zachary's expression changed.

The old master also had an abnormal expression on his face.

"Jasper, speak slowly," the old master said.

Jasper nodded. Then, he told them his beef with Fabian and his fight with Fabian on the Dow Jones Index back then.

"Originally, the winner of this round was already determined. Fabian is already powerless to fight back, but what I didn't expect was that he would overturn the chessboard and take out a bomb directly from under his bottom to drag me to hell with him."

"Based on the information I have so far, Fabian instigated this incident."

“He worked with Layman, Colossal, and Quantum Fund, which all have beef with me, and united them. Then, they handed a butcher’s knife to the United States together. Coincidentally, the United States is desperate to find something to divert the attention of their people from the panic caused by the terrorist attack.”

After a pause, Jasper sighed, “Fabian’s meticulous thoughts, savage methods, and unique vision have indeed caused me huge trouble. I underestimated him.”

“The Atticus family birthed a formidable character indeed,” Zachary said in a deep voice.

Jasper nodded and continued, “This wouldn’t have worked if it happened at any other time. After all, no one on Earth could convince Wall Street and the Federal Reserve to do this, let alone the Atticus family.”

“It just so happened that Fabian was given this once-in-a-lifetime opportunity just as the United States needed an excuse to divert the attention of its people.”

“Hence, Fabian is taking advantage of the global climate, while I have to bear the punishment.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1450

Zachary paced back and forth in the living room with his hands behind his back. This had become a habit of his whenever he needed to figure out something.

“This is difficult...”

After thinking for some time, Zachary turned his head to say to Jasper, “Because of our mutual ideology, it is difficult for the Easterners to penetrate the West, let alone the United States.”

“Although the Laws know a few members, they are all members of the senate. However, this is ultimately a matter for Congress, and they will be the ones who have any say. I am afraid it will be difficult for the Laws to do anything.”

Jasper smiled and said, “Uncle Law, I never wanted to avoid this catastrophe through lobbying.”

“It is possible that no amount of lobbying will work for this matter, especially since this is right up the United States’s alley. Even the stupid politicians won’t betray the majority to choose this very small profit that we’re able to provide.”

“What are you planning to do then?” Zachary lifted his eyebrow and asked.

Jasper turned his head to look at the old master.

Zachary was stunned. When he looked over to where Jasper was looking, he realized the old master was looking at him with a displeased look on his face.

Even though Zachary was already in his forties and near fifties and though he had taken charge of the Laws for many years, he would still feel like a guilty child who had made a mistake when the old master looked at him in dissatisfaction.

“Dad, why are you looking at me like that?”

The old master said angrily, “I regret handing the family to such a disappointment like you!”

“So what if they were from the United States? So what if they’re Wall Street? So what if they’re the Federal Reserve? They only have more brains and hands. Why are you being so cowardly after hearing their names?” Zachary felt ashamed when the old master criticized him.

“Dad, can’t you wait to scold me after? Jasper is still here. How am I going to get away from this embarrassing situation?” Zachary smiled bitterly and pleaded.

Zachary was only acting like this because he did not treat Jasper as an outsider anymore.

If it were somebody else, Zachary might consider killing them to preserve his prestige and image.

“You have to remember that you’re a descendant of the Law family. The others can surrender and run away when they’re faced with a powerful enemy, but you can’t!” The old master said in a deep voice.

Zachary lowered his head and said, “Yes, I understand.”

With a scoff, the old master continued, “The market crash of Harbor City is not even over yet, yet you’ve already forgotten your lesson. Why don’t you think about who caused the crash?”

“Even if we didn’t lose, we have to remember that we haven’t won yet!”

“As long as the enemy is still here and they’re still determined, we’ll have to defend against them. Defending is important, but if we have a chance, why don’t we break their hand and give them a lesson that they’ll never forget so that they won’t do it again?”

Zachary was stunned when he heard that. He was not enlightened with perfect wisdom. Instead, he simply felt that the old master’s age was getting to him.

They were talking about Wall Street and the Federal Reserve. This meant that anyone who was on the opposite side would have to face the raw power of the world's largest force, the United States.

This was like a three-year-old fighting a strong and burly man who was covered in muscles. Was he insane? When the old master saw Zachary's reaction, he knew what he was thinking.

"You fool!"

The old master scolded Zachary for failing to meet his expectations. Then, he added, "No wonder Henry is still a disappointment even though he's an adult now. How can the son achieve anything great when he has such a useless father?"

Zachary said angrily, "Dad, I'm also your son. If we're to look at things according to your logic, what does that make you?"

Life at The Top – Chapter 1451

Old Master Law was indignant. He grabbed his cane and handed it to Jasper. “Boy, I’m old so I can’t move as freely as I could back then. Take this and smack him as hard as you can for me. If he dares to fight back, I’ll kick him out of the family!”

Jasper chuckled bitterly and pressed down the old master’s hand that was holding the cane. What a joke. How could he do this?

“Old Master, Uncle Law, I know you’re just trying to reduce my stress, but it’s fine. Even though I feel very stressed out now, I’m still able to breathe.”

Old Master Law laughed when he heard that. Then, he placed his cane down.

“Sit down. You’re making me dizzy with all the pacing.”

The old master said in annoyance after glaring at Zachary.

Zachary then sat down with a bitter smile on his face. “Say, what are you going to do now?” The old master looked at Jasper with an amiable smile.

Jasper looked serious. He said, “I’ll gather all the forces I can. This is not my fight, but a fight for Somerland’s fragile economic system.

“If we lose this fight, the capitalists from the West will march in. The achievements of our national economy over the years would be at their mercy.”

“However, if we win, Somerland might be able to develop steadily for at least the next ten years. At the same time, all of us will enjoy a decade of vigorous and rapid development!”

Jasper’s words caused Old Master Law and Zachary to stay silent.

They understood Jasper needed to do this.

The domestic market was behind them in this battle, so there was no way out. Sunrise Land that signed the Plaza Accord 20 years ago would serve as a bloody example of what would happen should they fail.

At that time, the entire domestic market would become a dumping ground for Western companies. All of their companies would be destroyed by the subsidiary companies from the West, at which point they could only close down or sell their company.

The fruits of everyone in Somerland's efforts over the past few decades had suddenly become something that the West could harvest.

When the time came, the entire country's economy would be destroyed. What development was there to discuss? What money was there to be made?

Everyone would become dogs of the Western capitalists. They would give you something to eat if they were in a good mood, but if they were in a bad mood, they would kill you with one shot.

This was especially true for Old Master Law, who grew up in that special period.

"I don't know about the others, but the Laws will support you unconditionally."

Old Master Law broke the silence.

His aged yet clear eyes looked at Jasper. His gaze was peaceful, like an elder looking at a junior who had a lot of achievements.

"Jasper, just do it. It's best if you can win, but if you can't, just admit the defeat. Back then, we were able to get through that era even whilst facing so many hardships, so there's no reason to let down our guards now."

“In short, a Somer descent will never be a slave to anyone.”

Jasper said excitedly, “Old Master, my greatest confidence comes from having a senior like you.”

As he was saying that, Jasper got up and bowed respectfully to Old Master Law.

These old people were the real backbones of Somerland.

“Don’t worry, although a lot of the old farts in Somerland are very itching to have an internal dispute, they still prefer to fight the outside world. I will help you contact some of those old farts. You should take care of the more pressing issues.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1452

It was late at night when Jasper came out of the old master’s bungalow.

Zachary was still discussing the matter with the old master, but Jasper had achieved his goals, so he would leave first.

As soon as he left the bungalow, Jasper saw Henry sneaking around not far away.

“Why do I feel like you are a thief in your own house?” Jasper caught Henry and asked.

Henry said frustratedly, “I just got into trouble so I’m feeling nervous.”

“Okay, I don’t think your dad will have much energy and effort to punish you later. He will be very busy, so relax.” Jasper laughed.

Henry lowered his voice and said to Jasper, “What are you guys planning this time? I’m telling you now, don’t forget to tell me if there’s anything exciting coming.”

“I won’t,” Jasper said with a smile.

“Just wait, you will be needed soon.”

Henry was excited when he heard those words.

“Damn, just now my dad told me to not cause any trouble in Harbor City during this period. It’s best if I go back to the mainland with you as soon as possible. I am in misery.”

“That’s good. You can also give yourself a few days off. Is Jill back?” Jasper asked casually.

Henry’s face changed when he heard that and he replied stiffly, “I don’t know.”

Jasper gave Henry a curious look, and when he saw that Henry did not intend to say anything more, Jasper did not prod him. After all, this was Henry’s relationship. No matter how good the relationship between Jasper and him, there were always things that were not easy to talk about.

“If you have any problems, just talk to me. I may not be able to solve it for you, but at least I can provide you some ideas.” Jasper patted Henry on the shoulder and said.

Henry replied lazily, “I got it”

Seeing that Henry was listless, Jasper thought for a while and said, “I’m going to see Kayden tomorrow. Do you want to come with me?”

Henry raised his eyelids. “Why are you meeting that old freak? We’re not on the same level. I’m disinterested every time I meet him. He is so old-fashioned, and I think he might even be older than my dad.”

“Just tell me whether you’re going or not?”

“Of course I am, it’s better than being bored at home. If you didn’t take me, I don’t think the old man would even let me go out to refuel the car.”

The next day, Jasper and Henry stepped out of Law Manor and went straight to the Excelsior Hotel.

As the famous gathering place of rich people in Harbor City, the Excelsior Hotel was naturally not a place for ordinary folk.

Henry learned that Alex and Howard were nearby while they were on the way, so he planned to walk over and say hello to them. Jasper naturally had no objection. As soon as he got out of the car at the entrance of the hotel, Jasper met an old acquaintance.

“Jasper Laine, how dare you come to Harbor City!”

Mitch looked at Jasper with malevolence. At the same time, he looked pleased and savage.

“Where’s that b*tch Henry? Why isn’t he with you? Oh, right, he’s so savage now. He burned Empire Meet to the ground, so I guess he’s being tortured to high heaven by Mr. Atticus, huh?”

Jasper had a weird look on his face when he heard what Mitch said.

It seemed that the Atticus family was very good at keeping secrets. Even Mitch had no idea that Fabian had reached an agreement with Jasper. After all, Henry was already free now.

“You looked pleased and happy.” Jasper said calmly.

“Hahaha!”

Mitch guffawed and said while feeling pleased with himself, “You’re here to beg Mr. Atticus, right?”

“Jasper, do you finally get it now? There are too many ways for the upper-class circle to get rid of you. So what if you have a little knowledge about finance? When reality struck, you fell on your face and still have to come to Mr. Atticus obediently to kneel and beg for mercy.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1453

Jasper looked at Mitch with a half smile and said, “Don’t say that. I did take a lot of your money with my little financial knowledge.”

Mitch’s face darkened upon hearing that.

Jasper was his enemy for life. Jasper was able to strike him right in the heart with just one sentence.

“F*ck you! Stop being so cocky, you mainlander!”

Mitch dropped the act and showed his true self.

He looked at Jasper sinisterly and said, “Still, I don’t know what you fed that dumb*ss Henry. How could he do something so stupid as burning down Empire Meet?”

“However, since he’s done it, he has to pay the price. So what if he’s the young master of the Law family? Do you think the Atticus family are cowards?”

“This time, you and Henry are in big trouble!”

Jasper looked at Mitch calmly and replied, “I already knew that we’d offend Fabian after we burned Empire Meet. Even if we have to suffer the consequences, and even if we’ll be in huge trouble, it’ll be our business to deal with. This has nothing to do with you, so what are you so happy about?”

Mitch’s expression changed as his eyes filled with humiliation.

Jasper’s statement was filled with mocking and ridicule, and yet, he did not include even a single cuss word in his sentence. This made him extremely uncomfortable.

He wanted to refute, but he could not find a way to do so.

After all, what Jasper said was the truth.

“Therefore, in this case, I will say it softly. There are people coming and going around all here. If someone overhears it, they will think that Mitch Langdon is such a badass now that he's stepping on Henry to put pressure on Jasper. They will even wonder if Harbor City belongs to him now."

"If this was the case, won't I look incompetent?"

Jasper's ridicule made Mitch's face darken even more. Meanwhile, Jasper's next action and sentence caused Mitch's defense to immediately break.

Jasper took a step back and said calmly, "Also, we are not that close. You better not talk to me. Otherwise, everyone will misunderstand and think that we have a good relationship. Everyone will doubt my taste in friends if that were to happen."

"You son of a b*tch!"

Mitch was more furious.

Even if he was not as good as the top two second-generations like Henry and Fabian, he was still one of the strongest second-generations in Harbor City.

No matter where he went, he would be honored, and everyone would respectfully call him Mr. Langdon. When did anyone ever say such disgusting and disdainful words to him?

He felt that his self-esteem had been broken, crushed, and stomped upon by Jasper's feet. The soul-striking humiliation caused Mitch to throw away his gentlemanly disguise and yell at Jasper.

However, after he said that, Jasper slapped him hard across the face.

The slap was loud and clear.

They were in the lobby of Excelsior Hotel.

Since the rich and famous of Harbor City frequented this place, a lot of celebrities and big shots would come for tea here as well. Since a lot of VIPs were gathered here, a lot of paparazzi with nothing to do would often wait and keep watch here. They wanted to try their luck at changing their gate.

What were they waiting for and watching out for?

Huge news!

When Mitch was slapped in public, it was enough to shock everyone in Harbor City.

After numerous clicking sounds and flashes, Mitch heard Jasper's icy voice.

"Watch your mouth. Use your brain before you speak. Think about whether your master is truly reliable."

For a second-generation like Mitch, who was born with a noble background and grew up in constant praise and respect, his dignity was more valuable than his life. Had he ever thought that he would be slapped in the face in front of everyone in public?

Fabian would not do something like this to him, let alone Jasper.

Mitch's eyes instantly became red and he stared at Jasper. He looked so bitter that he looked like he could almost swallow Jasper alive.

"Jasper, you're asking to die!"

Mitch roared. He wanted to rush forward to rip that b*stard to pieces.

However, at this moment, a carefree figure walked over from the other side of the lobby. Mitch was so shocked that he froze in his tracks.

Mitch would never forget those carefree footsteps, those hands in the pockets, that head that was slightly tilted to the side, that arrogant aura, and that figure that looked even more thuggish than a gangster.

Henry!

Henry who would not appear in this place.

When he saw Henry, Mitch had to make sure that he was not hallucinating. When he was sure of what he saw, he almost let out a scream.

“What’s wrong? Are you surprised? ” Henry walked leisurely next to Jasper and tilted his head. He smiled brightly at Mitch and mocked him.

“W-what are you doing here?”

Mitch yelled as if he had seen a ghost.

“Where should I be if not here?” Henry’s eyes were dark, and they also oozed with excitement. He looked as though he had found an interesting toy while he was bored out of his mind.

“Do you think that Fabian should have locked me up?” Henry answered his own question and chuckled.

Mitch swallowed his saliva continuously. He did not know whether it was because of fear or shock, but his entire body was shaking.

He looked at Jasper subconsciously.

His instinct told him that if Henry could still be fine after doing such a huge thing, then the matter had to be related to Jasper.

When he thought about what Jasper said just now, an indescribable fear started surging from within his heart, spreading all over his body.

“What did you do to force Mr. Atticus to compromise on?” Mitch stared at Jasper and yelled hysterically.

“Why are you screaming?”

Henry scoffed. "Look at how stupid you look. Are you really treating your Daddy Atticus as a god? So what if we stepped on him? Harbor City is so small, yet you tiny brained idiots really think you're at the center of the world? How hilarious and lamentable."

He lifted his arm to put it around Mitch's neck. He then forcefully pulled Mitch next to him and pinched his chin to force him to look at the sky outside the hotel's lobby. Henry chuckled and said, "If you have time, go out to see the world. The world is huge."

After he said that, Henry let go of him and patted Mitch's cheek. He continued, "Stop staying here and thinking that you've seen the entire world, understand?"

Mitch's entire body shook.

He felt that Jasper and Henry's murderous ability was simply invincible.

However, he had no time to worry about these things. What he wanted to know most was what exactly Jasper did to make Fabian bow down to him.

And if Fabian bowed, then were the money and benefits he had previously given Fabian all in vain?

While he was thinking of this, Mitch's eyes turned horrified and desperate.

He could not bear to face the truth.

“Go and check your bank balance, maybe you are a pauper now,” Jasper said lightly.

After he said that, he gave Henry a look that said ‘do whatever you want’ before he turned and left. A nobody like Mitch was no longer important to him. Now that it was nearly the time that he and Kayden agreed to meet, naturally, Jasper was not going to be late.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1455

After receiving Jasper’s hint, Henry was about to crack his knuckles when he suddenly felt his arm sink Mitch, who had previously been wrapped under his arm, fell softly to the ground.

“Damn, are you trying to scam me?”

“I didn’t touch you, so don’t try this with ruel!”

Henry yelled at Mitch, who was lying on the ground and trembling. As he stared blankly at the ceiling, Mitch muttered, “It’s over, it’s over. Everything I own is gone.”

Upstairs, Jasper walked into the luxurious private room and saw Kayden, who was wearing a pair of round-framed glasses that made him look refined and cultured. The man smiled and greeted Jasper.

The two shook hands and Kayden said emotionally, "I knew you would not let me down."

"Mr. Atticus gave me such a big gift, so of course, I will use it well. Speaking of which, my business is much easier now thanks to this big gift." Jasper laughed.

Kayden chuckled. "A good sword is a gift to the hero. No matter how good or sharp the knife is, it will just be a dead weight if there are no pair of skillful hands that can utilize it."

"Mr. Atticus really keeps his own council for producing such a good sword."

After a brief exchange of pleasantries, the two looked at each other and guffawed.

"Come, Jasper, sit down."

Kayden guided Jasper to sit down in front of a dining table after that

“The A5 Wagyu beef here is the most authentic in Asia. It’s so fine that every piece of beef will have its unique identification code.”

“After being carefully prepared by the executive chef of Excelsior Hotel, it can be regarded as an unforgettable delicacy. Since it’s so rare, they will only get a portion of this size every year.”

Jasper glanced at the juicy, plump, and beautiful steak in front of him. He had naturally heard this before. Different from the extremely popular M9 and M10 Wagyu beef of the later generations, the top A5 wagyu represented the most traditional, and purest, beef in Sunrise Land.

It was decadent to the point that every cow would lead a luxurious life from birth until it was eventually slaughtered.

This was all for the plump and tender taste.

This level of Wagyu beef costs hundreds of US Dollars per gram.

However, this price tag was nothing to Jasper and Kayden, who had reached an unbelievable level of wealth.

“I’m so lucky to chance upon fine food today,” Jasper said. Then, he used his hand to directly pick up the Wagyu before stuffing it into his mouth.

He only took a bite when the juice exploded in his mouth. The beef melted on his tongue, forcing him to acknowledge it as a truly a top-notch feast.

“Are you not using the fork and knife?”

When Kayden saw Jasper eating so barbarically, he asked in shock.

He knew that Jasper was aware that he needed a fork and knife to eat a steak.

“It doesn’t matter how or what I eat. What matters is whether or not I enjoyed the meal,” Jasper said profoundly.

Kayden sighed slightly and said, “Jasper, I wanted to reminisce about the past with you.”

Jasper placed his steak and said with a grin, “Time waits for no man. I don’t have much time to do that.”

“Alright, tell me. What do you need me to do?” Kayden asked seriously.

“I don’t need you to do anything. Instead, I want you, and even your entire family, to mutually benefit,” Jasper answered.

Kayden lifted his eyebrows and said with a half- smile, “Jasper, I think you are unaware that my father and I don’t like to interfere in the fights between the wealthy families in Harbor City.”

“Do you think that I am asking for the Langdons and the Laws to team up and fight the Atticus family?”

Jasper asked.

“Are you not?” Kayden shrugged, looking confident.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1456

Facing the confident Kayden, Jasper chuckled lightly.

“What are you laughing at?” Kayden asked, frowning slightly.

From the beginning of the meeting, he could feel that the one in control of the conversation was not himself. This made Kayden a little unsure, since he liked to be the one in control whenever he was talking to anyone. This was what his father, Half-the-Harbor Langdon, taught him for decades. One could say less, but every sentence had to be said straight to the point so that they could always remain in control.

However, the tricky thing now was that Kayden did not even know what Jasper wanted to say, so even if he wanted to get to the point, he would not know where to start.

“Mr. Langdon, you and I are sensible people, so I won’t talk nonsense. The United States stock market contains one of the biggest business opportunities in decades. If you seize it, it will put the Langdons at least 20 years ahead. Are you willing to miss out on this chance?”

Jasper’s words caused Kayden’s eyes to light up.

He was not a fledgling newcomer in the business world, so naturally, he would not be tempted by Jasper's words.

"It's true that the United States stock market plummeted because of the terrorist attack a few days ago, and even now there is no sign that the dip is ending. However, people all over the world knew this, so there won't be any way to profit if one were to attempt a short sale."

Kayden had good foresight and he immediately pointed out the core problem of the question.

Everyone knew that the United States stock market had plummeted, but so what?

"The entire market was full of short-sale orders. Even if you entered the market, if no one reciprocated your order, you would not be able to profit."

"In the current situation, with the exception of a few lucky people, you are the biggest beneficiary, right, Mr. Langdon?"

"You didn't think of me when there was such a good chance earlier, but now that the opportunity is gone, you approach me and tell me that such an opportunity was previously available to us? You're so insincere."

Kayden shook his head and smiled.

“What if I tell you, Wall Street and the Federal Reserve are going to join forces to rescue the market?” Jasper said suddenly.

Kayden narrowed his eyes as soon as he heard this. He knew that Jasper was not lying to him.

The simple truth was that it was impossible for the officials of any country to simply watch on as its stock market plummeted.

The stock market was facing a massive dip, which in turn was indicative of the overall economic downturn of the country. This would eventually lead to a series of social problems such as struggling businesses, bankruptcy, unemployment, and economic depression. Therefore, the United States officials were bound to want to rescue the market.

Even so, the United States was always the one forcing other countries to find a way to save the market, but this time, the United States was going to save itself. Everyone knew this. The problem was that no one knew when and how the United States would do this.

If someone knew of this in advance, it would indeed be a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity.

Kayden suddenly smiled as he stared closely at Jasper.

“Mr. Laine, I’m afraid it won’t be that simple, right?”

“Let me think, the United States wants to rescue the market so this will of course be the top priority, but even if it is a market rescue plan, it will only stop the stock market from falling, while the losses will inevitably arouse dissatisfaction among the civilian population.”

“Another important thing is that the accident this time was caused by a terrorist attack which caused heavy casualties. Now, the United States is facing a lot of domestic anger, and they’ve also become the laughing stock of the world, so they will definitely fight back.

“One objective is to divert the attention of the people, and the other is to show their strength to the world and tell everyone that the United States is still the same entity as before and that they are still the world’s largest country.”

Kayden tapped his fingers on the surface of the table. He was speaking more confidently and faster.

“This would definitely happen. It involves international politics and the upcoming election in the United States, so no one can stop it from happening.”

“Because of all this, they’ll need to find a scapegoat... Mr. Laine, should I admire you for your ability, or should I mourn you for being so unlucky?”

“Unfortunately, it seems that you are sacrificial lamb. This is not a good thing.”

“You make a lot of money, but that doesn’t attract the attention of the United States government. Now, are you planning ahead for the purpose of self protection, or do you want to get more people to die with you?”

Jasper admired Kayden’s foresight immensely. He could already guess what was going on with so little information.

It was impossible for him to know that the source of this incident was that Fabian had gotten two investment banks and a series of other forces to target himself.

Jasper definitely would not tell Kayden about this.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1457

Otherwise, Kayden, who knew how to protect himself, might have just stood up and left without turning his head.

“Businessmen have only interest in their eyes. They do not care about life or death.”

Jasper took a sip from his teacup. The hot tea entered his throat as the fragrance filled his nose.

“The level of risk has always been in direct proportion to the profit. If you dare not fight, why are you still doing business?”

