

The First Heir novel Chapter 1692

What?

Alan Holmes' younger brother?

One of the three lords of Uppercreek?

Henley panicked. His legs went limp as he stared incredulously at the bemused Rowan in front of him. Next to him, Clara also panicked at this moment. She did not expect Rowan to be the younger brother of Alan Holmes!

She had heard that Alan Holmes was one of the three lords of Uppercreek!

Goodness!

She had actually offended such a character!

She was doomed for sure this time.

However, at this moment, she and Henley recalled a more terrifying fact that Rowan was very respectful to Philip before!

Alan Holmes' younger brother being so respectful to Philip was enough to illustrate a problem!

It meant that Philip's status was higher than Alan's!

After thinking about it carefully, Henley was afraid that his father's claim about the mine being seized was true!

Holy sh*t!

At this moment, Henley and Clara realized what kind of existence they had provoked.

Rowan coldly glanced at Bo, who had rushed over after hearing the news, and said coldly, "It's useless to apologize to me. It's Mr. Clarke whom your son should apologize to."

Hearing this, Bo noticed the young man beside Rowan. He was simply too young for words. For Rowan to say such a thing about this person was simply amazing!

Without a doubt, he must be Mr. Clarke!

It took just a few minutes for his mine to be sealed. He could not afford to offend him!

Without further delay, Bo directly bowed to Philip and said, "Mr. Clarke, I'm sorry. My son was too ignorant and offended you. I'll make sure to teach him a good lesson. I hope you can have mercy on us. If there's anything you want, as long as it's within my ability, I'll definitely fulfill it. Please treat it as my reparation to you."

Philip smiled coldly while looking at Henley and Clara who were both flustered. He said, "It's very simple. I want them to get out of here. But before that, the two of them must apologize to my wife."

Hearing this, Bo quickly nodded and said, "Yes, sure, whatever you say."

After saying that, he turned his head, glared at Henley coldly, and shouted, "Brat, apologize for what you did!"

Bo knew very well that a person who could seal his mine so easily must have an extraordinary background!

Henley still wanted to defend himself, but as soon as he met his father's gaze, he backed down. He had no choice but to take Clara with him to the lounge next door and opened the door.

Wynn and Joy were discussing Philip's affairs at this time. They were both startled when Henley and Clara suddenly barged in.

"Sorry, we were wrong!"

Henley immediately bent down and apologized to Wynn.

Behind him, Clara clenched her hands tightly together. She bent over and said to Wynn reluctantly, "Wynn, I'm sorry, I was wrong. I shouldn't have mocked you. I'm a b*tch."

Seeing this scene, Wynn and Joy were stunned.

Henley and Clara actually apologized.

"Philip, what's going on?" Wynn looked tip at Philip who stood at the door.

Philip smiled and said, "Nothing, they just realized their mistakes and are apologizing to you."

After saying that, Henley and Clara looked at Philip and Rowan with innocent eyes. After getting a signal, they quickly left the lounge and arrived at the door of the shop.

Then, amid the astonished gazes of everyone, they scrambled out of the shop.

Many people stopped and took pictures of this scene. At the same time, Wynn and Joy, who were standing at the entrance of the lounge, looked at this scene with surprise.

Joy whispered, "Wynn, tell me honestly, is Philip really a loser? No, I remember you saying that he has changed. What kind of person is he? Why do I feel that he's a little unfathomable now?"

Wynn was also baffled. She turned her head to look at Philip who was approaching her with a smile.

Just what kind of person was he?