Kayden’s expression was as still as stagnant water while his fingers slowly tapped on the surface of the table without saying a word.

Jasper glanced at the time and smiled, “Mr. Langdon, there is not much time.”

“How confident are you?” Kayden asked, raising his head and looking at Jasper with a burning gaze.

“How confident am I?” Jasper laughed involuntarily. “Of course, I’m not.”

When Kayden heard this, he widened his eyes and almost cried out.

“If I’m confident, Mr. Langdon, why would I ask you to join me? This is certainly an opportunity to make a lot of money, but if I could do it myself, why bother to share it with you?”

Jasper’s next statement caused Kayden to swallow his words.

“Hahaha! How interesting!” Kayden burst out laughing.

“Contact me when you start to take action.”

After getting this answer, Jasper finally got up with satisfaction and extended his hand toward Kayden, “Well then, let’s hope for a joyous partnership.”

Kayden also got up and shook Jasper’s hand. Kayden suddenly sighed. “You are growing too fast.”

“What do you mean?” Jasper asked with interest.

“To be honest, making friends with you in the past meant investing in your future to a certain extent I genuinely felt from the bottom of my heart that you would not climb to my level,” Kayden said.

“That’s not very nice, but it’s very pertinent.” Jasper nodded.

Who was Kayden?

The designated successor of Half-the-Harbor Langdon.

Meanwhile, J. Langdon Corporation would be the richest in Terra in the future. Moreover, they held the position of the world’s richest Somer descendant for a long time during their peak. It could be said that, in terms of history, the J. Langdons were nothing compared to the Laws within the four richest families in Harbor City.

However, in terms of wealth, the wealth of the J. Langdons would equal the sum of the bottom two families among the four in just ten year’s time. Even the Laws could not compare to them.

In a way, Kayden could be regarded as the number one young master in Harbor City since he was born into such a family. Therefore, it was only natural that Kayden would look down on him.

“But now, I think I must treat you as equal, otherwise I will suffer,” Kayden said solemnly.

“I love making friends the most.” Jasper smiled.

Seeing that Jasper was preparing to leave after saying this, Kayden could not help but ask, “Are you leaving now?”

“I still have to talk to a lot of people. I’m very busy,” Jasper said without looking back.

Looking at Jasper’s back, Kayden’s brows trembled.

He realized that Jasper was really going to be playing a big game this time.

While he thought about this, Kayden lost the mood to continue enjoying the delicious food. Thus, he got up and called a car. He was going to see his father, Half-the-Harbor Langdon.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1458

As he walked out of the hotel, Jasper thought about the situation.

The Laws were on his side. Needless to say, the Langdons were 50% settled. It was only 50% because Jasper knew Joe and Kayden’s characters too well. Interest would always be their top priority. Thus, if something went wrong, they would definitely be the first to back out.

It could be said that this father and son duo fully represented the role of the businessman more than anyone else.

Merchants would always chase profits. The father and son duo pursued profits until their dying breath. As for feelings for their family and country, they felt it all irrelevant.

This was not Jasper's random guessing. A little more than ten years later, the father and son duo would withdraw tens of billions of capital from the country.

This was the concrete truth.

Hence, Jasper could not count fully on them, and had to consider the half chance that they changed their minds. After some consideration, he realized that there was not much power in Harbor City that he could use anymore.

The remaining family would be the Boyles. They had always been easily swayed and were also the weakest among the four wealthy families. Hence, Jasper was afraid that they would not want to be involved in this matter.

As for the W. Langdons, it was basically hopeless. Mitch was still paralyzed and could not move. He was Fabian's backbone, so they were enemies and could not ally. Naturally, there was no possibility of them cooperating.

“Are you done?” Henry suddenly appeared in front of Jasper with a smile on his face.

“Did you really not want to see Kayden that much?” Jasper smiled.

He knew that Henry did not need much effort to settle Mitch. Therefore, the reason why he did not show up was that he must not have wanted to meet Kayden.

After waving his hand, Henry said nonchalantly, “My family and his family are not the same. So, naturally, he and I have a lot of disagreements. We won’t show any respect to each other so it’s best if we don’t even see each other.”

“How hypocritical.”

Jasper could not help but smile when he thought of the later generations’ comments on the J. Langdons.

“It’s fine. The matter has been discussed anyway.”

“Good. My dad called me just now and he recommended that you see someone,” Henry said mysteriously.

“Who?”

Jasper was interested. The person Zachary recommended him had to be someone extraordinary.

“The Godfather.” Henry huffed and pointed in the direction of Auma City as he said that.

Jasper was shocked.

“Okay. I can’t stay long in Harbor City anyway. Let’s go now.”

Henry lay down comfortably on the top deck of a private yacht and sighed.

“This is the life.”

Henry drank his juice with his sunglasses on. He had his legs crossed as he said while enjoying the sea breeze.

“The only people we are lacking are two girls.”

Jasper, who was watching the news on his computer, looked up and asked. "As far as I know, the old master has no relationship with the Godfather. He even said that he will not allow the Godfather to step foot into Harbor City as long as he's alive. Why did your dad ask me to see him?"

Henry replied with a grin, "Benefits, of course. The old master is the old master, my dad is my dad, and you are you. Everyone has different opinions."

"The reason why the old master fought with the Godfather was that the Godfather framed the old master while they partnered on a huge commercial complex."

"They agreed that they wouldn't open a casino in the commercial complex but eventually, the Godfather did it without telling the old master. What the old master hates most in his life are gambling and drugs, so they had a fall-out right there and then."

"I think that the Godfather himself regrets it too, but everyone is sensible. They can't demolish a complex involving an investment of tens of billions of Harbor dollars because of such a matter, so the dispute remained."

"Even though the old master has beef with the Godfather, the Godfather is good at interpersonal communication. He will give us what we deserve according to our assigned dividends, and not a dime less. However, the old master just turned around and donated all the money to the mainland."

Jasper nodded and said pensively, "If that's the case, the Godfather is pretty loyal too."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1459

“Loyal?” Henry lifted his eyebrows and said in disdain, “What else can he do if he’s not loyal? Does he think he’s safe if he just hides in Auma City forever after he crossed the old master?”

“You have to know that during the Handover, he was able to keep his assets and he made Auma City the only place in the country that allows legal gambling. The old master helped him with that, you know?”

“So, at the end of the day, it’s still only about profit.”

While the two of them chatted, a smaller yacht appeared next to theirs.

It was evident that this yacht was the kind that was rented to tourists and guests. The level and the look of the yacht could not be compared to Henry’s private yacht.

However, there were a lot of beautiful ladies on the smaller yacht.

“Wow, that yacht is so beautiful. Did you rent this yacht, handsome?”

A beautiful lady in a bikini on the smaller yacht asked Jasper with a twinkle in her eyes.

Jasper grinned and said, "I'm just a crew member. My job is to steer this thing."

"Oh?" There was a hint of disappointment on the lady's face.

However, she continued, "Can we come over and take some pictures?"

When Jasper was faced with the beautiful ladies' hopeful gazes, he shrugged and said, "I'm just a crew member, I can't make the decision."

"Yeah, Mel... What decision can he make when he's just a crew? Let's not ask him," another beautiful lady said with disappointment

"Sigh, what a nice yacht. My best friends and colleagues will be so jealous if I could go up to take pictures," the lady named Mel said in disappointment.

At this critical moment, Henry got up from the sofa and pointed at the other side. He said, "The Godfather's yacht is here."

Everyone looked over and saw an extremely luxurious yacht cruising over from afar. The word 'Bose' was written in extremely eye-catching detail on the side of the yacht.

"Wow! This is the Boses' yacht! It's the Godfather's private yacht!"

A lady who knew what was what suddenly screamed. Almost everyone knew who the Godfather was.

"Oh my, I wonder if he's on the yacht. I'd do anything to get a chance to go onboard!" Mel had a look of shock on her face.

While they were talking, they noticed the yacht driving over slowly.

"My gosh! The Godfather's yacht is coming over! Is it here for us?" Another lady shrieked in surprise.

Instantly, every woman onboard started panicking and began looking for their makeup bag frantically. They were all making a hasty last-minute effort to freshen up. If the Godfather set his eyes on them, their social status would immediately skyrocket.

While those women were frantically trying to display their most beautiful side, an aged yet handsome old man with a tall figure walked out from the yacht.

Jasper and Henry did not expect the Godfather, who had not left Auma City for a long time, to come to welcome the two at sea.

“Hahaha, Henry, my boy, the last time I saw you, you were still in someone’s arms. You’re so big now,” the Godfather laughed at Henry.

Henry looked ashamed and he said, “Don’t make fun of me, Godfather.”

Even if Henry was a rascal, he would not show that side of him in front of the Godfather. He knew not to do this as, all things considered, judging from their age and seniority, the Godfather was from the same generation as his grandfather.

The Godfather looked at Jasper and praised, “Young hero!”

Jasper smiled and replied, “Thanks for the compliment, Godfather...”

“Come, let’s talk on board,” the Godfather waved his hand and said.

The two of them climb onboard the Godfather’s yacht using the ladder while the women were left dumbfounded.

“The guy who called himself a crew was just invited on board by the Godfather. He looks like the Godfather’s guest too.”

The women were extremely remorseful. This time, they had lost the opportunity to ride someone else’s coattails.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1460

The three of them were in high spirits on the Godfather’s yacht. The weather was nice that day so they decided to sit on the top deck.

“Tch tch, Godfather, your yacht is so amazing. I heard that you spent 60 million US Dollars on this yacht.” Henry envied.

The Godfather looked at Henry with a faint smile and said, “Do you like it? I’ll give it to you.”

Henry hurriedly waved his hand and said, “Forget it, forget it. Even if you give it to me, I can’t afford to maintain it.”

The Godfather laughed loudly and said, “Yes, the Laws have always been traditional and simple, so naturally you did not develop the habit of spending money lavishly.”

Henry said happily, "That's right, Godfather. Why don't you tell my grandpa to give me more pocket money?"

The Godfather shook his head and replied, "Never mind. Mr. Law doesn't like me, so I won't go and poke my head where it doesn't belong."

Henry grinned. There were not many people who could make the Godfather how his head or even grow apprehensive. It just so happened that his grandfather was one of them, so as his grandson, Henry naturally felt proud.

After some chatting, the Godfather looked at Jasper and said, "Zachary told me some of the news. I'm interested."

Jasper lifted his eyebrows slightly.

It seemed that even though the old master and the Godfather had beef, the current head of the family had a pretty good relationship with the Godfather.

"What's wrong? Are you wondering what he told me?" The Godfather asked in rumination.

Jasper answered, "Uncle Law asked me to come to you, Godfather. So, of course, he respects you a lot. There's nothing to hide either. I think he has already told you what needed to be said, I don't need to worry about it."

"How thorough. You're very sly indeed," the Godfather remarked on Jasper's reply.

Jasper smiled bitterly and said, "Don't blame me, Godfather. I'm not as capable as you so I have to be more careful."

"You're not as capable? That is not right. Everyone knows that the Laws are treating you like their second son," the Godfather said pensively.

Jasper did not plan to let the Godfather steer the conversation. Hence, he said straightforwardly, "Godfather, this matter will affect many things, and there are very high risks involved. I have to tell you all this beforehand."

Jasper had completely different attitudes toward the Godfather and Kayden.

One could be friends but not best friends with a fox like Kayden. Whether it was cooperation or otherwise, both sides were always cautiously testing each other, lest they suffered losses.

However, this was not needed with the Godfather. Being honest could actually earn him brownie points. Jasper knew that his wealth was nothing compared to what the Godfather had.

However, he still needed to be careful. After all, the Godfather was not a Law.

“But the benefits are greater, aren’t they?”

The Godfather’s eyes flashed with a complex light. Then, he said in a deep voice, “After Zachary told me about this, I plan to intervene.”

“When the time comes, I’ll support you unconditionally with regards to money and connections. Basically, everything you can think of.”

Jasper’s expression changed upon hearing that.

With his current status and position, the Godfather could not say anything willy-nilly. Once he said something, he would have to keep his word.

“Thank you for being so principled, Godfather,” Jasper said seriously.

The Godfather shook his hand and said, "Don't think of me as such a powerful figure. We've suffered a great loss from those old scoundrels in the past. So this time, you can think of it as me seeking revenge on them because of my personal grievances."

Back then, the Godfather got rich from gambling in Auma City, but one had to remember that the biggest and most famous casino was still in Las Vegas of the United States.

The rise of Auma City made Las Vegas very uncomfortable.

Dirty conflicts between the two sides occurred numerous times over the years. The Godfather had suffered a few big losses, so he always carried this hatred.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1461

“But this time, I have another collaboration I want to talk to you about,” the Godfather said to Jasper.

Jasper said sincerely, “I’m all ears.”

“Operating a gambling industry in Auma City requires a gambling license, do you know that?” the Godfather said deeply.

Jasper nodded and said, “I know, this means that you’ll be an officially recognized legal gambling organization that pays taxes following the official regulations and enjoys legal protection.”

“However, Auma City officials have not issued a new license for more than ten years. I think the most recent license was taken by the Venetians thirteen years ago. The value at that time seemed to be one billion US Dollars, right?”

The Godfather snorted and said, “Now there are three licenses for Auma City. The first one is mine, and the second one is Leesboa Casino which I own 40% of, the Laws own 20%. At the time, I also helped Venetians to get one. They promised they would give me 50% of the shares, but after it was done, they just kicked me aside.”

“I’ve endured this loss for 13 years, and now, the chance to act on it is finally here.”

“In two months, the Auma City government will give out the fourth license. They won’t give out another one in the next ten years, so this will be the only chance until then. Are you interested?”

Jasper was shocked upon hearing what the Godfather said.

A gambling license was an amazing thing to possess. If one owned it, they would be in possession of a hen that laid golden eggs. Anyone would be envious when they heard news like this.

One billion US Dollars 13 years ago was now worth at least two billion US Dollars, but even so, the Boses could recoup this cost with only three years of profits. It was evident that the gambling industry was very profitable.

However, in the face of such a huge temptation, Jasper did not immediately agree.

Just like how he tricked Kayden before. The bigger the cake, the more dangerous the hidden trap behind it may be.

Jasper did not believe in free lunches, and the goodwill of the Godfather would not be without good cause.

The Godfather saw Jasper's hesitation at a glance and continued, "Of course, I hope we can work together."

"According to the rules of the Auma City government, anyone and any company can only have one gambling license at a time. They can have the shares to other licenses, but they can't own over 50% of the shares. Therefore, I can support you in taking the license, after which you can distribute 50% of the shares to me."

Jasper gave the Godfather a half smile and said, "The license will be auctioned off. Are you saying that you can meddle with this rule, Godfather?"

The Godfather said faintly, "Since it's the rules, then of course I can't randomly meddle or change it. However, I can promise you that if I don't nod my head, even if others obtain the license, they won't be able to start their business in Auma City."

That statement was so domineering!

Jasper knew the Godfather did indeed have the ability to do this. Unless the other party was a huge business that depended on the United States and the United Kingdom like the Venetians.

“What about the capital for the auction?” Jasper asked the key question.

The Godfather laughed and said, “There’s no free lunch in this world. If I help you take care of the opening of your business, of course you’ll have to bear the capital.”

Jasper lifted his eyebrows.

“Oh...”

No wonder the old master did not like the Godfather. There was a reason for it.

This old fart was so greedy!

Life at The Top – Chapter 1462

The lowest-end valuation of the price of a gambling license was above 2 billion US Dollars.

There was the fact that the Auma City government had not issued a new license for more than ten years. This was accompanied by the fact that they had made it clear that no new licenses would be issued in the next ten years.

This would be the only legal license in a combined period of more than two decades.

The rarer something was, the more valuable it would be. In such a rare situation, this gambling license would inevitably attract the attention of countless related and unrelated capital in the gambling industry.

An auction had always been a way to easily increase the value of an item several times over. Therefore, 2 billion US Dollars was just the starting price.

Meanwhile, the Godfather actually wanted Jasper to spend so much money fighting for this priceless object with nothing more than a vain promise. Moreover, after he got it, the Godfather wanted to take half of the equity.

If this old man in front of him was someone else, Jasper would have cursed right there and then.

“Godfather, if I don’t agree, will it affect what I discussed with you earlier?” Jasper asked.

The Godfather grinned and looked at Jasper. He said, “If you don’t want to work with me, of course, I’ll reconsider working with you.”

“I understand...”

Jasper nodded and got up.

“Henry, let’s go.”

After calling for Henry, Jasper turned his head and walked toward the yacht they came from.

The Godfather narrowed his eyes to look at Jasper’s back. He did not have any intentions of stopping Jasper.

Meanwhile, Jasper was behaving like a hoodlum. He walked very fast and did not have any intention of stopping.

When he walked to the side of the yacht, Jasper jumped up and landed on the connecting deck. Then, he led Henry back to their yacht.

When Henry got there, Jasper lifted his hand to remove the deck connecting the two yachts.

At this moment, the Godfather could not hold it in anymore.

“Young man, deals are made after negotiations. You leave the moment something’s not to your liking. Do you think you can stay in this field for long with this way of doing business?”

Jasper lifted his head to look at the unhappy Godfather and said, “Godfather, I am not a great businessman but at least I have my limits. There are two kinds of business I won’t get involved in.”

After he said that, he lifted two fingers and continued, “First, I won’t do businesses that betrays my conscience.”

“Secondly, I won’t do businesses that’ll make a loss.”

After the Godfather heard what Jasper said, he laughed. “I’ve been in business my whole life and I know some businesses might initially look like they’re unprofitable, but you’ll still have to do it because it’s for the long-term plan.”

“If you first let others gain some advantage over you, you might later find an opportunity to make back everything you lost in the next transaction.”

Jasper smiled and shook his head. “I am not used to placing the profit and loss of my business on the gift or conscience of the opponent, so this kind of argument does not exist in my opinion.”

“Also Godfather, while it is true that you have conducted some similar businesses in your life, but never twice without thrice. Your opponent might not discover their conscience after your repeated compromises. The greater probability is insatiable greed.”

“I think this is the reason why you only stayed in a small place like Auma City even though you have done business for decades, right?”

After Jasper said that, even Henry widened his eyes to look at Jasper, let alone the Godfather.

‘Damn, he was slapping the Godfather right across the face by saying that!’

Henry started to feel excited after shaking off the initial shock.

Indeed, Jasper the Poser was not satisfied with just being a poser in front of Fabian. Was he shifting his attention to a senior formidable figure like the Godfather now?

Life at The Top – Chapter 1463

Jasper was courting disaster! However, this was so exciting!

Still, one had to pay for acting like a poser.

As such, the smile on the Godfather's face disappeared. His eyes darkened as well.

The Godfather was a legend in this life. He had gone through so many things and so many hardships before he got to where he was today. He was born in an affluent family but then his family suffered a reversal of fortune. What the Godfather had right now had all been slowly forged by his hands during that chaotic and turbulent era.

How could he allow a young junior to scold him like that?

Even though Jasper was very polite when he said this, such a statement was basically a scolding to someone with the position and status of the Godfather.

“Young man, how many things have you experienced? How many people have you met? How can you say Auma City is a small place? Yes, Auma City is not big, but getting to where I am right now was not as easy as you think.”

Jasper said calmly, "I didn't mean to offend you, Godfather."

"But you did."

Jasper looked at the Godfather and said calmly, "Since you think I was being offensive, then I guess I've offended you."

After speaking, Jasper threw the ladder to the deck into the sea, as if he was challenging the Godfather.

After doing that, Jasper did not look at the unpleasant expression of the Godfather and pulled Henry away.

After a while, the yacht began moving further and further away.

The Godfather had a gloomy look on his face as he looked at the yacht that was moving away. Then, he smiled.

He took out his phone and, after he called a number, he said pensively, "Mr. Law, that young man is so interesting..."

Zachary's calm voice came from the other end of the phone, "I told you. Don't treat him the way you treat your disappointing offspring. It's useless. What happened? Did you have the door closed on your face?"

"Not really. However, this young man is very hot-tempered indeed. He should experience more hardships and lessons. No matter how good the jade is, if you don't polish the edges and corners, you will hurt others in the future and you will eventually hurt yourself too."

"Edges?" Zachary asked calmly, "Godfather, some people's edges can't be polished off just like that. Besides, you're so old, yet someone who could pass as your grandson has the ability to infuriate you. Don't you have edges to polish off as well?"

"What are you trying to say, Mr. Law?" The Godfather's tone was cold.

"I'm being literal."

Zachary said impatiently, "It doesn't matter if it's him or me. The reason I contacted you is because I feel that at least you'll have the conscience of a Somer descent since you possess the tanned skin and black hair of a Somer descent."

"What's more important is that people my age know that once Western capitalists invade the mainland, then you and I will have no food to eat. The consequence is not as simple as losing a little money and earning a little less, it's a matter of life and death!"

“But you have to understand that no one is begging you to do anything. To put it bluntly, do whatever you want.”

“You’re using this matter to threaten someone, while this person is willingly acting as a shield for everyone to charge forward and break through enemy lines.”

“If it’s successful, he might not reap a lot of benefits, but if it’s unsuccessful, he’ll be the first one to die. Even so, he still went for it. Don’t you have even a shred of conscience in this kind of situation?”

“That being said, you should consider it for yourself. I wonder how many people will patronize your casino in the future when everyone can’t even afford to eat.”

Beep beep beep.

The corners of the Godfather’s mouth twitched as he listened to the dial tone in the phone with a shocked expression.

In just half an hour, he was taught a lesson by two juniors in a row.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1464

“Are we really going to just leave like this?”

On the yacht, Henry asked Jasper with wide eyes.

“What else are we supposed to do? Go back and kiss that old man’s stinky a*s and tell him that as long as he is willing to join us, we can agree to any conditions?” Jasper said bluntly.

Initially, Jasper thought he would be able to get a powerful force like the Godfather to join him, but now, he was feeling p*ssed.

These old foxes were really difficult to deal with individually. They were all people who would not lift a finger until they saw the benefits.

“I just thought we needed to unite all the forces that we can cooperate with,” Henry said innocently.

“This depends on the situation.”

Jasper sighed.

“The thing we have to do right now, to put it nicely, is to protect our dignity. But in reality, we’re attacking somebody much stronger than us.”

“Unless you yourself were already willing, you would only show up but not put in any effort even if you got onboard reluctantly. Moreover, this will easily lead to internal conflicts, which is even more detrimental to us.”

“Damn, now everyone is guarding their own country’s market. If the market crashed, then nobody will have food to eat. Even I understand such a simple truth, yet they can’t? They still care about gains and losses at this critical moment!” Henry said unhappily.

“Otherwise, how could there be traitors? Most people only know how to talk about patriotism and so on, but they take no action.”

Jasper let out a sigh as if it could somehow relieve the depression and frustration in his heart. With his hands gripping the railing, Jasper looked out at the blue sea and azure sky in the distance. Then, he said, “A storm is coming. I wonder how long I can keep looking at this peaceful view.”

Jasper's time is almost up.

Morrison, who just got off the plane, looked at Fabian in the hospital bed and said with a laugh. "Atticus, if you can drink right now, I will pop some champagne to celebrate with you."

Fabian leaned against his bed and said, "Can I think of this as you mocking me?"

Morrison shrugged and said, "I didn't expect that you'd get attacked in Harbor City. To be honest, I don't think you deal with this well."

"We have a saying in the west. A gentleman won't fight with a barbarian. Meanwhile, there's also a saying in the East. A real man won't stand beside a collapsing wall, right?"

"I didn't expect you to have so much knowledge about the culture in Somerland." Fabian smiled grimly. "It's just a small mishap. This is nothing compared to what Jasper will be facing."

Morrison sat down on a chair and said with a grin, "The investment banks have reached an agreement. We're willing to help the Federal Reserve to stabilize the market of the United States."

“Similarly, the Federal Reserve will also announce a series of announcements and measures for the market rescue in a few days.”

“What about Jasper? He’s what I worry the most about,” Fabian said.

“Don’t worry, my friend…”

Morrison’s gaze was sinister. He said, “Some capital from the other side of the earth is trying to use this terrorist attack to steal the wealth of the people of the United States. The United States will use all means possible to make that capital and the interests behind it pay the price!”

“I am the one who wrote this announcement, and it will appear on the official website of the Federal Reserve in a few days time. Atticus, are you satisfied with it?”

Fabian looked coldly at Morrison, who was looking pleased with himself. He replied, “Actually, you guys are more interested in invading and pillaging Somerland’s capital through the guise of defeating Jasper, right?”

“Hahaha, Atticus, don’t think about it that way. This is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity that you gave us. We are friends, aren’t we?” Morrison laughed.

“Friends? I think you guys prefer to call me a traitor, right?” Fabian said coldly.

Morrison said with a shrug, “Atticus, you have to know that capital has no borders. For people like us, only interests are eternal.”

“Who will remember the other things after ten or twenty years? The only thing people will see is the winner.”

“And obviously, this time you and I are the winners.”

Fabian was not affected by Morrison. He said, “Don’t forget the other conditions that you promised before.”

“Don’t worry. We have accepted your terms. After we succeed, Layman’s business in China will be handed over to you. Meanwhile, your family’s rubber exports will enter the United States market without any obstacles.” Morrison smiled and promised.

“Also, all Jasper’s properties will be transferred to me when that happens!” Fabian said.

Morrison raised his eyebrows slightly and said, “Atticus, this was not part of the terms we negotiated before.”

“I just want to see Jasper in pain and regret. What will make him feel more pain than taking everything from him?”

“But according to our assessment, Jasper’s assets are rare and valuable. Moreover, the companies he has shares in have bright futures and prospects...”

“I don’t care about that.” Fabian interrupted Morrison’s chatter in a cold voice. “Morrison, you are the best at dealing with problems that others find difficult, aren’t you?”

Morrison looked at Fabian, only to find that Fabian was staring straight back at him.

The two looked at each other for more than ten seconds before Morrison suddenly laughed. He shrugged and said, “Atticus, now you are a patient, and what you need most is rest...”

“As for what you said, I will help you to contact the other party. I will try my best to satisfy your wishes, how about that?”

“Very good...”

Fabian nodded. He was not putting too much pressure on Morris on as he said calmly, "This is the attitude that a collaborator should have. Well then, I'll be eagerly awaiting your good news."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1465

Over the past two days, the United States stock market, which was turbulent and rocked by a major disaster, suddenly fell silent.

This silence made people feel as though an avalanche or tsunami that was bound to happen had suddenly stopped at its peak.

It was weird and very unusual.

The financial policy institutions of most countries in the world, as well as the financial think tanks of major companies, and the professors and students of economic schools were all paying close attention to the strange stillness of the United States stock market. They knew this calm would not last long, and that it might soon be broken.

Once it broke, there would inevitably be the biggest change in the history of finance.

This would not only affect the development of the global economy, it would also be a landmark event in the history of modern human economics. Many top professionals felt extremely excited and nervous about being able to personally experience it.

What changed this situation was an announcement jointly issued by the United States' highest department of finance and the Federal Reserve.

“In view of the current irrational turbulence in the stock market, the United States stock market is closed for 3 working days.”

The short sentence directly caused FTSE from the United Kingdom, the Nikkei Index from Sunrise Land, and DAX from Germany to plummet.

Three working days and a weekend in which no trading is done, which meant it would be 5 more days before any trading could happen. The fiercest war would come after a peaceful ending.

“They are trying to lock me in the United States stock market. In other words, it is impossible for me to admit defeat and exit the market now.”

Inside a private holiday villa on the outskirts of Waterhoof City, Jasper sipped his strong-smelling coffee and turned his head to the little prince who was lying next to him on a lounge chair as he sunbathed.

The little prince opened his eyelids lazily and snorted before saying, “Lock all your funds in the stock market? Since the market is closed, you can’t leave even if you want to sell for cash and pull out. Once five days are up, it won’t be so easy for you to leave.”

“Not me...”

Jasper shook his head, pointed at the little prince, and said happily, "It's us."

The little prince sneered and said, "I haven't agreed to cooperate with you yet. Why? Are you threatening me with the money I invested before this?"

"This is just an obvious fact. Not to mention that the West is threatening all of us. How exactly am I threatening you?" Jasper said.

The little prince said while feeling displeased, "I just made 10 billion from the initial 5 billion investment. It is really unfortunate that so many things happened before I even had time to celebrate."

"Well, how can it be enough to just double the investment?" Jasper turned his head and smiled at the little prince.

The little prince's eye twitched as he looked at Jasper. He said, "Sometimes I wonder if you are a hillbilly or a lunatic."

"I am most annoyed by the academics. They like to act like they're so knowledgeable after reading a few books, as though it makes them better than everyone."

“For example, some capitalists would dare to risk their lives when they see 100% profit return, but is that how reality really plays out? Marx is turning in his grave now.”

“Furthermore, even if this was the case and it is obviously a death trap, the capitalists are very clever and mischievous. Just you wait and see who among them dares to go and risk their lives. To spend your money, you must still be alive in the first place.”

Jasper shrugged and said, “Little prince, this doesn’t sound like something you’d normally say.”

“Something I’d say? What would I say?” The little prince scoffed and pointed at Jasper’s nose before yelling, “You maniac! Who do you think you are? How dare you fight against the United States and the entire Wall Street?!”

“Were you confused because you got a little achievement? Who gives you the courage to do such a thing?”

“You can just go ahead if you want to die. Yet, you still want to drag me along to serve as your sacrificial victim! Do you think I’m insane?”

Jasper was not mad when he was faced with the little prince’s rare temper.

He only replied in a calm voice, "It's 2001 now. Do you know what the land beneath our feet was called 80 years ago?"

"The settlement!"

Before the little prince could answer, Jasper answered, his voice powerful and resonating.

"What is a settlement? It's opening up an extra-judicial land in Somerland, making it a country within a country.

"People of Somer descent are the lower-class in the settlement. The laws of Somerland don't apply here. Over here, those foreigners are king. To them, people of Somer descent are just maggots who look like humans. We're their slaves."

"We've gone through so many hardships over those 80 years, and now, Harbor City has returned to the sovereignty of the mainland. Despite this, there are still people dreaming about slaughtering people of Somer descent like we are animals."

"You're the little prince and you're a Royal, but so what if you're the king in Waterhoof City? You can only make the people in Somerland fear you. If you have the balls and real ability to back it up, you'll make those foreigners who ruled this world for hundreds of years fear you!"

“Our ancestors and elders did this decades ago, but now you’re scared?”

After hearing what Jasper said, the little prince did not interrupt him. Instead, he just looked straight at Jasper. He was looking at Jasper as if he had just seen some rare animal.

After some time, the little prince started chuckling softly. His chuckle was not disdainful or sarcastic. It sounded as if it was just a normally amused chuckle.

After he shook his head, the little prince was no longer as emotional as before. His rage was replaced with a calmness and steadiness that was more akin to his true self.

“Oh, Jasper, I think you’ve gone mad...”

“I understand the patriotic intent, but I understand the facts in front of me better. If you want to talk to me, you have to use the method of negotiation between businessmen. I will gain nothing from all the talk about history. You won’t gain anything from it either.”

Jasper laughed after he heard that.

Who said the top second-generations of the nation like the second prince were all hedonists?

Who said the righteousness of the nation was a useless argument?

The difference in attitude before and after had shown that the little prince had changed his mind. It was a good thing that there was a change.

Now, Jasper was confident he could pull the little prince firmly back down onto the chair that he was about to leave just moments ago.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1466

Was the little prince worried about the current situation?

He would be lying if he said he was not worried.

If he agreed right after Jasper said something about the righteousness of the nation like a hothead, then the Royals from Waterhoof City would be done for when it was time for the little prince to take over.

None of those people who were at the top of society were ordinary folks.

This was true for both individuals and families. Even the little prince, as the successor who was carefully cultivated by the top family, the Royals, received the most elite education from an early age.

When ordinary children were still learning mathematics, physics, and chemistry in their five years of senior-year exam modules, he had already begun to receive the most comprehensive tactical education.

With the environment and resources provided by the Royals, even a common dog could be educated into an elite canine with a Ph.D.

What more for someone like the little prince who was already extremely smart. These were the reasons why the little prince was more aware of the risks and benefits surrounding this matter.

If it was done well, not only would they make a lot of money, they would also get on Swallow Capital's good side. This intangible benefit was very important for the little prince.

Being able to show the right ability at the right time was what the little prince had long been seeking to do. However, this argument was based on the premise that this strategy was executed well.

If they messed this up and the money was gone, they would have to bear the consequences.

The consequences of this were not just monetary loss. Therefore, the little prince had made plans to pull out. This was why he was so annoyed when he learned that the United States stock market was closed, which made him unable to withdraw even if he wanted to.

It was not so much a tantrum at Jasper, but a tantrum at the unscrupulous and shameless ways of the United States.

"If you want a negotiation between businessmen, then it will be much easier."

Jasper stared at the little prince with a heated gaze.

“Nothing changes when it comes to the funds. I will do what I need to do. What I need is your full support when things heat up.”

The little prince looked over coldly, and Jasper seemed to know what he wanted to ask. Hence, he proactively continued, “Including, but not limited to, all-around support from financial contacts and public opinion.”

“Tch.” The little prince chuckled and said, “What wishful thinking. No way...”

As they were talking, the little prince frowned slightly and glanced at Jasper. Then, he said in a friendlier tone, “This is not the first time you have encountered a family like us, so you understand the way we work.

“I’ll tell you directly now. I’m not the one rejecting you, but right now, I can’t mobilize so much of the family’s resources to help you. Even my old man wouldn’t do this.”

“There are a lot of rules in a family and we Royals have even more of them. If not, the Royals would be finished.”

“I understand.” Jasper nodded. He did not think that the little prince was lying to him.

There was no need to do so.

The little prince was proud and he did not need to lie about such a matter and lower himself.

“It’s good that you can understand.”

The little prince nodded. He felt relieved.

He did not realize that ever since Jasper made 10 billion from his 5 billion investment, and after he saw how the United States stock market was feeling helpless against Jasper, he could no longer look down on Jasper anymore.

Now, he started to care about Jasper’s opinion and views because this would directly affect their collaboration.

In other words, Jasper had used his performance that shocked the world on the United States stock market for the right to speak as equals with the little prince.

“If I use my resources, we can settle some normal problems, but they’re useless in the face of huge matters like this.”

The little prince shrugged and continued to say shamelessly, “I don’t think I can give you any aid other than money. Besides this, I also have a request.”

“Please tell me,” Jasper said.

The little prince was a little embarrassed now. He did not give the aid he was asked for, but now he was making a request. This was not right at all. Most importantly, this did not fit his image.

However, one should always talk business in a business setting, so could he value his image over real tangible profits.

“I’ll manage the funds myself.”

Jasper looked over immediately upon hearing what the little prince said.

The little prince continued with no expression while Jasper was looking at him, “It does seem like I’m getting rid of you once you’ve ceased to be useful, however, the nature and influence of this matter are too large.”

“I can promise that I’ll cooperate with your moves unconditionally, but I want authority to dispose of the funds.”

“You won’t be the only one asking this, right? I met get the same request if I contact Lord Alvarado.” Jasper asked.

The little prince was truly surprised now. He said, “How could you guess this?”

“Aside from your families coming from different places, the situation with you guys is almost the same. So, you guys contacted each other privately and reached an agreement. This is something normal.” Jasper’s tone was mild, and he did not seem to want to fly into a rage at this moment.

The little prince sighed and got up to pat Jasper’s shoulder. He said, “This is a favor I’ll owe you.”

They earned 5 billion because of Jasper, but after they’re faced with this problem, they wanted to pull out with their profits in tow. Even though the little prince promised he would cooperate with Jasper’s plan, this action alone made it seem as if he wanted to get rid of Jasper once he ceased to be useful.

If this were someone else, the little prince would not be so bothered. Someone like the little prince would not normally talk to others, much less make them a promise or owe them favors. However, this was not anyone else, this was Jasper. This was Jasper, who had earned the right to stand on the same level as him.

Thus, the little prince had to mind Jasper’s feelings.

“Fine, I accept,” Jasper replied suddenly.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1467

Jasper agreed quite readily and decisively.

This caught the little prince off guard.

“Did you agree?” The little prince asked subconsciously.

Jasper said lightly, “The money is yours. Whether it is the 5 billion principal or the additional 5 billion profit, it is the benefit that the little prince should get after investing with me.”

“Now that you intend to take the money back, how can I refuse?”

The little prince frowned and looked at Jasper carefully. He said, “I was the one who didn’t do this properly. If you have any grievances, you can tell me now.”

With a wave of his hand, Jasper replied, “What is there to complain about? The reason for this is very simple. “I can’t stop you from taking away your money, right? That’ll be wrong of me.”

The calmer Jasper was, the more the little prince felt that he did not handle this properly.

The little prince thought for a while and said, "You don't need to say anything to Lionel. I will do it for you. I can even tell you on his behalf that we will support you in whatever you want to do in the follow-up of this matter."

"That's good."

Jasper stood up, held out his hand to the little prince, and said, "Then it's settled."

As he looked at Jasper with scorching eyes, the little prince smiled suddenly and took Jasper's hand. He said, "It's a deal!"

After discussing business affairs, Jasper and the little prince chatted for a while before leaving.

Perhaps it was because of his sudden withdrawal of funds, but the little prince treated Jasper very politely. Not only did he not stop Jasper, but he even personally walked Jasper to the door of the holiday villa and watched him get in the car before he left.

After Jasper's car disappeared from the end of the mountain road, Coffey appeared beside the little prince and said softly, "Little prince, the master is still at home waiting for your news. We should go back now."

The little prince's gaze stayed fixed on the direction in which Jasper's car had disappeared and he chuckled softly. "Waiting for my news? What's there to wait for?"

"Jasper exceeded me, the family, and everyone's expectations."

Coffey was taken aback. He was a little confused. However, his decades of habit as a subordinate told him that he did need to understand many things, let alone get to the bottom of it.

Only this time, the little prince was in good spirits. So, he continued, "The growth of that guy is really terrifying..."

"In this situation, I am indeed inferior to him. Perhaps the Royals' power is too strong, so I don't need to face any choices that are not conducive to me..."

"This time, I also decided to support Jasper. I believe him. Even if I can't win, I won't lose."

Wouldn't he lose if he did not win? Coffey was even more confused now. However, he did not probe further, he simply bowed slightly and said softly, "Yes."

After coming out of the little prince's private and exclusive villa, Jasper was expressionless.

"Jasper, did the negotiation fail?"

Julian, who was driving, looked at Jasper's expression in the rearview mirror and asked. Julian, who rarely saw Jasper with this expression, was a little upset. He knew that this meeting between Jasper and the little prince must not have been pleasant.

This caused a murderous look to appear in Julian's eyes.

If Jasper gave him a word at this moment, he could immediately turn back and singlehandedly twist the head off the head of the little prince to hand it to Jasper.

Julian would not consider how big and powerful the little prince's background was.

“No...”

Jasper shook his head and looked out the window. He said faintly, “I just suddenly realized I can’t underestimate these successors of top families no matter what.”

To be honest, Jasper was not worried that the little prince and Lord Alvarado would back out on their collaboration with him at this moment. Their status and family status predetermined that they would not be able to put their own safety before matters of principle.

Their roots were in the country. Their status, wealth, and prestige were built on the foundation of Somerland.

If Somerland’s economy crashed and was played for suckers by the Western capitalists, not only would the citizens suffer. At the same time, the families that were rooted in the land of Somerland would suffer as well. Anything they did at this moment was being closely monitored by the big shots in Swallow Capital.

Therefore, at this moment, they would not dare to play the tricks up their sleeves even if they had balls of steel.

That was why Jasper was not worried that the little prince would give up on his collaboration with him. However, the problem was that he did not expect that the little prince and Lord Alvarado to withdraw their capital and gain back control of the funds.

Although he said that he would respect the decision, this move fully showed the greed and cautious nature of these people.

To put it awkwardly, this was a clear example of saving one's own bottom during a disaster.

That was why the little prince felt guilty at that time.

That was why Jasper's face was as calm as stagnant water.

With a sigh, Jasper closed his eyes and said, "I need to meet a lot of people after this. I don't have the time to worry too much about this. Let's go back to Southeast Province first."

Looking at the tired Jasper through the rearview mirror, Julian said softly, "Jasper, no matter how big the issue is, you still have to rest."

“I don’t know much about major principles, but I know that the body is the primary resource for a revolution. If you collapse now, everything will be done for.”

Jasper opened his eyes to look at Julian, and he chuckled before saying, “Don’t worry, I won’t.”

Julian grinned and asked, “Julian, who are we seeing next?”

Jasper thought for a while and replied, “We’ll need to see Lord Alvarado next. I’ll contact him and try to ask him to come to the Southeast Province.”

After he finished saying that, Jasper’s phone rang. He was stunned when he saw the phone number.

It was his childhood friend whom he had not talked to for a very long time, Greg.

Jasper did not hesitate before answering.

“Jasper, this is bad. I’ve been sued!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1468

Greg's call surprised Jasper.

When Jasper asked Greg to start a mobile phone manufacturing company, it was in preparation of the rise of smartphones in the next two to three years.

Mobile phone manufacturing was not an easy task even in 2020, so Jasper did not expect Greg to do much.

The important thing was to make arrangements in the relevant supply chains first, which was commonly known as carving out a position.

The mobile phone industry was an industry that Jasper attached great importance to in the future. Its importance was second only to the two companies, Abbylon and Terizone, and in Jasper's heart, its priority was even higher than that of his real estate companies.

After all, the real estate industry was too policy-oriented and his memory of his past life already proved that the government could not always support the development of the real estate industry.

Therefore, Jasper not only asked Greg to set up a mobile phone manufacturing company, but also run an electronic equipment manufacturing company that had always been working on related projects.

The only issue was that this was not an easy task Therefore, apart from providing the capital, Jasper did not help Greg too much.

However, now Greg was being sued?

“What happened?” Jasper asked with a frown.

“It’s because I was too careless.” Greg gave a wry smile and explained the whole story.

“Half a year ago, I found a team with the funds you gave me and invited them to join the company. The leader of this team was Eric Whitman. He was originally a chief designer in Fliegen, the first domestic company that manufactured mobile phones in Nim City.”

“After he joined the company, he led the team to overcome several challenges in a row. Our prototype was successfully developed last week.”

“But I didn’t expect the news of this to get leaked. Fliegen knew about this, and they said that our mobile phones used their patented technology and they wanted to take us to court.”

When Jasper heard this, he lifted his brows.

He knew Fliegen, this company was not foreign to him. When Nokia was dominating the mobile phone markets all over the world, there were still some individual companies in the country that occupied half of the market. Fliegen was one of them. when they were at their peak, they dominated 30% of the mobile phone market in the country.

In an era where Nokia was worshipped, this was almost a miracle.

Meanwhile, Fliegen started the era of counterfeiting domestic mobile phones with another company named Goldie.

Most people might not know that the draw marquee-LED Banner was first developed by Fliegen.

At least in the current domestic mobile phone industry, Fliegen could be regarded as a giant. It was definitely not comparable to the new company that Greg had just established. In that case, why did Fliegen target Greg?

“Did we really commit patent infringement?”

Jasper asked a crucial question.

This was also a matter of principle. If they really did this, then no matter how much the loss was, Jasper could only make Greg pay the compensation fee and stop the infringement.

“Absolutely not!”

Greg’s tone was firm and angry.

“You know me, I would never do this kind of thing. After the incident, Eric and I studied with his team for a long time. We found that the infringed patent Fliegen mentioned was originally a personal patent owned by Eric himself. It has nothing to do with Fliegen at all.”

“Eric also told me that Fliegen’s boss, Vinny Goldman, has always been very dissatisfied with his resignation. He once even said that any company in Somerland that dared to hire Eric was intentionally going against him “I think this is Fliegen’s boss, Vinny’s, revenge against me and Eric.”

Jasper's face turned dark and he said, "Where are you now?"

"In Nim City. I plan to come over and talk to Vinny today to see if this matter can be resolved peacefully."

Greg sighed slightly and said, "Fliegen is not afraid of litigation, but we can't afford it. The previous investment in research and development was heavy, and now the company is already very short of funds."

"We finally got the first batch of products and unless we can get products into the market and start making money, it will be difficult for the company to continue operating."

"Moreover, we were almost done with the investment in the advertisement. If this lawsuit with Fliegen is not resolved, we will not be able to bring the product to the market."

"When that happens, even the money invested in the advertisement will be in vain and we'll be burdened with a lot of breaches of contracts. I think Vinny knows this, so he chose to take action at this critical moment."

Nim City was not far from Waterhoof City. It was only an hour plus drive from Waterhoof City via the highway.

According to Jasper's plans, he was only due to meet the next important person the next day. Hence, Jasper said directly, "You should go talk with them first. I happen to be in Waterhoof City now. You should be done by the time I get to Nim City. We will talk about the specifics when we meet."

Greg replied excitedly, "You're coming over? That's great. We'll talk when you get here."

After he hung up the phone, Jasper asked Julian to turn around to head down the highway toward Nim City. After thinking about it, he called Wendy in Nauritus City again and asked her to use the company's resources to investigate Fliegen and its boss, Vinny Goldman.

When Jasper's Bentley first joined the highway, Nim City was more than ninety kilometers away.

Standing at the entrance of Fliegen's factory that occupied a large and impressive area, Greg said emotionally, "I wonder when our company will grow to this scale."

Eric, who was no stranger to this place, chuckled and said, "Don't worry, you'll have it soon."

"Vinny is not easy to deal with, and he has a horrible temper and domineering personality. Mr. Costa, you must be mentally prepared."

Faced with Eric's reminder, Greg shrugged and said, "We are here to dispel any enmities, not to fight- We may be weak now, but I have no qualms about bowing my head now so that our company will flourish."

"Furthermore, we also brought your personal patent certificate. I dare say that we're being reasonable. We have the upper hand, so no matter how overbearing he is, he won't go over the line."

Looking at the confident Greg, Eric was a little worried. He shook his head and said, "Mr. Costa, you haven't dealt with Vinny. You don't know how he is. If this person were so easy to deal with, I wouldn't have left this company that I worked in for more than ten years."

Greg patted Eric on the shoulder and said boldly, "It doesn't matter if he's good or bad, I still have to see him, no?"

While they were talking, the two entered Fliegen's office building.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1469

In order to avoid attracting the attention of the outside world as much as possible, the mobile phone manufacturing company established by Greg did not use the JW name.

Once it became famous in this industry in the future, Jasper could change it back and integrate it into his group. However, right now, this mobile phone manufacturing company, which was founded less than half a year ago, was still named Blau Mobiles as per Greg's wishes.

Jasper came to the site of Blau Mobiles, a newly developed commercial district in the city center of Nim City.

The overall layout and construction of this place mirrored the Southface River project. In the beginning, the Nim City government also sought advice from JW Real Estates.

There were six to eight floors in the commercial building, and the current office space for Blau Mobiles occupied two whole floors.

The elevator door soon opened, and Jasper came to the front desk after walking down the corridor.

"Hello, I'm Greg Costa's friend, is he back?"

A beautiful young girl was seated at the front desk. When she heard Jasper calling her boss' name, she did not dare to procrastinate.

"Mr. Costa went out and he's not here yet. Can I contact his secretary for you?" The receptionist asked politely.

"Sure," Jasper nodded.

Soon, a secretary who was notified by Greg over the phone hurried over. She was a beautiful woman in her thirties.

"Hello, are you Mr. Laine? I am Mr. Costa's secretary. My name is Veronica Lint."

Although Veronica did not know that Jasper was the boss of the company who was simply sitting behind the scenes, Greg's attitude and tone when he gave her the orders made her realize that this very young Mr. Laine possessed an extraordinary background. This was the reason behind her polite tone and demeanor.

"Hello..."

Jasper smiled and shook her hand.

“I’m Jasper Laine.”

“Mr. Laine, please come with me. Mr. Costa told me that he will come back as soon as he finishes his work. Since you arrived before him, you can take a break in his office,” Veronica said respectfully.

Jasper entered Blau Mobiles with Veronica leading the way.

Yet, he did not immediately go into Greg’s office.

Instead, he walked around the office area first. Although Veronica did not know what Jasper wanted to do, she still stayed by his side vigilantly.

Jasper was clearly examining the condition of everyone and everything in Blau Mobiles that was under Greg’s leadership.

To Jasper’s satisfaction, although most of the employees of Blau Mobiles were young people, they had a rigorous work style. Moreover, the office area was also very tidy. It looked very much like a thriving company.

It seemed that Greg had started to develop his management skills.

After seeing all this, Jasper walked into Greg's office. "Does Mr. Costa work here?"

Jasper asked curiously, looking at the small office simply separated by nothing more than glass that was placed in the corner of the public office area.

Although there were blinds, there was not much privacy since it was surrounded by glass. Moreover, the office was very small and did not look a typical boss' office.

"Mr. Costa said he can see the status of all the employees at a glance from this spot, and it is also easier to communicate with everyone regarding potential problems at any time," Veronica said with a touch of admiration in her eyes.

After nodding, Jasper saw a simple camp bed behind the desk. There were pillows and quilts on it, so obviously someone often slept here.

"Because the company was just founded, there are many things to take care of and the system is not perfect yet. Therefore, most things require Mr. Costa to personally make decisions. Therefore, Mr. Costa chooses to sleep in the company most of the time."

This time, Veronica took the initiative to explain.

"Good." Jasper nodded, silently approving of Greg.

All things considered, a person who could humble himself and endure hardship was worth entrusting many things to, even if his ability was limited.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1470

Jasper's employment philosophy was to look at character before ability.

No matter how good their ability was, if their character was bad, then they were destined to never be able to handle major businesses.

Besides, Greg's ability was not bad.

"You should sit down and rest. I'm going out now. You can call me anytime you need something, as I'll be right next door," Veronica said.

After Jasper waved his hand and dismissed Veronica, Jasper did not bother behaving courteously. He sat directly in Greg's seat before he turned on the computer and started to check the information about Fliegen and Vinny Goldman that Wendy had sent over.

Ring ring. Jasper's phone rang.

Jasper, who was reading the information, picked up the phone.

“Damn, where are you?”

Henry’s angry voice came from the phone.

Jasper patted his forehead and said with a smile, “I almost forgot that I left you in the hotel and neglected you. I’m in Nim City now.”

Last night, Jasper and Henry left Harbor City together. The most important thing right now was to seize the moment to draw in as many active forces as possible before the final battle.

This had to be done by Jasper alone. No one else could replace him.

As for Henry, it was easy to understand that this guy could not stay put in Harbor City at all. Worse still, it was during such an eventful period. As such, Zachary was also worried that Henry would continue to conflict with the Atticus family if he stayed in Harbor City.

After all, Henry setting fire to Empire Meet was still the talk of the town. During this sensitive time, it would be safer for Henry to follow Jasper back to the mainland.

“Damn, are you still a human? I found a business partner for you, yet you abandoned me at the hotel!” Henry said while feeling pissed.

Jasper was surprised. “You found me a partner?”

“Hehe!”

In a relationship as close as Henry and Jasper’s, their complaints were often mindless banter which they would not take to heart at all. Hence, Henry’s attention was immediately diverted.

“A super rich country bumpkin. His family’s money is no less than that of any of the rich families. Even so, they have no prominent social status, so they always long to break into the real upper-class circles.

“This kid showed up just in time. I was thinking that you needed financial support the most right now, right? So I got this kid here just in time.”

Jasper quickly sifted through the big bosses of Harbor City according to the characteristics that Henry had mentioned in his head. However, he realized that many individuals met the described character.

After all, only the four wealthy families were the real upper-class of Harbor City. There were many other nouveau riches too, but it was rare that Henry would acknowledge their wealth.

“Stop guessing. They’re not in Harbor City. They’re from Nawait.”

Henry’s sentence caused Jasper’s eyes to light up.

“The Pullers from Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing?”

This time, Henry was shocked.

“How could you guess? Are you a human or ghost?”

Jasper was in a good mood now. He asked, “Where are you guys?”

“We’re waiting for you in Waterhoof City,” Henry answered.

“Stop waiting. Come to Nim City now. You’ve done a good deed!” Jasper laughed and said.

At the same time, the door of the office opened.

Greg walked in first. The moment Jasper lifted his head to glance at him, the smile on his face disappeared. It was promptly replaced with anger.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1471

“We’ll come right now. I’ll call you when I get to Nim City. Don’t go anywhere this time,” Henry grumbled.

Jasper grunted a reply before hanging up the phone.

He did not need to exchange so many pleasantries with Henry.

Besides, this thing in front of him right now was more important

“Jasper, you’re here. You didn’t wait too long, did you?”

After Greg placed his briefcase down, he smiled and asked.

Jasper looked at Greg and he could see a clear handprint on Greg’s face.

The person who slapped him exerted a lot of force. Not only did it leave a clear print, but it was also swollen. From the looks of it, Jasper knew the slap was very recent.

However, Greg did not say anything so Jasper did not expose Greg's embarrassing mark. Instead, he looked at the person behind Greg.

The person behind Greg was a man in his forties who looked refined and cultured. His face was thin and he looked meticulous. He had on a pair of round-rimmed glasses which made him look like a teacher who was always hungry for knowledge.

However, his expression was stiff.

"Let me introduce you. This is Eric Whitman and he's the current chief technology officer of Blau Mobiles. He's also the reason why we can solve so many technical problems so fast. He is the pillar of Blau Mobiles.

"Eric, this is Mr. Laine. He's the founder of JW. He's also the real boss of Blau Mobiles."

Eric was stunned when he heard what Greg said. He asked dumbfoundedly, "Real boss?"

"Actually, Blau Mobiles is just a subsidiary company under JW." Greg directly told Eric the truth.

"JW had been funding us ever since the company was founded."

Even though Eric was shocked, honestly it did not matter who the boss was because it was still the same to him.

Moreover, now that Blau Mobiles and Greg were in trouble, it would be good to have another bigger boss standing behind them. At least they had someone to support them.

“Hello, Mr. Laine, I’m Eric Whitman.”

Eric extended his hand and said.

Jasper shook Eric’s hand and said, “I’ve heard your name when I was talking about work with Greg. Just as he said, you’re the pillar of Blau Mobiles right now. I have to thank you for that.”

Eric smiled bitterly and said, “What pillar? Mr. Costa’s just flattering me.”

At this moment, the door of the office was opened. When Veronica came into the room, she exclaimed right before she was about to speak, “Mr. Costa, what’s wrong with your face?”

It was obvious that Veronica and Greg did not have a normal relationship between a secretary and a boss.

She walked over anxiously and pitifully. Then, she lifted her hand to touch the handprint on Greg's face. When she touched Greg's wound, he sucked in a deep breath from the pain.

"I'm fine. It's just a minor accident," Greg said through gritted teeth.

Veronica knew she should not say anything more. So, she suppressed her heartbreak and said, "I'll get you some ointment."

After she said that, she hurried out the door.

At this moment, Jasper said faintly, "Tell me, what happened?"

Greg gritted his teeth and said, "Just now, I went to see the boss of Fliegen, Vinny Goldman, with Eric. I figured it would be fine to give them some goodies as long as we could reach a consensus."

"After all, Blau Mobiles is still too small and we're not really Fliegen's rival in the mobile phone industry."

"However, Vinny proposed to buy Blau Mobiles for 5 million. When I rejected him, he slapped me and asked his security guard to kick me out."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1472

What happened was easy to understand but was incredibly insulting.

When Greg said this, he did not react too much. After all, he was used to this level of humiliation. However, was he not still humiliated deep inside?

Now, he was not the good-for-nothing son-in-law living at his wife's parent's house. Back then, anyone could step on his head and bully him, but now, he was the boss of Blau Mobiles. He was in charge of so many people and tens of thousands of dollars in funding.

Even though Jasper was the one who gave him this, Greg discovered his self dignity and confidence during this process. He also found a life with purpose and goals.

However, all of this was almost destroyed by Vinny's slap.

Slam!

The loud voice of a palm on the surface of the desk shocked everyone.

Greg lifted his head to look over and saw Jasper's dark face.

"Is there anyone else doing business like this in this time and age? This is not a business, this is daylight robbery!"

"Does he think he's the boss? 5 million to buy Blau Mobiles? My first investment was 20 million in cash. To this day, I've invested about 38 million in this company in cash alone. I still haven't included the result of the research from a while back. Vinny is such a scheming rat."

Jasper had finally found an opportunity to vent the pressure and anger he had been facing recently. Now, he was going to release all of it.

However, even if this did not happen, Jasper would still slap Vinny back without hesitating after being met with a request like that.

"What's wrong with you?"

Jasper lifted his head and scolded Greg without hesitation.

“He made you come back with just one slap. You’re a man and you’re just going to let him slap you i? If he slapped you once, you should slap him back twice. Did you think he would kill you?”

Greg lowered his head and said timidly, “I was worried that I’d cause trouble for Blau Mobiles.”

“What trouble?”

Jasper’s tone was sterner now.

“Yes, I am the boss of Blau Mobiles, but you’re the person in charge of this company. You built this company with your own blood, sweat, and tears. If you’re so scared of everything, don’t start a business! Just go back home and look after your kids!”

A man like Greg almost burst into tears after being scolded by Jasper. His eyes were red and his head was lowered. His entire body was shaking gently.

It was unknown if he was angry or feeling humiliated. Eric did not even dare to breathe too loudly as he stood to one side.

He finally saw the big boss’ boldness and authority.

Greg was good at managing a team, but he was too soft. It might be because of his past experiences, but he would often make light of everything.

This was not a bad thing, but as the person in charge of a company, he needed to be either authoritative or calm depending on the situation. Unfortunately, Greg only knew how to be the latter and never the former.

After seine time, the employees in Blau Mobile became used to their boss being a yes man.

This was not good for a company's development in the long run.

However, Jasper was different. This statement caused Eric's scalp to turn numb. He felt hot air rising to his brain and he wanted so badly to go out there, grab Vinny, and slap him twice across the face.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1473

“Greg, people will think you’re weak and easy to bully if you’re always compromising and overcautious when it comes to being a man and starting a company. We won’t bully others, but we also won’t allow others to step on us.

“We’ll chop off anyone who reaches their claws over, it doesn’t matter who it is, it doesn’t even matter if it was God himself. You may be asking what might happen next if we did such a thing. Well, at most, we’d start over. You’ve experienced so much, but do you think it will be even worse than what you’ve experienced?”

Greg gritted his teeth and replied, “I know what I should do now.”

Jasper nodded and said, “A person’s character is developed from the constant changing of their environment. You have to change, but this won’t be something you can do overnight. This time, I’ll take care of it, but since you know what you should do in the future, then I can rest assured it is worth my time.”

Greg’s character was a little problematic, but to Jasper, it was not something that could not be salvaged.

The main thing was that Greg had a very rare personality and ability that was hard to come by.

That was why Jasper was willing to help him and was willing to give him another chance.

If not, he would not be comfortable leaving a huge fund to Greg and not minding it at all, instead simply allowing Greg to do anything he wanted with it.

Even so, disregarding all this fuss, Greg was still his man. Now, a boss who was in the mobile phone business came out to slap Greg, which meant he was disrespecting Jasper as well. Therefore, Jasper had to show his anger.

This was for Greg, and also for the other employees.

“Julian,” Jasper called out.

The door to the office opened and Julian appeared at the entrance.

“Get me Vinny Goldman,” Jasper ordered.

Julian nodded and left without saying a word.

“Jasper, what are you doing?” Greg did not expect Jasper to ask his subordinate to kidnap Vinny. This was against the law, which obviously shocked him.

“He was the one who broke the rules first, so don’t blame us for resorting to extreme measures.

“I have a lot to take care of later so I don’t have the time to waste on this small fry. Didn’t he say he wants to buy Blau Mobiles with 5 million? We’ll just get him to come here to talk to me about it face to face,” Jasper said with a wave of his hand.

Greg chuckled bitterly and saw Eric looking excited at one side. Hence, he did not stop Jasper.

Perhaps Jasper was right.

“Let’s go. We’ll eat first.” Jasper got up and said, “I think he should be here by the time we’re almost done. I have two more friends coming over later too so let’s get to know each other during the meal.”

Of course, this was not a problem. After handling Greg's matter, they quickly confirmed a place. The place they went to was not a fancy place, but a normal noodle shop. This place was also specifically requested by Jasper.

A meal in a luxurious hotel was for clients, and since they were all his people, then it would be a bit inappropriate to go to such a formal place.

Inside the shop, Jasper picked up some of his noodles and mocked Greg, "Your secretary, Veronica, right? What's her relationship with you?"

"She's my secretary, so it's obvious. We're employer and employee," Greg said, feeling embarrassed.

Jasper smiled and said, "I don't oppose office romance."

Of course he would not. After all, Wendy was sitting next to his office. Thus, Jasper was the one person that was most unqualified to oppose office romance.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1474

“I have a pretty good impression of Veronica.”

As Jasper said that, he recalled Veronica’s reaction after she saw Greg being hurt. One could not fake that kind of genuine concern and anxiety.

“However, you have to think about how you’re going to do this yourself. After all, you need to find a stepmother for your kids.”

Greg shook his head and said, “I just want to manage the company properly. I’m not thinking about other things right now.”

“It’s fine as long as you can decide for yourself. However, time waits for no man. If you don’t act now, women will eventually get snatched away by someone else. When that happens, no one will care even if you regret it,” mocked Jasper.

“Blau Mobiles has two offices. One is Cavern City, which we had initially chosen, and the other is in Nim City. Right now, we’re focusing on the R&D center in Cavern City. Eric will be in charge of this place. After the new year, I will move the office in Nim City over to that location,” Greg changed the topic and continued.

Jasper nodded and said, not expressing an opinion, “The company is not big right now, so it’s indeed not suitable to move. You will run into a lot of trouble if you choose to do so.”

“Cavern City is still rapidly developing. In the future, it will be the manufacturing and sales hub of many domestic electronic products. It won’t hurt to go over and make the necessary arrangements for the business there earlier rather than later.”

Greg nodded and sighed lightly. “In the beginning, you suggested that I go to Cavern City, but at that time, Blau Mobiles didn’t have anything, so naturally I couldn’t get any good deals.

“After all, the competition in Cavern City is fierce, and the people in Nim City are very sincere. So that’s why I put the administrative center in Nim City, leaving only one R&D center in Cavern City.

“However, it seems that this move was wrong.”

Jasper put the noodles in his mouth and said, “Not entirely. The geographical conditions of Nim City are not worse than that of Cavern City. It will also serve as the traffic operation center for the entirety of River City. Besides, it’s near the best port and near Waterhoof City as well. There are advantages to both of them, so you should think it through before you make your decision.”

“Damn, you people started eating before we got here?”

Henry’s voice came from the door. Then, they saw him pushing the door open and striding in. Behind him was an unassuming man in his thirties.

This man was not tall and he looked ordinary. However, his eyes looked very alert. After he walked in, his eyes were fixed on Jasper.

It seemed that he could tell who the person he really wanted to meet was between Jasper and Greg.

“This is Todd Puller. He’s the person I told you about, the young master of Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing.” Henry pointed at the man and said to Jasper.

Then, he picked up his fork to start chowing down some of the noodles. He said to Todd without turning his head, “This is Jasper Laine, my future brother-in-law and the boss of JW.”

“Hello, Mr. Laine. ” Todd was very passionate and courteous. He even looked a little respectful.

Jasper smiled, stood up, and shook his hand with Todd. He said, "I've heard about Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing; Your father is also an exceptional entrepreneur in Nawait. I've been wanting to get to know him. This trip was not made in vain now that I got to see you, Mr. Puller."

Todd said in astonishment, "If my father knows about this, he would be very glad. You're very prestigious now, Mr. Laine, and everyone should learn from you."

"You're too courteous."

The two of them exchanged pleasantries and sat down to eat.

Meanwhile, Greg was stunned as he stood to one side. Anyone in the mobile phone industry or, more precisely, anyone in the electronic equipment industry would know about Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing.

It could be said that under the restrictions of Western technology monopoly, Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing was the only advanced semiconductor manufacturer that domestic electronics manufacturers could connect with.

Semiconductors and organic molecule chips were inseparable, especially when it came to things like mobile phones.

For example, the two largest domestic mobile phone manufacturers in the country, Fliegen and Goldie, were almost entirely dependent on the semiconductor equipment provided by Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing.

It could be said that Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing decided the fate of most domestic mobile phone manufacturers.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1475

Greg had been in the domestic mobile phone manufacturing industry for almost half a year and he had figured out a lot of the things in this industry.

One had to know that being able to make the prototype meant that one could formally produce mobile phones, at least requiring one to initially integrate both the upstream and downstream of the supply chain.

Even so, Greg was still not qualified to contact companies like Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing.

This was because the other party looked down on small manufacturers like him.

Every shipment was calculated in the tens of millions and they would not accept their order if it did not consist of enough stock.

Furthermore, they might not accept Greg's order if the latter did not demonstrate a certain industry strength or market cap even if he were to order tens of millions in parts. If the small factory went bankrupt, this would then affect the brand of Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing.

Almost all major international brands were arrogant. Meanwhile, Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing did indeed possess the qualifications of being so arrogant in the domestic semiconductor industry.

It could be said that Greg was not even qualified to sit down to eat and drink tea in front of Todd right now. However, at this moment, Todd was smiling at Greg. Meanwhile, when he looked at Jasper, his eyes were full of respect.

'How many powerful figures does Jasper know that I am unaware of? Is JW's influence already so great?' Greg could not help but think to himself.

Naturally, it was impossible for him to know that JW was no longer what it used to be.

Terizone dominated the internet and communication in the country.

Abbylon started online shopping.

Sena stood up tall in the domestic internet gaming industry.

JW Real Estates was ranked top three in the overall comparisons list consisting of national real estate companies at the end of the year.

JW Electronics became the leader in the field of domestic electronic product manufacturing.

Advent Entertainment Group completely swapped over to the entertainment industry in the mainland market and had become an industry titan.

Today, JW was already a real behemoth that consisted of diversified companies across various industries.

Their products could be as big as a house or as small as an MP3. It also held the contact information of all of your online friends, a piece of clothing you bought on an online shopping platform, or perhaps a new super weapon you created in United Legends.

These things that were closely related to people's livelihood had been quietly laid out around everyone in Somerland.

You might not use KK, but you would likely play games. Perhaps you did not play games, but you would eventually buy something online. Even if you did not shop online, you would definitely buy a house and start a family.

JW started silently manifesting around everyone in the country. This was the closed-loop ecosystem that the top business tycoons of later generations dreamt of achieving.

As far as Todd was concerned, what was more important was the influence that Jasper had.

The guest of the wealthy Law family in Harbor City was always someone cultured and competent. Moreover, he even received news that Jasper had a cooperative relationship with heirs of top families such as the little prince in the mainland.

This was what the Pullers, that Todd represented, desperately needed right now.

The Pullers owned Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing. Although there were two major shareholders in this company, Flips and the Nawait government, this had become a double-edged sword. Now, the Pullers, who was also the founder and largest private shareholder of Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing, urgently needed to shed their identity of being the Nawait government's spokesperson and were seeking a real path to break into the upper class.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1476

“Did you come to the mainland for work this time, Mr. Puller?” Jasper asked, seemingly without any ulterior motive.

Todd never wanted to hide his intentions. He placed his fork down as a mark of respect and said, “I did come here to work. Mainly, Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing came up with a 1.2-micron chip recently and a lot of manufacturers in the country are very interested in it.”

“What? 1.2-micron?” Greg could not help but exclaim.

Before this, Todd had already noticed Greg, who was sitting next to Jasper. He smiled and said, “Yes, do you know about this, Sir?”

“I know about it very well. Hello, Mr. Puller. I am the manager of Blau Mobiles Manufacturing Company, Greg Costa,” Greg said excitedly.

“Blau Mobiles?” Todd frowned and tried his best to rake his memory, but he could not remember where he had heard this name before.

“A few days ago, our company came up with our first prototype and we’re using the 1.6-micron chip that’s going to be obsolete soon. So, it’s normal if you don’t know me, Mr. Puller,” Greg said in embarrassment.

Jasper smiled and said, “I invested in Blau Mobiles.”

Todd lifted his eyebrows as his expression evidently became more amiable.

“I see, hello, Mr. Costa.”

“You’re still using the 1.6-micron chip? Excuse my bluntness, but that technology has died out in the country. If you’re interested, we can supply you some 1.2-micron chips.”

“Really?” Greg was so surprised that he almost screamed.

Currently, there were no domestic companies that could independently produce micron chips, they were all relying on imports from either Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing or several monopolies in the United States or Germany.

However, the goods that these companies could provide to the country were all technologies that were quickly phasing out, while the prices were more higher than the latest technology products sold in their own countries.

This obviously showed that they were bullying the people of Somerland for not having the technology capability to match them, leaving them easy pickings to be scalped.

Greg had even tried his best to get these 1.6-micron junks that people looked down on through Eric's old friends. If he did not do this, they would not even be able to buy trash.

However, right now Todd was actually providing a batch of 1.2-micron chips from Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing. This was such a surprise to Greg.

"It was originally very difficult. After all, 1.2-microns is the current international gold-standard technical specification, which makes it globally in demand. Not to mention that many domestic manufacturers want to get the goods, so we don't even have too much in our inventory..."

"However, since this is Mr. Laine's company, I can source you a batch no matter how difficult it is."

When Todd said this, he looked at Jasper. It was clear that he was trying to please Jasper.

"You're too kind, Mr. Puller."

One should never hit a smiling person, let alone when they have just given you such a big gift. Hence, Jasper naturally had no reason to reject it.

He had even planned to talk to Todd in private. After all, he had already invested about 100 million into his steppers project. However, he had not yet overcome the difficulties in creating the 1.6-micron chips, let alone the 1.2-micron on a nano-scale.

If Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing was willing to help, this really would be a huge deal.

Todd, who did not know that he had walked right into Jasper's plan, looked happy and was about to speak when the door opened.

A fat man was then thrown inside. The private room that was filled with the smell of noodles was now filled with the smell of blood.

The smile on Jasper's face disappeared. He looked at the man who was shaking uncontrollably on the floor, his eyes looking like they were deep in thought.

At one side, Greg's eyes were shooting flames. He stared at the man in front of him that he knew very well, Vinny Goldman!

Life at The Top – Chapter 1477

“Who are you guys? Who the hell are you guys?”

Vinny got up from the floor while struggling. His face was covered with blood and dirt as he opened his extremely swollen eyes. His vision turned red from his blood so he could not see Greg, Jasper, and the gang, who were sitting not far away from him.

He could only see their silhouettes.

Panic and anger caused Vinny to scream and roar. When Todd saw Vinny, he was also shocked.

One was the young master of Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing and one was the boss of one of the biggest mobile phone manufacturing companies in the country. Thus, it was only natural that they knew each other.

Todd peered at Jasper secretly before he decided to wait and see what was going to happen.

Henry’s legs were crossed. When Jasper was talking to them, he was stuffing his mouth. Right now, he was full and the entertainment seemed to have arrived.

He did not know how Vinny offended Jasper and why Jasper had asked Julian to beat Vinny up before bringing him over. However, this did not prevent Henry from having an interest in him.

“Where did this fatso come from? Why the f*ck are you screaming for?” Henry pressed his lips together and grumbled.

Vinny was furious and roared, “Who the hell are you? Do you know who I am? How dare you kidnap me? Do you want to die?”

“Hell..!”

Henry was amused.

“It’s been such a long time since I heard such an arrogant statement, Who are you? You’re just a f*cking fat*ss!”

“If you don’t watch your mouth, forget kidnapping, best believe that we’ll slice you into pieces and eat you with our noodles later!”

Vinny’s blood-covered face turned White from anger. He opened his eyes forcefully and saw Henry. Then, he saw Jasper and Greg beside him.

“Greg Costa?” Vinny exclaimed.

Then, he scoffed. “So, it’s you. You’re pretty ballsy for asking someone to kidnap me. You better let me go now and then send me out the door while kneeling on the floor respectfully. If not, you won’t be able to bear the consequences.”

“Vinny, you’re so arrogant even when you’re here.”

Greg looked at Vinny coldly and said with a chuckle. Since he had support, he was not scared anymore.

“F*ck you, you dumb*ss!”

Vinny did not show Greg any respect at all. He pointed a this nose and yelled, “I never expected you to play these dirty tricks on me.”

“Very well, fine. Since you want to play, I’ll play with you to the end. I will not leave this place and I want to see what you’re going to do to me, you idiot. I’ll kill you even if you kneel and beg for mercy later!”

“How arrogant.”

Jasper clapped his hand and said with a grin.

Vinny looked at him from the corners of his eyes. From what he knew, Greg was a small businessman with no background and skills. So, what VIP would a person like this know?

Therefore, he did not care about Jasper at all.

“Who are you? Do you think I need you to tell me if I’m being arrogant?” Vinny scolded.

The moment he finished saying that, Henry splashed a bowl of hot soup right on Vinny’s face and body.

The soup was still steaming hot and was very spicy. When it landed on Vinny, white smoke appeared from his body and he started screaming while struggling furiously.

“F*ck you, you son of a b*tch! Do you not understand me when I told you to watch your mouth? F*ck you straight to hell!”

Jasper looked at Greg as the latter looked at Vinny who was wailing in pain while clutching his face. What this look meant was self-evident. Jasper wanted to hand the chance and power to exact revenge back to Greg.

Greg immediately understood what Jasper was planning. A hint of hesitation and struggle appeared in his eyes before he stood up to strode over to Vinny.

Jasper grinned as he watched Greg's back. He was very satisfied.

If a man did not dare to slap back someone who had first slapped them, then he deserved to die.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1478

What could someone like this achieve? Moreover, Jasper was also supporting him.

Greg did not know what Jasper was planning, but at this moment, he was very excited. He lifted his hand and slapped Vinny across the face savagely.

Vinny was the one who bullied him. Greg went to Vinny seeking a compromise while playing it safe, but he ended up being kicked out by Vinny in such a horrendous way.

However, since Jasper was here, he did not want to waste his breath. He did not even explain why they had kidnapped Vinny before he immediately started slapping him after he arrived.

Greg was thrilled at this startling difference. At the same time, he felt that this was how a man should be living.

Slap slap slap!

After a few slaps, Greg felt amazing, while Vinny was shocked stupid.

“This is insane, you’re insane, you’re f*cking... Ah! Stop slapping me!”

Initially, Vinny appeared fierce while actually being cowardly at heart. Now, he was wailing in pain while begging for mercy. This change would make anyone feel sorry for him.

With a thud, Vinny fell to the ground, sobbing. A man was being hit until he cried. When he fell, he fell right under Todd’s feet.

He subconsciously lifted his head and his eyes met Todd’s disdainful gaze.

Vinny was dumbfounded. He did not expect to see Todd here.

“M-Mr. Puller?”

Vinny called out.

Todd frowned and looked away.

“Sorry, I don’t know you.”

Vinny began treating Todd as his savior now. He turned around and held Todd’s legs before wailing, “Mr. Puller, help me. These people are insane. I’m Vinny Goldman, the boss of Fliegen. We worked together many times before. Please save me!”

“Who worked with you many times before?”

Todd was annoyed after he heard that.

He finally gave Jasper a good impression of himself, and he did not want Vinny to ruin it.

“I’m telling you one more time that I don’t know you.”

Todd’s dark eyes were like two sharp knives as they met Vinny’s gaze.

Even if Vinny was stupid, he would still be able to tell that there were people here that he could not afford to offend. Even Todd could not afford to offend the said person.

“W-What’s going on?” Vinny asked timidly.

At this moment, Jasper stood up and said, “I’m full. Let’s go back.”

“I’ll let you handle this, Greg. You can decide what you want to do.”

After he said that, he led the gang out of the private room.

Henry got up as well and looked at Vinny with an icy smile before sauntering away.

Todd was the last one to stand up. He looked coldly at Vinny who was dumbfounded. He scolded, “Do you really think you’re god just because you have a stupid mobile phone company? Look who’s behind the other party next time you want to put on such a stupid act. You’re nothing, yet you dare to offend Mr. Laine?”

“Starting from today, Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing will not provide anymore chips to Fliegen. Not even a single one!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1479

Vinny sat on the ground feeling as though he had been struck by lightning.

The wounds and bloodstains on his body already made him look battered. However, no amount of wounds could compare to the impact of what Todd just said.

For a mobile phone manufacturer, losing touch with the most advanced semiconductor supplier meant death. Especially in Somerland, which was under the condition of Western technology blockade. They simply could not get advanced semiconductor materials from the West.

Even if they could be bought, they were all obsolete products that were out of date. The price was even more expensive than the latest technology semiconductors sold by foreigners to their own people.

Therefore, Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing's supply was the only source of semiconductors Vinny could rely upon. This was the status quo throughout the entire domestic mobile phone manufacturing industry.

Now, Todd had made it clear that he would not supply them again, and his Fliegen would be finished in a few months time.

Vinny's scalp was tingling as he exclaimed, "No, Mr. Puller! Mr. Puller, please give me another chance! I am okay with you increasing the price, any price is fine!"

Yet, at this moment, where was Todd in that private room thick with the smell of noodles. Only Greg was left standing in front of Vinny.

Greg spoke indifferently while he was looking at the pale faced Vinny, "Mr. Goldman, the mighty Mr. Goldman... When you slapped me out of your office today, you didn't expect that the retribution would come so soon, did you?"

"Stop being so f*cking cocky!"

Feeling that his doom was imminent, Vinny had only a deep resentment toward Greg at this moment. He said to Greg bitterly, "You only have a good f*cking master. Your master is the awesome one, but what does it have to do with you? You're still the same mongrel in front of me!"

With a sneer on his face, Greg pulled up a chair and sat down in front of Vinny. Then, he said, "Yes, I just have a good master and good support, are you jealous?"

"If you have the ability to do so, you can also find a master who can make me lie in front of you and call you my daddy. But you can't, right?"

Greg felt very happy when he looked at the unpleasant expression on Vinny's face. Greg did not know how many years it had been since he had last felt like this. He was used to timid and meek, so he had not experienced this feeling of exaltation in many years. He quickly realized that he was too stupid before this. In this society, people like Vinny would always be the majority. If you were afraid of him, he would be even more fierce, forcing you to bow your head and step back, until eventually, you would be backed into a dead-end!

One's weakness and submissiveness would not gain the sympathy of people like Vinny. It would only make them unsatisfied with small gains and hungry for more. Therefore, when it came to people like Vinny, one needed to smash all of their teeth the moment they first start baring their fangs.

"If you can't find one, you should just admit your fate obediently."

After he slapped Vinny's face that was covered in blood and dirt, Greg felt that his attitude and way of thinking had changed greatly. However, he did not oppose this change. Rather, he embraced it wholeheartedly.

He knew if he wanted to survive in this cruel business world that was filled with deception he needed to change!

"Say, I still have to thank you."

Greg bent down and got close to Vinny before he said slowly.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1480

Vinny looked at Greg coldly. His gaze was resentful, but he did not speak. He knew that it was him who was finished now.

Although Mr. Laine, who's background and family Vinny did not know about but was undoubtedly extremely terrifying, was gone, he could squish himself like an ant at any time if he so desired. He also knew that Mr. Laine deliberately kept him here so that Greg could vent his anger on him. As Vinny gritted his teeth and clenched his fists, he felt extremely humiliated and sorrowful, but he did not dare to really provoke Greg.

Seemingly satisfied with Vinny's expression, Greg chuckled slightly and slowly pulled a tablecloth over to wipe his hands. He continued, "The slap in the morning killed the previous Greg. Now, I won't allow anyone to slap me across the face ever again."

The corners of Vinny's mouth twitched. He was a little scared as he looked at Greg who seemed like a madman in front of him. This time, he was not feeling scared of the mysterious and powerful Mr. Laine who was behind Greg, but simply because of Greg himself.

Was this guy crazy?

Just as Vinny started to speculate, Greg's voice was heard again.

“To thank you for helping me complete the transformation, I decided to give you a chance of living.”

“Fliegen is done anyway, so sell it to me. I will give you 8 million.”

Vinny looked at Greg incredulously. After a long time, he furiously said, “You are f*cking crazy!”

As the second largest mobile phone manufacturer in Somerland, Fliegen’s annual net profit was more than 8 million, which Greg had proposed buying it for. This caused Greg to almost explode in anger.

“I’d rather burn Fliegen to the ground than sell it to you for cheap!”

Greg sneered when he saw Vinny roaring. “Yes, when you asked to buy Blau Mobiles for 5 million during the day, I thought so too. But I have options, such as finding support, which you currently lack.”

“If you refuse, fine by me. You have heard what Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing said just now, they will not provide a single semiconductor to Fliegen ever again.”

“Without the materials, are you going to buy foreign garbage with high prices, low performance, and outdated technology? Or are you going to just watch your competitors swallow your market share and then go bankrupt after the suppliers sue you for breach of contract?”

“You do have a third option, which is to burn Fliegen to the ground as you said just now. In that case, believe me, unless you can live to be 200 years old, you won’t be able to get out of prison for the rest of your life. Arson is still a crime even if it is your own company.”

With a sneer, Greg raised his head and looked at the trembling Vinny who’s eyes were filled with fear. Then, he said slowly. “Or, you can be a good boy and take the 8 million that I offered to you to see out a safe and rich existence somewhere no one knows about.”

Vinny looked at Greg in horror and screamed, “Devil! You are a devil!”

Looking at Vinny coldly, Greg replied, “I am indeed a devil because you forced me to be.”

With a thud, Vinny slumped down to the ground, his eyes blank

Greg said calmly, “I’ll give you three minutes to consider whether you want to end all this with 8 million and go enjoy your life, stay in bankruptcy, or rot in prison. You choose then...”

A wave of humiliating anger ignited from deep in his heart. Vinny wished he could punch Greg to death, but he unclenched his fists and seemed to instantly age several decades.

“I regret this so much! I shouldn’t have provoked you!”

Vinny wailed after closing his eyes.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1481

As he looked at Vinny, who was crying and sullen with remorse, Greg felt indifferent.

Had it not been for Jasper, Greg would be the one who was sitting on the ground in agony.

At the end of the day, all of this happened not because Vinny had offended Greg, but because he offended Greg, who had Jasper as his boss. Therefore, Greg knew very well where all this power came from and whom he should thank for it.

Jasper and his gang did not walk far. After all, they had to wait for Greg to finish taking care of things. So, they walked to a café near the restaurant where they found a quiet corner and sat down.

The business on Greg's side had not been finished yet, so even though Jasper and Todd had something to say to each other, they both stopped themselves. Even Todd, who had obviously humbled himself, did not act too eagerly.

This was the rule of negotiation. The party who spoke first usually gave up their advantage.

The illusory initiative in negotiation was a key factor that represented huge interests.

One had to speak sentence by sentence and do things one at a time.

They would have to say something after Greg got here anyway, so Todd was not in a hurry. Hence, he only chatted about nonsense with Jasper to pass the time.

After a while, Greg hurried over from the door.

“Mr. Laine, it’s done.”

Unbeknownst to Greg, he had started to address Jasper as Mr. Laine instead of just his name.

Greg did not notice this small change while Jasper’s smile remained unchanged. However, he let out a huge sigh in his heart.

Now that Greg had started to address him as Mr. Laine, it meant that he had lost another friend and gained another competent subordinate. Only God knew whether he had lost or benefitted from this.

As the saying went, the lonely and widowed man’s status and position would increase day by day. Jasper had a deeper experience and understanding of this sentence.

“That’s good.” Jasper smiled and nodded.

Greg said with a look of excitement, “I bought Fliegen for 8 million!”

Jasper raised his brows.

His original intention today was to make Greg understand the rules of survival in business and society so that it would eventually lead to him making a profit. This was even at the cost of owing Todd a small favor. However, what Greg got from this scenario seemed to be much more than that.

“8 million? He sold it?” Jasper asked.

Greg smiled triumphantly and said, “He had no choice. He had to sell whether he wanted to or not.”

“Interesting.” Todd laughed suddenly.

Everyone at the scene was smart. Even Henry, who was not involved in business, was an expert in the field of bullying. Thus, he naturally understood what Greg was talking about.

Greg saw Todd continuing the topic and immediately took the opportunity to speak, “Mr. Puller, you promised to give me a batch of 1.2-micron chips. Now that Blau Mobiles has purchased Fliegen, you can’t go back on your promise.”

Todd was taken aback. He really did not expect this.

At that moment, he had promised Greg this mainly because of Jasper. After all, Blau Mobiles was Jasper’s company, and if he gave Blau Mobiles this batch of goods that everyone was after, wouldn’t he be indirectly giving this to Jasper too?

However, at that moment, Blau Mobiles was just a small company that was recently founded and had only just created its first prototype. In this case, how many chips would they need? It would be ten thousand phones at the most.

However, now that Blau Mobiles had devoured Fliegen, that figure would be horrifying.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1482

No matter how generous Todd was, there was no reason to simply hand out hundreds of thousands of 1.2-micron semiconductor materials equipped with the most advanced technology.

Todd looked constipated. Then, he turned his head and glanced at Jasper next to him.

However, he saw Master Jasper leaning on the sofa with one arm spread out on the armrest of the sofa while the other hand supported his body. He was even playing with his mobile phone in his palm. Jasper smiled and looked at Todd as if he didn't intend to speak.

Damn it!

What a profiteer!

When Todd made up his mind and was about to speak, Jasper spoke up.

“Greg, you're not being sensible. Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing is not a charity. Mr. Puller is willing to help us, but if we're not satisfied with small gains, then it would mean that we're being insensible.”

Upon hearing this, Todd grinned. Suddenly, he felt that Jasper was kind and someone very easy to talk to. However, everything changed with the next sentence.

“Of course, Mr. Puller is kind and is also a man of his words. Naturally, he won’t lie to you. It’s just that the price of the goods should be based on the market price and not a penny less, understand?”

The smile on Todd’s face froze.

What a joke! Was this a matter of money?

Even if the semiconductors for the 1.2-micron chips were mainstream technology products throughout the world, under the Western technology blockade, it was still difficult to obtain such products in Somerland. Therefore, if Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing were to make it available now, the most important thing was not how much it could sell for, but how many benefits he could exchange it for.

One had to know that there were simply too many domestic manufacturers that needed this kind of semiconductor. Moreover, semiconductors were not just useful for making mobile phones.

Almost all electronic products needed it.

Since there was a high demand but low supply, Todd had to be particular about who got the goods and how much supply they would get.

Therefore, what Todd cared about was not how much it could sell for, but the underlying profits he would derive from selling it.

Todd looked at Jasper with a grin and then looked at Greg with a look of expectation before he snorted.

How come the more he looked at it, the more he felt that these two were plotting against him?

“Hey, Mr. Puller, any other considerations?”

Henry’s abrupt words caused Todd’s brow to jump.

If Jasper could be described as stretching his hand in front of Todd to ask him for benefits with a smile, Henry could be described as reaching his hands directly into Todd’s pocket to take his money.

It sounded like he was joking, but the threat in that sentence was clear.

“Not at all...”

Todd also had a sincere smile on his face when he made his decision.

He shook his head and said firmly, “It’s just goods. How much do you want? Just send a letter to the headquarters of Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing later. I’ll tell my father.”

“Thank you, Mr. Puller.” Greg quickly thanked him.

In any case, they had gained a huge advantage in this matter, and with Jasper’s status, he could not personally thank Todd. This responsibility naturally fell on Greg.

He had great social skills, so after saying a few words of thanks, he left immediately.

“Blau Mobiles is small, and Fliegen is large. If you want to devour Fliegen, it won’t be easy to digest it in such a short time. If you need any help in this matter, tell the headquarters and I will let them help wherever I see fit.”

After Jasper told him that, Greg left with great excitement. For him, this fight was over and it was now time to enjoy the fruits of his victory.

For Jasper and Todd, the confrontation has just begun.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1483

“Mr. Laine, to be honest, I want to be your friend.”

Todd was not a stingy person, and since he was the successor personally trained by Old Master Puller, he had character and was very sophisticated.

Although the previous events made him feel a little dejected and uncomfortable, since he had made a decision, he immediately adjusted his mentality and tried to flatter Jasper so he could achieve his goal.

Jasper nodded and said, “I also like to make friends. It’s better to have more friends like Mr. Puller.”

Gifts blinded the eyes. Since he just got some benefits from Todd, naturally, Jasper would not turn his back on the man, Todd also smiled when he heard this ideal feedback from Jasper.

“Then I will just say it straight, I hope to reach a long-term strategic partnership with Mr. Laine and JW.”

Todd’s eyes were blazing. He continued, “I think JW’s future is very bright, and I have high praise for Mr. Laine’s ability. I think this investment will be most rewarding.”

“You’re too kind, Mr. Puller.”

Jasper chuckled softly and said, “I have Blau Mobiles under my name and I also have an electronics manufacturing company. Both of these two companies have very congenial business relationships with Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing. I think this strategic partnership will be good for both of us.”

“Of course, if we reach a partnership, Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing will aim to supply to all JW companies first. However, in addition to this, we also hope that Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing will become the sole supply agent to all JW companies in Nawait in the future.”

When Todd said this, Jasper narrowed his eyes.

“Mr. Puller, at present, JW has a series of businesses. Except for the cooperation with the entertainment industry in Nawait, we have not expanded our other businesses to Nawait. I’m sure Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing is not in the entertainment industry, right?”

Todd shrugged and said, “Just because we’re not doing it now, it doesn’t mean we won’t do so in the future. Even if you are not in Nawait’s market now, it doesn’t mean you won’t enter sometime the future.”

“The best business is business for the future.”

Jasper changed how he viewed Todd after he said that.

“Mr. Puller, that spoke straight to my heart. I also have another business. I wonder if you’d be interested in that.”

Jasper’s statement caused Todd to feel curious. He said, “Oh? What is it?”

“I plan to start a foundation.”

Jasper smiled and told Todd his plan.

“This foundation can be temporary or long-term, but it currently has only one purpose and that is to snipe the United States stock market.”

What transpired on the United States stock market was no secret nowadays. A lot of people who understood finance and stocks talked about it after dinner.

When it came to someone like Todd such a thing was clear as day.

So, Jasper did not hide anything and told him everything directly.

“The United States stock market is still closed, but after that, there will be some big moves. Any disturbance in the financial market, be it an increase or decrease, is an opportunity for investors to make money. Mr. Puller, are you interested?”

Todd’s eyes were burning with interest. He became aware of what happened some time ago.

Jasper shorting the Dow Jones index with a large sum of money made everyone in the world laugh at him for being a fool who went crazy thinking about money. However, what happened after that slapped everyone in the world across the face.

Not only was he a lunatic, he was a genius who truly could predict the future.

A terrorist attack was a disaster to everyone, but for Jasper, it represented a chance for him to become rich overnight

Jasper seized this opportunity.

Todd got news that Jasper had made at least several billion dollars in the previous crash.

This was an astronomical figure.

It was precisely because of these things that Todd was determined to have a good relationship with Jasper.

“However, I need to tell you beforehand. No one has ever done anything like snipping the United States stock market before.”

“What we have to face are the founders and rule makers of the modern financial system. They have the most experience and a mountain of funds, so the risks are extremely high. Once we fail, we’ll likely to be wiped out.”

Jasper did not brag about how perfect his plan was. After all, the risks were obvious. At this point, it would be better to be honest.

Todd thought for a moment and said, “I can only invest with my name.”

Jasper nodded, “I understand.”

The composition of Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing’s shares was complex, including not only Western giants such as Flips, but also the Nawait government.

Therefore, no matter how bold Todd was, he could not involve Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing in this. He also could not use his family's name.

Although his name and his family name were just a matter of interpretation, in many cases, the semantics would have huge spillover effects.

"How much money do you want?" Todd asked.

"The minimum is 1 billion US Dollars, no maximum."

Jasper's answer caused Todd to draw a deep breath.

"What a large amount."

Jasper said lightly, "Think about what we are going to do. For 10 bucks, you can take the bus ten times, the subway several times, and even take a taxi at the base price, but can you start a war with 10 bucks?"

The corners of Todd's mouth twitched and he changed the question, "How about the risk assessment?"

“The risk is extremely high. This time, there is no bottom line in the investment. You might lose everything or you might make a lot of money. There are only two possibilities and there is no capital protection.”

Jasper’s answer was simple but it reeked of blood. Todd’s expression also became stern.

“Besides me, is there anyone else investing in this foundation?”

Jasper said with a chuckle, “The Laws, the little prince, Lord Alvarado, and Kayden. These people are our partners.”

Todd looked tormented. He raised his head and pressed Jasper. “Last question, will this foundation still be around after this?”

Jasper asked insipidly, “Mr. Puller, do you care about this a lot?”

“Of course!” Todd said abruptly, “Don’t you want to build an organization like Empire Meet, Mr. Laine?”

After Jasper heard this, he narrowed his eyes and grinned. Meanwhile, Henry’s expression changed at one side. Then, he became very joyous.

'Damn, if Jasper decides to call his people to do this, just think of the members of this organization. Myself, the little prince, Kayden, and Lord Lavarado. These people alone are way superior to Empire Meet.

'How exciting would that be?'

As the founder, wouldn't Jasper's mere presence blind everyone whenever he went out?

Life at The Top – Chapter 1484

When Henry, who was originally lukewarm toward Todd, looked at this guy again, he suddenly did not feel that this guy reeked of betel nut anymore. Now, the more he looked at him, the more pleasing Todd was to the eye.

This kid was nice and promising. So, Henry was quite satisfied with such an idea.

However, Henry who was feeling gleeful heard Jasper's words shortly afterward.

"I'm not interested. At least, I'm not interested in it now."

Jasper's words rained on Henry's parade. Then, Young Master Law suddenly became unhappy.

"I think this is a pretty good idea."

"What's so good about it?"

Jasper glared at the fool.

“Fabian founded Empire Meet, but did you not see how we dismantled it just a while ago? Yet, now you want to start one yourself. Do you really think it’s appropriate?”

Henry said nonchalantly, “It’s just a club. A high-end club like this is indeed very useful. Fabian is just a loser to you now, so do you think he has the guts to fight you?”

Shaking his head, Jasper replied, “This is not a matter of him fighting back or not, but at the moment, it’s not the right time to start a club like this. Secondly, I don’t have the time and energy to do it.”

“I see. We’ll talk about this another time then.” Henry rubbed his chin and said in dissatisfaction.

When Todd saw Henry speaking up, he was pretty pleased.

However, Jasper was surprisingly determined, so Henry stopped pushing the matter after asking these two questions.

Where was your arrogance, Young Master Law?

Why did you become a yes man in front of Jasper?

“Mr. Laine, I disagree about the wrong timing. I think since you already plan to start this foundation, I think this is the best chance.”

Todd looked at Jasper passionately and said, “What is a more suitable opportunity for everyone to work together to fight against foreign enemies under the watchful eye of a powerful enemy?”

“At this point in time, Mr. Laine, you are the spokesperson recognized by several wealthy families and you are the one who bears the brunt of the incident. The moment you make a sound, you will easily be able to gather a group of people around you.”

“If there are financial concerns, you can rest assured that I can immediately take out 500 million US Dollars as the preparation cost of the foundation. This is to support the establishment of the foundation and has nothing to do with the previous 1 billion US Dollars investment.”

Jasper looked at Todd, who was extremely enthusiastic, and smiled profoundly.

He asked Jasper to come forward to build a club similar to Empire Meet and was even giving Jasper the money to do it. This was 500 million US Dollars. If all the money was used for this club, Empire Meet would seem like a roadside stall in comparison.

However, one had to wonder why Todd was so enthusiastic. This was 500 million US Dollars, not 5 bucks or 10 bucks.

Jasper never believed in a free lunch, let alone a free lunch of 500 million US Dollars.

In this world, everyone except your parents was the same. You always had to give something in return for what you took. If you nonchalantly take what others offer you, then you cannot blame others when they take away what you have.

Meanwhile, Todd seemed to see through Jasper. He smiled and said, "Mr. Laine, I obviously did not offer to give you free money for no reason.

"My father and I can fully support you and build this foundation, or this club, or organization. The only request is that I want to have no less than 25% of the shares as well as the position of second-in-command."

Life at The Top – Chapter 1485

Oh, he had been waiting.

Jasper remembered Henry said how Todd and his father did everything to squeeze into the real upper class and he suddenly understood what Henry had meant by this.

The five billion US Dollars was their admission ticket.

Jasper looked at Todd with a smile and said, “Mr. Puller, with all due respect, I would like to know the answer to a question. of course, if it is not convenient, Mr. Puller can choose to not answer it.”

Todd vaguely knew what Jasper wanted to ask, but he still nodded. “Go ahead, Mr. Laine. I will definitely not hide what I am able to answer. Even if I can’t answer it, I won’t lie to you.”

Nodded, Jasper said, “Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing has money and resources. It can be said that you guys enjoy market dominance in Nawait.”

“In terms of financial resources and status, companies that can rival Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing are few and far in between, so why is Mr. Puller willing to pay such a high price?”

Todd frowned. Although he did not want to answer this question, he hesitated for a moment before replying anyway, “Since you asked, then I’ll just speak honestly.”

“Yes, my father founded Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing. The right to operate it lies with my father too. However, based on shares alone, we don’t hold all the rights. We had to give some of the shares to Flips for the technology.”

“To survive, we also had to let the Nawait Government take some of our shares.”

Todd’s words were very subtle, but they revealed the embarrassing situation of the Puller father and son duo. He sighed and said, “Some topics are more sensitive, so I won’t continue. It’s not suitable to say more about this. You’re a smart man, Mr. Laine, so you know what I’m talking about, right?”

Seeing Todd’s bitterness, Jasper nodded and said, “I can understand.”

The Puller father and son were indeed the founders of Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing. However, companies like Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing were sensitive. After ceding a large part of their equity for technology and survival, Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing was in a precarious position.

It was no longer a purely commercial company, and in many cases, it also had to enforce a political goal. However, obviously, this was not what the Puller father and son wanted. They were not at all satisfied being reduced to mere ‘interest spokespersons’.

Therefore, they eagerly wanted to enter the upper-class circle and escape the shackles that were the current shareholding system of Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing.

Shaking his head, Jasper spoke directly without thinking too much about this issue, “Thank you very much for your frankness, Mr. Puller, but I will still say the same thing. This is not the time for that proposal. I’m sorry but I can’t explain any further, Mr. Puller.”

Seeing the disappointed look in Todd’s eyes, Jasper reached out and patted him on the shoulder. He continued, “But I can promise you that if I intend to continue with the establishment of such a foundation a long ways into the future, I will consider Mr. Puller’s previous request.”

“Really?” Todd said in surprise.

Jasper was not the Pullers’ only option, but he was their most suitable prospect.

If possible, Todd would love to work with Jasper. So, when he heard that there was still a chance, he was thrilled.

Jasper nodded and smiled, “Stay alive, and then we’ll talk about the rest. Back to what we said about investing in the foundation, what do you think, Mr. Puller?”

“Let’s do it!” Todd gritted his teeth and said.

He knew this was the first step to gaining Jasper’s recognition, and it was also the most important one.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1486

Cooperation was a two-way street.

Jasper had made himself very clear when he said, 'stay alive, and then we'll talk about the rest'.

This fight with the United States and Wall Street was a battle of life and death. Outsiders might view this as a joke but Jasper was truly fighting for his life.

Everything else had to make way for this matter. Therefore, if Todd did not participate in this, why would he still talk about future collaboration, foundations, or clubs? Those were all nonsense in comparison.

At this critical moment, Todd needed to do something if he still wanted to benefit from a relationship Jasper. Todd's analysis was very clear, so the answer he gave was straightforward.

After Jasper got the answer he wanted, the way Jasper looked at Todd became softer.

Jasper spoke after he stood up and shook hands with Todd, "Well then, let's do this for now. I will arrange for someone to contact your subordinates regarding the specifics.

Before we start, I will summon a few important investors from the foundation so that everyone can meet each other.”

Todd’s eyes lit up when he heard this. The first half of the sentence was fine.

Most of the time, after the big shots came up with the framework of the collaboration, the subordinates would take care of the specifics.

For example, how to allocate the funds and where they should transfer the funds to. Then, how the follow-up investors should monitor the specific use of the money and what the profit and loss report would be based on.

The big shots were very busy, so naturally, they would not have the time to run through the specifics one by one, hence they would just leave it to the people under them.

What Todd cared about the most was meeting the other investors. This was the chance to widen Todd’s social circle, which he always dreamed of.

However, who were the important investors?

The Laws were definitely one of them.

The little prince and Lord Alvarado were elites in the mainland. Todd would not have a chance to get to know them even if he wanted to.

At this moment, Jasper was willing to give him this opportunity, so this calmed him down a lot.

“Thank you so much, Mr. Laine. I’ll wait for your good news.”

Jasper grinned when he saw Todd being so excited. After chatting with Todd, they bade each other farewell. Jasper did not plan to stay in Nim City, so after the deed was done, Henry and him went back to Nauritus City with Julian as the driver.

On the way, Henry leaned back against the big plush backseat of the Bentley and said, “I don’t understand Puller. Is it necessary to do so much just to get in? This circle is not as comfy as he thinks.”

“You’re just oblivious because you’ve been in this circle your whole life.” Jasper shook his head and said lightly, “Now the social classes have basically solidified, while the way up will only become narrower and more difficult. From this point of view, at least the Puller father and son are pretty far-sighted.”

“The main reason for their struggle is that their identities are too awkward. If they don’t get out as soon as possible, they will lose their value in the future. Besides, they might also get kicked out of Nawait Semiconductor Manufacturing. If they don’t have the company, what differentiates them from ordinary people?”

“The most pitiful ones are not those who have never endured many hardships but the high-ranking officials who have to suffer after getting a taste of the life of luxury. That is a fate worse than death.”

After he heard what Jasper said, Henry fell deep into thought.

Jasper did not disturb him. Henry would have gained something if he could realize this simple truth. However, after a while, before he could get a reaction from Henry, Jasper turned his head to look over curiously and saw the kid had fallen asleep unbeknownst to him.

“What a disappointment.”

Jasper shook his head and closed his eyes to rest on his seat. After these past few days, he was exhausted.

It was the middle of the night when they arrived in Nauritus City.

Jasper asked Julian to take Henry back to his villa. Then, he went to Dawson’s villa.

Normally, Wendy would bunk up here if he was not around to stay with her father. If Jasper had nothing to do, he would also stay here. Thus, the villa they bought back then would be left vacant.

“You’re back.”

Dawson was still awake when Jasper came back. He looked at Jasper and greeted him. Dawson was holding a teacup while wearing his pajamas.

Jasper nodded and replied, “I just came back from Nim City after finishing some business. Is Wendy asleep?”

Dawson pointed at a room with his lips and said, “That girl is down with a cold so I asked her to take some medication. She’s fast asleep.”

“Is she okay?” Jasper asked.

“What can a cold do? She’s still young and healthy, so she’ll be fine after some medicine and sleep. Come to the study with me. Let’s talk.”

Jasper followed Dawson obediently. After he entered the study, he closed the door behind him. When he saw Dawson picking up a cigarette, he went over to light it up for him. Then, he sat down opposite Dawson obediently.

“Thank you for all your hard work during this period,” Dawson said after exhaling a puff of smoke.

With a wry smile, Jasper said, “I was forced to do this. Many things are beyond my control.”

“You could predict this when you started JW. ” Dawson laughed.

Jasper nodded.

Looking at Jasper, Dawson said warmly, “Your business is getting bigger and bigger now, and your prestige is fast advancing. There is not much that I can help you with any more.”

Upon hearing this, Jasper frowned and was about to speak when Dawson waved his hand to stop him.

“I know what you want to say, but regardless, I only have one daughter and I’ve viewed you as my son for a very long time. You don’t have to be so courteous with me.”

Dawson said this and moved to flick away the ashes. Jasper hurriedly got up and pushed the ashtray in front of Dawson.

Dawson smiled with great satisfaction. A lot of people would want to do things for him with his current status and position, but Jasper was different.

It was not just because of Jasper’s current position and status, but also because Jasper still held his initial resolve. Dawson thought this was something very hard to come by.

“Actually, I thought about retiring entirely before, whereby I’d combine Schuler Corporations with JW. However, after I thought about it for a long time, I decided to continue running this business for a few more years.

“I also want to become a rich old fart who doesn’t need to work so I can do whatever I want to do. However, after I watched your progress over the past two years, I felt I still needed to work for a few more years. You’re too dangerous.”

“Regardless of your valuation, the risk of what you do increases exponentially as your assets grow.”

“When you have 100 bucks, you will dare to do a business worth 1000 bucks. When you have 10000 bucks, you dare to do a business worth 100000 bucks. Therefore, you have always been doing business that could kill you at any given time.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1487

Jasper smiled helplessly and bitterly when he heard what Dawson said.

Frankly, Dawson was giving Jasper a direct assessment of Jasper's entire trajectory throughout his entrepreneurial career.

Jasper indeed rose like this.

Outsiders might not understand this. Jasper already had such a big business, so why would he still take so many risks to make money that might very well leave him with nothing?

However, Jasper knew that the 10 years after the turn of the millennium was the last opportunity for the explosive growth of the domestic economy after the national reform and the economy opening up. After 2010, the number of opportunities would decrease. What more, Jasper also had the advantage of his memory after his reincarnation. He was able to do many adventurous moves that seemed downright crazy to others with complete confidence.

However, he could not tell others this. Dawson was the same. Jasper could not tell him he was reincarnated.

“However, I believe you must have your reason for making those decisions. When I was young, a lot of people also did not understand why I started some convenience stores when I had such a big business.”

Dawson said in a lamenting tone and continued. He looked at Jasper mildly. His eyes were filled with admiration.

“However, I turned the convenience stores into supermarkets. There are a lot of things in the shop and I will sell anything people need. In the end, Schuler Corporations grew from this small business to become the biggest supermarket chain in Southeast Province.”

“Now, Schuler Corporations is the biggest supermarket brand in the country.”

“Thus, I won’t go against whatever you want to do and I will support you even if I don’t understand it.”

After hearing what Dawson said, Jasper replied while feeling touched, “Uncle Schuler...”

He was interrupted by Dawson’s waving hand.

Dawson opened a drawer and took out a folder to hand to Jasper. He said, "Here is all of Schuler Corporation's current cash flow and there's 2.7 billion inside..."

"There's also the property rights agreement of the stores belonging to Schuler Corporations nationwide. They have been notarized and stamped. All of the processes have been completed. The total loan amount is 5.3 billion, of which 8 billion has been collected. Now I'll hand all of it over to you."

Jasper stood up abruptly and exclaimed, "Uncle Schuler, what do you mean by this?"

"You need money right now," Dawson said in a deep voice.

"I need money because I need to get people to fight Wall Street with me. You don't have to give me all of your money," Jasper said sternly.

It was dangerous for Schuler Corporations to take out all of their cash flow. They could only do this because Schuler Corporations was in the supermarket industry, so they did not need much cash flow.

If this was another industry, withdrawing their entire cash flow was lunatic! They would be asking for death. A cash flow to a company was like blood to a human. If someone did not have blood in their body, they would die immediately.

“Since you want to get someone to help you with something, then you have to make clear your priorities.”

It seemed that Dawson had seen through Jasper. He immediately retorted Jasper the moment he opened his mouth.

“Especially when a group of people contributes money in a partnership. Even if you take the lead, and they contribute 50 bucks or 100 bucks when you only have 30. Do you think you can manage them as a leader?”

Jasper smiled bitterly. He wanted to tell Dawson that this matter was not that simple and the partners involved similarly complex. However, after he thought about it, wasn't Dawson telling the truth?

No matter what the matter was and who the people involved were, in the end, if Jasper did not contribute the biggest amount to this foundation, it would really be difficult for him to command the others.

This was especially true for the little prince and Lord Alvarado, who had negotiated with him for a long time. The two were even going to pull out the funds they had previously invested to operate on their own.

Seeing Jasper frowning and thinking about the matter, Dawson smiled. Then, he pushed the folder into Jasper's arms and said, “Just take it. Treat it as Wendy's dowry.”

Jasper frowned and said, "Uncle Schuler, I still can't take this money. Schuler Corporations is your hard work. Now you have given me all your core assets and cash flow. What if something goes wrong?"

"If there is a problem, it is your business to handle. I said a long time ago, sooner or later, this family business will be given to you. If you win, return the capital to me. If you lose, treat it as me giving you a dowry in advance."

Dawson, who had always respected Jasper's opinions, had an indisputable firmness this time.

"But..."

Dawson directly raised his hand to stop Jasper when he saw that Jasper still had something to say. He looked at Jasper and then said softly, "I also have plans. The roots of Schuler Corporations are in Southeast Province, so I didn't touch the shares and assets of the headquarters at all."

"If you lose, at least I left you some capital to give you a chance to make a comeback."

"Since the moment I saw you, I knew that you were a wild child. You have ambitions which seem downright unreasonable to some. At that time, you could not do things to your full potential in Faith County. Similarly, I felt that Southeast Province could not hold you as well."

“Fortunately, I was right about you. I know how much pain you have suffered all this while and how sad you are behind all the glamor and luxury.”

“I also understand very well that even if you lose, you will still stubbornly insist on your own ideas. You are too ambitious. It is a good thing and also a bad thing.”

“As an elder, I can’t help you much now. The only thing I can do is to leave you a little bit of the family business. Even if you fall on your face out there, at least you still have a chance to stand up again after you come back.”

Jasper stared blankly at the nagging Dawson. At this moment, he had been reincarnated twice, so he was used to seeing too many so-called close relatives and friends who would look away in the face of the hypocrisy of the world and money. Right now, Jasper felt that there was a burning fire in his chest which prevented him from uttering a single word.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1488

Dawson had arranged everything for Jasper.

Jasper had never worried about Southeast Province being their base camp. With Wendy inside and Dawson outside, Jasper almost became used to enjoying Dawson supporting him behind his back.

However, right now, Dawson saw Jasper's difficulties and directly gave him the entire Schuler Corporations.

Was Dawson somebody who tried to be on good terms with everyone?

What a joke. How could a person who could make a path out of a bloody storm and unsound laws and regulations become the richest man in Southeast Province in an era when the country was just opening to outsiders try to be on good terms with everyone?

Wendy once told Jasper that Dawson originally planned to gradually hand over Schuler Corporations to her. For this, he played dirty tricks just to kick out all the old employees who followed him in Schuler Corporations.

It was just so that Wendy could take over smoothly. However, Wendy met Jasper and then became very determined to become the female boss of JW. Thus, Dawson got rid of that thought.

It could be said that Dawson was a formidable character in Southeast Province.

If someone like this could do all this for Jasper but Jasper did not react at all, then he would be no different than an animal.

Dawson smiled and said while looking at Jasper, "I told you, I don't have any sons so I've always viewed you as my son."

"Even though I don't place more value on sons than daughters, Wendy is excellent. Initially, she was the most suitable successor, but at the end of the day, a woman will have to spend the rest of her life with her husband."

"Most importantly, Wendy is more suitable to be a manager and not a person-in-charge. She's not savage enough. "So, I am okay with handing this over to you. However, I need you to promise me..."

When Dawson said this, his expression became serious as his tone became firm. The aggressiveness in his eyes started showing vaguely and, at this moment, he was not the future father-in-law who was working his heart out. Instead, he was the formidable man who had shaken the world for the past few decades.

“Please tell me.” Jasper stood up and said with his back straight.

“I don’t care if you’re a powerful multi-millionaire in the future or you are a beggar with nothing, but since my daughter chose you. It’ll be your luck whether you two are rich or poor in the future. Also, I know a man won’t necessarily have just one woman when he reaches a certain level.”

“I don’t care about those things. However, my daughter must be your first wife. I don’t care how powerful the other party is and how capable they are, they cannot snatch this title away from my daughter...”

“If you let her down, I won’t forgive you.”

This was the sternest statement Dawson had even said to Jasper since they had known each other.

Meanwhile, Jasper was looking at Dawson heatedly. He said firmly, “No one can replace Wendy’s status when she’s with me.”

“As for letting her down...”

Jasper chuckled and looked into Dawson's eyes fearlessly. He said, "If it's cold, I'll wish her warmth. If it's early spring, I'll wish that her heart is never cold. I wish she'll always have a light when it's dark and an umbrella whenever it's raining."

"Pledging our undying love for each other is unnecessary and I can't say those big promises about how I'll never wrong her, but I understand that you might be able to complete yourself if you're by yourself, but you'll meet your soulmate if you're with someone. If she is my soulmate, then she'll be my beloved."

Dawson looked at Jasper and then he burst into laughter after staying silent for a while. While he was laughing, his eyes turned red.

He said while nodding, "Okay, if that's the case, I did not disappoint her dead mother."

This time, Jasper did not reject it when he looked at the folder in front of him. He figured if he rejected again, he would be hurting an old man who was wholeheartedly worried about his child.

This was the biggest form of disrespect.

Jasper grabbed the folder voluntarily and took a deep breath. He said, "Uncle Schuler, I will accept your kindness, but trust me, I will bring it back to you in its entirety and return it to you."

“I still want you to work hard for us for a few more years. You can retire when you have grandchildren.”

Wendy was groggy with sleep and was parched. She put on her slippers in her pajamas and walked out of her bedroom. Her eyes narrowed when she went looking for water but she saw that the light of the study was still on. When she walked over, she heard Jasper walking out from the study.

“Oh my, when did you come back?”

Wendy became energetic immediately as if she had recovered from her cold. She ran to him, jumped up, and wrapped her arms around Jasper’s neck. She was now hanging from Jasper.

“I just came back...”

Jasper quickly caught the warm, soft, and sweet-smelling woman in his arms.

Since she had just woken up, there was a warmth to her sweet scent which smelled heavenly.

“Don’t you have a cold? Why are you running around in your pajamas? Go back and lie down. Do you want to drink water? I’ll get it for you,” Jasper said warmly.

“Carry me.”

Wendy whimpered.

Jasper chuckled softly and bent down to lift the back of Wendy’s legs. Then, he picked her up bridal style.

“Oh, you’ve become heavier.”

Wendy was ashamed after Jasper said that. “Nonsense! I just weighed myself yesterday and I even lost 1kg!”

“No way, I can’t carry you anymore.” Jasper shook his head and said, acting as if this was a very serious matter.

“Do you want to die? I said I’m lighter!” Wendy became angry from the humiliation. She wanted so badly to bite Jasper on the neck now.

“Haha!”

With a laugh, Jasper kicked the door of the room open and placed Wendy on the bed. After he put the blanket on her, he said, “I’ll pour some water for you.”

As he said that, Wendy grabbed him as he was about to turn around and exit the room. When he turned around, he saw the ethereal beauty lying horizontally in bed, She looked soft and smelled so sweet.

“D-Don’t you have it over there? Why do you need to pour me some?” Wendy looked at Jasper’s lips and said shyly.

Hiss.

Mr. Laine inhaled sharply.

It had been some time since he had last saw her and she had become such an enchantress.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1489

A short separation was better than being newlyweds.

Perhaps Jasper was gone for too long, so on this night, Wendy was behaving extremely wild.

Since Dawson was still at home, the two of them still had to control themselves while they were having fun. There was always a kind of excitement of doing bad things while other adults were around.

In any case, Wendy was mostly cured of her cold after sweating for most of the night.

The next morning, Jasper snuck out of bed to take his shirt and coat before leaving the room. He was scared of waking Wendy, who was still sleeping among the blankets in the messy bed.

Jasper even woke up slightly earlier to prevent running into Dawson. However, the moment he opened the door, he saw Dawson walk out of his room.

The old man and the young man looked at each other.

“ ... ”

Jasper wanted so badly to turn around and lock himself in the room.

“Go have breakfast.”

Dawson understood Jasper’s embarrassment. After he said that insipidly, he walked downstairs with his hands behind his back.

Jasper quickly put on his shirt and coat before he cleaned himself up. When he went to the dining room downstairs, Dawson was already done and was reading the newspaper.

A glass of warm milk, a bowl of noodles, two hotdog buns, and a sunny side up were Jasper’s very interesting breakfast.

“What are you going to do next?”

Dawson broke the silence.

Jasper swallowed his milk and said, "I need to go to Suesville in the afternoon."

Dawson nodded and did not say anything.

When Jasper saw that Dawson had no intention of continuing to speak, he picked up the bowl to drink some soup. He used this opportunity to lower his head and hide his embarrassment.

After all, he had worked Dawson's daughter hard last night.

When Dawson saw that Jasper was almost done, he finally spoke again.

"Wendy doesn't need to go to work this morning, right?"

Dawson understood Jasper's embarrassment. After he said that insipidly, he walked downstairs with his hands behind his back.

Jasper quickly put on his shirt and coat before he cleaned himself up. When he went to the dining room downstairs, Dawson was already done and was reading the newspaper.

After all, he had worked Dawson's daughter hard last night.

When Dawson saw that Jasper was almost done, he finally spoke again.

“Wendy doesn’t need to go to work this morning, right?”

Jasper replied in embarrassment, “I think so. She’s not recovered yet so she’ll rest a little more.”

Jasper was too embarrassed to say that the two of them only stopped at 3 in the morning. By the time they fell asleep, it was almost 4.

Dawson said, seemingly spontaneously, “You have to take care. Don’t overwork yourself.”

“ ... ”

The corners of Jasper’s mouth twitched and he nodded quickly.

“You should go to work too.”

Dawson’s words felt like a pardon to Jasper. He immediately stood up and said, “Okay, I’ll go to the office now.”

When he had just gotten up to leave, he heard Dawson say, “After you’re done, you should stay home and rest for a while. You guys are not using any protection, right?”

Jasper froze in his tracks. Normally, Jasper was able to chat carefreely with all the top-notch big shots but now, he was stammering.

Dawson said with a straight face and he waved his hand, “You’re already at this stage, so why are you feeling embarrassed? I think you can just ignore the protection. It’s almost time to give me a grandchild.”

It seemed that Dawson was waiting for this.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1490

Jasper smiled and said, “Okay, I’ll discuss this with Wendy.”

A smile appeared on Dawson’s face and he nodded.

However, to Jasper, that smile looked as if a heavy burden had been lifted from Dawson’s shoulders. It seemed that his future father-in-law was also feeling awkward about this topic and did not know how to say it.

“I’ll go back to the company now,” Jasper said.

“Go ahead.”

This time, Dawson let him leave.

When Dawson saw Jasper leaving, his eyes landed on the newspaper. He saw an advertisement for baby products. The model was a chubby and adorable baby.

“A grandchild. My chubby grandchild.”

Dawson murmured to himself and suddenly burst out laughing. His eyes were filled with expectation and longing.

When Jasper got to the office, Malcolm showed up.

“Anything I can help you with, Malcolm?” Jasper asked curiously.

Malcolm had worked in JW for so long that his English was getting more fluent. He chuckled and said, “Nothing, I’m just here to kiss your *ss.”

“Oh, your English has improved,” Jasper smiled.

“When in Rome, do as the Romans do. Since I’m working in Somerland, I have to understand the culture and the language of Somer. That way, not only will I be able to get a job easier, I will also understand what the people of Somerland think.”

“Alas, Somerland’s culture is so charming. My wife and I are both intrigued,” Malcolm said.

After chatting for a while, Malcolm told Jasper his true purpose.

JW was getting bigger and bigger and they were accepting more and more jobs. Of course, Malcolm was not here to suck up to Jasper. Moreover, everyone knew Jasper did not need to be sucked up to like that.

“The company is not doing so great recently,” Malcolm said with a frown.

Jasper turned on his computer and asked, “The company? Not so great? Malcolm, just spit it out.”

With a sigh, Malcolm shrugged and said, “This is normal as well. It’s because there are a lot of rumors out there.”

“You know most of the employee’s confidence comes from the boss and now there are a lot of rumors about you out there. Some say you lost a lot of money on the United States stock market and some say you made a lot of money but you can’t get it back.”

“Furthermore, you almost withdrew all of the company’s cash flow, so there’s negative emotions brewing within the company. Based on the management theory of the west, this negative emotion will lead to a lot of consequences, one of which is a rise in resignations.”

“As for some of our partners, they were also keeping an eye out for this. Some of our collaborative projects are now in a deadlock because of this.”

Jasper smiled after he heard what Malcolm said. He replied, “Basically, everyone is worried that I’ll become bankrupt all of a sudden. They’re worried that I won’t be able to pay them their salaries and for their goods, right?”

Malcolm nodded and said seriously to Jasper, “Mr. Laine, this is not a small problem. I hope you can take it seriously.”

“I know. This is a test for me and also for JW, but I don’t plan to do anything.”

Jasper’s words stumped Malcolm.

Malcolm thought Jasper had not realized the severity of this issue, so he frantically tried to explain further, but Jasper simply waved his hand to stop him.

“Malcolm, I know what you’re thinking, but there’s no choice. No matter how big of a problem it is, we can only place it to one side for now.”

“Because these problems that I encounter inside or outside the company are essentially caused by my own current dilemma. As long as I solve my own problems, these problems will no longer exist.”

“In other words, if I can’t solve it and I am instead defeated by it, then what is the point of dealing with the company’s problems?”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1491

Jasper's words caused Malcolm to fall silent.

After a long while, Malcolm nodded slowly and said, "I have to admit that you're right."

"Mr. Laine, you should know about this. Back then, I worked in Proctor and Gamble, so I have some channels and connections. I know something about the situation you're in. I hope you can properly assess the risk of this scenario."

Jasper nodded and smiled. He said, "I got it. Thank you, Malcolm."

"So, about the company's problem..." Malcolm said.

Jasper said expressionlessly, "Leave it. To those who left, and those who chose not to cooperate with us because of this, it may turn out to be a wise and far-sighted choice for them. Or perhaps it might be a stupid choice. Who knows?"

"I told you, this is a test for me and for JW."

“After this blows over, I will reorganize JW completely. We’ll just treat this as the inevitable pain before the reorganization. It’s good that I don’t have to get rid of those people and systems by myself when it happens.”

Malcolm’s eyes lit up when he heard what Jasper said. Since Malcolm was the second-in-command of JW, Jasper would discuss a lot of things with him.

What more, the reorganization of the entire company was a huge deal. Even if Jasper had the absolute power to rule, he could not ignore the abilities and ideas of people like Malcolm.

Hence, Malcolm knew that Jasper had plans surrounding this for a long time.

“What is the direction of the reorganization?” Malcolm asked.

Jasper smiled and said, “If I can get through this safely, then JW will have completed the most primitive accumulation.”

JW Company was currently regarded as a large-scale private comprehensive company in Somerland, but in Jasper’s opinion, the company was just a child who had not even completed the early stage funding. This was the difference between Jasper’s 20 years’ worth of reincarnation memory and the strategic vision of people in this age.

“Whether it is for the company’s future development or overall plan, such a reorganization is imperative.

“But I am encountering great difficulties right now. If we can’t get through this, everything will stop just like what you’re worried about. If we manage to get through this, I plan to reorganize JW Investment Company and establish JW Holding Group.

“The headquarter will no longer be responsible for any specific business. The holding group will be the core it will have jurisdiction over all of JW’s subsidiaries. That day will be the day we announce JW to the world officially.”

Jasper’s words made Malcolm nod his head vigorously.

“Yes, such a reorganization should have taken place long ago! In this case, I will make relevant plans and submit them to you as soon as possible.”

“Okay, coincidentally, I lack experience in this area.” Jasper was also very pleased.

Malcolm got up and left after they talked a little about work.

Jasper took care of some business in his office when he received a phone call from Wendy.

Wendy wanted to come to work but Jasper stopped her and asked her to rest at home. After that, he also agreed he would stay with her after he finished his work. Then, Jasper had lunch in the company's cafeteria before he brought Julian and Henry to Suesville.

When the car reached the highway, Jasper received an unexpected but pleasant phone call.

“Lord Alvarado, if you call me even though you're very busy, then something urgent must have happened.”

Jasper's sentence caused Henry, who was just boasting how amazing he was in Harbor City after he burned Empire Meet, to shut up and listen.

“I've placed 5 billion with you and I'm worried that you'll run away with the money, so I don't think it's that bad to check up on you, right?”

Lord Alvarado sounded like he was in a good mood from the other end of the phone.

Jasper narrowed his eyes and smiled. “Didn't the little prince tell you? That money has become 10 billion now.”

“That’s what he said. Our money was with you this whole time. If I don’t see the money, I won’t feel secure,” Lord Alvarado chuckled lightly.

Jasper tapped the surface of the table gently and said, “Don’t worry, Lord Alvarado, if need it, I’ll transfer it back to you after the United States stock market becomes stable.”

“Is the money still at the equivalent position?” Lord Alvarado asked.

Jasper replied insipidly, “That depends on your choice.”

“Haha!”

Lord Alvarado laughed and said, “The little prince told me about it, so I won’t say too much about this. At this critical moment, I can’t help you with anything, but at the very least, I won’t hit you while you’re down.”

“However, this is not a small matter. The little prince wants to take his right to rule back and I want to take mine back too. Will that be a problem?”

“It’s your money, so of course, there won’t be any issues,” Jasper said calmly.

“Okay, I’ll discuss this with the little prince. We won’t let you work in vain. We’ll take 9 billion each and the rest will be your commission, what do you think?”

Jasper narrowed his eyes as a profound glint appeared in his eyes. He said lightly, “You think too highly of me. I made 2 billion just from this. What a good deal.”

“If it’s a good deal, then I’ll just assume you agree to this.”

Lord Alvarado paused and sighed. “Don’t think that our future is bright, we have our hardships that we can’t tell you about as well. This time, we’re really the bad people.”

“It must indeed be difficult for you to say something like this, Lord Alvarado.”

“Stop acting so weirdly. Just think of this as me owing you a favor.”

“However, my stance remains unchanged. The decision-making power is yours while the final say is mine. This is the bottom line.”

“As long as you two don’t regret it, ” Jasper said.

“Why would I regret a decision I myself make?”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1492

After Jasper hung up the phone, Jasper looked a little off-color. Although he already knew that the little prince and Lord Alvarado wanted to take away their money, Lord Alvarado was so impatient, and them abandoning their benefactor pissed Jasper off a lot.

“What did he say? Did you fail?” Henry asked hurriedly when he saw that Jasper’s expression looked unpleasant.

Shaking his head, Jasper said, “Not really, but everyone has their own behavior in the face of risks.”

“They are not good people,” Henry sneered. Then, he said, “When there are some goodies, everyone will pounce on it like mad dogs, but if something happens, they will run away faster than anyone else.”

“You can’t say that, at least they are still on my side in terms of their position.”

Jasper exhaled, releasing the depression in his chest before he said with a smile, “Besides, who knows what’s going to happen next. If they want to handle it themselves, let them do it by themselves. If they listen to me about everything, then it’ll be the same no matter who controls the money. At the end of the day, it’s their money anyway.”

“Still, it’s not a big deal even if they don’t listen to me. At the end of the day, it is up to them whether they earn more or less. At the very least, they can’t stand on the side of Wall Street.”

“No way.” Henry shook his head and said, “Their roots are in the country. Back then, I heard my grandpa say that Swallow Capital had started to take note of this thing and that they’re preparing something secretly. They will only betray you in this situation if they’ve gone mad.”

“They will be betraying themselves if they betray you. So what if they have a big family and a big business? Their family is nothing compared to the nation’s will. They will get destroyed if they anger the government on a small issue, let alone a very controversial problem that causes so much anger among the people.”

“What’s Swallow Capital doing?” Jasper asked.

“How would I know?”

Henry spread his hands and smiled bitterly, “I know that my grandpa made a few calls to Swallow Capital after he talked to you. That’s when I learned that the government of Swallow Capital noticed when you shorted the US market.”

“Please, don’t look down on the brains of Swallow Capital. They’re all extremely sly and witty foxes.”

“In this case, everyone knows that Wall Street is targeting Somerland by targeting you. Do you think those old foxes wouldn’t realize it?”

“There will be a way out, but it has nothing to do with us. We just have to do our part. Swallow Capital won’t let us die during the critical moments.”

Jasper nodded, feeling very relieved.

Even though he was contacting so many people and powers, this was essentially out of fear of the United States’ power. One had to understand that this was the world’s largest country and the founder of modern economic rules for mankind.

Even if Jasper was mad, he would never even dream of fighting with the United States government.

One only had to look at the closing of the market this time. When they truly infuriated the United States, the United States immediately closed the market and, even more shamelessly, froze all of Jasper’s assets in the country.

Stocks and securities were illiquid assets.

So, even when Jasper made a dime at that moment, he would not be able to take it out, let alone his entire deposit.

Hence, how could an individual fight against the will of the nation?

Let alone the United States.

However, after doing so much back then, Jasper was sure that he had backing behind him.

Jasper shook his head and shook those negative thoughts away. Then, he said, "The only thing I can do now is do my best to contact the real powers in this country."

"A contest between capitalists will still depend on funds. If they are shameless, we cannot do anything about it, but naturally, there will still be a power that can defeat them."

Gale's manor in Suesville.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1493

Although he had been here several times before, Jasper still felt impressed every time he stood in front of the manor that covered such an expansive area. This old man was so damn extravagant. Only God knew how much money this old man had.

In an unprecedented act, Gale actually appeared at the door this time. It seemed that he was here to welcome Jasper.

“Old Master Hurlbutt, please be careful. I don’t deserve you coming out to receive me.” Jasper walked up to meet him quickly. He said as he bent over slightly and humbled himself.

No matter how annoying the old man was, or even if there was beef between the two of them, this was a business matter.

If you did not know how to put up a façade while you were conducting business, then your business would not grow no matter how long you ran it.

Gale replied with a chuckle, “You sly child, I know you wish for me to be bed-ridden forever, right?”

Jasper chuckled and said, "I don't have the guts to do that Old Master Hurlbutt, you're my senior so how would I dare to have that thought as your junior?"

"Do you not have the guts, or do you not yet have the guts?" Gale asked.

Jasper laughed and pointed at a pair of stone lions at the entrance. He said, "These lions looked oddly formidable. These two were not here when I came last time, right?"

"The ones you saw last time were fake while these are real. When Napoleon was still in power, these were placed in front of his home. Back then, the museum wanted to display them so I borrowed them. After the exhibition was over, they returned them to me. See, I just put them back in their original places."

Gale grinned and said carefreely, but what he said was indeed terrifying.

The statues should be at least a few centuries old if it came from Napoleon's estate. It would be regarded as an amazing artifact no matter where it was placed. However, when it was with Gale, it was just placed casually at the entrance to his home. If the experts saw this, they would be heartbroken.

"Old Master Hurlbutt, you're so impressive," Jasper praised.

“A stone lion is just a stone lion even if it is old. Its purpose is still to watch over a house. So, I am using them to their full potential by placing them here. Each of them is a few hundred kilograms anyway so I am not afraid of people stealing them,” Gale said as he guffawed.

After he said that, Gale looked at Henry who had no expression as he stood next to Jasper.

“Kid, do you still remember me?” Gale asked with a grin.

Henry did not become unbridled and impudent in front of this 80-year-old man. After all, he was a Law, so as a junior, he still knew how to respect his elders no matter what.

“Hello, Old Master Hurlbutt. I’ve long since forgotten you.”

Gale laughed and said, “Of course. When I last saw you, you still had to be carried. How is your grandfather?”

Henry nodded and said, “Thank you for your concern, Old Master Hurlbutt. My grandpa is in good health. He’s always talking about how he misses his old friends when he was young. He wonders when he can see them again.”

“No, thank you.” Gale waved his hand, “Your grandfather is too great, and I still owe him a favor, so it will be best if I do not see him.”

After chatting, Gale led the two into the courtyard. They went straight into Gale’s study without any delay.

The study was not small. It was not so much a study room as it was a library. Except for a large antique red sandalwood desk, the rest of the room were mostly filled with rows of bookshelves.

There were new books, old books, and even thread-bound books. The whole room was filled with the unique scent of paper and ink.

Ignoring everything else, just from the sheer quantity of these books, one could see that Gale was indeed different from ordinary people.

Jasper looked up and saw the calligraphy hanging behind the desk in the study.

‘Even though there were a lot of things happening around me, I am fearless as I have power. My life is carefree too, so I can spend time in my garden reading.’

Life at The Top – Chapter 1494

“What good calligraphy.”

When Galeheard Jasper’s praise, he grinned and asked, “Do you know where it came from?”

“It was written by a famous calligrapher in the 15th century. While it looks like something you came up with at a snap of a finger, it seems to be describing a calmness that one has in the face of a catastrophe. Moreover, it also gives me this feeling of one watching over the fluctuating affairs of life indifferently. that’s why it made such an impression on me.”

Jasper felt fortunate.

Before his reincarnation, one of his clients liked this piece of calligraphy the most. He spent 6 million bidding for this original work but unfortunately he failed. At that time, the 6 million was transferred from the stock account that Jasper held for him, so Jasper remembered this incident very well.

If it were not for coincidence, he would have made a fool of himself.

Gale had a genuine smile on his face and said, “Yes, this calligraphy is the one hanging in the study of its creator. There are thousands of calligraphy pieces and there are many absolutely wonderful pieces that are simply amazing, but I like this one the most.”

Jasper glanced at the painting and felt a little strange.

If this one in Gale’s study was the authentic one, what about the one his client bid on during the auction in his previous life?

Although, judging from the timeline, there were still six or seven years before the auction was to take place. Despite this, upon looking at Gale’s current estate, he would not be reduced to selling his properties in six or seven years even if he spent lavishly.

It could only be described as a mystery.

After chatting for a bit, Gale sat down on his chair and asked Jasper and Henry to sit opposite him. Then, Gale spoke.

“I know why you are here.”

Gale went straight to the point.

“In principle, I agree to support you. After all, this is a question of principle. When it comes to this matter, any private thoughts and opinions must be put aside. I am well aware of this.”

Jasper nodded and replied, “I am impressed by Old Master Hurlbutt’s noble righteousness.”

After Gale looked at Jasper deeply, he said with a half-smile, “You sly child, stop trying to butter me up. I’m not finished yet.”

Jasper smiled and picked up the earl grey in front of him before taking a sip.

He was gesturing to Gale so that he would continue.

Gale lifted his white eyebrows and caressed the ring on his thumb. Then, he said slowly, “I can give you 2 billion US Dollars.”

Even if Jasper was prepared, his heart still skipped a beat. ‘This old man was so f*cking rich.’

“However, I am not investing this money in you.”

Gale smiled and pointed at Jasper. He continued, "I'm lending you this money, and you need to put up collateral for this."

When Jasper heard this, he did not react. On the contrary, Henry almost exploded with anger.

"What do you mean? We're facing a catastrophe now. If we can't handle this, the market in the country will be finished, yet, you're saying you're just lending us the money at this critical moment?"

Henry's statement caused Gale to reply flatly, "Kid, this is not the place for you to talk."

Henry scoffed as his temper rose immediately.

When he was about to say, 'You old fart, you have the balls to spout bullsh*t with me, but do you have the balls to say the same thing to my grandpa?' Jasper stopped him.

"Old Master Hurlbutt, what do you mean by that?"

"Easy, put up shares of JW Company as collateral for me," Gale said gleefully.

When Jasper heard that, he placed his teacup down with no expression. He got up and said, "Since you're not sincere, then we'll just drop the matter."

Jasper ignored Gale. After he gestured to Henry, he walked out.

Coincidentally, when Jasper was about to push open the door to walk out, the door of the study was pushed open from outside.

A young man stood outside the door. He looked polite and seemed to be a normal university student.

He had a box in his hands and he smiled warmly at Jasper. He said, "My grandpa asked me to bring over his medicinal aroma beads. He said he wanted to give it to you. Why are you leaving so soon?"

The young man's appearance caused the situation to suddenly become less tense.

"You sly child, don't be so hot-tempered. Can't we sit down and talk about this?" Gale said.

Jasper went back to sit down on his seat.

After he sat down, Gale did not mention what had happened. He pointed happily at the young man who was standing next to him respectfully, "This is Dean, my y grandson."

Dean smiled warmly and said softly, "To be precise, I'm his adopted grandson. I was an orphan and grandpa took me in. I only came to help him recently."

Dean was a sight for sore eyes.

He looked refined and he was speaking slowly. In addition to that, when he spoke, he would look at the other party. His gaze did not feel invasive, which was because he was showing respect to the person he was talking to.

Jasper suddenly remembered something when he looked at Dean who was smiling at him.

A nobleman's manner and character would be as light as water.

"Hello." Jasper nodded at the other party in a friendly manner.

"You are Mr. Laine from JW Company, right? I always hear grandpa talking about you. He said that if I am half as talented as you, he wouldn't be so worried about me," Dean said warmly.

Jasper lifted his hand and said, "Old Master Hurlbutt spoke so highly of me."

Gale grinned and took a sip of his tea. He looked at Dean and said, "You youngsters should talk. I'm old and I can't follow along anymore."

Jasper narrowed his eyes slightly and instinctively became vigilant.

Gale valued this nobleman named Dean that was as light as water so much.

He was even asking Dean to discuss such a huge matter for him.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1495

“If I say anything wrong, Grandpa will correct me. If he doesn’t then you can take it as me completely representing my grandpa.”

When Dean saw Jasper looking at him, he bowed slightly and said with a smile.

Jasper grinned when he looked at the refined Dean. He said, “Let’s start then. However, I don’t have much time so it’s best if we hurry up.”

Dean nodded and said softly, “Of course, I’ll get straight to the point then. First, I need to know how confident you are, Mr. Laine.”

“Of course, I am very confident.”

Jasper shook his hand and said carefreely, “It’s just a fight on the stock market. I never lost and the other party is just some irrelevant rat.”

Dean was slightly stunned. Then, he shook his head and said with a chuckle, “You’re joking, Mr. Laine.”

“You’re the one who started joking with me first.”

Jasper said calmly, “This time, our enemy is the entirety of Wall Street and the Federal Reserve, yet you’re asking if I’m confident? Aren’t you joking with me?!”

Pfft.

Henry could not hold in his laughter.

Dean shook his head and chuckled. He was not mad at all. At least, it was clear that Dean’s self-restraint was admirable.

Dean smiled apologetically. Then, he said to Jasper, “This is not about whether you’re confident. Mr. Laine, everyone clearly understands the situation right now and it’s still the same as what grandpa said just now.”

“I can take out the money at any time, but I can’t invest this in you, I can only lend it to you.”

“It’s not a problem, but asking me to put my company as collateral is unrealistic,” Jasper said.

Dean was still warm as always. He said softly, “Well, this is not a small amount There’s a risk to taking the money out too. If we don’ t have any collateral, how can we lend it to you?”

“Actually, I have two proposals, so please choose, Mr. Laine.”

When Jasper heard that Dean was finally being realistic, he sat up straight and put on a serious expression.

“The first one is what my grandpa proposed, which is putting up JW as collateral. However, since you’ve rejected that option, let’s not talk about that.”

“The second option is that we can lend the money to you free of interest with a time limit of three months. Of course, in order to make sure the funds are safe, I will have the right to know about the flow of the funds at any given time...”

“Also, if you can’t pay us back in three months, then JW Company will use 50% of its annual profit to pay back this debt for the next 10 years.”

Dean smiled harmlessly at Jasper when he said this. Then, he continued, “What do you think about the second proposal?”

Jasper narrowed his eyes slightly and said, “Okay.”

Jasper’s decisiveness caused Gale and Dean to have surprised looks on their faces.

They thought Jasper would need some time to think or would try to negotiate some better terms. However, Jasper did not do anything before agreeing with it decisively.

This was out of the two’s expectations.

“I told you, there will be a lot of things going on next, so I have to handle this as soon as possible,” Jasper said.

Dean smiled and nodded, “Mr. Laine is a straightforward person who will do big things. If that’s the case, we won’t waste your time. We’ll draft a contract right away. After it’s notarized, the money will immediately be transferred to your account.”

“Great.” Jasper nodded and smiled.

Soon, Dean personally drafted an agreement.

There was no doubt about the professionalism of this agreement. Jasper took it and looked through it. Then, he faxed it back to Nauritus City to let the professional legal team of JW Company evaluate it so they could confirm that there were no problems with the agreement. After that, he immediately signed it.

After he did all of this, Jasper got up and bade his farewell. By then, it was already evening. However, Jasper did not stay for dinner nor did Gale invite him.

Everyone was busy, so if they could forgo these irrelevant and unnecessary social niceties, they would do so.

Gale was old, so after Jasper signed the contract, he went back to rest. Meanwhile, Dean was responsible for sending Jasper and his gang to the door of the manor. “Mr. Laine, please be careful on your way back.”

“Dean, please hold on.”

The two of them looked at each other and smiled softly.

“I think this will be a joyous collaboration,” Dean said sincerely.

“Hopefully...”

Jasper turned around and got into the car after he said that

After Dean watched the car leave, he turned and went back to the manor.

Inside one of the rooms, Gale was lying on an interesting and appealing bamboo couch as he rested his eyes.

This room was semi-opened. When one lay on the bamboo couch, they could see the garden. The fake mountain babbled with running water as the green of the leaves accentuated the colors of the flowers. The view was spectacular.

After Dean entered the room, he walked to Gale’s side. When he saw the blanket sliding down Gale’s body, he tiptoed over to pick up the blanket for Gale.

Even though he was doing it softly, he still woke Gale.

“You are back.” After Gale noticed Dean, he half-closed his eyes and relaxed before he said slowly.

“Yes, they’re gone. Sorry for disturbing your rest,” Dean said warmly.

Gale lifted his hand that was resting next to his body and waved it slightly. Then, he said lazily, “It’s fine. I’m old so my sleep will be light... What do you think?”

Even though this question seemed to come out of nowhere, Dean immediately understood what Gale meant.

He hesitated and said, “It seems a little weird, but looking at the big picture, it’s still in accordance with our plan.”

“Weird?” Gale opened his eyes and said with a half-smile, “Are you referring to when he chose the second option so quickly after you proposed two options for him without even hesitating or negotiating terms?”

Dean nodded and said profoundly, “Yes, based on my assumptions and according to the information I have of him, he shouldn’t have answered me so quickly.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1496

When Gale heard what Dean said, he guffawed.

“I was a little surprised too.”

Gale opened his eyes and looked at Dean, who was deep in thought. He said slowly, “However, the most difficult thing to guess in the world is the human heart. It is normal to get the wrong answer, let alone when facing someone like Jasper.”

“If he is so easy to take care of, an old fart like me who has lived 80 more years in this world would not have lost out to him.”

Dean bent down slightly and said while lowering his head, “He’s just pulling some cheap tricks. He’s using Old Master Law to pressure you, so how can you say you lost out to him?”

“On the contrary, he also lost quite a bit when you brought in the business people from Teo. So, frankly speaking, you still won.”

“Stop speaking so highly of me.”

Gale glared at Dean and said, “Ever since I started plotting against that kid, I was always kept in the inferior position. How old is he and how old am I? Now that I am still plotting against him, aren’t I setting a bad example as an elder?”

Dean said respectfully, “I only know that success determines whether you’re a hero, I never heard of age determining the same thing.”

“Haha!”

Gale laughed.

“Never mind. You will be fully responsible for what is going to happen next. After this, I am sure Jasper will do something. If I need to show my face, you should just go on my behalf.”

Dean nodded. Then, he hesitated and asked, “Grandpa, so we’ll...”

Before he even finished, Gale understood what he meant

After a long sigh, Gale said, “Kid, I came from that special era. I watched the other countries bully ours. Back then it was fine, but after twenty to thirty years, those foreigners would still look down on us.

“You too. When I took you home, you were ten. Ten years before that, this country was the one that raised you.

“So, you cannot be too scheming in this matter. Just help wherever you can.”

“I understand,” Dean answered respectfully.

Gale seemed to be tired, so he closed his eyes and waved his hand.

Dean left deferentially. Then, he heard Gale singing to himself lowly as if he was talking in his sleep.

“As I watched them, I was as courageous as a sword, and when I raised my hand, I could not help but sweat. After I caught the thieves, I raised my sword to chop off their heads. Their blood splashed across the country and created a river of red.”

Jasper could not maintain his smile when he sat in the car. He even burst out laughing from time to time.

Henry was creeped out when he saw this.

“Have you gone mad from anger?” Henry asked carefully. Then, his expression became tense, and he said, “Those two are shameless but you don’t have to make yourself sick because of them.”

“Okay, we’ll remember them for this. We’ll seek revenge on them when we have a chance in the future. That kid is named Dean, right? I will remember him.”

Jasper replied, “Gone mad from anger? I have gone mad from happiness, okay?”

“I thought Gale would either not participate or at most he would invest some money as a simple gesture.”

“Now, he even offered to lend me the money. Back when he proposed that I put up collateral, I planned to accept it, but that sly old fox is not easy to handle, so if I agreed too quickly, he might try to push for more. That’s why I put up an act.”

“I was wondering why you looked relieved when Dean appeared at the door. It seems that you were only acting!” Henry came to his realization.

“Life is like a movie.” Jasper laughed and said, “Since he agreed to lend us 2 billion US Dollars free of interest, which will amount to about 16 billion Somer Dollars, so why not just take it?”

“However, we still have to pay him back if we lose. Are you really going to pay him back with 50% of JW’s annual profit for the next ten years?” Henry asked.

Jasper shrugged and said, “If we lose, can JW even survive?”

“Damn! This is no-risk trading!” Henry said while feeling terrified.

Jasper said happily, “You can’t say that. After all, they were the ones proposing this. We just accepted their proposal, so I didn’t set them up.”

“Plus, we don’t know the outcome of this fight. Now that they have given us this investment, they will get the money back if we win, but if we lose, everything will be gone.”

“However, if they don’t lend us the money, everything will still be destroyed if we lose. In the event that we win, they will get no share of the profits.”

“If that’s the case, has Gale gone mad?” Henry asked.

“A loan and an investment are two different things. He might have his own plans,” Jasper said flatly.

“However, that has nothing to do with us anymore. It doesn’t matter what he has planned, he won’t try to be a hindrance to us in such a huge matter. At most, he will just watch as we die. However, since he took out so much money, it means he won’t cause us any trouble at the critical moment.”

Henry nodded as if he understood.

“So, where are we going now?”

Jasper narrowed his eyes and said, “Next, we’ll need to meet the presidents of a few Chambers of Commerce. Also, there are a few appointments we have to attend. In short, we have a lot left to do.”

“However, what I lack most now is time. The market will be closed for three days and, in addition to the weekends, it will be closed for a total of five days. Two days have passed since, so we don’t have much time left.”

Henry glanced at the exhausted-looking Jasper and could not help but say, “We’re at this stage anyway, so we’ll just do this step by step. If the sky falls, we have tall people to stop it from falling on us. It’s useless if you tire yourself out too.”

“Tonight, I’ll make some arrangements for you to relax. We’ll continue tomorrow.”

Jasper said with a smile, “Do you have anything you can arrange for in Suesville?”

Henry chuckled and answered, “I don’t, but I have money. In this world, what can’t be solved with money?”

Jasper laughed and said, “Okay, it’s dinner time anyway. I’ll go with you and we’ll talk about the rest tomorrow.”

“Okay!”

Henry patted Julian’s driver seat happily and said with a grin, “Julian, drive to the city center. Go wherever is liveliest Today, I’ll only be doing one thing and that’s spending money!”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1497

When Henry said he wanted to spend money, he really started throwing money away as if it was water.

They went to the best hotel in Suesville's city center and asked the head chef to cook for them. There was a lot of food on the table and all of it was extremely expensive. The three of them could not eat everything but they still ordered a table full of food. Just the wild yellow-fin tuna from the East Sea was 2000 bucks each. However, this was the most low-profile item on the table. There was also a lobster that was half a meter in length, the lobster was so large it had to be carried to the table by three male servers. That one dish was 60 thousand bucks.

Then, they ordered some soup for each of them that cost 888 bucks each. Basically, it was just cabbage soup. However, the ingredients used to make the soup were decadent. There were abalone, conpoy, sea cucumber, three years old ham, the diaphragm of free range three years old ducks, and the diaphragm of a wild boar inside. These rare items represented just the ingredients used for the consommés of the small cabbage.

After the consommés were out, the ingredients would be thrown away, and in the end, they would be concentrated into these three bowls of soup. Just one sip would cost at least 200 bucks.

The three of them could not eat too much. Even if Julian was someone who was trained to fight and thus had a larger appetite, the group still left half of the food uneaten.

Henry did not care. He paid the bill of 160 thousand bucks and asked the staff of the restaurant to take care of what was left so that there would not be any wastage. The staff's eyes lit up as the manager sent Henry away enthusiastically. After that, they sauntered to the best nightclub in Suesville.

In this time and age, the nightclubs were not as good as the ones in the future. A lot of discos and dancehalls would call themselves nightclubs. Even though they were not wrong, it still lowered their statuses. This nightclub in Suesville was truly very lively.

The boss seemed to have surveyed the market before. Therefore, the location, the decoration, and the atmosphere were not inferior to the ones in Harbor City or Waterhoof City.

Henry booked a booth that required a minimum spend of 88888 bucks. At this point in time, there was still no fancy liquor that would go viral, like Ace of Spades. The nightclubs still had their conscience, so they would not sell Ace of Spades like they were treasures just because some rich second-generation hiked up the price.

The alcohol that was available here was all good alcohol. For example Louis XIII, Martell XO, and Royal Knight. There was none of those fake alcohols that was mixed with low-quality foreign alcohol that the artisan workshops sold for more than ten bucks. These were all authentic.

Aside from that, Henry covered an entire table with the most expensive cocktail in the nightclub. It was named Alluring Fox and was sold for 666 bucks per glass. The whole table looked extremely colorful.

From the looks of this, Henry was the most dazzling guy in the room.

From ancient times to the present, regardless of where in the world you were, there was always only one universal truth. If you had money, you would be the boss.

Jasper's booth was immediately surrounded by a lot of girls in tight skirts.

Even though it was 2001 and not 2020 where people were more unrestrained, the essence of the young ladies' pursuit of true love remained the same. All of them were very hot and behaved unrestrained as they hugged Henry and laughed with him. This made Henry very happy.

Jasper did not have girls in his arms like Henry. Instead, he sat with Julian at one side while drinking some delicious cocktail and eating the fruit platter. He chatted happily with Julian.

A few of the girls came to flirt with them, but Jasper would not reject them, He would still entertain them. However, everyone could tell Henry was the one paying, so after they noticed that Jasper was not that rich, they started to treat Henry like the love of their lives as they flocked over to him.

"We just had a 160 thousand dinner so how much will we spend after this?" Julian was a little speechless.

While Julian worked with Jasper, his annual salary alone was a million bucks. Hence, one could only imagine how much he would get from his other subsidies and bonus. For example, after the high-end condominium developed by JW Real Estates was launched in Nauritus City, Jasper gave Julian a unit.

So, Julian was a wealthy man right now.

His assets were nearing tens of millions in value. However, Julian was poor before, so even though his income was high right now and even though Jasper would be willing to pay for him if something were to happen, Julian was still used to saving some of his money. He was not saving it for himself though. Rather, he would give it to his big sister.

Also, since he was always with Jasper, he did not have much chances to spend money. Sometimes when they went out of town, he would buy some gifts for his sister. However, Jasper would pay for what he bought as well. In any case, this dinner of hundreds of thousands of dollars was way beyond what Julian was used to.

“I think he will have spent 4 to 500 thousand this entire night.” Jasper crossed his legs and said nonchalantly.

Julian widened his eyes and said, “How extravagant.”

“Extravagant? This is what he’s good at. Look at his surname.” Jasper cracked a joke and laughed.

“When this first started, I wouldn’t dare to imagine spending tens of thousands of bucks in one night. Isn’t this insane?”

Jasper said to Julian when he saw that Julian had a look of disbelief on his face.

When Julian heard this, he nodded furiously. He was saying that he agreed that Henry was insane.

“However, after that, I understood. People have social differences. If someone makes only 2000 bucks per month, he would have to think about it if you ask him to spend 100 bucks. This is simply because of the fact that he only makes 2000 bucks per month.

“He has to calculate his expenses like food, rent, social life, transport, phone bills and so on. If he falls sick, he’ll need to buy medicine too. Then, the rest he will keep as savings. After a month, all of this salary would be spent, so how much will he have left?”

“On the contrary, what about someone who makes 2 million a month?”

“The circle he is in will be consuming at that level. He doesn’t have to save up nor does he need to. If he attempts to be frugal, he won’t be able to break into that circle.”

“Even though they say you can’t judge a book by its cover, most people are shallow. People don’t know each other and not everyone’s close with each other, so who are you to ask them to look inside and see what you’re truly good at?”

“They will be looking at what you wear and what you put on. They will also look at what car you drive and your young beautiful secretary. These are all things that people can see at just a glance.”

“If you have these things and they see it, only then will they think that you’ve passed and have fulfilled the basic requirements for in-depth communication. Only then will you be qualified to do business together. “Because of all this, he can’t be stingy. To other people, he’s consuming luxury goods, but to him, it is necessary.”

“When you have different means of making money, are in a different social class, and have different foresight, your thoughts on spending money will be different as well.”

Life at The Top – Chapter 1498

“At the end of the day, there is no limit to a person’s ability to make money, but there is a limit to spending money.”

Speaking of this, Jasper pointed to Henry who was indulging in pleasure and said, “Henry can spend hundreds of thousands tonight easily, but if you ask him to spend 10 million, he won’t have a place to spend it even if he has the money.

“How much can you eat for dinner and how much can you spend as a nouveau riche in a nightclub? If you don’t purchase anything big, this will all be viewed as trivial. Even if you buy something big, most likely you can only think of villas costing tens of millions and cars costing millions.

“Therefore, everyone, including myself, love money and just want to do one thing with it.”

Jasper put a finger up and said seriously to Julian, “No matter what happens in the future, at least I will not do something because of money or even feel embarrassed.”

Julian said in a daze, “Then you can retire early.”

“Do you know how to carry a conversation?”

Jasper glared at Julian who laughed.

“I think Mr. Laine is right.”

In the noisy nightclub, a woman’s light and graceful voice clearly penetrated all the noise and chaos and into Jasper’s ears. This feeling was like a white lotus appearing in the middle of a mud pile.

The contrast made the mud look even dirtier and the white lotus even purer.

Jasper was initially idle and carefree, but when he heard that voice, his entire body tensed up and a bright light burst out from his eyes. There was also an imposing manner in him that Julian rarely saw.

Even though he was chatting with Jasper just now, Julian did not forget that the most important thing to him was to protect Jasper’s safety. Hence, he did not drink any alcohol so that he could stay vigilant in this chaotic and noisy nightclub that was filled with all kinds of people. Even so, he did not notice when the owner of the voice had sashayed over.

What an expert.

An absolute expert!

Julian lifted his head to look at the incomparable, slender, and elegant woman in front of him who was smiling softly. He almost took action against her.

Right now, that woman was standing in front of Jasper and Julian did not detect anything. They were about 3 meters apart.

Moreover, this woman was able to do that without Julian detecting her. If she wanted to do anything to Jasper right now in such close proximity, Julian was not confident that he would be able to stop her.

“Don’t worry, I won’t hurt him, right, Mr. Laine?”

Adele looked at Jasper and said with a smile.

Jasper patted Julian’s shoulder to relax him. Then, he got up and said to Jane with a grin, “I didn’t expect to run into you here, Miss Brown.”

Even though Jasper had only met the boss of Brew Splash Teahouse once, she had made an impression on him.

This time, he also realized that Adele was an expert that could make Julian nervous. This was a rare occurrence.

Adele smiled softly. Her smile outshone all of the girls in the room as it stood out in this noisy and chaotic nightclub.

“I didn’t expect to run into you here too, Mr. Laine. Are you meeting an old friend in another city?”

Jasper laughed and said, “Are you here for business, Miss Brown?”

“I’m here to see someone. Now that I’ve seen them, I can go back now. However, before that, I spotted you, which was a surprise to me. Are you interested in spending some time with me in a quiet place nearby?”

Jasper looked at Henry who was playing games with the girls and nodded. He said, “It’s an honor to be invited by such a beauty.”

Jasper went to notify Henry but the man was having a lot of fun so he ignored Jasper. He waved his hand to say he understood and then went back to the girl’s chest to simper.

Meanwhile, Jasper left the noisy nightclub with Julian and Adele.

In a coffee shop not far away, Adele asked Jasper to take a seat.

Julian did not sit down. He decided to stand at a distance not too far away.

Even a millisecond in the battle with a master was important. This distance and posture made it easier for Julian to deal with any unexpected problems.

“Your friend is very concerned about your safety.” Adele smiled at Jasper.

“I have no choice. Because I’m so hated, I feel a lot less nervous with him around.” Jasper laughed at himself.

Adele chuckled and said, “Mr. Laine, you asked me about my purpose of coming to Suesville, so may I know why you’re here as well?”

“I’m here to meet someone like you, Miss Brown. Similarly, I’ve met the person, and it went pretty smoothly.” Jasper replied.

Adele blinked and asked, “Can I take the liberty to ask who you met?”

Jasper looked at Adele meaningfully and said, “I doubt that you’re so curious, Miss Brown.”

“You’re being stingy, Mr. Laine.”

Adele placed one hand under her chin and showed a red string on her fair wrist. It looked delicate and pretty. The contrast of red and white caused her to look abnormally agile and alluring.

“That’s fine, this won’t stop me from offering you a piece of news, Mr. Laine.”

Jasper was curious. He asked, “A piece of news?”

Adele smiled faintly and said, “Actually, if I didn’t meet you here, I’d still have sought you out when we got back as someone asked me to make an appointment with you.”

“Who?” Jasper asked.

“The secretary of the president of SBS Bank, Mr. Tony Pratt”

Adele said this softly, but it made Jasper lift his eyebrows abruptly.

SBS Bank was also known as Somerland External Development Bank. This bank was state-owned and did not run any savings accounts. Therefore, most people did not know much about it.

However, if someone did a foreign trade business and whose wealth had reached a certain level, or had a large-scale foreign investment project, then they had to deal with this bank. It was because this bank held a lot of authority. All the foreign exchange reserves of the central bank were stored in this bank.

Its main responsibility was to represent the government, make foreign investments, and conduct foreign exchange settlements. It could be said that apart from the inability to issue currency, all SBS Bank branches abroad were equivalent to the Somerland Central Bank itself.

Life at The Top – Chapter 1499

In such a special and critical period, it was self-evident that the core executives of such a significant bank would come to him.

“When shall we meet?” Jasper did not hesitate and immediately agreed.

This meeting represented the first contact between the higher-ups and a civil representative, so naturally, he would not miss it.

He had known long since known in his heart that the higher-ups could not just sit idly during such a big event. However, Jasper was worried because they had not said anything until now. He was worried because he had no idea what the big shots at Swallow Capital were thinking about.

If Swallow Capital had plans, he should have at least talked to a representative of the private capital. They should at least have a communication channel. Now, this communication channel had finally appeared in front of Jasper.

This entity was more important than anyone Jasper had met before.

Adele smiled and said, “He is in Suesville now. He’s here for a meeting today and will leave tomorrow. I originally planned to schedule the meeting for tomorrow or the day after tomorrow. Since Mr. Laine is here by coincidence, why don't you meet him tonight?"

Jasper smiled and nodded. He said, "Thank you, Miss Brown."

Under Adele's arrangement, half an hour later, Jasper met Tony Pratt, the secretary of the president of SBS Bank, in a four-star hotel.

Although he was appointed as the secretary, the man was more like the official secretary-general. After all, Tony was one of the core senior executives of SBS Bank. Despite being at the bottom of the hierarchy, this position was not any lower than the chief executive of Southeast Province.

After taking Jasper to the location, Adele did not go upstairs, nor did she leave. Instead, she said that she would wait downstairs until after Jasper and Tony were done.

This obviously meant that she had something to tell Jasper. Jasper did not refuse this suggestion. After agreeing with Adele, he went upstairs to meet Tony.

Tony was a middle-aged man in his fifties. He was of average height, while his weight and looks were average as well.

However, if a man was in a high-ranking position, he would naturally have an extraordinary charm to him. Tony was just like this.

If he was able to get to this position at his age, it must have meant that he was a very talented man.

After Tony walked out of the room, he started laughing before he approached Jasper. He reached out his hand from afar and said to Jasper, “Mr. Laine, even though we’ve never officially met, we’re like soul brothers now.”

Jasper had the same smile on his face as he gripped Tony’s hand. He said, “Mr. Pratt, I’m so glad to meet you. It’s such an honor. ”

Tony laughed and said, “Mr. Laine, you’re someone who we should have studied and based our speculations on when it came to the early days of the domestic futures market and the international crude oil market.

“The market rescue in Harbor City was particularly amazing. When the Securities Regulatory Commission and I were communicating with a few old colleagues from the financial department, we were shocked when we talked about Mr. Laine who was not even in his 30s. All of your achievements are extremely impressive.”

Jasper replied hurriedly and modestly, “Mr. Pratt, you speak too highly of me. Those are just small achievements and are nothing to boast about.”

Tony laughed.

Jasper and Tony lauded each other's accomplishments and walked into the reception room prepared by the hotel as they spoke.

"Mr. Laine, we don't have much time, so let's hurry up and get straight into the topic."

After sitting down, Tony said directly.

Jasper nodded and said, "Mr. Pratt, please go ahead. I'm all ears."

Tony waved his hand and said with a grin, "You don't need to be so courteous with me. You're much more renowned than me right now."

After some chit-chatting, Tony's smile faded and he said slowly, "Actually, I asked to see you so I can send you this message from the higher-ups. After that, I'll get your opinion, and then I'll pass it back to them."

"As for the current situation, the higher-ups have been paying attention to it this whole time. In fact, from as early as when you first entered the market, risk reports were already being compiled by the relevant departments."

“Now, what I need to tell you is that first of all, the attitude from above is very clear!”

“We will not allow anyone in Somerland to be bullied, not to mention that this entire situation is on the premise of protecting the domestic economy!”

When Tony said this, he glanced at Jasper with admiration and continued, “This statement was given by one of the big bosses. This statement alone can be said to determine your potential. Such a thing is extremely rare, let alone for someone as young as yourself, Mr. Laine. Your future is boundless.”

Jasper waved his hand and said with a smile, “If I am not wrong, there must still be something behind this, right?”

Tony nodded, his smile disappeared, and he said solemnly, “In the current situation, the influence of external factors exists all the time. Hence, the higher-ups need to consider this matter comprehensively. They can’t lose their propriety because of the gains and losses of one person.”

“I understand.”

Jasper nodded. “I’ve made this realization before I made this decision.”

Tony nodded and said, “That’s good. However, don’t worry. The higher-ups’ attitude is clear. They’re not doing anything right now because they need to consider the influence on the international community. However, we won’t stay put if things become critical.”

Jasper said, “Please pass on my message to them, Mr. Pratt.”

“Go on,” Tony said seriously.

“The real purpose of the United States’ interference this time is to enter the domestic market by using me as a scapegoat. They want to rob us of the fruits of our reformation and development over the years to make up for the losses they have suffered in the terrorist attack and also to divert the attention of their people.”

With a sigh, Jasper continued, “I am in this position and have no other choice. Even if I am defeated, we can’t let outsiders touch the results of more than one billion people from Somerland’s hard work over so many years.”

“This is my request. So, Mr. Pratt, please convey it on my behalf.”

Tony nodded solemnly. “I will pass it on without missing a word.”

Jasper shook his head. Then, he got up and shook Tony’s hand before saying, “Mr. Pratt has been in a meeting for the entire day, so I won’t bother you anymore.”

Tony walked Jasper to the door and said, “Mr. Laine, please be careful on your way back.

“Mr. Laine, wait.”

Jasper was about to turn around when he heard Tony speak up again, “Mr. Laine...”

Jasper stood his ground and turned around to look at Tony.

Tony paused for a while. He seemed to be thinking about what he should say. Then, he continued, “I shouldn’t say this, but I think I still have to tell you so that you know.”

“SBS Bank will take action when it’s necessary.”

Jasper lifted his eyebrows and displayed the first genuine smile since his meeting with Tony. He nodded and said, “I got it. Thanks.”

Jasper would remember this favor forever.

Tony smiled in return before closing the door.

After he arrived downstairs, Jasper went to the lobby where he saw Adele in the lounge.

Adele waved at Jasper and Jasper walked over to her.

“Are you done?” Adele asked.

“Yeah, it went pretty smoothly,” Jasper answered with a nod. Jasper did not tell her what they talked about, while Adele was smart for not asking.

“I heard you contacted the little prince and Lord Alvarado recently, right?” Adele asked while tilting her head.

Jasper looked at this woman who was breathtakingly beautiful and extremely mysterious.

“Miss Brown, you’re so well-informed...”

Adele smiled and said, “I’ll just take that as a compliment.”

“The Browns from the north, the Royals from the south, and the Alvarados from the north-west. Right now, they’re all low-profile distinguished families in the country. These three families might even be the most powerful in the country, but they only have two similarities.”

Adele suddenly became talkative. She continued, “Firstly, these three families have been around for at least 200 years, so they can be regarded as the only remaining families in the country that have passed through the feudal era and still maintained their inheritance.”

“Secondly, they all have astonishing successors in this generation.”

When Adele said this, she said to Jasper with a smile, “The one from the north has something he wants to tell you, Mr. Laine, and he asked me to pass the message on to you.”

Jasper was truly shocked.

Who was Adele?

The state-owned SBS Bank contacted him through her. Even the crippled Brown wanted to contact him through her. Wait, the crippled Brown and Adele Brown?

There was a subtle change in the way Jasper looked at Adele.

Adele ignored the sudden change in Jasper’s gaze and continued speaking, “He said that after he learned about you, he feels regretful that he can’t meet you sooner.”

“He hopes that there will be a chance for him to meet you in Swallow City in the future. When the time comes, he will have a nice long chat with you and make you his friend.”

Jasper lifted his eyebrows and laughed. He answered, “I’m overwhelmed that Mr. Brown is so courteous toward me.”

Adele smiled faintly and said, "You're too humble, Mr. Laine. Right now, you can be regarded as one of the most amazing people in the country. Of course a lot of people would want to know you."

"Did Mr. Brown say anything aside from this?" Jasper asked.

Adele shook her head and answered, "No."

Jasper nodded and said, "Okay, please tell him that I will definitely go to Swallow City to have a nice long chat with him if I have the chance."

After he was done with work, Jasper got up and said, "Alright, I'll bid my farewell now. My friend is still in the nightclub."

"Mr. Laine, be careful on your way back." Adele got up and sent him off politely.

Jasper turned around and took a few steps. Suddenly, he turned around and asked with a grin, "Miss Brown, may I ask what's your relationship with Mr. Brown since your surname is also Brown?"

"He's my older brother, my biological brother..." Adele bowed slightly and answered.

“ ... ”

Jasper looked dumbfounded and he only came back to his senses after a long while. Then, he nodded and left after turning around.

When he walked out, Julian asked after he got into the car, “Do you want to go to Swallow Capital to talk to the crippled Brown?”

“There’s no need. He has rejected me,” Jasper said calmly as he looked out of the window.
